1. INTRODUCTION

1. The Trial Chamber of the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia (“Chamber” and “ECCC”, respectively), seised of Case File 002/19-09-2007/ECCC/TC (“Case 002”), renders its Judgement against NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan in Case 002/02.

1.1. Brief Procedural Overview of the Case

1.1.1. Case 001 and Case 002

2. On 18 July 2007, the Co-Prosecutors filed an Introductory Submission pursuant to Internal Rule 53 alleging that NUON Chea, IENG Sary, KHIEU Samphan, IENG Thirith and KAING Guek Eav alias Duch committed various crimes within the jurisdiction of the ECCC.<sup>1</sup> On 19 September 2007, the Co-Investigating Judges ordered the severance of the charges under investigation into two case files: Case 001, the scope of which was limited to the allegations against KAING Guek Eav concerning S-21, and Case 002 which incorporates all remaining charges.<sup>2</sup> On 26 July 2010, KAING Guek Eav was convicted of crimes against humanity and grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions.<sup>3</sup> The Co-Investigating Judges dismissed the charges against KAING Guek Eav in Case 002 on 14 September 2010.<sup>4</sup>

3. Between 19 September and 19 November 2007, NUON Chea, IENG Sary, KHIEU Samphan and IENG Thirith were arrested by order of the Co-Investigating Judges, transferred to the ECCC detention facility and notified of the charges against them.<sup>5</sup> On 15 September 2010, following a three-year judicial investigation in Case 002 during which 3,866 persons were admitted as Civil Parties, the Co-Investigating Judges indicted the Accused for crimes against humanity, genocide, grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and violations of the 1956 Criminal Code.<sup>6</sup> On appeal, the Pre-Trial Chamber confirmed the extensive Closing Order, with some amendments, formally forwarding the four Accused for trial on 13 January 2011.<sup>7</sup>

1.1.2. Case 002/01

4. On 22 September 2011, in order to safeguard its ability to reach a timely judgement in Case 002 given the length and complexity of the Closing Order as well as the physical frailty and advanced age of all Accused, the Chamber issued a severance order pursuant to Internal Rule 89*ter*. This severance order limited the scope of the first trial in Case 002 to factual allegations described in the Closing Order as population movement phases one and two and crimes against humanity committed in their course.<sup>8</sup> The Chamber subsequently expanded the scope of Case 002/01 to include the executions of former Khmer Republic officials at Tuol Po Chrey.<sup>9</sup>

5. Following an appeal by the Co-Prosecutors of the Trial Chamber's severance order, the Supreme Court Chamber annulled the severance order and ordered the Trial Chamber to reassess the scope of Case 002/01 after allowing further submissions from the Parties. Having heard the Parties accordingly, the Trial Chamber again severed the proceedings in Case 002 on 29 March 2013, limiting the scope of Case 002/01 to crimes against humanity committed during the course of population movement phases one and two, and the executions of Khmer Republic officials at Tuol Po Chrey.<sup>10</sup>

The Pre-Trial Chamber amended the Closing Order to require a nexus between crimes against humanity and an armed conflict and affirmed that rape may be categorised as another inhumane act. The Trial Chamber later rejected the nexus requirement. See Decision on Co-Prosecutors' Request to Exclude Armed Conflict Nexus Requirement from the Definition of Crimes against Humanity, E95/8, 26 October 2011, para. 33; Case 002/01 Trial Judgement, para. 177.

6. On 17 November 2011, the Chamber found IENG Thirith unfit to stand trial due to the impact of a progressive, dementing illness (most likely Alzheimer's disease) and ordered the severance of the charges against her from Case 002, a stay of the proceedings against her and her release.<sup>11</sup> IENG Thirith died on 24 August 2015 while under judicial supervision, extinguishing all criminal and civil actions against her.<sup>12</sup> IENG Sary, IENG Thirith's husband, died on 14 March 2013, extinguishing all criminal and civil actions against him.<sup>13</sup>

7. Opening statements in Case 002/01 commenced on 21 November 2011 and hearings on evidence concluded on 23 July 2013. The trial, including closing statements, lasted for a total of 222 hearing days. Ninety-two individuals gave evidence during the trial, including three experts, 58 witnesses and 31 Civil Parties. The Parties submitted Closing Briefs on 26 and 27 September 2013 and presented Closing Statements between 16 and 31 October 2013.

8. On 7 August 2014, the Trial Chamber found NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan guilty of crimes against humanity relating to the forced movement of the population from Phnom Penh, the subsequent movement of the population to other areas and the

In the interests of justice, the Chamber still took into account relevant submissions made by the IENG Sary Defence prior to his death that remained pertinent to issues in Case 002/01 (see e.g., Case 002 Second Severance Decision, para. 53; Third Decision on Objections to Documents Proposed for Admission Before the Trial Chamber, E185/2, 12 August 2013, fn. 2).

executions of former Khmer Republic soldiers at Tuol Po Chrey, sentencing them to life imprisonment.<sup>14</sup>

9. Following appeals by NUON Chea, KHIEU Samphan and the Co-Prosecutors, respectively, the Supreme Court Chamber delivered its Appeal Judgement in Case 002/01 on 23 November 2016.<sup>15</sup> The Supreme Court Chamber upheld the convictions of NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan for the crimes against humanity of murder, persecution on political grounds and other inhumane acts in relation to the evacuation of Phnom Penh immediately after the fall of the city on 17 April 1975.<sup>16</sup> It also affirmed the Accused's convictions for the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts and entered convictions for the crime against humanity of murder with regard to the second phase of population transfers that occurred between 1975 and 1977.<sup>17</sup>

10. The Supreme Court Chamber reversed the convictions entered by the Trial Chamber for the crime against humanity of extermination in relation to the evacuation of Phnom Penh. With regard to the second phase of population transfers, it reversed the convictions for extermination and persecution on political grounds.<sup>18</sup> The Supreme Court Chamber also reversed NUON Chea's and KHIEU Samphan's convictions for the crimes against humanity of extermination, murder and persecution on political grounds at Tuol Po Chrey.<sup>19</sup> The Co-Prosecutors' appeal, seeking recognition of the applicability of the extended form of Joint Criminal Enterprise liability, was found to be inadmissible.<sup>20</sup>

11. Finally, the Supreme Court Chamber upheld the sentence of life imprisonment for each Accused based on the massive scale of the crimes; the complete lack of consideration for the ultimate fate of the Cambodian population, especially the most

1.1.3. Case 002/02

12. On 25 November 2013, in its decision on the appeals against the Trial Chamber's second severance decision in Case 002,<sup>22</sup> the Supreme Court Chamber ordered that evidentiary hearings in Case 002/02 commence as soon as possible after closing submissions in Case 002/01 and that the combination of the charges within the scope of Case 002/01 and Case 002/02 be reasonably representative of the entire Case 002 Closing Order.<sup>23</sup> To that end, it ordered that Case 002/02 comprise at a minimum the charges related to S-21, a worksite, a cooperative and genocide.<sup>24</sup> The Trial Chamber heard submissions of the Parties on the proper scope of Case 002/02 at a Trial Management Meeting on 11 and 12 December 2013, at a public hearing of 11 February 2014 and through written submissions.<sup>25</sup> It then ordered on 4 April 2014 that Case 002/02 would comprise the portions of the Closing Order pertaining to: S-21 Security Centre; 1st January Dam Worksite; Tram Kak Cooperatives; genocide (Vietnamese and Cham peoples); Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre; Kampong Chhnang Airport Construction Site; Au Kanseng Security Centre; Phnom Kraol Security Centre; Trapeang Thma Dam Worksite; and the charges of: Forced Marriage and Rape within Forced Marriage (nationwide); and Internal Purges.<sup>26</sup> On 12 September 2014, the Chamber issued a further decision setting forth the order in which the Case 002/02 trial topics would be heard, namely Cooperatives (including Treatment of Buddhists),

13. On 17 October 2014, the Trial Chamber opened the substantive hearings in Case 002/02.<sup>28</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence team absented themselves from the hearings for the remainder of 2014 (see Annex I: Procedural History), necessitating an adjournment of the proceedings.<sup>29</sup> The NUON Chea Defence team attended only the hearing of 24 November 2014.<sup>30</sup> Hearings on evidence commenced on 8 January 2015 and concluded on 11 January 2017 after 274 hearing days. One hundred and eighty-five individuals gave evidence during the trial in Case 002/02, including 114 witnesses, 63 Civil Parties and eight experts. On 27 February 2017, the Chamber reduced the scope of Case 002 by excluding all facts set out in the Closing Order not included in Case 002/01 or Case 002/02, and terminated proceedings concerning these facts.<sup>31</sup> The Parties submitted Closing Briefs on 2 May 2017 and presented Closing Statements during nine hearing days between 13 and 23 June 2017. The Parties subsequently filed amended briefs.<sup>32</sup>

1.2. Summary of the Charges against the Accused

14. The Closing Order alleges that, between 17 April 1975 and 6 January 1979, NUON Chea alias “Brother Number Two”, served as Deputy Secretary of the Communist Party of Kampuchea (“CPK”) Central and Standing Committees and at times also filled various other roles within the government of Democratic Kampuchea, including Minister of Propaganda and Information, Acting Prime Minister, Chairman of the People’s Representative Assembly and Chairman of the Standing Committee of the People’s Representative Assembly.<sup>33</sup>

15. The Closing Order alleges that, between 17 April 1975 and 6 January 1979, KHIEU Samphan alias “Haem”, “Hem”, “Khang” and “Nan”, had various positions

2. PRELIMINARY ISSUES

2.1. Jurisdiction

17. Following the signing of the Agreement between the United Nations and the Royal Government of Cambodia on 6 June 2003, the Cambodian parliament adopted the “Law on the Establishment of Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia for the Prosecution of Crimes Committed during the Period of Democratic Kampuchea” which was promulgated in its final version on 27 October 2004.<sup>36</sup> According to Article 2(1) of the Agreement and Articles 1 and 2 (new) of the ECCC Law, the ECCC has personal jurisdiction over “senior leaders” of Democratic Kampuchea and those who were “most responsible” for the crimes and serious violations of Cambodian penal law, international humanitarian law and international conventions recognised by Cambodia, committed between 17 April 1975 and 6 January 1979.<sup>37</sup>

18. The Co-Investigating Judges ruled that they had personal jurisdiction over NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan, finding that they were senior leaders of Democratic Kampuchea and/or those most responsible for crimes committed between 17 April 1975 and 6 January 1979.<sup>38</sup> Based on the overwhelming weight of the evidence and by their own admission, the Trial Chamber finds that the Accused were Khmer Rouge officials between 1975 and 1979.<sup>39</sup> The nature of their positions qualifies them as senior leaders.<sup>40</sup> A similar finding was not challenged on appeal to the Supreme Court Chamber in Case 002/01. No evidence that would challenge this finding surfaced in

<sup>37</sup> The Supreme Court Chamber has held that the qualification of an Accused as a senior leader or a person most responsible is primarily a matter of prosecutorial and investigative policy within the sole discretion of the Co-Prosecutors and Co-Investigating Judges. As such, it is not justiciable before the Trial Chamber unless an abuse of discretion is alleged. Whether or not an Accused is a Khmer Rouge official, however, is a jurisdictional requirement justiciable before the Trial Chamber. See Case 001 Appeal Judgement, paras 79-80.

Case 002/02. The Chamber therefore finds that it has personal jurisdiction over NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan.

19. The crimes against humanity, war crimes and counts of genocide with which the Accused are charged in Case 002/02, allegedly committed between 17 April 1975 and 6 January 1979, fall within the subject-matter and temporal jurisdiction of the ECCC as defined in Articles 1 and 9 of the Agreement and Articles 1 and 5 of the ECCC Law.

2.2. The Principle of Legality

20. Article 11(2) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights provides that:

No one shall be held guilty of any penal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a penal offence, under national or international law, at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the penal offence was committed.<sup>41</sup>

21. Both the Cambodian and international principles of legality, connected with the general principles of nulla poena sine lege (no penalty without law) and nullum crimen sine lege (no crime without law), require that the law concerning crimes and modes of criminal liability be clear, ascertainable and non-retrospective.<sup>42</sup> Thus, in the specific context of the ECCC, the principle of legality requires that the offences and modes of responsibility charged must have been recognised under Cambodian or international law (including customary international law) as it existed between 17 April 1975 and 6 January 1979, and were sufficiently foreseeable and accessible.<sup>43</sup> This principle does not prohibit a chamber from interpreting and clarifying the law or from relying on those decisions that do so in other cases, even where those cases post-date the period under

<sup>42</sup> Case 001 Appeal Judgement, para. 91; Cambodian Criminal Code 2009, Articles 1 (“The criminal law defines the offenses, determines those who may be found guilty of committing them, sets penalties, and determines how they shall be enforced”), 3 (“Conduct may give rise to criminal conviction only if it constituted an offence at the time it occurred. A penalty may be imposed only if it was legally applicable at the time the offence was committed.”), 5 (“In criminal matters, the law shall be strictly construed. A judge may neither expand its scope of application nor interpret it by analogy.”), 8 (“The provisions of this Code may not have the effect of denying justice to the victims of serious offences which, under special legislation, are characterised as violations of international humanitarian law, international custom, or international conventions recognised by the Kingdom of Cambodia”); Case 002/01 Trial Judgement, para. 16; Case 002/01 Appeal Judgement, para. 761.

<sup>43</sup> Case 001 Trial Judgement, paras 26-34 citing Milutinović et al., Decision on Ojdanić’s Motion Challenging Jurisdiction: Joint Criminal Enterprise (AC), para. 38); Case 001 Appeal Judgement, paras 89-97; Cambodian Criminal Code, Article 3; Case 002/01 Trial Judgement, para. 16; Case 002/01 Appeal Judgement, para. 761.

review. It does, however, prevent a chamber “from creating new law or from interpreting existing law beyond the reasonable limits of acceptable clarification”.<sup>44</sup> In this regard, the Chamber considers itself bound by the principle of strict interpretation of criminal law as set out in Article 5 of the Cambodian Criminal Code, which provides that criminal law shall be strictly construed and prohibits the extension of the definition of crimes by analogy. In case of ambiguity, the definition shall be interpreted in favour of the charged person or accused person (in dubio pro reo).<sup>45</sup>

22. The Supreme Court Chamber has ruled that the jurisdiction of the ECCC over crimes against humanity is limited by the definitions of the crimes as they stood under international law at the time of the alleged criminal conduct.<sup>46</sup> The Chamber considers that this applies with equal force to grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and to the crime of genocide. Insofar as the Trial and Supreme Court Chambers did not previously evaluate whether the crimes and modes of responsibility at issue in Case 002/02 were recognised in domestic or international law by 1975, the Chamber does so in this Judgement.<sup>47</sup>

23. Crimes and modes of liability must be sufficiently foreseeable and accessible in general, rather than to the accused specifically, as determined by an “objective analysis”.<sup>48</sup> In this context, the Supreme Court Chamber has held that it is not unreasonable to take into account the senior positions occupied by the accused in determining whether the principle of legality was adhered to with respect to both the offences and modes of liability charged.<sup>49</sup> Furthermore, the Chamber may consider domestic law in assessing whether it was foreseeable that the conduct in question could entail criminal responsibility in the way it was charged.<sup>50</sup> However, the recognition of a crime or mode of liability under domestic law is not necessary for the conduct to be punishable by the ECCC, provided that it has a basis in customary international law.<sup>51</sup>

24. According to the KHIEU Samphan Defence, the approach taken by the Supreme Court Chamber assimilates the foreseeability of the crimes with the foreseeability of the reprehensible nature of the acts (caractère répréhensible de l'acte) and is contrary to the principle of legality.<sup>52</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence further points to case law of the ECtHR which states that the principle of legality requires “that an offence must be clearly defined in the law, be it national or international. This requirement is satisfied where the individual can know from the wording of the relevant provision [...] what acts and omissions will make him criminally liable.”<sup>53</sup> The Defence contends that, in contrast to this requirement, the Supreme Court Chamber has taken the position that it was sufficient for the accused to be able to “appreciate that the conduct is criminal in the sense generally understood, without reference to any specific provision” thus not requiring “an analysis of the technical terms of the definition of the crimes”. It submits that this approach is not acceptable and is contrary to the object and purpose of this fundamental principle.<sup>54</sup> The Defence further submits that the principle of legality is a fundamental principle from which there can be no derogation, even in times of war or public emergency. Therefore, criminal offences must be precise, unequivocal and unambiguous in all circumstances.<sup>55</sup> Accordingly, the Defence submits that the reprehensible nature of an accused’s actions and the nature of the alleged offences can never make up for the absence of a clear and precise definition of the crime at issue.<sup>56</sup> The Defence concludes that the Trial Chamber must therefore depart from the Supreme Court Chamber’s reasoning.<sup>57</sup>

25. The KHIEU Samphan Defence further submits that relying on the gravity of the crimes effectively allowed the Supreme Court Chamber to dispense with an examination of the accessibility of post-war jurisprudence to KHIEU Samphan.<sup>58</sup> The Defence stresses that in determining whether a particular rule exists under customary international law, it is crucial to be particularly rigorous and cautious in determining the accessibility and foreseeability of that rule.<sup>59</sup> While the KHIEU Samphan Defence made these arguments in the context of JCE and murder as a crime against humanity, they apply generally to the principle of legality and will thus be addressed here. No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. The Chamber will address the arguments specifically pertaining to JCE and murder in the relevant applicable law sections.

26. The Trial Chamber finds that the KHIEU Samphan Defence's submissions challenging the Supreme Court Chamber approach to the principle of legality conflate two different requirements under that principle: that the offences and modes of responsibility charged be recognised under Cambodian or international law at the time of the alleged criminal conduct, and that they be sufficiently foreseeable and accessible. The Trial Chamber will examine these different aspects in turn.

27. The approach taken by the Supreme Court Chamber in Case 002/01 clearly demonstrates that it recognised the need to ascertain that "offences and modes of liability charged before the ECCC [...] existed either under national law or international law at the time of the alleged criminal conduct".<sup>60</sup> Further, the Supreme Court Chamber also recognised the need to define the actus reus and mens rea of the underlying crimes.<sup>61</sup> To the extent that it incorporated by reference its legal analysis and findings from Case 001 in Case 002/01, the incorporated analysis of whether crimes against humanity were established as international crimes as of 1975 was extensive,<sup>62</sup> and took a cautious and rigorous approach when determining how crimes against humanity were defined during the ECCC's temporal jurisdiction.<sup>63</sup> Contrary to the submissions of the KHIEU Samphan Defence, there is no indication that the Supreme Court Chamber failed to require clear definitions of crimes, at the relevant time, by relying on the gravity of those crimes.

28. The Chamber finds that the KHIEU Samphan Defence's reliance upon the Vasiliauskas v. Lithuania Judgement from the ECtHR shows a selective reading of the ECtHR jurisprudence.<sup>64</sup> In the relevant passage the ECtHR stated:

It follows from these principles that an offence must be clearly defined in the law, be it national or international. This requirement is satisfied where the individual can know from the wording of the relevant provision – and, if need be, with the assistance of the courts' interpretation of it and with informed legal advice – what acts and omissions will make him criminally liable.<sup>65</sup>

However, Article 7(1) of the ECHR requires a twofold approach. In the first place it requires examination of whether there was a sufficiently clear legal basis, having regard to the state of the law at the time of the alleged offence to support a conviction.<sup>66</sup> Secondly, it must be determined whether the alleged offence was “defined by law with sufficient accessibility and foreseeability so that the applicant could have known [at that time] what acts and omissions would make him criminally liable for such crimes and regulated his conduct accordingly”.<sup>67</sup> The need for a clear legal basis does not preclude that in any field of law, including criminal law, there is an inevitable element of judicial interpretation; in particular there will always be a need for elucidation of doubtful points and for adaptation to changing circumstances.

29. In this regard, the Chamber notes that the ECtHR recognised that the law providing the legal basis for the definition of a crime may comprise written and unwritten law, and held that: “Article 7 of the Convention cannot be read as outlawing the gradual clarification of the rules of criminal liability through judicial interpretation from case to case, provided that the resultant development is consistent with the essence of the offence and could reasonably be foreseen”.<sup>68</sup> The Chamber considers this approach to be reasonable and often necessary when dealing with crimes under customary international law which are not necessarily codified as in national jurisdictions.

30. In its analysis of the foreseeability and accessibility requirements, the Supreme Court Chamber had regard to the purpose of the principle of legality, which is to ensure that an accused is not held responsible for conduct which could not be envisaged as criminal when that conduct occurred.<sup>69</sup> In its analysis of foreseeability in particular, the Supreme Court Chamber found that the gravity of the crimes in issue was relevant in determining whether KHIEU Samphan could argue that he did not understand at the time of the alleged criminal conduct that his conduct was criminal in the sense generally understood.<sup>70</sup> It did not suggest that this is the sole factor to be considered when assessing foreseeability. Rather, it addressed the issue of gravity in response to a submission by the Co-Prosecutors.<sup>71</sup> The Trial Chamber concurs with the view that the higher the gravity of crimes, the more likely that an accused would be aware in a general sense that such conduct is punishable.

31. With respect to accessibility in particular, the Chamber finds that, contrary to the KHIEU Samphan Defence submissions, the Supreme Court Chamber did not rely on the gravity of the crimes in order to avoid an assessment of whether those crimes were accessible to the Accused. The Supreme Court Chamber expressly found that both the offences and modes of liability must have existed under national or international law at the time of the alleged criminal conduct and that “in addition to treaties, ‘laws based on custom [...] can be relied on as sufficiently available to the accused’”.<sup>72</sup> The Supreme Court Chamber relied on this, together with the positions of authority held at the relevant time by the Accused, in determining that the crimes were sufficiently accessible.

32. The KHIEU Samphan Defence’s submissions with respect to the principle of legality are accordingly rejected.

2.3. The Case File

33. The Trial Chamber was seised with the Case File following resolution of all appeals against the Closing Order on 13 January 2011.<sup>73</sup> Once notified of the charges, a Charged Person, and after an indictment, an Accused, has ongoing access to the Case File throughout the proceedings.<sup>74</sup> Thus NUON Chea has had access to the Case File since 19 September 2007 and KHIEU Samphan since 19 November 2007.<sup>75</sup>

34. At the conclusion of closing submissions, 14,476 documents and other materials put before the Chamber pursuant to Internal Rule 87(3) remained “confidential”. The majority of this material retains the classification automatically assigned during the judicial investigation in Case 002, although many documents presented during public trial hearings were reclassified as public and made available on the court’s website. While certain justifications for non-disclosure continue to be valid,<sup>76</sup> reclassification of material generated by, and collected during, the judicial investigation in Case 002 no longer poses a generalised risk of prejudice to the rights of the Parties or the integrity of the investigation.<sup>77</sup> Thus, in reaching its judgement and publicly relying upon and/or referring to classified information, the Chamber considers whether any justification for such classification, beyond the confidentiality of the judicial investigation, exists. The Chamber, on its own motion, determined that confidentiality is no longer justified for that information publicly disclosed in this Judgement.<sup>78</sup>

2.4. Evidentiary and Procedural Principles*2.4.1. Introduction

35. The Cambodian Code of Criminal Procedure governs proceedings before the ECCC. Guidance may also be drawn from international law in situations where existing procedures do not deal with a particular matter, there is uncertainty regarding their interpretation or application, or where they may be inconsistent with international standards.<sup>79</sup> The Internal Rules consolidate the Cambodian procedures applicable before the ECCC and adopt international procedure in order to ensure justice, fairness and due process of law.<sup>80</sup> Within this framework, the Chamber must “ensure that trials are fair and expeditious [...] with full respect for the rights of the accused and for the protection of victims and witnesses”.<sup>81</sup>

36. The Chamber notes that the Case 002/01 Appeal Judgement, delivered on 23 November 2016, addressed a number of the procedures adopted by the Trial Chamber during the Case 002/01 trial, providing guidance for the conduct of future proceedings. As the Case 002/01 Appeal Judgement was delivered approximately seven weeks (17 hearing days) prior to the end of evidentiary hearings in Case 002/02, the Trial Chamber did not have the benefit of this guidance for the conduct of most of the trial hearings in Case 002/02. In several respects the Supreme Court Chamber’s guidance reflects the Trial Chamber’s approach to Case 002. No importation of criminal responsibility is made between cases and factual findings are not transposed from Case 002/01 to Case 002/02.<sup>82</sup> In this context, although there is partial commonality between the oral and documentary evidence in each case, the Trial Chamber evaluates all the material now before it: different conclusions may be reached, including on evidence and matters commonly relevant.<sup>83</sup> When evaluating material from Case 002/01 in relation to issues in Case 002/02, the Chamber satisfies itself that the right to full adversarial debate is preserved.<sup>84</sup> In this regard and concerning the evaluation of oral evidence heard during Case 002/01 proceedings, the Chamber will consider whether the Parties were prevented from examining in court the declarant on matters within the scope of Case 002/02. The Chamber rejects as unsubstantiated the KHIEU Samphan Defence's contention that oral evidence from Case 002/01 becomes (via transcripts) documentary evidence in Case 002/02.<sup>85</sup>

37. The Chamber afforded the Parties an opportunity to make written and oral submissions on the impact of the Case 002/01 Appeal Judgement on the conclusion of the evidentiary proceedings in Case 002/02.<sup>86</sup> None of the Parties filed written submissions. During a Trial Management Meeting held on 8 December 2016, scheduled in part to discuss "the impact, if any, of the Supreme Court Chamber Judgement on the conclusion of the proceedings in Case 002/02", the Parties did not raise any issue which they considered should delay the closure of evidence in the case.<sup>87</sup> However, the Parties made submissions based on the Case 002/01 Appeal Judgement concerning the legal principles governing the consideration of the evidence.<sup>88</sup> Where relevant, these submissions and the jurisprudence set forth by the Supreme Court Chamber are addressed in this Judgement.

2.4.2. Burden and Standard of Proof

38. The Accused are presumed innocent until proved guilty.<sup>89</sup> The Co-Prosecutors bear the burden of proof.<sup>90</sup> In order to convict, the Chamber must be convinced of an Accused's guilt "beyond reasonable doubt".<sup>91</sup> In order to resolve any discrepancy are substantially different from those in Case 002/01, the principle of ne bis in idem does not preclude the Trial Chamber's assessment of NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan's responsibility for the crimes alleged in Case 002/02. Where the Chamber uses language similar or identical to Case 002/01, this simply reflects that the Trial Chamber's conclusion following its analysis of the evidence afresh in Case 002/02 is the same as the one it reached in Case 002/01.

between the different language versions of Internal Rule 87(1) that reflect the common law “beyond reasonable doubt” standard and the civil law concept of “intime conviction”, the Chamber has adopted a common approach that evaluates the sufficiency of the evidence. Upon a reasoned assessment of the evidence, the Chamber interprets any doubt as to guilt in the Accused’s favour.<sup>92</sup>

39. “Intime conviction” is a concept that developed to ensure that judges are generally free to make their own assessment of evidence heard during the trial. This assessment must be based on “reason”, meaning that it is neither the automatic result of the evaluation of evidence according to abstract standards imposed by law,<sup>93</sup> nor the outcome of mere conjecture or emotion. Whatever the principle relied upon to draft a judgement, either “intime conviction” or “beyond reasonable doubt”, both require a logical and comprehensive reasoning that first accords with common sense. The Chamber finds that these two notions are compatible, but that the standard of “beyond reasonable doubt” supplements and allows for an interpretation of the “intime conviction” concept that accords with the highest requirements foreseen at the international level. This approach is consistent with the ECCC legal framework.<sup>94</sup> Moreover, it stresses that the proof of each element of the crime, the mode of liability and any fact which is decisive of guilt is subject to a reasoned assessment of evidence. Any reasonable doubt in this regard shall be interpreted in the Accused’s favour, in accordance with the principle of the presumption of innocence.<sup>95</sup>

<sup>92</sup> The English and Khmer versions of Internal Rule 87(1) provide a “beyond reasonable doubt” standard, while “intime conviction” is provided in the French version. See Case 001 Trial Judgement, para. 45.

<sup>93</sup> The concept of “intime conviction”, which arose in France at the end of the 18th century, was first a reaction against rules of evidence that instituted a hierarchy and a strict calculation of so-called “objective elements of evidence”, defined by law (système des preuves légales). Under these rules a confession was considered as the highest possible evidence reflecting the only and unchallengeable truth. With the introduction of the concept of “intime conviction”, lawmakers intended to give judges the ability to make their own assessment of evidence based upon reason, instead of a mere calculation of the probative value of evidence imposed by law. The concept of “intime conviction” has since been frequently but inappropriately associated with judgements issued with very poor or even no reasoning. This was mainly because decisions made by the Cour d’Assises, a court based on a jury system, did not contain any reasoning. Effective 1 January 2012, the French Cours d’Assises has been required to provide reasons for its judgements.

40. All facts underlying the elements of the crime or the form of responsibility alleged, as well as all facts which are indispensable for entering a conviction, especially those forming the elements of the crime or the form of responsibility alleged against the accused, must be established beyond reasonable doubt.<sup>96</sup> This must be supported by a reasoned opinion on the basis of the entire body of evidence, without applying the standard of proof “beyond reasonable doubt” in a piecemeal fashion.<sup>97</sup> Of course, as found by the Supreme Court Chamber, this does not mean that “a multiplicity of evidentiary items may add up to meet the burden of proof beyond reasonable doubt by virtue of their sheer number, irrespective of their probative value”.<sup>98</sup> The Chamber clarifies below the impact of the standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt on the assessment of the probative value of the evidence put before it.<sup>99</sup>

2.4.3.1. Management of requests for evidence

41. Prior to the commencement of the trial, the Chamber ordered all Parties to file initial lists identifying, briefly describing and indicating the relevance of all proposed evidence.<sup>100</sup> On 8 April 2014, the Chamber further directed all Parties to provide updated lists of documents previously filed and updated lists of intended exhibits for Case 002/02, including a description of their nature and contents as well as the relevant points of the Closing Order.<sup>101</sup>

2.4.3.2. Legal framework

42. Unless provided otherwise, all evidence is admissible.<sup>102</sup> Any decision of the Chamber shall be based only on evidence that has been put before the Chamber and subjected to examination.<sup>103</sup> The Chamber may reject any request for evidence that is irrelevant or repetitious, impossible to obtain within a reasonable time, unsuitable to prove the facts it purports to prove, not allowed under the law or intended to prolong proceedings.<sup>104</sup>

43. While parties may propose the admission of evidence at any stage of the trial,<sup>105</sup> all proposed evidence not available at the time of the opening of the trial is considered “new” evidence subject to the requirements of Internal Rule 87(4).<sup>106</sup> Moving parties must demonstrate that new evidence was not available prior to the opening of the trial and/or could not have been discovered earlier with the exercise of reasonable diligence.<sup>107</sup> If a request for admission of evidence is untimely, the Chamber may nonetheless admit the requested evidence in the interests of justice.<sup>108</sup>

44. In order to be considered as put before the Chamber, all evidence must be summarised, read out or otherwise appropriately identified.<sup>109</sup> Where the Chamber rejects an objection posed to a document, or where no objections are raised, a document which has been properly summarised or identified including in the request for admission and which otherwise satisfies the criteria set out in Internal Rules 87(3)-(4) is admitted and considered put before the Chamber. Each document which has been admitted and put before the Chamber is accorded an E3 number.<sup>110</sup>

45. In its Closing Brief and Closing Statements, the NUON Chea Defence cited evidence which was not admitted, either because it did not meet the requirements of Internal Rule 87 or because the evidence was never produced and sought for admission.<sup>111</sup> As this material has not been properly put before the Chamber pursuant to Internal Rule 87, the Chamber is unable to rely upon it in this Judgement.<sup>112</sup>

46. The Chamber recalls that in Case 002/01, it found that the methodology used by DC-Cam in obtaining, archiving and preserving contemporaneous DK-era documents was reliable and therefore accorded such documents a rebuttable presumption of prima facie relevance and reliability (including authenticity).<sup>113</sup> The Chamber has likewise accorded a presumption of relevance and reliability (including authenticity) to documents cited in the Case 002 Closing Order based upon the assessment of these documents by the Co-Investigating Judges and the fact that the Closing Order had been subject to appeal to the Pre-Trial Chamber.<sup>114</sup> The Trial Chamber reiterated these principles in its Case 002/01 Judgement.<sup>115</sup> The Supreme Court Chamber saw no error in this approach, noting that “[i]t was for the party disputing the authenticity of a document which is judicially presumed to be prima facie authentic to rebut this presumption”.<sup>116</sup> The Trial Chamber emphasises that it is incumbent upon the Party contesting the reliability or authenticity of evidence to identify evidence and proffer reasons to rebut the presumption. #### 2.4.4. Sources of Evidence Put Before the Chamber

2.4.4.1. Evidence of the Accused

47. Pursuant to Internal Rules 21(1)(d) and 90(1), the President informed each Accused of his fundamental right to remain silent.<sup>117</sup> On 17 October 2014, subsequent to this warning, NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan each gave opening statements.<sup>118</sup> Both Accused indicated that they would not be responding to questions pursuant to Internal Rule 90.<sup>119</sup> The President informed the Accused that the Chamber would proceed on the basis that they had exercised their right to remain silent and would not answer questions unless and until such time as the Chamber was expressly informed otherwise by the Accused or their counsel.<sup>120</sup> When Civil Parties sought to put questions to the Accused through the President, the President informed the Civil Parties that the Accused had exercised their right to remain silent and would not respond to such questions.<sup>121</sup> During the trial, the Chamber has indicated which inferences, if any, it may draw from an accused's selective exercise of his right to remain silent.<sup>122</sup>

48. On 1 July 2016, upon the request of the Co-Prosecutors, the Chamber invited the Accused to indicate whether they intended to testify in Case 002/02.<sup>123</sup> KHIEU Samphan responded that he maintained the position that he would not answer any questions.<sup>124</sup> NUON Chea also confirmed his intention not to respond to questions in Case 002/02, noting however that he would strongly reconsider this position if the Chamber summonsed HENG Samrin to testify and gave the Defence a fair opportunity to examine him.<sup>125</sup> The Accused did not respond to questions posed by any of the

2.4.4.2. Evidence of Civil Parties, Witnesses and Experts

49. By virtue of their special status, Civil Parties were not required to take an oath.<sup>127</sup> The Chamber approaches Civil Party, witness and expert evidence on a case-by-case basis in light of the credibility of the testimony and in consideration of factors such as the demeanour of the person testifying, consistencies and inconsistencies in relation to material facts, possible ulterior motivations, corroboration and all of the circumstances of the case.<sup>128</sup>

50. Witnesses were informed of their right not to self-incriminate and were assisted by counsel where necessary.<sup>129</sup> Expert opinion was also heard by the Chamber on specific technical issues, to assist it in understanding evidence presented during trial.<sup>130</sup>

51. The Chamber admitted written witness, expert and Civil Party statements, including transcripts from prior proceedings, in conjunction with or in place of oral evidence, in order to give the Parties an opportunity to confront these individuals with alleged discrepancies between their oral evidence and prior statements at trial.<sup>131</sup> In the interests of justice, the Chamber also admitted all prior statements of witnesses, experts and Civil Parties disclosed from Cases 003 and 004 when these individuals were heard at trial for the same purpose.<sup>132</sup>

<sup>132</sup> Decision on Requests Regarding Internal Rule 87(4) Deadlines, E421/4, 21 September 2016, para. 12.

52. Beginning in June 2012, in the interests of expeditiousness, the Witness and Expert Support Unit was ordered to provide the individuals summonsed to be heard with a copy of their written records of interview, or to read such documents for those unable to read, in order to give them an opportunity to review statements previously made. Further, the President began asking witnesses and Civil Parties appearing in court to affirm the accuracy of their prior statements made to the Office of the Co-Investigating Judges, as reflected in the written records of interview. Upon affirmation, while noting that the Parties have the right to test a witness's credibility on areas within or beyond his prior statements, the Chamber invited the Parties to ask further questions only where there was a need for clarification relevant to matters that are insufficiently covered by these statements or not dealt with during questioning before the Co-Investigating Judges.<sup>133</sup> The Supreme Court Chamber upheld this approach in the Case 002/01 Appeal Judgement.<sup>134</sup>

53. In a related matter, the NUON Chea Defence takes issue with the practice used during some examinations of refreshing the recollection of witnesses and Civil Parties by quoting their prior statements during their testimony.<sup>135</sup> It appears to submit that this practice amounts to leading the witness or Civil Party, thus rendering the testimony of these individuals unreliable. The Chamber observes that these objections were rejected where open questions were first asked and when quotes were made with the view to confronting the author of the evidence with his or her own statements.<sup>136</sup> The Chamber further recalls that the credibility of testimony is assessed on a case-by-case basis, taking into consideration factors such as consistencies and inconsistencies in relation to material facts, corroboration and all the circumstances of the case.<sup>137</sup> The extent of leading questions, such as the use of prior statements to refresh the recollection of a witness or Civil Party, is also relevant to the credibility and reliability of testimony which the Chamber will take into consideration.

54. Over the course of Case 002/02, 185 individuals appeared before the Chamber concerning the substantive matters at issue including 114 witnesses, 63 Civil Parties and eight experts. Fifteen appeared by video-link.<sup>138</sup>

2.4.4.3. Documentary evidence

55. On 8 April 2014, the Chamber directed all Parties to provide updated lists of documents previously filed and updated lists of intended exhibits for Case 002/02, including a description of their nature and contents as well as the relevant points of the Closing Order.<sup>139</sup> The Chamber subsequently granted the Parties the opportunity to submit, no later than 2 February 2015, written objections to documents on the other Parties' updated document lists and to rebut the presumption of relevance and reliability accorded to documents cited in the Closing Order.<sup>140</sup> These written submissions served as the basis for the Chamber's determination of the admissibility of documentary evidence, in lieu of holding document admissibility hearings as it did in Case 002/01.<sup>141</sup>

56. Following the opportunity for public, adversarial debate through these submissions, the Chamber admitted 4,980 pieces of documentary evidence in addition to the 5,824 pieces of evidence already admitted during the course of Case 002/01, including contemporaneous and analytical documents, audio and video recordings and the written evidence of witnesses, experts and Civil Parties.<sup>142</sup> Some of these documents were admitted as new evidence requested pursuant to Internal Rule 87(4).<sup>143</sup>

57. Considering the significant time that has passed since the DK era, documents recorded contemporaneously with the charged events are some of the most important sources of evidence. The contemporaneous documents before the Chamber include records of meetings or communications upon which the Chamber did not hear any direct testimony. The vast majority of the contemporaneous documents on the Case File are electronically accessible with the original documents being available at the Documentation Center for Cambodia, the Tuol Sleng Museum, the Cambodian National Archives or the Bophana Center.<sup>144</sup> These documents were accessible to the Parties upon request to check the authenticity of the original and the accuracy of the electronic copies. Where the original document had been lost, only a copy of the document was available. This has been taken into account in the assessment of the probative value of the concerned material.

58. Key Document Presentation Hearings – The Chamber continued its practice, established in Case 002/01, of providing the Parties with an opportunity to present key documents they considered to be particularly relevant to each trial topic.<sup>145</sup> These hearings took into account that documentary evidence need not necessarily be tendered

2.4.5. Evidence Outside the Temporal or Geographic Scope of the Closing Order

60. The Chamber notes that it may rely on evidence that falls outside of the temporal or geographic scope of the Closing Order in three circumstances: (1) to clarify a given context; (2) to establish by inference the elements, in particular the mens rea, of criminal conduct occurring during the material period; or (3) to demonstrate a deliberate pattern of conduct.<sup>151</sup> The Chamber will therefore only rely on this evidence for these limited purposes and exclusively when the out-of-scope evidence is consistent with other evidence.

2.4.6. Final Assessment of the Evidence

2.4.6.1. General issues concerning evidence

61. The Chamber bases its findings on evidence put before it and subjected to adversarial debate.<sup>152</sup> In conjunction with final submissions, the Chamber considers submissions as to the probative value of evidence made at trial, particularly those that went beyond the prima facie relevance and reliability of proposed evidence.<sup>153</sup> Various factors are relevant to the probative value of evidence including the criteria set out in Internal Rule 87(3),<sup>154</sup> the circumstances surrounding the creation or recording of evidence, whether the document admitted was an original or a copy, legibility, discrepancies with other versions, deficiencies credibly alleged, whether the Parties had the opportunity to challenge the evidence, and other indicia of reliability including chain of custody and provenance.<sup>155</sup> The Chamber also considers the identification, examination, bias, source and motive – or lack thereof – of the authors and sources of the evidence.<sup>156</sup>

<sup>152</sup> Internal Rule 87(2). The Chamber notes that the English version of this rule requires that evidence be “subjected to examination” while the French version requires that it be “débatues contradictoirement”.

<sup>153</sup> Decision on Objections to Documents Proposed to Be Put before the Chamber in Case 002/02, E305/17, 30 June 2015, paras 32, 38, 41; Decision on Objections to Documents Proposed to be Put Before the Chamber in the Co-Prosecutors’ Annexes A1-A5 and to Documents Cited in Paragraphs of the Closing Order Relevant to the First Two Trial Segments of Case 002/01, E185, 9 April 2012, paras 21, 30; Decision on Objections Proposed to be Put before the Chamber in Co-Prosecutors’ Annexes A6-A11 and A14-A20 and by the Other Parties, E185/1, 3 December 2012, paras 13, 19; Third Decision on Objections to Documents Proposed for Admission before the Trial Chamber, E185/2, 12 August 2013, paras 20, 24, 26; Decision on Objections to the Admissibility of Witness, Victim and Civil Party Statements and Case 001 Transcripts Proposed by the Co-Prosecutors and Civil Party Lead Co-Lawyers, E299, 15 August 2013, paras 21, 23, 26, 30, 32.

<sup>154</sup> The Chamber takes into account whether evidence is irrelevant or repetitious, impossible to obtain within a reasonable time, unsuitable to prove the facts it purports to prove, not allowed under the law or intended to prolong proceedings (Internal Rule 87(3)). See above, Section 2.4.3: Admissibility of Evidence.

<sup>155</sup> See e.g., Decision on Objections to Documents Proposed to be Put Before the Chamber in the Co-Prosecutors’ Annexes A1-A5 and to Documents Cited in Paragraphs of the Closing Order Relevant to the First Two Trial Segments of Case 002/01, E185, 9 April 2012, paras 30, 34, fn. 49; Decision on Defence Requests Concerning Irregularities Alleged to Have Occurred During the Judicial Investigation (E221, E223, E224, E224/2, E234, E234/2, E241 and E241/1), E251, 7 December 2012, paras 26, 28, 36; Decision on Co-Prosecutors’ Rule 92 Submission Regarding the Admission of Witness Statements and Other Documents before the Trial Chamber, E96/7, 20 June 2012, paras 17, 25-29. See also, Case 002/01 Appeal Judgement, paras 296, 328-329, 375.

62. As to the assessment of witness testimony in particular, the Chamber considers that the reliability of a witness's testimony is contingent upon his or her ability to perceive, remember and articulate accurately and that this can be impacted by a number of factors. These include the time elapsed since the events, because of its impact on memory; the health, age and mental status of a witness at the time of the incident and the time of the testimony; and potential bias arising from issues such as a desire to avoid self-incrimination or public embarrassment, and attempts to protect another person. The Chamber also relies upon the guidance of its Cambodian members in the assessment of witness credibility in order to avoid cultural bias.

63. In assessing the probative value of hearsay evidence, the Chamber takes into account the fact that the source of the hearsay has not been cross-examined as well as "the infinitely variable circumstances which surround [the] hearsay evidence".<sup>157</sup> Hearsay evidence is therefore approached with caution.<sup>158</sup>

64. In order to convict, all reasonable inferences that may be drawn from the evidence must be consistent with the guilt of the accused.<sup>159</sup> As the Supreme Court Chamber has noted:

In cases involving alleged mass criminality, it [is] often impossible to call all witnesses that could testify to the set of events in question. In such situations, the fact finder may be called upon to make inferences from the evidence [heard from a limited number of individuals] as to the broader experience.<sup>160</sup>

Generalised inferences may be drawn from the specific evidence of a limited number of witnesses, but only where the generalised finding is established beyond reasonable doubt.<sup>161</sup>

65. Prior to drawing an adverse inference from evidence presented at trial, the Chamber must consider the plausibility of alternative explanations, including those that may be favourable to the Accused.<sup>162</sup> For example, statements made for propagandistic purposes may diminish their reliability.<sup>163</sup> Furthermore, it is essential for the Chamber to identify and consider exculpatory evidence alongside evidence which may be inculpatory on any particular issue.<sup>164</sup>

66. With regard to evidence provided by experts, the Chamber must scrutinise carefully the sources relied upon by the experts in making their conclusions. Where factual findings rely upon an expert's work, precise indications must be made as to the specific and verifiable sources underpinning the expert's opinion. Where the sources are not fully accessible and verifiable, diminished weight is attributed to expert evidence derived from them.<sup>165</sup> These principles apply to each of the experts who testified at trial, namely Elizabeth BECKER, Henri LOCARD, YSA Osman, VOEUN Vuthy, Peg LEVINE, Kasumi NAKAGAWA, Alexander Laban HINTON and Stephen John MORRIS.

67. The NUON Chea Defence submits that Civil Party testimony is of lesser probative value than witness testimony because Civil Parties do not take an oath.<sup>166</sup> The Trial Chamber and Supreme Court Chamber have previously rejected this argument,<sup>167</sup> the latter unambiguously ruling that “the Trial Chamber may rely on the testimony of Civil Parties to make determinations of guilt, just as it may rely on the testimony of the accused person, should he or she decide to testify”, and that “[w]hile the status of a Civil Party may be of relevance to the probative value and/or credibility of the testimony, there is no reason to exclude it per se”.<sup>168</sup> The Supreme Court Chamber also held that although Civil Parties do not take an oath, the Trial Chamber may rely on their testimony, including evidence they provided when they were given the floor to make statements on their suffering.<sup>169</sup> The Chamber accordingly rejects the submission that Civil Party testimony is of inherently lesser probative value.

2.4.6.2. Written statements including WRIs, Civil Party Applications, DC-Cam statements, refugee reports and newspaper articles

68. The KHIEU Samphan and NUON Chea Defence submit that the Chamber must accord little probative value to written statements of witnesses, Civil Parties and experts absent the opportunity for confrontation. It further submits that such statements may not be used to prove the acts and conduct of the Accused.<sup>170</sup>

69. The Chamber reiterates that absent the opportunity to examine the source or author of evidence, less weight may be assigned to that evidence.<sup>171</sup> Further, statements taken outside the framework of a judicial process, such as statements recorded by DC-Cam, Civil Party Applications, reports, unsworn refugee accounts and newspaper articles are of inherently low probative value.<sup>172</sup> Where a finding relies in part on such statements, the reasons for the finding must be clearly explained, particularly if a conviction depends wholly or decisively on such evidence.<sup>173</sup> To test the accuracy of a witness statement, the Chamber may consider whether the statement is corroborated by other evidence and, if so, the nature of that evidence. The Chamber may also consider whether the prior statements of a witness are mutually consistent and whether inconsistencies are explained adequately.

70. The Chamber admitted a number of statements and transcripts of available witnesses in place of oral testimony where the statements fulfilled the prima facie requirements of relevance and reliability (including authenticity) and were proposed as proof of matters other than the acts and conduct of the Accused.

71. The Chamber further admitted statements of deceased or otherwise unavailable witnesses, including for the purpose of proving the acts and conduct of the Accused, noting however that they have limited probative value and that a conviction may not be based solely or decisively thereupon.<sup>174</sup> Although such statements have lower probative value than the testimony of witnesses appearing before the Chamber, they may still be an important source of evidence, particularly where the statement was obtained by a judicial entity.<sup>175</sup>

72. There are also limited exceptions to the rule that written statements may not be used to prove the acts and conduct of the Accused. The Chamber recalls that relevant rules and practice at the international level permit reliance on evidence of witnesses who have died subsequent to giving their statements, or who can no longer with reasonable diligence be traced, or who “by reason of bodily or mental condition are unable to testify orally”.<sup>176</sup> Written statements or transcripts of deceased or unavailable witnesses are admissible, and therefore relied upon, where the Chamber is satisfied that the witness is genuinely unavailable and that the proposed evidence is reliable,<sup>177</sup> and

73. Civil Party Applications are not created by a judicial entity and are accordingly not accorded a presumption of reliability and are accorded little, if any, probative value.<sup>180</sup>

2.4.6.3. Torture-tainted evidence

74. The Chamber granted – with certain limitations – requests to admit hundreds of documents which may have been tainted by the use of torture, such as S-21 confessions and prison notebooks.<sup>181</sup> Article 15 of the UN Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhumane or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (“CAT”) prohibits the use of evidence obtained through torture except against a person accused of torture as evidence that the statement was made.<sup>182</sup> All Parties are bound by this provision.<sup>183</sup> As such, the Chamber has held that torture-tainted evidence cannot be used for the truth of its contents.<sup>184</sup> Where the Chamber determined there was a real risk that evidence was obtained through the use of torture, such evidence was excluded from the proceedings unless: (1) a party rebutted this presumption by reference to other evidence; or (2) the use of the evidence fell within the exception noted in Article 15.<sup>185</sup>

75. Evidence derived from torture-tainted evidence is deemed permissible as long as the proposed use of the evidence does not circumvent the prohibition against invoking the contents of torture-tainted confessions to establish their truth.<sup>186</sup> In addition, evidence obtained by ill-treatment or coercion, although not prohibited by Article 15 of CAT, is not relied upon to support any factual findings in this Judgement pursuant to Cambodian law, especially Article 321 of the Cambodian Code of Criminal Procedure which provides that “[d]eclaration[s] given under physical or mental coercion shall have no evidentiary value”.<sup>187</sup>

76. The Chamber determined that there was a real risk that confessions obtained at security centres in Cambodia during Democratic Kampuchea were torture-tainted, but that certain objective information contained within confessions is not part of the statement and therefore not excluded. Such permissible information includes the recorded identity of the detainee subjected to interrogation and his or her date of arrest, incarceration and/or execution, which is recorded either during registration at the security centre or at the beginning of a document containing a confession, but not in the confession itself.<sup>188</sup> The Chamber also reaffirmed its consistent practice of allowing reference to annotations made on statements containing confessions by the interrogators or any other superiors as these annotations do not form part of the statement obtained by torture.<sup>189</sup>

77. Finally, pursuant to the exception in Article 15, the Chamber held, Judge FENZ dissenting, that information contained within torture-tainted evidence may be used to establish facts other than the truth of the statement, but only for the purpose of determining what action resulted based on the fact that a statement was made. permits the Chamber, for example, to consider whether arrests of certain individuals made subsequent to a confession in which these individuals are named may be proof of a governmental policy.<sup>190</sup>

78. The KHIEU Samphan Defence contests the Trial Chamber's decision without providing further argumentation. It nonetheless encourages the Chamber to limit its consideration of torture-tainted evidence to the principles set forth in its decision.<sup>191</sup> The NUON Chea Defence raises a number of challenges with respect to the Trial Chamber's decision on torture-tainted evidence, which are now addressed in turn.

79. The NUON Chea Defence submits that by adopting a presumption that statements taken at security centres were torture-tainted, the Chamber violated NUON Chea's presumption of innocence.<sup>192</sup> In this regard, the Chamber recalls that:

[It] considers that a preliminary finding that a real risk exists that torture was used, based on a prima facie assessment of the evidence at the time of the decision, does not impinge upon this right [to a presumption of innocence] as it does not pronounce on either the guilt of the Accused or the role they may have played in obtaining the statement at issue. It is a preliminary evidentiary ruling necessary to effectuate the obligatory provisions of the CAT.<sup>193</sup>

The Defence submission on this point is therefore rejected.

80. The NUON Chea Defence also submits that the Chamber unfairly limited the Defence's ability to present its case by refusing to allow the Defence to use "even a few statements" which it considered had been shown not to originate from torture, thereby violating NUON Chea's fair trial right to present a defence to the charges of torture.<sup>194</sup> The Chamber notes that in determining whether to permit the use of statements from security centres, notably when the purpose is to confront witnesses with such documents during examination, the controlling factor is whether there is a real risk that the declarant of the statement was tortured – thereby creating a presumption of torture – and whether any evidence presented by the party seeking to use the statement effectively rebutted that presumption.<sup>195</sup>

81. The Chamber recalls that the NUON Chea Defence filed a motion seeking to rebut the presumption of torture attaching to three statements obtained at S-21, in which it relied on annotations in those statements as well as the testimony of Duch to support its argument that torture was not used in obtaining the statements.<sup>196</sup> In its decision, the Chamber noted that certain annotations within one statement suggested that it had been taken by torture using “hot methods”. With respect to all of the statements, the Chamber found that, even in the absence of evidence of physical torture, there was a real risk that mental torture had been applied.<sup>197</sup> After considering the submissions and evidence identified by the Defence, the Chamber was not satisfied that the presumption that the statements had been taken through the use of torture at S-21 had been rebutted by the NUON Chea Defence.<sup>198</sup> Consequently the use of the statements is prohibited by law.<sup>199</sup>

82. Finally, the NUON Chea Defence asserts that it considers it valid to use torture-tainted evidence and does so within its Closing Brief.<sup>200</sup> The Chamber considers that particularly during the examination of witnesses, permitting the Defence to cite evidence presumptively obtained through torture, even where such evidence might be exculpatory, directly undermines the object and purpose of the prohibition against torture. In this regard, the Chamber has held that, “it is not in the interests of a fair trial to permit as a rule the use of unreliable evidence obtained through illegal means. The Accused should be permitted to adduce evidence that he asserts is exculpatory, but not at the expense of the integrity of the proceedings.”<sup>201</sup> Exceptionally, the Chamber allowed the Parties to refer during their closing speeches to statements made by prisoners in security centres.<sup>202</sup>

2.4.6.4. Spelling of names and locations

83. The spelling of certain names and locations on the Case File at times differs due to a number of factors ranging from a source's origins, pronunciation of a name or its subsequent interpretation. Such differences may also be the result of the absence of a standardised Romanisation of the Khmer language. The Chamber accepts that names and locations with similar, but not identical, spelling may refer to the same individuals or places. Further, given the Cambodian practice of adopting different names, as well as the prevalence of aliases and revolutionary names within the CPK, the Chamber notes that some individuals had various appellations.<sup>203</sup>

2.4.6.5. Interpretation, translation and transcription discrepancies

84. Even with the safeguards and levels of review employed at the ECCC, errors in interpretation, translation and transcription may occur. The Interpretation and Translation Unit (ITU) and various Judges and Chambers took measures throughout the proceedings in an effort to reduce the number of errors and provide for their correction upon identification.<sup>204</sup> Throughout the investigation and trial, the Defence had access to interpreters and translators. All Parties had capabilities in all three official working languages of the ECCC,<sup>205</sup> and therefore were well-positioned to identify errors in translation and transcription and request their correction.<sup>206</sup> determine, on the basis of the totality of evidence available at the judgement phase, whether such facts are proved to the required standard for conviction, which is a higher standard of proof than that relied upon during the evidentiary proceedings to determine the existence of a real risk of torture.).

<sup>203</sup> Case 001 Trial Judgement, para. 58. The Chamber has used in the main text of this Judgement the name of witnesses and Civil Parties as it appeared in their identification documents, where this was available. When citing to interview records or Civil Party Applications, however, the Chamber has retained the name as it appeared in those documents. The Chamber has listed in an annex to this Judgement all the known spellings of the names of witnesses and Civil Parties who were heard. See Annex III: Names of Witnesses and Civil Parties.

85. The Chamber recalls that it raised the issue of the accuracy of the transcripts of hearings early in Case 002/02. On 17 June 2015, the Chamber alerted the Administration to its concerns regarding substantive errors in certain hearing transcripts, originating from interpretation.<sup>207</sup> After further discussion, the Administration informed the Parties on 27 August 2015 of its proposal that the Transcription Unit be tasked with the responsibility to review and perform quality control of hearing transcripts in all three working languages.<sup>208</sup> None of the Parties objected to the proposed methodology.

86. Starting on 3 March 2016, the Transcription Unit, in conjunction with the Interpretation and Translation Unit, began a comprehensive review of draft transcripts of all Trial Chamber hearings to ensure that transcripts accurately reflected the “floor language” of what was said in court. The review first identified and corrected interpretation errors. Thereafter, the final transcripts for hearings prior to 3 March 2016 were reassessed and corrections made based on any identified interpretation errors. The agreed process to ensure quality control of transcripts, while thorough, does not eliminate the possibility of errors remaining in certain transcripts. Where such errors have been identified by the Chamber or the Parties, these have been taken into account in assessing probative value.

87. During the final Trial Management Meeting of Case 002/02, the Parties raised the possibility that the late filing of hearing transcripts would adversely impact upon their ability to file their Closing Briefs by the established 24 April 2017 deadline.<sup>209</sup> Upon inquiry, the Chamber was informed by the Administration that hearing transcripts would be finalised by the end of June 2017 or earlier.<sup>210</sup>

88. On 7 April 2017, the Co-Prosecutors requested a fifteen-day extension of the deadline for the Closing Briefs, from 24 April to 9 May, in view of the ongoing correction of numerous transcripts, which had created difficulties for the Parties in relying upon the court record in their briefs.<sup>211</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence agreed with the request as initially did the Civil Party Lead Co-Lawyers.<sup>212</sup> The NUON Chea Defence objected to the request as being illogical, given that even after the proposed extension of time, many transcripts would not have been corrected.<sup>213</sup> The NUON Chea Defence noted that the “logical solution” would be to either extend the deadline for Closing Briefs to one to two months after all transcripts are completely finalised or to maintain the current deadlines and permit the Parties to file corrigenda to the briefs. Although the NUON Chea Defence believed the first option was the ideal one, it believed the Chamber would be unlikely to grant it and accordingly requested the second option.<sup>214</sup> It requested that the Chamber reject the requested extension of time, authorise the Parties to file corrigenda to their Closing Briefs by the end of September 2017 and order the Administration to guarantee resources to complete the corrigenda.<sup>215</sup>

89. The Civil Party Lead Co-Lawyers subsequently changed their view due to the substantial impact that the transcript corrections had upon their Closing Brief. They sought the deferral of the Closing Briefs until 9 June 2017, when the transcripts containing the testimony of Civil Parties were projected to be finished.<sup>216</sup> The NUON Chea Defence urged the Chamber to reject this Lead Co-Lawyers’ request and reiterated its prior request to maintain the original deadlines for Closing Briefs, to authorise the filing of corrigenda to the Closing Briefs and to ensure adequate defence funding to this end.<sup>217</sup>

90. On 13 April 2017, the Chamber granted the Co-Prosecutors’ request in part by extending the deadline for Closing Briefs by one week until 2 May 2017. On 28 April

2017, it issued the reasons for its decision, addressing the remaining issues raised by the Parties.<sup>218</sup> The Chamber held that a delay to the schedule caused by the one-week extension would be minimal and preserved the right of the Parties to a full adversarial debate of the evidence. It further noted that while the review process may affect the substance of the transcripts, its impact would likely be limited and it did not prevent Parties from filing meaningful briefs before all transcripts were finalised. The Chamber granted the request to file corrigenda, in the form of “Amended Closing Briefs”, as a satisfactory method for ensuring full adversarial debate of evidence heard at trial and the timely issuance of the Judgement. It further noted that it would consider requests to file limited responses to Amended Closing Briefs should it be necessary.<sup>219</sup>

91. From 7 April 2017 until the completion of the transcript review process on 24 July 2017, the Transcription Unit filed fortnightly updates on the status of transcript corrections.<sup>220</sup>

92. In view of its decision regarding Amended Closing Briefs and the related NUON Chea request for resources, the Chamber noted that it would provide the request and its decision to the Office of Administration for appropriate consideration.<sup>221</sup> The Defence Support Section subsequently granted the Defence teams’ request for additional resources from July to September 2017 for the purpose of preparing Amended Closing Briefs.<sup>222</sup> All of the Parties submitted amended Closing Briefs pursuant to the 30 September 2017 deadline.<sup>223</sup> While such opportunity was expressly offered to the Parties, no Party seised the Chamber with a request to file limited responses to Amended Closing Briefs.<sup>224</sup> While all the Closing Briefs were translated into Khmer by March 2018, ITU informed the Trial Chamber that it would be unable to deliver the English translation of the KHIEU Samphan Closing Brief before the issuance of this Judgement. The Chamber has therefore relied on internal unofficial translations.

2.4.6.6. NUON Chea Defence right to confront evidence and prepare his defence

93. The NUON Chea Defence submits in its Closing Brief that the Chamber's decision not to delay the deadline for the filing of Closing Briefs until after the completion of the transcription correction exercise prejudiced NUON Chea's right to confront evidence and prepare his defence effectively.<sup>225</sup> It submits that during the hearings and the initial drafting period for the Closing Briefs, the Defence could not have been aware of missing information in English interpretation and, due to multiple corrections of transcripts, it was impossible to know when a transcript was final, depriving NUON Chea of an opportunity to submit his initial brief based on access to all of the evidence. It notes that it intends to file a corrected version of its brief and may seek to reopen the hearing after all transcripts are complete.<sup>226</sup> The Defence notes that it was compelled to expend several months of additional work preparing and filing its amended brief.<sup>227</sup>

94. The Chamber considers that this NUON Chea Defence argument is without merit. The Chamber notes that during trial the Defence took a different position, consistently opposing any delay of the Closing Brief deadline. The requests that the NUON Chea Defence made in relation to the transcript review were granted by the Chamber. In particular, the Defence was authorised to file an Amended Closing Brief following the completion of the transcript correction exercise and, eventually, to make limited challenges to the Amended Closing Briefs of other Parties. Requests for further information about the status of the correction exercise were acted upon by the Transcription Unit. Further, the Chamber forwarded the Defence request for additional resources to the Administration, which granted the request. The Chamber considers that these measures adequately protected NUON Chea's ability to examine the evidence and prepare his defence effectively.

95. The Chamber is cognisant of the difficulties raised by the correction of transcripts during the drafting of Closing Briefs and the preparation of Closing Statements. Nonetheless, the Chamber recalls that all Parties have staff available with the language capacity to read the transcripts in the floor language of the speaker.<sup>228</sup> The transcript of the floor language reflects verbatim what is said in court and is not affected by interpretation errors. Where questions exist as to the accuracy of transcripts, the Chamber has also relied upon the floor language transcript. Though potentially more time consuming, the Chamber considers that the availability of the floor language transcript and audio/video recordings, along with the capacity of each team in the official ECCC languages alleviates any fair trial concerns in this regard.

96. The Chamber therefore rejects the NUON Chea Defence's submission that the transcript review process prejudiced NUON Chea's right to confront evidence and prepare his defence effectively.

2.4.7. Considerations Regarding Specific Witnesses, Civil Parties and Experts

2.4.7.1. Civil Party SAR Sarin

97. The NUON Chea Defence and the KHIEU Samphan Defence submit that the testimony of Civil Party SAR Sarin must be disregarded because it relates to the acts and conduct of the Accused and the Defence did not have an opportunity to test his evidence through examination.<sup>229</sup> The Co-Prosecutors make no submission in this regard but do not rely on the testimony of this Civil Party in their Closing Brief. The Lead Co-Lawyers rely upon the evidence of SAR Sarin in their Closing Brief, but do not make submissions on the impact of the Defence's inability to cross-examine him, either in their Closing Brief or their Closing Statement.<sup>230</sup>

98. The Chamber recalls that Civil Party SAR Sarin appeared before the Court on 8 November 2016 and was questioned by the Civil Party Lawyer and the Co-Prosecutor.<sup>231</sup> On 10 November 2016, when the Civil Party was due to resume questioning, he claimed to be feeling unwell and was taken to a medical clinic. While the results of the medical check-up did not evidence any medical issue, the Civil Party insisted that he needed to rest and was therefore taken back to his hotel. While unaccompanied, the Civil Party left the hotel to return to his home town. On 23 November 2016, WESU reported that SAR Sarin did not fear giving his in-court statement before the ECCC, but that he would return to finish his questioning only on condition that he be relocated to the United States or Australia.<sup>232</sup>

99. Due to a number of inconsistencies, notably between the concerns expressed by this Civil Party, his behaviour and his request to be relocated along with his family to a third country, WESU informed the Chamber that it was unable to identify any objective basis for a fear of giving evidence and did not recommend any protective measures.<sup>233</sup> The Chamber accordingly denied Civil Party SAR Sarin's request to be relocated to a third country.<sup>234</sup> However, considering that he was a Civil Party and therefore cannot be compelled to testify, the Chamber withdrew his name from the list of individuals to testify.

100. The Chamber further recalls that SAR Sarin was previously questioned as a Civil Party in Case 002/01. As in Case 002/02, the Civil Party requested, as a condition for continuing giving evidence, the provision of certain protective measures – in that case, protection for the duration of his life. The request was denied as unjustified by the Chamber and the Civil Party declined to complete his questioning. Therefore, he was not examined by either Accused.<sup>235</sup>

101. The Chamber considers that SAR Sarin's attempts to obtain personal advantage from his in-court statement cast doubt upon his credibility. Furthermore, it notes that the Accused were not provided any opportunity to question the Civil Party in Case

2.4.7.2. Expert Henri LOCARD

102. The KHIEU Samphan Defence and NUON Chea Defence submit that Henri LOCARD is not a reliable expert, noting in particular the alleged bias he demonstrated in comments to Defence counsel in and outside of the courtroom. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submit that none of Henri LOCARD's written or oral declarations about KHIEU Samphan can be used as evidence since they are marked by a lack of neutrality and objectivity.<sup>237</sup> It also submits that Henri LOCARD's statements are not in line with his sources, when they are available.<sup>238</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that the Chamber should ignore the totality of LOCARD's evidence, questioning his legitimacy and methodology as well as the lack of access to his sources.<sup>239</sup> The Co-Prosecutors rely on LOCARD's writings and testimony throughout their brief, but do not respond to the Defence submissions.<sup>240</sup> The Lead Co-Lawyers did not rely on LOCARD's evidence or respond to the Defence submissions.

103. The Chamber recalls that it qualified Henri LOCARD as an expert in Case 002/02 based in particular on his several decades of experience researching the DK era in Cambodia, and his presentations and publications on the same.<sup>241</sup> The Chamber also noted that while Mr. LOCARD was commissioned by the Office of the Co-Prosecutors to compile a series of reports on security centres during Democratic Kampuchea, any concern of potential bias would be taken up as matters related to the evaluation of his evidence.<sup>242</sup> The Chamber further recalls that experts are appointed to assist the court "honestly" and "to the best of their ability", and are expected to testify with the utmost neutrality and with scientific objectivity, barring which the reliability of their findings, opinions, interpretations or conclusions is questionable as they can only be perceived as tainted by bias or the appearance of bias.<sup>243</sup>

104. In Case 002/02, Mr. LOCARD testified for four days in July and August 2016.<sup>244</sup> On the last day of his testimony, Mr. LOCARD responded to a question by counsel for KHIEU Samphan by stating that “it might be difficult for me to answer you because yesterday, you practiced cold torture on me, and now I know what that cold torture means”.<sup>245</sup> Approached for comment later by a local newspaper, Mr. LOCARD is reported to have said that “[t]hese people [counsel for the Accused] are criminal because they are making the tribunal waste hours and weeks, days and months” and “[i]t [the tribunal] should have been no more than three years, because of these completely perverse people who are what we call deniers, negationists – they deny reality”.<sup>246</sup>

105. The Chamber considers that, through these statements, Mr. LOCARD has unambiguously shown an inability to assist the court during his testimony in this case with the level of neutrality and objectivity expected from an expert. For this reason, the Chamber disregards the expert opinions provided by Mr. LOCARD to the Chamber during his testimony.

106. Mr. LOCARD is the author of numerous pieces of evidence appearing on the Case File, including two books, his PhD thesis, and eleven reports on the subject of regional security centres which were commissioned by the Co-Prosecutors.<sup>247</sup> The Chamber observes that many of these works are based upon either anonymous sources or interviews of witnesses, a number of whom did not testify in Case 002/02 and whose statements are not always accessible or, when accessible, may show some discrepancies with certain assertions made by Mr LOCARD.<sup>248</sup> Therefore, except when clear and reliable underlying material is accessible and can corroborate his findings, the Chamber will attribute little, if any, probative value to the writings authored by Mr LOCARD.

2.4.7.3. Experts YSA Osman and Alexander HINTON

107. The KHIEU Samphan Defence challenges the reliability of the expert testimony of YSA Osman and Alexander HINTON.<sup>249</sup> The Chamber addresses these submissions below in the context of the trial topic during which each expert testified.

2.4.7.4. Witnesses SOY Sao (SUOY Sav) and SEM Om (SEM Am)

108. The NUON Chea Defence submits that there is reason to believe that there were attempts at tampering with witnesses SOY Sao (SUOY Sav) and SEM Om (SEM Am), which may constitute interference with the administration of justice.<sup>250</sup> It points to a “shift” in SOY Sao’s testimony starting after a lunchtime break during his testimony and the fact that the Chamber went into closed session to question the witness.<sup>251</sup> It also points to a contradiction between witness SEM Om’s DC-Cam statement (an audio recording of which was played in court) and his testimony. Following the approach of the ICTY, it is suggested that these witnesses’ DC-Cam interviews be admitted to the exclusion of certain parts of their testimony.<sup>252</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submit that the testimonies of these two witnesses are incoherent and contradictory but attribute these

109. The Chamber notes that when questioned in closed session, witness SOY Sao testified that he was not approached to change his testimony during the lunch break and did not fear for his safety.<sup>254</sup> As to SEM Om, the NUON Chea Defence have not identified any evidence that would support an inference that there were attempts to change the witness's testimony. Therefore, there is no reason to substitute the live testimony of these witnesses with their prior DC-Cam statements. In addition, the NUON Chea Defence have failed to identify any precedent which would support selectively admitting portions of the witnesses' DC-Cam statements and portions of the witnesses' testimonies, depending on which portions suit the Defence. The request is therefore rejected.

2.5. Fair Trial Rights

2.5.1. Introduction

110. Over the course of the proceedings in Case 002/02, NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan alleged violations of their rights to a fair trial. The Chamber addressed these allegations on a case-by-case basis, providing relief where it was in the interests of justice. The Accused further developed these submissions in their Closing Briefs and Closing Statements, requesting the Chamber to disregard evidence concerning facts which are outside the scope of Case 002/02, reconsider decisions affecting their rights and consider alleged violations of their rights in the final assessment of the evidence.<sup>255</sup>

111. The Chamber addresses these submissions below, taking decisions as required to supplement those already taken during the course of the trial. The Chamber will also

The reason the Chamber entered into Closed Session was to ascertain whether there was any reason to order protective measures for the witness. Having determined that there were no reasons for such protection and noting that proceedings are presumptively public, the Chamber now decides to reclassify these transcripts as public.

examine whether procedural errors, if any, have a cumulative effect on the overall fairness of the trial.<sup>256</sup>

2.5.2. Alleged Defects in the Judicial Investigation

112. The NUON Chea Defence reiterates the claims, already made several times, that the Co-Investigating Judges were biased and violated the Defence rights by excluding them from the judicial investigations.<sup>257</sup> It further submits that the Case File was inherently biased as a result.<sup>258</sup> The Chamber recalls that it has previously addressed the assertions of procedural unfairness at the investigative phase. The Chamber has noted that the Accused made extensive use of the procedural safeguards existing in the ECCC legal framework to address alleged defects in the investigation either before the Co-Investigating Judges or on appeal to the Pre-Trial Chamber.<sup>259</sup> Appeals against these decisions were dismissed by the Supreme Court Chamber, which declined to revisit these issues in the context of the Case 002/01 Appeal Judgement.<sup>260</sup> The Accused allege no new facts or circumstances arising since these decisions were issued that would justify fresh consideration of these issues. Nevertheless, where defects in the investigation are alleged with sufficient particularity and have clear relevance to Case 002/02, the Chamber will consider them in its final assessment of the evidence.<sup>261</sup>

<sup>256</sup> Even if no individual error results in prejudice to the Accused, the Chamber must still assess the overall effect of harmless error to determine whether the Accused received a fair trial. See Ntagerura et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 114).

2.5.3. Impartiality of the Trial Chamber

113. In an apparent attempt to support its submissions as to the existence of a “Manichean” narrative, the NUON Chea Defence submits that, for a number of reasons, the judges of the Trial Chamber lack impartiality.<sup>262</sup> The Chamber notes that Internal Rule 34 provides specific procedures to address alleged impartiality of judges. Judges may recuse themselves in cases of bias or perceived bias. Among the formal requirements is that the request be filed as soon as the party becomes aware of the grounds in question. Such requests must be adjudicated by a special panel, excluding the judges against whom the allegations have been raised. A formal application for disqualification is a precondition to consideration of such submissions. Therefore, the issue cannot be adjudicated by the Trial Chamber within this Judgement. Under the circumstances, it would be inappropriate to further address the NUON Chea Defence submissions concerning the alleged impartiality of Trial Chamber judges.

114. The KHIEU Samphan Defence takes issue with several Trial Chamber decisions which evidence, in its view, a presumption of good faith on the part of the Co-Prosecutors and of bad faith on the part of the Defence, including: (1) permitting the Prosecution to continue to disclose inculpatory evidence from Cases 003 and 004; (2) requiring the Defence to participate in the Case 002/02 hearings when it was fully occupied drafting KHIEU Samphan’s appeal of the Case 002/01 Trial Judgement; and (3) intervening during Defence examination of inculpatory witnesses while failing to intervene when witnesses were abusive towards defence counsel.<sup>263</sup>

115. The Chamber first notes that a number of these submissions were rejected by the Special Panel of the Trial Chamber in its decision on the disqualification requests.<sup>264</sup> As to the remaining issues, had the KHIEU Samphan Defence considered any of them to be sufficiently serious, it was incumbent upon them to file requests for disqualification of the Judges on that basis. At this late stage of the proceedings, it is unclear what relief is requested or could be granted. As to the substance of the complaints, the Chamber refers to the reasons provided when the criticised procedural actions were taken.<sup>265</sup> Insofar as bias is alleged, the Chamber refers to its comments above.<sup>266</sup>

2.5.4. Equality of Arms

116. The Accused submit that the Chamber violated the principle of equality of arms by favouring the Co-Prosecutors and disfavouring the Defence in decisions selecting the witnesses, Civil Parties and experts to testify at trial as well as in decisions ruling on the admissibility of evidence.

117. The Chamber recalls that the European Court of Human Rights in Bulut v. Austria held that “under the principle of equality of arms, as one of the features of the wider concept of a fair trial, each party must be afforded a reasonable opportunity to present his case under conditions that do not place him at a disadvantage vis-à-vis his opponent”.<sup>267</sup> Within the ECCC legal framework, Internal Rule 21 reflects the spirit of this principle when it states that “ECCC proceedings shall be fair and adversarial and preserve the balance between the rights of the parties”.<sup>268</sup>

2.5.4.1. Allegations based upon Witness Decisions

118. The NUON Chea Defence submits that the failure of the Trial Chamber to call many of the witnesses it had requested to testify violated NUON Chea’s fair trial rights, particularly the principle of equality of arms and his right to present an effective

No. CCPR/C/GC/32, Article 14 (right to equality before courts and tribunals and to a fair trial), para. 39 (“Paragraph 3(e) of article 14 guarantees the right of accused persons to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against them and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on their behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against them. As an application of the principle of equality of arms, this guarantee is important for ensuring an effective defence by the accused and their counsel and thus guarantees the accused the same legal powers of compelling the attendance of witnesses and of examining or cross-examining any witnesses as are available to the prosecution. It does not, however, provide an unlimited right to obtain the attendance of any witness requested by the accused or their counsel, but only a right to have witnesses admitted that are relevant for the defence, and to be given a proper opportunity to question and challenge witnesses against them at some stage of the proceedings. Within these limits, and subject to the limitations on the use of statements, confessions and other evidence obtained in violation of article 7, 85 it is primarily for the domestic legislatures of States parties to determine the admissibility of evidence and how their courts assess it.”).

defence.<sup>269</sup> It submits that the Chamber's request for submissions on the relevance of additional witnesses proposed by the NUON Chea Defence violated NUON Chea's right to obtain witnesses for him under the same conditions as those against him, because the Chamber imposed requirements on the Defence but not on the Co-Prosecutors as a prerequisite to hearing its witnesses.<sup>270</sup> It submits that requesting these submissions was "outrageously unfair" because it "lent a further advantage to the Co-Prosecutors".<sup>271</sup> It further requests reconsideration of the Chamber's decisions rejecting 23 of the witnesses and experts proposed by them listed in Annex 2 of the NUON Chea Defence Closing Brief.

119. The Chamber recalls that the ICCPR and the ECCC Law guarantee all accused the right "to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him".<sup>272</sup> However, as recognised by the Supreme Court Chamber, it is well established that an accused does not have an absolute right to summons witnesses in his favour.<sup>273</sup> The Trial Chamber retains wide discretion in determining which defence witnesses are appropriate to be called.<sup>274</sup> What is essential is that the Trial Chamber preserves the balance between the rights of the Parties to ensure the principle of equality of arms is respected.

120. The submission that the Chamber violated NUON Chea's right to obtain witnesses for him under the same conditions as those against him stems from a series of five motions, filed starting in March 2016 by the NUON Chea Defence, to hear a total of 45 additional witnesses and one additional Civil Party.<sup>275</sup> Many of the witnesses had not previously been requested by the Accused and were therefore sought as new witnesses pursuant to Internal Rule 87(4). With respect to the other witnesses, requested by the Defence at the start of trial, the Defence either sought to expedite decisions to call them or requested reconsideration of decisions to not call them. Each of the five motions was premised upon an assertion that the testimony of the proposed individuals was “relevant to the heart of the defence case of Mr. NUON Chea, and in particular, the contention that the DK leadership was divided into conflicting factions, some of which were secretly supported by Vietnam”.<sup>276</sup> Prior to deciding whether to hear the 46 proposed individuals, and considering the advanced stage of the proceedings when the requests were made,<sup>277</sup> the Chamber provided the NUON Chea Defence an opportunity to further explain how the existence of conflicting factions could provide a defence to the charges in the Closing Order or could be considered to be a mitigating circumstance.<sup>278</sup> The NUON Chea Defence filed a response explaining his position “under protest”.<sup>279</sup>

121. In making decisions on whether to call witnesses or Civil Parties, the Chamber is guided by the fundamental consideration of relevance. Internal Rule 87(4) requires that the moving Party file a reasoned submission to hear new witnesses. In the absence of sufficient reasoning, the Chamber may decide either to reject the motion or to seek clarification. It is for this reason that in the instant case, the Chamber sought further information from the NUON Chea Defence on the basis that it could be of assistance in making the necessary determination regarding the relevance of certain proposed witnesses. Such an enquiry is wholly consistent with the Chamber’s function of witness selection.

122. Furthermore, the Chamber has a duty to ensure that “ECCC proceedings [are] fair and adversarial and preserve a balance between the rights of the parties”.<sup>280</sup> In order to ensure that debates are adversarial, including on the question of whether or not a proposed witness shall be called, the Chamber and the Parties need to have a clear understanding of the reasoning underlying the request(s) for evidence. In this regard, the Chamber has the authority to direct parties to provide in a timely manner the necessary clarifications which would permit such adversarial discussion. The Chamber therefore considers that the request for briefing was appropriate and indeed helpful to assessing the nature of the NUON Chea Defence requests to hear additional witnesses.

123. The NUON Chea Defence appears mistakenly to equate the right to present an effective defence with an unconditional right to call all of the witnesses it has requested.<sup>281</sup> In this regard, the Chamber recalls the jurisprudence noted above and accordingly rejects the NUON Chea Defence’s submission.

124. Finally, NUON Chea places particular emphasis on the Trial Chamber’s failure to call HENG Samrin, OUK Bunchhoeun, CHEA Sim and POL Saroeun as witnesses in this case. NUON Chea made multiple requests to hear these witnesses and asserts that HENG Samrin in particular was the most important witness in Case 002.<sup>282</sup> The Chamber recalls that it took steps to ascertain the willingness of HENG Samrin, OUK Bunchhoeun, and POL Saroeun to testify (CHEA Sim had passed away at the time of the Chamber’s decision).<sup>283</sup> It further notes that lengthy interviews with HENG Samrin, CHEA Sim and OUK Bunchhoeun appear on the Case File.<sup>284</sup> Due to the absence of a supermajority to call HENG Samrin, OUK Bunchhoeun and POL Saroeun, summonses were not issued and the witnesses were not heard at trial.<sup>285</sup> The Chamber will further consider the impact, if any, of the absence of the testimony of these three witnesses when assessing all available evidence.

125. As to the NUON Chea Defence's request to reconsider its decisions rejecting 23 of the Defence's proposed witnesses and experts, the Chamber recalls that reconsideration does not form part of the ECCC legal framework.<sup>286</sup> The Chamber will only consider a request anew where a "fresh application justified by new evidence or new circumstances is made".<sup>287</sup> The NUON Chea Defence have not put forward any new facts or circumstances that would justify a different decision regarding these 23 individuals, merely listing the names of the individuals in an annex and the relevant Trial Chamber decisions. The NUON Chea Defence request is therefore rejected.

126. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the fact that only two of the individuals it proposed were heard, out of the 186 witnesses, Civil Parties and experts heard in Case 002/02, shows that the Co-Prosecutors were favoured by the Chamber.<sup>288</sup>

127. The Chamber recalls that the number of witnesses, Civil Parties and experts selected by the Chamber from those proposed by any Party depends on the relevance of those individuals. It further recalls its reasoning set out in paragraph 119, above. The Chamber does not consider that in the present case the Defence have established a violation of the principle of equality of arms. The Chamber has applied the same standard based on relevance to all requests, irrespective of the requesting Party.<sup>289</sup>

2.5.4.2. Allegations based upon decisions on the admission of evidence and decisions on reconsideration

128. The NUON Chea Defence submits that the Chamber violated NUON Chea’s right to present exculpatory evidence by deciding not to admit four transcripts of interviews conducted by THET Sambath and Robert LEMKIN, one Human Rights Watch report and “a handful of evidence” listed in Annex 1 to its Closing Brief. It considers that the Chamber’s decisions evince a “double standard” on the part of the Trial Chamber since it admitted evidence provided by experts Alexander HINTON and Henri LOCARD, including interviews of “unnamed or unlocatable sources”.<sup>290</sup> It seeks the Chamber’s reconsideration of these decisions. Alternatively, it seeks a reopening of the evidentiary hearings and reconsideration of the Chamber’s decisions rejecting NUON Chea Defence requests to hear additional witnesses and for further investigative action, stipulated in Annexes 1 and 3, respectively.<sup>291</sup> The NUON Chea Defence also notes that it has freely referenced in its brief materials not admitted by Chamber, particularly where they assist in substantiating NUON Chea’s core case.<sup>292</sup> Noting the request for reconsideration made by the NUON Chea Defence in its Closing Brief, the Chamber permitted the NUON Chea Defence, on an exceptional basis and without prejudice to the final decision, to make reference during Closing Statements to material which is part of the said request.<sup>293</sup>

129. As to the four transcripts of interviews (Annex 1), the Chamber notes that it admitted part of one of these transcripts as the Supreme Court Chamber was satisfied that the interview was that of TOAT Thoeun, who had testified in the Case 002/01

Appeal proceedings.<sup>294</sup> Of the three remaining transcripts, the Chamber found among other things that there was uncertainty as to the identities of the interviewees, which was compounded by the fact that Mr. LEMKIN chose not to assist the Chamber in identifying them.<sup>295</sup> Despite the lack of complete information as to the identity of these witnesses, the Chamber directed the Witness and Expert Unit to make efforts to identify and locate two of these individuals.<sup>296</sup> These efforts were unsuccessful. Further, as the interviews were conducted in Khmer and the transcripts were in English, the Chamber noted that it had no information as to “the accuracy or completeness of the translation or of the original material used in creating the English Transcripts” or “how long each interview was and how the interview excerpts making up the Transcripts were selected and or edited”.<sup>297</sup> Without knowing the identities of the speakers, and without any means to assess the completeness and the accuracy of the English translations, the Chamber held that the three remaining transcripts lacked the prima facie reliability required for their admission pursuant to Internal Rule 87(4). Although the NUON Chea Defence now submits that it is in possession of the audio files of the interviews and has verified that the substance of the interviews is correctly reflected in the transcripts, the identities of the three individuals remain uncertain and the Chamber is still left without any means to assess the completeness and the accuracy of the English translations.<sup>298</sup> Above all it must be emphasised that, with a deep disregard for the principle of adversarial procedure, the Defence has not provided the Chamber and other Parties with access to these audio files or sought their admission. As the Chamber can only make decisions based upon material which has been subjected to adversarial debate, and subsequently admitted into evidence,<sup>299</sup> the Chamber does not consider that these purported audio files constitute new facts or circumstances that would justify fresh consideration of the issue. The Chamber is also not convinced that calling Mr. LEMKIN to testify, as suggested by the NUON Chea Defence, would have clarified the identities of these three individuals as Mr. LEMKIN repeatedly refused to provide this information to the Chamber.<sup>300</sup> The NUON Chea Defence's request is therefore rejected.

130. The NUON Chea Defence also seeks reconsideration, for the second time, of the Chamber's decision not to admit a Human Rights Watch report entitled "30 years of Hun Sen" based on its lack of reliability.<sup>301</sup> While the Defence relied on the publicly-available document in its brief and during Closing Statements,<sup>302</sup> no new facts or circumstances have been identified that would require the Chamber to consider this request anew.<sup>303</sup> As only admitted evidence can be considered by the Chamber, all references to the report in the NUON Chea Closing Brief or Closing Statements are disregarded in this Judgement.

131. As to the remaining "handful of evidence" which the NUON Chea Defence includes in Annex 1, the Defence have not presented any arguments or identified any new facts or circumstances that would require the Chamber to consider these requests anew. The Defence request is therefore rejected.

132. With respect to the alternative request to reopen the proceedings and to reconsider all of the Chamber's decisions which rejected the NUON Chea Defence requests for investigative action in Annex 3 and to hear the additional witnesses proposed by them as set out in Annex 2, the Chamber notes that this request for relief comes four months after the close of evidence and in some cases years after the decisions concerned. <sup>303</sup> The Chamber previously found that the new facts or circumstances cited by the NUON Chea Defence, namely the death of CHEA Sim, the rescheduling of witnesses or a delay in rendering a decision on issues related to the treatment of the Cham, did not justify a new decision on the admissibility of portions of the report that had been sought for admission. Further, the substance of the additional portions of the report sought for admission for the first time were found to be irrelevant. Chapter III concerned the time period 1984-1989 and was therefore outside the temporal jurisdiction of the ECCC. While Chapter IX concerned allegations of government interference in Cases 003 and 004, it did not discuss such allegations in relation to Case 002/02. See Decision on NUON Chea Request to Reconsider Admitting one Extract and to Admit Two Additional Extracts from the Human Rights Watch Report '30 Years of HUN Sen', E347/4, 2 June 2016, paras 8, 11-12.

Defence have not identified any new facts or circumstances that would require the Chamber to consider this request anew and it is therefore rejected.

2.5.4.3. Allegations based upon denial of Internal Rule 93 investigative requests and request for reconsideration

133. The NUON Chea Defence submits that it was unfairly prevented from performing its own investigations by the Co-Investigating Judges which forced the Defence to operate at a disadvantage and resulted in an inequality of arms.<sup>304</sup> Based upon the Supreme Court Chamber's Case 002/01 Appeal Judgement, the Defence asserts that it should have been permitted to take investigative steps during the Case 002 investigation.<sup>305</sup> It further submits that the resulting inequality of arms can only be remedied before the Trial Chamber by granting the Defence requests for investigative action pursuant to Internal Rule 93 in order to identify exculpatory materials. It therefore requests reconsideration of the Chamber's decisions rejecting the NUON Chea Defence's investigative requests.<sup>306</sup>

134. The Chamber recalls that the Supreme Court Chamber addressed similar arguments by the NUON Chea Defence in the context of the Case 002/01 appeal. The Supreme Court Chamber ruled, consistent with the Trial Chamber's own jurisprudence, that "the ECCC's procedural framework does not envisage full-fledged party-driven investigations such as those common to adversarial systems. Rather, in line with the procedural tradition prevalent in Cambodia, investigations at the ECCC are conducted by the Co-Investigating Judges". It further noted that "the rules applicable to the ECCC do not envisage the delegation of these [investigative] powers to any of the Parties" and therefore "to the extent that NUON Chea sought to assume the investigative powers afforded to the Trial Chamber under Internal Rule 93, the Trial Chamber did not err in dismissing his request".<sup>307</sup>

135. The Supreme Court Chamber did allow that the Defence may undertake actions "aimed at discovering relevant evidence, as long as such conduct [did] not lead to witness tampering or any other distortion of evidence" and that the Defence should be allowed to carry out the limited actions to identify potential witnesses with sufficient precision.<sup>308</sup>

136. The Chamber notes that it has considered each of the investigative requests filed by the NUON Chea Defence and, where appropriate, taken actions that had been requested. The Chamber contacted Professor Walter HEYNOWSKI and obtained from him S-21 photographs and an orange logbook sought by the NUON Chea Defence.<sup>309</sup> It also sought to obtain evidence from foreign countries such as Vietnam and successfully obtained translations of Standing Committee Minutes through inquiries to Professor Christopher GOSCHA, an excerpt of which had been sought for admission by the NUON Chea Defence.<sup>310</sup>

137. Finally, according to their own submissions the evidence cited by the NUON Chea Defence allowed them “to corroborate Nuon Chea’s case, core case, in more detail than ever” and “actually proves Nuon Chea’s case and his account about what happened before, during and after the period of Democratic Kampuchea”.<sup>311</sup>

138. The Chamber therefore considers that the NUON Chea Defence were provided with the appropriate means to develop and present its case through its involvement in the pre-trial phase, the granting of additional witness requests, and the steps the Trial Chamber took in furtherance of NUON Chea Defence requests. The Defence has failed to identify any new facts or circumstances that would justify fresh consideration of the Chamber’s decisions regarding NUON Chea Defence Internal Rule 93 requests. The NUON Chea Defence’s request is therefore denied.

2.5.5. Facilities and Time Available for the Preparation of a Defence

139. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the disclosures of documents from Cases 003 and 004 in Case 002/02 starting in October 2014 violated the rights of the defence.<sup>312</sup> In particular, KHIEU Samphan contends that his right to an expeditious trial and the right to equality of arms were violated by the disclosures and that it favoured the Co-Prosecutors to the detriment of the Accused.<sup>313</sup>

140. The Chamber recalls that the proceedings in Case 002/02 took place concurrently with the ongoing investigations in Cases 003 and 004. There is significant overlap between the cases under investigation and Case 002, as the cases involve many of the same time frames, geographical areas and crime sites.

141. The Co-Prosecutors are party to Cases 003 and 004 as well as Case 002 and, in contrast to the Defence teams in Case 002, have access to materials arising from the Case 003 and 004 investigations. Consequently, the Co-Prosecutors sought authorisation from the International Co-Investigating Judge to disclose relevant documents arising from the investigations in Cases 003 and 004 to the Parties and the Chamber in Case 002/02.<sup>314</sup> These disclosures consisted mainly of Written Records of Interview, and attachments thereto, taken by the International Co-Investigating Judge in the context of the Cases 003 and 004 investigations. Recognising the need to permit disclosures of potentially exculpatory materials as well as other evidence that is conducive to ascertaining the truth in Case 002/02, while at the same time seeking to maintain the confidentiality of ongoing investigations in Cases 003 and 004, the International Co-Investigating Judge authorised the disclosure of Case 003 and 004 evidence to the Parties in Case 002/02 on condition that the evidence, and witnesses providing the evidence, were not made public.<sup>315</sup>

142. The Trial Chamber recognised, and the Supreme Court Chamber later confirmed,<sup>316</sup> the mandatory nature of disclosure obligations by the Co-Prosecutors. It found that Internal Rule 53(4):

[I]mposes a continuing obligation on the Co-Prosecutors to disclose to the Trial Chamber [and parties] any material in its possession that may suggest the innocence or mitigate the guilt of the Accused or affect the reliability of the evidence. It is in the interests of ascertaining the truth that the Trial Chamber [and parties] ha[ve] access to these documents, not least because consideration of the prior statements will assist in evaluating the credibility of these witnesses.<sup>317</sup>

143. From October 2014 until August 2015, the KHIEU Samphan Defence did not respond to the Co-Prosecutors’ requests for leave to disclose Case 003 and 004 documents.<sup>318</sup> Instead, the disclosures were accepted, at times with a request for additional time to review the newly disclosed materials. In August 2015, however, KHIEU Samphan filed a motion challenging the overall process of disclosure, asserting the Co-Prosecutors were “burying” exculpatory evidence, which was appropriately disclosed, under a mountain of inculpatory material which should not have been added to the Case 002/02 Case File.<sup>319</sup>

144. The Chamber considers that the disclosure of a large amount of new material from Cases 003 and 004 does not by itself establish a violation of the rights of the Accused. The most important factor in assessing the potential impact on the fair trial rights of the Accused is a determination of whether the Accused were accorded a sufficient opportunity to review and respond to the disclosed material, thereby allowing a fair and adversarial discussion of the evidence.<sup>320</sup>

145. The Chamber recalls that in its decision on the KHIEU Samphan Defence's motion, it identified the steps that it had already taken to address the potential impact of disclosures on the fair trial rights of the Accused.<sup>321</sup> It noted that it had adjourned proceedings to permit parties to review disclosures and indicated a willingness to grant further adjournments.<sup>322</sup> Where appropriate, it had delayed the hearing of particular witnesses or Civil Parties and informed the Parties that witnesses may be recalled if good reason were shown to do so.<sup>323</sup> It had also issued guidelines restricting the scope for disclosure to Parties in Case 002/02 of Civil Party Applications filed in Cases 003 and 004.<sup>324</sup> Furthermore, upon learning that the Defence were in need of additional resources, the Chamber contacted the Office of Administration, which pledged to identify additional financial resources as warranted by the disclosure process.<sup>325</sup> As a result, from January 2016 until the Closing Statements in June 2017, KHIEU Samphan and NUON Chea were each granted funding for two additional Defence consultants for the purpose of reviewing disclosures.<sup>326</sup>

146. In addition to these measures, the Chamber in its decision of October 2015, limited disclosures to material which in the actual knowledge of the Co-Prosecutors is exculpatory and to the prior statements of testifying witnesses, thereby granting in part the relief sought by the KHIEU Samphan Defence.<sup>327</sup> With regard to inculpatory or other material, the Chamber directed that all future requests made by the Co-Prosecutors "to adduce from Case 003 and 004 materials that are neither exculpatory nor the statements of individuals who have testified or are proposed to testify in Case 002/02 be notified to the Chamber and the Parties through reasoned applications pursuant to Internal Rule 87(4)".<sup>328</sup> It therefore required the Co-Prosecutors to satisfy the procedural hurdle for the admission of new evidence in order to file such evidence.<sup>329</sup> The Chamber further restricted the Co-Prosecutors' ability to submit Internal Rule 87(4) requests for the admission of any material from Cases 003 and 004 disclosed in Case 002/02 on the date of its October 2015 decision by imposing a deadline of 30 January 2016.<sup>330</sup> This was with a view to providing the Accused an opportunity to respond to such requests, and put forward rebuttal evidence, prior to the end of the evidentiary hearings.<sup>331</sup>

147. As to the submission that disclosure of new materials arising from ongoing investigations against other suspects is inappropriate after the completion of the investigation against the Accused, the Chamber does not consider the argument to be well founded. The Chamber recalls that the fact that additional relevant documents are admitted during the trial phase does not signify that the Case 002 investigation was deficient or failed to meet the required standard as contended by the Defence.<sup>332</sup> Rather, it recognises the practical reality that despite the issuance of a Closing Order, new evidence may become available that is conducive to ascertaining the truth. The Co-Prosecutors as well as both Defence teams have availed themselves of the opportunity to seek the admission of new evidence in Case 002/02 pursuant to Internal Rule 87(4) long after the close of the investigation.<sup>333</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence fails to establish how this caused the Accused unfair prejudice.

148. The Chamber considers that in view of the additional time and resources provided to the Defence, as well as the substantive and procedural limitations placed upon the

2.5.6. *Notice of Charges, Scope of the Trial and Evidence in Case 002/02

149. Both the KHIEU Samphan Defence and the NUON Chea Defence raise issues regarding notice of the charges and scope of the trial, and evidence in Case 002/02.

2.5.6.1. Limitation of the scope of the trial to the facts in the Closing Order which are material and characterised as criminally implicating the Accused

150. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that only facts in the Closing Order which are material and characterised as criminally implicating the Accused may be considered by the Chamber in its Judgement, citing in support Internal Rule 67(2) and French jurisprudence.<sup>334</sup> It suggests therefore that the assessment of the Accused's criminal liability must be limited to the material facts that have been set out in support of the characterisation of the crimes charged. Conversely, the Accused cannot be found liable for legally characterised crimes on the basis of material facts not referenced in respect thereof.<sup>335</sup>

151. The Chamber notes that Internal Rule 67(2) provides that a Closing Order must set out a description of material facts and their legal characterisation. This is an affirmative obligation to provide notice to the Accused of the nature of the charges against them.<sup>336</sup> The Defence also relies on French jurisprudence in support of the general legal principle that a Trial Chamber must limit its findings to those facts included within the indictment.<sup>337</sup> This general point of law is not in dispute. Where the Accused have particularised how the application of this principle requires a limitation of the alleged facts or charges under consideration, the Chamber will examine such arguments.

2.5.6.2. Recharacterisation

152. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the Chamber is seised of the facts set out in the Closing Order, not the legal characterisation.<sup>338</sup> No other Party makes any relevant submissions in this regard.

153. Internal Rule 98(2) states that “[t]he judgment shall be limited to the facts set out in the Indictment. The Chamber may, however, change the legal characterisation of the crime as set out in the Indictment, as long as no new constitutive elements are introduced.” Pursuant to this rule, and as established in the jurisprudence of this court, the Chamber is not bound by the legal characterisations adopted by the Co-Investigating Judges or the Pre-Trial Chamber in the Closing Order.<sup>339</sup> The Chamber may at any time change the legal characterisation of facts contained in the Closing Order to accord with any other applicable crime or form of criminal responsibility up to and including in the verdict.<sup>340</sup> This is subject only to the overriding requirements of a fair trial. In particular, this requires the Chamber to remain within the confines of the facts set out in the Closing Order,<sup>341</sup> and for the Accused to be put on notice of a possible re-characterisation.<sup>342</sup> Thus, a change in the legal characterisation of facts must be examined on the facts of the case to determine whether there is any breach of an accused’s right to a fair trial.

154. In the present case, the Chamber is seised of facts concerning deaths of individuals who allegedly died en masse at crime sites because of the living and/or working conditions imposed on them. These facts were legally characterised in the Closing Order only as extermination. The issue arises whether the Chamber may, evidence permitting, recharacterise such facts as murder, in particular with dolus eventualis. This would only be permissible if there were no breach of the fair trial rights of the Accused.

155. The Chamber notes in this regard the interpretation of the application of Internal Rule 98(2) by Supreme Court Chamber in the Case 002/01 Appeal Judgement, which expressly addressed the possible recharacterisation of certain facts charged in the Closing Order as extermination to the crime of murder. The Supreme Court Chamber found that “it was open to the Trial Chamber – and it is now open to the Supreme Court Chamber on appeal – to recharacterise the factual allegations contained in the Closing Order (D427), which the Co-Investigating Judges had considered to amount to the crime of extermination, to the crime of murder”.<sup>343</sup> This finding was made in line with the fact that the Closing Order did not charge the Accused with the crime of murder in relation to Population Movement Phase Two, but only with extermination. Regarding the deaths that occurred due to the conditions and the circumstances of the transfer of population, the Supreme Court Chamber noted that while these facts did not fulfil the elements of the crime against humanity of extermination because the mens rea of extermination requires direct intent to kill (on a large scale), they fulfilled the elements of the crime against humanity of murder, notably the act of causing the death of another person with, at least, dolus eventualis. In so deciding, the Supreme Court Chamber did not address the issue of notice.

156. The Trial Chamber recalls that Cases 002/01 and 002/02 are based on the same Closing Order, with the latter case established pursuant to a decision on severance on 4 April 2014. Following severance, the Case File as well as the Parties and their representatives remained the same in both cases.

157. Given the specific relationship between the two cases and the fundamental similarity of the factual circumstances, the Trial Chamber considers that the Supreme Court Chamber’s ruling in Case 002/01, which involved the same Parties as the current case, effectively put the Parties on notice as of November 2016 that the Trial Chamber and the Supreme Court Chamber could change the legal characterisation of the facts in this case, specifically with regard to deaths that occurred due to the conditions and circumstances imposed to the victims, from the crime of extermination to that of murder including with dolus eventualis. The Parties were provided with the opportunity to make submissions during a Trial Management Meeting held in December 2016 on “the impact, if any, of the SCC judgement on the conclusion of evidentiary proceedings in Case 002/02”, focusing in particular on issues that “may immediately affect evidentiary proceedings”.<sup>344</sup> No Party made submissions with respect to the Supreme Court Chamber’s ruling on this issue, contested its application in the current case, asked for further time to prepare related submissions or made such at a later stage. The Chamber accordingly finds that no violation of the Accused’s fair trial rights in Case 002/02 would result from the possible recharacterisation of facts charged in the Closing Order as extermination to the crime of murder. The Chamber will address this issue in the relevant sections of this Judgement where the issue arises on the facts.

2.5.6.3. Limitation of the scope of the trial to the facts contained in the Introductory Submission or Supplementary Submissions

2.5.6.3.1. Parties’ submissions

158. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that as the Co-Investigating Judges are themselves only seised with facts that are contained in the Introductory Submission or Supplementary Submissions, they cannot forward a case for trial on facts regarding which they had never been seised. Therefore, where the Closing Order exceeds the facts included within the Introductory Submission, the Chamber is prevented from considering such facts. These rules serve to protect the Accused’s right to have adequate notice of the nature and cause of the charges against him.<sup>345</sup> It further submits that the Defence did not have any opportunity to challenge the defects that affect the scope of the charges in the Closing Order before the Pre-Trial Chamber, because the Pre-Trial Chamber decided that the matter should be addressed by the Trial Chamber. It therefore submits that the Trial Chamber must rule on these matters, barring which the Accused would be deprived of effective recourse to challenge the alleged procedural defects.<sup>346</sup>

159. The KHIEU Samphan Defence contends on this basis that the Trial Chamber was improperly seised with the following facts:

- (a) deportation to Vietnam of Vietnamese living in Cambodia, as such facts were never mentioned in the Introductory Submission and the Chamber severed from Case 002/02 the charges of deportation at the Tram Kak Cooperatives;<sup>347</sup>

(b) internal purges beyond the limited facts set forth in the Introductory Submission, namely those which occurred in the North Zone in 1976 and in the East Zone in 1978;<sup>348</sup>

(c) treatment of Buddhists in Tram Kak District (as this district is in Takeo province, which is not among the five provinces listed in the Introductory Submission); facts concerning a nationwide policy against Buddhists (as the Introductory Submission refers only to facts which occurred in seven pagodas. Other pagodas were mentioned later in Supplementary Submissions; not with regard to the treatment of Buddhists, but only because they were used as security centres);<sup>349</sup>

(d) genocide against Cham by killing, beyond the facts which occurred after 1977 in the district of Kang Meas (Central Zone) and Krouch Chhmar (East Zone) (as only this time period and these locations are mentioned in the Introductory Submission and in a Supplementary Submission, further noting that facts which occurred at Krouch Chhmar Security Centre were excluded of the scope of Case 002/02 in the Severance Decision);<sup>350</sup>

(e) death of detainees due to starvation, killings or extermination of Vietnamese, racial persecution, torture, other inhumane acts (offences against humane dignity and enforced disappearances) and enslavement at Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre (as no facts are mentioned in relation to these charges in the Introductory Submission or the relevant Supplementary Submission);<sup>351</sup>

(f) death of detainees due to starvation, racial persecution, wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or a civilian of the rights of a fair and regular trial at Au Kanseng Security Centre (as no such facts are mentioned in relation to these charges in the Introductory Submission);<sup>352</sup> and

(g) enslavement (beyond facts of forced labour at K-11), torture and other inhumane acts insofar they rely on the use of torture at Phnom Kraol Security Centre and forced disappearances beyond those that occurred at the K-17 site.<sup>353</sup>

2.5.6.3.2. Admissibility of the Defence requests

160. The Chamber recalls that according to Cambodian Law and Internal Rule 76(7): “Subject to any appeal, the Closing Order shall cure any procedural defects in the judicial investigation. No issues concerning such procedural defects may be raised before the Trial Chamber or the Supreme Court Chamber”.<sup>354</sup> The purpose of these provisions is to ensure that parties who have access to the case file during a judicial investigation and who should therefore be aware of procedural defects which may invalidate part of the investigation, act diligently in order to solve procedural matters at the pre-trial stage so that these matters do not impede the course of the trial. Therefore, when parties allege that there are procedural defects which affect a judicial investigation, including the Closing Order issued by the Co-Investigating Judges, the ordinary venue to seek remedy for such procedural defects is before the Pre-Trial Chamber. However, it is not entirely clear whether Internal Rule 76(7) also forecloses any challenge to a defect in the Closing Order at trial stage.

161. According to Internal Rule 89, when there is a matter concerning the jurisdiction of the Trial Chamber, or any issue which requires the termination of prosecution or the nullity of procedural acts made after the indictment is filed, this shall be raised as a preliminary objection “no later than 30 (thirty) days after the Closing Order becomes final, failing which it shall be inadmissible”.<sup>355</sup> The purpose of preliminary objections is to clarify the scope of the trial prior to the start of hearing evidence, inter alia by identifying issues which require the termination of proceedings. Article 323 of the Cambodian Procedural Code serves a similar purpose when it requires the parties to raise any challenge to the “regularity” of the charging instrument before the start of the debate on the merits.<sup>356</sup> Consequently, the Chamber finds that any request concerning the Trial Chamber’s authority to deal with parts of the Closing Order which is raised after the expiry of the time limit for the filing of preliminary objections shall be considered untimely and denied.

162. The KHIEU Samphan Defence contends that a number of facts addressed by the Closing Order were actually not within the scope of the judicial investigation and accordingly may not fall within the scope of the charges at trial. In other words, the Defence contests the Trial Chamber's jurisdiction to adjudicate these facts, which, if granted, would lead to terminate the prosecution of the charges based thereupon.

163. Among the various requests made by the KHIEU Samphan Defence and listed above in paragraph 159, only the charge of deportation of Vietnamese as a crime against humanity was raised as a ground of appeal against the Closing Order, in this case by the IENG Sary Defence.<sup>357</sup> The Chamber notes that the Pre-Trial Chamber deferred to the Trial Chamber on this issue,<sup>358</sup> and the IENG Sary Defence consequently raised it in a preliminary objection before the opening of Case 002.<sup>359</sup> Following IENG Sary's death, the Chamber inquired as to whether any other Party adhered to the objection to the deportation charges, to which the KHIEU Samphan Defence responded affirmatively.<sup>360</sup> The Trial Chamber ruled on the request in its decision of 29 September 2014, rejecting the Defence objection to the inclusion of these charges.<sup>361</sup>

164. In its previous decision on this matter, the Trial Chamber did not take into account that the Pre-Trial Chamber had decided not to rule on this ground of appeal, deferring the matter to the trial stage. While the appropriateness of such deferral may be questioned, the Chamber notes that failure to consider the issue at trial under these circumstances could leave the Accused without effective recourse to challenge procedural defects in the Closing Order. Given that the matter was raised in a timely fashion at trial as a preliminary objection pursuant to Internal Rule 89, the Chamber shall examine the merits of the objection against deportation.

The Chamber found that: from the beginning of the judicial investigation, the Introductory Submission authorised the Co-Investigating Judges to investigate deportation as a crime against humanity; the KHIEU Samphan Defence was informed at his initial appearance that the acts in the Introductory Submission were open to legal characterisation as the crime against humanity of deportation; that the Co-Prosecutors clearly referred in their final submission to the deportation of Vietnamese; and that the Closing Order shows that the Accused are charged with the crime against humanity of deportation in relation to Prey Veng, Svay Rieng and the Tram Kak Cooperatives. The Chamber concluded that the KHIEU Samphan Defence had an opportunity prior to the opening of the trial to identify the alleged irregularity in the Closing Order, and failed to demonstrate that any fair trial issue warranted the Trial Chamber's intervention.

165. With respect to the remaining objections,<sup>362</sup> the Chamber finds that they amount to challenges to its jurisdiction to adjudicate a number of facts. As such, they should have been filed within the time limit set by Internal Rule 89.<sup>363</sup> These requests have been raised outside of this time limit and are therefore rejected as belated.

2.5.6.3.3. The charge of deportation of Vietnamese

166. At the outset, the Chamber notes that the degree of detail required in the Introductory Submission and the Closing Order for the presentation of the facts to be investigated or to be adjudicated is different. In this regard, the Pre-Trial Chamber has held that “while only a summary of facts and type of offence alleged are required at the stage of the Introductory Submission, a more complete ‘description of the material facts’ and their legal characterisation is required in the Closing Order”.<sup>364</sup>

167. To understand the precise scope of the facts of which the Co-Prosecutors intended to seise the Co-Investigating Judges, the Chamber shall consider the facts as characterised in the Introductory Submission in the light of all supporting documents which are either referenced in its footnotes or in its annexes. The Chamber notes that “[t]h[e] Introductory Submission includes Schedules 1-105 which contain excerpted evidence of the crimes alleged in this submission”, and an “Annex C [which] is a document index of the other evidentiary material the Co Prosecutors have reasons to believe supports the allegations made in this submission”.<sup>365</sup>

<sup>362</sup> Concerning the claim that the scope of Case 002/02 concerning the Internal Purges trial topic should not be extended beyond the limits of the Introductory Submission as alleged by the Defence, the Chamber notes that this matter has never been raised before the Pre-Trial Chamber or before the opening of the trial in Case 002. Further, the Chamber notes that this argument was raised, among others, in a submission filed on 24 June 2016 requesting the Chamber to clarify the scope of the trial topic on Internal Purges. In decision E420/1, the Chamber ruled that the scope of Case 002/02 remains as set out in the Trial Chamber’s Severance Decision. See Decision on KHIEU Samphan Urgent Request for Clarification of the Scope of Case 002/02 concerning Internal Purges, E420/1, 1 July 2016.

<sup>363</sup> The allegations contained in these objections are based on a mere comparative reading of the Introductory Submission, Supplementary Submissions and the Closing Order. All the necessary information was available since 15 September 2010 when the Closing Order was issued. Since then the Accused have been on notice of the scope of the charges against them but have failed to avail themselves of the opportunity to raise the matter before the Pre-Trial Chamber or before this Chamber in a preliminary objection.

168. According to paragraph 12 of the Introductory Submission, “[t]he CPK employed systematic discrimination against targeted groups including: [...] the Vietnamese” and “the extent of this systematic discrimination” is demonstrated by the “following criminal acts”, namely, “The CPK pursued a policy of discriminating against and killing ethnic Vietnamese”. Among the documents relied upon by the Co-Prosecutors, either in the footnotes of the Introductory Submission, or in the annexes included to provide evidence supporting the alleged facts subject to investigation, numerous references have been made to two documents. The first document is a book published by the Department of Press and Information of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Democratic Kampuchea entitled The Black Paper Facts and Evidences of the Acts of Aggression and Annexation of Vietnam Against Kampuchea (“Black Paper”).<sup>366</sup> The second document is a book written by Ben KIERNAN entitled “The Pol Pot Regime: Race Power and Genocide in Cambodia under the Khmer Rouge 1975-79”. Both documents have not only been annexed to the Introductory Submission but have also been analysed in document index D3/IV and presented as containing allegations which “assist in proving” a discriminatory intent against Vietnamese who were subjected to forced movement. More precisely, there is a clear reference to a policy to “expel” the Vietnamese minority living on Cambodian territory.<sup>367</sup> The Chamber finally observes that the Introductory Submission expressly lists “deportation” among the crimes subject to investigation. The Chamber considers that the factual allegations provided adequate notice to the Accused that the Co-Investigating Judges were to investigate facts committed in furtherance of a CPK policy of discrimination against the Vietnamese, including by subjecting them to forced movement or deportation from Cambodia. Therefore, the Chamber rejects the KHIEU Samphan Defence's claim that facts constituting deportation were not included within the scope of the judicial investigation.

2.5.6.3.4. Charges of deportation at the Tram Kak Cooperatives

169. The KHIEU Samphan Defence also submits that the Chamber severed from Case 002/02 the charges of deportation as a crime against humanity at the Tram Kak Cooperatives. In support, it cites to a parenthetical statement within the French version of the Case 002 Additional Severance Decision Annex, which states that charges of deportation will be limited to Prey Veng and Svay Rieng (omitting a reference to the Tram Kak Cooperatives).<sup>368</sup> The Chamber notes that the English and Khmer versions of the same annex indicate that charges of deportation at Tram Kak Cooperatives are included within the scope of Case 002/02.<sup>369</sup> It is apparent from this that the French translation on this point is in error. Further, all language versions of the Annex include reference to paragraph 1397 of the Closing Order which includes charges of deportation at the Tram Kak Cooperatives. Noting that the KHIEU Samphan Defence could have raised this discrepancy at any time since the Chamber's Severance Decision in April 2014, the Chamber is not convinced that any unfairness was occasioned by the error in the French version of the Annex.<sup>370</sup>

2.5.6.4. Notice of charges regarding persecution on political grounds

170. According to the Closing Order, the CPK designed and implemented the policy to re-educate "bad-elements" and kill "enemies", both inside and outside the Party ranks.<sup>371</sup> Also, the Closing Order finds that the CPK identified several groups as "enemies" targeted for political persecution based on their real or perceived political beliefs or political opposition to the CPK. In this regard, the Closing Order refers to three groups as examples, using non-exhaustive language (namely “such as”): (i) former ranking civilian and military personnel of the Khmer Republic; (ii) “New People” or “17 April People”; and (iii) intellectuals, students and diplomats who were living abroad and were recalled to Cambodia. The Closing Order adds that these categories continued to expand over time.<sup>372</sup> Accordingly, the three categories mentioned in the Closing Order are not meant to be exhaustive, and the KHIEU Samphan Defence’s submissions to the contrary are rejected.<sup>373</sup> Where necessary, the KHIEU Samphan Defence’s challenges to the specific categories of enemies identified by the Closing Order at each crime site will be addressed in the relevant Legal Findings sections of those crime sites.

171. The NUON Chea Defence submits that the charges regarding the crimes allegedly committed against former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials as well as the policy pursuant to which they were allegedly targeted are too vague, in violation of NUON Chea’s right to be promptly informed of the charges.<sup>374</sup> The NUON Chea Defence notes that while the alleged targeted groups of Vietnamese, Cham and Buddhists are discussed individually in section VIII-D (“Factual Findings of Crimes” under “Treatment of Specific Groups”), former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials are not separately discussed in this particular section of the Closing Order. The NUON Chea Defence adds that section VI-A of the Closing Order (“Findings of Responsibility under the Joint Criminal Enterprise”) does not include political persecution in relation to the targeting of former Khmer Republic officials. Despite noting that the Chamber made it clear in its Additional Severance Decision that political persecution was charged regarding the treatment of former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials in four crime sites (i.e. the Tram Kak Cooperatives, 1st January Dam Worksite, S-21 Security Centre and Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre),<sup>375</sup> the NUON Chea Defence contends that it is

Factual allegations relevant to each of these crime sites are relevant to the policy of targeting of former Khmer Republic officials. Political persecution against former Khmer Republic officials is also charged in relation to each of these four crime sites. The Chamber has therefore included within the scope of Case 002/02 the policy not clear which specific factual allegations are relevant to the treatment of former Khmer Republic officials, what the alleged policy was or what the legal qualification of such facts is.<sup>376</sup> No other Party made submissions in this regard.<sup>377</sup>

172. The Chamber recalls that Internal Rule 21(1)(d) provides, inter alia, that the Accused has the right to be informed of any charges brought against him. A charge must be understood as comprising both the underlying material facts and the legal qualification.<sup>378</sup>

173. The Closing Order must be examined holistically when determining the charges and the supporting material facts. Whether the charges regarding former ranking civilian and military personnel of the Khmer Republic are sufficiently specific so as not to impair NUON Chea's right to mount an effective defence thus depends in part on how these facts are charged in the locations relevant to Case 002/02: the Tram Kak Cooperatives, the 1st January Dam Worksite, S-21 Security Centre and Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre.<sup>379</sup> In the relevant parts of this Judgement, the Chamber has found that the facts are charged with sufficient specificity in relation to these locations.

174. Similarly, the Closing Order explicitly finds that a policy to target former ranking civilian and military personnel of the Khmer Republic existed in relation to these crime sites, and charges political persecution on such basis.<sup>380</sup> It finds that this policy came into existence before 1975 and continued until at least 6 January 1979, and that it involved the arrest or killing of members of this group in order to prevent them from staging "a counter-revolutionary comeback".<sup>381</sup> The policy formed part of the common purpose.<sup>382</sup> The Closing Order clearly states that this group was targeted “throughout Cambodia”, including in the four locations within the scope of Case 002/02.<sup>383</sup>

175. As submitted by the NUON Chea Defence, the Closing Order’s “Findings of Responsibility under the Joint Criminal Enterprise” does not include political persecution in relation to former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials. The Chamber notes, however, that the Closing Order clearly specifies that political persecution in relation to the treatment of former ranking civilian and military personnel of the Khmer Republic is charged at the four crime sites identified above.<sup>384</sup> The Chamber thus considers that it is properly seised of this charge, and moreover, that the Parties were on notice of this charge.

176. For these reasons, the Chamber rejects the NUON Chea Defence’s submissions regarding the lack of specificity of the charges related to the crimes allegedly committed against former Khmer Republic officials.

2.5.6.5. Notice of charges regarding the nationwide policy on the treatment of Buddhists

177. The NUON Chea Defence submits that the charges related to the targeting of Buddhists are limited to the Tram Kak Cooperatives and therefore any conviction for these charges must be based on evidence from this crime base. Although the Chamber admitted evidence on the treatment of Buddhists outside of Tram Kak due to its relevance to an alleged nationwide policy, the NUON Chea Defence submits that this evidence cannot be used to support a conviction because NUON Chea was not provided notice of the inclusion of other geographic locations in the Closing Order.<sup>385</sup>

178. The Chamber recalls that in severing Case 002/02, it found that “the inclusion of general allegations concerning the treatment of Buddhists and the Tram Kak Cooperative as one example crime site reasonably reflects the scale and nature of the alleged acts while maximising the efficient hearing of this topic”. It therefore declined to extend the treatment of Buddhists to a nationwide scope.<sup>386</sup> Consistently with this decision and with the notice of the charges provided to the Parties, the Chamber may not enter a conviction against the Accused for the treatment of Buddhists outside of the Tram Kak Cooperatives. However, this does not preclude the consideration of evidence that is relevant to the development of the CPK policy on the treatment of Buddhists, which may have originated outside of Tram Kak district.<sup>387</sup>

2.5.6.6. Exclusion from the scope of the trial of the charges contained in the Closing Order which were not supported by enough evidence for indictment

179. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that, in order to not deprive the Accused of their rights to effective recourse against all the procedural defects which affect the Closing Order, the Trial Chamber should consider its claims concerning the Co-Investigating Judges' failure to gather facts capable of supporting the charges at the level required for an indictment, and should nullify the parts of the Closing Order concerning the charges insufficiently proved to forward the case for trial.<sup>388</sup>

180. The Chamber notes that it is unclear to precisely which deficient charges the Defence refers, and whether the Pre-Trial Chamber was seised of any claims concerning the alleged defects. In the absence of any further substantiation these complaints are rejected.

2.5.6.7. Facts allegedly outside the scope of the indictment

2.5.6.7.1. Khmer Krom

181. The KHIEU Samphan Defence and NUON Chea Defence submit that the Chamber was never seised of facts pertaining to the treatment of the Khmer Krom minority group as such charges did not form part of the Closing Order, noting in particular decisions of the Co-Investigating Judges and the Pre-Trial Chamber regarding the scope of the Case 002 investigations.<sup>389</sup> The NUON Chea Defence also submits that the treatment of Khmer Krom cannot be considered as part of the charges related to the treatment of Vietnamese because they are not Vietnamese, either by nationality, ethnicity or racial group.<sup>390</sup>

182. The Closing Order charges the Accused with genocide of “people who belonged to the Vietnamese group (an ethnic and national group, who may also have been considered as a racial group by the CPK)” throughout Cambodia.<sup>391</sup> It also charges the Accused with murder, extermination, deportation and racial persecution of Vietnamese in numerous locations throughout Cambodia.<sup>392</sup> Although evidence related to Khmer Krom is discussed several times in the Closing Order, particularly in relation to the treatment of Vietnamese, Khmer Krom do not form an independent basis for the charges in the legal findings of the Closing Order.<sup>393</sup>

183. Consequently, in response to a request to determine whether evidence of the treatment of Khmer Krom fell within the scope of Case 002/02,<sup>394</sup> the Chamber held:

1) Case 002/02 does not include charges relating to the targeting of the Khmer Krom as a specific group -- that is, persecution as a crime against humanity or genocide of the Khmer Krom. No Party has requested to re-characterise any factual allegations within the scope of Case 002/02 to include counts of persecution or genocide directed at the Khmer Krom as a distinct group.

2) The Chamber will continue to assess evidence on a case by case basis in accordance with the ECCC legal framework. As a general guideline where evidence is proposed or discussed in Court, which appears to relate solely to the targeting of the Khmer Krom, and to be exclusively relevant to the establishment of the elements of persecution as a crime against humanity or genocide against the Khmer Krom, it will be deemed not relevant and will not be allowed.

3) Evidence pertaining to the Khmer Krom may, nonetheless, be relevant to other issues in Case 002/02, such as the historical and political context of the case or to other crimes which are charged, and certain of the victims happen to be Khmer Krom, and as such may be admissible. However, the Chamber request that the Parties focus on leading evidence which most strongly pertains to the charges at issue in Case 002/02. While the Chamber will not exclude witness or civil party testimony which touches upon the fact that an individual is Khmer Krom insofar as it is relevant to other issues within the scope of Case 002/02, this should not be the focus of counsels’ questioning as the targeting of Khmer Krom is not charged in this case.<sup>395</sup>

184. Consistently with this decision, the Chamber later ruled that “evidence pertaining to the Khmer Krom may be relevant to this case [but] issues specific to their alleged persecution as a targeted group fall outside the scope of Case 002/02”, and that “evidence pertaining to the Khmer Krom may be relevant to issues other than persecution of the Khmer Krom as a distinct group and therefore admissible”.<sup>396</sup> The Chamber admitted written statements related to the treatment of Khmer Krom due to their relevance to the historical and political context “or to other crimes charged”.<sup>397</sup> It also heard testimony concerning the treatment of Khmer Krom.

185. The Chamber notes that all arguments put forward by the KHIEU Samphan Defence have been dealt with in its previous decision and reaffirms this decision. The Closing Order does not identify the Khmer Krom as a sub-group of the Vietnamese, and therefore the Defence have never been adequately notified that allegations concerning the Khmer Krom as a sub-group could be part of the charges.<sup>398</sup> Therefore the Chamber does not consider itself properly seised of the targeting of Khmer Krom either as a specific group or as sub-group of the Vietnamese.

2.5.6.7.2. Rape outside the context of forced marriage

186. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the Chamber was never seised of allegations of the crime of rape outside the context of forced marriage and therefore it cannot consider evidence of rape as relevant to any charges in the Closing Order.<sup>399</sup> The Defence takes particular issue with the Trial Chamber’s decision of 12 June 2015 in which the Chamber found that it could consider evidence of rape as long as the evidence was not considered for that particular crime.<sup>400</sup> It submits that considering acts of rape as evidence in support of other charges amounts to recharacterisation of facts of which the Chamber is not seised.<sup>401</sup>

<sup>398</sup> In light of this ruling, the Chamber need not determine whether the Khmer Krom were in fact racially, ethnically, or nationally Vietnamese. See NUON Chea Closing Brief, paras 708-709.

187. The Chamber has consistently held that rape outside the context of forced marriage was not charged in Case 002/02.<sup>402</sup> At the outset of Case 002/02, the Chamber held that:

[T]here is no legal basis for the Lead Co-Lawyers for the Civil Parties' request to add charges of rape (outside the context of forced marriage) committed within Security Centres to the Closing Order (E99/1, paras 32-41, 43, 45). The Co-Investigating Judges specifically found that while rape did occur in security centres, these crimes could not be linked to the Accused as the evidence did not support a finding that the CPK leaders used rape as a policy in Security Centres (D427, paras 1426-1429). Although the Chamber may change the legal characterisation of a crime as set out in the Closing Order as long as no new constitutive elements are introduced (Internal Rule 98(2)), the Chamber has no authority to add new facts or charges to the Closing Order that were dismissed by the Co-Investigating Judges, a decision that was not disturbed by the Pre-Trial Chamber.<sup>403</sup>

188. The Chamber has noted that “the occurrence of rape may be relevant, among others, to the conditions in Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre” notwithstanding the fact that the Closing Order did not allege that the Accused bear criminal responsibility for rape at Kraing Ta Chan based on any mode of liability.<sup>404</sup> More recently, the Chamber rejected a request to recharacterise rape as the crime against humanity of rape, other inhumane acts of attacks against human dignity or torture.<sup>405</sup> The Chamber agrees with the KHIEU Samphan Defence that consideration of evidence of rape in support of other charges in the Closing Order would amount to recharacterisation of the facts, which the Chamber has held is impermissible in these circumstances. Therefore, evidence of rape in Security Centres (outside the context of forced marriage) will not be considered in support of the elements of any criminal charge in this case.<sup>406</sup> Nonetheless, such facts may be relevant to understanding the general context of the living conditions in Security Centres and to assessing the credibility of the authors of statements implicating perpetrators of such crimes or implicated by other declarants.

2.5.6.7.3. Crimes committed by the Revolutionary Army of Kampuchea on Vietnamese territory

189. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that crimes committed by the RAK on Vietnamese territory are not within the scope of Case 002/02 pursuant to the severance order of the Chamber and therefore any evidence of such criminality that was adduced at trial, such as the testimony of Stephen MORRIS on this point, must be excluded from the Chamber's deliberations.<sup>407</sup>

190. The Chamber recalls that, pursuant to its Case 002 Additional Severance Decision, these facts contained in paragraphs 832-840 of the Closing Order do not form part of Case 002/02.<sup>408</sup> Accordingly, the Chamber may not attribute criminal responsibility for crimes based on these facts.<sup>409</sup> Evidence regarding crimes committed by the RAK in Vietnam, including portions of Stephen MORRIS's testimony concerning those incursions into Vietnamese territory, will be disregarded by the Chamber in assessing the charges in this case. Such facts may be considered by the Chamber for other purposes, including assessing the credibility of witnesses, understanding the context of the international armed conflict, or the grave breaches charges related to civilians or soldiers hors de combat who were arrested during such skirmishes on Vietnamese territory and who were sent to S-21 thereafter.

<sup>406</sup> Any evidence of rape in Security Centres within the context of forced marriage will be discussed, where relevant, in Section 14: Regulation of Marriage.

3. HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

191. The events that took place during the Democratic Kampuchea (“DK”) era must be understood within the context of developments that preceded its foundation.<sup>410</sup> The Chamber outlines in this section the historical context of events between 17 April 1975 and 6 January 1979.<sup>411</sup>

3.1. Development of the CPK

192. In setting out the development of the Communist Party of Kampuchea (“CPK”), the Chamber has predominantly relied upon the testimony and publications of the Accused and expert witnesses, who collectively provided a detailed survey of the period preceding 17 April 1975.

193. In particular, the Chamber has made extensive reference to NUON Chea’s writings and testimony on the history of the CPK, which the Chamber finds to be largely consistent, both internally and externally, and therefore a reliable basis for factual findings. In addition, the Chamber has relied upon an interview of NUON Chea by KHEM Ngun.<sup>412</sup> Although NUON Chea sought to discredit the interviewer when questioned in court,<sup>413</sup> the Chamber finds the answers he provided during the course of that interview to be consistent with other statements he made, including those in court. Indeed, NUON Chea acknowledged that he had “mostly” told the truth to KHEM Ngun, noting only that he had possibly withheld certain information from him.<sup>414</sup> As it is the truth of the contents of the interview and not the reliability of KHEM Ngun’s record thereof which is at issue, the Chamber is satisfied that the transcript of the interview constitutes a reliable basis for factual findings.

<sup>410</sup> The NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan Defence teams both submit that Cambodia’s historical relationship with Vietnam is crucial to understanding the state of armed conflict that existed during the DK period. See NUON Chea Closing Brief, paras 107, 151-157, 164-178; KHIEU Samphan Closing Brief, paras 680-691. Regarding the armed conflict as of 17 April 1975, see Section 4: General Overview.

<sup>411</sup> This may include clarifying a given context, establishing by inference the elements of criminal conduct within the temporal jurisdiction of the ECCC, or demonstrating a deliberate pattern of conduct. See Nahimana et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 315.

<sup>414</sup> T. 15 December 2011 (Accused NUON Chea), E1/23.1, p. 45 (“And as for whether I was truthful or not, it depended on the situation at that time [...]. At some point, I talked truthfully, but at some other point, I refrained from saying things.”).

194. The Chamber found helpful KHIEU Samphan's testimony with regard to events preceding the DK era and has relied upon it subject to the appropriate caution and corroboration. The Chamber has nevertheless relied upon his publication, Considerations on the History of Cambodia from the Early Stage to the Period of Democratic Kampuchea in a limited sense,<sup>415</sup> noting its extensive references to the works of Philip SHORT and other authors. The Chamber has referred to this publication only insofar as it proffers unique, unaccredited historical accounts by the Accused, or corroborates other reliable accounts before the Chamber.

195. In weighing the overall reliability of historical accounts, the Chamber has sought corroboration in contemporaneous materials and other evidence before it, attributing more weight to testimony heard in court and materials whose authors were either questioned during the trial on the relevant historical topics or were available for examination by the Parties. To that extent, the Chamber has particularly relied upon the works and testimony of Elizabeth BECKER (who was a war correspondent in Cambodia in the early 1970s and was able to provide an eyewitness account following her travels to DK in 1978), Philip SHORT and David CHANDLER. Consistently with its approach to the overall assessment of evidence,<sup>416</sup> the Chamber has further considered common narratives, biases, memory errors and motives when scrutinising the veracity of all historical evidence.

3.1.1. 1930 – 1970: Nascence to Armed Struggle

196. The origins of the Cambodian communist movement trace back to the founding of the Vietnamese Communist Party in January 1930 by HO Chi Minh.<sup>417</sup> The Party was renamed the Indochinese Communist Party ("ICP") later that year on the direction of the Communist International (Comintern), to reflect the movement's objective of promoting proletarian internationalism among the constituent Indochinese territories of modern-day Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos.<sup>418</sup> Despite its name, the ICP did not initially

197. In 1941, the Hanoi-based ICP directorate founded the Viet Minh, an anti-imperialist and nationalist front. While establishing bases in Cambodia, the Viet Minh progressively recruited ethnic Khmers with a view to infiltrating the amorphous networks of the Khmer Issarak (Freedom) resistance movement fighting against French colonial authorities. Issarak groups containing both non-communist and communist factions had been engaged in armed struggle against the French in Cambodia since the 1940s and counted among their number KE Pauk, SAO Phim, MOUL Sambath alias RUOS Nhim, CHHIT Choeun alias Ta Mok, NEY Sarann alias Ya, Achar SOK alias TOU Samouth and SIEU Heng.<sup>420</sup> In April 1950, the Viet Minh and Khmer Issarak mobilised themselves into a loosely-constituted Unified Issarak Front (“UIF”) at the “First National Congress of the Khmer Resistance”, with the predominantly Vietnamese-staffed Viet Minh dominating the Front.<sup>421</sup> By assimilating the Issarak movement, the ICP, which by now included CHOU Chet alias Sy and KEO Meas,<sup>422</sup> as well as former Thai Communist Party member NUON Chea,<sup>423</sup> had succeeded in establishing a Cambodian presence in the form of a dualistic ICP-Khmer Issarak national resistance front headed by ICP member Achar MEAN alias SON Ngoc Minh.<sup>424</sup> SON Ngoc Minh further headed the People's Liberation Central Committee ("PLCC") along with three deputies, ICP members CHAN Samay, SIEU Heng and TOU Samouth. On 19 June 1950, SON Ngoc Minh formally declared Cambodia's independence in the name of the PLCC, claiming that the UIF controlled one third of the country.<sup>425</sup>

198. The ICP reorganised itself at a 1951 congress attended by NUON Chea,<sup>426</sup> reconstituting its national movements as proto-communist parties, with the Cambodian movement renamed the Khmer People's Revolutionary Party ("KPRP").<sup>427</sup> The clandestine KPRP nevertheless remained a carbon copy of the ICP; the Party statute was written in Vietnamese and the leadership structure of the UIF – SON Ngoc Minh, TOU Samouth and SIEU Heng – was retained. rivals, including the Democratic Party and King NORODOM Sihanouk, deeming them “puppets of foreign masters”.<sup>429</sup>

199. In 1952, King NORODOM Sihanouk launched his “Royal Crusade for Independence” after dismissing the Democratic Party from government, and embarked upon a publicised world tour demanding the transfer of French colonial authority to the Cambodian monarchy. By late 1953, the initiative had succeeded and France had transferred judicial and military authority to NORODOM Sihanouk. Cambodia regained its sovereign autonomy after the Geneva Accords in May 1954; an agreement which ended the insurgency against the French in Indochina and called for free elections in Cambodia. Unlike their Vietnamese and Lao counterparts, the Cambodian communists were not permitted to participate in the negotiations in Geneva. Issarak units were required to reintegrate into the national community under the terms of the Accords, while foreign troops were obliged to withdraw from Cambodian territory.<sup>430</sup> As a result, the Issarak faction pledged allegiance to NORODOM Sihanouk and a number of the Cambodia-based communist and Viet Minh forces withdrew to Vietnamese territory along with SON Ngoc Minh and SIEU Heng,<sup>431</sup> almost dissolving the KPRP.<sup>432</sup> Although KHIEU Samphan would later assert that the Party had “completely dissolved” at this point,<sup>433</sup> it is clear from the following that elements of the KPRP, including its members and structure, had remained after 1954.

200. In February 1955, NORODOM Sihanouk renounced the throne and called general elections pursuant to the terms of the Geneva Accords, seeking a popular mandate as Head of the Royal Government as a candidate of his new party, Sangkum Reastr Niyum (People’s Socialist Community). At around this time, the KPRP founded Krom Pracheachon (the People’s Group), a subordinate arm of the Party designed to engage in politics and serve as the public face of the clandestine revolutionary movement.<sup>434</sup> Headed by KEO Meas, Pracheachon was publicly operated by SAO Phim, NEY Sarann and CHOU Chet, among others.<sup>435</sup> Following an election campaign marked by police and military crackdowns on opposition parties, Pracheachon was defeated by Sangkum. The new government proceeded to implement a foreign policy of neutrality and refusal to join the US-dominated Southeast Asia Treaty Organisation after the elections.<sup>436</sup>

201. By late 1955, the KPRP had reorganised itself under a five-man Central Committee composed of SIEU Heng as secretary (in Saigon at the time), TOU Samouth as deputy secretary, SON Ngoc Minh (in Hanoi at the time), SAO Phim and RUOS Nhim.<sup>437</sup> Deputy TOU Samouth, the only member of the original KPRP leadership to remain in Phnom Penh,<sup>438</sup> was assisted in the Party’s City Committee by NUON Chea and SALOTH Sar alias POL Pot.<sup>439</sup> POL Pot had come to TOU Samouth's attention following his return from Paris and a brief stint in the maquis with the Viet Minh.<sup>440</sup> While the Party's activities were somewhat dormant over the following years, Pracheachon contested, and lost, the 1958 elections.<sup>441</sup> Despite its defeat, Pracheachon remained the only political alternative to Sangkum on the Cambodian political scene following the dissolution of the Democratic Party a year earlier.<sup>442</sup> At around this time, Sihanouk coined the term "Khmers Rouges" to refer to Pracheachon;<sup>443</sup> a name which was never used by members of the communist movement to describe themselves.<sup>444</sup>

202. In late 1959, the secret Party leadership in Phnom Penh began the process of creating an authentic Marxist-Leninist party devoid of Vietnamese influence. POL Pot and NUON Chea drafted the Party Statute and the Party's strategic and tactical lines either on orders from TOU Samouth – now the Party leader following SIEU Heng's defection to NORODOM Sihanouk<sup>445</sup> – or on their own initiative.<sup>446</sup> According to NUON Chea, the strategic line was based on a social analysis of Cambodian society,

IENG Sary and SON Sen.<sup>453</sup> The Congress symbolised the joinder under the revolutionary movement’s hierarchy of former ICP members and Issarak with the “returned students” or “intellectuals” – POL Pot, IENG Sary and SON Sen – who had been acquainted since the 1950s through their involvement in the Marxist Circle in Paris.<sup>454</sup>

204. The Congress adopted the strategic line of independence, sovereignty and self-reliance, and decided to pursue political and armed struggle to achieve the Party’s revolutionary goals.<sup>455</sup> In an attempt to assert its independence and distance itself from the Vietnamese communists, the KPRP rebranded itself as the Workers’ Party of Kampuchea (“WPK”);<sup>456</sup> a decision that was not communicated to the Vietnamese party.<sup>457</sup> This symbolic event would subsequently be propagandised by the Khmer Rouge as the genesis of the communist movement in Cambodia.<sup>458</sup> Following the Congress, the WPK cadres returned to their respective provinces and zones in an effort to reinforce the Party’s rural bases: MA Mang and Prasith returned to the Southwest

Fearing arrest, POL Pot, IENG Sary and SON Sen fled to the jungle by the Vietnamese border, leaving NUON Chea as the nominal head of the Party in Phnom Penh.<sup>472</sup> KHIEU Samphan and HOU Youn, among those who heeded NORODOM Sihanouk's summons, declined his offer and insisted that he himself take the reins of government.<sup>473</sup> Both men lost their ministerial portfolios as a result of the scandal but retained their seats in the National Assembly.<sup>474</sup> HU Nim lost his position as the editor of the Sangkum's official newspaper.<sup>475</sup>

<sup>483</sup> Prime Minister LON Nol's "ramassage du paddy" grain collection system was the result of a concerted effort to stem the outflow of grain revenue to Chinese and Vietnamese middlemen actively undercutting official government rates. Elizabeth BECKER opines that the implementation of the ramassage campaign in the prosperous region was fortuitous for the CPK, given that peasants were largely at the mercy of large landholders. Indeed, Battambang had developed into the most prosperous region since the 1920s, providing the majority of Cambodia's rice exports and sheltering the greatest number of landlords and migrants. From March 1969, with the apparent acquiescence of NORODOM Sihanouk, the United States launched an aerial bombing campaign against North Vietnamese communists on Cambodian soil, effectively pulling Cambodia into the Vietnam War.<sup>494</sup> The presence of more than 20,000 North Vietnamese troops in Cambodia by the end of the year publicly signified the end of NORODOM Sihanouk's policy of neutrality,<sup>495</sup> which had ended in practice following the start of the Viet Cong's conveyance of Chinese weaponry through Cambodia in 1965.<sup>496</sup> Realising the risk that a unified, communist-ruled Vietnam posed to the country, NORODOM Sihanouk reinstated diplomatic relations with the United States and directed newly-reappointed Prime Minister LON Nol's pro-US government to take measures to end the growing domestic communist threat.<sup>497</sup>

3.1.2. 1970: NORODOM Sihanouk's Overthrow and the Formation of
FUNK/GRUNK

216. By March 1970, growing social and political discontent about the presence of communist Vietnamese forces in eastern Cambodia led to protests in Svay Rieng and the storming of the North Vietnamese and Provisional Revolutionary Government of the Republic of South Vietnam diplomatic missions in Phnom Penh by demonstrators, civil servants and soldiers mobilised on NORODOM Sihanouk's orders.<sup>499</sup> LON Nol issued a statement on 12 March 1970 demanding the withdrawal of all Vietnamese communist troops from Cambodian territory and proceeded to broker an alliance with the US-supported South Vietnamese regime.<sup>500</sup>

217. The National Assembly and government had grown impatient with NORODOM Sihanouk's rule. Encouraged by Deputy Prime Minister SIRIK Matak, LON Nol signed a decree on 17 March 1970 supporting the overthrow of NORODOM Sihanouk, who was in Moscow at the time.<sup>501</sup> The next day, the National Assembly approved a vote of no confidence in NORODOM Sihanouk, removing him from office as Head of State.<sup>502</sup>

218. Confronted with these events, NORODOM Sihanouk on 23 March 1970 announced in a radio broadcast from Beijing the formation of a political movement, the National United Front of Kampuchea ("FUNK"), and called upon his compatriots to join the resistance to fight against those who instigated the coup, promising to provide them with military training and weapons.<sup>503</sup> The appeal was not entirely drafted by NORODOM Sihanouk. Unbeknownst to him, his initial proposal was handed by Chinese Premier ZHOU Enlai to POL Pot – in talks with the Chinese Communist Party in Beijing at the head of a CPK delegation at the time – who removed any reference to socialism, presumably to harness maximum national support for FUNK.<sup>504</sup>

219. An alliance between NORODOM Sihanouk and the Cambodian communists was now mutually beneficial. Without meeting with NORODOM Sihanouk in Beijing, POL Pot forwarded a letter in support of FUNK in the name of KHIEU Samphan, HU Nim and HOU Youn.<sup>505</sup> In this tactical move, POL Pot presented the “Three Ghosts” – still in hiding in the maquis and widely believed dead<sup>506</sup> – as the face of the Cambodian left, thereby capitalising upon their political credentials while preserving the secrecy of CPK’s existence.

220. On 5 May 1970, NORODOM Sihanouk formed a new government in exile, the Royal Government of the National Union of Kampuchea (“GRUNK”). NORODOM Sihanouk was proclaimed the Head of State and Chairman of FUNK, while KHIEU Samphan was appointed Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence.<sup>507</sup>

KHIEU Samphan was in fact appointed to that position by POL Pot without his knowledge.<sup>508</sup> He would subsequently serve as a liaison between NORODOM Sihanouk and POL Pot, having been inducted into the CPK the previous year by Ta Mok.<sup>509</sup> HU Nim became Minister of Information and Propaganda of GRUNK, HOU Youn was appointed Minister of the Interior, Communal Reforms and Cooperatives, while IENG Thirith, CHOU Chet and KOY Thuon received vice-ministerial portfolios in the exiled government.<sup>510</sup>

221. FUNK's official policy was to unite and mobilise the social classes and to "overthrow the fascist and racist dictatorship of the American imperialists' flunkies headed by Lon Nol-Sirik Matak".<sup>511</sup> FUNK promised to all Cambodians the freedom of religion and belief, assured the rights of land ownership and cultivation, and espoused a neutral foreign policy of co-operation with, inter alia, Vietnam.<sup>512</sup> GRUNK, and KHIEU Samphan in particular, officially supported this vision.<sup>513</sup> FUNK proceeded to establish a radio station in Hanoi under the supervision of IENG Thirith, which it used to recruit cadres, garner support for FUNK and disseminate propaganda inside and outside Cambodia.<sup>514</sup>

222. North Vietnam and China immediately recognised GRUNK as the legitimate government of Cambodia.<sup>515</sup> In reality, the government-in-exile was a façade.<sup>516</sup> Nominally, NORODOM Sihanouk headed the administration from Beijing as a figure of national unity and political legitimacy.<sup>517</sup> In addition to attracting widespread support domestically from peasants faithful to the former King, NORODOM Sihanouk urged Cambodians to join FUNK (in reality, the CPK's cause) and sought international support and recognition of GRUNK. Autonomously issuing radio appeals from Beijing, NORODOM Sihanouk declared that GRUNK would grant amnesty to Khmer Republic officials who acknowledged their "fatal blunders against the country" and joined FUNK.<sup>518</sup> Upon the approval of POL Pot and NUON Chea, NORODOM Sihanouk visited Khmer Rouge-liberated areas in 1973 to provide support to the armed struggle against LON Nol's forces.<sup>519</sup> Domestically however, NORODOM Sihanouk was

224. The remainder of 1970 was characterised by escalating conflict in the newly-proclaimed Khmer Republic. Hanoi now shared with the CPK the short-term objective of toppling the LON Nol government and, looking to secure their Cambodian sanctuaries and maintain the flow of weapons to the Viet Cong, offered to arm the CPK.<sup>523</sup> By the end of April 1970, 35,000 to 40,000 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops had launched offensives against Khmer Republic forces in Cambodia’s eastern regions, and were soon confronted with US and South Vietnamese contingents of comparable strength.<sup>524</sup> Occupying large swathes of Cambodian territory, the Vietnamese communists implemented a “parallel state power” of administration, hospitals, military and political training schools in the country.<sup>525</sup>

In mid-1970 however, the CPK Central Committee adopted a pragmatic line of good relations with the Vietnamese communists, ostensibly as a result of the latter's promise to withdraw from liberated areas as soon as they could be replaced by Cambodians.<sup>530</sup> This was soon reversed at the Third CPK Congress in September 1971, where leaders resolved that Vietnam was the long-term "acute enemy" of Kampuchea.<sup>531</sup> The congress was for the first time attended by GRUNK Ministers HU Nim, HOU Youn and KHIEU Samphan, as well as a number of Cambodians allegedly affiliated with the Viet Minh who had returned to the country during the North

228. In January 1973, the Paris Peace Accords were negotiated between the governments of Vietnam and the US, removing the latter from the Vietnamese conflict and requiring the withdrawal of North Vietnamese forces from Cambodian territory. In pursuit of the Accords, North Vietnam also ceased provision of military supplies to the CPK, exacerbating a relationship which had been deteriorating since the early 1960s as a result of Hanoi's continued opposition to armed struggle in Cambodia.<sup>539</sup> By May 1973, the last vestiges of North Vietnamese command over Cambodian communist regiments had dissipated, with a number of North Vietnamese soldiers remaining to assist with and guard the flow of Chinese arms down the Ho Chi Minh Trail.<sup>540</sup> Although the Accords led to the demobilisation of Vietnamese military forces on Cambodian territory, the Khmer Rouge were enraged by North Vietnam's assent to the peace treaty, concluding that the regional peace initiative now compelled the CPK to commence negotiations with the Khmer Republic at risk of potential US military intervention.<sup>541</sup>

232. On 1 April 1975, LON Nol resigned and fled into exile after his forces sustained significant military losses to the CPNLAF.<sup>559</sup> Two days later, KHIEU Samphan issued a statement announcing that the “seven traitors” of the LON Nol regime had fled the country and that “US imperialists” were attempting to prolong the war by resorting to negotiation.<sup>560</sup>

The plan for capturing Phnom Penh was finalised at a meeting attended by POL Pot, NUON Chea, KHIEU Samphan, SON Sen, VORN Vet, KOY Thuon, KE Pauk, SAO Phim and Ta Mok in early April 1975.<sup>561</sup> At the same time, CPNLAF divisions including those from the North Zone, now chaired by KE Pauk, Ta Mok’s Southwest Zone, VORN Vet’s Special Zone and SAO Phim’s East Zone gradually converged upon the capital.<sup>562</sup>

234. On 16 April 1975, the remaining Khmer Republic leadership sent a message to NORODOM Sihanouk in Beijing offering immediately to transfer power to GRUNK and asking for assurances that there would be no reprisals for government acts during the hostilities.<sup>563</sup> NORODOM Sihanouk rejected this offer outright, stating that only an unconditional surrender was acceptable and urging the “first rank traitors” to flee the country because as war criminals they “deserve nothing less than the gallows”.<sup>564</sup>

3.2. Establishment of Cooperatives and Security Centres between 1970 and 1975

236. Following NORODOM Sihanouk's overthrow in 1970, CPK forces began to occupy and administer areas which they had "liberated" from Khmer Republic control under the banner of CPNLAF and FUNK/GRUNK. As part of their administration of these areas, the Khmer Rouge proceeded to establish agricultural cooperatives and security centres, some of which were still operational by the time of Democratic Kampuchea's foundation on 17 April 1975.

3.2.1. Establishment of Cooperatives before 1975

237. In 1970, the Khmer Rouge seized control of parts of Tram Kak district in Takeo province and began to organise villagers of the newly "liberated" areas into mutual assistance teams or "solidarity" groups to harvest rice and increase agricultural production, while permitting some to retain private property and families to eat alone.<sup>566</sup> Collectivisation and communal eating was introduced in Tram Kak district later on and expanded progressively along with the conversion of solidarity groups into cooperatives.<sup>567</sup>

Whereas Witness CHANG Srey Mom suggested that communal eating and cooperatives were established at Nhaeng Nhang commune, Tram Kak district, from around 1970, the Chamber finds the evidence of EK Hoeun and MEAS Sokha to be more reliable in this respect

238. In or around May 1970, the CPNLAF captured Kratie town and province. Unlike the situation in Tram Kak, there is no evidence that the Khmer Rouge administration proceeded to implement agricultural cooperatives immediately, with witness YUN Kim testifying that “people were still engaging in running their daily business”, and that “the market still existed” in Kratie at this time.<sup>568</sup> Lamenting the hitherto slow progress of the revolution in “liberated” areas and the population’s general apathy toward the revolutionary cause, the CPK identified continuing economic subjugation by the capitalist of the “old society” as the primary impediment to the revolution. Referencing the Kratie market as a case in point, the Revolutionary Flag would later explain that “this commerce could not serve the lives of the people and could not serve the war of national liberation”, noting that the CPK “could not gather up the people” since “[t]he businessmen were [still] the masters”.<sup>569</sup>

239. Meeting in May 1972, the CPK Central Committee decided to close markets and organise cooperatives.<sup>570</sup> The decision to close markets was soon implemented in Khmer Rouge-held areas, as was the end of the use of currency.<sup>571</sup> The Party reasoned that class struggle necessitated the elimination of private commerce in favour of collectivised work production.<sup>572</sup> A CPK circular would later describe the establishment of agricultural cooperatives as a direct attack on feudalists and a necessary measure to “harness the force of the base people and forge a strong alliance between workers and peasants”.<sup>573</sup> Clarifying in court the Party’s antagonism toward “feudalists”, NUON Chea explained that without cooperatives, “oppressive landlords [...] would impose high interest on [agricultural] loans and they would charge higher fees on the land rented as well”, allegedly benefitting by “as much as 50 percent of the princip[al] loan”.<sup>574</sup>

240. Beyond the official Party line, the Accused advanced further rationales for the implementation of cooperatives. Whereas NUON Chea suggested that the interests of economic efficiency required pooling of labour resources for increased rice production,<sup>575</sup> KHIEU Samphan opined that control over rice production and supply would prevent the concentration of Cambodia’s rice production in the hands of Vietnamese forces to the detriment of the Khmer Rouge and would thereby preserve the country’s independence.<sup>576</sup>

241. Both NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan insisted that the implementation of a forced collectivisation program through cooperatives – which would result in the gradual abolition of private property and control of the economy in areas under Khmer Rouge control<sup>577</sup> – was required to ensure sufficient food and overcome the difficulties of the war against the Khmer Republic and the simultaneous US bombing campaign.<sup>578</sup> Indeed, the civil war led to inflationary pressures as a result of severe commodity

3.2.2. Establishment of Security Centres before 1975

244. The Khmer Rouge also established security centres in areas it brought under its control between 1970 and 1975. Kraing Ta Chan is the only security centre within the scope of Case 002/02 that was operational prior to 1975, having been set up in Tram Kak district in 1973 or 1974. The limited evidence before the Chamber about the Security Centre's operations prior to 1975 shows that Kraing Ta Chan was used as both a re-education and detention facility.<sup>591</sup>

245. The Chamber also has before it evidence of the existence and operation of the M-13 security centre which was operational by July 1971, when KAING Guek Eav alias Duch was appointed as chairman of the facility.<sup>592</sup> Officially the Special Zone Police Office,<sup>593</sup> M-13 was divided into two operations. M-13A, initially located in Thma Kob, Amleang commune in Kampong Speu province and, from mid-1973, in Trapeang Chrab, Amleang commune,<sup>594</sup> was directly supervised by Duch and responsible for interrogating and executing individuals suspected of being spies.<sup>595</sup> M-13B, located in Sdok Srat, Ang Snuol district,<sup>596</sup> was supervised by Duch's deputy and tasked with temporarily detaining those who had committed minor offences.<sup>597</sup>

246. M-13's operations were directed by members of the CPK Central Committee;<sup>598</sup> initially VORN Vet from July 1971 until mid-1973 and subsequently SON Sen until January 1975.<sup>599</sup> Instructions were passed from this level to Duch to "put pressure" on

3.3. Cham in Cambodia before 1975

251. The Cham in Cambodia trace their history to the originally Hindu people of the Kingdom of Champa, which was located in the central and southern regions of present-day Vietnam.<sup>621</sup> By the 16th century, the majority of this population had converted to Islam, which had spread to Champa by sea through a trade network stretching from the Middle East to Malaya and the Indonesian archipelago.<sup>622</sup> Centuries of warfare with

254. Seeking to promote Khmer identity in the early 1960s, NORODOM Sihanouk coined the term “Khmer Islam” to refer to the Cham minority.<sup>635</sup> As with the contemporary demonym “Cham”, Khmer Islam collectively referred to those Islamic subgroups with ancestral heritage in Champa (the Cham and Jehad) and the Indonesian archipelago (Chvear).<sup>636</sup>

During the initial period of unrest following Sihanouk’s overthrow in 1970, Cham mostly enjoyed good relations with the Khmer Rouge in “liberated” zones.<sup>637</sup> In 1972 and 1973 however, prominent Cham religious leaders were arrested and detained in Krouch Chhmar district,<sup>638</sup> mosques were shut down and observers were pressured to stop practising Islam.<sup>639</sup> Some Cham communities were forced to work in

3.4. Buddhism in Cambodia before 1975

257. Buddhism has been the dominant religion in Cambodia since at least the 13th century when the Theravada variant was introduced to the Khmer Empire.<sup>645</sup> Buddhism prospered throughout the centuries and was inscribed as the state religion in 1847.<sup>646</sup>

258. By this time, Buddhism was inextricably intertwined with Cambodian identity and affected most aspects of life, including the Khmer language and calendar, food, dance and art.<sup>647</sup> While the laity may not necessarily have been familiar with its complexities, Buddhism's omnipresence entrenched awareness of Dhammic values and moral precepts, and promoted pro-social behaviour among the people.<sup>648</sup>

259. The teachings of the Buddha (“dhamma”) were widely observed in Cambodia throughout the 20th century until 1975. Doctrinal tolerance in religion and social life encouraged a society of kindness, compassion and peaceful coexistence.<sup>649</sup> Pacifism and non-injury (“ahimsa”) underscored the importance of equanimity (“upekkha”) and the eternal quest for balance and harmony with one’s surrounds.<sup>650</sup>

260. The Buddhist monkhood (“sangha”) voluntarily submitted itself to a strict disciplinary code (“vinaya”) endorsing asceticism, celibacy and spirituality.<sup>651</sup> Spiritual balance was maintained in a circle of interdependence between the sangha and the laity; the community was encouraged to offer food, money and material supplies to monks who, in return, would give blessings and make offerings to the dead.<sup>652</sup> The sangha additionally played a pivotal role in the education of children at pagodas throughout Cambodia, particularly in rural areas, contributing significantly to the country’s literacy rate and general provision of basic educational and welfare facilities.<sup>653</sup>

261. Prior to 1975, monks were responsible for conducting various rituals including officiating at weddings and issuing funerary rites.<sup>654</sup> Along with the laity, they would worship at pagodas, which would frequently house religious artefacts and objects of

262. Voluntary renunciation of the monkhood was traditionally possible and drew its validity from the religious context in which it was performed. Monks who sought to disrobe were expected to perform a ceremony, in the presence of other monks of sound mind, in which they expressed their firm intention to leave the sangha.<sup>658</sup>

263. Following NORODOM Sihanouk's overthrow in 1970, FUNK proclaimed that "Buddhism is and will remain to be the state religion"<sup>659</sup> at a time when the sangha reportedly numbered over 61,000 monks.<sup>660</sup> Between 1970 and 1973, many pagodas were destroyed by US aerial bombing campaigns over Cambodia,<sup>661</sup> with an estimated 900 pagodas destroyed nationwide by June 1973.<sup>662</sup>

While CPK documents or pronouncements regarding religion prior to 1975 are scarce, the Chamber has evidence before it that between 1973 and the collapse of the Khmer Republic, Buddhist monks were variously pressured or persuaded to leave the monkhood in order to join the revolution, some at risk of being killed,<sup>663</sup> forced into

3.5. Marriage in Cambodia before 1975

265. While Cambodia has a history of marriage rituals varying across the country according to socio-economic, temporal, geographic and topographic conditions, it is possible to distil common practices prior to 1975 among the Khmer population.<sup>667</sup>

266. The arrangement of a marriage was predominantly a family affair, largely removed from the control of the future couple.<sup>668</sup> A union could be initiated by the future husband by suggesting marriage to his parents, who would either seek a suitable match or approach a prospective wife's parents.<sup>669</sup> Couples were matched according to similar social backgrounds,<sup>670</sup> and initial decisions about the match would be made along matrilineal lines.<sup>671</sup>

267. Children would traditionally not question their parents' decisions in this regard. While daughters were consulted about a prospective match and could refuse marriage,<sup>672</sup> sons enjoyed more freedom in selecting a wife.<sup>673</sup> The paramountcy of familial reputation and parental deference nevertheless traditionally obliged an arranged couple to fulfil their parents' expectations.<sup>674</sup> Indeed, there was a general expectation, based on mutual trust, that parents would arrange their children's marriages.<sup>675</sup>

268. Once a couple had acquiesced to marriage, a fortune-teller ("Achar") was consulted to decide upon a wedding date based on the couple's birth dates.<sup>676</sup> A dowry would be concluded between the families and an engagement ceremony would be held, usually some months before the wedding ceremony.<sup>677</sup> Weddings would usually not be planned for, or held, during the monsoon season.<sup>678</sup>

269. The wedding day was traditionally characterised by lavish ceremony.<sup>679</sup> The wedding itself was considered a community affair,<sup>680</sup> with parents, siblings, relatives, neighbours, fellow villagers, monks and local authorities (such as the village chief) taking part in the ceremony.<sup>681</sup> The union would be "authorised", "blessed" or constituted by, and in the presence of, the community.<sup>682</sup>

271. Monks played a major role at weddings,<sup>689</sup> reading sermons, making offerings to ancestors, exorcising harmful spirits and providing counselling to couples.<sup>690</sup>

272. After the ceremony, the couple would retire to the home of one of the spouse's parents.<sup>691</sup> Discussion of sexual intercourse or consummation was considered taboo, and married couples were rarely instructed on how to behave on the wedding night.<sup>692</sup>

273. The evidence at trial indicates that limitations were placed on wedding festivities in areas "liberated" by the Khmer Rouge between 1970 and 1975. Between this time,

FUNK promoted a political program of equality to both sexes and sought to “wipe out backward traditions discriminating against women”, encouraging their “professional development” by emphasising the primacy of their training and education at all levels “to enable them fully to participate in the common struggle”. Polygamy was also nominally abolished.<sup>693</sup> Tram Kak district Secretary PECH Chim testified that “there was only a handful of marriages” in that district between 1971 and 1973. Those ceremonies that were held were conducted in secret, with PECH Chim explaining that vibrant ceremonies could “mentally affect” combatants and could prevent the Khmer Rouge from “convinc[ing] people to go to the battlefields”.<sup>694</sup> There is also evidence that marriages were arranged by “Angkar” prior to 1975.<sup>695</sup>

4. GENERAL OVERVIEW: 17 APRIL 1975 – 6 JANUARY 1979

274. The Chamber limited Case 002/02 to, and is thus seised of, the factual allegations described in the Closing Order, and characterised as crimes against humanity, grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and genocide, relating to cooperatives and worksites (limited to Tram Kak Cooperatives, Trapeang Thma Dam Worksite, 1st January Dam Worksite and Kampong Chhnang Airfield Construction Site), security centres and execution sites (limited to S-21 Security Centre, Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre, Au Kanseng Security Centre and Phnom Kraol Security Centre), the treatment of targeted groups (limited to (i) the treatment of Buddhists at the Tram Kak Cooperatives; (ii) the treatment of the Cham during movement of population phase two, implementation excluding the Kroch Chhmar Security Centre; (iii) the treatment of the Vietnamese, implementation excluding the crimes committed by the Revolutionary Army of Kampuchea on Vietnamese territory; and (iv) the treatment of former Khmer Republic officials (including civil servants and military personnel) and their families, implementation limited to Tram Kak Cooperatives, 1st January Dam Worksite, S-21 Security Centre and Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre) and the regulation of marriage (nationwide).<sup>696</sup>

275. The Chamber notes that this section has a limited purpose: to analyse whether the chapeau requirements of crimes against humanity and grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 have been established. The Chamber addresses this at this point in the Judgement, because these considerations have ramifications for all the crimes against humanity and all the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 charged in Case 002/02 and discussed in the remainder of the Judgement below. According to the Closing Order, the relevant crimes associated with the second phase of the movement of population, the operation of cooperatives and worksites, the network of security centres and execution sites, the targeting of specific groups and the regulation of marriage are crimes against humanity, thus allegedly forming part of a widespread and systematic attack against the civilian population carried out throughout the DK era and in all regions of Cambodia.<sup>697</sup> In addition, the Closing Order considers the crimes associated with the S-21 Security Centre and the Au Kanseng Security Centre, committed against Vietnamese detainees, to be grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, thus allegedly committed in the course of, and closely related to, the international armed conflict with Vietnam.<sup>698</sup> The Chamber therefore considers it necessary to address briefly both the factual allegations charged as crimes against humanity and grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 in Case 002/02 and the allegations concerning the larger context, including the existence of an international armed conflict, in which these crimes were allegedly committed.

4.1. Factual Overview of the Temporal Scope of Case 002/02 (including the Nature of the Armed Conflict)

276. The Chamber finds that between 17 April 1975 and 6 January 1979, the temporal period at issue in Case 002/02, the CPK reinforced and consolidated power over DK and its population through the dismantling of the judiciary, the legislature and other organs of state of the previous regime and the parallel construction of institutions and structures under the CPK's exclusive control.<sup>699</sup> As a result of the Party's plans and policies aimed at building its version of socialism,<sup>700</sup> the Cambodian population's fate was in the hands of the CPK as they were forcibly moved, put to work and made to live their lives in accordance with the CPK's goals. In particular, during the DK period, the CPK forcibly transferred the population from cities and towns throughout Cambodia to rural areas and between these rural areas in order to neutralise enemies, both internal and external, and to avert the threat of rebellion; to eliminate and temper the capitalist and feudal classes; and to build and expand cooperatives.<sup>701</sup>

<sup>702</sup> There are no precise figures as to the total number of people who were transferred from Phnom Penh to the countryside on an allegedly temporary basis from 17 April 1975. The Chamber recalls its finding that inherent uncertainty exists surrounding the use of demographic evidence in the absence of reliable statistical data (see Decision on Witnesses, Civil Parties and Experts Proposed to be Heard in Case 002/02, E459, 18 July 2017, para. 191; Decision on NUON Chea's Request to Summons Patrick Heuveline and to Admit Two Related Documents, E444/1, 6 December 2016, para. 22). Although inconclusive as to the number of evacuees who were finally moved, NUON Chea testified that prior to the evacuation of Phnom Penh the Zone Committee discussed how the Northwest Zone could receive 1.4 million evacuees, the Southwest Zone could take in more people, and the other zones could take in only limited numbers of Phnom Penh residents. See T. 13 December 2011 (Accused NUON Chea), E1/21.1, pp. 30-31 (English), p. 19 (Khmer). The Chamber further considered the following to conclude that people were moved out of Phnom Penh on a large scale. See T. 26 July 2012 (ROCHOEM Ton alias PHY Phuon), E1/97.1, pp. 58-60 (stating that as at 19 April there were only a handful of people remaining in Phnom Penh); French Ministry of Foreign Affairs Telegram: Subject Situation in Phnom Penh, E3/2703, 19 April 1975, ERN (En) 00488013 (reporting that the total evacuation of Phnom Penh appeared to be nearing completion); French Ministry of Foreign Affairs Telegram: Subject Request for Immediate General Evacuation, E3/2701, 20 April 1975, ERN (En) 00488012 (reporting that "the capital is now entirely empty of its inhabitants"); T. 5 November 2012 (SUM Chea), E1/140.1, pp. 16 ("It took us around five to six days, and the city was empty."), 29 ("It took us five days before the whole population of Phnom Penh was evacuated."), 57 ("After five days, the city was emptied"); T. 8 April 2013 (CHHAOM Se), E1/177.1, pp. 35-37 ("it took us seven days before the whole population was removed from the city"); T. 25 October 2012 (KUNG Kim), E1/139.1, p. 11 (stating that after a week's time, the chaos lessened; in one month's time there were only pockets of remaining soldiers or civilians on upper-level floors of concrete houses); T. 20 May 2013 (IENG Phan), E1/193.1, pp. 41, 46-47 (stating that as a Khmer Rouge soldier, he was authorised to enter Phnom Penh about two to three weeks after the evacuation and he found the city quiet and only Khmer Rouge soldiers there); T. 9 April 2013 (François PONCHAUD), E1/178.1, pp. 21, 25 ("At around 6 p.m. [on 17 April 1975], I did not see any people in Phnom Penh."); T. 6 June 2013 (Sydney SCHANBERG), E1/202.1, pp. 21-22 citing Book by S. From 1970-1975, there was an influx of refugees from the countryside into Phnom Penh, reportedly increasing the city's population from around 0.5 million in 1970-1971 to an estimated 2 to 2.5 million in April 1975. See T. 23 July 2012 (David CHANDLER), E1/94.1, pp. 45-47; T. 9 April 2013 (François PONCHAUD), E1/178.1, p. 16; T. 11 April 2013 (François PONCHAUD), E1/180.1, pp. 26-27, 40; T. 29 January 2013 (Al ROCKOFF), E1/166.1, pp. 6-7, 46-47; U.S. State Department Telegram, E3/4185, 10 July 1974, ERN (En) 00377045-00377047 (reporting on the displacement of 14,300 refugees from insurgent controlled areas to government positions along Route 1 and at Neak Loeung); T. 13 December 2012 (Denise AFFONÇO), E1/153.1, pp. 75-76 ("every day crowds of refugees arrived in Phnom Penh, and in the city then there were about 2 million inhabitants. The Chamber is further satisfied that beginning in September 1975 and continuing throughout 1977, large numbers of civilians were forcibly transferred to Battambang and Pursat provinces, while others were forcibly relocated within regions depending on seasonal labour requirements and to advance class struggle.<sup>715</sup> The Chamber notes that the Closing Order also charges that forcible displacement continued throughout 1978.<sup>716</sup> However, the Chamber excluded this third phase of movement of population from Case 002/02,<sup>717</sup> and terminated the proceedings concerning all facts set out in the Closing Order not included in Case 002/01 or Case 002/02.<sup>718</sup>

279. The Chamber finds that during the DK period, markets were non-existent, the use of currency had been abandoned, private ownership had been eliminated, and cooperatives and worksites were operational throughout the country in order to control the population and wage class struggle.<sup>719</sup> People were forced to live and work communally at cooperatives and worksites, where they were subjected to mistreatment, harsh conditions, disappearances and killings.<sup>720</sup> The CPK's collectivist approach aimed at waging class struggle also encompassed family matters such as marriage, as the CPK considered this crucial to building a new society which would accord with the ideological standards of its socialist revolution.<sup>721</sup> As explained in other parts of this Judgement, the Party's policy to regulate family-building and marriage in an attempt to control the people and increase DK's population resulted in a nationwide system, implemented by the CPK's entire administrative network of zone, sector, district and local-level secretaries, CPK cadres and RAK forces, which involved widespread forced marriage and rape.<sup>722</sup>

280. Meanwhile, according to the Closing Order, at all times between April 1975 and at least 7 January 1979, when the RAK was forced to flee Phnom Penh, a state of armed conflict existed between Democratic Kampuchea ("DK") and the Socialist Republic of Vietnam ("SRV" or "Vietnam").<sup>723</sup> The Closing Order states that, although the existence of the armed conflict was not officially recognised until 31 December 1977, on which day DK severed diplomatic ties with SRV, the two states were engaging in armed hostilities throughout the DK period.<sup>724</sup> The Closing Order further indicates that despite some lulls in the fighting, particularly prior to 1977, at no point had a general conclusion of peace been reached, such that the international armed conflict would cease to exist.<sup>725</sup>

281. The existence of an international armed conflict between DK and Vietnam from May 1975 to at least 6 January 1979 is uncontested by the Parties.<sup>726</sup>

282. Clashes between DK forces and Vietnamese forces around the islands, whose territory was in dispute between Cambodia and Vietnam, off the countries' coasts, as well as skirmishes in multiple areas of the border region, are reported to have occurred shortly after 17 April 1975.<sup>727</sup> However, the evidence heard by the Chamber reveals conflicting accounts regarding these clashes in the second quarter of 1975. Vietnamese public sources state that DK forces seized the islands historically known as Koh Tral, currently Phu Quoc, and Koh Krachak Ses, currently Tho Chu, in May 1975, abducting over 500 Vietnamese inhabitants from the latter in the process, and claim that DK forces also made forays into Vietnam in the border region from Ha Tien to Tay Ninh.<sup>728</sup> Vietnam is then alleged to have retaliated by recapturing Phu Quoc and Tho Chu, taking around 300 prisoners, and subsequently seizing the Cambodian islands of Poulo Wai in early June 1975.<sup>729</sup> While this order of events is not supported by eyewitness testimony heard by this Chamber or contemporaneous internal DK documents,<sup>730</sup> it is subscribed <sup>727</sup> It is relevant in this regard to note that Saigon fell two weeks after Phnom Penh was captured by the Khmer Rouge: North Vietnam captured Saigon on 30 April 1975. See e.g., Sihanouk Congratulates DRV Leaders on Liberation of Saigon (in FBIS collection), E3/1364, 1 May 1975, p. 1, ERN (En) 00167026; News from Democratic Kampuchea (Ministry for Foreign Affairs of the GDR), E3/541, ERN (En) 01223565, 01223577, 01223579, 01223582; Book by N. Chanda: Brother Enemy: The War after the War, E3/2376, 1986, pp. 1-2, ERN (En) 00192186-00192187. The Chamber also notes that the Socialist Republic of Vietnam did not officially exist until 2 July 1976, when North and South Vietnam were formally reunified and the Provisional Revolutionary Government of the Republic of South Vietnam (PRG) and the Democratic Republic of Vietnam (DRV, i.e. North Vietnam) governments were renamed the “Socialist Republic of Vietnam”. See e.g., NUON Chea Sends Message to Chairman Truong Chinh (in FBIS collection), E3/278, 2 July 1976, ERN (En) 00167866; Commentary on Friendship, Solidarity with SRV (in FBIS collection), E3/278, 7 July 1976, ERN (En) 00167866-00167867; Book by N. Chanda: Brother Enemy: The War after the War, E3/2376, 1986, p. 35, ERN (En) 00192220. The Closing Order’s reference to Vietnam’s ruling government as the “Socialist Republic of Vietnam” between 17 April 1975 and 2 July 1976 is thus formally incorrect. However, the Chamber finds the Closing Order’s apparent mistake to be a non-consequential one. Nevertheless, the Chamber will refer to the country as “Vietnam” and not as “SRV” when discussing events that occurred between 17 April 1975 and 2 July 1976.

<sup>730</sup> The Chamber notes, however, that shortly before DK established diplomatic relations with Italy in June 1976, the members of the Standing Committee discussed during their 17 May 1976 meeting whether they should send a correspondence letter to Italy, but they found that it would be better “to make oral responses with a short reference indicating that Koh Krachak Ses island, also known as Polo Pang Zang does not belong to us but to Viet Nam”. An oral response was found preferable because, according to the minutes the Standing Committee meeting, “[i]f we make a written response and if Italy attempts to instigate it would bring the letter to show Viet Nam making us trouble. Thus, make no writings.” See Standing Committee Minutes, E3/223, 17 May 1976, p. 6, ERN (En) 00182713; Diplomatic Relations Established with Italy (in FBIS collection), E3/277, 25 June 1976, ERN (En) 00167910.

to by a significant number of scholars.<sup>731</sup> Conversely, DK public sources state that the Vietnam attacked the islands of Poulo Wai immediately after 17 April 1975 or in May 1975, denying that DK forces had first seized Phu Quoc and Tho Chu, and accused Vietnam of making forays into Cambodia's Mondulhiri and Ratanakiri provinces in May 1975.<sup>732</sup> While the Chamber is cautious as to the weight to be attached to both DK and Vietnamese public propaganda sources,<sup>733</sup> it is satisfied that from the common elements of these conflicting narratives it follows that armed clashes commenced around the islands in the territorial waters of Cambodia and Vietnam as well as in various locations along the border in May 1975 at the earliest, and that Vietnamese troops occupied the Poulo Wai islands in early June 1975 at the latest.<sup>734</sup> The latter is

The testimony of PRUM Sarat supports this version of events to a certain degree, but the Chamber approaches this evidence with caution because it is hearsay evidence. See T. 27 January 2016 (PRUM Sarat), E1/383.1, pp. 58-59 (PRUM Sarat confirms the Vietnamese took the Poulo Wai islands, but his testimony on these matters is confused, and moreover, hearsay evidence. The Chamber notes that on 12 May 1975, the DK Navy captured the US merchant vessel Mayaguez. While this event caused a military incident between the USA and DK, it does not seem to have any relation to the armed conflict between Vietnam and DK. as well as by Ben KIERNAN's interviews with HENG Samrin,<sup>749</sup> CHEA Sim<sup>750</sup> and OUK Bunchhoeun.<sup>751</sup> On 24 September 1977, DK troops allegedly made their second large-scale incursion into Vietnam, equally stated by experts and corroborated by Vietnamese public sources and Ben KIERNAN's interviews.<sup>752</sup> The assessment of the accuracy and the seriousness of the reported acts of aggression is hampered by a lack of transparent and independent sources of information.<sup>753</sup> The evidence concerning the occurrence of these incursions is often based on experts' and other academics' studies, which at times include public propaganda sources sometimes published years after the fact, and non-contemporaneous interviews, often constituting hearsay evidence.<sup>754</sup> The Chamber has not found contemporaneous internal DK documents, and especially military documents, which would support the occurrence of large-scale incursions into Vietnam specifically in April or September 1977. Moreover, the statements made by witnesses on these issues are contrasting. IENG Phan, a battalion commander from the Southwest Zone later relocated to the East Zone who was involved in the purge of the East Zone, denied that DK forces made any incursions into Vietnam in April 1977.<sup>755</sup>

<sup>749</sup> HENG Samrin Interview by Ben KIERNAN, E3/1568, 2 December 1991, ERN (En) 00651886 (saying that before POL Pot gave the official order to attack Vietnam on 30 September 1977, DK had already attacked Vietnam in the southwest).

<sup>753</sup> The Chamber further recalls that the Co-Investigating Judges received very little support from the Vietnamese authorities to investigate the events that occurred on Vietnamese territory (see Closing Order, paras 833-835). This obviously has an impact on the evidence discussed here.

<sup>755</sup> T. 31 October 2016 (IENG Phan), E1/492.1, pp. 17-19 (describing a tug of war situation between DK and SRV troops, with heavy fighting mid-1977, adding that they could only push SRV troops back to the border), 98-100 (testifying that there were no large-scale attacks by DK in 1977 and DK did not make incursions into Vietnam – they were told by the upper echelon that as a small country they could not take on Vietnam). See also, T. 25 October 2016 (CHUON Thy), E1/489.1, pp. 87-88 (in relation to the situation in Svay Rieng in 1978, the witness testified that they would only attack Vietnamese forces when they crossed the border and entered Cambodian territory); T. 13 December 2016 (MAK Chhoeun), E1/512.1, p. 21 (stating in general terms that DK's policy, being a small country with a small population, was to not invade another country).

Other witnesses who were heard by OCIJ investigators stated that they were involved in fights on Vietnamese territory. When these fights occurred is not always clear, but it seems that at least part of them concerned the second half of 1978.<sup>756</sup>

286. Regarding the alleged large-scale incursions in April and September 1977, the Chamber also considers several telegrams which were sent by Chhean, the DK Ambassador in Hanoi, to the Party Centre, including POL Pot, NUON Chea, IENG Sary, VORN Vet and SON Sen. These telegrams report that Vietnam made serious complaints of acts of aggression committed by DK armed forces on Vietnamese territory.<sup>757</sup> These official complaints were addressed to DK authorities and were not meant to be disclosed to the public. Thus, there is no reason to believe that the events were described for propaganda purposes. However, considering only the facts denounced officially, not the rumours also reported in some telegrams, the events

They threw grenades, and burned houses, military hospitals, ammunition storages and saw mills. They also captured Vietnamese men and women who were sent to the rear battlefield in Cambodian territory); KUNG Kim Interview Record, E3/3959, 9 January 2009, p. 7, ERN (En) 00278686 (stating that in early 1977 he was sent into Vietnam and for about half month he was involved in fights at Phsar Kradas, a district town in Vietnam located adjacent to Kampuchea's Krek district. "During that time, I received successive orders to shoot and kill them right away, even if they raised their arms and to burn and destroy the houses and buildings both civilian and military. In that fighting a total of approximately 70 percent of the Khmer Rouge soldiers were killed as for the Vietnamese soldiers and people hundreds were probably killed and the houses of the Vietnamese people were burned."). <sup>757</sup> DK Telegram, E3/878, 17 June 1977, ERN (En) 01347938-01347939 (Chhean, DK Ambassador in Hanoi, reported that, according to Vietnamese authorities, "[o]n 14 June 1977 starting from 8 p.m., a company unit of our army invaded approximately 40 kilometers [sic] into their border from Sasie to Doem Chit in Ha Tien. They said our force armed with 105 mm attacked fiercely on their security posts, killed people, burn houses and caused a huge damage [...]. They said the situation was serious. More importantly, the incident took place after the Vietnamese Central Party and Government had issued an invitation letter to invite the Cambodian Party and Government for a meeting to discuss for a solution. They emphasized that the attack did not happen by accident."). DK Telegram, E3/880, 24 July 1977, ERN (En) 00182767 (Chhean reported to the Party Centre that, according to Vietnamese authorities, "on 16-17-18 July, Cambodia armed forces launched hundreds of mortar-105mm onto the area with crowd of people in An Yang [An Giang] Province. It destroyed mainly people as well as materials. From 16 to 17 July there were 30 people dead and 50 people injured, and a large number of houses burnt." The same telegram mentions that "[a]gain Vietnam requested Cambodia to cease such invasion otherwise Cambodia has to be responsible for this. Vietnam absolutely respects Cambodia's sovereignty and also defends lives of its [Vietnamese] people." Further the same telegram reports that "[o]nce again, Vietnam wants to clarify that Vietnam still wants to meet Cambodia to cease the bloodshed and maintain solidarity of both parties." There is also a reference to another "event in Ha Tieng (Ha Tien)" and a question raised concerning the fate of "An Yang province people who were arrested by [Cambodian] armed forces"). DK Telegram, E3/884, 30 August 1977, ERN (En) 00182762-00182765 (reporting that since early August 1977, the "Kampuchean Army has invaded such provinces as An Yang, Hien Yang, Long An and Tay Ninh, subsequently. Aircraft had been used to violate the airs, waters, and forces had been assigned to spy in Vietnamese territory." It also describes a battle on 21 August 1977 which included the killing of villagers and the burning of houses).

287. The Chamber is convinced that both belligerents made several incursions in each other's territories, but it is not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that DK made the large-scale incursions into the SRV in April and September 1977 as denounced in public official statements made by Vietnamese authorities. It notes in this regard that accusations back and forth regarding who invaded whose territory (first and/or when) – similar to the conflicting narratives clouding the establishment of the exact order of events around the islands in the months after 17 April 1975 – are commonplace between DK and Vietnam during the DK period.<sup>758</sup>

288. In any event, while discussions on the occurrence of these specific incursions may be relevant to understand the exact extent of the military operations in which both parties were engaged and how precisely the hostilities escalated, they are immaterial to any finding regarding the very existence of an armed conflict.<sup>759</sup> Regardless of the ambiguities surrounding the two alleged large-scale DK incursions in April and September 1977, numerous contemporaneous internal DK documents chronicle the constant fighting in the border provinces between DK and the SRV as well as smaller incursions back and forth throughout 1977.<sup>760</sup> The continuation of the armed conflict

<sup>758</sup> This is not only apparent from the public propaganda sources such as public statements and reports from the respective Ministries of Foreign Affairs referred to above, such back and forth allegations are also recorded in a number of DK telegrams. See e.g., DK Fax, E3/878, 15 June 1977, ERN (En) 01347938-01347939 (Chhean reporting that Vietnamese commander Sun had called him to accuse DK of attacking on Vietnamese territory); DK Telegram, E3/880, 24 July 1977, ERN (En) 00182767-00182768 (reporting that the same Sun had sent Chhean a letter on 20 July 1977 containing similar allegations); DK Telegram, E3/882, 12 August 1977, ERN (En) 01313132-01313135 (noting that news was circulated among ambassadors in Hanoi that, inter alia, Cambodian troops had killed 1,000 Vietnamese in Ha Tien, Kien Giang province and that Cambodian troops had launched attacks to reclaim Cambodian islands owned and occupied by Vietnam. The telegram warned that Vietnam was using tricks to slander Cambodia and advancing its aggression towards Cambodia to gain power in the region and in general); DK Telegram, E3/884, 30 August 1977, ERN (En) 00182762-00182764 (CHHEAN reporting on more allegations made by Sun and a meeting the two men had to discuss these allegations, during which neither budged); DK Telegram, E3/981, undated, ERN (En) 00314585 (reporting that the Vietnamese reiterated that in September 1977 DK troops invaded into Tay Ninh, massacring and killing more than 1,000 people, and that troops were deployed five to six kilometre deep onto Vietnamese soil in Bien Hao, Ca Thum and Thanh Binh districts).

<sup>771</sup> The Chamber finds that SAO Phim used the alias "Chhon". In this regard, it has considered the telegrams (in Khmer) on the Case File signed by "Chhon" that reported from the East Zone (e.g. E3/879 [E3/789]; E3/1680; E3/871; E3/1023; E3/855; E3/886; E3/888; E3/8369; E3/889; E3/554; E3/890; E3/891; E3/892; E3/977; E3/894; E3/895; E3/896; E3/980; E3/982; E3/987; E3/983; E3/8370; E3/899; E3/900; E3/901; E3/1015; E3/8372; E3/907; E3/920; E3/243; E3/244; E3/921; E3/922; E3/871) and compared them to the telegrams on the Case File signed by SAO Phim, "Phim", "Phoem" or "Peam" equally reporting from the East Zone (e.g. E3/1036; E3/999; E3/1064). All these telegrams were sent by someone at the highest level of the East Zone hierarchy and are similar in subject-matter. As the Chamber finds below in the relevant section of this Judgement, SAO Phim held such a position. Moreover, after SAO Phim's suicide in June 1978, there are no more telegrams signed by "Chhon". The Chamber thus finds that the only reasonable inference is that "Chhon" was an alias used by SAO Phim. See also, Book by S. Heder: Seven Candidates for Prosecution: Accountability for the Crimes of the Khmer Rouge, E3/48, March 2004, p. 36, ERN (En) 00393522 (footnote 119); Written Record of Analysis by Craig C. The Chamber is aware that Witness LONG Sat testified that SAO Phim was not known as "Chhon" (see T. 2 November 2016 (LONG Sat), E1/494.1, p. 97). However, considering the evidence supporting the conclusion that SAO Phim used the alias "Chhon", the Chamber disregards LONG Sat's evidence in this regard as not credible. 292. Rumours of a coup d'état attempt peaked around 25 May 1978, with different sources pointing to different alleged culprits.<sup>780</sup> For instance, DK's "Black Paper", published by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in September 1978, asserted that the coup d'état attempt in the East Zone in May 1978 was staged by the Vietnamese after several secret meetings had been held in Kampong Cham and Svay Rieng provinces with East Zone leaders earlier in 1978.<sup>781</sup> However, as detailed further in the section of this Judgement dealing with Internal Factions (Section 12.1), there is no reliable evidence which proves East Zone Secretary SAO Phim's involvement in the alleged meetings or a lack of loyalty of the majority of East Zone cadres. In fact, others accused POL Pot and/or SON Sen of attempting a coup d'état on 25 May 1978. For instance, LONG Sat, a distant relative of SAO Phim and a medic in Regiment 156, Division 4 commanded by HENG Samrin in the East Zone,<sup>782</sup> testified that he considered POL Pot to have been a traitor who had sent Central Zone forces to purge the East Zone.<sup>783</sup> HENG Samrin, CHEA Sim and OUK Bunchhoeun have echoed the same sentiment.<sup>784</sup> In any event,

294. The Chamber finds that the existence of an armed conflict with Vietnam is also evident from the presence of Vietnamese prisoners at the S-21 Security Centre as early as March 1976.<sup>791</sup> S-21 was part of a nationwide network of security centres and execution sites, a vast system which the CPK had begun setting up prior to 17 April 1975 to identify and eliminate enemies of the Party, both outside and within its ranks.<sup>792</sup> As established elsewhere in this Judgement, during the indictment period, there existed at least 200 operating security centres and executions sites across DK.<sup>793</sup> The CPK constitutionally legitimised the system by which enemies were condemned to detention in security centres – and frequently to death at nearby execution sites – and implemented this system by official Party decree.<sup>794</sup> As demonstrated in other parts of this Judgement, at these locations, prisoners were subjected to inhumane treatment and torture, often followed by summary executions without due process of law.<sup>795</sup>

295. The Chamber finds that the CPK devoted much time and effort to identifying enemies and enemy behaviour, both among the civilian population of Cambodia and within its own ranks.<sup>796</sup> To this end and throughout the temporal scope of Case 002/02, the CPK continuously stratified the DK population into classes and categorised different kinds of potential threats. Any person or entity not adhering to or threatening the CPK's Party line, i.e. the Marxist-Leninist notion of communist revolution through armed struggle, could be branded an enemy.<sup>797</sup> Such enemies were targeted for isolation and re-education, and those who could not be re-educated were targeted for elimination.<sup>798</sup> In addition, during the DK period, policies existed to target specific groups of enemies – the Cham; the Vietnamese; Buddhists; and former Khmer Republic officials – for arrest, detention, mistreatment and/or execution.<sup>799</sup>

296. The Chamber is satisfied that alongside the ongoing international armed conflict with Vietnam, throughout the DK period, the civilian population was subjected to widespread killings, torture, rape, physical violence, forced marriages, forced labour, disappearances and other types of inhumane treatment, some of which was carried out on discriminatory grounds. During the DK era, hundreds of thousands of Cambodians victimised by the CPK's regime sought refuge in Thailand and Vietnam.<sup>800</sup>

4.2. Chapeau Requirements for Crimes Against Humanity Listed in Article 5 of the ECCC Law

298. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused pursuant to Article 5 of the ECCC Law with the following crimes against humanity “committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, on national, political, ethnical, racial or religious grounds”: (i) murder; (ii) extermination; (iii) enslavement; (iv) deportation; (v) imprisonment; (vi) torture; (vii) persecution on political, racial and religious grounds; and (viii) other inhumane acts through: (a) attacks against human dignity; and conduct characterised as (b) rape; (c) forced marriage; (d) forced transfer; and (e) enforced disappearances.<sup>805</sup>

4.2.1. Law

4.2.1.1. Principle of legality

299. The KHIEU Samphan Defence makes a number of submissions related to the approach taken by the Supreme Court Chamber in Case 002/01 with respect to the principle of legality. While many of these submissions are made in the context of crimes against humanity, they raise issues pertaining more generally to the principle of legality and accordingly are addressed above in the Preliminary Issues section.<sup>806</sup> Submissions pertaining to a specific crime are addressed in the applicable law section for that crime.

300. The Chamber reiterates its previous finding, affirmed by the Supreme Court Chamber, that crimes against humanity have been established international crimes since the Nuremberg Charter and formed part of customary international law during the period of the ECCC’s temporal jurisdiction.<sup>807</sup> This remains uncontested by the parties in this case. Therefore, charges of crimes against humanity pursuant to Article 5 of the ECCC Law generally accord with the principle of legality,<sup>808</sup> subject to an assessment of the precise definition of the various elements of these crimes and to an additional finding that charged offences or modes of responsibility were “sufficiently foreseeable and that the law providing for such liability [was] sufficiently accessible [...] at the relevant time”.<sup>809</sup>

4.2.1.2. Chapeau elements of crimes against humanity

301. Offences listed in Article 5 of the ECCC Law constitute crimes against humanity only if the following contextual or chapeau requirements are established: (i) there is an attack; (ii) that is widespread or systematic; (iii) and directed against any civilian population; (iv) on national, political, ethnical, racial or religious grounds; (v) there is a nexus between the acts of the direct perpetrator and accused and the attack; and (vi) the accused has the requisite knowledge.<sup>810</sup> As previously held by this Chamber and affirmed by the Supreme Court Chamber, the definition of crimes against humanity under customary international law by 1975 did not require a nexus to an armed conflict.<sup>811</sup>

302. Attack – An attack is a course of conduct involving the commission of a series of acts of violence.<sup>812</sup> It is not limited to the use of armed force, encompassing any mistreatment of the civilian population including that reflected by the underlying offences in Article 5 of the ECCC law.<sup>813</sup> An attack on a civilian population is a separate concept from that of an armed conflict.<sup>814</sup> An attack may precede, outlast or continue through an armed conflict, without necessarily being part of it.<sup>815</sup>

303. Widespread or systematic – The term “widespread” refers to the large-scale nature of the attack and the number of victims, while the term “systematic” refers to the organised nature of the acts of violence and the improbability of their random occurrence.<sup>816</sup> A systematic attack is commonly expressed as a pattern of crimes involving the non-accidental repetition of similar criminal conduct on a regular basis.<sup>817</sup> A widespread attack may refer either to the “cumulative effect of a series of inhumane acts or the singular effect of an inhumane act of extraordinary magnitude”.<sup>818</sup> Proof that the attack was either “widespread” or “systematic” is sufficient to satisfy the chapeau requirement of crimes against humanity.<sup>819</sup> Only the attack, not the individual acts for which the accused is responsible, must be widespread or systematic.<sup>820</sup> A single act or a limited number of acts can qualify as a crime against humanity provided that they are not isolated or random and all other conditions are met.<sup>821</sup>

304. While the existence of a State or organisational plan or policy may evidentially be relevant in establishing the widespread or systematic nature of the attack, by 1975, the existence of such a plan or policy had not crystallised as an independent contextual element of the definition of crimes against humanity.<sup>822</sup>

of the relevant geographical entity was subject to the attack.<sup>824</sup> It is sufficient that enough individuals were targeted in the course of the attack or that they were targeted in such a way as to satisfy the Chamber that the attack was in fact directed against a civilian “population”, rather than against a limited and randomly selected number of individuals.<sup>825</sup> Further, the reference to “any” civilian population does not require a demonstration that victims were linked to a particular group.<sup>826</sup> Crimes against humanity may include a state’s attack on its own population.<sup>827</sup>

306. In determining whether a population may be considered to be “civilian”, the Chamber notes that, while this concept existed at that time, there was no established definition of civilian under customary international law in April 1975. For the purposes of defining civilian population, the Chamber therefore refers to the ordinary meaning of the term “civilian” (in English) and “civil” (in French), which encompasses persons who are not members of the armed forces. On this basis, the Chamber holds that at the time relevant to the charges here at issue, the civilian population included all persons who were not members of the armed forces or otherwise recognised as combatants. While the Chamber does not here rely on the definition of “civilian” set out in Article 50 of Additional Protocol I to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, adopted by the ad hoc Tribunals as reflecting customary international law for the purposes of crimes against humanity post-1977,<sup>828</sup> it notes that this accords with the ordinary meaning of the term.<sup>829</sup>

307. Contrary to the position adopted by this Chamber and the Supreme Court Chamber, the Co-Prosecutors submit that the notion of “civilian”, in the context of a civilian population, includes members of the enemy armed forces who have laid down their arms or been placed hors de combat.<sup>830</sup> In support of this proposition, the Co-Prosecutors refer to a line of jurisprudence from the ad hoc Tribunals that appears to stem from a finding originally set out in the Akayesu Trial Judgement. In that case, the Trial Chamber “assimilate[d] the definition of ‘civilian’ to the categories of person protected by Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions”,<sup>831</sup> effectively conflating the definition of “civilian population” for the purposes of crimes against humanity with that of “protected person” in non-international armed conflict; a concept applicable within the context of international humanitarian law. The Trial Chamber does not consider that this approach accurately reflects the state of customary international law with respect to the definition of “civilian population” by 1975. It recalls that in determining the civilian or non-civilian status of a person, the specific situation of the individual at the time of the crimes may not be determinative. A member of an armed organisation is not accorded civilian status by reason of the fact that he or she is not armed or in combat at the time of the commission of the crimes.<sup>832</sup> Accordingly, soldiers hors de combat do not qualify as “civilians” for the purposes of Article 5 of the ECCC Law,<sup>833</sup> and the Co-Prosecutors’ submission in this regard is rejected.

308. The Lead Co-Lawyers submit that, in case of an attack conducted by a State or an organisation against its own population, the meaning of “civilian population” in 1975 encompassed the state or organisation’s own armed forces, unless those forces were allied with or otherwise providing militarily relevant support to an opposing side in the conflict.<sup>834</sup> The Co-Prosecutors agree that a state or organisation’s own armed forces qualify as civilians for the purposes of crimes against humanity.<sup>835</sup> The NUON Chea Defence appears to agree that where members of a state’s own armed forces were allied with or providing militarily relevant support to an opposing side during an armed conflict, they did not fall within the definition of a “civilian population” for the purposes of crimes against humanity.<sup>836</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence did not make any relevant submissions in this regard. These submissions rely on a decision of the International Co-Investigating Judge in Case 003 finding that an attack by a State or organisation against its own armed forces amounted to an attack against a civilian population where those forces were not in fact allied with or otherwise providing militarily relevant support to the opposing side.<sup>837</sup>

309. The Chamber is not persuaded that as of 1975 it was accepted under customary international law that an attack by a State or organisation against its own armed forces could amount to an attack against a civilian population. The Chamber has already determined above that a member of an armed organisation is not accorded civilian status by reason of the fact that he or she is not armed or in combat at the time of the commission of the crimes.<sup>838</sup> While this observation was made in the context of soldiers of an opposing party to the conflict, the Chamber considers this to be equally applicable to soldiers belonging to a state or organisation's own armed forces. Beyond reference to the decision of the International Co-Investigating Judge, none of the Parties' submissions in this regard have identified a sound basis under customary international law for a finding to the contrary. Further, while an interpretation of the protections afforded by crimes against humanity to include domestic armed forces may be considered desirable, it is not clear that a legal framework affording such protection was either foreseeable or accessible by 1975.

310. The Chamber considers that, in any event, a decision on this point of law does not necessarily impact the outcome of the case for the following reasons. The Chamber recalls that in order to qualify as a "civilian population" for the purposes of Article 5 of the ECCC Law, the target population must be of a predominantly civilian nature,<sup>839</sup> and the presence within the civilian population of individuals who do not come within the definition of civilian does not necessarily deprive the population of its civilian character.<sup>840</sup> Where an attack is carried out in a geographical area that contains both civilians and soldiers, various factors may be relevant to determining whether the attack was directed at a “civilian population”. These include the means and method used in the course of the attack, the discriminatory nature of the attack, the nature of the crimes committed in its course, and the resistance to the assailants at the time and the extent to which the attacking force may be said to have complied or attempted to comply with the precautionary requirements of the laws of war.<sup>841</sup> Further, the civilian status of the victims, the number of civilians, and the proportion of civilians within a population are factors relevant to the determination of whether the requirement that an attack be directed against a “civilian population” is fulfilled.<sup>842</sup>

311. Where it is found that the alleged attack is directed against the civilian population of an entire country, consideration of the nature of the population subject to the attack should encompass the country as a whole rather than be conducted for each crime site separately. In the current case, the Closing Order alleges that the policy implemented by the DK authorities consisted of a single, widespread and systematic attack “against the entire civilian population of Cambodia”.<sup>843</sup> Accordingly, if this allegation is found well grounded, the Chamber will consider it appropriate to make a single determination of the nature of the target population for the country as a whole, including on the proportion of DK’s own armed forces to the total population subject to any attack, and on whether this proportion is of such importance to deprive the population of its civilian status. This assessment is carried out below.<sup>844</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that for the purposes of crimes against humanity the victims of the underlying crimes must be civilians.<sup>845</sup> By way of example, it submits that S-21 and Au Kanseng were military institutions in which the vast majority of the detainees were from the RAK and that therefore the detainees could not be victims of crimes against humanity.<sup>846</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submit that where it has been established that a widespread or systematic attack on a civilian population has taken place, it is not necessary to show that individual victims were themselves civilians.<sup>847</sup> No other Party made any relevant submissions in this regard.

<sup>840</sup> Case 002/01, Appeal Judgement, para. 738-740; Case 002/01 Trial Judgement, para. 183; Case 001 Trial Judgement, paras 305-306, relying on Article 50(3) of the Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts; Mrkšić and Šljivančanin Appeal Judgement, para. 31. See also, Galić Appeal Judgement, paras 136-138. <sup>843</sup> Closing Order, paras 1350-1351.

312. The Chamber notes that the cases relied upon by the NUON Chea Defence do not support the view that victims of crimes against humanity must be civilians. Instead they appear to relate to identifying the protected status of victims for the purposes of the Geneva Conventions. Furthermore, this proposition is inconsistent with the state of customary international law as at 1975. The Chamber recalls that where the civilian population is the object of an attack, “there is no requirement nor is it an element of crimes against humanity that the victims of the underlying crimes be civilians”.<sup>848</sup> Thus, a soldier who is hors de combat may be the victim of an act amounting to a crime against humanity, provided that all other necessary conditions are met.<sup>849</sup>

313. National, political, ethnical, racial or religious grounds – Article 5 of the ECCC Law requires that the attack must have been carried out against the civilian population on a discriminatory basis, namely on national, political, ethnical, racial or religious grounds. This is a jurisdictional requirement that narrows the scope of the ECCC’s jurisdiction over crimes against humanity when compared with customary international law applying between 1975 and 1979.<sup>850</sup> The requirement qualifies the nature of the attack rather than the individual underlying offences, and consequently does not import a discriminatory intent as a legal ingredient for all underlying crimes against humanity, as this would otherwise render redundant the express reference to discrimination within the offence of persecution in Article 5 of the ECCC Law.<sup>851</sup>

314. Jurisprudence concerning the crime of persecution defines an act as discriminatory when a victim is targeted because of his or her membership, or imputed membership, in a political, racial or religious group defined by the perpetrator.<sup>852</sup> The targeted group “may be defined broadly by the perpetrator such that they are characterised in negative terms and include close affiliates or sympathisers”.<sup>853</sup> This approach is equally applicable to defining a discernible group targeted by an attack.<sup>854</sup>

315. Nexus between the acts of the direct perpetrator/accused and the attack – The acts of the direct perpetrator must be part of the attack, meaning that the acts in question must by their very nature or consequences be objectively part of the attack.<sup>855</sup> Furthermore, the acts of accused persons who are not direct perpetrators must also form part of the attack.<sup>856</sup> A crime that is committed before, after or away from the main attack on the civilian population could still, if sufficiently connected, be part of that attack. The crime must not, however, be an isolated act, i.e. so far removed from the attack that, having considered the context and circumstances in which it was committed, the acts cannot be said to have been part of the attack.<sup>857</sup>

316. Knowledge – The accused must have known that there is an attack on the civilian population and that his or her acts formed part of the attack.<sup>858</sup> He or she need not have known the details of the attack or have shared the purpose or goals of the attack.<sup>859</sup>

4.2.2. Legal Findings

4.2.2.1. Widespread or systematic attack against a civilian population

317. The Chamber is satisfied that, starting on 17 April 1975 and continuing until at least 6 January 1979, the temporal period at issue in Case 002/02, there was a widespread or systematic attack against the civilian population of Cambodia. The attacks took various forms, including enslavement, forced transfer, murder, extermination, enforced disappearance and persecution.<sup>861</sup> This attack victimised millions of civilians throughout Cambodia and resulted in a large number of refugees fleeing to neighbouring countries.<sup>862</sup> The attack was carried out in furtherance of, and pursuant to, Party policies and plans to build socialism and defend the country.<sup>863</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that the attack was widespread in both its geographical scope and number of victims. The Chamber also finds that the attack was systematic insofar as crimes of such scope and magnitude could not have been random and were carried out repeatedly throughout the indictment period and deliberately in furtherance of, and pursuant to, Party policies.

318. Although the attack on the Cambodian population occurred in parallel with an international armed conflict between Cambodia and Vietnam, the CPK primarily targeted its own nationals.<sup>864</sup> The Chamber thus finds that this attack was directed against the civilian population of Cambodia. After 17 April 1975, all Khmer Republic soldiers not taking a direct part in hostilities were civilians or, at minimum, hors de combat, thereby enjoying the same protections as civilians. The same applies to Vietnamese soldiers not taking a direct part in hostilities. In any event, former Khmer Republic and Vietnamese soldiers only formed part of the millions of civilians attacked.<sup>865</sup>

4.2.2.2. Discriminatory basis

319. The Chamber further finds that the attack against the civilian population was carried out on political grounds, pursuant to the plans and policies of the Party to build socialism and defend the country against internal and external enemies. In order to accomplish this goal, the Party considered that all classes other than the worker-peasant class had to be eliminated.<sup>866</sup> Other economic and social classes, such as the petty-bourgeois, the capitalists and the feudalist classes, were perceived as political and social enemies of the revolution and the collective system.<sup>867</sup> Further, all Cambodians were to be part of the revolution and the collective system.<sup>868</sup> Anyone who opposed, or was perceived to oppose, the revolution and collective system was a target for mistreatment and acts of violence.<sup>869</sup> The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the attack was carried out on political grounds.

320. The attack also targeted Buddhists on the basis of their religion;<sup>870</sup> the Cham on the basis of their ethnicity and religion;<sup>871</sup> and the Vietnamese on the basis of their ethnicity, nationality and race.<sup>872</sup> The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the attack was also carried out on national, ethnical, racial and religious grounds.

4.2.2.3. Nexus between the acts and the attack

321. The Chamber is further satisfied that there is a nexus between the acts of the direct perpetrators and the Accused and the attack. The acts of the direct perpetrators as well as of both Accused committed between 17 April 1975 and 6 January 1979 were carried out pursuant to, and in furtherance of, the CPK's goal of rapidly implementing socialist revolution in Cambodia through a "great leap forward" designed to build the country, defend it from enemies and radically transform the population into an atheistic and homogenous Khmer society of worker-peasants.<sup>873</sup> The CPK's policies in this regard – to establish and operate cooperatives and worksites throughout Cambodia;<sup>874</sup> to identify, arrest, isolate and “smash” the most serious category of enemy at security centres and execution sites, and to re-educate “bad elements”;<sup>875</sup> to target specific groups;<sup>876</sup> and to regulate marriage<sup>877</sup> – led to the systematic and widespread victimisation of Cambodians during the indictment period. Both NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan played significant roles in designing and/or implementing these policies,<sup>878</sup> thus elucidating the nexus between the attack and committed acts.

4.2.2.4. Knowledge of the Accused

322. Considering the scale and scope of the attack<sup>879</sup> and the fact that it was undertaken in furtherance of, and pursuant to, Party policies and plans,<sup>880</sup> the Chamber is satisfied that NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan knew of the attack on the civilian population. The Chamber is also satisfied that NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan, by virtue of their respective roles and functions during the DK period and their involvement in the plans and policies that comprised the attack,<sup>881</sup> knew that their acts formed part of this attack.

323. The Chamber is thus satisfied that all the chapeau requirements for the application of Article 5 of the ECCC Law are met.

4.3. General Requirements for Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 Listed in Article 6 of the ECCC Law

324. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused pursuant to Article 6 of the ECCC Law with the following grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949: (i) wilful killing; (ii) torture; (iii) inhumane treatment; (iv) wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health; (v) wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or a civilian the rights of fair and regular trial; (vi) unlawful deportation of a civilian and (vii) unlawful confinement of a civilian.<sup>882</sup>

4.3.1. Law

325. Grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions were established international crimes during the period over which the ECCC has jurisdiction.<sup>883</sup> The grave breaches provisions as well as the individual criminal responsibility attaching thereto were binding on Cambodia at the relevant time on the basis that Cambodia had ratified the four Geneva Conventions on 8 December 1958.<sup>884</sup> Further, these provisions were a codification of core principles of customary international law.<sup>885</sup> All four Geneva Conventions prohibit “grave breaches” committed against “protected” persons or property within the context of an armed conflict of an international character,<sup>886</sup> including wilful killing, torture or inhuman treatment, and wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health.<sup>887</sup> Geneva Convention III and Geneva Convention IV further prohibit the grave breaches of wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or a civilian of the rights of fair and regular trial.<sup>888</sup> Additionally, the unlawful deportation and unlawful confinement of a civilian are listed as grave breaches under Geneva Convention IV.<sup>889</sup>

326. With respect to the foreseeability and accessibility of the grave breaches charged in this case and which none of parties has challenged, the Chamber takes into account their customary status, the fact that Cambodia ratified all four Geneva Conventions on 8 December 1958, the gravity of these crimes, and the positions held by the Accused as members of Cambodia's governing authority. Having weighed these factors objectively, the Chamber concludes that it was both foreseeable and accessible in general that (i) wilful killing; (ii) torture; (iii) inhumane treatment; (iv) wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health; (v) wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or a civilian the rights of fair and regular trial; (vi) unlawful deportation of a civilian; and (vii) unlawful confinement of a civilian were punishable as grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions by 1975. Accordingly, charges of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 pursuant to Article 6 of the ECCC Law accord with the principle of legality.

327. Offences listed in Article 6 of the ECCC Law constitute grave breaches only if the following chapeau requirements are established: (i) there is an armed conflict; (ii) the armed conflict is of an international character; (iii) there exists a nexus with the armed conflict; (iv) the victims have "protected persons" status under the Geneva Conventions; and (v) the requisite knowledge.<sup>890</sup>

328. Existence of an armed conflict – Common Article 2 of the Geneva Conventions provides that the Conventions' provisions (including the grave breaches provisions), apply to "all cases of declared war or of any other armed conflict which may arise between two or more of the High Contracting Parties, even if the state of war is not recognized by one of them." An "armed conflict" exists whenever there is a resort to armed force between States (where the armed conflict is of an international nature) or protracted armed violence between governmental authorities and organised armed groups or between such groups within a State (when it is of an internal nature).<sup>891</sup>

329. International character of an armed conflict – Common Article 2 of the Geneva Conventions requires further that the armed conflict be of an international character.<sup>892</sup> An armed conflict is of an international character if it takes place between two or more States.<sup>893</sup> An official recognition of a state of war is not required for the grave breaches provisions of the Geneva Conventions to apply. Rather, de facto hostilities between States may be sufficient to satisfy the internationality requirement, where these hostilities are conducted through the States' respective armed forces.<sup>894</sup> Once it is established that an international armed conflict existed at the place and time relevant to the charges against an accused, international humanitarian law will apply to the whole territory of the relevant States, whether or not actual combat takes place there, and will continue to apply beyond the cessation of hostilities until a general conclusion of peace is achieved.<sup>895</sup>

330. Nexus between the acts of the accused and the armed conflict – A sufficient nexus must exist between the acts of the accused and the armed conflict giving rise to the applicability of international humanitarian law. To satisfy this nexus, the acts of the accused must have been “closely related” to the armed conflict as a whole.<sup>896</sup> The crimes can be “temporally and geographically remote from the actual fighting” and it would be sufficient if the crimes are closely related to hostilities occurring in other parts of the territories controlled by the parties to the conflict.<sup>897</sup> While the nexus need not be a causal link, the existence of an armed conflict must at a minimum have played a substantial part in the perpetrator's ability to commit the crime, their decision to commit it, the manner in which it was committed, or the purpose for which it was committed.<sup>898</sup>

See also, Kordić Trial Judgement, para. 32 (finding that “in order for a particular crime to qualify as a violation of international humanitarian law under Articles 2 and 3 of the Statute, the Prosecution must also establish a sufficient link between that crime and the armed conflict”).

331. Victims have a "protected persons" status – "Protected persons" are defined according to Articles 4 of Geneva Convention III (as regards prisoners of war) and Geneva Convention IV (as regards civilian persons).<sup>899</sup> Pursuant to Article 4 of Geneva Convention III, prisoners of war are persons, including "[m]embers of the armed forces of a Party to the conflict as well as members of militias or volunteer corps forming part of such armed forces", who have "fallen into the power of the enemy". Article 4(1) of Geneva Convention IV (as regards civilian persons) defines protected persons as those who find themselves "in the hands of a Party to the conflict or Occupying Power of which they are not nationals".<sup>900</sup>

332. The Co-Prosecutors submit that the definition of protected persons encompasses ethnic Vietnamese who were Cambodian nationals but viewed as enemies allied with Vietnam by the DK authorities.<sup>901</sup> No other Party makes any relevant arguments in this regard. The Chamber notes that the Closing Order expressly limits the categories of "protected persons" in Case 002 to "[m]embers of the armed forces of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam" and "[c]ivilians who were nationals of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam" who had fallen into the power of the forces of Democratic Kampuchea.<sup>902</sup> Accordingly, there is no room to consider whether Vietnamese who were Cambodian nationals but owed allegiance to Vietnam could be considered protected persons. The Co-Prosecutors' submission is therefore moot.<sup>903</sup>

<sup>899</sup> Case 001 Trial Judgement, para. 417. Articles 13, 24, 25 and 26 of Geneva Convention I and Articles 13, 36, 37 of Geneva Convention II likewise define those protected under their provisions. In the instant case, however, the Chamber is primarily concerned with Geneva Conventions III and IV as they pertain to prisoners of war and civilians.

<sup>903</sup> The Chamber does note, however, that the crucial consideration when analysing these substantive relations is the allegiance – or lack thereof – that an individual has to a party to the conflict: Case 001 Trial Judgement, para. 419; Tadić Appeals Judgement, paras 166, 168; Blaškić Appeal Judgement, paras 172-179. Civilians may thus be considered as "protected persons" for the purpose of Geneva Convention

333. The NUON Chea Defence submits that, pursuant to the First Additional Protocol to the Geneva Conventions, any member of the armed forces of a Party to the conflict who falls into the power of an adverse Party while engaging in espionage shall not have the right to the status of prisoner of war and may be treated as a spy, thus falling outside the scope of protected persons.<sup>904</sup> No other Party makes any relevant arguments in this regard. The Chamber notes that the First Additional Protocol entered into force on 7 December 1978 and that Cambodia only acceded to the protocol on 14 January 1998. Accordingly, the First Additional Protocol was not binding in Cambodia at the relevant time. Further, there is no indication that Article 46(1) of the First Additional Protocol reflected customary international law by 1975. However, given that the First Additional Protocol purports to afford greater protection to the Accused, pursuant to the principle of lex mitior, the Chamber will have regard to its provisions in this respect.<sup>905</sup>

334. The Chamber finds that the NUON Chea Defence misconstrues the meaning and import of Article 46(1) of the First Additional Protocol. While this provision establishes that persons who are engaging in espionage lose the status of prisoner of war and “may be treated as a spy”,<sup>906</sup> it does not exclude them from the protections of the Geneva Conventions. A person who loses his/her prisoner of war status would still enjoy the fundamental guarantees set out in Article 75 of the First Additional Protocol. The Commentary to the First Additional Protocol notes that the “deprivation of prisoner-of-war status already constitutes a punishment in itself and can therefore only take place following the tribunal’s decision” and that the “presumption of prisoner-of war status should prevail, at any rate whenever the person concerned has not been charged on the basis of prima facie evidence”.<sup>907</sup> The Chamber will assess on the evidence in this case

<sup>905</sup> The Supreme Court Chamber found that “nothing prevents a court from drawing on subsequent legal developments consistent with the lex mitior principle to restrict the scope of established criminal law norms”: Case 002/01 Appeal Judgement, para. 579. See also, Scoppola v. Italy (No. 2), ECtHR, Judgement, Application No. 10249/03, 17 September 2009, para. 109 (referring to the “principle of retrospectiveness of the more lenient criminal law” and finding that “where there are differences between the criminal law in force at the time of the commission of the offence and subsequent criminal laws enacted before a final judgement is rendered, the courts must apply the law whose provisions are most favourable to the defendant”).

<sup>906</sup> ICRC Commentary to Additional Protocol I, para. 1768. The Commentary notes that while espionage is not prohibited as a method of combat, “any a member of the armed forces who is caught while he is engaged in espionage may be deprived of his prisoner-of-war status and punished”.

whether there were any such proceedings which would deprive the individuals in question of their prisoner of war status.<sup>908</sup>

335. Knowledge – An accused must have sufficient knowledge of the international character of the armed conflict and of the protected status of the victims under the Geneva Conventions. Awareness by the accused that a foreign state was involved in the armed conflict and that a victim belonged to an adverse party to that armed conflict will suffice to establish this knowledge.<sup>909</sup> Furthermore the Accused must know that his conduct had a nexus to an international armed conflict, or at least have “knowledge of the factual circumstances later bringing the Judges to the conclusion that the armed conflict was an international one”.<sup>910</sup>

4.3.2. Legal Findings

4.3.2.1. Existence of an international armed conflict

336. Based on the evidence detailed above, the Chamber finds that an armed conflict existed between DK and Vietnam from May 1975 through 6 January 1979.<sup>911</sup> While the Closing Order finds that a state of armed conflict existed between DK and Vietnam throughout the entire DK period, thus from 17 April 1975 until 6 January 1979, the Chamber was unable to satisfy itself beyond reasonable doubt that an international armed conflict existed between DK and Vietnam at any time in April 1975 – i.e. before North Vietnam’s capture of Saigon on 30 April 1975.<sup>912</sup> The first clashes between DK and Vietnam took place in May 1975 off the coast involving the islands whose territory was in dispute between Cambodia and Vietnam.<sup>913</sup> Continuous clashes, involving border skirmishes and incursions into both Cambodian and Vietnamese territory, occurred from May 1975 throughout the DK period. For this finding, it is irrelevant that

<sup>908</sup> In this regard the Chamber notes that pursuant to Article 46(2) of Additional Protocol I “[a] member of the armed forces of a Party to the conflict who, on behalf of that Party and in territory controlled by an adverse Party, gathers or attempts to gather information shall not be considered as engaging in espionage if, while so acting, he is in the uniform of his armed forces” (emphasis added).

DK and Vietnam did not recognise this state of war until diplomatic ties between the two states were severed on 31 December 1977.<sup>914</sup>

4.3.2.2. Status as “protected persons” under the Geneva Conventions of 1949

337. For the crimes charged under Article 6 of the ECCC Law in relation to S-21 Security Centre and Au Kanseng Security Centre, the Chamber has examined the status of the alleged victims and made related findings where relevant in this Judgement.<sup>915</sup> The Chamber notes in this regard that in relation to the crimes charged at Au Kanseng Security Centre, the Chamber was unable to satisfy itself beyond reasonable doubt that the Jarai were “protected persons” within the meaning of the Geneva Conventions.<sup>916</sup> Conversely, in relation to the crimes charged at S-21 Security Centre, the Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the victims of the relevant charged crimes were Vietnamese civilians or prisoners of war and thus protected persons for the purposes of the Geneva Conventions.<sup>917</sup> Thus, the Chamber will consider the remaining requirements only in relation to S-21 Security Centre.

4.3.2.3. Nexus between the acts of the Accused and the armed conflict

338. The Chamber finds that the crimes committed against protected persons at S-21 Security Centre were closely related to the armed conflict between DK and Vietnam.<sup>918</sup> In this regard, the Chamber has considered the following: Vietnamese detainees constituted the largest group of foreign detainees at S-21 and their numbers increased with the escalation of the conflict,<sup>919</sup> surviving S-21 photographs depict prisoners in Vietnamese military uniforms;<sup>920</sup> Vietnamese prisoners were made to read prepared confessions, in which they confessed that they had entered Kampuchean territory in order to spy and to invade Cambodia, for the purpose of broadcasting the confessions on the radio (the Phnom Penh Domestic Service);<sup>921</sup> these confessions were also used in DK publications, like the abovementioned Black Paper,<sup>922</sup> and government statements as evidence of Vietnamese aggression against Kampuchea, and included members of the Vietnamese armed forces such as commanders, colonels, lieutenants and soldiers;<sup>923</sup> and finally, photographs and a movie depicting Vietnamese prisoners in the military uniforms they were arrested in were shown to S-21 staff at a study session to celebrate the 17 April anniversary.<sup>924</sup>

4.3.2.4. Knowledge of the Accused

339. The Chamber finds that both Accused were aware of the armed conflict with Vietnam. In this regard, the Chamber considered the fact that NUON Chea was part of the June 1975 DK delegation to Hanoi to discuss the border clashes with the Vietnamese leader NGUYEN Van Linh,<sup>925</sup> and was thus aware of the armed conflict with Vietnam from the outset. Regarding KHIEU Samphan's knowledge of the existence of the armed conflict with Vietnam, the Chamber considered the following: throughout 1975, KHIEU Samphan held the position of GRUNK Deputy Prime Minister and continued in that capacity to exercise diplomatic functions until NORODOM Sihanouk's resignation as Head of State in early April 1976 – as KHIEU Samphan later explained, he “had to be informed to be able to talk about [national defence and Vietnam] to diplomats”,<sup>926</sup> KHIEU Samphan was indeed carrying out such diplomatic functions: he not only visited Vietnam in August-September 1975 to attend the 30th anniversary celebrations of the commencement of the Vietnamese independence movement,<sup>927</sup> he also visited China and North Korea in 1975;<sup>928</sup> KHIEU Samphan was briefed on national defence matters: he attended Standing Committee meetings, among others, on 2 November 1975, 22 February 1976 and on 11 March 1976 during which the conflict with Vietnam, including attempted border negotiations, was discussed;<sup>929</sup> and finally, KHIEU Samphan acknowledged in later statements that the armed conflict with Vietnam had been ongoing in 1975.<sup>930</sup> The Chamber concludes that the only reasonable inference is that KHIEU Samphan could not have been oblivious to the fact that from May 1975 an armed conflict was ongoing with Vietnam. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that KHIEU Samphan was aware of the armed conflict with Vietnam from the outset.

340. The Chamber finds that NUON Chea was aware of the protected status of victims at S-21. In this regard, the Chamber considered the following: NUON Chea was a member of the Standing Committee, which exercised control over S-21;<sup>931</sup> NUON Chea was substantially involved in military matters;<sup>932</sup> and moreover, NUON Chea had an active role regarding S-21 as he provided instructions, decided who would be arrested, and from August 1977, acted as Duch's direct superior at S-21.<sup>933</sup> The Chamber finds that KHIEU Samphan, despite his limited involvement with respect to the oversight of security centres within the scope of Case 002/02, was also aware of the protected status of victims at S-21. In this regard, the Chamber considered the following: KHIEU Samphan was not only placed within a small group of well-informed CPK members as

5. ADMINISTRATIVE STRUCTURES

341. The foundational documents for the governance of Democratic Kampuchea were the DK Constitution and the various CPK Statutes.<sup>937</sup> The DK Constitution vested significant power in a legislative body called the People’s Representative Assembly, but it was never fully realised.<sup>938</sup> In contrast, the CPK Statute accorded decision-making authority to CPK Party members, limiting such membership by a multi-layered system of vetting.<sup>939</sup> As the only political party in DK, and with all decisions regarding governance and military force being made by Party members in the Central or Standing Committees, zone leadership, ministries and armed forces, the CPK was the predominating Cambodian administrative structure from 1975-1979.

5.1. Structure of the CPK

342. From 1975-1979, the precise operational structure of the CPK was shrouded in secrecy.<sup>940</sup> In the early days of the Party, secrecy was essential to its survival as an underground revolutionary movement.<sup>941</sup> Even after the CPK rose to power in 1975, however, it continued to obfuscate and obscure its internal workings, largely to protect itself from perceived external enemies.<sup>942</sup> The existence of the CPK and its leadership was only disclosed to the Cambodian public (outside of the CPK membership) as well as the outside world at the 17th Anniversary of the Party in September 1977.<sup>943</sup> As such, limited, if any, information about the leadership structure was accessible to ordinary people, who were often simply required to obey without question decisions made by “Angkar” (literally “organisation”), an anonymous entity seen as having the power to control the whole of society.<sup>944</sup> Lower-ranking cadres sometimes had only a cursory understanding of the organisation of power in the CPK.<sup>945</sup> In its totality, however, the evidence put before the Chamber has enabled it to reconstruct the organisational lines of the CPK in the relevant period.

343. The administrative structure of the CPK was formalised for the first time in a statute passed by the First Party Congress of what was then called the Workers’ Party of Kampuchea in September-October 1960.<sup>946</sup> The second statute was adopted at the Third Party Congress in September 1971.<sup>947</sup> Another statute was enacted at the Fourth Party Congress in January 1976.<sup>948</sup> The 1971 and 1976 Statutes were put before the Chamber.<sup>949</sup> The various statutes were similar in content, at least insofar as they dealt with the internal structures and hierarchy of the CPK.<sup>950</sup>

5.1.1. Party Congress

344. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber notes that it has before it the 1971 and 1976 CPK Statutes. The 1976 Statute on the Case File is a complete, typed version of the CPK founding document and was authenticated by several witnesses, including Duch and NUON Chea.<sup>951</sup> The 1971 Statute on the Case File appears in a handwritten set of notes with the indication that it is a “draft” and that the statute was copied in July 1972.<sup>952</sup> Although the 1976 Statute retained much of the language of the 1971 Statute, the author of the 1972 notes containing the 1971 draft statute, is unknown.<sup>953</sup> The Chamber therefore approaches the 1971 Statute with caution, but will rely on the content of these notes insofar as they are corroborated.

345. The 1971 and 1976 Statutes set out the lines along which the Party was officially organised. The “highest power rights throughout the country” were vested in the General Conference, or Party Congress.<sup>954</sup> However, the Party Congress only met once every four years and during the time between Party Congresses, the highest operational unit throughout the country was the Central Committee.<sup>955</sup> The role of the Congress was to “designate the political line and Statute” of the Party and select and appoint the members of the Central Committee.<sup>956</sup> In addition to the First, Second, Third and Fourth Party Congresses mentioned above, a Fifth Party Congress was convened in late 1978.<sup>957</sup> The 1976 and 1978 Congresses were attended by hundreds of people, including

5.1.2. Standing Committee and Central Committee

346. As noted below, the Standing Committee was the highest decision-making body of the CPK which met frequently to decide upon all manner of practical and policy issues impacting upon Democratic Kampuchea, including civilian and military affairs.<sup>959</sup> The members of the Standing Committee were drawn from a larger body called the Central Committee which met less frequently.<sup>960</sup>

5.1.2.1. Preliminary issues regarding Standing Committee minutes

347. The Chamber has before it a large number of records of Standing Committee meetings, consisting of 38 sets of Standing Committee minutes (including extracts), 26 of which were available prior to the start of Case 002/02 trial proceedings.<sup>961</sup> The Chamber previously held that 26 sets of Standing Committee minutes were entitled to a prima facie presumption of reliability (including authenticity) due to the way in which DC-Cam evaluated and maintained the documents and/or because they were cited by the Co-Investigating Judges in the Closing Order.<sup>962</sup> But the Chamber must now satisfy itself that these documents are sufficiently reliable (including authentic) to be the basis of judicial fact finding.

348. The Chamber recalls that when discussing the admissibility of documents provided to the court by DC-Cam in a digitised format, it ruled that “the Chamber is satisfied that the processes employed by DC-Cam [for collecting and storing the documents] provides no reasonable apprehension that documents originating from this source could have been subject to tampering, distortion or falsification”.<sup>963</sup> The Chamber notes that the DC-Cam archive contains a number of original, contemporaneous versions of Standing Committee minutes. Where there was any concern as to the accuracy of the copy contained on the Case File or as to the provenance or reliability of particular documents, the originals were available for examination at DC-Cam.<sup>964</sup> Having received no additional evidence or new arguments on this point, the Chamber finds that its previous analysis remains valid and adopts here the same reasoning concerning the documents’ reliability.

349. Fourteen sets of the minutes available prior to the start of Case 002/02<sup>965</sup> were obtained by Professor Ben KIERNAN from David CHANDLER and KHIEU

350. Another nine sets of Standing Committee minutes which were available prior to Case 002/02 appear to have been placed on the Case File from other sources.<sup>969</sup> When comparing the minutes sourced from Professor Ben KIERNAN and those originating from other sources, the Chamber notes that there are commonalities in the usage of terms (such as the use of revolutionary names) language, and format. For example, these meeting minutes record the attendance of Party Members by their aliases, including: Comrade Secretary (POL Pot), Comrade Deputy Secretary (NUON Chea), Khieu (alias SON Sen), Hem (alias KHIEU Samphan), Vorn (alias VORN Vet), and Van (IENG Sary).<sup>970</sup> These are the same aliases used in telegrams put before the Chamber.<sup>971</sup> Duch also confirmed that these were the aliases of the members of the Central and/or Standing Committees.<sup>972</sup> Standing Committee minutes on the issue of propaganda discuss building the country “in great leaps”.<sup>973</sup> This terminology is repeated in numerous Revolutionary Flags and propaganda spread by DK radio broadcasts as recorded in FBIS compilations.<sup>974</sup> Furthermore, the minutes are typed in the same manner as the minutes confirmed to have been sourced from Professor Ben KIERNAN. Therefore, based upon a holistic assessment of all available evidence pertaining to the source of these documents and their contents, the Chamber considers all 23 sets of Standing Committee minutes to be authentic, and given that they are contemporaneous documents, of significant probative value.

351. In addition to the 23 sets noted above, a number of excerpts of Standing Committee minutes were obtained separately by Helen JARVIS and John QUIGLEY, and had been presented as evidence at the 1979 People's Revolutionary Tribunal ("PRT").<sup>975</sup> The PRT Trial was conducted in Khmer, English and French and most of the excerpts obtained by Mr. QUIGLEY and Ms. JARVIS were obtained in all three languages.<sup>976</sup> These were not provided to the Chamber by Ms. JARVIS or Mr. QUIGLEY, but were available by virtue of their inclusion in the published records of the 1979 Trial.<sup>977</sup> Some of these minutes are corroborated by other sources of evidence. For example, the excerpt of the Standing Committee minutes from 11 April 1977 from the PRT are corroborated, at least in part, by the Standing Committee minutes of 10, 11 and 13 April 1977, obtained by Christopher GOSCHA as discussed below.<sup>978</sup> However, the context of these documents may be affected by the absence of a complete copy of the original minutes whose precise location is uncertain. The inference therefore arises that the Parties also consider these minutes to have some probative value.

informed, however, that the full record of the PRT Trial is likely maintained in a Vietnamese government archive. Despite multiple attempts through diplomatic channels to have access to the original documents, the Chamber regrettably did not receive any response from the Vietnamese authorities in this regard. The Chamber therefore considers that in the absence of the original, full versions, of these Standing Committee minutes, it must approach these copies with caution and will only consider them as corroboration of minutes obtained from other sources.<sup>979</sup>

352. During the proceedings in Case 002/02, the Chamber obtained and admitted 13 new documents consisting of additional minutes of Standing Committee meetings (in some cases alternatively sourced copies of minutes already on the Case File) as well as minutes from other high-level meetings such as from Office 870 or military committees.<sup>980</sup> These 13 documents were Professor Christopher GOSCHA's handwritten transcriptions of entire Vietnamese-language documents held at the

<sup>979</sup> The Chamber recalls that in Case 002/01, it admitted the entire compilation of documents from the PRT Trial as the documents were established to have been presented during the 1979 Trial. See Annex C to Decision on Objections to Documents Proposed to be Put before the Chamber in Co-Prosecutors' Annexes A6-A11 and A14-A20 and by the Other Parties, E185/1.3, 3 December 2012, p. 29, ERN (En) 00884475. The Chamber notes however that it has previously expressed reservations as to the reliability of the witness testimony given at the 1979 Trial, as some of the witnesses who testified appeared to be biased and were not cross-examined by defence counsel. See Decision on IENG Sary's Rule 89 Preliminary Objections (Ne bis in idem and Amnesty and Pardon), E51/15, 3 November 2011, paras 7, 23. See also, Pre-Trial Chamber Decision on IENG Sary Appeal Against the Closing Order, D427/1/30, 11 April 2011, paras 167-174. For these reasons, the Chamber does not consider the testimonies given in the 1979 Trial, which are also contained in this compilation, to have probative value. While acknowledging the flawed nature of the PRT testimonies, the Chamber notes that a number of contemporaneous documents were also presented during the Trial, including excerpts of communications between Khmer Rouge leaders and excerpts of three Standing Committee minutes. See Book by H. De Nike, J. Quigley, and K. Robinson: Genocide in Cambodia Documents from the Trial of Pol Pot and Ieng Sary, E3/2144, pp. 392, ERN (En) 00190541 (Decision of the Standing Committee (Concluding Statement by POL Pot, August 2, 1978), Document 2.5.17 from PRT Trial), 397, ERN (En) 00190546 (Excerpts from Minutes of the April 11, 1977; Meeting of the Standing Committee of the Party Central Committee, Document 2.5.23 from PRT Trial), 412, ERN (En) 00190561 (Excerpt from the Proceedings of the Conference of Office 870 on August 5, 1978, Document 2.5.30 from PRT Trial [E3/7328]). Unlike the testimonies from that Trial, the Chamber considers these contemporaneous documents to have probative value.

People’s Army Library in Hanoi and were subsequently translated into the three official languages of the Court.<sup>981</sup> The documents contained Standing Committee minutes, including a more complete version of the 11 April 1977 minutes, that were used in the PRT Trial.<sup>982</sup> Although the precise language is not coterminous, a comparison between the two documents shows that the same subject matter was under discussion, the meeting was attended by many of the same members of the Standing Committee and crucially, that a decision of substance regarding “internal enemies” was made.<sup>983</sup> The Chamber further notes that the contents of some of the GOSCHA-sourced minutes were corroborated by an issue of the Revolutionary Flag. One document sourced from GOSCHA notes that the meeting was “led by the Second Brother” and that “29,000 Vietnamese soldiers were killed and wounded”.<sup>984</sup> A Revolutionary Flag magazine from around the same time summarises the military failure of the Yuon and uses the same figure of “29,000 enemy were killed or wounded”.<sup>985</sup> This numerical consistency serves to buttress a finding of authenticity for the January 1978 GOSCHA document.

353. The Chamber is cognisant of the difficulties associated with accurately translating between multiple languages, particularly here where the documents are Vietnamese translations of documents originally drafted in Khmer which have now been translated into the language of the Court.<sup>986</sup> It also notes that these documents were copied verbatim by Professor Christopher GOSCHA rather than photocopied, which may have led to some transposition errors.<sup>987</sup> The Chamber recalls that:

Professor Goscha informed the Chamber that he visited the Vietnamese People's Army Library and copied verbatim documents in Vietnamese. Philip Short whom the Chamber has qualified as an Expert, notes that "Professor Goscha, who is the authority on such matters tells me [...] and I'm sure he's right: the only place you will find those minutes is the Military Library in Hanoi if they wish to cooperate. To my knowledge, he's the only non-Vietnamese to have been permitted to work there [...]." These factors support the contention that the documents found and copied by Professor Goscha were methodical translations, conserved in a repository which was likely to maintain the integrity of the documents since the DK period. These documents were evidently catalogued by number and several bear the names of translators and dates of translation, suggesting a formalised processing of the documents.<sup>988</sup>

354. The Chamber recalls, however, that the chain of custody prior to the arrival of these documents at the People's Army Library cannot be traced and that the original Khmer documents have not been obtained.<sup>989</sup> Furthermore, it recalls that the Vietnamese translations and the completeness of the transcript have not been verified, potentially impacting on the reliability of the documents.<sup>990</sup> Again, the Chamber regrets the lack of cooperation of the Vietnamese authorities which prevented the Chamber from performing a more complete inquiry into records of the DK era in general, and Standing Committee meetings in particular. Therefore, the Chamber will only consider the GOSCHA-sourced Standing Committee minutes for corroboration.

the CPK Statute, candidate members could “participate in Central Committee meetings, but [had] no decision rights”.<sup>999</sup>

356. Duch identified “assistants” as members of the Central Committee, a fourth category of individuals who attended Central Committee meetings, and estimated that including this group, the Central Committee constituted nearly 100 persons at its peak.<sup>1000</sup> There is no other evidence of a separate body of assistants to the Central Committee and the CPK Statute does not create such a body. The Chamber considers that there is insufficient evidence to determine the number of assistants to the Central Committee or their particular roles. The Chamber nonetheless finds based on all of the evidence before it that the number of Central Committee members and reserve members was between 20 and 30 during the DK regime.

357. Although the CPK Statute vested the highest level of operational authority in the Central Committee, effective control over the CPK was ultimately exercised by the Permanent Committee of the Central Committee (also known as the Standing Committee).<sup>1001</sup> The Standing Committee came into existence at the same time as the Central Committee in 1960.<sup>1002</sup> According to notes reflecting the content of the 1971 Statute, it provided that the Central Committee would appoint the members of the Standing Committee as well as a Secretary and Deputy Secretary.<sup>1003</sup> It met approximately every seven to 10 days, or more frequently if the circumstances so required, and was responsible for leading the daily work of the Party.<sup>1004</sup> It comprised

5.1.3. Military Committee

359. The Military Committee was an extra-statutory sub-committee of the Central Committee. However, at least according to notes reflecting the content of the 1971 Statute, the CPNLAF forces were subordinate to the Party and organisational leadership committees were to be created in accordance with Democratic Centralism.<sup>1021</sup> The Military Committee was chaired by POL Pot and was responsible for military and security affairs.<sup>1022</sup> SON Sen was also a member of the Military Committee.<sup>1023</sup> The Chamber is not satisfied on the available evidence that NUON Chea was a member of the Military Committee.<sup>1024</sup> Nonetheless, the Chamber has found that NUON Chea exerted considerable influence on DK military policy and its implementation.<sup>1025</sup>

5.1.4. Party Centre

360. Several of the witnesses and experts who testified before the Chamber used the phrase “Party Centre” to refer to the senior leadership tier of the CPK. However, as Witness Stephen HEDER pointed out, “Party Centre” was a nebulous term: sometimes it was used in a collective sense to describe an entire “level within the Party hierarchy”, and sometimes it was used to designate a specific entity or body within the upper echelon of the CPK (such as the Central Committee, the Standing Committee or one of its connected offices, or even POL Pot himself).<sup>1026</sup> The phrase “Party Centre” also appeared in a number of documents put before the Chamber, including both DK-era documents and subsequent academic commentaries, generally without definition but in a context which made clear that it was referring to the top levels of the CPK hierarchy (or some constituent element thereof).<sup>1027</sup>

361. In this Judgement, the Chamber uses the phrase “Party Centre” to refer collectively to the senior executive organs of the CPK based in Phnom Penh – namely, the Standing Committee, Central Committee, Military Committee, Office 870, Government Office (S-71) and sub-offices of the Government Office.

5.1.5. Office 870

362. The code number “870” was used ambiguously in the DK period to refer to a variety of persons and entities connected with the Party Centre. Different witnesses had different understandings of “870” but generally agreed that it was used to identify organs belonging to the CPK leadership. According to Witness Stephen HEDER, “870” was in use as early as 1971 to designate “the centre echelon of the Party”.<sup>1028</sup> Witness NORNG Sophang testified that “870” “referred to the Centre”.<sup>1029</sup> Expert Philip SHORT stated that “870” was “the code name for the Standing Committee”.<sup>1030</sup> This uncertainty as to the precise meaning of “870” was consistent with the CPK’s general emphasis on secrecy and, as Expert David CHANDLER observed, intentional: the use of the code number served to conceal or obscure the true nature of the CPK leadership.<sup>1031</sup> KHIEU Samphan told the Co-Investigating Judges that Committee 870 referred to the Party, meaning POL Pot who signed documents as “870” or “87”.<sup>1032</sup>

Duch testified that he received instructions at S-21 from Office 870 and sent reports (including confessions) back to Office 870 through a number of messengers.<sup>1033</sup> SAO Sarun, Sector 105 Secretary, likewise testified that he reported on a daily basis to Office 870 and received instructions and information two or three times per month from Office 870.<sup>1034</sup> Civil Party SON Em, who was in charge of delivering documents to Office 870, stated that his zone leaders told him that Office 870 was the central office of the CPK.<sup>1035</sup>

363. Committee 870 and “Office 870” were two discrete entities, with the latter also known as “Political Office of 870”, “M-870” (the “M” standing for “munt”, the Khmer word for “office”) or “Office of the Standing Committee” (“Office 870”).<sup>1036</sup> In the words of Philip SHORT, Office 870 functioned as the “executive arm” of the Standing Committee.<sup>1037</sup> Its tasks were to implement, and to monitor implementation of, Standing Committee decisions, and to “[make] contacts back and forth with each section” of the CPK’s upper echelons on behalf of the Standing Committee.<sup>1038</sup> Both Philip SHORT and David CHANDLER used the phrase “nerve centre” to describe the critically important role of Office 870 in the transmission of information to and from the Standing Committee.<sup>1039</sup>

364. As discussed in more detail later, the Chamber has found that Office 870 oversaw the implementation of Standing Committee decisions and initially comprised at least two members: SUA Vasi alias Doeun, appointed in October 1975, and KHIEU

5.1.6. Government Office (S-71) and Sub-Offices

366. As well as Office 870, the Party Centre maintained an administrative office, which was referred to in CPK Standing Committee meeting minutes as the “Government Office”.<sup>1050</sup> As of October 1975, the Government Office was run by CHHIM Sam Aok alias Pang, a Central Committee member.<sup>1051</sup> Several witnesses referred to the unit headed by Pang as “S-71”, and a section or ministry designated “S-71” appears

5.1.7. Zones, Sectors, Districts and Sub-District Entities

370. Democratic Kampuchea was divided into a hierarchical series of administrative areas, including zones, sectors, districts and communes. Zones were originally devised by the CPK in the pre-1975 period of armed struggle.<sup>1070</sup> Initially, there were six zones: the North Zone (given the code number 304),<sup>1071</sup> the Northwest Zone (code number 560),<sup>1072</sup> the Northeast Zone (code number 108, later changed to 109),<sup>1073</sup> the Southwest Zone (405),<sup>1074</sup> the East Zone (203)<sup>1075</sup> and the Special Zone (which comprised the area around Phnom Penh).<sup>1076</sup>

371. After the capture of Phnom Penh in 1975, the zone boundaries were redrawn: a new West Zone (code number 401) was added, and the Special Zone around Phnom Penh was dissolved and absorbed into neighbouring Zones.<sup>1077</sup> The zones did not follow

Each zone was sub-divided into a number of sectors (also known as “regions”), which were generally known by their code numbers.<sup>1079</sup> Sectors were further divided into districts, which were in turn made up of communes.<sup>1080</sup> Within the communes, individual villages were gradually combined into cooperatives, in which people lived, worked, studied and ate communally.<sup>1081</sup> In some areas, cooperatives were treated as sub-units of the communes, and were subject to the authority of the commune leadership.<sup>1082</sup> In other areas, however, large cooperatives eventually replaced communes as the lowest administrative sub-regions in the CPK hierarchy.<sup>1083</sup>

373. All levels of the hierarchy – zones, sectors, districts, communes and cooperatives – were governed by Party committees.<sup>1084</sup> Committees typically comprised a secretary (or chairman), a deputy secretary (or deputy chairman) and at least one other member.<sup>1085</sup> Within each committee, particular areas of policy responsibility were often delegated to an individual committee member or sub-committee.<sup>1086</sup> The committee secretary in each echelon was usually appointed by the committee of the level immediately above.<sup>1087</sup> For example, commune secretaries were appointed by district committees,<sup>1088</sup> and district secretaries by sector committees.<sup>1089</sup> In principle, committees were required by the CPK Statute to convene conferences at regular intervals in order to select new members, but in practice committee members were (like secretaries) generally appointed by the committee of the level immediately above.<sup>1090</sup>

374. The committee secretary in each tier was also generally a member (or at least attended the meetings) of the committee of the echelon immediately above: thus,

5.1.8. Angkar

388. The word “Angkar” was widely used from the early days of the Cambodian communist movement to refer to the party that became the CPK.<sup>1162</sup> Like the phrase “Party Centre”, however, it was a vague and obfuscatory term.<sup>1163</sup> For example, Civil Party ROMAM Yun described a committee appointed by the local commune as a manifestation of “Angkar”;<sup>1164</sup> but to others, “Angkar” was a code word for the higher echelons of the CPK.<sup>1165</sup> Duch stated that when he used the word “Angkar”, he was referring to “the Party Central Committee or any particular person representing Pol Pot or the Party Central Committee”, although he added that others used the term differently.<sup>1166</sup> A reference to “Angkar” in a document was sometimes a reference to a specific senior member of the CPK, such as SON Sen or POL Pot.<sup>1167</sup> Witness SAUT Toeung testified that, in his understanding, “Angkar” meant POL Pot and NUON Chea.<sup>1168</sup> The frequency with which individuals and “bad elements” held themselves out to be “Angkar” prompted Committee 870 to issue a directive in 1977 in the following terms:

1. The term “Angkar” or “Party” is used only for the organization. It shall not be used for any individual.
2. For individual [sic]: “comrade”, “this person’s name”, or “comrade in this or that position”, or “comrade representing Angkar at this or that level” shall be used.<sup>1169</sup>

389. However, it is not clear to what extent the directive was circulated amongst ordinary people. Although Witness PECH Chim, a former district secretary, recalled teaching people “Angkar did not refer to any individual person in particular”, it was

5.1.9. Democratic Centralism

390. The 1971 and 1976 Party Statutes provide that the Party had an absolute monopoly in every sector, that it was the highest organisation and the supreme commander governing and administering all revolutionary work, while remaining close to the popular masses.<sup>1171</sup> However, this principle had to be understood in conjunction with the principle of democratic centralism.<sup>1172</sup> Democratic centralism was the organisational foundation for the Party, requiring committees at all levels to exercise collective leadership, with individuals assuming separate responsibilities.<sup>1173</sup> Pursuant to this principle, all Party conferences had to follow the majority, the minority had to respect the majority and the lower echelon had to respect the upper echelon.<sup>1174</sup>

391. Democratic centralism had two dimensions. First, decisions would be made democratically, that is collectively rather than individually, at least in principle.<sup>1175</sup> Structurally, this was reflected in the ubiquity of committees within the CPK hierarchy. Second, decisions would be made centrally, by the upper echelons of the Party, to whom the lower echelons would report and from whom they would receive instructions.<sup>1176</sup> This was reflected in the pyramidal leadership structure of the Party, with power concentrated in a small Standing Committee to which all other tiers reported and from which they received instructions.

392. NUON Chea stated that the principle of collective decision-making was implemented “at every stage, at all [...] times” in the CPK, and specifically at the meetings of the Central and Standing Committees which he attended.<sup>1177</sup> As NUON Chea explained to the Chamber:

“[C]ollective decision” means everybody would participate in a meeting to express the ideas in a centralized democracy. This applied to all meetings and not confined only to Central or Standing Committee meetings [sic]. And the Standing Committee Secretary or Central Committee Secretary would consolidate all those ideas and opinions, and if members of the Party were not satisfied, then all together would be able to express their objections or present proposals until they reached a consensus, then it would become official. Otherwise, if there is no consensus, discussion would go on.

Similarly, when asked in a 2006 interview whether POL Pot had a monopoly on power during the DK era, NUON Chea rejected this proposition and stated that decisions were made collectively.<sup>1178</sup>

393. KHIEU Samphan also indicated that key decisions were made collectively. In respect of the Standing Committee’s decision to evacuate Phnom Penh, he said that “if there had been a single voice against the evacuations, there could have been no evacuations”.<sup>1179</sup> However, IENG Sary claimed that his own individual dissent was not enough to stop the Standing Committee from proceeding with the abolition of currency in 1975.<sup>1180</sup>

394. Expert David CHANDLER testified that, although POL Pot would have had the “last word” in decision-making as CPK Secretary, there was no evidence that he had made decisions alone during the DK period.<sup>1181</sup>

395. Expert Philip SHORT cast the meetings of the Standing Committee in a slightly different light: in his opinion, POL Pot solicited the opinions of other members at Standing Committee meetings and incorporated their remarks in his conclusions, but “the policy that emerged was that which he had essentially decided himself before the meeting even began”.<sup>1182</sup>

396. The Chamber further notes several important differences between the 1971 and 1976 Statutes. The notes reflecting the content of the 1971 Statute indicate that lower echelons were permitted to request re-examination or review of decisions of the upper echelon.<sup>1183</sup> The 1971 Statute also required that all leadership positions be determined by election (unless it proved too difficult, in which case, the upper echelon could make the appointment).<sup>1184</sup> The 1971 Statute likewise provided that leadership organisations had the right to resolve affairs in their own framework according to the political line and principles of the Party as well as instructions of the upper echelon.<sup>1185</sup> The 1976 Statute does not contain any of these provisions.<sup>1186</sup> In fact, there was no evidence that CPK committees at any level – central, zone, sector or otherwise – were selected by election. Rather, committee leadership was appointed by the committee immediately above it in the hierarchy.<sup>1187</sup> The Standing Committee minutes of 9 October 1975 record the appointment of members of the Central and Standing Committee to take charge of various areas of policy responsibility in the government and the General Staff.<sup>1188</sup> The minutes indicate that all decisions and project proposals had to go through the Standing Committee.<sup>1189</sup> Therefore, the elimination of provisions in the 1971 Statute which required the election of certain positions, was consistent with the actual situation with decision-making being concentrated at the Standing Committee and the committee leadership appointment by it.

397. In light of the evidence given by NUON Chea, KHIEU Samphan and IENG Sary – all of whom attended or participated in meetings of the Standing Committee – the Chamber is satisfied that key decisions of the Standing Committee were not simply made unilaterally by POL Pot, but rather were made collectively; that is to say, with the input of, and with a broad consensus from, the entire Committee. However, the Chamber is unable to conclude that unanimity was required in decision-making, and therefore leaves open the possibility that individual members may have disagreed with particular decisions from time to time.

5.1.10. Party Membership

398. The 1971 and 1976 Party Statutes were substantially the same in their requirements for Party membership, which was a prerequisite to holding leadership roles.<sup>1190</sup> The 10 criteria listed in these statutes for selection to Party leadership did not appear in the 1960 Statute, but required a strong revolutionary stance in relation to: (1) the Party political line; (2) proletarian ideology; (3) internal Party solidarity and unity; (4) the lines of organisation, leadership, and work; (5) revolutionary vigilance, maintaining secrecy and defending revolutionary forces of the Party; (6) independence, mastery, self-reliance and self-mastery; (7) making and examining personal histories and revolutionary life views;<sup>1191</sup> (8) class;<sup>1192</sup> (9) clean life morals and political cleanliness; and (10) the capability to build oneself and be receptive to future leadership.<sup>1193</sup> The age of a person prior to becoming a Party member, which had been considered in the 1960 Statute, no longer played a role in Party membership in later

<sup>1190</sup> 1971 CPK Statute, E3/8380, 3 July 1972, pp. 11-13, ERN (En) 00940573-00940575 (Article 11); 1976 CPK Statute, E3/130, undated, pp. 13-16, ERN (En) 00184034-00184037 (Article 5); T. 21 March 2012 (KAING Guek Eav), E1/52.1, pp. 74-75; T. 20 March 2012 (KAING Guek Eav), E1/51.1, p. 79 (only Party members and Youth League members could hold leadership roles).

<sup>1191</sup> In this regard, the 1976 Statute provides that Party leaders: “Must have correct and strong principles and stances with a high spirit of responsibility in making and examining revolutionary one’s personal histories, revolutionary life views, at all times. Must be absolutely honest in examining one’s own personal history and revolutionary life views and in reforming one’s faults large and small, and in pushing building and consolidating one’s good qualities to prosper quickly, one after another.”

<sup>1192</sup> In this regard, the 1976 Statute provides that Party leaders: “Must have a good class as [the subject’s] original class, and especially have the Party’s workers class stance which the subject has successively strived to build while inside the revolutionary movement led by the Party.”

<sup>1193</sup> 1971 CPK Statute, E3/8380, 3 July 1972, pp. 11-13, ERN (En) 00940573-00940575 (Article 11); 1976 CPK Statute, E3/130, undated, pp. 13-16, ERN (En) 00184034-00184037 (Article 5). See also, Revolutionary Flag, E3/747, August 1978, pp. 4-15, ERN (En) 00499769-00499780 (re-emphasising the 10 criteria for Party membership); T. 21 March 2012 (KAING Guek Eav), E1/52.1, p. 75. See also, Revolutionary Youth, E3/765, October 1978, pp. 13-21, ERN (En) 00539988-00539996 (on the 12 Precepts of a Revolutionary).

Statutes. Duch testified that this made Party membership based on the subjective evaluation of the Party Secretary of a candidate's "solidarity" with the Party's political line.<sup>1194</sup>

399. Any full-rights Party member had significant rights that included the right to join decision-making pursuant to democratic centralism and to induct others into the Party.<sup>1195</sup> If Party members committed an infraction, disciplinary measures foreseen by the Party statutes included (1) criticism; (2) change of duties; and (3) expulsion from the Party.<sup>1196</sup> Indeed, KOY Thuon was subjected to a change of duties and expulsion from the Party, before he was executed at S-21.<sup>1197</sup>

400. The Chamber heard testimonial evidence regarding a number of inducted witnesses and Civil Parties.<sup>1198</sup> For example, SUONG Sikoeun was inducted by KEAT Chhon and THIOEUNN Prasith at IENG Sary's home in Beijing in 1971.<sup>1199</sup> PECH Chim was inducted by Saom, the Sector Secretary.<sup>1200</sup> NOEM Sem was inducted by HU Nim.<sup>1201</sup> In addition, KHIEU Samphan was inducted by Ta Mok.<sup>1202</sup> members.<sup>1203</sup> The Chamber has not encountered a definitive list of Party membership. However, there was evidence that Party membership was quite limited at the outset and gradually increased.

402. Numerous Revolutionary Flags indicate that in mid-1974, the CPK Central Committee decided to close the door to Party membership (except for in the military ranks) in order to prevent spies from infiltrating its ranks.<sup>1204</sup> NUON Chea testified that the doors to Party membership were not shut in mid-1974, but acknowledged the underlying rationale put forward by these Revolutionary Flags that there were “huge numbers of enemies” among the ranks.<sup>1205</sup> The Chamber considers that Party membership likely dwindled as fears of internal enemies became more acute starting in mid-1974.

403. In 1977, however, the CPK initiated a Party building exercise to increase membership. The Revolutionary Flag of April 1977 informed its readership of a decision made during a February 1977 conference in Kampong Chhnang to build Party membership in the cooperatives in 1977 so that there would be 30 Party members for every 1,000 families.<sup>1206</sup> It cautioned that the selection of new members had to be meticulous and based upon the 10 criteria for selection.<sup>1207</sup> It further noted that the decision to induct new members rested with the zone committees and the Party Centre.<sup>1208</sup> Building the Party ranks remained a preoccupation of the June and July 1977

Revolutionary Flags, which urged the recruitment of new Party members, but cautioned against enemies embedded in core Party organisations.<sup>1209</sup>

404. The August 1977 Revolutionary Flag admitted difficulty in expanding Party membership because cadres, Party members and core Party organisations had been “cast off, overthrown and dissolved, and fell away from the movement”.<sup>1210</sup> The Chamber notes that this coincides with the wide-spread purges throughout the country in mid-1977.<sup>1211</sup> Therefore, arresting, torturing and killing Party members for betraying the revolution adversely impacted efforts to build the Party membership. A decision was made to recruit from locations where there were no traitors and to cease recruitment where traitors had been found.<sup>1212</sup> In the West Zone, Sectors 31, 32 and 37 were singled out as good sectors and a goal set to recruit 300 new Party members by the end of 1977.<sup>1213</sup>

405. This explains why in mid-1977, Southwest Zone cadres who had not been implicated in major purges were recruited to lead in other zones throughout the country, including the Central (old North), new North, Northwest and East Zones.<sup>1214</sup> A subsequent Revolutionary Flag in March 1978 reported that Party membership had indeed increased with “suitable numbers” from July 1977, announcing this as a major victory since it was accomplished amidst the purge of those who were disloyal to the Party.<sup>1215</sup>

406. NUON Chea testified that from the creation of the First Party Congress in 1960, all zone leaders were Party members.<sup>1216</sup> In addition, there was credible testimonial evidence that sector and district secretaries and committee members as well as some security centre staff, were Party members or candidate members.<sup>1217</sup> Based on the available evidence, the Chamber is unable to determine the number of Party members of the CPK. It was clear however that Party membership was key to having a decision-making role in Democratic Kampuchea.

5.1.11. The Youth League

407. The Communist Youth League of Kampuchea (the “Youth League”) was a core organisation of the Party subservient to the leadership of the CPK.<sup>1218</sup> It was the “right hand” of the CPK that assisted with all the Party’s tasks and an important source of “combatants”.<sup>1219</sup> The requirements for membership in the Youth League mirrored the 10 criteria for CPK membership.<sup>1220</sup> However, Youth League members had to be 17-30 years old.<sup>1221</sup> Youth League members were tasked with spreading Party propaganda, educating the masses and promoting the defence of Democratic Kampuchea.<sup>1222</sup>

408. According to Duch, the Youth League was an alliance of the CPK youth, tasked with selecting revolutionary individuals from the progressive youth. They were to

5.2. Structure of Democratic Kampuchea

409. In April 1975, as Phnom Penh fell to the military forces of the CPK and the LON Nol regime collapsed, foreign governments began to extend formal diplomatic recognition to the GRUNK.<sup>1224</sup> An invitation by the United States government to NORODOM Sihanouk to return immediately to Cambodia and take power went unheeded, and U.S. embassy personnel were evacuated from Phnom Penh on 12 April 1975 together with acting Prime Minister SAUKHAM Khoy.<sup>1225</sup> By 17 April 1975, most of the remaining senior leaders of the Khmer Republic had fled the country and the CPK/FUNK takeover was complete.<sup>1226</sup>

410. In reality, the GRUNK administration that took power in Cambodia was a façade, and it was the CPK that exercised actual control.<sup>1227</sup> NORODOM Sihanouk had foreseen this outcome two years earlier, telling an audience in China:

After the war is over, Prince Sihanouk will only be a symbol of national unity [...] In reality, power will be in the hands of the Khmer Rouge.<sup>1228</sup>

411. One commentator in 1975 observed that the GRUNK cabinet was dominated by the Khmer Rouge, with “only two ‘Sihanoukists’” amongst its members.<sup>1229</sup> NORODOM Sihanouk himself, though ostensibly the head of state, did not arrive in Phnom Penh until September 1975, having spent the previous months in Beijing and Pyongyang.<sup>1230</sup>

412. In October 1975, the CPK Standing Committee assigned specific areas of policy responsibility to 13 senior Party members, including NUON Chea (given responsibility for “Party Affairs, Social Action, Culture, Propaganda and Education”) and KHIEU Samphan (given responsibility for “the Front and the Royal Government, and Commerce for accounting and pricing”).<sup>1231</sup> IENG Sary was assigned “Foreign Affairs work, both Party and State”, while POL Pot retained “general responsibility over the military and the economy”.<sup>1232</sup> KOY Thuon alias Thuch was assigned “Domestic and International Commerce”, SON Sen was to deal with the “General Staff and Security”, VORN Vet was given responsibility for “Industry, Railroads and Fisheries”, IENG Thirith alias Phea was to take charge of “Culture, Social Action and Foreign Affairs”, YUN Yat alias At was assigned “Propaganda and Re-education, both internal and external” and NON Suon alias Chey was to deal with “Agriculture”.<sup>1233</sup> According to official DK publications, on 14 December 1975 KHIEU Samphan chaired a National Congress in Phnom Penh during which he was reported to have presented the new constitution.<sup>1234</sup> On 5 January 1976, the constitution (“DK Constitution”) came into effect, and the state of Democratic Kampuchea was born.<sup>1235</sup> The DK Constitution vested legislative power in a People’s Representative Assembly (“PRA”), which was to comprise 250 elected members.<sup>1236</sup> The government was to be elected by, and answerable to, the members of the PRA.<sup>1237</sup> “People’s courts” were also to be appointed by the PRA.<sup>1238</sup> In place of the monarchy, the DK Constitution provided for a State Presidium – again, to be appointed by the PRA – to represent the state of DK at home and overseas.<sup>1239</sup>

413. All this, too, was a façade. Minutes of a meeting of the CPK Standing Committee reflect the Standing Committee’s view that the PRA was “worthless” and cautioned members not to “speak playfully about the Assembly in front of the people to let them see that we are deceptive”.<sup>1240</sup> Although the DK Constitution envisaged “direct and prompt general elections by secret ballot to be held throughout the country” to select the members of the PRA, no such nationwide elections were held; at best, voting took place at a limited number of locations, and it is not clear whether voters were presented with any actual choice of candidates.<sup>1241</sup> Witnesses PRAK Yut and UNG Ren did not know that they were candidates for the PRA until they were notified by their superiors that they had been appointed, and even after their appointments they remained uncertain as to the nature of their roles and responsibilities as PRA representatives.<sup>1242</sup> Neither of them recalled attending any meetings of the PRA or voting on any legislation.<sup>1243</sup> Mat LY, a member of the PRA, recalled the election of PRA members as a sham in which each centre had a single name on the ballot.<sup>1244</sup> After the election, PRA members were

On 30 March 1976 – after the purported election of the PRA but prior to its inaugural session<sup>1246</sup> – the CPK Central Committee nominated NUON Chea as chairman of the PRA Standing Committee and named KHIEU Samphan chairman of the State Presidium (i.e. President of Democratic Kampuchea).<sup>1247</sup> The Central Committee also appointed several members of the government, including POL Pot (who was named Prime Minister), IENG Sary (named Deputy Prime Minister for Foreign Affairs), VORN Vet (named Deputy Prime Minister for Economics and Finance) and SON Sen (named Deputy Prime Minister for National Defence).<sup>1248</sup>

Committee, State Presidium and government.<sup>1251</sup> In reality, the PRA simply rubber-stamped the choices that had already been made by the CPK.<sup>1252</sup>

416. The government, too, was little more than an instrument of the CPK.<sup>1253</sup> It was, as Expert David CHANDLER described it, a “government by and for [the] ruling party”; there were no balancing elements to CPK rule.<sup>1254</sup> Government ministers and ministerial staff reported to and took directions from the CPK Standing Committee.<sup>1255</sup> Minutes of a CPK Central Committee meeting reflect the Central Committee’s view that the government “must be totally an organization of the Party”.<sup>1256</sup> Government ministers met with POL Pot – who by then served as both Prime Minister and CPK Secretary – at gatherings of the Council of Ministers.<sup>1257</sup> At the first such meeting, POL Pot made it clear that the primary function of the DK government was to implement the CPK line:

The true nature of our new government is that of a revolutionary government of the pure worker-peasants, of the pure Communist Party of Kampuchea [...]. [M]embers of the Government and members of the Committees in all sectors must grasp the true nature of our Government and our duties, and strive to fulfil their tasks well, following the Party line. Grasping the Party line means grasping the organizational stance of the Party and grasping the political objectives of the Party in every Sector in order to implement the policies of the Party well and correctly [...]. 417. As to the third branch of the state envisaged by the DK Constitution, the judiciary, the PRA professed to create (and appoint the chairman of) a “Judicial Committee” at its session in April 1976.<sup>1259</sup> However, no functioning judicial system was ever established under the DK regime.<sup>1260</sup>

418. The highest offices of state in DK – Prime Minister, President and chairman of the PRA – were occupied by senior CPK members. Other government leaders and ministers were appointed by, and reported to, the CPK. There was no functioning legislative or judicial branch. In short, DK was, in the words of KHIEU Samphan, a country where “the party leads the state”.<sup>1261</sup>

5.2.1. DK Ministries and Committees

419. As noted above, in April 1976, the PRA met to approve the government of DK, with the following appointments: POL Pot, Prime Minister; IENG Sary, Deputy Prime Minister responsible for foreign affairs; VORN Vet, Deputy Prime Minister responsible for economics; SON Sen, Deputy Prime Minister responsible for national defence; HU Nim, Minister responsible for information and propaganda; THIOEUNN Thioeunn, Minister, Ministry of Public Health; IENG Thirith, Minister, Ministry of Social Action; TAUCH Phoeun, Minister, Ministry of Public Works; and YUN Yat, Minister, Ministry of Culture, Training, and Education.<sup>1262</sup> This is the first evidence that areas of responsibility were now considered to be “ministries”,<sup>1263</sup> although it is possible that

<sup>1263</sup> The various ministries created during the DK era formed a disparate set of entities which covered very different realities. See SUONG Sikoeun Interview Record, E3/377, 7 May 2009, p. 4, ERN (En) 00327245 (“The Foreign Ministry was the only one to be structured like a classic Ministry, which wasn’t the case for the others; some of the Ministries only existed on paper.”). There was also ambiguity as to what was considered to be a Ministry. For example, the daily controlling list from S-21 in 1977, the “Orange Logbook”, contains separate headings for prisoners brought to S-21 from various state ministries which do not distinguish between “Ministries” and “Committees”. See S-21 Orange Logbook, E3/10770, 30 November 1977, p. 326, ERN (En) 01460741 (listing under the heading “Various State Ministries” the following: State Commerce, Industry, Public Works, Energy, Foreign Affairs, Propaganda, Publishing House, Commerce Office, Garment, State Agriculture, Offices). Several miscellaneous categories are not listed under the heading for State Ministries. These include Transportation, Bandit, Spy, Train, Port, and State warehouse. There is insufficient evidence to determine this occurred earlier. The DK Constitution makes no mention of ministries, with only one mention of the “executive body” which was elected by the PRA and responsible to it for all of its activities.<sup>1264</sup> However, there is no evidence that the PRA accomplished any legislative work and some of the ministries only existed on paper.<sup>1265</sup> Rather it was entirely dependent upon the decisions of the Standing Committee.

420. Education and Propaganda Ministries – In the PRA meeting of April 1976, YUN Yat was identified as being Minister of Education and HU Nim was identified as the Minister of Propaganda.<sup>1266</sup> However, based upon witness testimony and numerous documents, the Chamber has found that NUON Chea had significant responsibility in these areas including responsibility for the CPK’s internal educational magazine the Revolutionary Flag.<sup>1267</sup> A more complete analysis of NUON Chea’s responsibilities in this regard appears in the section of this Judgement on NUON Chea’s Roles and Functions.

421. Economics – In meetings from 19-21 April 1976, the Standing Committee decided to reorganise Office 870 by creating a series of committees charged with different areas of the economy, consisting of Commerce, Energy, Land Transport, Water Transport, Phnom Penh Warehouse, Public Works, Railway, Port, Agriculture, Industry and Textiles/Clothing Sewing.<sup>1268</sup> There is credible evidence that these committees fell within the authority of VORN Vet and KHIEU Samphan. First, records of the PRA meeting from the previous week note that certain economic committees (including industry, commerce and energy) fell under the authority of the Minister of Economics, <sup>1265</sup> SUONG Sikoeun told the Co-Investigating Judges that: “[t]here was only a Minister, who had no office. To give some examples, that was the case for VAN Rit (“chairman of the foreign trade committee”, who had the rank of Minister but did not have a ministry); PHUONG, chairman of the rubber tree plantations committee; THIOEUNN Thioeunn, “Health Minister”, but just a doctor in reality, who came under the control of the Ministry of Social Affairs.” See SUONG Sikoeun Interview Record, E3/377, 7 May 2009, p. 4, ERN (En) 00327245.

VORN Vet.<sup>1269</sup> Second, there were dozens of telegrams from the appointed Commerce Committee Chief, VAN Rith, reporting to VORN Vet and KHIEU Samphan.<sup>1270</sup> This led witness SAR Kimlomouth, Deputy Chief of the DK Commerce Bank, to conclude that VAN Rith was subordinate to the latter two.<sup>1271</sup> The Chamber therefore concludes that the committees named by the Standing Committee were created within VORN Vet's economics portfolio. The Chamber further finds that KHIEU Samphan and VORN Vet were thoroughly apprised of DK economic matters pertaining to these committees from 1976 until late 1978.<sup>1272</sup> Following the arrest of VORN Vet in late 1978, KHIEU Samphan continued to receive these reports.<sup>1273</sup>

422. With a significant influx of cash from China (140 million RMB), the Commerce Committee established a foreign commerce bank in 1976 in order to engage in trade with foreign countries.<sup>1274</sup> The Foreign Trade Company of Cambodia (FORTRA) and Hong Kong registered trade company (Ren Fung Company Ltd.) were also created in order to facilitate commercial transactions.<sup>1275</sup> Both were under the supervision of the Commerce Committee and reported to KHIEU Samphan, who reviewed communications to and from Ren Fung.<sup>1276</sup>

Although these committees do not correspond precisely with those listed by the Standing Committee meeting, there is considerable overlap. See also, T. 14 June 2016 (KAING Guek Eav), E1/437.1, p. 13 (stating KOY Thuon had been removed from the Commerce Office by April 1976).

424. When the CPK/FUNK took control of Phnom Penh on 17 April 1975, the CPK military forces – which had been fighting under the banner of the Cambodian People's National Liberation Armed Forces ("CPNLAF")<sup>1279</sup> – were under the direct control of the zones, not the Party Centre.<sup>1280</sup> On 22 July 1975, POL Pot announced the formation of a new Revolutionary Army of Kampuchea ("RAK"),<sup>1281</sup> bringing a number of zone military divisions under the control of the Central Committee – specifically, under the command of the General Staff, headed by SON Sen.<sup>1282</sup> A Standing Committee meeting that took place on 9 October 1975, attended by both NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan, demonstrates that the reorganisation of the army and the creation of the General Staff were not completed overnight, and were still ongoing in the third quarter of 1975.<sup>1283</sup> The units eventually created under the General Staff (“centre divisions”) mid to late 1975 included Division 164, the navy; Division 170; Division 290; Division 310; Division 450; Division 502, the air force; Division 703; Division 801; and Division 920.<sup>1284</sup> Several “independent regiments” were also established under the General Staff, each tasked with a specific function. The independent regiments included Regiment 75 (sewing unit); Regiment 152 (naval unit); Regiment 377 (artillery unit); Regiment 488; Office 62 (logistics); Office 63 (logistics); and S-21 Security Centre.<sup>1285</sup> Divisions were re-organised and re-named throughout 1977 and 1978, when more troops were sent to the East Zone, where they were placed under the authority of one of the East Zone Field Command Posts, in light of the East Zone purges and the intensified armed conflict with Vietnam.<sup>1286</sup>

425. The role of the RAK was set out in Article 19 of the DK Constitution: its functions were to “defend the State power of the Kampuchean people and of [...] Kampuchea”, and to “help build a country growing more prosperous every day to improve and develop the people’s standard of living”.<sup>1287</sup> However, the RAK was very much an army of the CPK rather than the state institutions. The CPK Statute specified that the RAK “must be in very [sic] part under the absolute leadership monopoly of the Communist

5.3.1.2. Structure of the RAK

426. Both the DK Constitution and the CPK Statute distinguished between three branches of the RAK:<sup>1290</sup> the regular forces (i.e. the centre divisions and independent regiments that were brought under the authority of the General Staff in mid to late 1975);<sup>1291</sup> the regional forces (i.e. the armies that remained directly under the authority of the zones, sectors and districts);<sup>1292</sup> and the local militias (chhlop) (i.e. forces at the sub-district level).<sup>1293</sup> Sectors and districts maintained their own military forces, separate from the centre divisions primarily for the purpose of territorial defence.<sup>1294</sup>

5.3.1.2.1. Regular forces: Centre Divisions and Independent Regiments under the General Staff

427. As with the civilian administrative structures of the CPK, the RAK was arranged in a pyramidal hierarchy. At the top (albeit subject to the supervision of the Central Committee and the Military Committee) was the General Staff.<sup>1295</sup> The General Staff was in overall command of the centre divisions and dealt with military affairs such as supply, logistics, arms, personnel, communications and information.<sup>1296</sup> The General

This Comrade R(a)en (sometimes spelled “Reun” in English) is not to be confused with Witness UNG Ren, who was a Regiment Commander from 1975 until early to mid-1977, after which he briefly became Division 801’s Deputy Commander. UNG Ren testified that thereafter he spent about one month at the General Staff when he was ill, without having an official role there. The Chamber finds his evidence credible and reliable, and concludes that the Comrade R(a)en referred to in this paragraph is not Witness UNG Ren. See below, para. 440; Section 12.4: Au Kanseng Security Centre, para. 2873 (fn. 9818). See also, T. 9 January 2013 (UNG Ren), E1/157.1, p. 74. The Chamber notes that it is likely that Comrade R(a)en of the General Staff is the same Comrade Ren who later became SON Sen’s deputy in the East Zone. See below, para. 451. Comrade Ren of the East Zone Command Post discussed below was one of Ta Mok’s sons-in-law who is no longer alive, allegedly killed by Ta Mok himself in 1979. testified that the “Ministry of Defence” was in the same location.<sup>1309</sup> The Chamber further notes that SON Sen was often referred to as the head of this ministry.<sup>1310</sup> Duch testified that despite the fact that SON Sen was given the title of Minister of National Defence, he maintained his role at the General Staff and nothing changed in relation to his position.<sup>1311</sup> Further evidence indicates that SON Sen’s title as Minister of Defence was synonymous with his functions at the General Staff.<sup>1312</sup> Moreover, Witness NORNG Sophang, who ran the telegram encryption and decryption unit at Sothearos School in Phnom Penh from 1975 onwards,<sup>1313</sup> testified that there were several divisions under SON Sen’s Ministry of Defence, including the army, the navy and the air force.<sup>1314</sup> As noted above, the General Staff had overall command over such military affairs.<sup>1315</sup> Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the Ministry of Defence was not a distinct ministry under the CPK. Rather, this title was at times used to refer to the military functions of the General Staff and SON Sen’s related role therein.

430. Immediately below the General Staff were the centre divisions and independent regiments, each of which was led by a division commander assisted by a deputy, which were referred to as secretary and deputy secretary, respectively.<sup>1316</sup> The Centre Divisions were sub-divided into smaller units. Typically, there were three regiments to a division; three battalions to a regiment; three companies to a battalion; three platoons to a company; three squads to a platoon; and around 12 soldiers to a squad.<sup>1317</sup> At the level of the company and above, each echelon was headed by a commanding officer (also known as a “chairman” or “commissar”), usually assisted by two subordinates.<sup>1318</sup>

431. A number of witnesses indicated that there was an additional command level between the regiments and the divisions. Specifically, that three regiments made up a “brigade” and that each division comprised around three such brigades.<sup>1319</sup> Precise organisational structures may have varied between the divisions.<sup>1320</sup> The same conclusion may be reasonably drawn regarding regional forces.

432. While the evidence does not allow to make a finding on the definitive number of divisions and independent regiments, it suggests that there were at least nine centre divisions and seven independent regiments directly under the authority of the RAK’s General Staff, at least from the formation of the new RAK in mid to late 1975. <sup>1320</sup> The Chamber notes that the ambiguity regarding whether brigades existed is in part a translation issue, as “division” and “brigade” are often used interchangeably. Moreover, the Chamber considers it likely that witnesses at times confused what was considered a “division” and what a “brigade”. See e.g., T. 1 November 2016 (IENG Phan), E1/493.1, p. 74 (using the words “division” and “brigade” interchangeably).

5.3.1.2.1.6. Division 502 (air force)

5.3.1.2.1.7. Division 703

439. Centre Division 703 was formerly the 12th Division of the Special Zone, which was dissolved after the capture of Phnom Penh in April 1975.<sup>1356</sup> In July 1975, the 12th Division became Centre Division 703.<sup>1357</sup> IN Lorn alias Nat(h), was Division 703's commander from its inception to either when he became chairman of S-21 or to when he was relocated to the General Staff in March 1976 – the evidence before the Chamber is unclear on this matter. Duch indicated that Nat(h) was no longer commander of Division 703 when Nat(h) became chairperson of S-21.<sup>1358</sup> However, a telegram sent to Nat(h) when he was already head of S-21 was addressed to him by Duch as “Brother 03”, according to Duch short for 703. The Chamber finds it equally plausible, however, that Nat(h) kept the alias “Brother 03” after he was no longer Division 703's commander. At the latest, Nat was no longer commander of Division 703 when he was

Although CHHAOM Se identified the signature of “Roemun” as that of Division 801 Deputy Commander KEO Saroeun, the evidence (in particular, telegrams bearing the signature “Roemun” communicated before KEO Saroeun’s brief tenure as deputy commander in 1977 and after his arrest and execution later that year) consistently contradicts this assertion. See T. 8 April 2013 (CHHAOM Se), E1/177.1, p. 30 (referring to telegram E3/1168, the witness asserts that “[t]he signature of Roemun – “Roemun” here referred to Keo Saroeun; it was Keo Saroeun who signed this letter, it was not Sou Saroeun”); Rice Consumption Plan, E3/1136, 4 January 1976, p. 1, ERN (En) 00543743 (listing “comrade Roemun” as Division 801 “chair”); DK Telegram, E3/1164, 25 November 1976 (signed “Roemun”); DK Telegram, E3/1079, 25 December 1976 (signed “Roemun”); DK Telegram, E3/870, 5 April 1978, ERN (En) 00516713 (signed “Roemun”); T. 9 January 2013 (UNG Ren), E1/157.1, pp. 81-83; UNG Ren Interview Record, 23 October 2009, E3/84, p. 4, ERN (En) 00408396. The Chamber is accordingly satisfied that “Roemun” in contemporaneous evidence refers to SAO Saroeun, not KEO Saroeun.

5.3.1.2.1.10. Independent regiments

442. The Chamber finds that the following independent regiments falling under the direct authority of the General Staff existed during the DK period: Regiments 75, 152, 377 and 488; Offices 62 and 63; and S-21 Security Centre. The Chamber notes that these regiments were sometimes referred to as divisions.<sup>1383</sup> The Chamber further notes does not show who replaced him. In March 1977, 1,385 people are recorded as connected to Office 62.<sup>1404</sup>

448. Office 63 was also an independent regiment.<sup>1405</sup> HAT Heng alias Chhuon, was the chairman of Office 63 at least until he entered S-21 on 5 March 1977.<sup>1406</sup> The evidence on the Case File does not show who replaced him. Office 63 was a relatively large unit. In March 1977, 3,201 people are recorded as connected to Office 63.<sup>1407</sup>

449. The Chamber has before it a telegram sent by Comrade Saom of Office 62 on behalf of Centre Division 703 to Office 63 requesting Office 63 to supply petroleum to Division 703.<sup>1408</sup> Also, in his testimony Duch characterised both Office 62 and Office 63 as logistics units.<sup>1409</sup> Furthermore, Office 63 is copied in on documents listing statistics of the RAK.<sup>1410</sup> The Chamber therefore finds that Office 63 was part of the RAK's logistics system.

warranting the relocation of troops.<sup>1413</sup> Regarding the first post, the Chamber finds that POL Pot assigned SON Sen to command a battlefield front along National Road 1 (Svay Rieng province),<sup>1414</sup> with Comrade Ren as his deputy.<sup>1415</sup> Regarding the second post, the Chamber finds that KE Pauk was brought in from the North (Central) Zone and deployed along National Road 7 (at the time, Kampong Cham province),<sup>1416</sup> operating this battlefield out of a command centre in Suong.<sup>1417</sup> From this point up until his suicide, East Zone Secretary SAO Phim was chairman of this post and KE Pauk was his deputy.<sup>1418</sup> Centre divisions and zone divisions, mostly from the Southwest Zone and the Phnom Penh area, were relocated to these two posts throughout 1977 and 1978.<sup>1419</sup>

5.3.1.2.2. Regional forces

452. Not all divisions and independent regiments were directly under the authority of the General Staff; some fell under the authority of the individual zones or autonomous sectors. The evidence before the Chamber is inconclusive as to the exact number of divisions that were under the direct authority of the respective zones or sectors. However, the Chamber is satisfied that Autonomous Sector 505, the Northwest Zone, the Southwest Zone, the West Zone and the East Zone all had their own regional forces in the form of zone divisions. For instance, Division 1 stationed in Koh Kong was under the command of the West Zone.<sup>1420</sup> The Northwest Zone had at a minimum a Division 1 and a Division 2.<sup>1421</sup> The Southwest Zone had, among others, a Division 2 (later renamed Division 210 and sent to the East Zone) commanded by SAM Bit,<sup>1422</sup> and a Division 3 commanded by MEAS Muth, yet soon after the restructuring of the RAK mid to late 1975 this zone division became part of Centre Division 164 (the navy).<sup>1423</sup> Division 117 was under the authority of Autonomous Sector 505 (Kratie).<sup>1424</sup> Divisions

IENG Phan testified that Division 117 was in the North Zone near Anlong Veng (see T. 1 November 2016 (IENG Phan), E1/493.1, pp. 28-29). However, the Chamber has before it a telegram sent from Division 117, which reports clashes on the border with Vietnam (see DK Telegram, E3/992, 2 March 1978, pp. 1-2, ERN (En) 00795287-00795288). The Chamber therefore finds that Division 117 could not have been located that far north near Anlong Veng, which borders Thailand, not Vietnam, and is also not in the North Zone. See above, para. 377.

454. There also existed special units at the sub-district level. An example of such a special unit is the “Long Sword Group”. The Long Sword Group was set up by the Southwest Zone cadres in the Central (old North) Zone in 1977, and reported to the head of Peam Chi Kang commune.<sup>1430</sup> The Long Sword Group operated in Kang Meas

6. COMMUNICATION STRUCTURES

6.1. Methods of Communication

6.1.1. Telegrams

455. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber notes that it has before it official correspondence in the form of telegrams between members of the CPK, including reports to superiors and directives to subordinates. Many of these documents were discovered by a team of Vietnamese experts in a villa located on Street 240 in Phnom Penh sometime between 1979 and 1983.<sup>1433</sup> This correspondence was transferred to the Documentation Office of the People's Republic of Kampuchea Ministry of Interior, which later became the Cambodian Ministry of Interior, before they were transferred to the Documentation Center of Cambodia (DC-Cam).<sup>1434</sup> DC-Cam maintains the originals of these documents. The Chamber finds them to have significant probative value.

456. Prior to 1975, the CPK used telegrams to communicate both within Cambodia and externally with contacts in foreign countries. For example, telegrams were used to send messages between the zones and the Party leaders in their headquarters, and also to make contact with FUNK and GRUNK representatives in Vietnam and China.<sup>1435</sup>

Chhang: "Documenting the Crimes of Democratic Kampuchea", E3/161, p. 226, ERN (En) 00291509 (stating that the documents were found in 1979); T. 1 February 2012 (CHHANG Youk), E1/37.1, p. 46 (testifying that the documents were found "around the 1980s -- that is, around 1982 or '83"). CHHANG Youk suggests in one of his statements that the house may have belonged to SON Sen. See CHHANG Youk Interview Record, E3/5779, 19 August 2009, pp. 4-5, ERN (En) 00371398-00371399. From 1971 to 1975 IENG Sary acted as the FUNK/GRUNK "Special Envoy" in China, charged with

457. After the seizure of Phnom Penh on 17 April 1975, CPK telegraph offices were established in the city.<sup>1436</sup> Telegrams were transmitted and received at K-18, and were encrypted or decrypted as necessary either at K-1 or at an office within Sothea's School.<sup>1437</sup> Zones, autonomous sectors, sectors and divisions around the country also maintained their own telegraph units.<sup>1438</sup> The system remained in place until the arrival of the Vietnamese in Phnom Penh in 1979.<sup>1439</sup> Telegrams were primarily used for long-distance communication; the various offices of the Party Centre would not typically use telegrams to contact each other within Phnom Penh,<sup>1440</sup> instead using telephone or mail (delivered by messengers).<sup>1441</sup>

458. Most, but not all, CPK telegrams were encrypted before transmission.<sup>1442</sup> Unencrypted messages were sent in Morse code.<sup>1443</sup> Secret messages were encrypted using a substitution cipher.<sup>1444</sup> Additional layers of encryption were used for highly confidential messages, such as those pertaining to cadres' travel plans.<sup>1445</sup> Special code numbers were also used to refer to specific individuals, locations and offices.<sup>1446</sup>

459. Telegrams were generally encrypted (or decrypted) and transmitted (or received) by different people.<sup>1447</sup> Thus, outgoing telegrams were usually prepared in writing and delivered to an “encoder”; the encrypted messages were then sent to a separate telegraph operator for transmission.<sup>1448</sup> At the other end, the encrypted messages were received and transcribed by another telegraph operator, before being taken to a “decoder” for decryption.<sup>1449</sup> The decrypted messages were then delivered by messenger to the final recipients.<sup>1450</sup> Witness NORNG Sophang, who ran the telegram encryption and decryption unit at Sothearos School in Phnom Penh from 1975 onwards,<sup>1451</sup> confirmed that this separation of responsibilities was intended to “preserve the principle of secrecy” within the CPK.<sup>1452</sup>

6.1.2. Mail

460. The various organs of the Party Centre and the zones, sectors, districts and sub-district entities also communicated with each other by letter.<sup>1453</sup> Although telegrams were generally preferred for long-distance communications, lengthier messages and reports were sent by mail, which was delivered by messengers.<sup>1454</sup> In Phnom Penh, incoming mail for the Party Centre was generally directed through K-7, the messenger unit.<sup>1455</sup> Zones, sectors and districts had their own messenger networks.<sup>1456</sup>

6.1.3. Telephone and (Shortwave) Radio

6.1.4. Radio Broadcasts

464. Prior to 1975, a FUNK radio station in Hanoi – staffed mainly by CPK members, including IENG Thirith – broadcast revolutionary propaganda in Khmer to Cambodians in Cambodia and abroad.<sup>1465</sup> The CPK also maintained a mobile radio broadcast unit in Cambodia, which had a more limited transmission range, and which similarly broadcast news, propaganda and revolutionary messages.<sup>1466</sup>

465. After the fall of Phnom Penh in 1975, the CPK established a radio station in the capital at Stung Meanchey.<sup>1467</sup> The station broadcast news, propaganda, music, recordings of speeches by the CPK senior leaders (including NUON Chea and KHIEU

467. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs also prepared propaganda for foreign consumption: radio programs on the situation in DK were broadcast in Vietnamese, English, French and Chinese.<sup>1474</sup>

468. At some work sites in Cambodia, loudspeakers were installed so that local people could listen to the CPK radio station.<sup>1475</sup> Witness LENG Chhoeung testified that loudspeakers were also installed in front of each ministry in Phnom Penh.<sup>1476</sup> Witness CHEA Say recalled that he and his colleagues listened to a shared radio at K-12, but did not have personal radio sets.<sup>1477</sup> Ordinary people in Cambodia did not generally have free access to information through the radio in the DK period.<sup>1478</sup>

Reports of the broadcasts were transmitted to U.S. embassies around the world by teletype as part of the Foreign Broadcast Information Service (“FBIS”).<sup>1479</sup> Forty-nine compilations of FBIS reports were put before the Chamber in the course of the trial.<sup>1480</sup> be compared with the same speeches that appear in DK contemporaneous publications.<sup>1481</sup> Furthermore, Stephen HEDER, who was familiar with the FBIS transcription and translation process, testified that the content was taken directly and contemporaneously from the radio broadcasts.<sup>1482</sup> The Chamber considers the FBIS compilations to be important evidence of the statements and propaganda of the CPK directed both at the population in Cambodia as well as the international community. Nonetheless, given the indirect nature of this evidence the Chamber will only rely on it when sufficiently corroborated by other evidence.

471. Summaries and transcriptions of DK radio broadcasts were also compiled, translated into English and published by the British Broadcasting Corporation (“BBC”) as part of its Summary of World Broadcasts (“SWB”) service.<sup>1483</sup> Forty-five collections of SWB reports were put before the Chamber in the course of the trial.<sup>1484</sup> These collections, while having similar shortcomings due to the Chamber not having access to the original audio recordings, are of similar importance as the FBIS collections noted above. They have the same significant probative value and the Chamber will rely on them under the same condition.

472. The Chamber is mindful of the fact that radio broadcasts, including those in FBIS and SWB collections, are external CPK materials intended for public dissemination – as opposed to internal, contemporaneous CPK documents such as meeting minutes, notebooks, policy documents and telegrams – and may contain propaganda. The Chamber will keep this in mind when assessing the evidence.

6.1.5. Magazines

473. Beginning in the period before 1975, the CPK published Party magazines entitled Revolutionary Flag and Revolutionary Youth approximately on a monthly basis.<sup>1485</sup> Prior to 1975, Revolutionary Flag was prepared and circulated in secret: it was written by hand, and a small number of copies were made for distribution.<sup>1486</sup>

474. From 1975 onwards, Revolutionary Flag magazines were typewritten, and copies were produced by offset printing.<sup>1487</sup> Both Revolutionary Flag and Revolutionary Youth were printed at the K-25 and K-26 facilities, which came under the authority of the Ministry of Propaganda and Information, headed by HU Nim.<sup>1488</sup> Witness KIM Vun, who worked for the Ministry of Propaganda and Information, was unable to give a precise estimate of the number of copies printed. However, for each issue he recalled seeing “stacks of magazines” being prepared for delivery.<sup>1489</sup>

475. Revolutionary Flag and Revolutionary Youth magazines were distributed only to CPK members, although not every member was given his or her own copy.<sup>1490</sup> Copies

NUON Chea initially denied that he played any role in “establishing” the Revolutionary Flag publication.<sup>1493</sup> However, he subsequently admitted that Revolutionary Flag was written by members of the Standing Committee, principally himself and POL Pot.<sup>1494</sup> This was consistent with NUON Chea’s admitted role as “a candidate in charge of propaganda and writing articles for the news papers [sic]” for the Indochinese Communist Party and the Khmer People’s Revolutionary Party – forerunners of the CPK<sup>1495</sup> – in the 1950s.<sup>1496</sup> NUON Chea later changed his position again, denying that he was the author of any articles published in Revolutionary Flag and claiming that POL Pot had “his own personal assistants who were fully in charge of writing the articles”.<sup>1497</sup> Shortly thereafter, NUON Chea refused to submit to further cross-examination.<sup>1498</sup> In light of his previous admissions and the sporadic exercise of

477. The CPK considered it important that its members read Revolutionary Flag.<sup>1500</sup> Revolutionary Flag was frequently used for educational purposes at CPK political study or training sessions.<sup>1501</sup> Revolutionary Youth was targeted in particular at members of the CPK Youth League.<sup>1502</sup> The magazines contained material such as speeches and presentations given by the CPK leaders;<sup>1503</sup> articles on the history of the CPK, the purported achievements of the DK regime and the Party line generally;<sup>1504</sup> details of plans for the future;<sup>1505</sup> instructions from the Party to its members;<sup>1506</sup> and, at least in Revolutionary Youth, poetry with revolutionary themes, some of which shows a clear attempt by the CPK to incite and indoctrinate young people.<sup>1507</sup>

Case 002/01, the NUON Chea Defence challenged the authenticity of the copies of these magazines on the Case File.<sup>1509</sup> Stephen HEDER subsequently testified as to the provenance and authenticity of copies of each publication,<sup>1510</sup> and Witness KIM Vun was similarly able to confirm that a copy of Revolutionary Flag on the Case File was genuine.<sup>1511</sup> The Chamber also heard evidence from Witnesses VANTHAN Dara Peou and CHHANG Youk of DC-Cam as to the circumstances in which the magazines were obtained, stored, digitised and authenticated before being placed on the Case File.<sup>1512</sup> The Chamber also notes that in spite of its challenges to their reliability in Case 002/01, the NUON Chea Defence has relied extensively on copies of Revolutionary Flag and Revolutionary Youth on the Case File as evidence in its closing briefs, both in Case 002/01<sup>1513</sup> and in Case 002/02.<sup>1514</sup> In Case 002/02, no Party raised new challenges to the authenticity of the copies of Revolutionary Flag and Revolutionary Youth on the Case File. The Chamber is satisfied that the 24 copies of Revolutionary Flag and 28 copies of Revolutionary Youth on the Case File are authentic copies of the original Party magazines.

479. The Chamber is mindful of the fact that these educational magazines, while contemporaneous evidence intended for CPK members, were disseminated more widely than other internal, contemporaneous CPK documents such as meeting minutes, notebooks, policy documents and telegrams. They may contain propaganda. The Chamber will keep this in mind when assessing such evidence.

<sup>1516</sup> The Ministry received the following two directives: (i) to “[s]end news to Angkar every day as normal” in accordance with the established procedures, taking care to summarise and analyse important events about the regime so that the Standing Committee could properly understand the situation and take appropriate measures – news was to be collected from the Ministry by a messenger at 5.15 p.m. daily; (ii) in special circumstances, to “telephone and report to Angkar immediately” if something important happened. 483. In practice, each level in the CPK hierarchy communicated for the most part only with the levels immediately above and below it; outside the Party Centre, there was minimal lateral communication.<sup>1524</sup> Sectors (excluding autonomous sectors), districts and sub-district entities did not generally communicate with the Party Centre directly, but rather sent and received information only upwards or downwards through the chain of command.<sup>1525</sup>

6.2.1. Within the Party Centre

484. Surviving meeting minutes indicate that the Central Committee and the Standing Committee convened regularly to discuss CPK policy.<sup>1526</sup> In addition, the CPK senior members – including POL Pot, NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan – met with each other in various combinations at K-1 and K-3.<sup>1527</sup>

485. CPK leaders also corresponded by letter; for example, Witness OEUN Tan (who worked at K-1 from 1975 to 1979)<sup>1528</sup> remembered delivering letters back and forth between POL Pot and NUON Chea, and between POL Pot and SON Sen.<sup>1529</sup> As previously noted, offices of the Party Centre also occasionally exchanged orders, requests and information by telephone.<sup>1530</sup>

486. Telegrams received by the Party Centre from the lower echelons were usually taken to K-1, where they would be decoded (if necessary), sorted and redistributed as appropriate.<sup>1531</sup> Witness OEUN Tan told the Chamber that all of the telegrams he delivered to POL Pot were subsequently delivered to NUON Chea.<sup>1532</sup> Having reviewed the telegrams on the Case File, and having heard evidence to the effect that there were frequent meetings and consultations between NUON Chea and POL Pot and that they worked together closely, the Chamber is satisfied that most of the telegrams sent to POL Pot during the DK period were also seen by NUON Chea.<sup>1533</sup>

6.2.2. Between the Party Centre and the Zones or Autonomous Sectors

487. Zones and autonomous sectors reported directly to the Party Centre.<sup>1534</sup> At a meeting attended by several zone and autonomous sector representatives in March 1976, the Standing Committee issued the following instructions concerning the applicable procedure for writing reports:

It is proposed that a report on the status of dykes be sent to the Standing Committee every week. The report should either present a general description of the situation or, where necessary, provide details on each aspect. It is proposed that a brief report be sent by telegram to keep the Standing Committee informed of the situation and enable it to issue timely instructions.<sup>1535</sup>

488. This followed advice handed down in a 1972 edition of Revolutionary Flag, in which the Party – noting that “we are poor at reporting” – set out guidance on the preparation of reports in order to enable “the senior levels to take hold of a situation

489. Zones and autonomous sectors accordingly compiled reports for the Party Centre based on the information passed up to them from the lower echelons.<sup>1539</sup> The reports were sent frequently, sometimes daily, although some reports summarised events over longer periods of time.<sup>1540</sup> Reports were sent by telegraph and by letter.<sup>1541</sup> Representatives of the zones and autonomous sectors also occasionally reported to the Standing Committee in person.<sup>1542</sup>

490. Each zone had specific prearranged time slots during which it could transmit telegrams to the Party Centre; however, messages could also be sent outside the designated times if the circumstances justified it.<sup>1543</sup>

491. A number of reports to the Party Centre were put before the Chamber. They showed that the zones and autonomous sectors reported on issues such as production, agriculture and the rice harvest;<sup>1544</sup> activities of purported internal and external enemies;<sup>1545</sup> demographics including the number of newly married couples,<sup>1546</sup> and

492. Telegrams from the zones and autonomous sectors to the Party Centre were generally addressed to “Committee 870” or “Angkar”, but also occasionally to “Angkar 870” or to POL Pot himself.<sup>1549</sup> As the Chamber has already observed,<sup>1550</sup> CPK cadres did not always understand the terms “Angkar” or “870” clearly.<sup>1551</sup> Lists of recipients on many of the telegrams indicate that copies were sent to various CPK leaders, including NUON Chea.<sup>1552</sup> Telegrams marked as having been copied to the “office” went to Office 870.<sup>1553</sup>

493. The Party Centre sent out general directives to the lower echelons by telegraph dealing with “all aspects of the country” and the “overall situation”.<sup>1554</sup> KHIEU Samphan sent regular telegrams regarding the distribution of materials at the base or local level.<sup>1555</sup> Officials at the zone or autonomous sector level also received letters

6.2.3. Between the Zones and the Sectors

494. Just as there were specific times for the transmission of telegrams by zones to the Party Centre, there were separate schedules for communication between zones and sectors. These were designed in such a way as to ensure that communications between the various echelons did not overlap.<sup>1557</sup>

495. Witness SUON Kanil, who worked in the telegram decoding unit of the Central Zone, testified that the Central Zone authorities received telegrams from the sectors approximately once a day, and more often after 1978.<sup>1558</sup>

6.2.4. Between the Sectors and the Districts

496. Reports emanating from the districts were passed upwards through the sectors (and, if appropriate, zones) to the Party Centre.<sup>1559</sup>

497. Districts reported to sectors on matters such as the construction of dams and canals, agriculture, health and “good or bad elements”.<sup>1560</sup> As the secretary of Kampong Siem District, Witness PRAK Yut prepared monthly written reports for the sector committee on the implementation of plans and the situation within the district.<sup>1561</sup> Similarly, Witness SAO Sarun recalled sending reports on rice farming to the sector approximately once a week in his capacity as Pechreada District Secretary.<sup>1562</sup> District offices did not typically have telegraph capabilities, so written reports were sent to the sectors by messenger.<sup>1563</sup>

498. District and sector officials also met in person regularly. According to Witness SAO Sarun, district secretaries reported on the situations in their districts at meetings of the relevant sector committee.<sup>1564</sup>

499. Just as instructions handed down by the Party Centre to the zones were relayed by the zones to the sectors, sector authorities in turn passed these orders on to the districts.<sup>1565</sup>

6.2.5. Between the Districts and Sub-District Entities

500. District officials often met in person with the heads of communes or cooperatives to exchange information or communicate orders verbally.<sup>1566</sup> Witness YUN Kim, a commune chief during the DK period, told the Chamber that commune leaders met with district authorities weekly to report on production, health, culture and “the enemy situation” in the communes.<sup>1567</sup> If there was a pressing need to communicate between these meetings, the district sent messengers to the communes.<sup>1568</sup> Witness NEANG Ouch alias Ta San (Ta Mok’s brother-in-law, present in Tram Kak district from late 1977, then later District Secretary),<sup>1569</sup> testified that district officials similarly met with mobile unit chiefs to discuss work plans.<sup>1570</sup>

6.2.6. Communications with Foreign Countries

502. The DK state institutions sent telegrams to several foreign countries bearing greetings, expressions of solidarity and congratulations on significant occasions.<sup>1574</sup> Friendly socialist states sent similar messages in return.<sup>1575</sup>

6.3. Military Communications

507. Lines of communication within the RAK mirrored the vertical reporting structure on the civilian side of the CPK: that is, orders were transmitted downwards from the General Staff through the divisions to the lower units; information was reported upwards through the chain of command; and individual commanders at each level usually made contact only with the levels immediately above and below them.<sup>1586</sup>

6.3.1. Communication within the Party Centre

508. SON Sen, the chief of the General Staff,<sup>1587</sup> attended meetings of the Standing Committee and kept the Standing Committee informed of military affairs and matters of national defence.<sup>1588</sup> SON Sen also forwarded written messages and reports received from military commanders to other CPK leaders, including NUON Chea, with handwritten annotations and requests for instructions.<sup>1589</sup>

6.3.2. Communication between the General Staff and the Divisions

509. Military divisions under the command of the Party Centre reported to the General Staff as often as two or three times a day.<sup>1590</sup> The divisions and the General Staff communicated by radio or, if confidentiality was required, by telegraph, telephone or letter sent via messenger.<sup>1591</sup>

510. The commanders and deputy commanders of divisions and independent regiments also met SON Sen in person from time to time.<sup>1592</sup> At these meetings, the military officers updated SON Sen on the situation within their units, and SON Sen issued instructions and political guidance.<sup>1593</sup> Witness PRUM Sarat, Commander of Regiment 140 belonging to Division 164, testified that large political study sessions were organised by the General Staff every year.<sup>1594</sup> At least one large political study session conducted by the General Staff and instructed by SON Sen was attended by soldiers at the division, regiment, battalion, company and platoon level.<sup>1595</sup> Military personnel also occasionally participated in large meetings or rallies in Phnom Penh, some of which

511. Written reports put before the Chamber demonstrate that the divisions regularly sent information to the General Staff on enemy activities;<sup>1597</sup> agriculture and the growing of rice; internal enemies and subversive activities within the units; and the progress of construction projects.<sup>1598</sup> Divisions also contacted the General Staff to seek orders.<sup>1599</sup>

6.3.3. Communication between the Divisions and the Zones

512. Some military divisions not under the command of the Party Centre reported to the zones. For instance, Witness MEAS Voeun, Deputy Commander of Division 1 (stationed in Koh Kong) testified that his division had to report to the West Zone.<sup>1600</sup> Conversely, Witness MOENG Vet of Division 117 of Sector 505 (Kratie) testified that his division reported to the General Staff (or to Centre Division 502 that would help them copy the message), and only directly to Office 870 under certain conditions.<sup>1601</sup> The Chamber thus finds that reporting lines differed per division and according to what the circumstances necessitated.

6.3.4. Communication within the Divisions

513. Having received orders from the General Staff, division commanders would relay these instructions to the lower units, often by meeting their officers or leaders in

Company commanders reported to their superiors in writing and by radio.<sup>1605</sup> Battalion commanders submitted written reports to regiment commanders, which were delivered by messenger.<sup>1606</sup> The regiments in turn sent written reports to the division by telegraph and by messenger on at least a monthly basis.<sup>1607</sup>

6.3.5. Communication between the Divisions

516. The Chamber heard equivocal evidence regarding the degree and extent of communications between divisions. Witness MOENG Vet testified that Commander Roeun (i.e. SAO Saroeun) of Division 801 (a centre division) and Commander Rom of Division 117 (Kratie, Sector 505) did not communicate via the General Staff, but communicated directly with each other via radio or telegram.<sup>1608</sup> Witness MEAS Voeun also testified that lateral communication took place between divisions, at least in the West Zone at the regimental level, for the purpose of coordinating tasks.<sup>1609</sup> However, Witness CHUON Thy testified that no communications took place between the

7. ROLES AND FUNCTIONS – NUON CHEA

517. According to the Closing Order, before and during the DK period, NUON Chea was a prominent member of the Party Centre, his responsibilities including propaganda, training and discipline of cadres as well as internal and external security-related matters.<sup>1611</sup>

518. At the beginning of the substantive hearing in Case 002/01, NUON Chea made an opening statement.<sup>1612</sup> For a period thereafter, during the historical background segment of the first trial in Case 002/01, NUON Chea agreed to answer questions from the Judges and the Parties.<sup>1613</sup> He made several statements regarding his roles and functions with the CPK relevant to the DK period.<sup>1614</sup> As further noted below, NUON Chea

<sup>1611</sup> The Roles and Functions of NUON Chea are discussed in paras 869-894 of the Closing Order. In addition, paras 895-992 are relevant to NUON Chea's participation in the Joint Criminal Enterprise.

7.1. Background Information and Pre-DK Period

520. NUON Chea, whose birth name is LAO Kim Lorn, was born on 7 July 1926, in Voat Kor village, Sangkae district, Battambang province.<sup>1623</sup> NUON Chea studied initially in Battambang, continuing his secondary education in Thailand in 1941, and then at the Thammasat University in Bangkok where he started to study law under the name of RUNGLERT Laodi. During part of that period, he also worked in the Thai Ministry of Finance and in the Thai Ministry of Foreign Affairs.<sup>1624</sup> While in Thailand, NUON Chea joined the Youth for Democracy movement of Thailand and participated in discussions about the situation in Cambodia. In 1950, he joined the Communist Party of Thailand, later returning to Cambodia to join the Khmer Issarak, a resistance movement fighting against the French colonial authority.<sup>1625</sup>

521. Around the same time, NUON Chea joined the then Indochinese Communist Party,<sup>1626</sup> giving as his reasons his concern at the treatment of Cambodian peasants by French colonial officials and rich Cambodian landowners.<sup>1627</sup> From about 1950, NUON Chea's activism intensified as he engaged in propaganda and education activities, which included publishing newspapers and conducting training sessions for peasants in the rural areas.<sup>1628</sup>

522. Around 1951-54, NUON Chea was sent by the Party to study and receive political training in Vietnam. After the Geneva Accords of May 1954, he returned to Cambodia, and claimed that Party members were being arrested, imprisoned or had left the movement, and that peasants' farming activities were being obstructed by the harsh policies of the government.<sup>1629</sup> Before settling in Phnom Penh in 1955, NUON Chea moved among different locations in the countryside, such as in Boeng Lvea, along the Stung Chinit River, and in Samlaut, to disguise his active involvement in the revolutionary movement, and ensure his personal security.<sup>1630</sup>

523. In Phnom Penh, NUON Chea continued his underground work for the revolutionary movement through his involvement with the Party City Committee.<sup>1631</sup> NUON Chea was introduced to POL Pot in 1954-55, after NUON Chea had returned from Vietnam.<sup>1632</sup> POL Pot and NUON Chea, who were both members of the KPRP, initially worked together as assistants to TOU Samouth.<sup>1633</sup> Later, in 1960, NUON Chea

526. According to NUON Chea, he met with KHIEU Samphan for the first time near the Aoral Mountain, after KHIEU Samphan went to the maquis, but he does not remember when.<sup>1643</sup> As noted below in Section 8, KHIEU Samphan remembered this differently, and maintained that it was at S-71 that he first met NUON Chea and POL Pot.<sup>1644</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that KHIEU Samphan and NUON Chea were acquainted with each other as CPK members by September 1970.

527. In 1970, when NORODOM Sihanouk was overthrown, NUON Chea was visiting the East Zone and only managed to return to Phnom Penh after a few months. Once there, he continued to travel to meet POL Pot and IENG Sary to brief them on the situation in Phnom Penh and to receive instructions from POL Pot.<sup>1645</sup> As the revolution

7.2. Status and Role within the Party

530. Since the First Party Congress in 1960, NUON Chea was the Deputy Secretary of the Party, then named the Workers’ Party of Kampuchea (“WPK”).<sup>1658</sup> He retained this appointment during subsequent Party congresses as well as throughout the DK period.<sup>1659</sup> After TOU Samouth’s disappearance, POL Pot was appointed as Secretary of the Party in 1963. NUON Chea was the subject of suspicions because of the earlier defection of his uncle by marriage, SIEU Heng, to LON Nol during the Sangkum regime. At the time, SIEU Heng was the secretary of the Khmer People’s Revolutionary Party responsible for the party’s rural membership.<sup>1660</sup> Therefore, NUON Chea supported the election of POL Pot as Secretary of the party while he would remain the Deputy Secretary.<sup>1661</sup> However, he agreed with POL Pot that they would work together.<sup>1662</sup>

<sup>1657</sup> Standing Committee Minutes, E3/225, 1 June 1976, ERN (En) 00182719. Although the English translation of E3/225 omits “comrade”, the Chamber has relied on the original Khmer document. NUON Chea is usually referred to in minutes of the Standing Committee as “Comrade Deputy Secretary” or as “Comrade Nuon”. See below, fn. 1667.

534. Upon returning to Phnom Penh after 17 April 1975, NUON Chea eventually took up his permanent residence at K-3, where he lived and worked with other CPK leaders, including POL Pot, IENG Sary, SON Sen, VORN Vet and KHIEU Samphan. From K-3, NUON Chea frequently travelled to K-1, POL Pot's residence located on the riverside, where important meetings of the Party Centre would also be held.<sup>1669</sup> During the DK period, NUON Chea continued to travel to the countryside, visiting construction and agricultural projects, meeting with zone leaders and holding education and propaganda meetings.<sup>1670</sup> On at least one occasion, NUON Chea travelled to China and North Korea on an official visit.<sup>1671</sup>

7.4. Roles During the DK Period

535. In addition to his roles within the Party, NUON Chea occupied other official roles during the DK period. According to the Closing Order, NUON Chea was the Chairman of the Standing Committee of the PRA and, in September 1976, he was formally appointed acting Prime Minister of DK, after POL Pot took a period of temporary leave allegedly due to some medical issues.<sup>1672</sup>

7.4.1. Chairman of the People's Representative Assembly

536. NUON Chea confirmed his role as the Chairman of the PRA during the DK period.<sup>1673</sup> Following a decision of the CPK Central Committee on 30 March 1976,<sup>1674</sup> he was also appointed Chairman of the Standing Committee of the PRA, a title which he retained after the fall of DK.<sup>1675</sup> Other contemporary DK documents, including various speeches he gave in that capacity to foreign dignitaries and delegations, identify NUON Chea as the Chairman of the Assembly's Standing Committee.<sup>1676</sup>

537. NUON Chea stated that this was one of the roles he exercised during the DK period, leaving him in charge of ensuring that laws were adopted. He claimed that because of the situation in Cambodia, especially with regard to the ongoing conflict with Vietnam, time available for legislative work was not “sufficient” and it “was not a main priority”.<sup>1677</sup> However, the minutes of a Standing Committee Meeting held in March 1976 and attended by NUON Chea, indicate that the PRA was more a façade designed to feign compliance with the Party Statute.<sup>1678</sup> The Chamber thus finds that the Assembly met rarely, possibly only once during the DK period, and did not pass any laws.<sup>1679</sup>

7.4.2. Acting Prime Minister

538. NUON Chea denied having ever been appointed as acting Prime Minister of DK. Although recognising that POL Pot took a period of leave of absence in 1976, he indicated that SON Sen was the person appointed to substitute for POL Pot.<sup>1680</sup>

7.5. Roles in Propaganda and Other Related Matters

541. In several instances before the Chamber, NUON Chea reiterated that, within the Party Centre and throughout its existence, he had primary responsibility for propaganda-related matters as well as for education of peasants, cadres and other Party members, focusing in particular on the main principles and the economic policies of the Party.<sup>1688</sup>

542. Several witnesses testified that they attended meetings, training or study sessions at which NUON Chea appeared as the chairman, trainer or speaker. These events were held before and during the DK period at the sector, district, zone or centre levels throughout the country and in Phnom Penh, particularly at the Olympic Stadium and at Borei Keila.<sup>1689</sup> During the events, revolutionary policies were discussed, including

545. NUON Chea’s responsibility for propaganda and education-related matters included responsibility for the CPK’s internal educational magazine, the Revolutionary Flag.<sup>1696</sup> At trial in Case 002/01, NUON Chea made inconsistent statements concerning his participation in the publication of the Revolutionary Flag, first denying any involvement in its initial establishment,<sup>1697</sup> thereafter stating that the Standing Committee made the Revolutionary Flag and admitting that he and POL Pot were the ones who wrote it,<sup>1698</sup> and subsequently denying he authored any of the articles in the magazine or had a final say in the magazine’s publication.<sup>1699</sup> These initial and subsequent denials are unconvincing, however, in view of NUON Chea’s earlier involvement in the publication of several Party-related newspapers as well as his later description of the purposes and the resources implemented for the publication of the Revolutionary Flag.<sup>1700</sup> of the Party, responsible for organisational matters including monitoring of Party members and their induction in offices and ministries.<sup>1701</sup> In Case 002/01, the Trial Chamber found that, while there was no direct evidence of any formal appointment to this role, NUON Chea's formal responsibility for propaganda and education-related matters also extended to the discipline of cadres and other internal security matters.<sup>1702</sup> The Chamber based this finding on (i) the evidence given by Witness SALOTH Ban, POL Pot's nephew who worked at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and had particular knowledge of the roles of POL Pot and NUON Chea and their relationship, and who testified that NUON Chea was in charge of the appointment and discipline of Party members;<sup>1703</sup> (ii) the evidence given by Witness NORNG Sophang, a CPK telegram operator who worked in several offices, and who stated that telegrams regarding the internal security situation and the violation of the Party moral code by cadres were directed to NUON Chea;<sup>1704</sup> and (iii) with regard to the responsibility for "Party Affairs, Social Action, Culture, Propaganda and Education",<sup>1705</sup> the evidence given by Duch who indicated that "Party Affairs" referred to the recruitment of new members as well as the monitoring and imposition of disciplinary actions on Party members.<sup>1706</sup> However, the Supreme Court Chamber found that this evidence was not sufficient to establish that NUON Chea had a formal role in these matters. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court Chamber concluded that "it is clear from the evidence before the Trial Chamber, that NUON Chea did have a role to play in that regard, although the precise contours of his involvement are not known".<sup>1707</sup>

547. The Chamber accordingly finds that NUON Chea's responsibility for propaganda and education-related matters also extended, at least informally, to the discipline of cadres and other internal security matters.

7.6. Role in the Military and Security Apparatus

548. NUON Chea denied having ever had any role or responsibility in matters concerning security, including military affairs and internal security, during DK or throughout the CPK period.<sup>1708</sup> In contrast to this testimony, the Chamber considered a great deal of evidence demonstrating that NUON Chea was involved in military and security matters both prior to and during the DK period.

7.6.1. Membership of the CPK Military Committee

549. According to the Closing Order, during the period of Democratic Kampuchea NUON Chea was a member of the Military Committee of the CPK Central Committee and was responsible for security and military affairs.<sup>1709</sup> NUON Chea confirmed the existence of the Military Committee, but consistently denied being a member of it.<sup>1710</sup>

550. The evidence on this point in Case 002/02 was conflicting. In an interview with Stephen HEDER, IENG Sary indicated that the Military Committee existed and that NUON Chea was part of it, together with POL Pot and SON Sen, among others.<sup>1711</sup> Duch stated to the International Co-Investigating Judge in February 2016 that NUON Chea was a member of the Military Committee.<sup>1712</sup> At trial in Case 002/01, Witness SUONG Sikoeun clarified previous statements made before the Co-Investigating Judges and indicated that he heard of NUON Chea being a member of the Military Committee only after 1979, from articles and books he read and that he did not know personally whether NUON Chea was a member of the Military Committee of the Central Committee during the DK period.<sup>1713</sup> Expert Philip SHORT did not believe that NUON Chea was a member of the Military Committee, although he stated that through his political leadership within the Party, NUON Chea exercised control over the military.<sup>1714</sup> Similarly, discussing NUON Chea's role vis-à-vis the Military Committee, Expert David CHANDLER believed that, due to his position within the Party, NUON Chea exercised a prominent role in the Party policy and decision-making process, including those matters relevant to military affairs.<sup>1715</sup> During the substantive hearings in Case 002/02, the issue of whether or not NUON Chea was a member of the Military Committee was not revisited.

551. In light of the Accused's denial that he was a member of the CPK Military Committee and the inconsistencies in the evidence before the Chamber in Case 002/02, the Chamber cannot conclude beyond reasonable doubt that NUON Chea was a member of the Military Committee during the DK period.

7.6.2. Involvement in Other Military and Security-Related Matters

552. NUON Chea was closely involved in the decision to include revolutionary violence in the Party policies and ultimately, in 1968, to initiate the armed struggle.<sup>1716</sup> There is also evidence that, during the GRUNK period, NUON Chea was appointed as the Vice-President of the High Military Command of the People's Armed Forces for

553. NUON Chea was also involved in the procurement of arms and ammunitions for use by the movement, particularly from China, via Vietnam.<sup>1718</sup> In 1973, NUON Chea was additionally entrusted by POL Pot with the responsibility to provide security for the visit of NORODOM Sihanouk to the liberated areas in Cambodia.<sup>1719</sup> Finally, NUON Chea confirmed having participated in the planning and decision-making regarding the final attack on Phnom Penh, participating in several meetings during which the military advance of the CPNLA and the plans for the liberation of the capital in 1975 and moving to the forward command base of B-5 for the final assault of Phnom Penh were devised.<sup>1720</sup>

554. During the DK period, NUON Chea's involvement in external security matters primarily involved the escalating violence between Cambodia and Vietnam. In a meeting of the Standing Committee in March 1976, during which POL Pot was absent, NUON Chea made several comments and provided instructions concerning the border situation with Vietnam, indicating that both political and diplomatic measures were required, as well as military force.<sup>1721</sup> NUON Chea was also present and made

556. NUON Chea was involved in matters relating to the activities of the military other than the conflict in Vietnam. including POL Pot, SON Sen and Ta Mok, as well as several military commanders, during which members of the East Zone, particularly SAO Phim, were declared internal enemies of the Party to be purged. During the meeting, NUON Chea spoke of the arrest of several members of the East Zone.<sup>1733</sup>

559. Actual membership of the Military Committee was of little significance due to NUON Chea's very senior positions within the Party. The Chamber finds that NUON Chea received detailed information about and had considerable influence on DK military policy and its implementation.<sup>1734</sup>

7.6.3. Supervision of S-21 Security Centre

560. NUON Chea denied any involvement with the operation of S-21, subsequently availing himself of his right to remain silent regarding this topic.<sup>1735</sup> However, the Chamber heard considerable evidence to the contrary. As detailed in Section 12.2.6: Oversight of S-21 Security Centre, Witness Duch, who chaired the S-21 Security Office from 1976 to 1979, discussed at length NUON Chea's role in connection with internal security matters, particularly the operation of S-21. As the evidence discussed below in the relevant section demonstrates, Duch regularly reported to NUON Chea about his activities at S-21 and NUON Chea often gave him instructions with regard to confessions and the treatment of the detainees.<sup>1736</sup> More particularly, NUON Chea requested that Duch have the names of certain Party members removed from confessions accusing them of betraying the Party, including references to KHIEU

<sup>1734</sup> On appeal to the Supreme Court Chamber in Case 002/01, NUON Chea argued that the Trial Chamber had erred when finding that NUON Chea had considerable influence on DK military policy and its implementation. Samphan.<sup>1737</sup> Duch testified that NUON Chea's involvement with the operation of S-21 intensified significantly in August 1977, after SON Sen was transferred to the border with Vietnam as the conflict with Cambodia escalated.<sup>1738</sup> A number of S-21 confessions placed on the Case File contain annotations indicating that these were forwarded to NUON Chea.<sup>1739</sup> Witness SAUT Toeung, NUON Chea's bodyguard and driver, also confirmed having delivered several documents from Duch to NUON Chea and vice versa.<sup>1740</sup> The Chamber is satisfied on this basis that NUON Chea was involved in the supervision of the operation of S-21.

7.7. Summary of Findings

561. Based on the evidence cited in this Section, the Trial Chamber finds that as Deputy Secretary of the Party, and temporarily as acting Prime Minister, NUON Chea's control extended not only to political decisions, but also to the government and the administration of DK as well as to military matters. While it remains unclear whether he was a member of the Military Committee of the CPK, NUON Chea's involvement in military and security matters was intrinsically linked with his long standing authority within the Party. NUON Chea actively participated in the decisions concerning RAK's operations, particularly concerning the war against Vietnam, and he received regular reports and gave instructions with regard to security matters, either directly or through decisions of the Party. NUON Chea's role in connection with propaganda and education also extended to and encompassed Party discipline and internal security matters, as well as more generally the enemy situation, advocating for the uncovering of enemies and their elimination. Due to his seniority within the leadership of the CPK, NUON Chea enjoyed oversight of all Party activities extending beyond the roles and responsibilities formally entrusted to him during the DK period, and exercised, together with POL Pot, the ultimate decision-making power of the Party.<sup>1741</sup>

8. ROLES AND FUNCTIONS – KHIEU SAMPHAN

562. According to the Closing Order, KHIEU Samphan was a prominent member of the Party Centre whose responsibilities included roles in Office 870, GRUNK, the DK State Presidium and the Commerce Ministry or Committee.<sup>1742</sup>

563. Upon commencement of substantive hearings in Case 002/01, KHIEU Samphan made an opening statement.<sup>1743</sup> He subsequently answered questions about his identity and personal background, and commented on certain paragraphs of the Closing Order by reading from a prepared statement.<sup>1744</sup> He also responded briefly to questions from the Chamber about specific documents on the Case File.<sup>1745</sup> Thereafter, KHIEU Samphan decided to exercise his right to remain silent and declined to respond to questions, indicating that he would do so after the presentation of all the evidence by the Co-Prosecutors.<sup>1746</sup> In May and June 2013 he answered a number of questions put to him by Civil Parties with regard to his position of responsibility during the DK period and his knowledge of crimes.<sup>1747</sup> He subsequently informed the Chamber that he was again exercising his right to remain silent.<sup>1748</sup> On 31 October 2013 KHIEU Samphan made his final statement in Case 002/01.<sup>1749</sup> Upon commencement of proceedings in Case 002/02, KHIEU Samphan did not make an opening statement but indicated that he had instructed his counsel not to participate in hearings until his appeal brief in Case 002/01 had been finalised.<sup>1750</sup> He exercised his right to remain silent during the entirety of the Case 002/02 proceedings, and made a final statement on 23 June 2017.<sup>1751</sup>

564. KHIEU Samphan alias “Haem”, “Hem” or “Nan” was born on 27 July 1931 in Chek or Rumchek commune, Rumduol district, Svay Rieng province.<sup>1752</sup> He attended primary school in Kampong Cham province, and went on to attend the Preah Sihanouk secondary or junior high school, also in Kampong Cham, where he first met SALOTH Sar (later known as POL Pot).<sup>1753</sup> After graduating from Preah Sihanouk School, KHIEU Samphan moved to Phnom Penh to attend Lycée Sisowath.<sup>1754</sup> Following his graduation in 1951, KHIEU Samphan worked as a teacher in a technical junior high school and commenced law studies in Phnom Penh.<sup>1755</sup> In 1953, he was awarded a scholarship by the Cambodian government and travelled to France to pursue further law studies.<sup>1756</sup>

565. A few months after his arrival in Paris, KHIEU Samphan joined the Cercle Marxiste (Marxist Circle), a discussion group founded and regularly attended by other Khmer students in France including IENG Sary, IENG Thirith, HOU Youn, OK Sakun and SON Sen.<sup>1757</sup> SALOTH Sar, who had also been involved in the Marxist Circle, had returned to Cambodia in 1952 prior to KHIEU Samphan's arrival in Paris.<sup>1758</sup> Approximately two to three months after arriving, KHIEU Samphan left Paris for Montpellier, where he continued his law studies and took classes in economics.<sup>1759</sup> He continued to participate in the activities of the Marxist Circle, joining the other members of the Circle for an excursion during one summer vacation.<sup>1760</sup> In 1955, KHIEU Samphan joined the French Communist Party.<sup>1761</sup>

Problems of Industrialisation) at the University of Paris.<sup>1766</sup> In his thesis, KHIEU Samphan characterised the Cambodian economy as “backward” and underdeveloped, partly as a result of “international integration”, and proposed fundamental structural reforms (such as a state monopoly on foreign trade, the reduction of land rents and a new agrarian credit system) aimed at fostering a more self-sufficient nation.<sup>1767</sup> He wrote that it was necessary to drive “landlords, retailers and usurers” away from their “unproductive activities” and “encourage them to participate in production”, and to “transfer capital from the hyperactive commercial sector into more directly productive sectors”.<sup>1768</sup> He also suggested that “[m]ethodical organisation of the peasant force, into mutual aid teams and then into cooperatives, will magnify its effectiveness ten times over and make possible the clearing of new land, its irrigation, and its draining”.<sup>1769</sup>

568. The dissertation emphasised the importance of industrialisation and technology for Cambodia’s economic development, and did not advocate the abolition of currency or private property.<sup>1770</sup> The Chamber agrees with Expert Philip SHORT that while in some respects the ideas expressed in KHIEU Samphan’s thesis prefigured aspects of CPK ideology, it was not a “blueprint” for the policies that were ultimately enacted during the DK period.<sup>1771</sup>

569. Not long after his return to Cambodia in 1959, KHIEU Samphan founded L’Observateur, a French-language newspaper, publication of which was targeted at the upper stratum of Cambodian society and contained a critique of the political landscape under NORODOM Sihanouk while unequivocally supporting his policy of neutrality.<sup>1772</sup> KHIEU Samphan denied that the newspaper was communist publication,

572. In April 1967, NORODOM Sihanouk publicly accused KHIEU Samphan, HU Nim and HOU Youn of fomenting a peasant uprising in the village of Samlaut, Battambang province, and threatened to have them court-martialled.<sup>1782</sup> Fearing for their safety, the three men fled Phnom Penh and, at the invitation of the CPK, took refuge in the countryside near Ang Tasom, Takeo province, under the protection of Ta Mok.<sup>1783</sup> clandestine CPK network.<sup>1784</sup> In 1969, he spent time with Ta Mok at the latter's headquarters near Aoral Mountain in Kampong Speu province.<sup>1785</sup> Although IENG Sary and NUON Chea suggested that KHIEU Samphan was already a member of the CPK before this time,<sup>1786</sup> their evidence was not consistent and did not give the Chamber sufficient reason to doubt KHIEU Samphan's testimony that he was inducted as a Party member by Ta Mok in 1969.<sup>1787</sup> Regardless of the precise date of his induction to the CPK, the Chamber is satisfied that by 1970, KHIEU Samphan was personally acquainted with returned students who would later occupy prominent positions in the CPK, including IENG Sary, IENG Thirith, SON Sen, HOU Youn, HU Nim, OK Sakun and THIOEUNN Mumm.

8.1.3. 1970 – 17 April 1975

575. Following the overthrow of his government by LON Nol in 1970, NORODOM Sihanouk announced the formation of FUNK.<sup>1790</sup> POL Pot sent NORODOM Sihanouk a message of support in the names of KHIEU Samphan, HU Nim and HOU Youn,<sup>1791</sup> allegedly without their knowledge.<sup>1792</sup> While no further evidence sheds light on their exact involvement in this correspondence, the Chamber notes that KHIEU Samphan later neither denied his support for FUNK nor sought publicly to clarify his role. At some point between March and September 1970, KHIEU Samphan, HU Nim and HOU Youn moved from Ta Mok's Aoral Mountain base to the CPK senior leaders' headquarters at S-71 near the Stung Chinit River.<sup>1793</sup> While NUON Chea testified that he met KHIEU Samphan at Mount Aoral,<sup>1794</sup> KHIEU Samphan has consistently maintained that it was at S-71 that he first met NUON Chea and POL Pot, revealed then to be his former classmate, SALOTH Sar.<sup>1795</sup> In the absence of further evidence, these competing accounts did not permit a definitive finding on the location of their first meeting. Nevertheless, the Chamber deems the precise location to be inconsequential and has no reason to doubt KHIEU Samphan's account concerning the timing of his introduction to NUON Chea. It is satisfied that KHIEU Samphan, NUON Chea and POL Pot were acquainted with each other as CPK members by September 1970, at latest.

576. Between May and August 1970, KHIEU Samphan was named GRUNK Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence.<sup>1796</sup> KHIEU Samphan conceded in a publication that he played “an important, if not an indispensable” role as a liaison between the CPK and NORODOM Sihanouk at this time,<sup>1797</sup> clarifying that he was the only person who could forge relations as NORODOM Sihanouk was not acquainted with POL Pot.<sup>1798</sup> Further, according to his own statement, he was also named Deputy Chairman of FUNK.<sup>1799</sup> KHIEU Samphan was not consulted prior these appointments.<sup>1800</sup> He claimed that despite his official positions, he never actually held any military or executive authority, and in particular that it was POL Pot who was in charge of the armed forces.<sup>1801</sup> He further stated that as an “intellectual” of the “feudal class”, he was neither trusted nor considered to be a true Party member at the time, conclusively establish that such a meeting took place,<sup>1820</sup> KHIEU Samphan referred to the 1975 Congress and the decisions reportedly reached there in a speech he delivered the following year.<sup>1821</sup> Shortly before the fall of Phnom Penh, KHIEU Samphan relocated to B-5 in Tang Poun village, Kampong Chhnang province, to “follow the last offensive against the capital more closely”.<sup>1822</sup>

582. The Chamber is satisfied that, as a longstanding political figure,<sup>1823</sup> KHIEU Samphan played an important role in winning support for the revolutionary movement between 1970 and 1975. His appointment to key posts in GRUNK including that of Deputy Prime Minister, role in reassuring the public about the CPK’s plans, performance of diplomatic duties, role in liaising with NORODOM Sihanouk, work in preparing and disseminating propaganda material and calls for violent struggle against the LON Nol regime in publicly-broadcasted speeches all served to lend and bolster the legitimacy of the CPK-dominated resistance movement.

leaders including POL Pot, KHIEU Samphan, NUON Chea, IENG Sary and Zone Secretaries attending an April 1975 meeting at Office B-5 in Tang Poun village, Kampong Chhnang province.<sup>1827</sup> The witness stated that attendees including KHIEU Samphan and NUON Chea signalled their agreement with the plan to evacuate Phnom Penh and that both Accused individually expressed their opinions on the topic.<sup>1828</sup> Consistently with these statements, PHY Phuon in court recalled being posted to Office B-5 “[a]fter 1974”, testifying that “as early as April 1975” a meeting was held at which POL Pot, NUON Chea, KHIEU Samphan and other senior leaders discussed the evacuation of the capital.<sup>1829</sup> He confirmed that on this occasion, all members signalled their approval for the idea.<sup>1830</sup>

585. Both Accused confirmed that the April 1975 meeting took place. According to NUON Chea, POL Pot stayed at B-5 from early April 1975 in order “to command the [...] liberation of Phnom Penh”.<sup>1831</sup> KHIEU Samphan acknowledged that he had relocated to B-5 to “follow the last offensive against the capital more closely” and recalled POL Pot, NUON Chea and the Zone Secretaries as having been present.<sup>1832</sup> IENG Sary was also aware of the meeting, which he placed in late March or early April 1975, at which evacuation of Phnom Penh was discussed.<sup>1833</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that these accounts sufficiently corroborate the time, place and subject matter of the April 1975 meeting described by PHY Phuon.

586. In court, PHY Phuon was separately examined on the events of 1974 and recalled his posting at some point in that year to Office B-5, which he described as the “command centre to attack Phnom Penh”.<sup>1834</sup> He further recalled a “big meeting” whose subject matter was “not different from those at various other meetings” held at the time, namely the “general situation in and outside the country and the situation of the resistance movement and the progress we had made so far concerning the liberated zones".<sup>1835</sup> In view of his otherwise clear recollections about the events of 1974 including a "big meeting" whose subject matter and location did not correspond to the June 1974 meeting regarding the evacuation of Phnom Penh, the Chamber is satisfied that the witness was here in fact not referring to the June 1974 meeting concerning the evacuation of Phnom Penh but to the April 1975 meeting.

587. NUON Chea testified that neither IENG Sary nor KHIEU Samphan were present at the June 1974 meeting.<sup>1836</sup> The evidence shows that IENG Sary and KHIEU Samphan travelled to Laos in early June 1974 before returning to the "liberated" zone in Cambodia along the Ho Chi Minh Trail.<sup>1837</sup> The precise timing of their return and movements thereafter are not clear. KHIEU Samphan's wife and Trial Chamber Witness SO Socheat testified that her husband was not with her when she gave birth to their child on 4 May 1974 but joined her approximately one month later for a period of between three to five months. She variously placed their location at Meak village after giving birth and/or shortly before the fall of Phnom Penh.<sup>1838</sup>

588. In light of his clear and consistent descriptions of the April 1975 meeting to the OCIJ investigators, the Chamber is of the view that PHY Phuon conflated the events of the 1974 and 1975 meetings when testifying in court. Accordingly, the Chamber is not satisfied that KHIEU Samphan was present at the June 1974 meeting.<sup>1839</sup>

The Chamber notes its finding in the Case 002/01 Trial Judgement that SO Socheat gave birth to her child on 6 June 1974. On review of the witness's testimony, the Chamber finds anew that it was in fact 4 May 1974. See Case 002/01 Trial Judgement, para. 139.

In light of consistent evidence indicating that other senior leaders resided and/or worked at K-3, the absence of a corroborative account, the witness's evasive demeanour in court and the internal inconsistencies evident in her testimony, the Chamber accords no weight to her assertion that KHIEU Samphan was the sole occupant of K-3. See also, DK Report of Offices K1-16, E3/858, undated, ERN (En) 00391725-00391726 (listing guards for "Uncle II", "Brother Van", "Hem" and "Vorn").

8.3. Roles During the DK Period

591. According to the Closing Order, KHIEU Samphan continued to hold the titles of Deputy Prime Minister, Minister of National Defence and CPNLAF Commander-in-Chief after 17 April 1975, served as President of the State Presidium after the adoption of the DK Constitution, was a leading member of Office 870 and had responsibility for commerce.<sup>1850</sup> The Closing Order also alleges that KHIEU Samphan was a member of the CPK Central Committee and attended and participated in numerous meetings of the Standing Committee.<sup>1851</sup> In addition, the Closing Order suggests that KHIEU Samphan assumed responsibility of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in IENG Sary's absence.<sup>1852</sup>

592. After the fall of Phnom Penh in April 1975, NORODOM Sihanouk's GRUNK formally took power in Cambodia, although Sihanouk himself did not return to the country until September 1975.<sup>1853</sup> KHIEU Samphan retained his role as Deputy Prime Minister and continued to exercise diplomatic functions in that capacity,<sup>1854</sup> including meeting foreign delegations<sup>1855</sup> and leading Cambodian delegations abroad to China,

593. International media reported that KHIEU Samphan chaired a “Special National Congress” from 25 to 27 April 1975.<sup>1858</sup> Media reports also placed KHIEU Samphan at the Third National Congress in December 1975, at which he reportedly announced the adoption of a new draft constitution for DK.<sup>1859</sup> Much like the purported FUNK Congress in February 1975, it is not clear to the Chamber whether the April and December 1975 congresses genuinely took place.<sup>1860</sup> The Chamber nevertheless recognises that the attribution of such events to KHIEU Samphan as GRUNK Deputy Prime Minister and FUNK representative, among others, served effectively to legitimise the CPK’s agenda internationally.

594. The Chamber is satisfied that KHIEU Samphan continued to hold the position of GRUNK Deputy Prime Minister after 17 April 1975 and continued in that capacity to exercise diplomatic functions until NORODOM Sihanouk’s resignation as Head of State in early April 1976.

595. KHIEU Samphan retained the titles of Minister of National Defence and CPNLAF Commander-in-Chief after 17 April 1975.<sup>1861</sup> However, the Chamber is unable to determine whether he maintained the title of Commander-in-Chief following the CPNLAF's reformation into the RAK in July 1975.<sup>1862</sup> While witnesses indicated that he met with leaders, military commanders and sector-level officials at which military matters were discussed,<sup>1863</sup> KHIEU Samphan's steadfast denial that he ever held real authority over the military was corroborated by other witnesses.<sup>1864</sup> The Chamber is satisfied on the totality of evidence before it that KHIEU Samphan did not have operational military authority during the DK period.

8.3.2. President of the State Presidium

596. In April 1976, NORODOM Sihanouk and all members of GRUNK resigned to make way for the new government established by the DK Constitution.<sup>1865</sup> The DK Constitution effectively abolished the monarchy and instituted a State Presidium consisting of a President and two Vice-Presidents responsible for "representing the State of Democratic Kampuchea inside and outside the country" in accordance with the laws and political lines of the DK's legislative arm, the Kampuchean People's Representative Assembly (PRA).<sup>1866</sup> In principle, candidates to State Presidium posts were to be elected by the PRA.<sup>1867</sup> In reality, however, KHIEU Samphan was appointed as Chairman of the State Presidium by the CPK Central Committee on 30 March 1976; days before NORODOM Sihanouk's resignation as Head of State and approximately

599. The Chamber is satisfied that KHIEU Samphan held the position of President of the State Presidium from late March or early April 1976 until the DK's collapse in early January 1979. In accordance with the largely symbolic nature of the role, the Chamber is satisfied that KHIEU Samphan's responsibilities as part of this role were mostly confined to diplomatic duties within DK and the general promotion of the CPK line.

8.3.3. Membership of the Central and Standing Committees

600. KHIEU Samphan became a full-rights member of the CPK Central Committee in 1976, having been a candidate member since 1971.<sup>1882</sup> He stated that the Central Committee was formally the "supreme organisation of the entire Party", but clarified that it "existed only on paper", convened twice yearly and was not an "executive organisation".<sup>1883</sup> Although he claimed that the Central Committee merely discussed the implementation of Standing Committee policies, he nevertheless acknowledged that the Central Committee issued directives intended to correct "abuses" and improve conditions in the countryside, particularly in the first year of the DK regime.<sup>1884</sup>

601. KHIEU Samphan was never formally a member of the CPK Standing Committee.<sup>1885</sup> He admitted that he attended what he described as "open" or "expanded" meetings of the Standing Committee where, among other matters, topics relevant to his diplomatic duties were discussed, but has consistently asserted that he did not voice opinions or participate in decision-making during those meetings.<sup>1886</sup> The

Co-Prosecutors allege that KHIEU Samphan was a de facto member of the Standing Committee and that his attendance at its meetings placed him within a small group of powerful and fully-informed members of the Party Centre.<sup>1887</sup>

602. Thirty-eight sets of Standing Committee meeting minutes were put before the Chamber, dating from August 1975 to June 1976. Of these, 22 contain attendee lists, with 16 recording “Comrade Hem” as having been present and overall the most frequent attendee behind Permanent Members NUON Chea and POL Pot.<sup>1888</sup> In a 2007 interview with the Co-Investigating Judges, KHIEU Samphan acknowledged attending approximately 14 of these meetings.<sup>1889</sup> The surviving minutes demonstrate that KHIEU Samphan indeed participated in some Standing Committee meetings. Although the minutes do not always attribute remarks to individual speakers, they indicate that KHIEU Samphan contributed on at least two occasions, reporting to the Committee on relations with NORODOM Sihanouk and on the PRA “election” of 20 March 1976.<sup>1890</sup>

603. Moreover, despite repeatedly stating that he was not kept well-informed during the DK era,<sup>1891</sup> and despite specifically denying knowledge of arrests,<sup>1892</sup> KHIEU Samphan was present at Standing Committee meetings during which arrests,<sup>1893</sup>

604. The Chamber is satisfied that KHIEU Samphan was not only placed within a small group of well-informed CPK members as a result of his membership of the Central Committee, but was also in a position of unique standing within the Party by virtue of his attendance at numerous Standing Committee meetings, where important matters were discussed and crucial decisions were made.<sup>1902</sup>

8.3.4. Residual Functions

605. The Chamber has evidence of further functions performed by KHIEU Samphan during the DK period which did not apparently fall within the remit of his formal positions or which the Chamber was unable to attribute to a particular role.

606. In January and February 1976, KHIEU Samphan accompanied NORODOM Sihanouk on a tour of the Cambodian countryside, during which they visited agricultural projects and worksites including Trapeang Thma Dam.<sup>1903</sup>

607. Between 17 April 1975 and 1978, KHIEU Samphan attended and lectured at political training sessions held at Borei Keila (K-6) and the Khmer-Soviet Friendship Institute of Technology (K-15), at times alongside NUON Chea and other CPK leaders. Participants ranging from combatants to CPK cadres and returnees from overseas, numbering in the tens to the thousands, were variously instructed on revolutionary principles, cooperatives, agricultural techniques and economic matters, with KHIEU Samphan lecturing on identifying “enemies” and uncovering “traitors”.<sup>1904</sup> Witness ONG Thong Hoeung allegedly stated in an extrajudicial interview on 6 February 2008 that KHIEU Samphan “would come to Boeung Trab[a]jek to hold political meetings”, supposedly adding that his wife “saw Khieu Samphan holding meetings there”.<sup>1905</sup> The witness denied in his interview with OCIJ investigators that he made this statement and testified before the Chamber that neither he nor his wife saw KHIEU Samphan at this location.<sup>1906</sup> KHIEU Samphan's driver, Witness LENG Chhoeung, did not recall driving him to Boeng Trabaek.<sup>1907</sup> While the Chamber is unable to conclude that KHIEU Samphan held political training sessions at Boeung Trabaek, it is satisfied that he did in fact attend and hold political training sessions at Borei Keila and the Khmer-Soviet Friendship Institute of Technology.

8.3.4.1. Membership of Office 870

608. Office 870, which oversaw the implementation of Standing Committee decisions,<sup>1908</sup> initially comprised at least two members: SUA Vasi alias Doeun, who was appointed as chairman of the Office in October 1975, and KHIEU Samphan, who joined at around the same time.<sup>1909</sup>

609. The Co-Prosecutors allege that KHIEU Samphan succeeded Doeun as the head of Office 870 after the latter's arrest in 1977.<sup>1910</sup> KHIEU Samphan has consistently denied ever having been appointed to the position of chairman of Office 870 or serving in that capacity, insisting that he was only responsible for maintaining relations with NORODOM Sihanouk, setting the price scales for products from cooperatives and other economic units, implementing Standing Committee decisions regarding the distribution of products to the zones and working on the importation of goods with the “Department of Foreign Trade”.<sup>1911</sup> KHIEU Samphan conceded that while goods may or may not have been exchanged between cooperatives, his responsibility for the setting of prices was only ever theoretical.<sup>1912</sup> His functions with regard to trade and commerce are discussed below.<sup>1913</sup>

610. KHIEU Samphan acknowledged that he worked in Office 870 until 1978,<sup>1914</sup> but stated that he was unaware of Doeun’s precise role as chairman of Office 870. He recalled that Doeun was frequently absent on travels, received reports from the zones and was “in charge of political affairs”.<sup>1915</sup> Office 870 continued to operate after Doeun’s arrest in February 1977,<sup>1916</sup> with a number of telegrams put before the Chamber bearing dates in 1977 and 1978 addressed to “M-870”.<sup>1917</sup>

611. KHIEU Samphan speculated that CHHIM Sam Aok alias Pang succeeded Doeun as chairman of Office 870.<sup>1918</sup> Witnesses SALOTH Ban, ROCHOEM Ton alias PHY Phuon, PEAN Khean and NOEM Sem also testified that Pang was the head of Office 870 at some point.<sup>1919</sup> SALOTH Ban recalled seeing Pang and Doeun working at K-1 or Office 870 at the same time, attributing the management of ministries and the “distribution of logistics” to their respective roles.<sup>1920</sup> PHY Phuon attributed different functions to the two men, stating that while Pang had been in charge of day-to-day “administration” (an assertion also made by Witness PEAN Khean<sup>1921</sup>), Doeun was responsible for “policy”, which included opening and conducting training sessions.<sup>1922</sup> The Chamber notes that while the versions are partially corroborated by the titular functions allegedly assigned at a 9 October 1975 meeting of the Standing Committee,<sup>1923</sup> they appear to conflate the functions of Offices 870 and S-71. The Chamber is therefore unable to satisfy itself that Pang served as the chairman of Office 870.

612. A number of witnesses and experts testified that it was KHIEU Samphan who replaced Doeun as head of Office 870. Witness KAING Guek Eav alias Duch testified that the office chaired by Doeun was known as the “Central Office”;<sup>1924</sup> an entity to which he referred as “Office 870” in previous interviews with the Co-Investigating Judges.<sup>1925</sup> While he also testified that KHIEU Samphan had held a more senior role in Office 870 than Doeun, which he retained after Doeun's departure,<sup>1926</sup> Duch acknowledged before the Co-Investigating Judges that he knew little about the work of Office 870,<sup>1927</sup> and variously indicated that his statements about KHIEU Samphan's position within the Office were inferences drawn from KHIEU Samphan's position of seniority in the DK period,<sup>1928</sup> academic texts<sup>1929</sup> and hearsay accounts.<sup>1930</sup> The Chamber also notes that the witness enjoyed access to case file materials as an accused person in Case 001 and suspect in Case 002,<sup>1931</sup> which leads the Chamber to conclude that Duch's testimony does not provide a sufficiently independent basis for factual findings on this topic. The Chamber therefore accords no weight to his assertions regarding KHIEU Samphan's alleged chairmanship of Office 870.

613. Two out-of-court interviews conducted by Witness Stephen HEDER suggested that KHIEU Samphan became chairman of Office 870 after Doeun's arrest. The first was an interview with VAN Rith, a leading member of the Committee for Commerce during the DK period, who is now deceased.<sup>1932</sup> Although Stephen HEDER (whom the Chamber found to be generally credible) testified to the circumstances in which the interview was conducted,<sup>1933</sup> the Chamber is unable to accord his handwritten interview notes significant probative value.<sup>1934</sup>

614. The second was an interview with IENG Sary in 1999. According to Stephen HEDER's interview notes, IENG Sary confirmed KHIEU Samphan's "appointment to

<sup>1933</sup> T. 15 July 2013 (Stephen HEDER), E1/223.1, p. 7. The Chamber notes that this interview was conducted prior to Stephen HEDER's employment with the ECCC.

<sup>1934</sup> The Chamber has taken into account the fact that it was an out-of-court interview which was conducted informally and without any record signed by VAN Rith. Further, it was impossible to examine this witness in court and a full transcription or audio recording of the interview was not available.

the Chairmanship of Office 870".<sup>1935</sup> IENG Sary filed a signed declaration with the Co-Investigating Judges in 2009 affirming that he never made this allegation.<sup>1936</sup> However, Witness PHY Phuon separately testified that, following Doeun's disappearance, IENG Sary personally informed him that "Doeun will be replaced by Khieu Samphan" and instructed him to communicate with KHIEU Samphan directly.<sup>1937</sup> PHY Phuon's account was not explored further in court. IENG Sary, the alleged declarant of this assertion, was also unavailable at trial to clarify these competing accounts.<sup>1938</sup> Further, while PHY Phuon placed Doeun's disappearance in 1978,<sup>1939</sup> he appears to confuse Doeun's arrest (which, on the evidence before the Chamber took place in 1977) with that of Pang's.<sup>1940</sup> As a result of the foregoing, the Chamber is unable to accord significant weight to PHY Phuon's hearsay account. As regards Stephen HEDER's interview notes, the Chamber takes into account the informal setting in which the interview was conducted, IENG Sary's rejection of the alleged assertion, and the absence of a complete record, transcription or recording of the interview. It therefore declines to attribute significant weight to his interview notes.

615. In the course of their historical research, Experts Philip SHORT and David CHANDLER did not discover any document confirming that KHIEU Samphan replaced Doeun as the head of Office 870.<sup>1941</sup> However, Philip SHORT told the Chamber that, based on the materials he had seen, it was "reasonable to assume" that KHIEU Samphan "had an important role" in the Office after Doeun's arrest.<sup>1942</sup> David CHANDLER also presumed that KHIEU Samphan replaced Doeun.<sup>1943</sup> While the Chamber acknowledges the expert basis upon which these deductions were made – namely, the Experts’ extensive research into and knowledge of Democratic Kampuchea – it is unable to attribute significant weight to such speculation in light of the equivocal evidence before the Chamber regarding KHIEU Samphan’s precise function within Office 870.

616. The precise contours of KHIEU Samphan’s responsibilities within Office 870, as distinct from those of his predecessor or those appertaining to his other appointments, remain unclear. The Chamber heard limited evidence that KHIEU Samphan issued travel (laissez-passer) permits to zone cadres supervising visiting delegations and also signed travel permits more generally.<sup>1944</sup> The evidence demonstrates that KHIEU Samphan performed certain functions within Office 870 following Doeun’s arrest in early 1977, either pursuant to an appointment to that Office or as part of his residual responsibilities as a senior Party member. As a result of the paucity of evidence relating to his functions within Office 870, the Chamber is unable to conclude that KHIEU Samphan served as the chairman of Office 870 or was in fact a “leading cadre” thereof, as alleged by the Closing Order.

8.3.4.2. Oversight of Commerce

617. In October 1975, the CPK Standing Committee assigned KHIEU Samphan responsibility for “[c]ommerce for accounting and pricing” in addition to his existing functions as Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence.<sup>1945</sup> In March 1976, the Standing Committee appointed KHIEU Samphan to a committee charged with “mak[ing] examinations and preparations for merchandise which must be purchased” from China alongside chairman KOY Thuon and members IENG Sary, VORN Vet and Doeun.<sup>1946</sup> At the same Standing Committee meeting, KHIEU

618. At the inauguration of the People’s Representative Assembly between 11 and 13 April 1976, a new “Committee for Commerce” was announced and assigned to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister for Economics, VORN Vet, along with five other committees.<sup>1948</sup> The Committee was described in Standing Committee minutes as a committee “surrounding 870” only one week later when VAN Rith, PRUM Nhem and “Chhoeun” were appointed as members.<sup>1949</sup> On 7 May 1976, NON Suon alias Chey was moved from the Committee for Agriculture to “control Commerce” along with Doeun, temporarily assigned to assist the Committee for three months in addition to his duties in Office 870.<sup>1950</sup> Reports before the Chamber indicate that by late October 1976, the Commerce Committee’s reporting lines had shifted from Doeun to KHIEU Samphan.<sup>1951</sup> zones.<sup>1952</sup> This apparent overlap with other functional responsibilities atop the opacity of the DK political administration does not allow the Chamber to delineate the precise capacity in which KHIEU Samphan exercised these functions.<sup>1953</sup> Nevertheless, it is evident from contemporaneous records that KHIEU Samphan exercised significant oversight of DK's commercial affairs. For example, the Commerce Committee frequently sought guidance from KHIEU Samphan on matters of trade,<sup>1954</sup> while the Committee's reports and other commerce-related documents addressed, copied or allegedly handed to KHIEU Samphan between October 1976 and December 1978 variously included: reports of discussions with foreign trade delegations and other communications relating to international trade;<sup>1955</sup> reports on the quantities of rice sent to state warehouses by the various zones, and on the export of rice and other goods;<sup>1956</sup> matters, very few bore VORN Vet as the sole recipient; i.e. to the exclusion of KHIEU Samphan.<sup>1961</sup> Following VORN Vet's arrest in late 1978,<sup>1962</sup> KHIEU Samphan continued to receive reports and letters on trade matters.<sup>1963</sup> In addition, KHIEU Samphan also visited state warehouses with VAN Rith, where he inspected products destined for export,<sup>1964</sup> and conducted meetings with workers and commerce cadres, instructing them on leadership, discipline and morality, and denouncing as enemies of the Party "those who were lazy to work".<sup>1965</sup>

621. The Chamber is satisfied that KHIEU Samphan exercised considerable oversight and was therefore thoroughly apprised of DK trade and commerce matters, both domestic and international, between October 1976 and early 1979.

8.3.4.3. Responsibility for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs

622. The Closing Order points to the WRI of LONG Norin in stating that there is "evidence that when IENG Sary was outside the country, KHIEU Samphan took responsibility for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs".<sup>1966</sup> The witness deposed to OCIJ investigators that "[w]hen IENG Sary was absent, KHIEU Samphan came to take charge. He came twice as I recall, and probably VORN Veth [sic] came twice as well. No leadership level people came to replace him aside from KHIEU Samphan and VORN Veth [sic]." <sup>1967</sup>

623. The witness repeated this assertion at trial, testifying that "[s]ometimes KHIEU Samphan would come" to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs as "an acting head" in IENG Sary's stead, but provided no further information.<sup>1968</sup> The Chamber notes that while it found LONG Norin to be a generally reliable witness, beyond the fact that KHIEU Samphan went to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in the absence of IENG Sary, it does not have before it any further evidence that corroborates the witness's claim. Witness SALOTH Ban also saw KHIEU Samphan at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs when IENG Sary was not present discussing air tickets and holding meetings about foreigners.<sup>1969</sup> It was not clear to the Chamber whether such meetings were conducted pursuant to a formal or informal function within the Ministry. Witness SUONG Sikoeun also met KHIEU Samphan at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on two occasions, where the two discussed the drafting of a news article.<sup>1970</sup> The Chamber recalls the general secrecy of the DK political administration and acknowledges the possibility that KHIEU Samphan may indeed have assisted in various areas of governmental administration from time to time as part of his residual functions.<sup>1971</sup> In this regard, the Chamber has already found that he performed a number of residual functions beyond his formal appointments. The paucity of evidence regarding KHIEU Samphan's alleged responsibility as acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, however, does not allow the Chamber to find that, in the absence of IENG Sary and beyond periodic and limited temporary assistance, he took responsibility for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

8.4. Summary of Findings

624. The Chamber finds that KHIEU Samphan's longstanding presence in the Cambodian political milieu publicly legitimised the resistance movement that would ultimately be revealed as the CPK. Following the CPNLAF victory on 17 April 1975, KHIEU Samphan continued to serve as the public face of the DK, first as GRUNK Deputy Prime Minister and, from early 1976, President of the State Presidium. During this time, KHIEU Samphan's responsibilities were largely limited to conducting <sup>1969</sup> T. 23 April 2012 (SALOTH Ban), E1/66.1, pp. 75-76 ("Q. [...] did you see Khieu Samphan coming sometimes to the office of the Foreign Ministry? A. It seems that he came there sometimes and he talked about the air tickets. Q. Was that his sole interest or did he have, perhaps, other reasons as well for coming? A. He was not interested in anything else; it was only about the technical issues"); T. 25 April 2012 (SALOTH Ban), E1/68.1, pp. 41-42 ("Yes I met him [at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs]. However, I did not have a direct contact [sic] with him. He met with the intellectual groups regarding the foreigners. [...] It seems that Ieng Sary was not present when [KHIEU Samphan] came").

<sup>1970</sup> T. 6 August 2012 (SUONG Sikoeun), E1/102.1, pp. 73-74 ("And to my recollection, [KHIEU Samphan] came to [the] Ministry of Foreign Affairs on two occasions when I met him over there, but at that time he mentioned that he wanted me to write a news article at that time. But on those two occasions we talked, nothing actually materialised after that. No articles were published.").

diplomatic relations, issuing statements on behalf of Democratic Kampuchea and supporting the CPK line. Beyond his role as nominal head of state however, the evidence demonstrates that KHIEU Samphan's functional responsibility extended further into the core operations of the Party and State, including oversight over the country's trade and commercial affairs, and the conduct of political education and training. Furthermore, and notwithstanding his assertions that he did not exercise any function within the Party Centre, the Chamber found that KHIEU Samphan was not only placed within a small group of well-informed CPK members as a result of his membership of the Central Committee, but was also in a position of unique standing within the Party by virtue of his attendance at Standing Committee meetings, where important matters were discussed and crucial decisions were made.

9. APPLICABLE LAW: CRIMES

9.1. Crimes Against Humanity

9.1.1. Murder

625. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of murder at Trapeang Thma Dam, 1st January Dam and Kampong Chhnang Airfield Worksites; S-21, Kraing Ta Chan, Au Kanseng and Phnom Kraol Security Centres; and in connection with the treatment of Buddhists, Cham and Vietnamese.<sup>1972</sup>

626. This Chamber has previously found that murder was recognised as a crime against humanity under customary international law by 1975.<sup>1973</sup> The existence of murder as a crime against humanity as at 1975 is uncontested by the Parties to this case.

627. The actus reus of murder is an act or omission<sup>1974</sup> of the accused, or of one or more persons for whose acts or omissions the accused bears criminal responsibility, that caused the death of the victim.<sup>1975</sup> The act or omission must have contributed substantially to the death of the victim.<sup>1976</sup> The Chamber notes that none of the parties have contested that commission of murder as a crime against humanity through omission formed part of customary international law as at 1975.<sup>1977</sup> This Chamber has previously accepted the general principle applied consistently by the ad hoc tribunals that “a crime may be committed by culpable omission where there is a duty to act”.<sup>1978</sup> While this observation was made in the context of individual criminal responsibility, the Chamber finds that the general principle that there needs to be a duty to act, applies to all culpable omissions. Accordingly, an omission will be culpable only where there is a duty to act.

628. The elements of murder can be satisfied whether or not it is shown that a victim's body has been recovered.<sup>1979</sup> The fact of a victim's death can be inferred circumstantially from all of the evidence presented. All that is required to be established from the evidence is that the only reasonable inference is that the victim is dead as a result of acts or omissions of the accused or of one or more persons for whom the accused is criminally responsible.<sup>1980</sup> A conviction for murder is not precluded because it is impossible to accurately establish the total number of deaths or to identify, case-by-case, the direct perpetrators and their victims.<sup>1981</sup> In order to sustain an overall finding that killings occurred beyond reasonable doubt, specific instances of killing must be proved beyond reasonable doubt.<sup>1982</sup>

629. The Co-Prosecutors submit that the suicide of a person may amount to murder where the perpetrator's acts or omissions "induced the victim to take action", which resulted in their death.<sup>1983</sup> The Chamber will address whether the suicide of a person could amount to murder as this arises on the facts of the case and to the extent that incidents of suicide are alleged to amount to murder in the Closing Order.

630. The Chamber has previously found that the mens rea of murder requires proof of intent of the accused or of the person or persons for whom he is criminally responsible to either kill or cause serious bodily harm in the reasonable knowledge that the act or omission would likely lead to death.<sup>1984</sup> Jurisprudence has clarified that murder as a crime against humanity does not require premeditation.<sup>1985</sup>

631. In dismissing a challenge to the Trial Chamber's definition of murder in Case 002/01, the Supreme Court Chamber found that the mens rea for murder as a crime against humanity as it stood in 1975 “must be defined largo sensu to encompass dolus eventualis”,<sup>1986</sup> and adopted the following definition:

The technical definition of dolus eventualis is the following: if the actor engages in life-endangering behaviour, his killing becomes intentional if he “reconciles himself” or “makes peace” with the likelihood of death. Thus, if the killing is committed “with manifest indifference to the value of human life”, even conduct of minimal risk can qualify as intentional homicide. Large scale killings that would be classified as reckless murder in the United States would meet the continental criteria of dolus eventualis. [...] [T]he concept of dolus eventualis does not include a standard of negligence or gross negligence.<sup>1987</sup>

632. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the definition accepted by this Chamber and by the Supreme Court Chamber of the constitutive elements of murder, breaches the principle of legality insofar as it applies a standard of mens rea lower than direct intent to kill, which was neither accessible nor foreseeable in 1975. It claims that the Trial Chamber relied upon a definition which stems from the later jurisprudence of the ad hoc tribunals, which was not consistently adopted by all Chambers at these tribunals. It asserts that the constitutive elements of murder as a crime against humanity in 1975 only envisaged an intention to kill and did not extend to intent to cause physical harm knowing that it would likely result in death.<sup>1988</sup> In support of this submission, the KHIEU Samphan Defence repeats arguments which had been raised and rejected by the Supreme Court Chamber on appeal.<sup>1989</sup> Further, it contends that the Supreme Court Chamber violated the principle of legality by incorrectly relying on post-1975 laws from various countries, and that laws anterior to 1975 relied upon by the Supreme Court Chamber neither demonstrate the existence of a prevalent and consistent legal practice among states, nor an opinio juris establishing a customary rule before 1975.<sup>1990</sup>

633. The KHIEU Samphan Defence then raises several arguments as to why, in its view, the Supreme Court Chamber erred in its analysis with respect to the mens rea standard for murder as a crime against humanity. The KHIEU Samphan Defence particularly takes issue with the Supreme Court Chamber's interpretation of the Medical Case and its reliance on national legislation and case law.<sup>1991</sup>

634. The Trial Chamber recalls that in order to accord with the principle of legality, the definition of murder applicable in this case must reflect the state of customary international law as at 1975. Contrary to the KHIEU Samphan Defence submission, this does not preclude the Chamber from referring to later decisions which interpret or clarify that law.<sup>1992</sup>

635. The current jurisprudence of the ad hoc tribunals has now accepted that the mens rea for murder encompasses the concept of dolus eventualis.<sup>1993</sup> However, this jurisprudence was not completely consistent with respect to the precise wording used,<sup>1994</sup> and some decisions of the ICTR considered that premeditation was required for the purposes of murder.<sup>1995</sup> Accordingly, while the ad hoc jurisprudence does provide guidance, this Chamber and the Supreme Court Chamber have conducted their own assessments concerning the state of customary international law in 1975.

636. The Supreme Court Chamber has interpreted the post-World War II jurisprudence and in particular the Medical Case as including the notion of dolus eventualis in the definition of murder as a crime against humanity. The factual analysis of the case shows that while the Nazi doctors had a complete disregard for the life of the individuals subjected to their brutal experiments, or even considered the death of many of them as an expected outcome, in some instances their objective was to assess if it was possible to survive extreme conditions or particularly severe disease. In such situations the intent involved taking the risk of endangering the life of those subjected to the experiments, with the knowledge that this would likely cause their death. Therefore, while the Medical Case made no explicit reference to the mens rea standard applied – a point acknowledged by the Supreme Court Chamber – the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the Medical Case can be considered as one of several authorities for attributing criminal responsibility for intentional killing even if the perpetrator acted with less than direct intent.

637. The Trial Chamber notes that the Supreme Court Chamber did not rely solely on the Medical Case but also found domestic practice that “further reinforced” its conclusion that murder as a crime against humanity included the notion of dolus eventualis.<sup>1996</sup>

638. As recognised by the Pre-Trial Chamber, having regard to general principles of law can assist when defining the elements of an international crime, where that crime has otherwise been recognised in customary international law. In assessing the existence of a general principle of law, “reference should not be made to one national legal system only, say that of common law or civil law’ to the exclusion of the other” and requires an assessment of principles “common to the major legal systems of the world”.<sup>1997</sup> Although the distillation of a general principle “does not require a comprehensive survey of all the legal systems of the world”,<sup>1998</sup> it is also important to avoid “mechanical importation or transposition from national law into international criminal proceedings”.<sup>1999</sup>

639. The Supreme Court Chamber surveyed the law applied in a number of common law and civil law systems and concluded that “in all of the domestic jurisdictions reviewed [...] the requisite mental element of intentional killing is satisfied even if the perpetrator acted with less than direct intent to kill”.<sup>2000</sup>

640. The Trial Chamber has conducted a further analysis including into legal systems where the Supreme Court Chamber referred to legislation or jurisprudence which post-dated 1975.

641. In addition to the pre-1975 sources surveyed by the Supreme Court Chamber, in Germany for example there is clear and consistent jurisprudence from as early as 1955 establishing dolus eventualis as sufficient for the purposes of the definition of murder.<sup>2001</sup> In Austria, by 1975 the Penal Code had attributed criminal responsibility for intentional conduct, which was defined to include dolus eventualis.<sup>2002</sup> Similarly, the concept of dolus eventualis was firmly entrenched for the intentional commission of crimes in Switzerland as early as 1943.<sup>2003</sup>

642. Since adopting its criminal code in 1881, the Netherlands has distinguished between manslaughter (“doodslag”) and murder (“moord”). In order for an offence to have been committed “intentionally” (“opzettelijk”), Dutch law recognised that any degree of intent, including dolus eventualis (“voorwaardelijk opzet”) would suffice. The concept of dolus eventualis has been accepted by the Dutch Supreme Court since 1911.<sup>2004</sup>

<sup>2003</sup> See e.g., BGE 69 IV 75 E.5, p. 80 (Federal Supreme Court cassation judgement of 21 May 1943). The 1937 Swiss Penal Code did not identify a specific dolus for the purposes of murder. See 1937 Penal Code, Article 112-1. The concept of dolus eventualis which had its basis in jurisprudence far before 1975 has since been codified in the 1997 Swiss Penal Code which in Article 12 attributes criminal responsibility for wilful conduct, defined as follows: “A person acts wilfully as soon as he regards the realisation of the act as being possible and accepts this”.

<sup>2004</sup> Hoornse Taart case, HR 19 June 1911, W 9203. See also, Cicero case, HR 9 November 1954, NJ 1955, 55, which was the first case to provide a criterion for establishing dolus eventualis as follows: “he who willingly and knowingly exposes himself to a chance not negligible as imaginary”.

643. In Italy, the 1931 Criminal Code envisaged various categories of homicide (“omicidio”) to characterise conduct which caused the death of a victim, depending on the degree of mens rea: “omicidio doloso” (homicide with the intent to kill);<sup>2005</sup> “omicidio preterintenzionale” (homicide which results from violent conduct, where the perpetrator intended to injure the victim but did not intend the victim’s death);<sup>2006</sup> or “omicidio colposo” (homicide which results from the perpetrator’s imprudence or negligence).<sup>2007</sup> Italian jurisprudence established since 1970 that dolus for the purposes of “omicidio doloso” encompassed dolus eventualis (“dolo eventuale”).<sup>2008</sup>

644. While Belgian and French penal codes contain provisions which are very similar, Belgian law has for a long time recognised the concept of dolus eventualis as a form of intent sufficient to satisfy the mental element of murder.<sup>2009</sup>

645. It is also clear from the Supreme Court Chamber’s analysis of pre-1975 jurisprudence and legislation that the requisite mens rea for murder in common law systems including England, India and Australia was consistent with the notion of dolus eventualis.<sup>2010</sup>

646. Furthermore, going beyond the common law and continental European legal systems surveyed by the Supreme Court Chamber, the Trial Chamber has also observed that in Russia and Japan similar concepts of attributing criminal responsibility existed as at 1975.

647. Article 103 of the 1960 Criminal Code of the Russian Soviet Federative Socialist Republic addressed the crime of intentional killing which governed intentional acts occasioning death (“умышленное убийство”). Article 8 of the same code defined intentional commission as follows: “[a] crime shall be recognised to have been committed intentionally if the perpetrator was aware of the socially dangerous character of his action or inaction, foresaw its socially dangerous consequences and intended them or consciously allowed the onset of these consequences”.<sup>2011</sup> In Japan, the Supreme Court as early as 1949 ruled that homicide could be established if a perpetrator was aware that his or her conduct could kill a person but nevertheless decided to pursue such action.<sup>2012</sup> In both legal systems, legislation or case law clearly criminalised as intentional killing, conduct where the perpetrator was acting with less than direct intent.

<sup>2010</sup> With respect to England and Wales, the Supreme Court Chamber made reference to R v. Hyam [1975] AC 55 at 75, in which the House of Lords held that for the purposes of murder it was sufficient to have “foreseen the prohibited result as one which is highly probable”. Article 300 of the Criminal Code of India 1860 referred to intent to cause death or “intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knows to be likely to cause the death of the person” for the purposes of murder. With respect to Australia, the Supreme Court Chamber referred to a number of pre-1975 cases and legislation. For example, section 18(a) of the NSW Crimes Act 1900 referred to “reckless indifference to human life, or with intent to kill or inflict grievous bodily harm”.

648. A noticeable exception to this principle is the French and Cambodian law in force before 1975. A review of the history of the concept of murder in French law shows that its legal definition has varied. The Penal Code adopted in 1810 defined murder merely as wilful homicide, and the law did not require proof of specific intent to kill; it was sufficient to prove that the perpetrator acted intentionally in a violent manner and that the acts of violence caused the death of the victim.<sup>2013</sup> In 1832, French lawmakers introduced the distinction between “murder” and “wilful acts of violence causing an unintended death”. As a result, proof of a specific intent to kill became an element of murder, while “wilful acts of violence causing an unintended death” only required that the perpetrator intended to act with violence and that this violent conduct contributed to causing death. The intentional element is described as dolus praeter intentionem, as the perpetrator does not have the intent to kill, nor does he accept the risk of a fatal event. This distinction was transposed into Cambodian law and has existed since it was included under Article 503 of the 1956 Cambodian Criminal Code.

649. Both French and Cambodian law consider that the intent to kill may be inferred from circumstantial evidence. This is particularly the case when the conduct demonstrates a high likelihood that it may cause death, such that it can reasonably be inferred that the perpetrator acted with intent to kill.<sup>2014</sup> As noted by the Supreme Court Chamber, the 1956 Cambodian Criminal Code provided that “intent to kill was presumed to exist, inter alia, if a deadly weapon was used, if the attack was particularly violent, or if a particularly vulnerable part of the body of the victim was attacked”.<sup>2015</sup> This may amount to “indirect intent” in other systems, but still requires an intent to kill which does not equate with dolus eventualis.<sup>2016</sup>

650. Having examined how the aforementioned national systems, representative of the world’s major legal systems, define the crime of murder (understood as the unlawful and intentional killing of a human being), and disregarding the post-1975 legislation and case law referred to by the Supreme Court Chamber, the Trial Chamber finds that while the precise definition of this crime may vary, and while French and Cambodian law may differ from other approaches, the vast majority of these domestic systems recognise that a standard of mens rea lower than direct intent may apply in relation to murder, the lowest being dolus eventualis. This encompasses the case of an individual who willingly engages in conduct with the knowledge that his or her act or omission would likely lead to the death of the victim(s) and who, at a minimum, accepts or reconciles him or herself with the possibility of this fatal consequence. Therefore, the Chamber is satisfied that the review of pre-1975 international and national jurisprudence and legislation demonstrates a general principle of law that when an individual knowingly and willingly engaged in conduct which was likely to lead to death, that conduct would amount to murder or a crime of similar seriousness in each domestic legal system. This is consistent with the Supreme Court Chamber’s conclusion that “the mens rea of murder as a crime against humanity as it stood in 1975 must be defined largo sensu so as to encompass dolus eventualis”. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submissions to the contrary are accordingly dismissed.

<sup>2016</sup> Commentators of some post-1975 decisions of the French Cour de Cassation consider that proof of a specific intent to kill is no longer required, but rather that the perpetrator wilfully exercised violence with the knowledge that his conduct would normally cause the death of the victim. However, a closer consideration of the facts of these cases show that the reasoning remains based on inference of an intent to kill from circumstantial evidence. See French Cour de Cassation, Cass. crim., 9 janv. 1990 : Bull. crim. 1990, n° 15; Cass. crim., 6 janv. 1993 : Dr. pén. 1993, comm. 102 (note M. Véron, caractérise l’intention homicide le fait de porter à plusieurs reprises des coups de marteau sur le crâne de la victime, l’auteur ayant « nécessairement conscience de l’impossibilité de prévoir le résultat » de tels actes).

651. With respect to the foreseeability and accessibility of murder as a crime against humanity in the instant case, the Chamber recalls that what is important is to have regard to the purpose of the principle of legality, which is to ensure that an accused is not held responsible for conduct which he or she could not envisage was criminal when engaging in that conduct.<sup>2017</sup> Having taken into account the customary status and gravity of the crime and the positions held by the Accused as members of Cambodia's governing authority, the Chamber concludes that it was both foreseeable and accessible in general that the conduct described as murder in customary international law was punishable as a crime against humanity by 1975. In this context the Chamber recalls its finding that for the purposes of foreseeability and accessibility it has to look beyond the technical definition of the crime and have regard to the purpose of the principle of legality.<sup>2018</sup> Article 503 of the 1956 Cambodian Criminal Code considers "acts wilfully committed with intent to assault another person, but without intent to cause death" as severely punishable felonies. The required dolus (dolus praeter intentionem)<sup>2019</sup> is of a standard lower than dolus eventualis. Accordingly, it is unquestionable that it was foreseeable in 1975 that killing an individual with dolus eventualis was criminal and entailed individual criminal responsibility.<sup>2020</sup>

652. The NUON Chea defence submits that some of the alleged killings in this case were the result of "a lawful process and grounded on both legal and factual bases" in connection with individuals who "had committed the most serious crimes of treason espionage collaborating with the enemy during wartime or sabotage".<sup>2021</sup> In a previous filing the NUON Chea Defence suggested that it may be questionable whether customary international law between 1975 and 1979 "prohibited the imposition of the capital punishment (including without affording full due process guarantees)", particularly in connection with "individuals actively involved in planning a serious

The Supreme Court Chamber also referred to the principle of homicide praeter intentionnel which "covers situations in which the perpetrator intentionally commits acts of violence against the victims which, in turn, lead as an unintended result to the victim's death". security threat to the State”.<sup>2022</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submit that, contrary to claims advanced by the NUON Chea Defence, execution without legal process or compliance with due process guarantees constitutes murder, not capital punishment.<sup>2023</sup> They further submit that the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of life may not be derogated from under any circumstances, including during national emergency.<sup>2024</sup> Both of these arguments contain factual and legal aspects relevant to the lawfulness of particular killings. The Chamber notes that murder is generally understood to refer to unlawful killings,<sup>2025</sup> and that the right to life, as protected in international instruments including the ICCPR, precludes carrying out executions arbitrarily.<sup>2026</sup> Capital punishment, when foreseen by domestic legislation, can only be imposed as the result of a judicial process affording fair trial guarantees to the accused.<sup>2027</sup> There can be no derogation from this fundamental right.<sup>2028</sup> The Chamber will address questions of lawfulness, and in particular the existence of a judicial process prior to execution, as they arise on the facts of the case.

654. This Chamber has previously found that extermination was recognised as a crime against humanity under customary international law by 1975.<sup>2030</sup> With respect to the foreseeability and accessibility of extermination as a crime against humanity, the Chamber takes into account the customary status and gravity of the crime and the positions held by the Accused as members of Cambodia's governing authority. Having weighed these factors objectively, the Chamber concludes that it was both foreseeable and accessible in general that extermination was punishable as a crime against humanity by 1975.<sup>2031</sup>

655. The actus reus of extermination consists of an act, omission or combination of each that results in the death of persons on a massive scale.<sup>2032</sup> There is no minimum number of victims required to establish extermination.<sup>2033</sup> The requirement of scale is to be assessed on a case-by-case basis, having regard to such factors as the time and place of the killings, the selection of the victims and the manner in which they were targeted, and whether the killings were aimed at the collective group rather than victims in their individual capacity.<sup>2034</sup>

656. It is possible for the scale element of extermination to be established on an aggregated basis by accumulating separate incidents.<sup>2035</sup> However, these incidents need to form part of the same murder operation.<sup>2036</sup> It is not sufficient to collectively consider distinct events committed in different locations, in different circumstances, by different perpetrators, and over an extended period of time.<sup>2037</sup> None of the parties contested the definition above with respect to the actus reus of extermination.<sup>2038</sup>

657. The Supreme Court Chamber has held that the mens rea of extermination as a crime against humanity requires direct intent to kill on a large scale.<sup>2039</sup> As the aim of extermination is to eliminate individuals who are part of a group, the crime is incompatible with the notion of dolus eventualis.<sup>2040</sup> Knowledge of certain death is not required; it is sufficient to demonstrate that the killing of members of a group was desired by the perpetrator.<sup>2041</sup>

658. The Co-Prosecutors submit that the Supreme Court Chamber applied a standard of mens rea that includes the intention to create conditions of life calculated to bring about the death of a large number of people.<sup>2042</sup> The Chamber notes that the Supreme Court Chamber indeed referred with approval to jurisprudence which was consistent with the mens rea standard of intentionally subjecting a number of people “to conditions of living that would inevitably lead to death, and that the accused intended by his acts or omissions this result”.<sup>2043</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submit that there is no requirement that the victims “must have been subjected to conditions inevitably leading to death”.<sup>2044</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. As this Chamber has previously found, the cases which refer to the “inevitability” requirement never turned on or discussed this standard.<sup>2045</sup> Given that the mens rea for extermination requires direct intent to kill on a large scale, it is sufficient if the perpetrator intended to cause the death of a large number of people. It is not necessary to show that the conditions would inevitably lead to the death of all people, as long as it is established that the perpetrator intended to create conditions of life in order to kill on a large scale.

659. The Supreme Court Chamber confirmed the Trial Chamber's finding that the existence and knowledge of a vast murderous enterprise were not elements of extermination as a crime against humanity in 1975.<sup>2046</sup>

9.1.3. Enslavement

660. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of enslavement at the Tram Kak Cooperatives; Trapeang Thma Dam, 1st January Dam and Kampong Chhnang Airfield Worksites; S-21, Kraing Ta Chan, Au Kanseng and Phnom Kraol Security Centres.<sup>2047</sup>

661. The Chamber has previously found that enslavement was recognised as a crime against humanity under customary international law by 1975.<sup>2048</sup> No new arguments have been raised by the parties in this case which require the Chamber to consider this issue further. With respect to the foreseeability and accessibility of enslavement as a crime against humanity, the Chamber takes into account the customary status and gravity of the crime and the positions held by the Accused as members of Cambodia's governing authority. Having weighed these factors objectively, the Chamber concludes that it was both foreseeable and accessible in general that enslavement was punishable as a crime against humanity by 1975. The Chamber notes that this finding is consistent with the Supreme Court Chamber's finding that it was both foreseeable and accessible to the accused in Case 001 that he could be charged with enslavement as a crime against humanity by 1975.<sup>2049</sup>

662. The definition of enslavement as a crime against humanity draws on the definition of slavery in the 1926 Slavery Convention.<sup>2050</sup> The actus reus of enslavement is characterised by the exercise over a person of any or all powers attaching to the right of ownership.<sup>2051</sup> While the notion of enslavement centred on ownership is not the same as “chattel slavery”, which connotes outright ownership of a human being, it does imply “the presence of behavioural aspects of ownership”.<sup>2052</sup> In making that assessment, the Supreme Court Chamber has held that a Chamber must above all identify the indicia of ownership, namely those facts pointing to the victim being reduced to a commodity, used, economically exploited, “consumed” and “ultimately disposed of”.<sup>2053</sup> The exercise over a person of any powers attaching to ownership requires a substantial degree of control over the victim.<sup>2054</sup> There is no enslavement “where the control has an objective other than enabling the exercise of the powers attaching to ownership”.<sup>2055</sup> An “effort to accrue some gain”, while not an additional element of the crime, is the implicit purpose in the exercise of the powers attaching to ownership.<sup>2056</sup>

663. The following indicia of enslavement are consistent with the state of customary international law during 1975-1979: control of someone’s movement; control of physical environment; psychological control; measures taken to prevent or deter escape; force; threat of force or coercion; duration; assertion of exclusivity; subjection to cruel treatment and abuse; control of sexuality; and forced labour.<sup>2057</sup>

664. Proof of the lack of consent by the victim is not required, but may evidentially be relevant to establishing the exercise of the rights of ownership. The lack of consent may be presumed where the expression of consent is impossible.<sup>2058</sup>

665. In discussing the elements of enslavement, both the Supreme Court Chamber and the ICTY referred to the Pohl case, which found that: “[w]e might eliminate all proof of ill-treatment, overlook the starvation, beatings, and other barbarous acts, but the admitted fact of slavery – compulsory uncompensated labour – would still remain.

There is no such thing as benevolent slavery. Involuntary servitude, even if tempered by humane treatment, is still slavery.”<sup>2059</sup>

666. Where all the elements of that crime are met, forced labour may be sufficient on its own to establish enslavement as a crime against humanity. However, it is not a prerequisite for the crime to be established.<sup>2060</sup> With respect to forced labour as enslavement, the NUON Chea Defence submits that in establishing lack of consent, the “mere subjective opinion of the victims that they were forced to work is insufficient; instead it must be proved with objective evidence”.<sup>2061</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. The Chamber agrees that the subjective opinion of the victims alone is insufficient and ultimately there must be objective evidence establishing that there was no choice about whether the victim would work.<sup>2062</sup>

667. The NUON Chea Defence submits that the charges of enslavement with respect to security centres are limited to forced labour.<sup>2063</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. With respect to the allegations which are based on forced labour, the Chamber notes that the Closing Order specifies that it is not the forced labour alone, but the work, coupled with the constraints imposed on the victims which “stripped them of their free will, and amounts to enslavement”.<sup>2064</sup> Furthermore, the Closing Order sets out a broader actus reus in relation to the cooperatives, worksites and security centres which involved the exercise of “total control and all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over the persons placed there, without them being given any real right to agree”.<sup>2065</sup> The Closing Order further alleges that the CPK set up a network of cooperatives, worksites and security centres where “virtually all decisions concerning the victims’ physical environment were taken by the local CPK authorities”.<sup>2066</sup>

668. With respect to charges based on forced labour, the NUON Chea Defence submits that in order to constitute enslavement, forced labour must be illegal and of certain gravity.<sup>2067</sup> It contends that the use of forced labour is not always unlawful and that requiring a person to work in the ordinary course of lawful detention does not amount to forced labour.<sup>2068</sup> Further, it submits that “any service exacted in cases of emergency or calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community” is not considered a human rights violation.<sup>2069</sup> In assessing the gravity of the alleged acts of forced labour, the NUON Chea Defence submits that this conduct should be put in perspective of the dire living and working conditions of farmers and other workers in Cambodia at the time.<sup>2070</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard.

669. The Chamber notes that, pursuant to the ICCPR, forced or compulsory labour shall not include work or service “normally required of a person who is under detention in consequence of a lawful order of a court”.<sup>2071</sup> Such work would not be a consequence of an infringement of the right to liberty and security of the person.<sup>2072</sup> The ICCPR clarifies that the prohibition against forced or compulsory labour does not preclude the performance of hard labour in pursuance of a sentence by a competent court, in a country where imprisonment with hard labour may be imposed as punishment for a crime.<sup>2073</sup> The ICCPR further provides that forced or compulsory labour shall not preclude “any service exacted in cases of emergency or calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community”.<sup>2074</sup> If a person is required to work in cases of emergency or calamity, the nature and conditions of the work need to be balanced against the nature of the threat to the well-being of the community and the circumstances of the emergency. Furthermore, if the crisis or emergency situation is the result of the perpetrator’s own unlawful activity then such measures would not be justifiable.<sup>2075</sup> As discussed above, while jurisprudence has clarified that enslavement is broader than slavery (the prohibition of which is a norm of jus cogens), it shares the same origin. Accordingly, while there are limited situations in which people can be forced to work, if the conditions are such that this goes beyond lawfully required labour and encompasses the exercise over a person of any or all powers attaching to ownership, such conduct amounts to enslavement and is therefore not justifiable under any circumstance. However, the final assessment will be conducted below as required on the facts of the case.

<sup>2075</sup> The ICTY has recognised this principle in the context of deportation and forced transfer and has found that while “forced displacement for humanitarian reasons is justifiable in certain situations”, it is not justified “where the humanitarian crisis that caused the displacement is itself the result of the accused’s own unlawful activity”. See Stakić Appeal Judgement, para. 287; Karadžić Trial Judgement,

670. The mens rea of enslavement is the intentional exercise over a person of “any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership”.<sup>2076</sup>

9.1.4. Deportation

671. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of deportation at Tram Kak Cooperatives as well as in Prey Veng and Svay Rieng.<sup>2077</sup> It is alleged that Vietnamese living in Cambodia were forced to leave the places where they had been residing legally and to cross the Vietnamese border.<sup>2078</sup>

672. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber must determine whether the crime against humanity of deportation was established as a crime under customary international law before 17 April 1975. Deportation as a crime against humanity developed out of deportation as a war crime, which was recognised prior to World War II.<sup>2079</sup> Deportation as a crime against humanity was codified in the IMT Charter,<sup>2080</sup> IMTFE

673. With respect to the foreseeability and accessibility of deportation as a crime against humanity, the Chamber takes into account the customary status and gravity of the crime and the positions held by the Accused as members of Cambodia’s governing authority. Having weighed these factors objectively, the Chamber concludes that it was both foreseeable and accessible in general that deportation was punishable as a crime against humanity by 1975.

[...] deportation of the population is criminal whenever there is no title in the deporting authority or wherever the purpose of the displacement is illegal or whenever the deportation is characterized by inhumane or illegal methods”); Justice Judgement, p. 1059;

675. The Co-Prosecutors submit that the requirement that the victims be “lawfully present” in area should not be equated to the concept of “lawful residence” and that legal residents include refugees and stateless persons.<sup>2088</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard.

676. This issue was addressed before the ICTY by the Popović Trial Chamber, which stated:

The Trial Chamber is of the view that the words “lawfully present” should be given their common meaning and should not be equated to the legal concept of lawful residence. The clear intention of the prohibition against forcible transfer and deportation is to prevent civilians from being uprooted from their homes and to guard against the wholesale destruction of communities. In that respect, whether an individual has lived in a location for a sufficient period of time to meet the requirements for residency or whether he or she has been accorded such status under immigration laws is irrelevant. Rather, what is important is that the protection is provided to those who have, for whatever reason, come to “live” in the community – whether long term or temporarily.<sup>2089</sup>

677. The Trial Chamber considers this reasoning to be persuasive. It also notes that post-World War II jurisprudence found that deportation encompassed individuals who were stateless, refugees in occupied territories and others who were factually residing in particular states without reference to the legal status of their residency.<sup>2090</sup> Accordingly, the Chamber does not consider that evidence needs to be presented establishing the legal status of the victims.

678. The Chamber now turns to the cross-border requirement of deportation as a crime against humanity. ICTY jurisprudence has extensively considered the nature of the cross-border requirement and concluded that deportation as a crime against humanity required that individuals be transferred “across a state border or, in certain circumstances, a de facto border”.<sup>2091</sup> The alleged facts of Case 002/02 only include transfers across the state border between Cambodia and Vietnam. Accordingly, the Chamber considers that it need only establish, by reference to pre-1975 jurisprudence and legal provisions, whether the law in 1975 encompassed such a cross-state-border transfer.

679. Numerous post-World War II cases make findings in law or fact that deportation encompasses the crossing of state borders. The Krupp Judgement, adopting the concurring opinion of Judge Phillips in the Milch Judgement, stated that the “[d]isplacement of groups of persons from one country to another is the proper concern of international law in as far as it affects the community of nations. International law has enunciated certain conditions under which the fact of deportation from one nation to another during times of war becomes a crime”.<sup>2092</sup> Similarly, in the Nuremberg Judgement, the International Military Tribunal found that “not only in defiance of the well-established dictates of international law, but in complete disregard of the elementary rules of humanity [...] [w]hole populations were deported to Germany for the purposes of slave labor”.<sup>2093</sup> The Nuremberg Judgement made findings with respect to the deportation of millions of people from occupied territories to Germany and also the deportation of Jews from “Axis satellites” to the East prior to their extermination.<sup>2094</sup> The Flick Judgement also made findings with respect to “deportation to slave labor [in German industry] on a gigantic scale of members of the civilian populations of countries under the belligerent occupation of or otherwise controlled by Germany”.<sup>2095</sup>

680. The Chamber also considers sources concerning deportation as a war crime to be “instructive because deportation as a crime against humanity developed out of deportation as a war crime”.<sup>2096</sup> Article 23 of the 1863 Lieber Code prohibited deportation during times of war, instructing that “[p]rivate citizens are no longer [to be] [...] carried off to distant parts".<sup>2097</sup> While the Lieber Code made no express reference to a cross-border requirement, it was a precursor to later prohibitions with respect to deportation that did include such a requirement.<sup>2098</sup> The Chamber further notes that Article 49 of Geneva Convention IV refers to "deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the Occupying Power or to that of any other country", which is consistent with a definition of deportation that requires displacement across a national border.

681. The Chamber concludes following this review that in 1975 deportation required displacement across a national border.

682. The forced character of the displacement is determined by the absence of genuine choice and that the term "forced" may include physical force, as well as the threat of force or coercion, such as that caused by fear of violence, duress, detention, psychological oppression, abuse of power or the act of taking advantage of a coercive environment.<sup>2099</sup> It is the absence of genuine choice that makes displacement unlawful; where consent is given, it must be given voluntarily as a result of the individual's free will, assessed in light of the surrounding circumstances.<sup>2100</sup>

683. There are limited circumstances under international law that would permit the involuntary removal of persons, for example removal of people for their own security or for imperative military reasons.<sup>2101</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submit that given the drastic nature of forced displacement, justifications for evacuation "would only be lawful in the gravest of circumstances and only as measures of last resort".<sup>2102</sup> They further submit that to justify forcible displacement on the basis of military necessity, the military considerations must make it imperative, and mere military advantage would not suffice.<sup>2103</sup> In this regard, the Co-Prosecutors submit that transfers for the purposes of “preventing espionage and depriving the enemy of manpower” would not be justified.<sup>2104</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that the Co-Prosecutors failed to discharge the burden of proof of establishing that the movement of people occurred in violation of international law.<sup>2105</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard.

684. The Chamber notes that a determination of whether an act was permissible under international law requires an assessment of the relevant provisions of the applicable legal framework and of the factual context on a case-by-case basis.<sup>2106</sup> Where measures are taken to transfer individuals in the interests of civilian security or military necessity, they must be proportionate to the interest protected and must be “the least intrusive instrument amongst those which might achieve the desired result”.<sup>2107</sup> Consistently with the protections found under Article 49 of Geneva Convention IV, the Chamber finds that even if individuals are lawfully evacuated for their security or for imperative military reasons, those evacuated must be transferred back to their homes as soon as hostilities in the area in question have ceased.<sup>2108</sup> Additionally, those responsible for a transfer “shall ensure, to the greatest practicable extent, that proper accommodation is provided to receive the protected persons, that the removals are effected in satisfactory conditions of hygiene, health, safety and nutrition, and that members of the same family are not separated”.<sup>2109</sup> While displacement for humanitarian reasons is justifiable in certain situations, it is not justifiable where the humanitarian crisis that caused the displacement was itself the result of an accused’s own unlawful activity.<sup>2110</sup>

685. The NUON Chea Defence submits that the existence of a conflict between Vietnam and Cambodia constituted “a legitimate reason to suggest the return of

While the Trial Chamber made this finding in the context of forced transfer as an “other inhumane act”, the Trial Chamber finds that this is equally applicable to the crime of deportation as a crime against humanity.

Vietnamese nationals to Vietnam”, a view supported by the fact that Cambodian and Vietnamese authorities co-operated in this regard.<sup>2111</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. The Chamber finds that the mere existence of an agreement between authorities representing parties to an armed conflict to exchange groups of persons displaced from each side, does not have an impact on the voluntary nature or lawfulness of that displacement. Contrary to the NUON Chea Defence submission, “[m]ilitary commanders or political leaders cannot consent on behalf of the individual”,<sup>2112</sup> “[a]n agreement as such does not in itself alter the conditions rendering a transfer lawful”<sup>2113</sup> and “what matters is the personal consent or wish of an individual, as opposed to collective consent as a group, or a consent expressed by official authorities, in relation to an individual person, or a group of persons”.<sup>2114</sup>

686. The mens rea of deportation requires the intent to forcibly displace the victim across a national border.<sup>2115</sup> There is no need to show intent to displace persons across the border on a permanent basis.<sup>2116</sup>

9.1.5. Imprisonment

687. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of imprisonment at Tram Kak Cooperatives; S-21, Kraing Ta Chan, Au Kanseng and Phnom Kraol Security Centres; and through the treatment of the Cham.<sup>2117</sup>

688. This Chamber has previously found that imprisonment was recognised under customary international law by 1975.<sup>2118</sup> The customary status of the prohibition against arbitrary imprisonment under international law initially developed from the laws of war and imprisonment was recognised as a crime against humanity since its inclusion in Control Council Law No. 10 in 1945.<sup>2119</sup> The prohibition of arbitrary imprisonment is further supported by a number of international and regional human rights instruments which predate 1975.<sup>2120</sup> With respect to the foreseeability and accessibility of imprisonment as a crime against humanity, the Chamber takes into account the customary status and gravity of the crime and the positions held by the Accused as members of Cambodia’s governing authority. Having weighed these factors objectively, the Chamber concludes that it was both foreseeable and accessible in general that imprisonment was punishable as a crime against humanity by 1975.

689. The actus reus of imprisonment consists of the arbitrary deprivation of an individual’s liberty without due process of law.<sup>2121</sup> An initial deprivation of liberty will be arbitrary if no legal basis exists to justify it.<sup>2122</sup> If national law is relied upon as justification in this regard, it must be established that the relevant provisions do not violate international law.<sup>2123</sup> The legal basis for the initial deprivation of liberty must continue throughout the period of imprisonment. Where the lawful basis of imprisonment ceases, continued imprisonment may be considered arbitrary.<sup>2124</sup>

690. The NUON Chea Defence submits that “[t]he CPK’s policy sought to investigate and detain those suspected of unlawful activities endangering state security or threatening the society as such” and that this “was both lawful and legitimate”.<sup>2125</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that this policy was “akin to many security-related policies worldwide” and that the “CPK implemented a form of judicial system and a specific form of proceeding for dealing with suspected offenders” and for identifying a legal basis for their arrest.<sup>2126</sup> It asserts that the implementation of the DK policy should be assessed in the context of exceptional circumstances of public emergency which would allow some derogation from States’ obligations related to arrests of individuals and fair trial guarantees.<sup>2127</sup> It contends that there was an “elaborate process to monitor, investigate and interrogate people” and that one reasonable inference from the evidence is that the CPK was genuinely trying to identify individuals guilty of unlawful activities.<sup>2128</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard.

691. The core question that the Chamber must assess is whether the deprivation of liberty had a legal basis or was arbitrary because it was carried out or perpetuated without due process of law.

692. The deprivation of an individual’s liberty is arbitrary if it is imposed without due process of law.<sup>2129</sup> In making that assessment, the Chamber considers that the ECHR is instructive as it sets out a list of cases in which deprivation of liberty “in accordance with a procedure prescribed by law” does not constitute a violation of the right to liberty and security.<sup>2130</sup> Accordingly, the deprivation of liberty will not be arbitrary if it resulted from: (a) the lawful detention of a person after conviction by a competent court; (b) the lawful arrest or detention of a person for non-compliance with the lawful order of a court or in order to secure the fulfilment of any obligation prescribed by law; or (c) the lawful arrest or detention of a person effected for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority on reasonable suspicion of having committed an offence or when it is reasonably considered necessary to prevent his committing an offence or fleeing after having done so.<sup>2131</sup> In assessing whether the deprivation of liberty was “in accordance with a procedure prescribed by law” the Chamber will not only have regard to whether it complied with domestic law, but also whether the detention respected fundamental principles and protections under international law.<sup>2132</sup>

693. In this regard, an initially justified imprisonment may become arbitrary if the deprivation of physical liberty is administered with “serious disregard of fundamental procedural rights” under international law.<sup>2133</sup> In assessing whether detention was perpetuated without due process of law, the Chamber may have regard to the basic procedural guarantees found in the ICCPR and ECHR.<sup>2134</sup> These basic procedural guarantees include the right to promptly be brought before a judge or officer authorised to exercise judicial power,<sup>2135</sup> the right to trial within a reasonable time,<sup>2136</sup> and the right to take proceedings in order to decide on the lawfulness of the detention.<sup>2137</sup>

694. Furthermore, in assessing whether the deprivation of the liberty was perpetuated without due process of law, it is instructive to have regard to the procedural safeguards found in Article 43 of Geneva Convention IV.<sup>2138</sup> While this addresses the internment of civilians, it has been found that when the procedural safeguards set out in Geneva Convention IV are not complied with, this could be relevant to assessing whether there was unlawful imprisonment as a crime against humanity.<sup>2139</sup> The protections included in Article 43 of Geneva Convention IV include the right to have the internment reconsidered as soon as possible by an appropriate court or administrative board and the right to have the internment periodically considered.<sup>2140</sup>

695. The Chamber will have regard to these indicia in assessing whether the procedure and practice adopted in the DK with respect to the detention of individuals in each of the alleged crime sites resulted in the deprivation of liberty according to due process of law. To the extent that the NUON Chea Defence asserts that there was a domestic legal basis for the deprivation of liberty, the Chamber will assess whether this had a foundation in Cambodian national law. As set out above, if Cambodian law is relied upon as justification for the deprivation of liberty, these provisions must not violate international law.<sup>2141</sup> In making that assessment it is important that the “national law itself must not be arbitrary” and the enforcement of such a law is not arbitrary.<sup>2142</sup>

696. The NUON Chea Defence submits that under international human rights law, states may in certain circumstances derogate from some of their obligations related to arrests of individuals and fair trial guarantees in times of public emergency.<sup>2143</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. The ICCPR does make provision for a State to derogate from certain obligations, but it only allows for such derogation in very narrowly defined circumstances. Pursuant to Article 4(1) of the ICCPR, derogation is only possible in “time of public emergency which threatens the life of the nation” provided that this situation is officially proclaimed.<sup>2144</sup> Furthermore, derogation is only permissible “to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation” and provided that such measures are not inconsistent with their obligations under international law.<sup>2145</sup> The ECHR similarly permits derogation by a contracting party from certain obligations in “time of war or other public emergency threatening the life of the nation” but only to “the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation” and provided that the measures are not inconsistent with the contracting party’s other obligations under international law.<sup>2146</sup> In addition, a State “availing itself of the right of derogation” is required to “immediately inform the other States Parties [to the ICCPR]” of “the provisions from which it has derogated and of the reasons by which it was actuated”.<sup>2147</sup> The Chamber will have regard to this guidance in assessing whether on the facts of the case any derogation with respect to the right against arbitrary detention was lawful and consistent with obligations under international law during the relevant period.

697. The mens rea of imprisonment requires that the perpetrator intended to arbitrarily deprive the individual of liberty, or that the perpetrator acted in the reasonable knowledge that his or her actions were likely to cause the arbitrary deprivation of physical liberty.<sup>2148</sup>

698. The NUON Chea Defence submits that for the Chamber to assess whether an arrest was arbitrary, it must consider the reasonableness of the arresting officer's suspicion that the factual circumstances warrant an arrest.<sup>2149</sup> It further submits that the factual basis for this reasonable suspicion need not reach the level for bringing formal charges,<sup>2150</sup> and that what may be regarded as reasonable depends on the circumstances, in particular the "situation pre- and post-DK".<sup>2151</sup> The Co-Prosecutors instead submit that "mere 'suspicion' that a person may be involved in treason is insufficient as a legal basis to justify detaining individuals without due process; namely, without charges, with no judicial review of evidence, no defence counsel, and with no right to any trial".<sup>2152</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. The Chamber finds that even if the arresting officer had reasonable suspicion of circumstances warranting arrest, this does not absolve the officer of responsibility if the individual is detained without due process of law.

9.1.6. Torture

699. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of torture at Tram Kak Cooperatives; S-21, Kraing Ta Chan and Phnom Kraol Security Centres; and through the treatment of the Cham.<sup>2153</sup> raised by the parties in this case which require the Chamber to consider the issue further. With respect to the foreseeability and accessibility of torture as a crime against humanity, the Chamber takes into account the customary status and gravity of the crime and the positions held by the Accused as members of Cambodia's governing authority. Furthermore the Chamber notes that the Supreme Court Chamber referred to the "widespread recognition by the community of States of the gravity of torture" in concluding that criminal prosecution for torture was foreseeable by 1975.<sup>2155</sup> Having weighed these factors objectively, the Chamber concludes that it was both foreseeable and accessible in general that torture was punishable as a crime against humanity by 1975.<sup>2156</sup>

701. The definition of torture contained in the 1975 Declaration on Torture was declaratory of customary international law during the period 1975-1979.<sup>2157</sup> Pursuant to that definition, the elements of torture are:

- (i) any act causing severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental (actus reus);
- (ii) that is intentionally inflicted upon a person (mens rea);
- (iii) by or at the instigation of a public official;
- (iv) for such purposes as obtaining information or a confession, punishment or intimidation.<sup>2158</sup>

702. The Co-Prosecutors submit that the prohibition against torture was a norm of jus cogens and thus derogations were not permitted under any circumstance, including public emergency or in the name of national security.<sup>2159</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. The Chamber upholds its previous finding that the prohibition of torture has acquired the status of a peremptory or non-derogable principle of international law.<sup>2160</sup> The International Court of Justice has also recognised the status of the prohibition of torture as a norm of jus cogens which was "grounded in a widespread international practice and on the opinio juris of States".<sup>2161</sup> In reaching that conclusion, the International Court of Justice relied on international instruments such as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Geneva Conventions and the ICCPR, which were concluded prior to 1975.<sup>2162</sup> The Chamber is therefore satisfied that as at 1975, the prohibition of torture was a norm of jus cogens from which no derogations were possible for any reason.

703. In assessing pain or suffering, this Chamber and the ad hoc tribunals have considered objective criteria, such as the severity of the harm inflicted and the nature, purpose and consistency of the acts committed, as well as subjective criteria, including the physical or mental condition of the victim, the effect of the treatment and, in some cases, factors such as the victim's age, sex, state of health and position of inferiority.<sup>2163</sup>

704. The Chamber observes that international jurisprudence has not specifically determined a threshold of suffering or pain required for the crime of torture to be established. The ICTY Appeal Chamber has noted that "some acts may be so obvious that [they] amount per se to torture".<sup>2164</sup> Drawing on the work of the United Nations Special Rapporteur for Torture, the Delalić et al. Trial Judgement provided "a detailed, although not exhaustive, catalogue of those acts which involve the infliction of suffering severe enough to constitute the offence of torture", including:

[B]eating, extraction of nails, teeth, etc.; burns; electric shocks, suspension, suffocation; exposure to excessive light or noise; sexual aggression; administration of drugs in detention or psychiatric institutions; prolonged denial of rest or sleep; prolonged denial of food; prolonged denial of sufficient hygiene; prolonged denial of medical assistance; total isolation and sensory deprivation; being kept in constant uncertainty in terms of space and time; threats to torture or kill relatives; total abandonment; and simulated executions.<sup>2165</sup>

<sup>2162</sup> Belgium v. Senegal, ICJ, Judgement, 20 July 2012 (ICJ Reports 2012), para. 99. The prohibition against torture can be found in Common Article 3 to the Geneva Conventions; Geneva Convention (I), Article 12; Geneva Convention (II), Article 12; Geneva Convention (III), Articles 17, 87; Geneva Convention (IV), Article 32; Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Article 5; ICCPR, Article 7. ICCPR, Article 4(2) and ECHR, Article 15 clarify that the respective prohibitions against torture, cruel (only in the case of the ICCPR), inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, found in ICCPR, Article 7 and ECHR, Article 3 are non-derogable.

705. Acts falling short of the severity threshold of this category of treatment may constitute other offences.<sup>2166</sup> The crime against humanity of other inhumane acts and the grave breaches of inhuman treatment, as well as cruel treatment – all of which share the same legal elements<sup>2167</sup> – entail treatment that causes serious mental and physical suffering that falls short of the severe mental and physical suffering required for the offence of torture.<sup>2168</sup> Acts identified by trial chambers as being of insufficient seriousness on their own – in the particular circumstances – to qualify as torture include interrogation,<sup>2169</sup> minor contempt for the physical integrity of the victim,<sup>2170</sup> imprisonment<sup>2171</sup> and deprivation of food.<sup>2172</sup>

706. The Co-Prosecutors submit that the list of purposes set out in the 1975 Declaration on Torture is representative rather than exhaustive. On this basis, they submit that the absence of express reference in that Declaration does not preclude a finding of torture on discriminatory grounds.<sup>2173</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. The Chamber considers that the phrase “for such purposes as” in Article 1 of the 1975 Declaration on Torture clearly indicates that the list is indeed representative rather than exhaustive. However, this does not establish that discrimination was recognised as a prohibited purpose of torture by customary international law as at 1975. It was not until the 1984 Convention Against Torture that “discrimination of any kind” was listed as one of the prohibited purposes of torture.<sup>2174</sup>

707. The Supreme Court Chamber expressly noted that the 1975 Declaration on Torture, which was reflective of customary international law, was more restrictive and did not include “discrimination of any kind” in the list of prohibited purposes.<sup>2175</sup> The Co-Prosecutors have not identified any case law, legal provision, state practice and/or opinio juris to suggest that prior to 1975 customary international law envisaged that discrimination could be one of the prohibited purposes of torture. The Chamber rejects this submission accordingly.

708. The Chamber notes that the 1975 Declaration on Torture does not expressly encompass “omissions” which cause severe pain or suffering. This Chamber has previously accepted the general principle applied consistently by the ad hoc tribunals that “a crime may be committed by culpable omission where there is a duty to act”.<sup>2176</sup> While this observation was made in the context of individual criminal responsibility, the Chamber finds that the general principle, that there needs to be a duty to act, applies to all culpable omissions, including for the purposes of torture. In accordance with this principle the Chamber finds that, so long as there is a duty to act, an omission which is intentional and causes severe pain or suffering, constitutes torture, provided that the other elements of the offence are satisfied.<sup>2177</sup>

709. The Co-Prosecutors dispute as a matter of international criminal law the requirement that torture must be committed by or at the instigation of a public official, submitting that the ICTY and ICTR have correctly rejected this. At the same time, they submit that the issue is irrelevant to this trial “as all of the acts of torture alleged were committed by officials or foot soldiers of the regime”.<sup>2178</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. It has been confirmed that customary international law during the period 1975-1979 required that torture be committed by or at the instigation of a public official to constitute a crime.<sup>2179</sup> The Co-Prosecutors do not substantiate their submission on the law by specifying any pre-1975 case law, legal provision, state practice and/or opinio juris that may demonstrate any error on the part of the Supreme Court Chamber in its analysis of customary international law. Accordingly, the Chamber rejects the submission on this aspect of the law.

9.1.7. Persecution on Political, Racial or Religious Grounds

710. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of persecution on the following grounds:

- (a) persecution on political grounds during the second phase of population movement (limited to the treatment of the Cham); at Tram Kak Cooperatives; at Trapeang Thma Dam, 1st January Dam and Kampong Chhnang Airfield Worksites; and at S-21, Kraing Ta Chan, Au Kanseng and Phnom Kraol Security Centres;<sup>2180</sup>
- (b) persecution on religious grounds during the second phase of population movement (limited to the treatment of the Cham); at Tram Kak Cooperatives (limited to the treatment of Buddhists); at 1st January Dam Worksite (limited to the treatment of the Cham); and with respect to the treatment of the Cham;<sup>2181</sup> and
- (c) persecution on racial grounds of Vietnamese at Tram Kak Cooperatives; S-21, Kraing Ta Chan and Au Kanseng Security Centres; and with respect to the treatment of the Vietnamese in Prey Veng and Svay Rieng.<sup>2182</sup>

711. The charged conduct underlying persecution refers to a variety of conduct, as set out in the various crimes sites discussed in this Judgement dealing with persecution. When such conduct refers to executions, killings, imprisonment or the forced movement of people, the Chamber will have regard to the definitions of murder, imprisonment, deportation and other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as forced transfer which have been set out in this Judgement.<sup>2183</sup>

712. Persecution on racial, religious or political grounds existed as a crime against humanity under customary international law by 1975. An identical finding by the Trial

Chamber in Case 001 was affirmed by the Supreme Court Chamber and remains uncontested by the parties to this case.<sup>2184</sup> With respect to the foreseeability and accessibility of persecution as a crime against humanity, the Chamber takes into account the customary status and gravity of the crime and the positions held by the Accused as members of Cambodia's governing authority. Having weighed these factors objectively, the Chamber concludes that it was both foreseeable and accessible in general that persecution was punishable as a crime against humanity by 1975.<sup>2185</sup>

713. Persecution is defined as:

- (i) an act or omission which [...] discriminates in fact and which denies or infringes upon a fundamental right laid down in international customary or treaty law (actus reus),<sup>2186</sup> and
- (ii) deliberate perpetration of an act or omission with the intent to discriminate on political, racial or religious grounds (mens rea).<sup>2187</sup>

This definition has been affirmed by the Supreme Court Chamber and is uncontested by the parties to this case.

714. The Chamber finds with respect to the discriminatory element of the actus reus that "discrimination in fact" occurs where a victim is targeted because of the victim's membership in a group defined by the perpetrator on specific grounds, namely on a political, racial or religious basis.<sup>2188</sup> The victims must in fact belong to a sufficiently discernible political, racial or religious group, such that the requisite persecutory consequences occur for the group.<sup>2189</sup> While the group that is the object of persecution must be discernible, it is the perpetrator who defines the group.<sup>2190</sup> This definition has been affirmed by the Supreme Court Chamber and is uncontested by the parties in this case.

715. The Chamber now turns to the requisite mens rea. The crime of persecution requires the specific intent to discriminate on political, racial or religious grounds.<sup>2191</sup> As discussed in more detail below, with the exception of aiding and abetting and superior responsibility, it is essential for the accused to possess this specific intent in order to establish responsibility for persecution as a crime against humanity.<sup>2192</sup> Generally, while the specific intent may not be inferred merely by reference to the general discriminatory nature of an attack, it may be inferred from such a context as long as, in view of the facts of the case, circumstances surrounding the commission of the alleged acts substantiate the existence of such intent.<sup>2193</sup> Circumstances which may be taken into consideration include the systematic nature of the crimes committed against a group and the general attitude of the alleged perpetrator as demonstrated by his behaviour.<sup>2194</sup> For the purpose of establishing discriminatory intent, behaviour shortly before and after the conduct in question may be taken into account as indicative of the perpetrator's state of mind at the time of the facts.<sup>2195</sup>

716. The particular acts amounting to persecution must be expressly charged.<sup>2196</sup> Persecutory acts may include the other underlying offences for crimes against humanity (such as murder, extermination, enslavement, imprisonment and torture), as well as other acts which rise to the same level of gravity or seriousness, including acts which are not necessarily crimes in and of themselves.<sup>2197</sup> In determining whether this threshold is met, acts should not be considered in isolation but rather should be examined in their context and with consideration of their cumulative effect.<sup>2198</sup> Although persecution often consists of a series of acts, a single act or omission may be grave or serious enough to amount to persecution where it results in the gross or blatant denial of a fundamental human right under treaty or customary international law.<sup>2199</sup>

717. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that where a targeted “group” is not clearly defined, there can be no crime of persecution.<sup>2200</sup> In this regard, it contends that only three groups are clearly identified in the Closing Order: former Khmer Republic officials, “New People” and Cambodians returning from abroad.<sup>2201</sup> It submits that the statement in the Closing Order that the “category of so-called ‘enemies’ continued to expand” is impermissibly vague, and further contends that defining the group as being composed of anyone who disagreed with the CPK ideology creates a situation in which victims of persecution do not belong to a group, and the group was not defined by the CPK authorities.<sup>2202</sup>

718. The Supreme Court Chamber has confirmed that persecution on political grounds may be committed against groups including categories of persons other than members of a political group or those holding political views.<sup>2203</sup> Persecution on political grounds may target groups which include various categories of persons, including perceived political opponents or obstacles to the implementation of the perpetrator’s political agenda.<sup>2204</sup> Accordingly, to the extent that the KHIEU Samphan Defence is raising an objection in principle to the alleged definition of the group as “opponents to the CPK ideology”, this submission is rejected. The assessment and analysis on whether the targeted groups alleged to have been defined by the perpetrators in the Closing Order were sufficiently discernible, or if, as suggested by the KHIEU Samphan Defence, limited to former Khmer Republic officials, “New People” and Cambodians returning from abroad, will be carried out in the legal findings of the relevant section on persecution on political grounds.

719. The NUON Chea Defence makes a number of submissions with respect to persecution on religious grounds. First, it submits that there is a clear distinction in international human rights law between freedom of religion and the freedom to manifest religion: while the former may never be curtailed, there was no state practice or opinio juris supporting an absolute right to manifest one’s religion from 1975 to 1979.<sup>2205</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that ritual ceremonies, building of places of worship or the display of religious symbols are examples of the freedom to manifest one's religion.<sup>2206</sup> It contends that certain restrictions on manifesting one's religion were permitted under international law,<sup>2207</sup> including for reasons of public order and security,<sup>2208</sup> and that in this case derogations were justified as a result of the emergency situation in DK.<sup>2209</sup> It submits accordingly that NUON Chea may not be convicted for possible restrictions on religious freedom that were permissible.<sup>2210</sup> No other Parties made any relevant submissions in this regard.

720. The Chamber finds that freedom of thought, conscience and religion is recognised internationally as a fundamental right.<sup>2211</sup> This right shall “include freedom to have or to adopt a religion or belief of his choice, and freedom, either individually or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in worship, observance, practice and teaching”.<sup>2212</sup> The Chamber concurs with the NUON Chea Defence that the right to manifest one's religion may be subject to some restrictions. Such restrictions must be prescribed by law and necessary to protect public safety, order, health, morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.<sup>2213</sup>

721. The Chamber notes that at the time of the alleged crimes, the Constitution of Democratic Kampuchea provided that every citizen had the right to worship according to any religion or to not worship.<sup>2214</sup> The Constitution further provided that “[r]eactionary religions which are detrimental to Democratic Kampuchea and to Kampuchean people are absolutely forbidden”.<sup>2215</sup> The Chamber will assess any restrictions on freedom of religion or the manifestation of religion on the facts of the case in view of these provisions and customary international law between 1975 and 1979 in order to determine whether they constituted permissible restrictions or breaches

9.1.8. Other Inhumane Acts

722. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity and conduct characterised as forced marriage, rape, forced transfer and enforced disappearances.<sup>2216</sup>

723. “Other inhumane acts” was accepted as a residual category of crimes against humanity under customary international law by 1975.<sup>2217</sup> With respect to the foreseeability and accessibility of other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity, the Chamber takes into account the customary status and gravity of the crime and the positions held by the Accused as members of Cambodia’s governing authority. Having weighed these factors objectively, the Chamber concludes that it was both foreseeable and accessible in general that other inhumane acts was punishable as a crime against humanity by 1975.

724. Other inhumane acts functions as a residual category, criminalising conduct which meets the criteria of crimes against humanity, but does not fit within one of the other specific underlying crimes against humanity.<sup>2218</sup> The actus reus of other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity requires an act or omission that caused serious mental or physical suffering or injury, or constituted a serious attack on human dignity.<sup>2219</sup> The

The Chamber recalls that the Pre-Trial Chamber found that, during the period 1975-1979, rape did not exist as a stand-alone crime against humanity and struck rape from the Closing Order. The Pre-Trial Chamber considered that facts characterised as the crime against humanity in the form of rape could be characterised as the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts. See Decision on IENG Thirith’s and NUON Chea’s Appeal against the Closing Order (PTC), D427/3/12, 13 January 2011, p. 6.

mens rea of other inhumane acts as a crime against humanity requires that the act or omission was performed intentionally.<sup>2220</sup>

725. The specific conduct underlying the crime of other inhumane acts need not itself be expressly criminalised under international law.<sup>2221</sup> In order to amount to other inhumane acts, the acts or omissions must be of a nature and gravity similar to other enumerated crimes against humanity.<sup>2222</sup> This requires a case-specific analysis of the impact of the conduct on the victims and a determination whether the conduct is comparable to the enumerated crimes against humanity.<sup>2223</sup> Such assessment may take into consideration the nature of the act or omission, the context in which it occurred and the personal circumstances of the victim.<sup>2224</sup> This assessment of the conduct should be carried out on a holistic basis.<sup>2225</sup> There is no requirement that the suffering have long-term effects on the victim, although this may be relevant to the determination of the seriousness of the act or omission in question.<sup>2226</sup>

726. The Chamber notes that the Supreme Court Chamber concluded that assessing whether the conduct infringes “basic rights appertaining to human beings, as identified under international legal instruments” was one way of introducing a “requirement of formal international unlawfulness”.<sup>2227</sup> In the view of the Supreme Court Chamber, this assists in assessing both the requirement of foreseeability and whether the conduct reaches the level of gravity of other crimes against humanity.<sup>2228</sup>

727. The Chamber notes that the Closing Order identifies instances of rape, attacks against human dignity, forced marriage, forced transfer and enforced disappearances as conduct underlying the charged crime of other inhumane acts in Case 002/02. None of these categories of conduct had crystallised as independent crimes against humanity by 1975,<sup>2229</sup> and they are not charged here as such. The Chamber must accordingly assess all such conduct against the definition of other inhumane acts. In order to carry out such assessment, the Chamber's task is facilitated by setting out its understanding of the constituent elements of such conduct, where it is determined necessary to ensure proper analysis.<sup>2230</sup>

9.1.8.1. Rape

728. As a preliminary matter, the KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that at the relevant time rape did not fall within the category of other inhumane acts.<sup>2231</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. The Chamber finds that this assertion misunderstands the nature of the offence. The Chamber stresses that there is no restrictive list of specific kinds of underlying conduct which would fall within the category of other inhumane acts. On the contrary, this crime encompasses a wide range of conduct, which does not fall within the enumerated crimes against humanity, so long as the chapeau elements for crimes against humanity are satisfied and the conduct rises to the same level of gravity as other crimes against humanity. It is the crime of other inhumane acts that is required to have existed under customary international law at the relevant time, an assessment which the Chamber has made above. There is no requirement that rape as a specific kind of underlying conduct had been expressly recognised as falling within this category of crime by 1975. This submission is accordingly dismissed.

729. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as rape in the context of forced marriage.<sup>2232</sup> Specifically, it alleges that “by imposing the consummation of forced marriages, the perpetrators committed a physical invasion of a sexual nature against a victim in coercive circumstances in which the consent of the victim was absent” and that “perpetrators intended the physical invasion of a sexual nature, with the knowledge that it occurred in coercive circumstances or otherwise without the consent of the victim”.<sup>2233</sup>

730. The Co-Prosecutors submit that the Chamber should adopt a more “inclusive and gender-neutral definition of rape” under which both women and men could be the subject of a “physical invasion” amounting to rape.<sup>2234</sup> They submit that “regardless of whether or not it fits prior legal definitions of the crime of rape, forcing any person or couple to engage in sexual relations without their consent is clearly a crime of equal seriousness to other crimes against humanity”.<sup>2235</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard.

731. The Chamber finds that the definition of rape suggested by the Co-Prosecutors goes beyond the understanding of rape as at 1975, that is the sexual penetration, however slight, of: (a) the vagina or anus of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator or any other object used by the perpetrator; or (b) the mouth of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator; where such sexual penetration occurs without the consent of the victim.<sup>2236</sup> The Chamber will apply this definition as a first step in assessing whether rape as an other inhumane act was committed. When the conduct in question is characterised as rape in the context of forced marriage, not all alleged victims of forced marriage would be victims of rape. More specifically, having regard to the definition of rape above, the Chamber finds that men could not be the victims of rape in the context of forced marriage. The Chamber will nonetheless consider whether the conduct may possibly be characterised as another form of sexual violence of such serious gravity that it amounts to other inhumane acts.<sup>2237</sup> The Chamber recalls that the only relevant issue for it to assess is whether the conduct in question, in light of all the circumstances of the case at hand, fulfilled the definition of other inhumane acts.<sup>2238</sup>

732. In assessing whether underlying conduct of rape amounts to other inhumane acts, the Chamber must determine whether such conduct is of similar gravity to the enumerated crimes against humanity, whether it caused serious mental or physical suffering or injury or constituted a serious attack on human dignity, and whether it was performed intentionally.<sup>2239</sup> This assessment is to be made on the facts of the case.<sup>2240</sup>

9.1.8.2. Attacks against human dignity

733. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity at Tram Kak Cooperatives; Trapeang Thma Dam, 1st January Dam and Kampong Chhnang Airfield Worksites; S-21, Kraing Ta Chan, Au Kanseng and Phnom Kraol Security Centres; and through the treatment of the Cham during the second phase of population transfer.<sup>2241</sup>

<sup>2237</sup> The Closing Order notes that: “The facts characterised as crimes against humanity in the form of rape can additionally be categorised as crimes against humanity of other inhumane acts in the form of sexual violence”. See Closing Order, para. 1433.

<sup>2240</sup> The Chamber notes with respect to the assessment of gravity in particular that there is significant precedent indicating that conduct amounting to rape may be considered of the requisite gravity. See 1863 Lieber Code, Articles 44 and 47; Control Council Law No. 10, Article II(1)(c); Geneva Convention (IV), Article 27; *USA v. <sup>2241</sup> Closing Order, paras 1434-1441; Case 002 Additional Severance Decision Annex, p. 4.

734. The Closing Order alleges that attacks against human dignity resulted from “depriving the civilian population of adequate food, shelter, medical assistance, and minimum sanitary conditions”.<sup>2242</sup> In assessing whether this underlying conduct amounts to other inhumane acts, the Chamber must determine whether such conduct is of similar gravity to the enumerated crimes against humanity, whether it caused serious mental or physical suffering or injury or constituted a serious attack on human dignity, and whether it was performed intentionally.<sup>2243</sup> Such deprivations may be of similar gravity to the enumerated crimes against humanity, and thus, may fall within the ambit of other inhumane acts.<sup>2244</sup> A final assessment on the basis of this conduct is to be made on the facts of the case.

735. The assessment of the gravity of the relevant act or omission may take context into consideration. In this regard, the Chamber has considered the way in which other tribunals have taken context, and in particular the situation prevailing in the country or the area where the crimes occurred, into account in their assessment of the gravity of acts or omissions alleged to constitute other inhumane acts.

736. In the Delalić case, concerning the treatment of detainees at the Čelebići prison-camp, the Defence submitted that “if conditions at a detention facility are inadequate but are nonetheless all that could be provided in the circumstances prevailing at the relevant time”, they cannot be considered inhumane.<sup>2245</sup> In assessing whether such conditions constituted inhuman treatment pursuant to Article 2(b) ICTY Statute, the ICTY Trial Chamber held that:

[W]hen considering the factual allegation of inhumane conditions with respect to these legal offences, no reference should be made to the conditions prevailing in the area of detention in order to determine what the standard of treatment should have been. The legal standard in each of the mistreatment offences discussed above delineates a minimum standard of treatment which also applies to conditions of detention. During an armed conflict, persons should not be detained in conditions where this minimum standard cannot be met and maintained.<sup>2246</sup>

737. The Chamber equated the notion of “inhuman treatment” pursuant to Article 2(b) ICTY Statute (a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions) with that of inhumane acts pursuant to Article 5(i) ICTY Statute (a crime against humanity)<sup>2247</sup> and defined “inhuman treatment” as “an intentional act or omission, [...] which causes serious mental or physical suffering or injury or constitutes a serious attack on human dignity.”<sup>2248</sup> This Chamber notes that this definition is consistent with its own approach to other inhumane acts.<sup>2249</sup>

738. In Krnojelac, the ICTY Trial Chamber examined whether the implementation of brutal living conditions at the KP Dom detention centre constituted inhumane acts as a crime against humanity pursuant to Article 5(i) of the ICTY Statute. In that case, the Trial Chamber accepted that “the heating system at the KP Dom was broken and that there were some attempts made by the administration to repair it” but was equally satisfied that “no other available measures were taken to protect the non-Serb detainees from the cold”.<sup>2250</sup> The Trial Chamber also recognised that “there may have been a general shortage of food in the Foča region during the conflict” but it was satisfied that “there was a deliberate policy to feed the non-Serb detainees barely enough for their survival”.<sup>2251</sup> The Trial Chamber was satisfied that the brutal living conditions imposed on the non-Serb detainees constituted acts and omissions of a seriousness comparable to the other crimes against humanity and that they constituted inhumane acts under Article 5(i) of the ICTY Statute.<sup>2252</sup>

739. This Chamber agrees with this jurisprudence and finds that even when the circumstances at the time of the commission of the crimes are difficult due to shortages of resources, resources which are nonetheless available should be provided and counter-measures adopted to mitigate the impact of the circumstances on the victims. Furthermore, there is a minimum standard of treatment which should be guaranteed in any circumstance; if the authorities are unable to guarantee that minimum standard of treatment, they should not put the victims in a position which exposes them to the violation of their basic rights. The Chamber will have regard to the foregoing when assessing the facts.

9.1.8.3. Forced marriage

740. As a preliminary matter, both Defence teams make a number of submissions contesting the existence of forced marriage as a crime against humanity at the relevant time. The NUON Chea Defence submits that treating forced marriage as a separate crime against humanity does not respect the principle of legality.<sup>2253</sup> In addition, it notes a fundamental difference between forced marriage as defined by the SCSL and “arranged marriage” which was not an international crime between 1975 and 1979.<sup>2254</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that at the relevant time, the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other conventions only recognised the right to free consent to marriage, but a breach of this right was not punishable under international law.<sup>2255</sup> Accordingly it submits that it was not possible to consider forced marriage to be a crime against humanity before 1975 and further that forced marriage is still not criminalised in Cambodian law.<sup>2256</sup> In addition, the KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the first prohibition against forced marriage appeared in Article 4 of the second Additional Protocol to the Geneva Conventions in 1977 and that no specific international legal norms or rules referred to it as a crime against humanity.<sup>2257</sup>

741. The Chamber finds that these submissions mistakenly address forced marriage as if it were charged here as a separate crime against humanity. This is not the case. The crime relevant to the underlying conduct of forced marriage is other inhumane acts. As set out above, the crime of other inhumane acts existed under customary international law at the relevant time and its definition is not restricted to a list of specific underlying conduct.<sup>2258</sup> There is no requirement that forced marriage was recognised as a specific category of crime against humanity or even as a specific kind of underlying conduct falling within the category of other inhumane acts by 1975. These submissions are accordingly dismissed.

742. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as forced marriage nationwide, as well as at the 1st January Dam, Tram Kak Cooperatives, Trapeang Thma Dam and in relation to the treatment of the Buddhists,<sup>2259</sup> alleging that victims were forced to enter into conjugal relationships in coercive circumstances.<sup>2260</sup> In addition, the Closing Order notes that in “the majority of cases of forced marriage death threats were made, violence was used and people were even executed if they refused to marry”.<sup>2261</sup> Furthermore, the Closing Order notes that the weddings “took place devoid of traditional involvement of the parents” with no respect of traditional rituals, and that marriages were performed at the same time involving between 20 and 60 couples.<sup>2262</sup> The Closing Order further refers to the “imposition of sexual relations aimed at enforced procreation”.<sup>2263</sup>

743. The right to enter into marriage freely is a fundamental right that was embedded in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted by the UN General Assembly, which stated that “[m]arriage shall be entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses”.<sup>2264</sup> The Chamber notes that the term “forced marriage” has been used in international jurisprudence to cover a range of different factual circumstances. The Chamber is not satisfied that there exists a common understanding of this label. Accordingly, the Chamber will determine whether the conduct which is alleged to amount to forced marriage in this case has been established and whether this conduct rises to the level of other inhumane acts.

744. The SCSL Appeals Chamber, in the AFRC case, described forced marriage as “a situation in which the perpetrator through his words or conduct, or those of someone for whose actions he is responsible, compels a person by force, threat of force, or coercion to serve as conjugal partner resulting in severe suffering, or physical or psychological injury”.<sup>2265</sup> This description of forced marriage was adopted in the RUF case.<sup>2266</sup> The SCSL Appeals Chamber further found that “unlike sexual slavery, forced marriage implies a relationship of exclusivity between the ‘husband’ and ‘wife’, which could lead to disciplinary consequences for breach of this exclusive arrangement. These distinctions imply that forced marriage is not predominantly a sexual crime”.<sup>2267</sup>

745. The Pre-Trial Chamber of the ICC recognised that forced marriage was not explicitly included within the jurisdiction of the ICC, but considered whether forcing women to serve as conjugal partners constituted an other inhumane act.<sup>2268</sup> The Pre-Trial Chamber found that the “central element of forced marriage is the imposition of ‘marriage’ on the victim, i.e. the imposition, regardless of the will of the victim, of duties that are associated with marriage [...] with the consequent social stigma”.<sup>2269</sup> It further found that the “element of exclusivity of this forced conjugal union imposed on the victim is the characteristic aspect of forced marriage” and that the victims of forced marriage “suffer separate and additional harm to those of the crime of sexual slavery”. The Pre-Trial Chamber held that forced marriage “violates the independently recognised basic right to consensually marry and establish a family”.<sup>2270</sup>

746. In assessing whether underlying conduct of forced marriage amounts to other inhumane acts, the Chamber must determine whether such conduct is of similar gravity to the enumerated crimes against humanity, whether it caused serious mental or physical suffering or injury or constituted a serious attack on human dignity, and whether it was performed intentionally.<sup>2271</sup> This assessment is to be made on the facts of the case.

<sup>2266</sup> Sesay et al. Appeal Judgement, paras 735-736. The Chamber notes that an amicus curiae brief was filed in this case

747. In the AFRC case, the SCSL Appeals Chamber had regard to evidence which demonstrated the physical and psychological suffering of victims of forced marriage,<sup>2272</sup> and found that acts of forced marriage were of similar gravity to several enumerated crimes against humanity including enslavement, imprisonment, torture, rape, sexual slavery and sexual violence.<sup>2273</sup> The Pre-Trial Chamber of the ICC has also recognised that forced marriage may cause great suffering and could be of a similar character to enumerated crimes against humanity.<sup>2274</sup>

748. The NUON Chea Defence submits that the facts in this case with respect to “forced marriage” do not reach the requisite gravity threshold to qualify as an other inhumane act.<sup>2275</sup> Similarly the KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that at the relevant time, forced marriage did not fall within the category of other inhumane acts, given that the impact on the victims did not have the same nature and level of severity when compared with other crimes against humanity.<sup>2276</sup> It contends that consent to marriage was not a core value in Cambodian culture and society before the DK, that marriage arranged by parents was only replaced by marriage arranged by local authorities during the DK and that accordingly the prejudice entailed is not comparable with other crimes against humanity.<sup>2277</sup> In this regard it submits that the cases of forced marriage at the SCSL and the ICC involved specific situations where women were kidnapped and enslaved, which prevents any comparison.<sup>2278</sup> Finally, it submits that the acts relating to “forced marriage” and subsequent sexual intercourse were not committed with the requisite intent for other inhumane acts given that the aim was to create families.<sup>2279</sup>

749. As set out above, determining whether forced marriage could amount to an other inhumane act is a factual assessment. This will depend on whether the acts or omissions

The Chamber will conduct this analysis accordingly on the facts of this case before setting out its legal findings. The Chamber notes at this stage, however, that the KHIEU Samphan Defence appears to confuse motive with intent.

9.1.8.4. Forced transfer

750. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as forced transfer during movement of the population (phase two) as limited to the treatment of the Cham.<sup>2280</sup> The Closing Order alleges that victims were forced to leave places where they lawfully resided without grounds permitted by international law.<sup>2281</sup>

751. The elements of deportation and forced transfer as an other inhumane act are substantially similar and require the forced displacement of persons by expulsion or other forms of coercion, from an area in which they are lawfully present, without grounds permitted under international law.<sup>2282</sup> These elements have been discussed in more detail in the applicable law with respect to deportation.<sup>2283</sup> The only difference is that forced transfer encompasses the forced displacement of persons within national territory, while deportation is limited to cases where people are forced to cross international boundaries.<sup>2284</sup>

752. Conduct amounting to forced transfer has previously been found to be sufficiently serious as to amount to other inhumane acts by the Supreme Court Chamber in Case 002/01 as well as in the jurisprudence of the ICTY.<sup>2285</sup> The Chamber will conduct its own analysis on the facts of this case before setting out its legal findings.

9.1.8.5. Enforced disappearances

753. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances during the Movement of Population (Phase Two) with respect to the treatment of the Cham; at the Tram Kak Cooperatives; at Trapeang Thma Dam, 1st January Dam and Kampong Chhnang Airfield Worksites; and at S-21, Kraing Ta Chan, Au Kanseng and Phnom Kraol Security Centres.<sup>2286</sup> The Closing Order alleges that enforced disappearances involved the arrest, detention or abduction of victims in conditions which placed them outside the protection of the law and the refusal to provide access to, or convey information on the fate or whereabouts of such persons.<sup>2287</sup> It is alleged that measures were put in place to conceal the fate of individuals who had disappeared, and that in addition to withholding information, the authorities provided false reasons to justify the absence of those who disappeared.<sup>2288</sup>

754. Conduct recognised at the relevant time as enforced disappearances included the following elements: (i) an individual is deprived of his or her liberty; (ii) the deprivation of liberty is followed by the refusal to disclose information regarding the fate or whereabouts of the person concerned, or to acknowledge the deprivation of liberty, and thereby deny the individual recourse to the applicable legal remedies and procedural guarantees, and (iii) the first and second elements were carried out by state agents, or with the authorisation, support or acquiescence of a State or political organisation.<sup>2289</sup>

755. Conduct amounting to enforced disappearances has previously been found to be sufficiently serious as to amount to other inhumane acts by the Supreme Court Chamber in Case 002/01 as well as in the jurisprudence of other international courts.<sup>2290</sup> A final assessment on the basis of this conduct is to be made on the facts of the case.

756. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with wilful killing at the S-21 Security Centre and Au Kanseng Security Centre as a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.<sup>2291</sup> mental injury are encompassed by both this grave breach and inhumane treatment, wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health focuses on the seriousness of the suffering or of the injury and does not include acts where the resultant harm relates solely to an individual's human dignity.<sup>2297</sup> The physical or mental harm caused to the victim need not be irredeemable or permanent, but must extend beyond temporary unhappiness, embarrassment or humiliation.<sup>2298</sup>

762. With respect to mens rea for the purposes of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, the Chamber observes that the ICRC Commentary notes that the “Geneva Conventions are silent as to the requisite degree of mens rea attached to most grave breaches [...] but leave it to States Parties to determine the requisite mental element attached to them, unless specifically defined in Article 50”.<sup>2299</sup> The ICRC Commentary recognises that “for some grave breaches, the mens rea is specified in Article 50, when it lists ‘wilful’ killing, ‘wilfully’ causing great suffering, or extensive destruction carried out ‘wantonly’”.<sup>2300</sup> The ICRC Commentary further suggests that the “use of the term ‘wilful’ indicates, at least for the crimes of killing and causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health, that either intentional or reckless conduct will engage the responsibility of the perpetrator”.<sup>2301</sup> The Chamber notes that jurisprudence of the ICTY has also held that the mens rea for violations of the grave breaches provisions can include both intent and recklessness.<sup>2302</sup>

763. The Chamber considers that the requisite mens rea varies depending on which grave breach is concerned. At the very least the Chamber finds that the mens rea for each grave breach includes intent to perform the act or omission. The Chamber will consider whether recklessness is sufficient if and when it arises on the facts of the case.

9.2.4. Inhumane Treatment

764. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with inhumane treatment at the S-21 Security Centre as a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.<sup>2303</sup>

765. The Chamber finds that “inhuman treatment is intentional treatment which does not conform with the fundamental principle of humanity, and forms the umbrella under which the remainder of the listed ‘grave breaches’ in the Conventions fall”.<sup>2304</sup>

766. The actus reus of inhumane treatment as a grave breach consists of an intentional act or omission against a person protected under the Geneva Conventions, which causes serious mental harm or physical suffering or injury, or constitutes a serious attack on human dignity.<sup>2305</sup> In contrast to the crime of torture, conduct which amounts to inhumane treatment need not reach the threshold of causing severe mental or physical suffering, or be committed with a purpose prohibited by the Convention against Torture or with the involvement of any public official or any person acting in an official capacity.<sup>2306</sup>

767. Acts which constitute torture or wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health will simultaneously constitute inhumane treatment.<sup>2307</sup> The offence of inhumane treatment also encompasses other acts which violate the principle of humane treatment, in particular the respect for human dignity.<sup>2308</sup> The assessment of whether an act constitutes inhumane treatment is a question of fact to be judged in all the circumstances of the individual case.<sup>2309</sup> Examples of inhumane treatment include acts characterised in the Geneva Conventions and Commentaries to the Geneva

Conventions as inhuman,<sup>2310</sup> and acts which are inconsistent with the principle of humanity.<sup>2311</sup>

768. The mens rea for this grave breach includes intent to perform the act or omission which causes serious mental harm or physical suffering or injury, or results in a serious attack on the human dignity of the victim.<sup>2312</sup>

9.2.5. Wilfully depriving a Prisoner of War or Civilian of the Rights of Fair and Regular Trial

769. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or a civilian of the rights of fair and regular trial at the S-21 and Au Kanseng Security Centres as a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.<sup>2313</sup>

770. The actus reus of this crime consists of an act or omission which deprives a prisoner of war or a civilian of the right to a fair and regular trial by denying judicial guarantees as defined, in particular, in Geneva Conventions III and IV.<sup>2314</sup> Such judicial guarantees include: the right to be judged by an independent and impartial court; to be promptly informed of the charges; the protection against collective penalty; protection under the principle of legality; the right not to be punished more than once for the same act or on the same count; to be informed of the right to an appeal; and the right not to

Examples of conduct which are contrary to the obligation to treat protected persons humanely in the Geneva Conventions include: all acts causing physical suffering (see e.g., Geneva Convention (IV), Article 32); corporal punishment (see e.g., Geneva Convention (IV), Article 32); the creation of conditions which expose a person to contagion or infection (see e.g., Geneva Convention (I), Article 12); enforced prostitution (see e.g., Geneva Convention (IV), Article 27); exposure to insults and public curiosity (see e.g., Geneva Convention (IV), Article 27); exposure of protected persons to violence and threats of violence (see e.g., Geneva Convention (IV), Article 27); failure to supply prisoners of war with sufficient food, water and clothing (see e.g., Geneva Convention (III), Article 20); indecent assault (see e.g., Geneva Convention (IV), Article 27); medical or scientific experiments not necessitated by medical treatment (see e.g., Geneva Convention (IV), Article 32); mutilation (see e.g., Geneva Convention (IV), Article 32); rape (see e.g., Geneva Convention (IV), Article 27); and wilfully leaving a person without medical assistance or care (see e.g., Geneva Convention (I), Article 12). See also, Delalić et al. Trial Judgement, paras 519-533.

be sentenced or executed without a previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court.<sup>2315</sup>

771. The mens rea for this grave breach includes intent to perform the act or omission.<sup>2316</sup>

772. The NUON Chea Defence submits that under international human rights law, states can in certain circumstances, derogate from some of their fair trial obligations in times of public emergency.<sup>2317</sup> The Chamber has already addressed these arguments in connection with imprisonment as a crime against humanity.<sup>2318</sup> It will have regard to this guidance in assessing whether on the facts of the case any derogation with respect to the rights to fair and regular trial was lawful and consistent with obligations under international law during the relevant period.

773. The NUON Chea Defence contends that there is no evidence showing that “the physical perpetrators intended the victims to be arbitrarily detained or that their fair trial rights were violated, for there is no reasonable reason to believe that they were aware of the requisite fair trial standards”.<sup>2319</sup> The Chamber will assess the evidence with respect to each crime site to determine whether or not the physical perpetrators had the mens rea. In any event, if the evidence fails to establish the mens rea for the physical perpetrator, the Chamber will have regard to whether the Accused as alleged members of a joint criminal enterprise had the requisite intent and used the physical perpetrators as tools to achieve the common purpose.

9.2.6. Unlawful Deportation of a Civilian

774. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with unlawful deportation of civilians from Vietnam to the S-21 Security Centre in Democratic Kampuchea as a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.<sup>2320</sup>

775. The elements of the grave breach of deportation are, subject to the satisfaction of the chapeau requirements for grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, largely the same as deportation as a crime against humanity, as set out above.<sup>2321</sup> The only distinction is that the provisions of Geneva Convention IV and specifically Article 49(1) refer to “deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the Occupying Power or to that of any other country”.<sup>2322</sup>

776. The Geneva Conventions do not define “occupied territory”. Article 42 of the Hague Regulations relevantly provides that “territory is considered occupied when it is actually placed under the authority of the hostile army. The occupation extends only to the territory where such authority has been established and can be exercised.”<sup>2323</sup>

777. While displacement from occupied territory has been referred to in ICTY jurisprudence, there has been limited discussion about what that term means in the context of establishing unlawful deportation.<sup>2324</sup> The Trial Chamber agrees with the approach taken by the Naletilić and Martinović Trial Chamber, which found that “the application of the law of occupation as it [a]ffects ‘individuals’ as civilians protected under Geneva Convention IV does not require that the occupying power have actual authority”.<sup>2325</sup> Accordingly, when dealing with crimes that affect civilians, such conduct is “prohibited from the moment that they f[a]ll into the hands of the opposing power, regardless of the stage of the hostilities. There is no further need to establish that an actual state of occupation as defined under Article 42 of the Hague Regulations existed.”<sup>2326</sup> The Chamber concurs that this prevents civilians from having less

<sup>2322</sup> Geneva Convention IV, Article 49(1) (emphasis added). The Commentary to Geneva Convention IV clarifies that the grave breach of unlawful deportation refers to breaches of Article 49 of the Convention. See Commentary to Geneva Convention IV, p. 599.

<sup>2324</sup> Stakić Appeal Judgement, paras 296, 300 (noting that customary international law recognises that displacement from “occupied territory” as expressly set out in Article 49 of Geneva Convention IV was “also sufficient to amount to deportation”). The ICTY Appeals Chamber did not set out a definition of “occupied territory”.

<sup>2326</sup> Naletilić and Martinović Trial Judgement, para. 222. In reaching this conclusion the Naletilić and Martinović Trial Chamber had regard to the Commentary to Geneva Convention IV which provided that “[s]o far as individuals are concerned, the application of the Fourth Geneva Convention does not depend upon the existence of a state of occupation [...] The relations between the civilian population of a territory and troops advancing into a territory, whether fighting or not, are governed by the present Convention. There is no intermediate period between what might be termed the invasion phase and inauguration of a protection during an intermediate period than that attached to them once occupation is established.<sup>2327</sup> This approach is consistent with a declaration of the UN General Assembly in 1974 that “forcible eviction, committed by belligerents in the course of military operations or in occupied territories shall be considered criminal”.<sup>2328</sup>

778. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the Trial Chamber is not seised of the facts concerning the unlawful deportation of civilians as a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions as these were excluded in the Annex delimiting the scope of Case 002/02.<sup>2329</sup> The Chamber recalls that while it has excluded the facts contained in paragraphs 832 to 840 of the Closing Order from the scope of Case 002/02, it may consider evidence of crimes committed by the RAK, including incursions in Vietnam, as long as it has relevance regarding the Grave Breaches charges related to civilians or soldiers hors de combat who were arrested during such fights on Vietnamese territory and who were sent to S-21 thereafter.<sup>2330</sup>

9.2.7. Unlawful Confinement of a Civilian

779. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with unlawful confinement of a civilian at the S-21 Security Centre as a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.<sup>2331</sup>

780. The elements of the grave breach of unlawful confinement of a civilian are, subject to the satisfaction of the chapeau requirements for grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, the same as those of imprisonment as a crime against humanity, as set out above.<sup>2332</sup>

781. The Chamber further notes that Article 42 of Geneva Convention IV provides that internment of a civilian may only be ordered if the security of the detaining power “makes it absolutely necessary”.<sup>2333</sup> This requires an assessment of whether there are reasonable grounds to believe that the security of the State is at risk.<sup>2334</sup> The Chamber agrees with the Co-Prosecutors' submission that the mere fact that a person is a national, or aligned with the enemy cannot be considered as threatening the security of the country, nor can the fact that a person is of military age alone justify confinement of a civilian.<sup>2335</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. The Chamber refers to its analysis of the NUON Chea submissions pertaining to imprisonment as a crime against humanity which are also relevant with respect to unlawful confinement as a grave breach. As set out in the law on imprisonment as a crime against humanity, the Chamber must assess whether the deprivation of liberty had a legal basis or was arbitrary because it was carried out or perpetuated without due process of law.<sup>2336</sup>

9.3. Genocide

782. As relevant to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with genocide through acts of killing in relation to the Cham and Vietnamese.<sup>2337</sup>

783. Article 4 of the ECCC Law provides that the Court has jurisdiction over “genocide as defined in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide of 1948 (“Genocide Convention”), and which were committed during the period from 17 April 1975 to 6 January 1979”. Article 4 lists “killing members of the group” as one of the acts which may constitute genocide when “committed with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group”.

9.3.1. Principle of Legality

784. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber must determine whether genocide was established as a crime under customary international law by 17 April 1975.

785. In 1946, the UN General Assembly unanimously adopted a resolution affirming that “genocide is a crime under international law”.<sup>2338</sup> The Genocide Convention, to which Cambodia acceded without reservation in 1950, entered into force in 1951.<sup>2339</sup> The contracting parties to the Genocide Convention recognised that “genocide, whether committed in time of peace or time of war, is a crime under international law”.<sup>2340</sup>

786. The Genocide Convention calls on contracting parties to enact the necessary legislation to give effect to the provisions of the convention and to provide effective penalties for persons guilty of genocide.<sup>2341</sup> Consequently, and prior to 17 April 1975, there was extensive State practice recognising genocide as an international crime, based almost uniformly on the Genocide Convention definition.<sup>2342</sup>

787. In its answer to the UN General Assembly’s request for an advisory opinion on the impact of certain reservations to the Genocide Convention, the ICJ held in 1951 that:

[I]t was the intention of the United Nations to condemn and punish genocide as ‘a crime under international law’ involving a denial of the

<sup>2338</sup> UNGA Res. 96 (I), 11 December 1946. At its second session in 1947, the UN General Assembly declared genocide was “an international crime entailing national and international responsibility on the part of individuals and States” and requested the Economic and Social Council to continue its work on a draft convention on genocide. See UNGA Res. 180 (II), 21 November 1947.

<sup>2339</sup> The Chamber notes that 41 States signed the Convention and that 75 States were party to the Convention by 1975. See https://treaties.un.org/Pages/ViewDetails.aspx?src=IND&mtmsg\_no=IV-1&chapter=4&clang=\_en. The Chamber notes that the 1956 Cambodian Criminal Code did not expressly include the crime of genocide. Genocide is now expressly defined and criminalised under Article 183 of the 2009 Cambodian Criminal Code.

See pp. 983, 1156). Some states, such as Belgium, France and Greece, which were parties to the Genocide Convention considered that the legislation in force was deemed sufficient to ensure the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide. See UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/416, Study of the Question of the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, 4 July 1978, paras 497-498.

right of existence of entire human groups, a denial which shocks the conscience of mankind and results in great losses to humanity, and which is contrary to moral law and to the spirit and aims of the United Nations.<sup>2343</sup>

788. The ICJ accordingly found that the principles underlying the Genocide Convention are “recognized by civilized nations as binding on States, even without any conventional obligation”.<sup>2344</sup> The ICJ further found that the Genocide Convention is intended to be “definitely universal in scope”.<sup>2345</sup> Subsequently, in 1970 the ICJ clarified that the erga omnes obligation of States to protect against genocide had “entered into the body of general international law”.<sup>2346</sup> Further, in 1970 the General Assembly adopted a resolution noting that no statute of limitations shall apply to the crime of genocide “even if such acts do not constitute a violation of the domestic law of the country in which they were committed”.<sup>2347</sup> The Chamber accordingly finds that genocide was established as a crime under customary international law by 1975.<sup>2348</sup>

789. With respect to the foreseeability and accessibility of genocide, the Chamber takes into account the customary status and gravity of the crime, the fact that Cambodia acceded to the Genocide Convention without reservation in 1950 and the positions held by the Accused as members of Cambodia’s governing authority. Having weighed these factors objectively, the Chamber concludes that it was both foreseeable and accessible in general that genocide was punishable as a crime by 1975.

9.3.2. Constitutive Elements of Genocide

9.3.2.1. The targeted groups

the group in whole or in part.<sup>2349</sup> In this case, the Closing Order identifies the Cham group as an “ethnic and religious group that distinguishes itself as such, and is identified as such by others” and the Vietnamese group as an “ethnic and national group, who may also have been considered as a racial group by the CPK”.<sup>2350</sup>

791. The Co-Prosecutors make detailed submissions on the definitions of national, ethnic, racial and religious groups respectively.<sup>2351</sup> They submit that attempting to differentiate each of the protected groups “on the basis of scientific criteria” would be inconsistent with the object and purpose of the Genocide Convention.<sup>2352</sup> The Co-Prosecutors further submit international courts have adopted a flexible approach to fitting targeted populations into four categories of protected groups.<sup>2353</sup> No other Parties made any relevant submissions with respect to the precise definition of the four protected groups.<sup>2354</sup>

792. The Chamber notes that the 1948 Genocide Convention does not specifically define the four protected groups.<sup>2355</sup> While some early jurisprudence of the ad hoc tribunals provided certain definitions of the specific features of each of the protected groups,<sup>2356</sup> most cases have since focused on the object and purpose of the Genocide Convention and favoured a case-by-case assessment of whether a specific group was

<sup>2349</sup> The Chamber notes that according to the travaux préparatoires there was discussion on including other groups such as political, linguistic and economic groups under Article II of the Genocide Convention. <sup>2355</sup> The Chamber notes that it is clear from the travaux préparatoires to the Genocide Convention, that as early as the Draft Convention on the Crime of Genocide in June 1947, racial, national and religious groups were intended to be included in the categories of protected groups without expressly defining the meaning of those terms. See Secretary General’s Draft Convention on the Crime of Genocide, UN Doc. E/447. These categories of protected persons were included in the final wording of the Genocide Convention. Furthermore, ethnic groups were also included following a vote without a clear definition of that term either. See UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.73; UN Doc. E/AC.25/SR.10; UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.74; UN Doc. protected.<sup>2357</sup> In the absence of generally accepted and precise definitions of the protected groups, the ad hoc tribunals have concluded that “[e]ach of these concepts must be assessed in the light of a particular political, social and cultural context”.<sup>2358</sup> The Trial Chamber finds that this approach accords with the object and purpose of the Genocide Convention, which concerned “the destruction of a race, tribe, nation, or other group with a particular positive identity” and the “denial of the right of existence of entire human groups”.<sup>2359</sup> Accordingly, the Chamber will assess on the facts of the case whether the Cham and Vietnamese respectively fall within the four categories of protected groups under the Genocide Convention.

793. In the determination of what constitutes a protected group, the Chamber notes that the group must have a particular distinct identity and be defined “as such” by its common characteristics rather than a lack thereof. A protected group cannot be defined by negative criteria.<sup>2360</sup>

794. The NUON Chea Defence submits that there must be objectively verifiable elements to membership in a group and that a perpetrator’s subjective perception that an individual is a member of the protected group is insufficient on its own to establish membership of the group.<sup>2361</sup> The Co-Prosecutors similarly submit that both objective and subjective criteria are to be taken into account in determining what constitutes a protected group.<sup>2362</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the Chamber should adopt an objective approach to the determination of what constitutes a protected group, based on objective criteria and interpreting the Genocide Convention through its travaux préparatoires.<sup>2363</sup>

795. The Chamber notes that, in determining what constitutes a protected group, the ad hoc tribunals have taken into account subjective factors including the way in which the perpetrator stigmatises the victims or the way in which the victims perceive themselves.<sup>2364</sup> The Trial Chamber finds that such factors are relevant and shall be taken into account. However, it considers that the subjective element alone is insufficient to establish membership of the protected group,<sup>2365</sup> and finds that both objective and subjective criteria may be taken into account. An analysis which focuses on the objective criteria is consistent with the purpose of the Genocide Convention which was to protect relatively stable and permanent groups.<sup>2366</sup>

9.3.2.2. Actus reus

9.3.2.3. Mens rea

797. The mens rea of genocide is the “intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such”.<sup>2372</sup> Genocide requires not only proof of the intent to commit the underlying act, but also proof of the specific intent to destroy the group, in whole or in part.<sup>2373</sup> This has been referred to as genocidal intent, dolus specialis, special intent or specific intent.<sup>2374</sup> The Chamber shall refer to this as specific intent.

798. In accordance with the Genocide Convention definition, it must be established that the perpetrator had the intent to destroy a protected group “as such”.<sup>2375</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submit that this phrase denotes a requirement that the group be destroyed as a separate and distinct entity and that while some individuals may live on, the “group identity” is destroyed.<sup>2376</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. The Chamber finds that this is consistent with the object and purpose of the Genocide Convention, where the phrase “as such” emphasises that the victim of crime of genocide is not merely the person but the group itself,<sup>2377</sup> and subsequent jurisprudence stating that the relevant intent is “to destroy a collection of people who have a particular group identity”.<sup>2378</sup>

<sup>2372</sup> Genocide Convention, Article 2. See also, Article 4 of the ECCC Law (the Court has jurisdiction over “the crimes of genocide as defined in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide of 1948 [...] with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group”).

Serbia and Montenegro*, ICJ, Judgement, 26 February 2007 (ICJ Reports 2007), para. 187.

<sup>2375</sup> The Chamber notes that the English and Khmer wording of Article 4 of the ECCC Law reads that “[t]he acts of genocide [...] mean any acts committed with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, such as: [...]”. The Chamber considers this to be a typographical error in the ECCC Law, given that Article II of the Genocide Convention refers to “intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such” and that the French version of the ECCC reflects the precise wording of the French version of the Genocide Convention (« l’intention de détruire, en tout ou en partie, un groupe national, ethnique, racial ou religieux, comme tel »). See Genocide Convention, Article II. See also, Closing Order, para. 1311.

799. The Co-Prosecutors submit that, contrary to some international jurisprudence, the intended destruction of a group need not be “physical or biological”.<sup>2379</sup> They contend that a “group can be deprived of its existence through the destruction of its specific traits, or dispersal of its members, leading to the dissolution of its unity and/or collective identity in a fundamental and irremediable manner”.<sup>2380</sup> By way of example, the Co-Prosecutors submit that forcibly transferring children to another group is an act of genocide that does not involve physical or biological destruction.<sup>2381</sup> Further, in connection with a religious group, they contend that if “you kill those who refuse to convert” and “[i]f you stop these people from practicing their religion the group [...] no longer exists”.<sup>2382</sup> In contrast, the KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the Genocide Convention only envisages the physical and biological destruction of a group.<sup>2383</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard.

800. The Chamber concurs with the finding of the ICJ, based in part on the travaux préparatoires of the Genocide Convention, that the scope of that Convention was limited to the physical or biological destruction of the group to the exclusion of cultural genocide.<sup>2384</sup> Even when underlying acts of genocide do not “directly concern the physical or biological destruction of members of the group [such as causing serious mental harm or forcible transfer of children]”, those acts must be carried out “with the intent of achieving the physical or biological destruction of the group, in whole or in part”.<sup>2385</sup>

801. While in the current case the actus reus of genocide is limited to killing members of the group, the possible combination of forced transfer and killings targeting members of the same group may be a relevant factor to take into account to assess the specific intent to destroy. In this regard the Chamber concurs with the approach taken by the ICTY “that the physical or biological destruction of a group is not necessarily the death of the group members” and “that the physical or biological destruction of the group is the likely outcome of a forcible transfer of the population when this transfer is conducted in such a way that the group can no longer reconstitute itself – particularly when it involves the separation of its members”, because “[i]n such cases [...] the forcible transfer of individuals could lead to the material destruction of the group, since the group ceases to exist as a group, or at least as the group it was”.<sup>2386</sup>

802. Where a conviction for genocide relies on the intent to destroy a protected group “in part”, the part must be a substantial part of the protected group, and the part targeted must be significant enough to have an impact on the group as a whole.<sup>2387</sup>

803. In order to infer specific intent, the Chamber needs to consider “whether all of the evidence, taken together, demonstrated a genocidal mental state”.<sup>2388</sup> Where an inference of specific intent is drawn, it must be the only reasonable inference available on the evidence.<sup>2389</sup> Factors relevant to this analysis may include the general context, the perpetration of other culpable acts systematically directed at the same group, the scale of atrocities committed, the systematic targeting of victims on account of their membership in a particular group, or the repetition of destructive and discriminatory acts.<sup>2390</sup> A Chamber can have regard to speeches made in public or in meetings to support a finding of specific intent.<sup>2391</sup> The existence of a plan or policy, while not a requirement of the crime of genocide, may support the inference that the perpetrator has the requisite specific intent.<sup>2392</sup>

804. The NUON Chea Defence submits that physical perpetrators must also possess the specific intent for the crime of genocide.<sup>2393</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submit that physical perpetrators need not possess the specific intent in situations where they are used by members of a joint criminal enterprise to commit genocide.<sup>2394</sup> No other parties made any relevant submissions in this regard. The Chamber notes that only one of the sources referenced by the NUON Chea Defence, the Brđanin Trial Judgement, supports its view that the person who physically carried out the crime must share the specific intent for genocide with the participants in a joint criminal enterprise.<sup>2395</sup> The Chamber further notes that the ICTY Appeals Chamber subsequently clarified that the focus is on the mental state of the accused and the other alleged members of the JCE and held that it is not the intent of the “physical perpetrators of the underlying alleged genocidal acts, that is determinative”.<sup>2396</sup> The Chamber concurs with this approach and finds that this is consistent with the object and purpose of the Genocide Convention.

10.COOPERATIVES

10.1. Tram Kak Cooperatives

10.1.1. Closing Order

805. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the following crimes against humanity committed in the Tram Kak Cooperatives: (i) extermination; (ii) enslavement; (iii) imprisonment; (iv) torture; (v) persecution on political grounds; (vi) persecution on racial grounds (treatment of the Vietnamese); and (vii) persecution on religious grounds (treatment of Buddhists); (viii) deportation of Vietnamese to Vietnam; and other inhumane acts in the forms of (ix) enforced disappearances; and (x) attacks against human dignity through the deprivation of food, shelter, medical care and minimum sanitary conditions.<sup>2397</sup>

10.1.2. Scope of Case 002/02

806. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the judicial investigation was geographically restricted to eight particular communes namely: (1) Kus; (2) Samraong (3) Trapeang Thum South; (4) Tram Kak; (5) Trapeang Thum North; (6) Nhaeng Nhang; (7) Sre Ronoung; and (8) Ta Phem, because these places were the only ones mentioned in the Introductory Submission at paragraph 43,<sup>2398</sup> and because no Supplementary Submissions extended the scope of judicial investigation.<sup>2399</sup> It submits that while the Co-Investigating Judges correctly listed these communes at paragraph 302 of the Closing Order (with the caveat that they characterised them as “sub-districts” instead of “communes”), later references to evidence concerning Angk Ta Saom commune in paragraphs 320 and 812 of the Closing Order, or concerning places other than the eight communes mentioned in the earlier list, should be disregarded as falling outside the scope of judicial investigation.<sup>2400</sup> In the furtherance of its reasoning the KHIEU Samphan Defence contends that the Chamber is bound by the same geographic restriction and all evidence relating to events in other communes should not be considered.<sup>2401</sup> This amounts to a challenge of the scope of the trial concerning crimes allegedly committed in Tram Kak district by limiting it to the eight listed communes.

The Closing Order also contains allegations of rape in the context of forced marriage, but these are addressed elsewhere in this Judgement. See Section 14.3.11.1: Regulation of Marriage: Tram Kak Cooperatives.

807. On the same basis, it is also submitted that evidence relating to a detention site at Angk Roka should be excluded from consideration because it was in Cheang Tong commune – not one of the communes mentioned in paragraph 302 of the Closing Order or one of the security centres specifically identified in Case 002/02.<sup>2402</sup> The Lead Co-Lawyers respond that the detention site at Angk Roka was actually in Trapeang Thum North commune. They also rely on an oral decision during the evidentiary phase of Case 002/02, when the Chamber decided to hear evidence relating to Angk Roka.<sup>2403</sup> The Co-Prosecutors did not address these submissions directly, but they refer to 13 different communes as included within the “Tram Kak District Cooperatives”.<sup>2404</sup>

808. Addressing first the contention limited to the eight communes listed in paragraph 302 of the Closing Order, the Chamber considers that when read in a holistic way, it is clear that the facts charged in the Closing Order and forwarded for trial with regard to the Tram Kak district concern all the cooperatives in the whole of Tram Kak district, rather than a subset of just eight communes. The additional references to Angk Ta Saom in paragraphs 320 and 812 of the Closing Order indicate that the Co-Investigating Judges took into consideration evidence beyond the eight communes mentioned in paragraph 302. Further, paragraph 303 of the Closing Order refers to “all the subdistricts in Tram Kak district”. Evidence relied upon by the Co-Investigating Judges in paragraph 302 relates to additional communes, beyond the eight identified; for example MEAS Sokha’s Interview Record describes his arrest from Cheang Tong commune; NUT Nov's Interview Record describes his roles on various commune committees, in Leay Bour commune among other places; and the documentary evidence cited refers to Angk Ta Saom, Popel and Khporp Trabaek communes. Elsewhere the Closing Order refers to arrests by commune militia all across Tram Kak district.<sup>2405</sup> It also found that Buddhism was banned "district-wide".<sup>2406</sup> The Chamber therefore rejects the KHIEU Samphan Defence's focus on, and interpretation of, paragraph 302.

809. The Chamber recalls that the Khieu Samphan Defence contention that a number of facts addressed by the Closing Order were actually not within the scope of the judicial investigation and accordingly may not fall within the scope of the trial or that evidence concerning these facts should be disregarded, amounts to challenge the Chamber's jurisdiction to adjudicate these facts, which, if granted, would terminate the prosecution of the charges based thereupon. The Chamber has already found that such challenges should have been filed within the time limit set by Internal Rule 89. The current claim to limit the scope of the trial to places listed in the Introductory Submission was neither raised before the Pre-Trial Chamber, nor as a preliminary objection. Therefore this request is untimely and is rejected as belated.

810. Turning to the detention site at Angk Roka which is not identified as a crime site in the Closing Order, the Chamber allowed the Parties to put questions to Civil Party THANN Thim about Angk Roka Security Office on the basis that it was part of the facts generally relevant to Tram Kak district and Kraing Ta Chan. However, the Chamber also invited the parties not to focus on this site in detail.<sup>2407</sup> The Chamber finds that while the Accused were not charged with crimes committed at Angk Roka Security Office, evidence as to the operation of this location remains, however, contextually relevant to the operation of the nearby District Office(s), to Kraing Ta Chan, and to the arrests of persons from cooperatives elsewhere in Tram Kak district.<sup>2408</sup> The Chamber limits its consideration of this site accordingly. This same logic applies to other detention sites about which the Chamber heard occasional evidence, 811. On the charge of extermination, the KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the Chamber is only seised of limited charges of deaths due to hunger. It submits that the charges do not include deaths where causation is inadequately pleaded, or where deaths may have stemmed from additional factors such as health issues more broadly.<sup>2410</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence also submits that it only needs to respond to the allegation of extermination insofar as deaths stemmed from starvation in two particular communes: Samraong and Ta Phem.<sup>2411</sup> The Chamber rejects these submissions. <sup>2411</sup> KHIEU Samphan Closing Brief, paras 994-997.

812. On the charge of political persecution as it pertains to the treatment of former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials, the KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that some of the allegations in the Closing Order, such as the description of persons being "closely monitored", do not amount to political persecution.<sup>2417</sup> While it concedes that charges of discrimination against former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials in Tram Kak district are found elsewhere in the Closing Order, it submits that the underlying evidence cited is either unclear, or relates to locations outside of the geographic scope of Case 002/02.<sup>2418</sup> The Chamber has already rejected submissions based on the internal geography of Tram Kak district. The Chamber further finds that the Closing Order expressly refers to purges of enemies including those "who had tendency for the LON Nol people".<sup>2419</sup> The section of the Closing Order on the Tram Kak Cooperatives must also be read together with the section on Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre, which was in Tram Kak district, and sets out detailed charges of the treatment of former Khmer Republic officials in Tram Kak district as a whole.<sup>2420</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence's submissions are therefore rejected.

813. On the charge of political persecution as it pertains to New People, the KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the Closing Order shows that equal treatment applied to all the cooperatives' inhabitants; the only discrimination charged is said to relate to political rights via the inability of New People to become unit chiefs, but even this charge is said to be based upon weak evidence.<sup>2421</sup> Contrary to these submissions, the Closing Order expressly states that militia kept a close eye on evacuees and if "they said anything against the CPK they were arrested and taken away".<sup>2422</sup> The Closing Order describes "depositee" people being separated into different labour unit from full-rights or candidate members.<sup>2423</sup> It describes New People as suffering from health problems in particular because they were not used to living in rural areas.<sup>2424</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence's submissions also ignore the fact that New People could often include former LON Nol soldiers or officials, or relatives of those persons. The Closing Order expressly charges that real or perceived enemies of the CPK were subjected to harsher treatment and living conditions than the rest of the population in the cooperatives.<sup>2425</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence's submissions are therefore rejected.

814. On the charge of religious persecution of Buddhists, the NUON Chea Defence stresses the distinction between the specific crime site versus evidence related to any broader policy. The specific submission is that the Tram Kak Cooperatives is the only relevant crime site pursuant to this charge, and the policy evidence heard by the Chamber as to events in other locations outside of Tram Kak district violated NUON Chea's right to a fair trial.<sup>2426</sup> The Co-Prosecutors respond that the Chamber must consider evidence from a range of locations in order to decide whether the events in Tram Kak district are indicative of the implementation of a CPK policy to ban pagodas, prohibit the practice of Buddhism and disrobe monks. The Co-Prosecutors also identify the communication of this policy at high-level meetings in Phnom Penh and policy documents.<sup>2427</sup> The NUON Chea Defence respond by challenging the strength and interpretation of the evidence cited by the Co-Prosecutors, including in relation to events in diverse zones.<sup>2428</sup>

815. In its Case 002 Additional Severance Decision, the Chamber rejected the Co-Prosecutors' proposal to extend its consideration of the treatment of Buddhists to a nationwide scope.<sup>2429</sup> The Annex to the Chamber's decision included paragraphs 205-207 and 210 of the Closing Order in Case 002/02. These paragraphs contain references to events in various locations throughout the country. However, the Chamber stated that the "implementation" of the policy was to be "limited to Tram Kak Cooperatives".<sup>2430</sup> The issue is whether prejudice arises should the Chamber place weight on events in locations other than Tram Kak district, beyond those described in paragraphs 205-207 and 210, when determining the existence and nature of any policy then implemented in Tram Kak district. The Chamber has held that it may rely on evidence that falls outside of the geographic scope in specific circumstances, for example to evaluate any deliberate pattern of conduct.<sup>2431</sup> In this section, however, the Chamber focuses on events in Tram Kak district and evaluates the extent to which they can be attributed to clearly discernible policies emanating from the Party Centre. This analysis does not, at this stage, require the Chamber to compare or corroborate events in Tram Kak district with events in diverse locations elsewhere.

816. The NUON Chea Defence submits that evidence related to persons identified as Khmer Krom should not be considered in the context of charges related to the Treatment of the Vietnamese.<sup>2432</sup> It submits that any such evidence is only relevant to the general conditions in cooperatives and the Closing Order's reference to Khmer Krom "transferred from Tram Kak District to Vietnam" must be understood in the context that Khmer Krom are not charged as a targeted group in Case 002, and not to be subsumed as part of the broader Vietnamese group.<sup>2433</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence's submissions go further, suggesting that any evidence related to the Khmer Krom is not within the scope of Case 002/02 at all.<sup>2434</sup> No other Party made relevant submissions in this regard. The Chamber has confirmed that the Closing Order did not identify the Khmer Krom as a targeted group in Case 002.<sup>2435</sup> The Chamber has also found that the Defence were not adequately notified of any charge that Khmer Krom were to be identified as a “sub-group” of the Vietnamese, such that the Chamber is not properly seised of the targeting of Khmer Krom, either as a specific group or as a sub-group of the Vietnamese.<sup>2436</sup> However on a different matter, the Closing Order charges that Vietnamese living in Tram Kak district were deported to Vietnam, particularly in 1975 and 1976.<sup>2437</sup> The Closing Order also refers to the registration of Khmer Krom in the context of families of mixed descent.<sup>2438</sup> Although there is no charge of racial persecution against the Khmer Krom, evidence relating to such persons may be relevant to other charges which do not depend upon their group identification.<sup>2439</sup> It may also be contextually relevant to the examination of the charge of deportation of Vietnamese (i.e. other than persons identified as Khmer Krom). The Chamber therefore rejects the submissions that evidence relating to Khmer Krom persons is either outside the scope of Case 002/02, or restricted to the general conditions in cooperatives only. Such evidence will therefore be considered by the Chamber for the limited purposes identified above.

<sup>2478</sup> Co-Prosecutors' Rule 80(3) Trial Document List, E305/13, 13 June 2014. See E305/13.8, Annex 8A – Tram Kak District Records (identifying 138 documents: 106 of which were admitted during Case 002/01; leaving 32 documents proposed for admission in Case 002/02). On 5 September 2014, the Co-Prosecutors submitted Supplemental Rule 80(3) Document Lists, Annex D2 to which identified two further Tram Kak District Records on the Case 002 Case File. On 30 June 2015, the Chamber issued its Decision on objections to documents to be put before the Chamber in Case 002/02, E305/17, 30 June 2015. In relation to the Co-Prosecutors' Annex 8A, the Chamber found that seven of the proposed documents were already before it, admitted 23 of the proposed documents, and rejected two because they were illegible. The Chamber also admitted the two Tram Kak District Records identified in the Co-Prosecutors' Supplemental List. See E305/17.1, Annex A: Documents proposed by the Co-Prosecutors mostly comprised of photocopied documents including notebooks, handwritten notes, typewritten reports and lists of persons with accompanying information. It is an unorganised collection, running to several hundreds of pages. In some instances, the reference for a single document identified on the Co-Prosecutors' list applies to several handwritten notes relating to different persons, locations, events or time periods. The NUON Chea Defence disputes the authenticity of this entire collection. The KHIEU Samphan Defence focuses its challenge on one particular note. In this section the Chamber will address the authenticity of the Tram Kak District Records. In doing so, it will assess whether these photocopies are of documents from Tram Kak district and Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre.

10.1.4.2. Submissions

827. The NUON Chea Defence makes general submissions challenging the entire collection of Tram Kak District Records, and specific submissions in relation to some individual documents or particular pages within documents. Their more general submissions broadly make the following two points. First, the documentary evidence is “out-of-court” or “non-court” evidence which the Supreme Court Chamber has ruled to be of inherently low probative value.<sup>2479</sup> Second, the Tram Kak District Records are photocopies, or even copies of copies. The absence of originals, combined with a suggested absence of authentication and “complex chain of custody”, is submitted to undermine the authenticity of this collection.<sup>2480</sup>

828. As to specific documents, the NUON Chea Defence and KHIEU Samphan Defence submit that certain documents are forgeries. Both defence teams object to a handwritten page found in one of the notebooks which purports to record in relation to “Re-education Office 105” that: “Up until today we have smashed 15,000 enemies”.

put before the Chamber, pp. 2-3; E305/17.6, Annex F: Documents Rejected by the Chamber. The Chamber therefore admitted 136 of the 138 documents proposed by the Co-Prosecutors in Annex 8A plus two further documents. As a matter of convenience the Chamber refers to these documents collectively as the “Tram Kak District Records”. For differentiation purposes, in footnotes the Chamber refers to the notebooks as “Kraing Ta Chan Notebooks”, these being a sub-category of the “Tram Kak District Records”. These categorisations neither presume nor determine the origin(s) of the various documents.

This document is signed “An” from “Reeducation Office, District 105”.<sup>2481</sup> The Closing Order relied on it to support the allegation that more than 15,000 people were killed at Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>2482</sup> The Co-Prosecutors maintain that this is perhaps “the best indicator” of the number killed at Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>2483</sup> In contrast, the NUON Chea Defence contends that this page is the prime example of a forgery, pointing to its placement in a notebook and to differences between the handwriting in the upper and lower portions of the page.<sup>2484</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence makes similar submissions and recalls their previous request for an expert to analyse the “smashed 15,000 enemies” document; a request which the Chamber rejected during the course of Case 002/02.<sup>2485</sup>

829. Also during the course of Case 002/02, the NUON Chea Defence pointed out that the front cover of another notebook has the following handwritten annotation: “Fifth Confession: Contemptible Traitors, Pol Pot and Ieng Sary”.<sup>2486</sup> It was claimed that “it is blatantly a notation added after the DK period” which reveals post-1979 interference with the documents.<sup>2487</sup>

830. Another alleged forgery is a handwritten and undated list of prisoners entitled: “Names of Prisoners from M-105 detained for years pending Party’s decision”.<sup>2488</sup> This list records five persons including the names KHUTH Sen, HUN Nha and MEAS Rat. The NUON Chea Defence contrasts this handwritten list with other lists, including lists bearing the names of HUN Kimseng alias Yeay Nha and MEAS Sarat alias Rat. They assert that the handwritten “M-105 list” was created by Civil Party SORY Sen, or somebody on his behalf, in order to manufacture, via the reference to KHUTH Sen, documentary support for his claim to have been a prisoner at Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>2489</sup> The NUON Chea Defence also questions the accuracy of the information in this list, and they stress that this is the only document which identifies Kraing Ta Chan as “M-105”.

They dispute an explanation offered by the Co-Prosecutors that “M” is a shorthand for “munti” (a Khmer word for “office”).<sup>2490</sup>

831. An additional allegation of forgery is made in relation to notebook E3/4083.<sup>2491</sup> The NUON Chea Defence highlights perceived issues with aspects of the lists in this notebook, including their poor quality and some suggested execution dates of 8 January 1979 – which are said to be impossible in light of Vietnam’s earlier takeover of Cambodia.<sup>2492</sup> The Co-Prosecutors suggest that a delayed retreat from Kraing Ta Chan might explain these dates. Their Closing Brief contends that the original copy of this notebook must have been poorly copied in two segments, but that it is possible to line up some of the various tables that it contains in order to make better sense of the contents. They provide an analysis of their results in an annex to their Closing Brief.<sup>2493</sup>

832. Finally, the NUON Chea Defence highlights witnesses who disputed some of the Tram Kak District Records or particular pages in the collection. They assert that, when confronted in court with documents which were allegedly written, annotated or transcribed by them, some individuals made statements which cast doubt on the document’s authenticity.<sup>2494</sup> All of the aforementioned issues are said to undermine the authenticity and reliability of particular documents. The thrust of the argument is that, when particular issues are considered together, or alongside the more general submissions, the Chamber should not place weight on any of the Tram Kak District Records.

10.1.4.2.1. Chain of custody of the Tram Kak District Records

833. The Co-Prosecutors' Annex 8A lists 138 documents, 136 of which were admitted by the Chamber. As noted above, the Chamber admitted two additional Tram Kak District Records identified in the Co-Prosecutors' Supplemental List Annex D2.<sup>2495</sup> The Chamber established during the evidentiary phase of Case 002/02 that, although the location of the original Tram Kak District Records is generally unknown, the chain of custody of the copies in evidence is, for the most-part, well-documented.<sup>2496</sup> The OCIJ gave Ben KIERNAN an annex of "128 'Kraing Ta Chan Documents'" (listed in Annex B to the OCIJ's letter).<sup>2497</sup> Ben KIERNAN responded that he visited Tram Kak district in July 1980, when a "local district official" provided to him, and SOK Sokhun of the Ministry of Information and Culture, a "set of original documents" from Kraing Ta Chan. Back in Phnom Penh over subsequent days, Ben KIERNAN "personally made two complete photocopies of that set". According to Ben KIERNAN, SOK Sokhun retained the originals on the understanding that they were to be returned to Tram Kak – it appears that they went missing thereafter. One set of photocopies was, however, deposited at the Tuol Sleng Museum. Some 15 years later, Ben KIERNAN found this same set of photocopies in a cupboard "evidently untouched" from which two further copies were made: one of which was delivered to Tram Kak, while the other was kept by DC-Cam.<sup>2498</sup>

834. The Chamber has examined the OCIJ's Annex B and the documents it identifies. The underlying documents bear intermittent sequential reference numbers, ranging from D00167 to D00170, then D00172 to D00246, then D00249 to D00252, then

<sup>2498</sup> Letter from Ben KIERNAN to OCIJ, D269/4, 5 March 2010, para. 9.

D00254 to D00298. The Chamber is satisfied that the prefix “D” is a coding system used by DC-Cam to indicate general or mixed documents.<sup>2499</sup>

835. Ben KIERNAN’s response to the OCIJ stated that he was unaware of any additional documents from Kraing Ta Chan not identified in the OCIJ’s Annex B.<sup>2500</sup> It is unclear, however, whether he conducted a page-by-page comparison of the documents identified by the OCIJ’s Annex B against those he collected from Trak Kak district nearly 30 years previously.

836. CHHANG Youk, the director of DC-Cam, substantially confirmed how DC-Cam came into possession of these documents around 1995. He visited the Tuol Sleng Museum with Ben KIERNAN and found a pile of documents under a “wooden cabinet”.<sup>2501</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that, taken together with Ben KIERNAN’s account, this explains the provenance of those Tram Kak District Records with DC-Cam reference numbers from D00167 to D00298. It does not, however, fully explain the provenance of all the 138 documents admitted by the Chamber as Tram Kak District Records identified by the Co-Prosecutors.

837. At least seven of the documents in the Co-Prosecutors’ Annex 8A are duplicates of other documents, or pages from within documents. Some duplicates were generated by investigators when attaching documents presented to witnesses during the course of the investigation.<sup>2502</sup> More significantly, during the course of Case 002/02 the Chamber observed that two documents on the Co-Prosecutors’ list did not appear to be on the OCIJ’s Annex B documents given to Ben KIERNAN.<sup>2503</sup> The first was E3/4164, a handwritten list of 28 persons with various information and “Offences” listed under the heading “Brief Biographies of Prisoners at Tram Kak District Education Office”.<sup>2504</sup> The Khmer version of this document appears to include the DC-Cam reference number D07203.<sup>2505</sup> The second was E3/4166, a typed report signed “An” with the date 25 August 1977, concerning the confessions of three named persons under the heading “Education Office of District 105”.<sup>2506</sup> The Khmer version of this typed document appears to include the DC-Cam reference number D21928.<sup>2507</sup>

838. The Chamber has identified other documents listed on the Co-Prosecutors’ Annex 8A with no corresponding indication that Ben KIERNAN expressly confirmed its origin. One of those documents is specifically challenged by the NUON Chea Defence (E3/4145).<sup>2508</sup> It bears DC-Cam reference number D13781 – which deviates from the sequence of documents obtained by Ben KIERNAN. The Chamber also notes that the Tuol Sleng Museum represented that it retains the original of E3/4145 and two further documents, E3/2262 and E3/2281.<sup>2509</sup> Finally, the DC-Cam reference number for notebook E3/2107 containing the note “smashed 15,000 enemies” also deviates from the sequence of documents obtained by Ben KIERNAN, although it was included in the OCIJ’s Annex B. It has the DC-Cam reference D10840. Issues in relation to these documents are explored in more detail below, in particular because specific submissions were made in relation to notebook E3/2107 and E3/4145.<sup>2510</sup>

839. With the exception of notebook E3/2107 and documents E3/2262, E3/2281, E3/4145, E3/4164 and E3/4166, discussed above, the Chamber is satisfied that the chain of custody of nearly all of the copies which form the collection of the Tram Kak District Records can be traced to mid-1980 when Ben KIERNAN photocopied the original documents whose location is currently unknown. The Chamber is cognisant that Ben KIERNAN did not appear before it, and that YOUK Chhang was not examined on the Tram Kak District Records when he appeared before the Chamber in Case 002/01.<sup>2511</sup> With regard to the authenticity issue, the evidence concerning the chain of custody of the Tram Kak District Record alone can only be given limited weight. The Chamber will therefore consider in a holistic manner all other factors which may have relevance. Given that forensic examinations of photocopied documents are of limited interest in the absence of relevant original comparative elements, it will instead consider whether the documents were authenticated through witnesses' evidence, and whether an analysis of their content and layout shows a high degree of internal corroboration and consistency, including with evidence heard in court. The Chamber will also address the particular documents for which, according to the above analysis, the chain of custody differs and/or for which the Parties raise specific concerns.

10.1.4.2.2. Authentication

840. Many documents in the Tram Kak District Records were specifically authenticated by witnesses with direct knowledge of the originals. The Chamber finds the following examples to be significant.

841. Among the Tram Kak District Records are eight notebooks. Seven of the notebooks are comprised mostly of short statements regarding more than 500 individuals. Of these notebooks, five (E3/2107, E3/2427, E3/4092, E3/4095 and E3/4122) include copies of the front and back cover pages; whereas two of the notebooks (E3/5827 and E3/5860) do not have cover pages.<sup>2512</sup> The eighth notebook (E3/4083) also has the front and back cover page; but its contents differ from the other seven in that it contains lists of persons with less information compared to the other notebooks.<sup>2513</sup>

842. Focusing on the six notebooks with the aforementioned covers (E3/2107, E3/2427, E3/4083, E3/4092, E3/4095 and E3/4122), it is evident they were originally designed to be used by school children. The identical covers depict a boy and girl studying at a desk on the front with multiplication tables on the back cover. SREI Than alias Duch, a former guard at Kraing Ta Chan, confirmed that he saw notebooks like these when he worked at Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre.<sup>2514</sup> He also confirmed that one person identified in notebook E3/5827 was his cousin, MEAS Phoeun, who was detained at Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>2515</sup> MEAS Phoeun is also mentioned in a separate Tram Kak District Record.<sup>2516</sup>

843. Another example of authentication concerns a handwritten note addressed to “Beloved Comrade Chhoeun” bearing the date “7 August [1978]” and the signature “San”, which discusses prisoners from Cheang Tong commune.<sup>2517</sup> The note requests Chhoeun to “send any children that cannot be separated from their mothers”, then continues:

Any bigger children that have already gone to the mobile units or children’s units, [request to] let them stay there and take just the mothers. But if the children cannot be separated from their mothers, [request to] bring them in for interrogation and after everything is finished, to sweep them all clean.

844. This note continues to discuss a group of widows from Trapeang Thom North commune, who are stated to be currently at “the place of Comrade Meng”. A request is made to “sweep them all clean”.<sup>2518</sup>

845. This document was authenticated by NEANG Ouch alias Ta San. After initially denying any knowledge of it (and also other documents signed “San”), he consulted <sup>2514</sup> T. 23 February 2015 (SREI Than), E1/267.1, pp. 15-18 (shown Kraing Ta Chan Notebook, E3/4092, recalling that such notebooks were “full of names” but that confessions he typed were on loose pieces of paper rather than in the notebooks), 24 (shown Kraing Ta Chan Notebook, E3/4083, recalling that this was similar to the notebooks he saw).

<sup>2517</sup> Tram Kak District Record, E3/4093, 7 August [1978], ERN (En) 00831486. Although the year is not stated on the face of this document, the Chamber is satisfied that it is from 1978 because of the nature of San’s involvement and decision-making authority at the relevant time, the involvement of Ta Ran as Sector Secretary, clearly related documents which identify the year as 1978 and the evidence of THANN Thim who was detained at Angk Roka in mid-1978 and recalled the presence of the persons described in this document at Meng’s place. See T. 21 April 2015 (THANN Thim), E1/289.1, pp. 40-41.

with his duty counsel then admitted that he wrote it. He described its genesis. He explained that Chhoeun (the addressee) was the chief of the District Office.<sup>2519</sup> Even though the document is signed by “San”, NEANG Ouch alias Ta San claimed that the contents reflected direct instructions from then Sector Secretary, Ta Rorn, who was not fully literate so had dictated the contents. NEANG Ouch alias Ta San explained that references to “sweep” were instructions to execute people. He clarified that references to “children” were to children or infants who could walk and speak, rather than to babies.<sup>2520</sup> Whether or not NEANG Ouch alias Ta San was merely a scribe for the Sector Secretary is a matter for further examination. For present purposes, however, his evidence conclusively authenticated the content of this particular document and, in the Chamber’s assessment, undermined his earlier denials in relation to other documents signed by “San”.

846. A further handwritten note is dated the following day, 8 August 1978, and signed by “Meng”.<sup>2521</sup> It discusses five widows from Trapeang Thom North commune, identifying them by their name or alias. The Chamber is satisfied that the date and contents of this note follow on from NEANG Ouch alias Ta San’s note of the previous day, which likewise referred to widows from Trapeang Thom North commune, then at Meng’s place.<sup>2522</sup> NEANG Ouch alias Ta San’s authentication of the note dated 7 August [1978] satisfies the Chamber that note dated 8 August 1978 is likewise authentic. Civil Party THANN Thim was detained in Meng’s place in Angk Roka around this time in 1978, and he recalled this group of women shackled there for one or two nights, with one young child being breastfed by the mother.<sup>2523</sup> This further persuades the Chamber that this document is authentic.

847. The fate of the five widows from Trapeang Thom North commune is recorded and corroborated by another document. A handwritten table titled “Brief Biographies of Prisoners at Tram Kak District Education Office” includes corresponding entries for each woman, with the following annotation: “These widows committed betrayal, meeting on the sly and agreeing on the plan to run for Vietnam with HENG Muoy as the leader”. The five women are identified as: VUOCH Keav, aged 25; MUOY Kim Leng, aged 40; HENG Muoy, aged 30; BAV Sokun, aged 25; and KHUON Mao, aged 26. The “date of arrival” for each of these women is recorded as 9 August 1978 and they are identified as 17 April people.<sup>2524</sup> The names of all five women are also found in notebook E3/4083, this time with a cross next to each of their names.<sup>2525</sup>

848. An additional example of authentication is a handwritten note from Angk Ta Saom commune dated 18 October [1977] and addressed to Kit.<sup>2526</sup> This includes a further note signed by “San” advising Brother Kit that he had decided to have “Brother Chhaom” send two named individuals to the District 105 Police. NEANG Ouch alias Ta San also confirmed that he wrote and signed this note. He explained that the initial report was signed by Chhaom, whom he identified as being the chief of Angk Ta Saom commune at the relevant time.<sup>2527</sup>

849. Witnesses with relevant knowledge recognised and identified various reports within the collection of Tram Kak District Records. SREI Than alias Duch, who worked as a guard and typist at Kraing Ta Chan, described how he typed reports in the prison chief’s room.<sup>2528</sup> At times he recognised and identified the signature of An, the chief of Kraing Ta Chan, on a number of different reports.<sup>2529</sup> At other times, however, he expressed hesitation when identifying An's signatures, appearing simply to read the name as written, rather than be sure that he recognised the handwriting itself.<sup>2530</sup> Nonetheless, his description of the process involved matched documents that he was shown. Numerous typed documents before the Chamber are similar in format and bear the heading "District 105 Re-education Office" (or a translation to similar effect).<sup>2531</sup> SREI Than alias Duch's evidence was that this reflected the format of the documents he typed at Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>2532</sup> Likewise, three typed confession reports from July 1977 are entitled "Education Office of District Office 105" signed by An, and contain reports on specific individuals. Two of the three reports bear a further signature by Prak in the top left-hand corner with decisions to "smash".<sup>2533</sup> In each case, PECH Chim, the former Secretary of Tram Kak District, told the Chamber that he recognised the signature as belonging to Kraing Ta Chan Chief An. Although PECH Chim had left Tram Kak district by July 1977, he confirmed that Prak had replaced Ta Saom as Sector 13 Secretary – which explained the annotations bearing that name.<sup>2534</sup> Taken together,

In comparing these documents, the Chamber finds that Tram Kak District Record, E3/4166, 25 August 1977, ERN (En) 00694355-00694356, which the Chamber noted at para. 837 above to bear DC-Cam reference number D21928, is similar in its appearance and format to many other typed documents from Kraing Ta Chan. In particular, the format is the same as another document dated a few days earlier (E3/2434, 20 August 1977, ERN (En) 00276603). Other indicia of authenticity include the name and signature "An", and the annotation by "Kit" who the Chamber finds to have been the Tram Kak District Secretary at that time.

the evidence of PECH Chim and SREI Than alias Duch authenticated numerous Tram Kak District Records.

850. Another document was authenticated by KHOEM Boeun, the former secretary of Cheang Tong commune who appeared before the Chamber by video link. A Tram Kak District Record dated 21 July 1977 is written from Boeun in Cheang Tong commune to the District Party, discussing a particular individual.<sup>2535</sup> KHOEM Boeun confirmed at first that the signature on this document was hers. Although she could not recall the specifics, and later sought to distance herself from this document, she explained that a reference to “Hou” in the document was to the chief of a unit and that she dictated documents for others to write on her behalf.<sup>2536</sup>

851. Two handwritten reports from Kus commune in 1977 were also shown to PHANN Chhen, who had roles in that commune in earlier years.<sup>2537</sup> Both reports are signed by “Saen”. During his testimony, PHANN Chhen recognised the handwriting in the report containing the instructions of Soeun or Saen, a member of the Kus Commune Committee, although he was unfamiliar with the contents because he had left Tram Kak district by 1977.<sup>2538</sup>

852. Finally, in relation to documents specifically authenticated, included in the Tram Kak District Records are two monthly reports: one for July 1977 and the other for November 1977.<sup>2539</sup> These contain summary information, including figures for prisoners who entered, died, were purged or “swept away”. SREI Than alias Duch, who worked at Kraing Ta Chan as a guard and typist, was shown the November 1977 report.<sup>2540</sup> He immediately recognised the handwriting, attributing it to Leng An’s

“deputy”, whom he identified as (a different) “Duch”.<sup>2541</sup> He was able to recognise the handwriting because he worked with Duch, and saw him signing documents among other things.<sup>2542</sup>

853. Although SREI Than alias Duch recognised the handwriting in the November 1977 report, his evidence was that monthly reports in this form were not actually prepared at Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre.<sup>2543</sup> In another context, however, PECH Chim’s evidence was that An indeed made monthly reports to Tram Kak district.<sup>2544</sup> On analysis, the Chamber considers that the contents of these two written monthly reports may go beyond matters specific to a single security centre. For example, the July 1977 report records that a study session had been held “both for the progressives and the masses”.<sup>2545</sup> The November 1977 records various expenditures, including 34 pails of husked rice.<sup>2546</sup> The Chamber is nevertheless satisfied that SREI Than alias Duch’s immediate recognition of Duch’s handwriting in the November 1977 report confirms that this is a copy of an authentic document.<sup>2547</sup>

10.1.4.2.3. Consistency within the Tram Kak District Records

854. In addition to various instances of specific and credible authentication, there is a significant degree of corroboration and consistency between documents within the collection of Tram Kak District Records, including to authenticated documents discussed in the immediately preceding section. The example discussed above of the five women from Trapeang Thom North commune is one of the most striking. Yet there are other examples. The Chamber found the following instances of internal consistency to be particularly significant. They are set out in approximate chronological order.

855. A handwritten report dated 4 August 1976 from Kraing Ta Chan Chief An to the Party, summarises the statements of two prisoners (LAAY Chhi, aged 38; and TOAN Tean, aged 29) who were arrested from Tram Kak commune.<sup>2548</sup> This report and the information in it corresponds to entries with a description of these prisoners in notebook E3/4095.<sup>2549</sup>

856. A handwritten report dated 5 May 1977 from “Ka 105” to Angkar describes the arrest of HIM Chhun, aged 37, by commune militia in Leay Bour commune. It records his wife’s name as NHANH Sa Eng.<sup>2550</sup> This man is described in another report from the following day, this time from Yorn to “Comrade Brother”.<sup>2551</sup> The information in these reports corresponds to notes in notebook E3/5860, which likewise describes HIM Chhun, aged 37, as having been arrested by militiamen in Leay Bour and married to NUT Eng.<sup>2552</sup>

857. A handwritten report from Sre Ronaung commune on 7 June 1977 describes the activity of four Chinese persons. Among them is a person identified as SOK Nam, described as 24 years-old, who complained about the revolution and refused to “do his labour work”. Also mentioned is KIM An Huor, described as 29 years-old, a spy and a repeat “conflict maker”.<sup>2553</sup> This report corresponds to biographical information for these persons found in two separate notebooks, E3/5827 and E3/5860.<sup>2554</sup>

858. A typed document dated 12 June 1977 signed by Kraing Ta Chan Chief An, records the “self-criticism” of NHEP Yan and describes a plot in Hospital 22 to produce insufficient medicine, “oppose to the guideline of Angkar”, to provide negligent treatment and complain about having to farm rice. Named accomplices include Kang,

859. A handwritten report from Khporp Trabaek commune in June 1977 describes the arrest of 10 former military “New People” who were “lazy” and planning to flee to Thailand. The 10 persons identified are VAN Touch, BAN Chek, LOEUNG Ty, SUN Leng, SAO Nhan, KAN Nha, VANN Ken, CHEUNG Moeun, BUOR Sum and MAM Sim.<sup>2557</sup> There are entries for each of these persons in notebook E3/5827, with further biographical information given.<sup>2558</sup> These entries further correspond to a handwritten note dated 13 June [1977] from Kit, Tram Kak District Secretary, to Kraing Ta Chan Chief An, which describes the 10 traitors from Khporp Trabaek and proposes that they be interrogated “harshly and thoroughly” to find their network.<sup>2559</sup>

860. A typed report from Kraing Ta Chan Chief “Ann”, to the Party discusses the confession of SIN Yan, aged 50, born in Leay Bour commune and married to HA Lang. It is dated 11 July 1977 and reports that, while he was in hospital as a patient, he made comments to staff about the prospects of markets, money and private daily living and eating in the future.<sup>2560</sup> The information contained in this report corresponds to an entry in notebook E3/5860.<sup>2561</sup>

861. A typed report with the heading “Educational Office of District 105” is signed by Kraing Ta Chan Chief An, whose signature was noted above to have been identified by PECH Chim. It is dated 30 July 1977 and relates to a prisoner called UNG Ly, born in Angk Ta Saom commune and married to TOUCH Nat. The report records that he had been trained on air conditioning systems in the United States and had said he missed that country.<sup>2562</sup> This information on UNG Ly corresponds to an entry in notebook E3/5860.<sup>2563</sup>

862. A handwritten report dated 31 July [1977] from Kit, then Tram Kak District Secretary, to Kraing Ta Chan Chief An, states that all prisoners from Cheang Tong should be interrogated then smashed. It further requests An to contact the commune to arrest two individuals called “Len” and “Sou” living in Srae Krou.<sup>2564</sup> The contents and timing of this report are consistent with a handwritten note from “Ann” to “Comrade Boeun” on 1 August 1977 requesting that two militia men be assigned to arrest “Len” and “Sou”.<sup>2565</sup> The Chamber recalls that KHOEM Boeun was the Secretary of Cheang Tong commune at the relevant time.<sup>2566</sup>

863. A handwritten report from Meng to the Party reports on LAY Kiet, 27 years old from Kirivong but then living in Trapeang Thom North commune.<sup>2567</sup> The Chamber recalls that Meng was the head of a detention place at Angk Roka.<sup>2568</sup> This report corresponds to an entry in notebook E3/4083 for LAY Kiet, aged 27. There is a cross next to his name.<sup>2569</sup> This in turn corresponds with an entry in another list of persons.<sup>2570</sup> There is also a paragraph of corresponding information in notebook E3/4092.<sup>2571</sup>

864. A handwritten report from Chorn in Popel commune to Meng on 9 July 1978 requests to send over two traitors: “Ty” from District 109, described as a surgical doctor; and Ham alias CHAU Peuv Mony.<sup>2572</sup> The Chamber recalls that Chorn was KHOEM Boeun’s husband and the head of Popel commune.<sup>2573</sup> Chorn’s report records that he had “asked for an opinion from Comrade Elder Brother San already”. Another handwritten report, also dated 9 July 1978, asks the District Party to consider a person’s case, to which an annotation signed “San” directed Chorn to “send [him] over to the

865. A handwritten report dated 13 July [1978] from Popel commune to “Comrade the District” requests that two traitors be received: Ngiv (a first lieutenant) and Mao (a second lieutenant).<sup>2578</sup> There is short narrative entry for CHHAN Ngiv in notebook E3/4092.<sup>2579</sup> There are further entries for CHAN Ngiv, aged 55, and MEN Mao, aged 49, in a handwritten table of prisoners, where it is noted that they resided in Popel commune and were first and second lieutenants who entered on 19 July 1978.<sup>2580</sup> There is a further entry for CHANN Ngiv, aged 55, in the tables inside notebook E3/4083, this time with a cross next to his name.<sup>2581</sup>

A handwritten report dated 18 July 1978 from Angk Ta Saom commune to “Comrade Elder Brother of Police of District 105” reports on the activities of KONG Vaet and EM Sambath and requests to send them over for “further interrogation”.<sup>2582</sup> This report records that KONG Vaet had been “stealing without stopping” and educated for three years: by the group, unit, collective meetings and finally by “individually educated” after which he “confessed”. There are narrative entries for both KONG Vet and EM Sambath in notebook E3/4092.<sup>2583</sup> This is corroborated by the handwritten list of “Brief Biographies of Prisoners at Tram Kak District Education Office”, which includes entries for KONG Vet and EM Sambath and records their date of entry as 23

867. A handwritten report from “Boeun” in Cheang Tong commune on 5 August 1978 requests “comrade” to track down the links of two women called “Naicha” and “Phana”. The Chamber recalls that KHOEM Boeun was the Secretary of Cheang Tong commune at the relevant time.<sup>2586</sup> The report states that “these two women cannot be kept because they have “so many contradictions”. In relation to Naicha, it is noted that she was the wife of Seng, “whom we ‘took’ in 1977”.<sup>2587</sup> There are narrative entries for both women in notebook E3/4092, where they are recorded as “PHAI Phanna”, aged 24, and “Pann [illegible]”, aged 48, married to BUOY Seng.<sup>2588</sup> There is an entry for BUOY Sam alias Seng, married to PAN Nai Chi, in a different notebook E3/5860.<sup>2589</sup> Both THAI Phanna, aged 24, and PAN Naichi, appear in the handwritten list of “Brief Biographies of Prisoners at Tram Kak District Education Office”, where they are identified as 17 April people who contradicted the line by refusing to work and who said “It is better to die than to live”. Their entry date is recorded as 9 August 1978.<sup>2590</sup> Finally, there are entries for THAI Phana, aged 24, and NAI Chy, aged 48, in the lists contained in another notebook (E3/4083), the latter with a cross next to her name.<sup>2591</sup>

868. The Chamber has identified further examples of internal coherence and corroboration between documents in the collection of Tram Kak District Records.<sup>2592</sup>

869. There were also examples of consistency and corroboration with evidence given by persons who appeared before the Chamber. For example, the Tram Kak District Records include handwritten reports signed by “Chun” in Popel commune.<sup>2593</sup> KHOEM Boeun was married to Chorn and she explained that he became the chief of Popel commune from mid-1977.<sup>2594</sup> NEANG Ouch alias Ta San likewise identified Chorn as the chief of Popel commune.<sup>2595</sup> The roles of other persons such as LENG An (also known as “An”, “Ann” or “Ta An” the chief of Kraing Ta Chan) and Prak (Secretary of Sector 13) all correspond to the form and contents of the Tram Kak District Records. The code references to District “105” and/or the Education Office for District “105” also point toward the authenticity of the documents. The contents of some of the Tram Kak District Records were also substantially corroborated by evidence given by two former prisoners who testified before the Chamber: VONG Sarun and MEAS Sokha.

870. VONG Sarun was a young hospital worker, arrested and transferred to Kraing Ta Chan around the same time as another medic called UCH Han.<sup>2596</sup> Within notebook E3/5827, which is without the cover identified by SREI Than alias Duch, are notes describing her as a 26 year-old female, and reporting events at Hospital 22.<sup>2597</sup> Before the Chamber, VONG Sarun confirmed that she was interrogated at Kraing Ta Chan, and that An took notes while sitting at the far end of the table.<sup>2598</sup> References to VONG Sarun are found in other documents, alongside pieces of information concerning another detainee named UCH Han who also worked at Hospital 22.<sup>2599</sup> This is further consistent with notes relating to a person identified as “Hun Hang”, who was a senior person at Hospital 22 and who implicated 16 persons including “Run”.<sup>2600</sup> VONG Sarun confirmed that she was referred to as “Run” by some people.<sup>2601</sup>

The detention of UCH Han at Kraing Ta Chan was further confirmed by the evidence of RIEL San, the former deputy chief of the district hospital, who visited Kraing Ta Chan and recognised Han from Hospital 22, cooking a small pot of rice. See T. 17 March 2015 (RIEL San), E1/278.1, p. 76; T. 18 March 2015 (RIEL San), E1/279.1, p. 81; T. 19 March 2015 (RIEL San), E1/280.1, p. 28.

871. MEAS Sokha’s evidence described the arrest of his father (MEAS Koeun) and brother-in-law (MOM Boeun) from a cooperative in Cheang Tong commune, following which he and his family were arrested (including his mother, HUN Kimseng alias Yeay Nha and his sister MEAS Sarat).<sup>2602</sup> A number of different documents corroborate MEAS Sokha’s first-hand account. There are entries for several of his family members in a notebook E3/4095.<sup>2603</sup> This is the notebook which the NUON Chea Defence challenges in part because of the annotation on the front cover referring to “Contemptible Traitors Pol Pot and IENG Sary”. Although the only reasonable conclusion which can be drawn from such an annotation, given the language used, is that it was made after January 1979, the contents and the cover of this notebook satisfy the Chamber that it is a copy of an authentic document. Further, the execution of MEAS Sokha’s father and brother-in-law at Kraing Ta Chan is recorded in an annotation in a list of prisoners referring to MEAS Sokha’s mother and sister: “The two women were the spouses of Kun and Boeun. We smashed their husbands because they incited people to affix their thumbprints for deposing a village chief”.<sup>2604</sup> The execution of MEAS Koeun and MOM Boeun was confirmed by former guards from Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>2605</sup>

872. The above analysis of the Tram Kak District Records reveals a substantial degree of coherence and consistency within the collection, and with the witness and Civil Party evidence heard by the Chamber.

10.1.4.2.4. *Challenges to particular documents*10.1.4.2.4.1. The “smashed 15,000 enemies”
note in notebook E3/2107
(D10840)

873. Turning first to the document which appears to record that 15,000 enemies had been “smashed” at Re-education Office 105. As presented to the Chamber, this handwritten note is found inside notebook E3/2107 – which has the identical front cover confirmed by SREI Than alias Duch as having been used at Kraing Ta Chan. This particular note has no date and no reference period is indicated for this figure. The notebook in which it is found has the DC-Cam reference number D10840, which deviates from the sequence of documents obtained by Ben KIERNAN.<sup>2606</sup> When asked about this reference number, CHHANG Youk explained to the OCIJ that he found this particular notebook in Tuol Sleng in 1996, that is after the 1995 visit with BEN Kiernan when they found copies of the Tram Kak District Records later given DC-Cam reference numbers D000167 to D000298.<sup>2607</sup> Notebook E3/2107 was, however, identified on the list of documents provided by the OCIJ to Ben KIERNAN (the Annex B) and then confirmed by him when describing his collection and copying of documents in 1980.<sup>2608</sup> Ben KIERNAN also refers to this note in one of his books, first published in 1985, wherein he describes a document from the archives of the Tram Kak district prison at Kraing Ta Chan and then quotes it as follows: “from when we began smashing the enemy to now, we have got rid of 1,500 people”.<sup>2609</sup> Besides the obvious discrepancy concerning the figure, and a slightly different English translation, the Chamber finds that this description in Ben KIERNAN’s book corresponds to the challenged “smashed 15,000 enemies” note.

874. The note in dispute looks like a separate sheet of paper photocopied together with the notebook. Whereas faint lines can be seen on the pages of the notebook, no such lines can be seen on the note containing the reference to “15,000”. The note contains two conspicuously different styles of handwriting: the upper portion recording the figure of 15,000 differs from the lower portion, signed “An”, and it has special features which are unique and entirely different of the other handwritings contained elsewhere in notebook E3/2107. PECH Chim’s evidence was that this, in itself, is unsurprising: it was Angkar’s practice and method for one person to write one part of a report then another to sign it.<sup>2610</sup> SREI Than alias Duch also appeared to confirm An’s signature on the lower part of this document, while questioning the handwriting on the upper part.<sup>2611</sup> Subsequently, however, his evidence was that he did not recognise the handwriting.<sup>2612</sup> In the Chamber’s assessment, the figure of 15,000 is oddly written: the last zero is noticeably smaller and more scrawled than the figures which precede it. The last zero appears to have been squeezed between the previous zeros and the Khmer word “neak” (“people”) which follows.<sup>2613</sup> Given these specific characteristics, and in light of the description made by Ben KIERNAN in one of his books,<sup>2614</sup> the Chamber finds that this particular note was altered and a further zero was added to the figure of 1,500 so as to inflate the number previously recorded. It is unclear when and how this happened, or to what purpose. Ben KIERNAN’s confirmation of the OCIJ’s Annex B and his use of a different figure in his book might suggest that it happened after he deposited this document at the Tuol Sleng Museum in 1980. Alternatively, CHHANG Youk’s account might suggest that it happened at some later time. In the circumstances, no weight shall be attributed to this particular note.

<sup>2607</sup> CHHANG Youk Interview Record, E3/188, 28 May 2009, ERN (En) 00342452 (explaining that he found it in 1996 when cleaning out rooms at Tuol Sleng and mentioning SAN Sok and TING Sokhai as other persons who were involved).

875. As to the impact of this finding upon the remainder of notebook E3/2107, the Chamber remains satisfied that this notebook is authentic. The cover page is identical to those authenticated by Witness SREI Than and an examination of the contents of this notebook confirms it to be so. It contains entries for approximately 88 different persons with paragraphs of varying lengths containing information in relation to each. In cover, form and layout, it is similar to other notebooks before the Chamber.

876. In addition, references to various persons identified in notebook E3/2107 are found in other Tram Kak District Records. For example, notebook E3/2107 includes summary entries for: UY Chanthan, aged 39, born in Kbal Koh, Kien Svay district, Kandal province;<sup>2615</sup> IE Lim Touch, aged 33, born in Peuk, Ang Snuol district, Kandal province;<sup>2616</sup> and TONG Sambour, aged 43, born in Soeng commune, Au Chriv district, Battambang province.<sup>2617</sup> These three entries correspond to a handwritten report from Nhaeng Nhang commune in 1977 addressed to “Comrade Saom, District 105 Re-education!” which describes three traitors to be sent in to the “Reeducation Office to make all the arrangements”.<sup>2618</sup> Further examples are entries in notebook E3/2107 for: CHEA Pheakdei, aged 19, whose father’s name is noted to have been CHEA Kim Eng, two stars in the military police;<sup>2619</sup> CHEA Sohphal, aged 29, a youth in Kus commune;<sup>2620</sup> and SENG Chan Mean, aged 24, from Kus commune.<sup>2621</sup> These entries correspond to a handwritten report from “Kus Youth” to Angkar on 19 December 1976.<sup>2622</sup> Another example is an entry for PECH Savath, aged 47, who came to Sre Ronoung commune where he was “alerted [...] about the ducks eating rice” – to which he “answered angrily [...] if I don’t feed rice [to the ducks], what should they be fed?”<sup>2623</sup> This corresponds to a report from Sre Ronoung commune dated 4 January 1977, which records that PICH Savann was “incorrigible” and being sent to “the police” for chasing ducks into rice fields.<sup>2624</sup>

877. In light of such substantial corroboration and the coherence of this evidence, the Chamber is satisfied that any tampering with one particular separate note does not mean that the rest of notebook E3/2107 should be excluded from consideration.

10.1.4.2.4.2. The “M-105” list within E3/4145 (D13781)

878. The Chamber now turns to a second contested document, the handwritten list of detainees at “M-105” detained for years “pending the Party’s decision”, and the submission that this was forged to substantiate Civil Party SORY Sen’s claim to have been imprisoned at Kraing Ta Chan. The page upon which the NUON Chea Defence focuses is found inside a nine-page document, which comprises a mixture of documents in the following order: (1) a typed list of five persons headed “List of prisoners detained for months or years” signed by An with the date given as 15 May 1978;<sup>2625</sup> (2) a typed list of prisoners “smashed” on 31 May 1978, listing eight persons from the East Zone;<sup>2626</sup> (3) a typed list of prisoners “smashed” on 27 May 1978, listing 15 persons from the East Zone;<sup>2627</sup> (4) a handwritten note dated 18 February 1977 from Sre Knong district to the chief of Tram Kak district regarding a girl named Voeun arrested in Nhaeng Nhang commune but who claimed to come from Sre Knong district;<sup>2628</sup> (5) the list of persons from “M-105”, upon which the NUON Chea Defence focuses its submissions;<sup>2629</sup> (6) a partial typed list of persons running from numbers 22 to 35, bearing a handwritten annotation with the date 22 May 1977;<sup>2630</sup> (7) and a typed list of nine persons said to be living in Po Preah Sang village, Angk Ta Saom commune, signed by An with the date given as 23 August 1977.<sup>2631</sup>

879. The DC-Cam reference number given for E3/4145 is D13781, which deviates from the sequence of documents obtained by Ben KIERNAN in 1980. This document was not included in the list of documents sent by the OCIJ (in the OCIJ’s Annex B) to Ben KIERNAN in 2009. An email from DC-Cam to the NUON Chea Defence during the course of evidentiary proceedings in Case 002/02 indicated that, unlike most of the

880. The particular handwritten "M-105 list" of five persons is rough in its form: some columns and rows are apparently incomplete, and further information appears scrawled along the right-hand side of the page.<sup>2633</sup> The NUON Chea Defence highlights the entry for KHUTH Sen.<sup>2634</sup> Civil Party SORY Sen tried to go by the name KHUTH San in order to conceal his relation to his father.<sup>2635</sup> His evidence was that he was arrested and sent to Kraing Ta Chan in 1974.<sup>2636</sup> His mother was called KHUTH San and his father, who was killed at Kraing Ta Chan, was called SOK Say or TIT Say.<sup>2637</sup> His father was a former district official during the (pre-1970) Sihanouk era, and his mother had worked for him. Civil Party SORY Sen elaborated that his father was not the "lawful husband" of his mother.<sup>2638</sup> Civil Party SORY Sen used the name "Khut San" (i.e. his mother's name) in order to hide his connection to his father.<sup>2639</sup>

881. The entry on the "M-105 list" for KHUTH San refers to Trapeang Lean village in Kus commune. SORY Sen confirmed that he used to live in "Tra Pang Lean" village in Kus commune.<sup>2640</sup> The entry for another detainee HUN Nha records her origin as Slaeng Kaong village in Nhaeng Nhang commune. In contrast, when interviewed by the OCIJ, HUN Kimseng alias Yeay Nha repeatedly confirmed that she was born in

<sup>2634</sup> Tram Kak District Record, E3/4145, undated, ERN (En) 00762844. There are five rows on the list. The top entry for KHUTH Sen had previously been translated as "YUK Sen", but during the course of Case 002/02 it emerged that the entry had been mistranslated. The entry includes some biographical information such as Trapeang Lean village, Kus commune, farmer, and a comment that "In 1974 he was a youth who was sent to the front battlefield, but he escaped home".

Cheang Tong commune.<sup>2641</sup> The entry for MEAS Rat refers to Srae Kruo village in Cheang Tong commune.<sup>2642</sup> The Chamber has noted above other evidence demonstrating the presence of MEAS Rat and HUN Kimseng alias Yeay Nha at Kraing Ta Chan.

882. It should be noted that the “M-105 list” is one of many pages within the document designated as E3/4145. The Chamber finds that many of the other pages relate to S-21 rather than Tram Kak district – specifically those pages relating to prisoners from the East Zone.<sup>2643</sup> They include lists of some 23 persons from the East Zone, including persons “smashed” on 27 May 1978 and 31 May 1978.<sup>2644</sup> The Chamber does not consider that this inconsistent grouping or mixture of documents should affect the individualised evaluation of other pages in E3/4145 which do not appear to relate to S-21.

883. As to the typed list of five persons headed “List of prisoners detained for months or years” signed by An with a date of 15 May 1978,<sup>2645</sup> the Chamber has identified instances of corroboration of the names and information in this list, including: the reference to IET Chin, a long-time prisoner at Kraing Ta Chan; the references to MEAS Sokha’s family members HUN Seng, MEAS Sarat, Kun and Boeun; and the imprisonment of VONG Sarun and her former colleague “Han”.<sup>2646</sup>

<sup>2643</sup> Tram Kak District Record, E3/4145, undated, ERN (En) 00762838-00762842 (specifically ERN (En) 00762840-00762841 (a typed list of prisoners smashed on 27 May 1978, listing 15 persons from Sector 23 in the East Zone) is a duplicate of pages in S-21 List E3/8463, at ERN (En) 01032508. Further, E3/4145, ERN (En) 00762838-00762839, 00762842 (a typed list of prisoners smashed on 31 May 1978, listing eight persons from the 3rd Division) is a duplicate of pages within S-21 List E3/8463, at ERN (En) 01554813).

884. With regard to the partial list of nine persons dated 23 August 1977, eight of these persons are found in another document in the Tram Kak District Records, where they are described as being part of the network of contemptible Tiv who attempted to flee to Vietnam.<sup>2647</sup> Other pages within E3/4145 contain a typewritten list of persons numbered from 22 to 35, and the annotation dated 22 May 1977 indicating that the persons on the list had been purged.<sup>2648</sup> When SREI Than alias Duch was shown this document he testified that its format matched the sorts of documents he used to type at Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>2649</sup> This list is further corroborated by other documentary evidence. The list includes a person identified as HOEM Chhun, aged 37.<sup>2650</sup> The biographical information and timing of this list corresponds to a report from K-105 dated 5 May 1977 following the arrest of HIM Chhun, aged 37.<sup>2651</sup> Also included is an individual identified as THACH Vanna, aged 29.<sup>2652</sup> This corresponds to an entry on a list of Khmer Krom people from Trapeang Thom North commune prepared on 4 May 1977.<sup>2653</sup>

885. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that, despite the lack of information concerning their chain of custody, the documents within E3/4145 identified in paragraph 878 above as numbers (1), (4), (6) and (7) are authentic documents from Tram Kak district. In relation to the “M-105 list” specifically, identified as document (5) in paragraph 878 above, the Chamber considers there to be no foundation for the speculative assertion that Civil Party SORY Sen (or somebody with some knowledge of his background) created this page to try to substantiate his detention at Kraing Ta Chan. SORY Sen is illiterate and explained that he had never heard of “M-105”.<sup>2654</sup> Nor does the Chamber consider that any significance should be given to the minor variations concerning the place of birth or the spellings of the name of other detainees on this list, such as HUN

Nha or MEAS Rat (who were relatives of MEAS Sokha). Those entries on this handwritten list are corroborated by other evidence.<sup>2655</sup> Although it is correct to point out that this is the only document in evidence bearing the heading “M-105”, the Chamber notes within the Tram Kak District Records there are other documents containing analogous abbreviations such as “K-105” and “Tor-13”.<sup>2656</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that this too is an authentic document.

886. The Chamber recalls the indication noted above that the Tuol Sleng Museum possesses originals of two further Tram Kak District Records.<sup>2657</sup> One is a partial list of Kampuchea Krom people in Popel commune (E3/2262). This document is consistent with other communal lists of Kampuchea Krom people including from Kus commune<sup>2658</sup> and Angk Ta Saom commune.<sup>2659</sup> Among the persons on this list is CHAO Ny, his wife Ny, with one child (a girl).<sup>2660</sup> This family is identified in a handwritten note dated 4 May 1977 from Chorn in Popel commune to District Angkar, where it is recorded that the husband CHAU Ny was “brought over (to your place)” on 3 April 1977, and that the wife “THAN Ny” has a child.<sup>2661</sup> Further, another handwritten note dated 8 May 1977 from Chun in Popel commune provides statistics on the number of Kampuchea Krom people in the commune at that time.<sup>2662</sup>

887. The last document for which an original is held at the Tuol Sleng Museum is a list of people from Trapeang Thom North commune (E3/2281) dated 4 May 1977, signed by Mon.<sup>2663</sup> Other reports from Trapeang Thom North commune are also signed by Mon.<sup>2664</sup> Witness RIEL San identified Mon as the commune chief of Trapeang Thom North commune.<sup>2665</sup> Included on this list is an entry for THACH Vanna, aged 29, a

10.1.4.2.4.3. Notebook E3/4083 (D00213)

888. The NUON Chea Defence correctly identifies that the format of notebook E3/4083 differs from the other notebooks. It contains various handwritten tables, or lists of persons, rather than the paragraphs of narrative information generally found in the other notebooks. Some of the lists include persons with crosses next to their names, or annotations such as “smashed”.<sup>2668</sup> There are several references to 8 January 1979. Further lists are entitled “Original List” (with 21 entries);<sup>2669</sup> Sre Ronoung (with 21 entries, then further entries from 22-37 found on subsequent pages);<sup>2670</sup> a partial list identified as prepared in Cheang Tong in April 1977 (with entries 19-28);<sup>2671</sup> and “people who have just come from Srok Yuon” (with 18 entries).<sup>2672</sup> One list without a heading details some 29 students, soldiers and teachers, 20 of whom are noted to have been part of the network of “A Try and A Tiv + A KUNG Narin”. Three of those implicated are noted to have provoked each other to break hoes in order to destroy the cooperative, and four are noted to have broken spoons in the cooperative to “make it become private again”.<sup>2673</sup> Entries on the different lists record positions and ranks, such as warrant officer, first Lieutenant and second Lieutenant.

889. This notebook E3/4083 bears the DC-Cam reference number D00213, indicating that it was copied by DC-Cam at the same time as the majority of the Tram Kak District Records obtained by Ben KIERNAN. The cover is the same as several other notebooks. It was plainly designed to be used as a children’s exercise notebook. Written in manuscript on the front cover of E3/4083, on the line entry for “School” is the following note: “Samraong [illegible], done”.<sup>2674</sup> The Chamber’s analysis of this notebook and its contents reveal substantial corroboration with other evidence relating to Tram Kak district, including to other documents that were specifically authenticated.

890. As noted above, the Chamber considers it to be significant that the full names of the five widows from Trapeang Thom North commune, discussed above in relation to the content of a document authenticated by NEANG Ouch alias Ta San, are found in a table within this notebook, each with a cross next to their name.<sup>2675</sup> Former Tram Kak District Secretary, PECH Chim, described to the Chamber an earlier practice whereby Sector Secretary Saom put a cross beside names, and this represented the sector's decision that those persons were to be killed. The district then forwarded those names to Kraing Ta Chan to implement decisions.<sup>2676</sup> The evidence of this type of practice is consistent with the existence of markings against the names found inside this notebook.

891. The early pages of E3/4083 include entries for AOM Chanta, aged 26, from Angk Ta Saom commune, and POK Bunly, aged 27 from Rum Chan, each with a cross next to their names.<sup>2677</sup> Another notebook E3/4092 contains a paragraph on each person.<sup>2678</sup> A different list also records these two persons, identifying them as 17 April people who were arrested on 15 July 1978, with the comment that “[t]hese two contemptible persons were heads of thieves, who sensitised the youth units by saying, “We keep stealing, causing disturbances, which is difficult to be resolved”.<sup>2679</sup> A handwritten note from Meng to “Comrade Elder Brother” dated 15 July 1978 states that, according to decision of the District Party, four persons were to be brought over, among them “Om Chanta and PON Bunli” from Angk Ta Saom.<sup>2680</sup> Another handwritten note describes “OM Chanta” and “POK Bunly” in some detail, recording that they had previously been re-educated a commune offices.<sup>2681</sup> Further still, there is a typed report to the Party, <sup>2676</sup> T. 1 July 2013 (PECH Chim), E1/215.1, pp. 42, 50, 60-61. At other times in his evidence, PECH Chim claimed that names crossed in red had “no meaning” and that his earlier (more incriminating) answers were given because he was tired and bombarded with questions. See T. 22 April 2015 (PECH Chim), E1/290.1, pp. 31, 44. The Chamber rejects his attempts to explain away his earlier evidence.

dated 25 September 1978 and signed by An, which reports on the statements of “OM Chanta” and “Mok Bunly”.<sup>2682</sup>

892. Included in the early pages of E3/4083 are entries for POK San, aged 23, CHUNG Kim Chhai, aged 20, and CHUNG Chhorn, aged 24, with a cross next to each of their names.<sup>2683</sup> These entries and the identifying information all correspond to a typed report on seven prisoners’ confessions entitled “Office of Education District 105”, signed by An on 5 July 1978.<sup>2684</sup> These persons are also found in another list, with the annotation added alongside that:

These traitors had planned to destroy collective properties in Chamkar Sieng so that it would again become private ones. Moreover, every day they sleep waiting for Yuon to arrive so that they would join them and Din is their chairman.<sup>2685</sup>

893. This further corresponds to a document signed CHEN Din, aged 25, on 7 July 1978 which implicated various persons including POK San, PHONG Kimchhay and CHUNG Chhorn.<sup>2686</sup> There is also an entry for CHEN Din, aged 25, in another of the notebooks (E3/4092),<sup>2687</sup> and again in notebook E3/4083 – this time with a cross next to his name.<sup>2688</sup>

894. Another entry included in the early pages of E3/4083 is for TES Rom, a 23-year-old female.<sup>2689</sup> This corresponds to another list from the Tram Kak District Records, which likewise records TES Rom, a 23 year-old female.<sup>2690</sup> This further corresponds to a typed report from Kraing Ta Chan entitled “Office of Education District 105”, signed by An with the date 5 July 1978, which reports on the confession of TES Rum, aged 23.<sup>2691</sup>

handwritten list which identifies 26 persons not arrested yet, but who had been implicated in the “main plan of Contemptible Try [to] flee to Thailand along with a number of his henchmen who have not been arrested yet”.<sup>2692</sup> This list includes similar information for several persons, some with crosses next to their names.<sup>2693</sup>

896. The list of four persons who broke spoons in the cooperative identifies four women aged between 14 and 19, said to have been under the leadership of POL Touch.<sup>2694</sup> This information corresponds to a handwritten report from Sre Ronoung commune dated 1 September 1977, which records the same four female youths as having broken spoons. The report asks Angkar “to decide”.<sup>2695</sup>

897. In the early pages of E3/4083 is an entry for NGET Voeun, aged 23, from Chheu Teal, Samraong commune, with a cross next to the name.<sup>2696</sup> Another handwritten document appears to be a confession signed by NGET Voeun, dated 24 July 1978, which describes the activities of Lim and Comrade Tem among other persons.<sup>2697</sup> This corresponds to a typed report to the Party, signed by An in July 1978 “about the Statement of the contemptible Voeun” and which describes the activities of Vouen, Lim and Comrade Tem.<sup>2698</sup> This further corresponds to another typed report to the Party, signed by An on 5 July [1978], which reports on the confessions of Lim and Boeun regarding the “networks of the contemptible Voeun”.<sup>2699</sup>

A subsequent report dated 10 February 1978 from Tram Kak commune to Comrade Brother Secretary of the Re-education Office also refers to the “network links” of KHIEU Touch and BICH Sok “who were arrested and sent in the other day”, referring to three women by name.<sup>2702</sup>

900. The Chamber is not persuaded that the few references to 8 January 1979 raise any particular concerns, especially weighed against the substantial corroboration and consistency with other evidence. The Chamber does not consider this date to be inexplicable given the undoubtedly chaotic circumstances in different parts of the country at around that time. The challenge to the authenticity of notebook E3/4083 is therefore rejected.

10.1.4.2.5. Documents contested by witnesses

901. According to the NUON Chea Defence, witnesses challenged or otherwise called into doubt a number of Tram Kak District Records.<sup>2705</sup> The Chamber finds that these challenges must generally be seen in the light of the possible witnesses’ attempt to minimise their role and the time elapsed since the time the documents were created and the day the witnesses were confronted. Having examined these challenges, the Chamber finds that they are unsubstantiated, for the following reasons. In relation to NEANG Ouch alias Ta San, the Chamber considers that his denials that particular documents bore his handwriting or signature must be considered not only in the light of a possible will to minimise his involvement, but also in light of his later admissions, as his evidence progressed, that other documents were copies of authentic documents – and were indeed written by him. Even his earlier denials of particular documents, upon which the NUON Chea Defence seeks to rely, contained noticeable caveats, such as that Ta Rorn (the Sector 13 Secretary) wanted to provide oral instructions without having his name on any documents.<sup>2706</sup> The NUON Chea Defence's reliance on NUT Nov's denial that a document bore his handwriting omits the explanation offered by this witness that it was probably a clerk who wrote it.<sup>2707</sup> Similarly, in relation to KHOEM Boeun, the NUON Chea Defence failed to address her evidence that she dictated letters and/or that people working in the Commune Office wrote reports for her.<sup>2708</sup> On inspection, other references to KHOEM Boeun and SREI Than alias Duch did not support the submission advanced – to the contrary, their evidence authenticated various documents and/or explained the manner in which they were prepared. The NUON Chea Defence submissions in this regard are therefore dismissed.

10.1.4.3. Summary

902. Although most of the Tram Kak District Records are photocopies, or copies of copies, the Chamber has scrutinised the collection and found it to be authentic, including those for which the evidence of chain of custody is less clear, namely those with DC-Cam references numbers which deviate from the main set copied by Ben KIERNAN in 1980 (E3/2107, E3/4145, E3/4164 and E3/4166) and/or those with originals held at the Tuol Sleng Museum (E3/2262, E3/2281 and again E3/4145). The Chamber excludes from consideration the note inside notebook E3/2107 which refers to having “smashed 15,000 enemies”. The Chamber remains satisfied, however, that the rest of the collection is authentic. The documents collectively identified as the Tram Kak District Records will therefore be considered together with the evidence from witnesses and Civil Parties in relation to the Tram Kak Cooperatives and Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre. The weight and/or probative value to be given to particular documents will be addressed in later sections when the Chamber evaluates the relevant factual allegations.

10.1.5. Administrative Structures

903. Using the CPK's numbering system, Tram Kak district was referred to as District 105, in Sector 13, of the Southwest Zone.<sup>2709</sup> The Chamber has examined the hierarchical structure of which Tram Kak district formed part.

10.1.5.1. *Southwest Zone*10.1.5.1.1. Leadership

904. The Southwest Zone included the following Sectors: 13 (Takeo), 25 (Kandal), Sector 33 (Kampong Speu) and Sector 35 (Kampot).<sup>2710</sup> CHHIT Choeun alias UNG Choeun alias Ta Mok was the Southwest Zone Secretary and a long-time member of the CPK's Standing Committee.<sup>2711</sup> Ta Mok came from Tram Kak district, specifically Prakheab village in what became Trapeang Thum South commune.<sup>2712</sup> He had been ordained as a monk at Trapeang Thum Pagoda.<sup>2713</sup> He left the monkhood in the 1940s time,<sup>2723</sup> the Chamber is satisfied that Ta Mok had a long-standing and prominent role in the CPK during the period over which the Chamber has temporal jurisdiction.

905. CHHOUK Rin testified that Ta Mok's overall position of power in the Party was such that he was the only person who could interrupt POL Pot.<sup>2724</sup> NUON Chea gave evidence to the effect that Ta Mok was deputy chair of the CPK's Military Committee, which he described as the strongest group and included POL Pot (chairman), SON Sen (deputy), SAO Phim and KE Pauk.<sup>2725</sup> Witnesses recalled that Ta Mok visited the villages and cooperatives in Tram Kak district<sup>2726</sup> and that he had a reputation for being strict.<sup>2727</sup> NUT Nov, a member of the Leay Bour Commune Committee at the time, described how Ta Mok assigned him to build a huge cooperative hall which the Chinese delegation led by CHEN Yonggui visited in December 1977.<sup>2728</sup> The Chamber finds that this establishes Ta Mok's ongoing involvement with events in Tram Kak district for much of the relevant period, although he also performed duties outside the Southwest Zone, which he left about one year before the arrival of the Vietnamese.<sup>2729</sup>

Secretary as at 6 October 1977.<sup>2756</sup> In 1978, while he was Secretary of Sector 25 in the Southwest Zone, SEK Sat alias Prak was purged and sent to S-21.<sup>2757</sup>

912. By the time the important Chinese delegation headed by CHEN Yonggui visited Leay Bour commune in Tram Kak district in December 1977, the Sector 13 Secretary was Ta Rorn which at times in the evidence before the Chamber was spelled “Ta Ran”.<sup>2758</sup> Several witnesses referred to this person and although the spellings in the English and French transcripts were inconsistent, the Khmer consistently identified “រ៉ូន”<sup>2759</sup>. The Chamber is satisfied that these references were to the same person, whom the Chamber will identify as Ta Rorn. NEANG Ouch alias Ta San testified that Ta Rorn remained Sector Secretary until December 1978 and described receiving direct instructions from him during meetings in Takeo town.<sup>2759</sup> This practice is confirmed by KHOEM Boeun, who testified that when she joined Tram Kak district from Cheang Tong commune, Ta Rorn ordered her to assist Ta San at Tram Kak district.<sup>2760</sup> She described Ta Rorn as being at the sector level and the person responsible for Tram Kak district.<sup>2761</sup>

913. At an undetermined point in time, Ta Rorn was injured in a car accident which affected the continuity of his leadership of Sector 13. NUT Nov recalled that Ta Rorn was injured in a car accident and this was announced during a meeting in Tram Kak district.<sup>2762</sup> NEANG Ouch also described Ta Rorn’s accident, although the precise details (including the location) differed from NUT Nov’s recollection.<sup>2763</sup> Although the Chamber is unable to ascertain the specifics of this incident, it is satisfied that Ta Rorn's tenure as the secretary of Sector 13 was interrupted.

914. PREAB Kit was PECH Chim's younger brother and he rose from chief of Trapeang Thum South commune, to the Tram Kak district level, to become Secretary of Sector 13.<sup>2764</sup> Within the Tram Kak District Records is handwritten message to An at the "District Office of Education 105" from Kit "[f]or the Sector 13 Committee". This document bears a date of 15 December, but no year is indicated.<sup>2765</sup> Given the Chamber's finding that Ta Rorn was the Sector Secretary when the Chinese delegation visited Leay Bour in mid-December 1977, the Chamber finds that Ta Kit was the Sector 13 Secretary after Ta Rorn, and that he held this position in December 1978.

915. In addition to the aforementioned Sector Secretaries Ta Saom, Ta Prak, Ta Rorn and Ta Kit, the evidence reveals that other persons filled the position of Sector 13 Secretary at times, but the evidence on the particular timings involved often lacked precision. Numerous witnesses recalled Ta Mok's brother-in-law YIM Tith alias Ta Tith being the Secretary of Sector 13 before he left the Southwest Zone for the Northwest Zone.<sup>2766</sup> In addition, MOENG Vet, a military messenger who delivered messages to Ta Saom, testified that Ta Saom fell sick before March 1977 and was succeeded by SAOM Chhoeun (i.e. a different Saom) as Sector Secretary, albeit for a brief period of time.<sup>2767</sup> This level of SAOM Chhoeun's responsibility could not be determined by the Chamber. Towards the end of Democratic Kampuchea, he was purged and sent to S-21 (where he entered on 27 December 1978). S-21 materials pertaining to him record his biographical details as an "assistant" to Sector 13, or working in the Economic Section of Sector 13 or the Ministry of Agriculture.<sup>2768</sup> IEP Duch, the head of the youth in Tram Kak district with an oversight role at Kraing Ta Chan, told investigators that his direct superior was SAOM Chhoeun.<sup>2769</sup> He identified the sector level as having a Sector Youth Chairman, and that this was SAOM Chhoeun.<sup>2770</sup> The Chamber therefore finds that SAOM Chhoeun primarily headed the Sector 13 Youth, and this was perceived as a significant position.

916. The Deputy Secretary of Sector 13 was known as Ta Phen or Ta Penh and he would fill in for an absent or otherwise incapacitated Sector Secretary.<sup>2771</sup> MOENG Vet identified both Phen and Keav as deputies of Sector Secretary Ta Saom.<sup>2772</sup> NUT Nov confirmed that Ta Phen was a member of Sector 13 under Ta Saom.<sup>2773</sup> EK Hoeun suggested that Ta Phen replaced Ta Saom as Sector Secretary in approximately 1976 because Ta Saom could no longer work at the time.<sup>2774</sup> NEANG Ouch identified Ta Phen as Sector 13 Deputy Chairman, with MEAS Muth controlling the Sector Military for a period of time.<sup>2775</sup> PECH Chim likewise told OCIJ investigators that Ta Phen was the deputy and MEAS Muth was a member of the sector.<sup>2776</sup> In February 1977, Ta Phen left Sector 13 to become the Secretary of Sector 43 in the Central (old North) Zone.<sup>2777</sup> Lastly, KHOEM Boeun testified that SAM Bit was on the Sector 13 Committee before he was appointed to the zone level.<sup>2778</sup>

917. According to PECH Chim, district secretaries were not members of the Sector Committee except in special cases when the Sector Assembly announced such an assignment. He gave the example of the Kaoh Andaet District Secretary, Sieng, being appointed in this way.<sup>2779</sup> According to sector messenger MOENG Vet, however, PECH Chim was a member of the Sector 13 Committee while he was the Tram Kak District Secretary.<sup>2780</sup> MOENG Vet also recalled that Sieng, the Kaoh Andaet District Secretary was a member of the Sector 13 “Standing Committee” as was Ta Tom, the Kirivong District Secretary.<sup>2781</sup> There is further corroborative evidence that district secretaries were indeed members of the Sector Committee.<sup>2782</sup> The October-November 1977 Revolutionary Flag included an article discussing the orientations of building up cadres, noting district cadres’ “bridge” status in that they had “one foot in the sectors and another in the cooperatives, and they are thus an important bridge linked to the cooperatives”.<sup>2783</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that when holding this position, the successive secretaries of Tram Kak district were also members of the broader Sector 13 Committee, but that a Sector 13 “standing committee” also existed.

10.1.5.2.2. Locations

918. The Sector 13 office was in Takeo town, to the east of Tram Kak district.<sup>2784</sup> NUT Nov also described sector-level general assemblies taking place in Takeo town.<sup>2785</sup> In addition, Sector 13 maintained a number of other offices or locations in various locations at different times. There was a Party school for the sector in Treang district, 3km south of Takeo town.<sup>2786</sup> Gatherings sometimes took place at Phnom Trel (near Tany).<sup>2787</sup> PECH Chim described at least one Sector Assembly held in Trapeang Thum South commune in Tram Kak district led by Ta Saom with Ta Mok in attendance.<sup>2788</sup> MOENG Vet's evidence establishes that Sector 13 had a messenger unit called Office 160 located at Angk Kriv Pagoda in Angkor Chey district, and this was also the location where the head of the Sector Youth, Chhoeun, worked and Sector 13 Secretary Ta Saom held meetings with district secretaries.<sup>2789</sup> The Chamber is also satisfied that meetings were held at Kantuot, which is now in Kandal Stueng district.<sup>2790</sup> demonstrates that, like in the rest of Cambodia under the control of the Khmer Rouge, the Front in Tram Kak merely acted as a façade for the CPK and it played no significant role after 17 April 1975.<sup>2791</sup> However some senior cadres of the Front were then amalgamated into the CPK leadership and exercised important roles. Thus NEANG Ouch alias Ta San<sup>2792</sup> had a prominent role in the Front in Tram Kak district. He clarified that the mission of the Front was to struggle against the LON Nol regime to bring NORODOM Sihanouk back to Cambodia.<sup>2793</sup> PECH Chim described the Front as simply the “public face” of the revolutionary movement in Tram Kak district, and he was also deputy of the District Front from October 1970.<sup>2794</sup> PECH Chim<sup>2795</sup> described an announcement by Ta Saom, the Sector Secretary, that the Front “belonged” to the CPK and there was no separation between these two organisations<sup>2796</sup> SAO Van’s<sup>2797</sup> evidence was that he chaired the Front in Cheang Tong commune and he described the Front as acting under the leadership of the CPK.<sup>2798</sup> In light of this evidence, the Chamber focuses its analysis on the leadership of the CPK in Tram Kak district. Although there may have been intricacies to the relationship between the CPK and FUNK, the evidence is clear that these were immaterial to the overall leadership structures in Tram Kak district during the period after 17 April 1975.

920. As noted above, Tram Kak district was code-numbered District 105.<sup>2799</sup> PREAK Khom alias Yeay Khom was Ta Mok’s daughter and she was married to MEAS Muth.<sup>2800</sup> She remained Tram Kak District Secretary for approximately one year after 17 April 1975.<sup>2801</sup> PECH Chim described a general reaction among people to Yeay Khom that she was perceived to be a hardliner and radical. As with Sector Secretary Ta Saom, the general reaction of people was to say they were “inflammable red”.<sup>2802</sup> Some evidence indicates that the relationship between Ta Mok and his daughter PREAK Khom was fractious. According to EK Hoeun, Ta Mok would yell at her, find her mistakes, and was not aware of most of her actions.<sup>2803</sup> The Chamber considers this evidence to be reliable.

921. Ta Keav was Yeay Khom’s deputy and succeeded her when she left Tram Kak district, with PECH Chim becoming the Deputy Secretary. Ta Keav was Tram Kak District Secretary for a relatively short period of time – a matter of a few months at most – and left this position in May or June 1976.<sup>2804</sup> A number of witnesses testified that Ta Keav was arrested, but the basis for their knowledge of this was insufficiently clear to the Chamber to establish such a finding.<sup>2805</sup> In any event, it is clear that when Ta Keav left Tram Kak district, PECH Chim became the District Secretary, with Ta Chay becoming his deputy.<sup>2806</sup>

923. PECH Chim's elder brother PREAB Kit replaced PECH Chim as District Secretary in approximately February 1977.<sup>2811</sup> PREAB Kit was previously the secretary of Trapeang Thum commune, before it split into Trapeang Thum North and Trapeang Thum South.<sup>2812</sup> Documentary evidence confirms PREAB Kit's ascent to District Secretary in early 1977. <sup>2810</sup> PECH Chim gave inconsistent accounts as to the date he left Tram Kak district. When reviewing the entirety of his evidence and considering it in context, however, the Chamber is convinced that he left Tram Kak district in February 1977. Firstly, the sequence of District Secretaries before and after him strongly suggests that he left in February 1977 rather than February 1976, as he claimed towards the end of his appearance before the Chamber. Secondly, he testified that he received the Honorary Red Flag awarded to Tram Kak district for the year 1976, which makes it implausible that he had left Tram Kak district in February 1976. Thirdly, he gave detailed evidence of the circumstances of his transfer to the Central Zone which demonstrate that this took place in early 1977 on the occasion of purges of local cadres decided by the Party Centre (see Section 12.1: Internal Factions, para. 2069). He described a meeting with POL Pot who said that there were traitors in the Central Zone and that KOY Thuon had betrayed the Party (see T. 22 April 2015 (PECH Chim), E1/290.1, pp. 79-80). The Chamber is satisfied that this could only have occurred in early 1977, following KOY Thuon's transfer to S-21. Fourthly, RIEL Son's evidence was that he was assigned to become the Deputy Chief of Trak Kak District Hospital in late 1976, by siblings Ta Chim and Ta Kit who were both on the District Committee at the time. See T. 17 March 2015 (RIEL Son), E1/278.1, pp. 18-19, 24, 33 (indicating he had meetings with PECH Chim). “please interrogate this contemptible person”.<sup>2813</sup> A report to Tram Kak District Angkar dated 24 April 1977 bears an annotation from “Kit” requesting Comrade An to “find the network of Kie Kun”.<sup>2814</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that such instructions confirm PREAB Kit’s position as District Secretary by late March 1977 rather than a Commune Secretary. NEANG Ouch alias Ta San also confirmed that, when he arrived in Tram Kak district in mid-1977, Kit was District Secretary at the time.<sup>2815</sup>

924. Documentary evidence demonstrates that PREAB Kit remained District Secretary throughout much of 1977. A handwritten message from Kit to An on 31 July [1977] asked Kraing Ta Chan chief Ta An to contact Cheang Tong commune to arrest two individuals.<sup>2816</sup> A handwritten report from Sre Ronoung commune to the District on 1 September 1977 bears a note from Kit requesting An to examine the contents and directing that if they are true, arrest the people mentioned.<sup>2817</sup> A handwritten annotation on a note from San to An on 2 September 1977 is signed by Kit and dated 3 September 1977.<sup>2818</sup> A handwritten report to the Party from Leay Bour commune on 4 September 1977 bears a note to An from Kit dated 6 September 1977, requesting the interrogation of the person mentioned.<sup>2819</sup> A handwritten report from On at K-105 to Angkar on 16 September 1977, bears an annotation signed by Kit to “arrest Prak Nan” and “bring him over to our place”.<sup>2820</sup> A handwritten report from Kit “District 105” on 6 October 1977 reported to the Party on the movements of a woman named Kap.<sup>2821</sup> A handwritten report from Meng regarding a New Person, a youth called NGET Kun, bears an

925. NEANG Ouch alias Ta San had arrived in Tram Kak district from Kaoh Andaet district, following an order from Ta Mok.<sup>2824</sup> He gave unclear evidence concerning the date and the purpose of his move. In an interview with OCIJ investigators, he stated that he left Kaoh Andet district in June 1977, and arrived in Leay Bour in late 1977.<sup>2825</sup> In court he asserted that he was probably transferred around October 1977 and that his role was to be an assistant to the District Committee, dealing with building dams, dykes and canals and working in the rice fields.<sup>2826</sup> He further indicated that shortly after his arrival, he sustained a knee injury while playing sport, which caused him to be hospitalised in Phnom Penh for some three months.<sup>2827</sup> Given the numerous references to “San” in the documentary evidence the Chamber views his statements as an attempt to minimise his involvement and is satisfied that, that NEANG Ouch alias Ta San had recovered from any injury and had assumed a prominent function in Tram Kak district by early September 1977.<sup>2828</sup> The messages discussed above reveal that he worked together with Ta Kit for some of this time.

926. Deputy Tram Kak District Secretary TY Chay alias Ta Chay replaced PREAB Kit as District Secretary until Ta Chay was later sent to the Northwest Zone.<sup>2829</sup> Documentary evidence indicates that Ty Chay was the District Secretary by early November 1977: for instance, a handwritten note to Angk Ta Saom commune bears the signature Chay with the date of 7 November 1977, recording that he “completely accepted” the commune’s report and asking the commune to “send to the Police”.<sup>2830</sup>

927. The position following TY Chay’s departure from Tram Kak district was contested by persons who appeared before the Chamber. Several witnesses in a position to know described NEANG Ouch alias Ta San becoming the District Secretary. RIEL Son, the deputy of Tram Kak District Hospital, was clear in his evidence that Ta San was the last secretary of Tram Kak district.<sup>2831</sup> Indeed, NUT Nov, who became a commune secretary, told OCIJ investigators that he reported to Ta San every month in this capacity.<sup>2832</sup> He described his appointment to become Secretary of Sre Ronoung commune in late 1977 or early 1978, and discussions with Ta San at that time.<sup>2833</sup> VAN Soeun, a messenger from Kraing Ta Chan, recalled meeting Ta San in Leay Bour commune in 1977 at which point Ta San was the district chief.<sup>2834</sup> IEP Duch likewise told OCIJ investigators that Ta San started to govern the District Committee in approximately 1977.<sup>2835</sup> KHOEM Boeun alias Yeay Boeun testified that she joined the Tram Kak District Committee in October 1978 from her previous position as the chief of Cheang Tong commune, having been tasked by Sector Secretary Ta Rorn to assist Ta San at the district level.<sup>2836</sup> She described Ta San as the last District Secretary of Tram Kak District.<sup>2837</sup>

928. In contrast, NEANG Ouch alias Ta San repeatedly denied that he was the Tram Kak District Secretary. He maintained that he was only ever an “assistant” to the district and that it was Ta Rorn, the Sector Secretary, who really took personal charge of Tram Kak district.<sup>2838</sup> This account finds some corroboration from PECH Chim, who testified that Ta San’s background as a teacher meant that his class pedigree was insufficiently pure to join the CPK or to be appointed as a District Secretary.<sup>2839</sup> By his own admission, however, PECH Chim was not in Tram Kak district at the relevant time, having left for the Central Zone in February 1977.

929. Although the documentary evidence suggests some fluidity in the district hierarchy in late 1977 into 1978, the Chamber is satisfied by the overall weight of the evidence – both from witnesses and the documents – that NEANG Ouch alias Ta San indeed came to act as Tram Kak District Secretary, whether he was formally appointed or not. The Chamber finds it relevant in this regard that NEANG Ouch alias Ta San was Ta Mok’s brother-in-law.<sup>2840</sup> Telling documentary evidence includes a handwritten note to Kraing Ta Chan Chief Ta An signed by San on 26 December 1977 which requested that he take in four people;<sup>2841</sup> a handwritten note to Comrade Elder Brother An signed by San on 1 March [1978] requesting the interrogation of a person called SO Im and to be sent a copy of the confession;<sup>2842</sup> a handwritten note to comrade Brother

An signed by San on 7 March [1978] referred to persons having tried to escape to Vietnam,<sup>2843</sup> and a handwritten note to Comrade Chhoeun from San dated 7 August [1978].<sup>2844</sup>

930. On the basis of the foregoing evidence, the Chamber finds that the leadership of Tram Kak district passed from Yeay Khom to Ta Keav in approximately March 1976, followed by PECH Chim in around June 1976. PECH Chim remained District Secretary until February 1977 when he was replaced by his brother PREAB Kit. Later in 1977, TY Chay briefly took over until he left in late 1977 or early 1978, then NEANG Ouch alias Ta San performed the role of District Secretary for the remaining period.

931. As to other members of the Tram Kak District Committee, PECH Chim described five persons being members at any one time, with each performing different functions.<sup>2845</sup> For example, he identified “Phors” and also “Cheat” as being in charge of women’s affairs for the entire province, but “Phors” also served as a member of the District.<sup>2846</sup> PECH Chim explained that to be on the District Committee it was a prerequisite to be a full-rights member of the CPK, having been selected and receiving political education for a period of three or four years.<sup>2847</sup> Appointments to the District Committee were proposed by the district to Sector 13, and had to follow the Party’s line which meant to select poor peasants with pure class pedigrees.<sup>2848</sup> While the Chamber accepts this to have been the position when PECH Chim was in Tram Kak district, the evidence reveals that the rules loosened over time, as more senior CPK members from Tram Kak district were sent to other zones. The Chamber has already referred to NEANG Ouch alias Ta San’s ascent and the fluidity in personnel structures around that time. To similar effect, KHOEM Boeun insisted that she was not a full-rights member of the CPK, even when she joined the District Committee in October 1978, despite <sup>2843</sup> Tram Kak District Record, E3/2785, 7 March [1978], ERN (En) 00322193. The Chamber is satisfied that the year is 1978 because this note is signed by “San”, who only assumed responsibilities in Tram Kak district in late 1977.

The Chamber recalls that NEANG Ouch alias Ta San described the genesis of this report, and the Chamber has found elsewhere in this Judgement that the widows were taken to Kraing Ta Chan. Based on this surrounding evidence, and the date of NEANG Ouch alias Ta San’s arrival in Tram Kak district, the Chamber is satisfied that this particular report is from 1978.

10.1.5.3.2. Locations

932. Although the location of the Tram Kak District Office moved, and District Committee meetings could also take place in informal settings, the Chamber is satisfied that the primary location of the Tram Kak District Office was at Angk Roka and this is where the District Committee was based.<sup>2851</sup> Witnesses were not always clear when distinguishing different sites located in Angk Roka, with varying references made to the District Office and the District Commerce Office.<sup>2852</sup> EK Hoeun worked at the “District Office” until 1976 and identified his younger cousin, SAOM Dorn alias Dorn, as head of the District Office at that time.<sup>2853</sup> He explained that, when Ta Mok needed a certain number of people to work on something, SAOM Dorn alias Dorn would arrange it while also performing bookkeeping tasks for materials and logistics.<sup>2854</sup> KHOEM Boeun alias Yeay Boeun likewise identified Dorn as the head of the District Office and she recalled him supervising “economic” matters.<sup>2855</sup> PECH Chim also identified “Dan” as the chief of the District Office who remained there when PECH

Chim left Tram Kak.<sup>2856</sup> As with the translation of Ta Ran and Ta Rorn discussed above, the Chamber is satisfied that witnesses who referred to Ta Dan and Ta Dorn at the District Office were, on analysis of the original evidence as given in Khmer, referring to the same person, whom the Chamber will identify as Ta Dorn.

933. LONG Vonn was the deputy chief of the commerce committee in Tram Kak district in 1977.<sup>2857</sup> When he was there, “Chhoeut (phonetic)” was in charge of the “commerce office”.<sup>2858</sup> NEANG Ouch alias Ta San likewise identified a person called Chhoeun, but referred to him as chief of the District Office in 1978.<sup>2859</sup> EK Hoeun described an incident in June or July 1978 when he was threatened at the “District Office” and he referred to Chhoeun as being the chief of the District Office at that time.<sup>2860</sup> In light of this evidence, the Chamber finds that SAOM Dorn alias Dorn was chief of the District Office in the early period, but Chhoeun assumed that role later on, some time after February 1977.

934. Also based in Angk Roka were persons with oversight of re-education and security matters. 10.1.5.4. Overall population living in Tram Kak district

936. PECH Chim estimated that approximately 250,000 people lived in Tram Kak district in over a dozen communes and up to 100 villages.<sup>2871</sup> He further estimated that Tram Kak district covered an area of more than 25,000 hectares (i.e. 250 square kilometres).<sup>2872</sup> A DK textbook published in 1977 records Tram Kak district as comprising 10 communes, with the district's main town then being at Angk Ta Saom.<sup>2873</sup> While PECH Chim is well placed to have detailed knowledge of such matters, the Chamber is cautious about the precision of his population estimate. PHANN Chhen expressed difficulty in estimating the population of the entire district, but he appeared to accept an estimate of 80,000 people living there in 1979.<sup>2874</sup>

937. At the commune level, KHOEM Boeun told OCIJ investigators there were approximately 10 villages and 700 families in Cheang Tong commune, each comprising four to six members.<sup>2875</sup> This indicates a population of between 2,800 to 4,200 persons in that single commune. When Yugoslavian journalists visited a model cooperative in Leay Bour commune in early 1978, they were told it contained about 10,000 people divided into work brigades.<sup>2876</sup> Similarly, NEANG Ouch alias Ta San confirmed the accuracy of a radio broadcast describing Leay Bour cooperative comprising more than 9,000 people and 4,000 hectares of harvestable land, 3,000 hectares of rice paddies including 600 hectares which could achieve two harvests per year.<sup>2877</sup> This evidence suggests that PECH Chim overestimated the overall number of people in the communes and cooperatives of Tram Kak district.

938. Further, it is not clear to the Chamber whether PECH Chim's estimate represented the population of Tram Kak district before or after the arrival of evacuees from Phnom Penh and Takeo after 17 April 1975. He told OCIJ investigators, for example, that 3,500 to 4,000 families, primarily wives of soldiers, with each family including three to five children arrived in Tram Kak district following the evacuations.<sup>2878</sup> This would equate to the arrival of significantly more than 14,000 persons in Tram Kak district, and his estimate did not appear to include extended family members. NUT Nov, who worked in the commune office of Nhaeng Nhang commune when evacuees arrived, testified that "thousands" of New People arrived in this commune alone.<sup>2879</sup> PIN Yathay described the transfer of large numbers of persons from Tram Kak district in around September 1975, when people were assembled from various locations at Angk Roka.<sup>2880</sup> The evidence also establishes that thousands of Khmer Krom arrived in Tram Kak district from Vietnamese territory as part of an exchange programme.<sup>2881</sup> Further still, there is evidence of New People arriving in Tram Kak district from nearby districts, such as Kirivong district (109) in 1977, when people were moved away from the border with Vietnam.<sup>2882</sup> Even without assessing birth or deaths, it is clear that the population of Tram Kak district fluctuated to a significant extent during the period over which the Chamber has jurisdiction.

See RY Pov Interview Record, E3/9604, 30 October 2013, p. 13, ERN (En) 00970036 (Answers 81-82). teams” or “solidarity groups”. These involved joint production efforts and distribution, but allowed people to retain private property and eat in private with their family.<sup>2884</sup>

940. PECH Chim described a concerted effort to establish cooperatives in all of the communes in Tram Kak district from approximately June or July 1975 onwards.<sup>2885</sup> These cooperatives organised the population in a more centralised manner than before in order to try to maximise agricultural production, and the CPK expressly viewed cooperatives as enshrining the “profound nature of class struggle”.<sup>2886</sup> One component of this model was that only a few people would cook or take care of domestic matters, whereas the rest would work on construction of dykes, dams or in the rice fields with the purpose of rationalising the use of the workforce and increasing the production in the most efficient way.<sup>2887</sup> Other components of the policy included the collectivisation of all property, the categorisation of people and their assignment to various units, political education, and communal eating in dining halls (sometimes referred to as “kusin bay”).<sup>2888</sup> The documentary evidence records the CPK’s policy and belief that, as this collective regime progressed, the masses would come to realise that life held “more convenience with many things like eating and working, and raising their children”.<sup>2889</sup>

941. The evidence shows that the expansion of the collective regime over time was a process driven by the introduction of competition between locations. PECH Chim gave the example of communal dining halls being set up in each village, which meant that 10 villages would have 10 communal dining halls. Ta Mok then instructed Tram Kak district to move towards one dining hall per commune, rather than one per village. Those communes which could achieve this were considered to be model communes; but others could not achieve this level of consolidation.<sup>2890</sup> This policy of expansion is confirmed by documentary evidence. A CPK Policy Document dated 19 September 1975 records the general plan that: “Later we will eliminate Villages. We will not permit them, and will organize collectives instead. So the Village and [Commune] Committees will be inside the cooperatives.”<sup>2891</sup> In late 1975, the Revolutionary Flag recorded the CPK’s plan to increase the size of cooperatives such that, by 1976, a “general cooperative” would take over any village structures, then expand from 300 to 400, 500, 700 to 1,000 families.<sup>2892</sup> On 21 January 1976, Khmer Rouge radio broadcast that cooperatives had been strengthened and expanded following the liberation and almost all of the villages in Takeo province had been organised into cooperatives.<sup>2893</sup> The April 1976 issue of Revolutionary Flag recorded that, whereas at the time of liberation, cooperatives had up to thirty families on average, they had expanded up to 300 families on average.<sup>2894</sup> A document dated 20 May 1976 celebrating the third year anniversary of peasant cooperatives likewise confirms the CPK’s direction to “strengthen and to extend the cooperatives step by step so that they become village cooperatives, integrating 1,000 families”, and further records the CPK’s intention to dismantle previous structures at village and commune levels so that “our people” could gain more rights in administering authority via cooperatives.<sup>2895</sup>

942. The August 1976 Revolutionary Flag records that cooperatives had “strengthened and expanded” to 100, 200, 300 families, some having 500 families with cooperatives generally organised in villages throughout the country. It noted that there was a “large amount of commune cooperative organization already” with commune cooperatives comprising 800, 900, up to 1,000 families.<sup>2896</sup> A further “document on consciousness” from 30 November 1976 records that, whereas before a cooperative had only 30 families, by then there were 1000 families to a cooperative and the CPK had expanded the communal system.<sup>2897</sup> In POL Pot’s major September 1977 speech, in which he publicly announcing the CPK’s existence, he summarised that cooperatives continued to increase in size: with 50 percent of cooperatives made up of 700 to 1,000 families; 30 percent made up of 400 to 600 families; and 20 percent of 100 to 300 families. This meant that in general “cooperatives are on the scale of communes” and “only a small number still remain the size of villages”.<sup>2898</sup> POL Pot told Yugoslavian journalists in early 1978 that 85 percent of the population were members of cooperatives.<sup>2899</sup> A radio broadcast on the morning of 14 March 1978 repeated some of these statistics: 50 percent of cooperatives comprised 700 to 1,000 families; 30 percent comprised 400 to 600 family units; and 20 per cent comprised 100 to 300 family units.<sup>2900</sup>

943. In relation to Tram Kak district specifically, the evidence before the Chamber is incomplete as to the number and scale of the cooperatives. Trapeang Chrey village. The evidence before the Chamber identified Chan Teab cooperative<sup>2911</sup> and another cooperative in Ta Suon village.<sup>2912</sup>

946. In addition to these locations, the evidence before the Chamber reveals the existence of numerous other cooperatives in Tram Kak district. For example, in Kus commune, there was a cooperative at Pong Tuek.<sup>2913</sup> In Cheang Tong commune, there were cooperatives at Sre Kruo<sup>2914</sup> and Ta Reab villages.<sup>2915</sup> In Leay Bour commune, there were various cooperatives including a model cooperative for Base People known as K-1.<sup>2916</sup> The evidence does not enable the Chamber to find with any degree of precision the particular point in time when different cooperatives were created and/or expanded, but it is clear that cooperatives were expanded over time in Tram Kak district.

947. At the same time as expanding the scale of individual cooperatives, the CPK sought to establish and expand the number of Party branches in cooperatives. The CPK's 1976 Statute provided that each cooperative could organise a CPK branch, provided there were more than three Party members.<sup>2917</sup> Tasks of CPK branches included to “grasp and agitate” mass organisations, expand and screen Party membership, and maintain a system of reporting to the upper echelon.<sup>2918</sup> The July 1976 Revolutionary Flag records the CPK's plan to achieve Party branches in 40 to 50 percent of cooperatives during 1976.<sup>2919</sup> The Report of Activities of the Party Centre dated 20 December 1976 confirms that the 1976 Plan was to establish Party branches in 50 percent of the collectives in the country.<sup>2920</sup>

948. In addition to reserving authority positions for those with acceptable class backgrounds, the CPK's plan for the first half of 1977 was to expand Party membership further: by another 40 per cent in the first six months, then the remaining 60 percent in the second half of 1977, such that by the end of 1977 there was to be a CPK branch in every cooperative in the country.<sup>2921</sup> The December 1976-January 1977 Revolutionary Flag confirmed the "core work" of 1977 was "strengthening and expanding the cooperatives and making them strong by building the cooperatives and by building the Party branches in cooperatives to 100 percent level during 1977, making the cooperatives into iron walls throughout the country".<sup>2922</sup>

949. The April 1977 Revolutionary Flag also records the CPK's direction to expand new Party membership in cooperatives whereby there should be three Party members, five "core organization members", and eight "progressive persons" per 100 families; such that for every 1,000 families there would be 30 Party members, 50 core organization members, and 80 progressive persons.<sup>2923</sup> The October-November 1977 Revolutionary Flag similarly refers to the need to have "many ranks of cadres outside the Party" by building up "progressives", so that it would be possible to have "cores" numbering in the hundreds within a 1,000 household cooperative.<sup>2924</sup> This issue of Revolutionary Flag goes on to explain that, for a 500-household cooperative, at least

It is imperative to figure out how to quickly build branches in the base areas. If we have branches in 50 percent of the cooperatives, that will make us strong, and we have the full potential. But now many of the cooperatives are village cooperatives. Where the villages cooperatives are in existence there is full potential to build Party branches in these cooperatives, because previously in cooperatives of 15 to 20 families there were 10 to 15 good people in the masses. Now in village cooperatives of 100 to 200 families, there are 20 or 30 or more good people in the masses.").

10.1.5.6. Meetings and oversight

950. Articles 12 to 14 of the CPK’s 1976 Statute stipulated the tasks and goals of the CPK’s district committees, including a provision that they had to hold monthly meetings to examine, monitor and deliberate on all work.<sup>2926</sup> The Tram Kak District Committee met regularly. KHOEM Boeun joined the District Committee in October 1978 and described “normal” meetings taking place on the 10th, 20th and 30th day of the month.<sup>2927</sup> The District Committee also met with the commune representatives on a monthly basis at least, usually in a meeting chaired by the District Secretary.<sup>2928</sup> The communes made written and oral reports to the district.<sup>2929</sup> The Revolutionary Flag was distributed to each commune in Tram Kak district.<sup>2930</sup>

951. The Tram Kak District Committee reported to Sector 13 at the end of every month in a report covering the leadership situation, the situation with the enemy, any conflicts within the district, economics and the harvest: the onus was on the district level to resolve issues rather than simply escalate matters.<sup>2931</sup> Between meetings, telegrams were not used to communicate between the district and sector levels – instead, communication was through notes and messengers.<sup>2932</sup> This is consistent with the documentary evidence showing notes flowing between Kraing Ta Chan, the communes, the district level, with annotations signed by the Sector Secretary.<sup>2933</sup> commune and district cadres also travelled to attend meetings in Takeo town. For instance, IEP Duch, the chair of the Tram Kak District Youth, described to OCIJ investigators meetings at the Sector Office when important circulars had been sent from Office 870. He described various districts attending these meetings, together with one person per commune: perhaps 100 participants in all, including the army.<sup>2934</sup> Even when she was chief of Cheang Tong commune, KHOEM Boeun regularly visited the Sector 13 office and she recalled meetings chaired by Ta Rorn, the Sector Secretary.<sup>2935</sup> On occasion, Ta Mok also attended education sessions at the sector level.<sup>2936</sup>

952. The Southwest Zone scheduled meetings with the sectors every three to six months to discuss the workplan.<sup>2937</sup> NEANG Ouch alias Ta San further described attending meetings at the zone level once per month or once every two months, when Ta Mok came to Takeo for study sessions.<sup>2938</sup> There were also criticism sessions at the zone level. NEANG Ouch Ta San testified that at such a session he was criticised for not being vehement enough on enemies.<sup>2939</sup> KHIEV Neou described Southwest Zone education sessions led by SAM Bit.<sup>2940</sup> Meetings focused on lines of the revolution and stressed, for example, that 85 percent of the population were now peasants.<sup>2941</sup> This is consistent with POL Pot's statement noted above, that 85 percent of the population were members of cooperatives.<sup>2942</sup> SAO Van described a meeting at the old market in Takeo town – the only meeting he ever attended in Takeo, which involved a three-day study session followed by two days of self-criticism for the attendees.<sup>2943</sup> SAO Van was unclear as to the date of this meeting. Before the Supreme Court Chamber, he suggested that the meeting took place in December 1976, but before the Trial Chamber he placed it some time after the Khmer New Year of 1976, perhaps in June or July 1976.<sup>2944</sup> In any event, he recalled that Ta Mok invited cadres and soldiers from each province, including Sector 13 and Sector 25.<sup>2945</sup> SAM Bit presided over the meeting and Ta Saom (i.e. the Sector 13 Secretary) also presented, with Ta Mok mainly there to listen. There were approximately 300 participants in total including military.<sup>2946</sup> The presentation concerned agriculture, mobilising the masses, moving from the phase of democratic revolution to socialist revolution.<sup>2947</sup> Ta Mok encouraged everyone to try to reach the production target of three tonnes per hectare.<sup>2948</sup> SAM Bit gave a presentation about diverting soldiers to build, defend the country, and strengthen the bases.<sup>2949</sup>

PECH Chim attended a study session at the CPK's school (Borei Keila) in Phnom Penh when NUON Chea was the instructor.<sup>2950</sup> The session was for members of district committees and took place after a session for members of sector committees.<sup>2951</sup> It lasted around 20 days and was followed by a one-week visit throughout the country, before he returned to Tram Kak district.<sup>2952</sup> PECH Chim credibly identified NUON Chea, but gave somewhat inconsistent evidence as to the year this took place: sometimes he said it was December 1975;<sup>2953</sup> at other times he appeared to suggest that it was in late 1976.<sup>2954</sup> Although late 1976 would appear to be more plausible based on PECH Chim’s position as District Secretary at that time, the Chamber is unable to resolve this discrepancy. PECH Chim was clear, however, that NUON Chea covered the subject of enemies: if he had not done so “people would never know how to identify enemies from friends”.<sup>2955</sup> He could not remember whether instructions were given in relation to remnants of the former Khmer Republic regime, but he recalled that not everybody was considered to be the enemy because such an approach would cause the CPK to lose support. NUON Chea spoke of the class enemy and class struggle. But speeches also discussed those in high positions as being “not good” – according to PECH Chim the CPK was still afraid of LON Nol’s men.<sup>2956</sup> Although those who had been in areas under LON Nol were described to be enemies, NUON Chea, according to PECH Chim, also said that those who had been in the enemy’s zone but served those who were in the liberated zone were considered to be friends, and considering everybody to be enemies would be difficult as it would mean losing a lot of support. PECH Chim described the overall tone of this meeting as stressing the need to be vigilant regarding LON Nol’s people.<sup>2957</sup>

NEANG Ouch alias Ta San also attended two yearly study sessions: first in around September or October 1977 and again in 1978 at Borei Keila in Phnom Penh.<sup>2958</sup> He explained that the “provincial level” selected people to attend these sessions and there were people from the district levels and some assistants.<sup>2959</sup> NEANG Ouch could not recall the contents of these sessions, but he remembered criticism and self-criticism sessions taking place afterwards in order to evaluate what was learned. meeting, NEANG Ouch could not remember whether NUON Chea discussed enemies, but he credibly identified NUON Chea as leading the sessions.<sup>2961</sup>

955. Ta Mok did not attend district meetings, but he regularly travelled to Tram Kak district.<sup>2962</sup> His “style” was that he went to most worksites, villages and communes. This is consistent with evidence that Ta Mok came to inspect various worksites in Tram Kak district.<sup>2963</sup> He “constantly” went to a dam worksite at Angkor Borei.<sup>2964</sup> He visited the cooperatives, “every site” and asked people directly whether they had enough to eat, taking food from other places to supplement areas with shortages.<sup>2965</sup> Ta Mok instructed NUT Nov to build a “huge” cooperative hall in Leay Bour commune, which foreign visitors were later brought to see.<sup>2966</sup> Sector Secretary Ta Saom visited the Tram Kak District Office.<sup>2967</sup> According to NEANG Ouch, Ta Rorn was the Sector 13 Secretary at the time of the Chinese visit to Leay Bour commune in December 1977 and was close to SAM Bit at the zone level, taking instructions from him which NEANG Ouch alias Ta San then wrote them down.<sup>2968</sup> PHNEOU Yav, who lived in Samraong commune, described Ta Chim the district leader regularly visiting different communes to supervise worksites and meet the commune and unit chiefs.<sup>2969</sup> The evidence therefore establishes that CPK leaders from the zone, sector and district levels regularly travelled throughout Tram Kak district to visit sites and supervise.

10.1.6. *Aftermath of the Evacuations*10.1.6.1. Reception of evacuees

956. Thousands of people expelled from Phnom Penh and Takeo, among other places, arrived in Tram Kak district in the weeks following 17 April 1975. The Chamber heard evidence of a process to screen, register, feed and disperse evacuees to locations around the District. PECH Chim, who was on the District Committee at the time, was in charge of preparing and organising villages to be ready to receive evacuees, which included building shelters and “mobilising forces” to farm.<sup>2970</sup> The number of evacuees assigned to each different locations in the district was decided upon by his superiors.<sup>2971</sup> PECH Chim also described holding meetings to “educate” the evacuees, the objective being to ensure that everyone lived in “peace, happiness and harmony”.<sup>2972</sup> KHOEM Boeun, chief of Cheang Tong commune at the time, described urgent meetings arranged by the district level before evacuees from Takeo and Phnom Penh arrived. She was told to arrange places for evacuees to settle and to prepare food for them.<sup>2973</sup> District Secretary Yeay Khom assigned SAO Van to “solve the food supplies” for people arriving in Cheang Tong and Trapeang Thum North.<sup>2974</sup>

957. SAOM Dorn, the chief of the District Office at the time, had an oversight role for receiving and distributing evacuees, working together with commune chiefs.<sup>2975</sup> EK Hoeun described meetings to explain how to draw up lists and register arrivals for redistribution throughout the district – he recalled dividing evacuees into groups of 15 people, registering their names with a view to sending them to villages, three or four groups at a time.<sup>2976</sup> He gave another illustrative example of a list with 100 people on it to be sent to a particular village.<sup>2977</sup> He worked intensely to organise food supplies for evacuees.<sup>2978</sup> Chorn, who was KHOEM Boeun’s husband, also had a significant role in the compilation of lists and resettlement of evacuees. Chorn as a “mobile floating cadre” who ran errands directly reporting to the sector level. He went around collecting information, with lists of people always in his hand which he sent to the district and the sector.<sup>2979</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that the CPK’s authority structures were fully mobilised to receive, register and screen the evacuees arriving in Tram Kak district and that efforts were made to feed and shelter the thousands of arrivals.

10.1.6.2. Events at Champa Pagoda

958. Champa Pagoda was located to the west of Angk Ta Saom town, on the road from Takeo town to Angk Roka. It became a gathering point and staging post for tens of thousands of the evacuees who arrived in Tram Kak district from Takeo, Phnom Penh and elsewhere.<sup>2980</sup> KEO Chandara recalled having seen thousands of people in the area of Champa Pagoda at the end of April 1975.<sup>2981</sup> District Secretary Khom and Zone Secretary Ta Mok visited Champa pagoda at times during this process.<sup>2982</sup> SOK Sim, a former member of the Ta Phem Commune Committee, confirmed to OCIJ investigators that he saw “many people” accommodated in the pagoda, and that later on they were sent to live in villages.<sup>2983</sup>

959. OEM Saroeurn described arriving at Champa Pagoda with her family, among large numbers of other people. She recalled persons going around registering names and taking notes of any previous roles. Those who disclosed they had high ranks or were senior officials were taken away under a pretext that they would return to their previous jobs, but they disappeared. Specifically, her uncle IM Chak was one of those taken away from Champa Pagoda at the same time as even former teachers, soldiers, police and custom officers. She never saw him again.<sup>2984</sup> After one week, she and her other family members were moved east, to Prey Chheu Teal village then onwards to Leay Bour commune.<sup>2985</sup>

960. OEM Saroeurn’s general account of the events at Champa Pagoda is corroborated by EK Hoeun, who worked with the Tram Kak District Office at the relevant time and, although evasive at times, described an intensive period of seven days when lists were drawn up and former soldiers or officials were invited to register on the premise that they would take on similar roles in the new regime.<sup>2986</sup> Although EK Hoeun did not see Ta Mok, he described SAOM Dorn overseeing this operation from Tram Kak district together with commune officials.<sup>2987</sup> He recalled that civilians, police officers and soldiers who had been in the barracks in (enemy-held) Takeo were among those assembled at Champa Pagoda.<sup>2988</sup> This is consistent with the testimony of SREI Than alias Duch, who was a soldier involved in the capture of Takeo town which fell on 18 April 1975. He described LON Nol soldiers leaving Takeo town and being sent west along Highway 22 toward Tram Kak district.<sup>2989</sup> EK Hoeun described to OCIJ investigators that once names were registered at Wat Champa, “they decimated hundreds of thousands of ranking officers until they were completely exterminated” and this took place at Wat Champa in Ta Phem commune, west of Angk Ta Saom.<sup>2990</sup> He went on to say that he was not close by at the time, but this information was “bandied about by word of mouth”.<sup>2991</sup> KEO Chandara, who was imprisoned at Kraing Ta Chan in around 17 April 1975, described speaking to newly arrived prisoners who told him that they were students from Phnom Penh, and arrived at Kraing Ta Chan from Champa Pagoda.<sup>2992</sup> The arrest of persons including former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials at Champa Pagoda in the aftermath of the liberation is confirmed by later documentary evidence. For example, a handwritten report dated 30 April 1977 describes arrests having taken place at Wat Champa “after the liberation”.<sup>2993</sup>

961. In contrast to such evidence, although SAO Van who was then the chief of the Front in Cheang Tong commune, agreed that former LON Nol soldiers were gathered up at Champa Pagoda, he testified that they were merely invited to settle in a particular location, near the foot of the mountain – he did not know exactly where.<sup>2994</sup> According to SAO Van, the CPK identified former soldiers through their family origins and some were sent to their home villages to live with their parents.<sup>2995</sup> When asked further about the events at Champa Pagoda, he stressed that his role was limited and pointed to others including “Phi” and the “district military” as responsible – for what precisely, SAO Van did not elaborate.<sup>2996</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that this evidence relates to Phy, who worked for Tram Kak district and the Chamber has found also performed functions related to Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>2997</sup> SAO Van described one particular day when he travelled to visit Takeo with “Bong Chim” – a reference to PECH Chim – but when he returned to Ta Phem commune, the people at Champa Pagoda had all gone, having been distributed to different communes.<sup>2998</sup> VAN Soeun, a district soldier at the time and later a guard and messenger at Kraing Ta Chan, gave evidence that after 17 April 1975 the instructions being given were to simply send LON Nol soldiers back to their hometowns.<sup>2999</sup> Notwithstanding this evidence, the Chamber is satisfied that the combination of evidence from OEM Saroeun concerning her uncle's disappearance, EK Hoeun and the documentary evidence establishes that evacuees were screened at Champa Pagoda and some were killed and/or disappeared as a result.<sup>3000</sup> The Chamber has also established elsewhere in this Judgement that some persons were sent from Champa Pagoda to Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre.<sup>3001</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that, as part of the registration and screening process described above, evacuees at Champa Pagoda were asked to divulge their previous occupations and that many did so. The evidence does not allow the Chamber to make a more precise finding as to the numbers involved.

962. The Chamber finds that the events at Champa Pagoda were restricted to a relatively short period: one week or slightly longer after the fall of Phnom Penh and Takeo town. CHOU Koemlan arrived in Tram Kak district approximately 22 days after the fall of Phnom Penh. She described being gathered with her family members for "checking" in Pou Ta Sab, 2km west of Angk Ta Saom market.<sup>3002</sup> Notably, they were not sent to Champa Pagoda which EK Hoeun confirmed was only 1km further to the west.<sup>3003</sup> On this basis, the Chamber finds that the activities at Champa Pagoda were over by mid-May 1975 at the latest.

10.1.6.3. Instructions in relation to evacuees and former Khmer Republic officials

963. PECH Chim distinguished different instructions to proceed to review and report on persons in general.<sup>3004</sup> PECH Chim described a meeting where District Secretary Yeay Khom discussed the situation of enemy officers who had been gathered up, but he did not directly state that there were instructions to kill them. According to PECH Chim, being gathered in this way meant those persons had no future: their fate was, in his words, “disaster”. According to PECH Chim, instructions came from the sector level and above.<sup>3005</sup> He also described the wives of former Khmer Republic officials arriving in Tram Kak district after the liberation, who told them that the military had taken their husbands during the journey.<sup>3006</sup> PECH Chim stated that he was “aware that there were executions” of former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials.<sup>3007</sup> EK Hoeun confirmed such executions, but additionally he described repeated instructions from District Secretary Yeay Khom to smash all capitalists, feudalists and reactionaries and kill them wherever they were, until not one remained. Yeay Khom repeated this in numerous meetings with militiamen who would repeat those statements back to her, and this instruction applied to former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials, including commune chiefs, village chiefs, teachers and those who had “political tendencies”.<sup>3008</sup>

964. PECH Chim also described a policy to refashion former LON Nol people in order for them to conform to the new society and rid them of their prior negative elements.<sup>3009</sup> NUT Nov described announcements that former soldiers, teachers and/or other professions would be able to return to their former jobs, but they were instead sent for re-education and disappeared. He described biographies being collected and those who were considered to oppose the revolution were sent for re-education.<sup>3010</sup> EK Hoeun, who was based at the District Office at the time, described a process whereby former Khmer Republic officers or civil servants were identified, sent to the District Office, then quickly sent to “the jungle”. He described a slogan being used at the time that feudalists, capitalists and reactionaries had to be destroyed to extinction, and people followed that direction.<sup>3011</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that instructions were issued to execute Khmer Republic soldiers and officials arriving in Tram Kak district and this explains the events described above at Champa Pagoda.

965. RIEL Son’s brother-in-law YA San was a former policeman in the Khmer Republic, who arrived in Tram Kak district among the large numbers of evacuees. RIEL Son testified that as soon as his brother-in-law arrived, the village chief took him away to be killed. RIEL Son described a conversation he had with PREAB Kit, who was the commune secretary at the time, when he asked for help for his brother. The response was that he “died according to the plan”.<sup>3012</sup> This evidence satisfies the Chamber that there was a plan to kill former members of the LON Nol regime in Tram Kak district. SAO Han similarly recounted the arrest of his elder brother, LUON Han, a few days after the fall of Phnom Penh. He described the village chief coming to investigate his brother, following which militiamen came to take his brother away. SAO Han’s family was present at the time of his brother’s arrest, which is how he learned of it. His brother was taken away in a horse cart and he never saw him again.<sup>3013</sup> These examples satisfy the Chamber that the instructions described in the previous paragraphs were implemented in the immediate aftermath of the evacuations in locations in addition to Champa Pagoda.

966. The evidence further reveals a change in approach some time after late May 1975. District Secretary Yeay Khom attended the meeting in Phnom Penh from approximately 20 May 1975. Upon her return to Tram Kak district, she organised a morning session to pass on various instructions related to, among other things, the abolition of money, markets and the disrobing of monks.<sup>3014</sup> PECH Chim could not remember whether Yeay Khom relayed any particular instructions on former Khmer Republic soldiers at this point in time.<sup>3015</sup> He did recall, however, a circular disseminated by Yeay Khom at one time which targeted former LON Nol officers between the ranks of second lieutenant and colonel, a plan which he understood to emanate from the sector level and Ta Mok.<sup>3016</sup> PECH Chim’s testified that the plan was to review the number of people and report on them, but not to make any arrests or take further action.<sup>3017</sup> PECH Chim also described a different meeting in Takeo town, when Ta Mok announced that former LON Nol soldiers from the rank of second lieutenant up to colonel were not to be harmed. He was unclear as to the date and precise location, but remembered approximately 50-60 persons in attendance including various sector, district and military representatives.<sup>3018</sup> PECH Chim described it as “logical” to spare those persons with lower ranks.<sup>3019</sup> Not all communes attended this meeting.<sup>3020</sup> Despite PECH Chim’s recollection that KHOEM Boeun attended this meeting, she could not recall it or indeed any announcement by Ta Mok that particular ranks were not to be harmed.<sup>3021</sup> Although there were discrepancies in his account, the Chamber accepts the core point in PECH Chim’s evidence that some instructions were indeed issued not to harm former Khmer Republic soldiers including those above the rank of second lieutenant up to colonel.

967. SAO Van described a meeting at Phnom Trel in Angkor Chey district (District 106) some time after the evacuation of Phnom Penh.<sup>3022</sup> His evidence was unclear on the exact timing. He placed it at different points in time, from one month up to three months after the liberation.<sup>3023</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that this took place after the meeting which Yeay Khom had attended in Phnom Penh in late May 1975. The purpose of the meeting SAO Van attended was to instruct and advise attending cadres to deal with the situation of the people. SAO Van recalled that issue of former LON Nol soldiers was mentioned.<sup>3024</sup> Sector Secretary Ta Saom issued an instruction that former Khmer Republic soldiers and policemen with the rank of second lieutenant up to colonel should not to be harmed.<sup>3025</sup> Nothing was said about former civil servants.<sup>3026</sup> Ta Saom also issued instructions to find solutions for the population which was lacking food supply and medicine.<sup>3027</sup> According to SAO Van, this meeting was attended by representatives from throughout Sector 13, including soldiers. Hundreds of people were in attendance, including commune chiefs, units chiefs, and soldiers.<sup>3028</sup> The session lasted the full morning and part of the afternoon, after which the attendees had to return to their own locations on foot and disseminate these instructions more widely.<sup>3029</sup> The Chamber therefore finds that, following an initial period of arrests and executions in the aftermath of 17 April 1975, instructions were disseminated not to harm former Khmer Republic soldiers including those above the rank of second lieutenant up to colonel. The position in relation to later periods is addressed below.<sup>3030</sup>

He further explained that no instructions were issued in relation to those above the rank of colonel. See T. 1 February 2016 (SAO Van), E1/385.1, p. 93.

968. The meeting in Phnom Penh from 20 May 1975 set out the Party's agricultural plan for the country.<sup>3031</sup> An orchestrated effort followed to collectivise property, organise and expand production cooperatives throughout Tram Kak district then expand them over time.<sup>3032</sup> The Chamber has already discussed the expansion of cooperatives over time. The evidence also reveals the nature of collectivisation entailed by cooperatives. The August 1975 issue of Revolutionary Flag recorded the CPK's decision to "take each village, to make it into a unit, and organise a cooperative".<sup>3033</sup> A

<sup>3031</sup> This is confirmed by later documents. See e.g., Policy Document No. 3, E3/781, 19 September 1975, ERN (En) 00523571 (section entitled "The mass movement in implementing the agricultural line of the Party during the past 4-5 months, May 75").

<sup>3033</sup> Revolutionary Flag, E3/5, August 1975, ERN (En) 00401507. The article goes on to set out the various advantages of village-level cooperatives over previous structures of 10-20-30 families working together. It continued (at ERN (En) 00401510) that "village cooperatives should be organized everywhere".

CPK Policy Document dated 19 September 1975 further evidences the plan to “eliminate villages” and “organise collectives instead” so that communes would not require any separate support from the State.<sup>3034</sup> It explained that, although part of the production of the cooperatives would be “kept at the base”, production would be “sent up so [the] upper echelon will have capital to exchange for machinery and other items”.<sup>3035</sup> Communes were to grow their own rice and raise their own livestock to satisfy their own needs and support their respective cooperatives.<sup>3036</sup> At the Standing Committee meeting of 30 May 1976, with NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan both in attendance, POL Pot observed that 30 to 50 per cent of rice production had to be given to the State.<sup>3037</sup> The essential economic model entailed “exchange and barter” between the cooperatives, the district, sector and zone.<sup>3038</sup> The prices of goods were to be set by the State, but it is unclear whether a coherent price scale was ever implemented.<sup>3039</sup> A further CPK Policy Document dated 22 September 1975 recorded that the very economy was based on cooperatives, but stated that people joined them of their own wish and were not forced: “Those who do not want to do so, they can wait, observe and do it later”.<sup>3040</sup> The Chamber recalls here the evidence that approximately 85 percent of the population lived in cooperatives.<sup>3041</sup>

969. The CPK planned to develop the country rapidly through an agricultural phase then, after 10 to 15 years, turn Cambodia into an industrialised economy. The initial phase involved ambitious plans to increase the area of land which could be cultivated, and increase the number of areas which could sustain two or more harvests per year – for instance by generating a harvest in the dry season.<sup>3042</sup> In addition to building cooperatives, this plan envisaged transforming the topography of the countryside by combining the existing small rice paddy fields together in order to create a checkerboard of dykes, larger rice paddies, with a system of dams and canals to store and control water, then irrigate the land when needed. The CPK’s Policy Document of 19 September 1975, for example, described the “major goal” of the year to make dykes and canals, with dykes to be “high, straight and level, done in a pattern like a chessboard”. This indicated a deadline of three years to complete the dykes in the lowlands of the country.<sup>3043</sup> One function of the dykes was to husband water in rice fields.<sup>3044</sup> Canals were to be built to hold water in and let it out whenever needed, and to “reach lakes and rivers which have sources of water which never dry up”.<sup>3045</sup>

970. The October 1975 issue of Revolutionary Youth described the dismantling of small paddy fields to integrate them by putting up big new paddy dykes in straight lines, cutting out a checkerboard to hold rainwater.<sup>3046</sup> A revolutionary poem printed in the November 1975 Revolutionary Youth described building “big, strong and high” dykes “like the chess squares” to keep water.<sup>3047</sup> A speech by KHIEU Samphan broadcast on the radio in January 1976 described the new tall and straight structures forming a great

971. The CPK Central Committee's Decision of 30 March 1976 provided that the Party would mark 20 May 1976 as the third anniversary of the peasant cooperatives.<sup>3050</sup> The April 1976 issue of Revolutionary Flag reported that the cooperatives had achieved 30 percent of the CPK's objective of building new paddy dykes and feeder canals in the flatlands, with the countryside to be entirely transformed within three years.<sup>3051</sup> A radio broadcast also followed on 20 May 1976, celebrating this third anniversary of the cooperatives. It pronounced that "[w]ithout the cooperatives we would have no collective force of peasants, and without these forces we would have been simply unable to build such great networks of new embankments and irrigation canals".<sup>3052</sup> Such yearly anniversary broadcasts for the cooperatives were also made on 20 May 1977<sup>3053</sup> and 20 May 1978.<sup>3054</sup> The May 1976 issue of Revolutionary Youth likewise referred to the youth in cooperatives and worksites having put up new paddy dykes and feeder canals in order to ensure the achievement of the objective of putting up new paddy dykes and new feeders canals on 30 percent of Cambodia's flat plains rural land.<sup>3055</sup>

972. According to the Four Year Economic Plan for 1977-1980, the population of the Southwest Zone was 1.5 million people – spread over approximately 466,200 hectares. The target for the Southwest Zone in 1977 was to have 300,000 hectares of “Ordinary Fields” producing one harvest of three tonnes per hectare, with a further 40,000 hectares of “1st Quality Fields” producing six tonnes.<sup>3056</sup> For subsequent years, the area to be harvested twice was projected to increase to 53,000 hectares in 1978, to 70,000 hectares in 1979, then to 90,000 hectares in 1980.<sup>3057</sup> Therefore, the projected harvest totals from the Southwest Zone were to be 1,140,000 tonnes in 1977, 1,210,000 tonnes in 1978, 1,320,000 tonnes in 1979 and 1,440,000 tonnes in 1980.<sup>3058</sup>

973. The Economic Plan included a capital expenditure table which factored in expenditure for the following items: people’s livelihoods (specified at 13 thang (312kg) of paddy per person per year); seed; and “reserves and welfare”.<sup>3059</sup> The Southwest Zone’s “expenditures” of rice were projected to be: 670,000 tonnes in 1977; 720,000 tonnes in 1978; 770,000 tonnes in 1979; and 820,000 tonnes in 1980 – i.e. increases of 50,000 tonnes each year.<sup>3060</sup> The Southwest Zone’s expenditure on rice for consumption was projected to remain constant at 470,000 tonnes per year, whereas seed, social work and “remaining paddy” was generally projected to increase year-on-year.<sup>3061</sup> The figures for remaining rice paddy were then divided by approximately 1.8 to calculate the remaining [milled] rice, then a further calculation was performed taking a nominal exchange rate of US$200 per tonne, of which 80 per cent went towards “reconstruction of the Zone” with the remaining 20 per cent as a “Gift to the State”.<sup>3062</sup> The Economic Plan also specified how the Southwest Zone was to spend the amount allotted to it.<sup>3063</sup>

10.1.7.1.2. Implementation in Tram Kak

975. Witnesses, Civil Parties and documents provide extensive evidence of the implementation of the above plans in Tram Kak district. Some of the evidence was provided in generalised terms, but the Chamber also heard extensive evidence about specific locations and worksites aimed at implementing the plan in the cooperatives. PECH Chim described large numbers of people working on the constructions of dykes, dams or cultivating rice fields.<sup>3065</sup> Larger scale irrigation projects required coordination across various communes and even neighbouring districts. These larger scale projects were overseen by both the district and Sector 13, following directions and guidance from the Southwest Zone particularly on the appropriate locations for dams.<sup>3066</sup> PECH Chim explained, however, that the plans were rudimentary and based on traditional ways to measure land or judge the appropriate irrigation system: there were no engineers, and only one soldier knew a bit about engineering and could assist and modify the plans. Injured soldiers who could read the terrain from maps sometimes helped to judge elevation and draining methods.<sup>3067</sup> PECH Chim testified that the main period of canal building took place after he left Tram Kak district, under the supervision of Ta San.<sup>3068</sup> However, he also mentioned some canal building taking place earlier on.<sup>3069</sup> KHOEM Boeun confirmed that the three tonnes per hectare target applied in Tram Kak district and she received instructions from the district level to her commune (i.e. Cheang Tong commune).<sup>3070</sup>

<sup>3070</sup> T. 5 May 2015 (KHOEM Boeun), E1/297.1, p. 63 (confirming that she received the instruction from the district).

976. EK Hoeun described all of Tram Kak district's inhabitants digging dykes and canals, day and night.<sup>3071</sup> He recalled instructions to build chequered plots of rice fields, with the period from 1975 to 1976 particularly busy in this regard, followed by a period surveying the land to build canals.<sup>3072</sup> One person from each of the 15 communes was included in a land survey group, joined by BUN Yen and EK Hoeun from the District Office plus "a teacher" to make 18 people in total. In this capacity, EK Hoeun attended surveys for dams and canals throughout Tram Kak district.<sup>3073</sup> PECH Chim explained that the district gathered adults to work in the fields or build dykes and to transplant rice twice per year.<sup>3074</sup> NEANG Ouch alias Ta San arrived in Tram Kak district in mid-1977, initially to assist the District Committee overseeing digging canals and building dams.<sup>3075</sup> SAO Han worked to put up "checkerboard-straight" paddy dykes, with feeder canals.<sup>3076</sup> OEM Saroeurn described having to carry earth and dig canals in a group of 12 women.<sup>3077</sup>

977. Notwithstanding that the evidence before the Chamber does not provide a comprehensive account, the evidence identifies numerous specific projects in various locations in Tram Kak district. The March-April 1978 issue of Revolutionary Youth described youths in mobile units working on three major canal projects in Tram Kak district: (1) exiting the Tuol Kruos dam and running to the Ou Saray dam at 5.4km long, 14 metres wide at the top and 6 metres deep; (2) exiting Mlech Popel and running to Trapeang Khnar village at 12km long, 10 metres wide at the top and between two to four metres deep; (3) exiting Champa and going west to the Neam River at 13km long. The article continued that 4,000 hectares of land was being worked to produce dry season rice.<sup>3078</sup> To similar effect, on 2 April 1978, a radio broadcast included an update on various dry season irrigation projects in Tram Kak district. It described the digging of a 13km canal from the Tuol Kruos dam to Khporp Trabaek; and an irrigation canal

978. In common with, or in addition to, the above-described projects, the Chamber heard evidence of: a dam at Khporp Trabaek commune in the west of the district, with a canal known as “Canal 02” which was 20 metres wide running from Khporp Trabaek to National Road 3, a distance of some 20km;<sup>3080</sup> another canal known as “Canal 01” running all the way to District 108 (Kaoh Andaet);<sup>3081</sup> a project to block the Slakou river around Tumnob Lauk and build a canal from there to Trapeang Andaeuk in Khporp Trabaek commune, a distance of 10km;<sup>3082</sup> a dam and canal from Mlech to the Slakou river, crossing Leay Bour commune – a distance of 30km which took over one year to complete;<sup>3083</sup> a major a dam and canals project at Tuol Kruos in Ou Saray commune, with people from all over the district sent to work there;<sup>3084</sup> a water pumping station at Ou Chambak in the east of the district to channel water from a lake north of Takeo town and feed water through a canal worksite into Leay Bour commune;<sup>3085</sup> and

979. The CPK's policy to expand cooperatives, build dykes, canals and dams, and focus on the most fertile land in order to achieve a rice production target of three tonnes of rice paddy per hectare applied to Tram Kak district.<sup>3088</sup> A report dated 20 April 1977 from Kbal Pau describes the dry season rice paddy having been received from various communes to the rice mill – a total of 1231 “sacks”.<sup>3089</sup> This documentary evidence confirms that Tram Kak district produced a dry season rice harvest in 1977. Although Tram Kak district increased the frequency of rice transplanting from once to twice per year in some locations, PECH Chim testified that the overall target of three tonnes per hectare could not be achieved. He thought 2.5 tonnes per hectare might have been more realistic.<sup>3090</sup> SAO Han, a farmer, similarly did not think the target of three tonnes per hectare was realistic.<sup>3091</sup> NUT Nov described meetings discussing the target, and competitions to achieve it.<sup>3092</sup> When he was in Sre Ronoung commune, however, they produced between 2.5 to three tonnes per hectare.<sup>3093</sup> KHOEM Boeun remembered the target and described receiving instructions from the district to achieve it, for example by using more fertiliser.<sup>3094</sup> According to NEANG Ouch, irrigation area 68 east of Angk Ta Saom could achieve three tonnes per hectare.<sup>3095</sup> A report from the Southwest Zone to “beloved Angkar” dated 3 June 1977 confirmed, among other things, that in Tram Kak seedlings were ready to be transplanted into an irrigated paddy-field of 2,500

10.1.7.2. Categorisation of people: Full-Rights, Candidates and Depositees

10.1.7.2.1. High-level policy documents

980. The evidence reveals varying references to Base or Old People on the one hand, and New or 17 April People on the other hand. In discussions of the peasant class, the evidence frequently distinguishes different types of peasants, in particular old or new peasants; and a further tripartite classification of cooperative members as either Full-Rights, Candidates or Depositees. This section sets out the Chamber’s findings in relation to these categorisations and their intended meaning.

981. When the Standing Committee visited the Northwest Zone in August 1975, the resulting report recorded the CPK’s national policy in relation to cooperatives. In describing Angkar’s “guiding opinion” it noted that, since liberation, the function of cooperatives was “to absorb all the New People coming out of all the cities and towns, especially Phnom Penh city”. It described how New People “must be submissive to the cooperatives politically and economically. This is our orientation.”<sup>3098</sup> The Chamber finds that this reflected the Standing Committee’s policy that New People had to give in, or bow to, the cooperatives. This report contrasts the Northwest with Zone “405”, i.e. the Southwest Zone, which it described as having “little hope (little land, little water, no-good paddy”.<sup>3099</sup> In describing “Miscellaneous problems”, the report concludes that in production units “[w]e must split up new forces and not allow them to concentrate”.<sup>3100</sup> The August 1975 issue of Revolutionary Youth discusses the “feudalists and capitalists” who had gone down to the countryside and issues a warning to resist their views of private ownership and capitalist ideology.<sup>3101</sup>

982. A September 1975 Policy Document describes the division of the labour force throughout the country: “The labor force is to be divided into orderly teams working with plans, with team leaders, leading to atmosphere of happiness and solidarity [...]. Organizing forces like this also makes the new group from Phnom Penh able to work with the others.” It explains the need to “divide the people according to production requirements”.<sup>3102</sup> Another September 1975 Policy document records the CPK’s general view that some people had no material means any longer: “They depend on us for everything”.<sup>3103</sup> The only reasonable inference is that this referred to evacuees and reflected their subordination to the cooperatives.

983. The October 1975 issue of Revolutionary Youth includes a section on dealing with the New People. It describes how the cooperatives were managing “education and building of the more than two million people who have just been liberated from the rule of the contemptible traitors”.<sup>3104</sup> It continues that enemy agents and bad elements were “chaotically mixed” among the ranks of New People, so cooperatives had the duty to strengthen state authorities in villages and communes and maintain security.<sup>3105</sup> It describes the members of cooperatives as ideological mentors to the evacuees, in charge of administering their education and re-fashioning them.<sup>3106</sup> It further continues that living conditions, work and study were all to be communal, including through regularly held criticism meetings, political and cultural study meetings.<sup>3107</sup> The November 1975 issue of Revolutionary Flag describes the CPK’s resolution for “relentless enhancement and expansion of cooperatives” which meant not only increasing the number or size of cooperatives, but building their “stance, policy, ideology and organization”.<sup>3108</sup>

984. A Party Document produced to celebrate the 3rd Anniversary of the Peasant Cooperatives in 1976 records that it was:

[N]ecessary for the Party to control and lead the cooperatives in all fields, with Party members, youth leagues and core persons in the cooperatives. Thus the Party must have members who are cadres within its ranks and core organisation, in both quantity and calibre in order to assume leadership roles in production in every cooperative, otherwise middle-class, upper-middle-class and upper-class peasants and other classes will seize leadership role in the cooperatives and change revolutionary elements to serve the interests of their own classes. They can even turn political and economic forces of the cooperatives against the socialist revolution and socialist construction of our Party.<sup>3109</sup>

985. The August 1976 Revolutionary Flag refers to the expansion of cooperatives, and noted they were “organized by units, that is, units 1, 2, 3, 4 of the cooperatives”.<sup>3110</sup> It describes how the reorganisation into village cooperatives meant that “the poor peasants and the lower-middle level peasants who were members of the cooperative, consolidated their position as the true masters of the village, the masters of the communes”.<sup>3111</sup>

986. The Chamber finds the following sections of the September-October 1976 issue of Revolutionary Flag to be particularly significant in the context of the CPK’s categorisations of people:

Among the old peasants there are poor peasants, lower-middle peasants, mid-level peasants, upper-middle peasants, and wealthy peasants. Among the new peasants are the petty bourgeoisie, the capitalists, the feudalists, and other workers and labourer. Therefore there are contradictions within the old peasants from upper-middle peasants on up, in particular with the wealthy peasants, that are life-and-death contradictions. There are also contradictions within the new peasants, contradictions with capitalists and feudalists that are life-and-death contradictions. When individuals reform, they are not life-and-death contradictions, but they do not easily reform [...] Some elements may reform, but many elements do not reform. When they die, they instruct their children to struggle on against the communists.<sup>3112</sup>

As for the elements that are the capitalists, the feudalists, and the land-owners that have come to be the new peasants, we must educate them and build them into worker-peasants. We have the potential to reform a number of them. Some of them will not reform; they look for successive opportunities to oppose the revolution.<sup>3113</sup>

[...]

In selecting cadres for the cooperatives and factories, we do not select from the capitalist elements or the elements of any other class. This also goes to the proletarian dictatorship. If we were to select them, they would have the right to organize materials, and even more dangerously they would have the right to induct others of their kind to leader the cooperatives and factories.<sup>3114</sup>

987. The November 1976 issue of Revolutionary Youth records the CPK's aim that society should comprise a single peasant class, including new peasants who had left the cities following the liberation of the country.<sup>3115</sup> It explains that:

[O]ur present Kampuchean society has only two classes: the union worker class and the cooperative peasant class. However, among those peasants are the old peasants who worked the farm fields from the beginning and the new peasants who only departed the various cities after the liberation of the entire country to go increase production in the countryside in the rice fields and on the farms. But, both the new and old peasants are inside the single peasant class.<sup>3116</sup>

988. The December 1976-January 1977 issue of Revolutionary Flag records that the collective forces were "divided into regular forces, one, two, front and rear, at a high level".<sup>3117</sup> The December 1976 issue of Revolutionary Youth described similar sentiments:

[T]his new Kampuchea society, in the organizational forms, has two classes only, the worker class and the peasant class. As for the other classes such as the feudalist, capitalist, secondary capitalist, especially the feudalist capitalist, they have been basically overthrown politically and economically, and have gone to live and work in the countryside producing rice altogether with our cooperative peasants. So, in forms, the feudalist, the capitalist, and the secondary capitalist have been all eliminated; only the individuals remain, but they do not have any political influence anymore. They have no economic force, and must live and work to produce rice in the countryside subordinated to our cooperative peasants entirely. So, in organizational forms, these types of persons have already become the peasants although they are the new peasants.<sup>3118</sup>

989. The first reference to the tripartite distinction between Full-Rights People, Candidates and Depositees is found in the April 1977 issue of Revolutionary Flag, which describes it as “imperative to clearly distinguish” the different elements in cooperatives “to not allow any further confusion”.<sup>3119</sup> It continues that the selection of cooperative committees had to follow the CPK’s class line.<sup>3120</sup>

990. The August 1977 issue of Revolutionary Flag further records the CPK’s decision to use the poor and lower-middle peasants to control the cooperatives and cooperative committees.<sup>3121</sup> It states in unequivocal terms: “Prepare the poor peasants and the lower-middle peasants to control the cooperatives, to attack and smash the state power of other classes who stole control from of [sic] our cooperatives and give it back to the poor peasants and the lower-middle peasants down below”.<sup>3122</sup> It continues: “Therefore, the poor and lower-middle peasants, speaking in general, are still clean. Speaking individually, some are not very clean; but generally speaking, they are still clean, politically clean. Politically clean, not indebted to or entangled with the enemy.”<sup>3123</sup> It stresses the need:

[T]o use the poor peasants and the lower-middle peasants to control the cooperatives, to control the cooperative committees, to control the water spearheads, to control the fertilizer spearheads, to control the cattle spearheads, to control the ovens, the salt, the fermented fish paste, and the paddy-rice storehouse spearheads, to control the cooperative hospitals, to control the children in the cooperatives studying in the cooperatives, to control every spearhead.<sup>3124</sup>

991. The September 1977 special issue of Revolutionary Flag records that each cooperative was a small collectivist society “freed from corrupt and depraved culture and traditions”.<sup>3125</sup> The October-November issue of Revolutionary Flag specifies that middle peasants and the rest of the petty bourgeoisie should only be used for “secondary battlefields and under the leadership of the proletariat, or, concretely, under the leadership of cadres emerging from the basic classes”.<sup>3126</sup>

992. The March 1978 Revolutionary Flag included an earlier speech by POL Pot to the 1977 Annual West Zone Conference. He gave the following example:

In a cooperative, the selection of members of the cooperative to the cooperative committee or members responsible for some spearhead, is also a fight. Sometimes the District Committee is in agreement. Sometimes there is agreement within the Cooperative Committee to take this comrade, and sometimes it goes according to the class line and the organizational line of the Party. But, sometimes the committee is not in agreement. The Cooperative Committee is not in agreement. One comrade says take this comrade. Another comrade says take that comrade. This is a struggle to defend the class line and the organizational line of the Party. Suppose that we get a no-good person in the Cooperative Committee: we lose to the enemy in organizational terms because we have let an improper element join. Therefore, this is why it is imperative to fight from the minor battlefields on up to see who gets control of the rice storehouse, who gets control of the kitchen, who gets control of the hospital, sewing, the cooperative, and so on. We raise this issue so that it can be seen in every aspect, very field, in order to fight and defeat the enemy. The West Zone has sorted out this issue comparatively well by fighting absolutely, by absolutely selecting the fundamental class for responsibility. It is imperative to continue to strengthen and expand this to make it better.<sup>3127</sup>

993. The March 1978 issue of Revolutionary Flag also describes how, once every six months, there might be a two-day school session for Full-Rights or Candidate Members of the cooperatives, then it continued:

[E]ven the depositee members come to try to study with the others to try to draw experience. Or the Full-Rights members might study separately first in order to be in unit, and then the Candidate members might join in and the depositee members might draw some experience back-and-forth with one another to improve [...]. We educate and build the full-rights members into progressives, and then build them into cores.<sup>3128</sup>

<sup>3125</sup> Revolutionary Flag, E3/11, September 1977, p. 45, ERN (En) 00486256 (continuing that it was a healthy new society, where equality and harmony prevail and living conditions are consolidated and developed).

994. A further section in this March 1978 issue of Revolutionary Flag is headed “On Socialist Revolution” and explained that it was imperative to select the “fundamental class as the cores to act as the leadership” in cooperatives.<sup>3129</sup> It instructed cooperatives to rely on “poor peasants and the lower-middle peasants” because “No force is better than these forces”. The “second force” was the “middle peasants” who are “an ally of the poor peasants and the lower-middle peasants”. The “third force” was the petty bourgeoisie, the capitalists, the small land owners who could be gathered up “to the side of the revolution”. That left as a fourth force the “reactionaries” who were subdivided into three categories: (1) those who could be attracted to the revolution; (2) those who were neutral; (3) the “vicious” who cannot “be built”.<sup>3130</sup> The Chamber returns to these four “forces” later in this Judgement when discussing rations.

995. The July 1978 issue of Revolutionary Flag announced that, whereas previously there were three types of cooperative members: Full-Rights People, Candidates or Depositees; from then onward everybody was a cooperative member like everyone else. It maintained, however, strict criteria for the membership of cooperative committees.<sup>3131</sup> The Chamber finds that this demonstrates the CPK’s distinction between Full-Rights People, Candidates or Depositees persisted until July 1978 at least.

10.1.7.2.2. Implementation in Tram Kak

996. The evidence establishes that the CPK’s categorisation of persons living in the cooperatives applied in Tram Kak district, with further divisions of the people into different production units, and any position of authority – such as group leaders or unit leaders – reserved for Full-Rights Persons. The Chamber is further satisfied that the distinction was ingrained and provided a primary basis upon which to report and assess a person’s conduct and attitude.

997. Following the registration and screening of arrivals in Tram Kak district after 17 April 1975, commune authorities maintained lists of the New People.<sup>3132</sup> There was

<sup>3132</sup> T. 12 March 2015 (Nut Nov), E1/276.1, pp. 42, 52-53 (there was a register kept by the commune clerk in Nhaeng Nhang commune). At one point, NUT Nov appeared to say that this list had been drawn up by the District Committee, but he may have meant that it was drawn up on the District Committee’s also a register of the population maintained at the District level. EK Hoeun explained that a succession of people performed this role of district clerk, including BUN Yen who maintained a list of people who came to the area from elsewhere, or whether forces were sent to other areas.<sup>3133</sup> Similarly, district messenger and Ta Mok's relative, SANN Lorn, told OCIJ investigators that lists of people were produced by the district level every one or two months.<sup>3134</sup> These lists identified whether people were New People or Base People.<sup>3135</sup> NUT Nov who was a member of the Nhaeng Nhang Commune Committee until mid-1976, recalled the commune office keeping lists or a census of villagers in the commune.<sup>3136</sup> PHNEOU Yav likewise understood that the categorisation of persons was organised and maintained by the commune level.<sup>3137</sup>

998. Witnesses and Civil Parties from Tram Kak district readily recalled the distinction between Full-Rights, Candidate and Depositee Persons, and explained what these categories meant in reality. SAO Han testified that Full-Rights Persons were Base People with "good biographies"; candidate status was for Base People who had relatives with enemy inclinations; and Depositees were 17 April People who had been evacuated.<sup>3138</sup> NUT Nov described how, between 1975 and 1977, people were divided and lived separately until, in 1978, the division was abolished and there was an announcement that people were to be treated equally.<sup>3139</sup> He testified that cooperatives were structured on the basis of the classification of people as either: Full-Rights, Candidates or Depositees – and within those categories people were then placed into different work units.<sup>3140</sup> NUT Nov told OCIJ investigators that cooperatives were created as single units with people organised as either: Full-Rights, Candidates or

999. Several witnesses and Civil Parties confirmed that separate cooperatives existed for Base People and New People. NUT Nov testified that the 17 April group lived in a different group from Base People.<sup>3143</sup> MEAS Sokha testified that Old and New People were evacuated to different bases and divided into separate groups.<sup>3144</sup> CHOU Koemlan, a New Person evacuated to Leay Bour commune, described how New People were gathered to live in Chrea Chumrov village,<sup>3145</sup> whereas there was a model cooperative for Base People known as K-1.<sup>3146</sup> The Base People were in charge of the many New People in her village.<sup>3147</sup> OEM Saroeurn described the existence of different cooperatives in Leay Bour commune to similar effect.<sup>3148</sup> She described how 17 April People were gathered up and sent to Chrea Chumrov village.<sup>3149</sup> The K-3 cooperative for New People was located to the north, whereas K-1 model cooperative was located to the south.<sup>3150</sup> She described being sent to a mobile unit in 1977 comprising only 17 April People, and that New People and Base People worked separately.<sup>3151</sup>

and 17 April People kept in different cooperatives at separate locations, eating separately and not mixing with one another.<sup>3153</sup> At another point in her evidence, however, she suggested that some New People were put into her (Candidate) group.<sup>3154</sup> Full-Rights People would not, however, mix with Candidate People.<sup>3155</sup> CHANG Srey Mom distinguished a female unit of Candidate People from the female unit of Full-Rights People.<sup>3156</sup> She described a further separation between vigorous and weak workers.<sup>3157</sup>

1001. PHNEOU Yav graduated from a Candidate Person to become a Full-Rights Person in Samraong commune and described people divided into different cooperatives in early 1976: unit 1 for Base People in Angk Ponnareay village; Unit 2 was for Candidate People in Paen Meas village; unit 3 for New People in Ta Saom village.<sup>3158</sup> He explained that Units 1, 2 or 3 were also referred to as Full-Rights, Candidates and Depositees.<sup>3159</sup> It followed that Unit 1 was “more progressive” than Unit 3 and it could work faster and achieve higher productivity quotas.<sup>3160</sup> He thought that this division into three categories took place in early 1976.<sup>3161</sup> There were nuances in some parts of the district. For instance, OUM Suphany, a New Person evacuated to Trapeang Thum South commune, described how initially 17 April and Base People were kept separate, but in mid-1976 they started eating together.<sup>3162</sup> SAO Han explained that, following the evacuations and arrivals in Tram Kak district, there was a period of time before the units were formed and people assigned when some people could request to go to their home villages. But once the structure of units was settled upon, people could not leave their unit.<sup>3163</sup> In some cases, Base People were accused of being feudalists or wealthy and mixed with New People.<sup>3164</sup> KEO Chandara testified that Ta Mok explained to him that, because he was an intellectual, a “petit bourgeois” he had to temper himself, to get rid of his social status and become a poor peasant farmer.<sup>3165</sup> KEO Chandara described Base People being told to “cut off” any relationship with siblings or family relatives among those people.<sup>3166</sup>

1002. NUT Nov confirmed that generally people of the same category were kept together in work units: sometimes a village had five or six units, sometimes it had fewer units. The unit chief and group leaders of 17 April units and groups had to be Base People.<sup>3167</sup> The evidence confirms that any position of authority in Tram Kak district – such as chiefs of units, or chief of a group within a unit – could only be held by Full-Rights Persons.<sup>3168</sup> RY Pov confirmed that people were assigned to different units, including children units, production units, farmer and widower units, youth units, based on their categorisation. He testified that each unit was called a “50 member unit” and 17 April People and persons from Vietnam were assigned to the same unit, headed by Base People who controlled everything including moving, working, eating and sleeping.<sup>3169</sup>

1003. PHNEOU Yav explained that cooperatives were sub-divided into further units, including special units, ploughing units (males), canal digging units, seedling transplanting units (females), cart units (transporting stone/rocks to make bridges at canals), carpenter units, children units and units of young children aged between eight and 12 years old.<sup>3170</sup> Women of the same age were placed into one unit to transplant rice, with men of the same age being placed into a mobile unit to carry earth, with children in another unit, and elder women in a unit to look after children, and older men placed in a unit for growing vegetables.<sup>3171</sup> Widows' units comprised those whose husbands had died or whose fates were unknown. According to RIEL Son, both New and Base women worked together in a widows' unit.<sup>3172</sup> THANN Thim described an ox cart transportation unit in Trapeang Thum North commune.<sup>3173</sup> KHOEM Boeun described a women's unit, in which she educated women on rice production and morality.<sup>3174</sup> IM Vannak was evacuated from Takeo to Leay Bour commune and joined a children's mobile unit where she was assigned to carry earth for canal building.<sup>3175</sup> She explained there was a different unit for Base children.<sup>3176</sup> KEO Chandara referred to both 17 and 18 April People, and explained that the latter was an idiom used to refer to Base People who had been transferred into the area after 17 April 1975.<sup>3177</sup> The Chamber does not consider this evidence to have any significant bearing on the categorisation of people in Tram Kak district which clearly existed.

1004. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the cooperatives in Tram Kak district generally distinguished between people as Full-Rights, Candidates or Depositees, with some cooperatives reserved for particular categories of persons. The Chamber is further satisfied that any position of power or oversight was reserved for Full-Rights members, i.e. Base People considered to have clean biographies.

1005. The express purpose of this division of people into different units in Tram Kak district was to exert control over the general population.<sup>3178</sup> SAO Han, a Candidate

Person, described the “principle” that Full-Rights People worked as unit or group chiefs.<sup>3179</sup> OEM Saroeurn described how group chiefs recorded names and categorisations of the members of each group, and gave this information to the village chief.<sup>3180</sup> CHOU Koemlan, who was in the K-3 Unit for New People in Leay Bour commune, described how the unit chief (Oeun) led workers to the field and the village chief (Chim) would remain at the village to manage those left in the village during the day. But when everybody was needed in the fields, both the village chief and unit chief were together. She referred to there being three village chiefs per village.<sup>3181</sup> PHNEOU Yav identified the chief of Unit 3 in his commune as Nga/Nhor, who was assigned from a Base Person unit to control Unit 3 because he was so strict.<sup>3182</sup> EM Phoeung explained that after he was defrocked from the monkhood he was considered to be a “17 April” Person and that in the village people were divided between Base People and New People, and Base Persons supervised the 17 April groups.<sup>3183</sup>

1006. In addition to the units and groups operating in the vicinity of individual cooperatives, PECH Chim described a major district mobile unit consisting of some 8,000 persons who could be deployed to labour at worksites at different locations in the district. This was divided into two units: one for men and another for women. Each commune in Tram Kak district was obliged to provide workers for the district mobile unit and the district secretary liaised with the chief of the mobile unit to resolve logistical issues such as providing rice, clothes and medicine to those working at any particular worksite.<sup>3184</sup> Mobile youth units worked on projects or worksites as required and would generally stay there, unable to return to their home cooperative.<sup>3185</sup> NEANG Ouch alias Ta San explained that each commune provided a male youth mobile unit and a female youth unit, which he later oversaw at the district level.<sup>3186</sup> According to him, these mobile units were not divided into Base and New People.<sup>3187</sup> This was consistent with NUT Nov's evidence who, when discussing a dry season farming worksite near Angk Roka, recalled that people at such worksites were not distinguished by category.<sup>3188</sup> There was a youth mobile unit chiefs and a female unit chief, with whom NEANG Ouch consulted when implementing the work plan.<sup>3189</sup> The evidence did not establish the basis on which persons were selected from different communes to join a mobile unit.

1007. Concerning the CPK's apparent change to the categorisations in mid-1978, as described in the July 1978 issue of Revolutionary Flag, NEANG Ouch alias Ta San recalled an announcement by the district that all people were to be treated equally.<sup>3190</sup> KHOEM Boeun's evidence, however, accepted that the district instructed the communes that New People were the enemy and not as valuable as Base People, who were instructed to watch over them.<sup>3191</sup> While KAING Guek Eav alias Duch has claimed that this supposed change in policy was a mere pretence,<sup>3192</sup> NUT Nov, a commune chief at the time, testified that there was indeed an official announcement in 1978 that 17 April People and Base People were to be treated equally from then onwards.<sup>3193</sup> PHNEOU Yav who lived in Samraong commune, Tram Kak district,<sup>3194</sup> testified that in 1978, only the units of Full-Rights and Candidate members merged, but not the Depositees.<sup>3195</sup> The Chamber is not satisfied that the policy proclaimed in mid-1978 was ever fully implemented in Tram Kak district. ### 10.1.7.3. Rations and communal eating

10.1.7.3.1. High-level policy documents

1008. The Party Centre set a basic target ration of two cans of rice per person per day.<sup>3197</sup> The documentary evidence refers to the yearly ration being 13 thang of paddy (as opposed to milled rice) per person.<sup>3198</sup> The evidence also reveals, however, that different quantities of rice were to be provided to different categories of people. The First Nationwide Economic Congress mentioned four levels of rations per person and per year determined for the cooperatives: 15 thangs (132kg), 12 thangs (105kg), 10 thangs (88kg), 8 thangs (70kg).<sup>3199</sup> Speaking to the Council of Ministers on 31 May 1976, POL Pot stated: “In general, the ration was enough: two cans [per person] for front [line people] and one and a-half can for the back [line] people”.<sup>3200</sup> The Economic Plan for 1977-1980, produced in mid-1976, identified a nationwide ration system with four categories of forces numbered from one to four, who were to receive three cans, 2.5 cans, two cans or 1.5 cans of rice respectively.<sup>3201</sup>

1009. The results of the Second Nationwide Economics Conference published in the November 1976 issue of Revolutionary Flag again specified “four regimes: Number one forces, three cans; number two forces two and a half cans; number three forces, two

10.1.7.3.2. Implementation in Tram Kak

1010. Communes and cooperatives had the primary responsibility to feed their own residents and supply their units.<sup>3206</sup> NUT Nov supervised food distribution in Nhaeng Nhang commune at one time, and described how the commune chief set rations for villages and units.<sup>3207</sup> The district level gave the communes an overall allocation but it was up to the commune to distribute food to the various units therein.<sup>3208</sup> For example, each morning two representatives from PHNEOU Yav’s cooperative went to the commune office at Angk Ponnareay to collect the rice allocation for the cooperative.<sup>3209</sup> The District Committee monitored rice production in the communes and took rice from those communes with a surplus to supply those in deficit.<sup>3210</sup> The upper levels came to the communes to collect rice based on what they reported.<sup>3211</sup> One result of this model was that communes misreported rice yields to the district level – to try to retain more rice for themselves. For example, KHOEM Boeun, the Commune Chief of Cheang Tong commune, described hiding rice in a pagoda.<sup>3212</sup> When chief of Sre Ronoung commune in 1978, NUT Nov only reported a portion of the commune's rice yield.<sup>3213</sup>

1011. There were times of acute food shortage in Tram Kak district, particularly in the period before harvests. PECH Chim testified that, before 17 April 1975, the daily ration was one can of rice between three persons, but after liberation the ration dropped by half, to one can of rice between six persons.<sup>3214</sup> NUT Nov, a member of the Nhaeng Nhang Commune Committee in 1975 and 1976, recalled that food was insufficient at that time and they were reliant on aid collected from the District Office.<sup>3215</sup> SAO Van confirmed that the food ration was insufficient after 17 April 1975 when evacuees arrived.<sup>3216</sup> EK Hoeun explained that even though Chinese aid arrived in Tram Kak district between 1975-1976, there was still not enough food for everyone.<sup>3217</sup> CHOU Koemlan gave birth in 1975 after arriving in Tram Kak district, but her baby died because of insufficient food.<sup>3218</sup> EM Phoeung recalled from 1975 through 1976 food was scarce but later, they were sometimes provided with cooked rice instead of gruel.<sup>3219</sup> According to LONG Vonn, between 1975 and 1977 people only had rice for the first few months of the year, then had to switch to gruel.<sup>3220</sup>

1012. EK Hoeun confirmed that the district level received reports at the commerce office that communes were short of food. He recalled reports that in Leay Bour commune some 500 people died of hunger. Trapeang Thum commune was short of food supplies and had to ask for supplies from Nhaeng Nhang commune. But no matter

The Chamber places no weight on the opinion that a lack of food caused measles or was the primary factor of her baby's death. Nonetheless, whether or not CHOU Koemlan had enough for her baby is a question of fact, and the Chamber accepts her evidence that sufficient food was not available.

how hard they tried, Nhaeng Nhang commune could not supply.<sup>3221</sup> The account of 500 people dying from hunger in Leay Bour commune is insufficiently precise to make a finding to that effect. The Chamber is however satisfied that the evidence as a whole establishes periods of acute food shortages in various locations in Tram Kak district and that people died as a result.

1013. PECH Chim confirmed that food remained generally insufficient until the 1976-1977 harvest. For three to six months before the harvest, people had to eat less and work hard as they did not have adequate food supply for the population.<sup>3222</sup> After the 1976-1977 harvest, however, the food situation was “reasonable enough” and there could be a special feast once per month.<sup>3223</sup> NEANG Ouch alias Ta San, who arrived in Tram Kak district in 1977, also testified that the food situation was sufficient at that time.<sup>3224</sup> The evidence reveals, however, that further periods of acute food shortages followed. For example, a report to the district level from Khporp Trabaek commune dated 8 May 1977 that a “contemptible” youth named HANG Oeun had complained: “What is the use of doing socialist revolution when there is no food”.<sup>3225</sup> On 3 June 1977, the Southwest Zone similarly reported that some districts and communes had encountered shortages, but suggested that this could be addressed.<sup>3226</sup> RIEL Son worked at the District Hospital from late 1976, and testified that the death toll increased dramatically towards the latter part of the regime because people did not have anything to eat.<sup>3227</sup> The documentary evidence records food shortages in various communes across Tram Kak district, including after the 1976-1977 harvest.<sup>3228</sup> NEANG Ouch attributed such a

1015. Some witnesses – often those with some degree of authority – described more substantial rations. KHOEM Boeun, who was chief of Cheang Tong commune and later a member of the District Committee, maintained that the food shortages in Cheang Tong commune were not so serious and nobody died from hunger.<sup>3241</sup> LONG Vonn, who was deputy chief of the Commerce Office throughout 1977, described a ration of one can of rice per person per meal.<sup>3242</sup> On the other hand, he observed that people did not have enough to eat.<sup>3243</sup> He clarified that people in the mobile units did not have as much, sometimes because of transportation difficulties.<sup>3244</sup> NUT Nov testified that, when he was the Chief of Sre Ronoung commune in 1978, the ration was one can of rice per meal.<sup>3245</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that these examples were rare in Tram Kak district. For instance, PHNEOU Yav testified that the rations for Full-Rights People in Cooperative 1 in Tram Kak commune were gruel, sometimes a small amount of cooked rice.<sup>3246</sup> Some people who were dissatisfied secretly discussed it with people they trusted.<sup>3247</sup> CHANG Srey Mom testified that, although food was distributed equally, people died from malnutrition because the daily ration was insufficient.<sup>3248</sup> IM Vannak described having thick rice gruel in 1976, but over the years the gruel became very thin.<sup>3249</sup>

1016. Although some evidence suggests that the district level sought to impose broadly equal rations to different categories of person, the Chamber heard convincing accounts to the effect that, in practice, Deposittee Persons received much less food.

PECH Chim at first said that everybody was in the same position when it came to food shortages.<sup>3250</sup> He acknowledged, however, that in practice he saw Base People receiving more rice than New People, and attributed this to “loopholes in the management” of the different cooperatives.<sup>3251</sup> He added that while he “observed that there was [a] distinction in the distribution of rice”, such discrimination did not lead to any blame or punishment; people were instead “gently informed that we [all Cambodian people] were just one blood in one nation”.<sup>3252</sup> NEANG Ouch accepted that chiefs did not coordinate well and some kitchen halls did not have enough food for people to eat.<sup>3253</sup> CHANG Srey Mom testified that everybody ate in the same place and there was no distinction when it came to rations.<sup>3254</sup> KEO Chandara testified that all people should have received the same amount of food, but in practice New People were less trusted and not in positions of authority – so they received less food.<sup>3255</sup> Civil Party TAK Sann described seeing different amounts given to Base People and New People in a dining hall.<sup>3256</sup> EK Hoeun, who worked at the Tram Kak District Office, attributed problems to cooks stealing rice, for example only cooking five cans of rice for 20 people instead of the allotted 10 milk cans.<sup>3257</sup> According to Civil Party CHOU Koemlan, rations were different because Base People had a reserve meal or food at their homes, whereas New People could only have meals as provided.<sup>3258</sup> Differences in access to food is further corroborated by RIEL Son who was the deputy head of the Tram Kak District Hospital and who told DC-Cam that 17 April People in particular died from malnutrition, whereas Base People were seldom malnourished.<sup>3259</sup> The Chamber recalls its finding that the CPK’s policy set different rations for different categories of persons.<sup>3260</sup> The Chamber therefore rejects the notion that the discriminatory distribution of food resulted from mere loopholes in the management of cooperatives. Moreover, the quantity of food generally available in Tram Kak district was far below two cans or even 1.5 cans per person per day – the level which the CPK’s leaders expressly recognised as necessary to sustain the population.<sup>3261</sup>

10.1.7.4. Working conditions

1017. The evidence before the Chamber reveals varying conditions depending on the location, the tasks, the time of year, the state of the land, the attitudes of supervisors and the category of person. The Chamber is satisfied, however, the conditions altered depending on the category of person.

1018. SAO Han testified that Full-Rights People enjoyed better conditions than the Candidates or 17 April People.<sup>3262</sup> BUN Saroeun described struggling to flatten termite mounds made of hard earth under the hot sun and with blisters on his hands.<sup>3263</sup> TAK Sann worked on the dam at Kouk Kruos, and nobody dared to rest even though the work was hard.<sup>3264</sup> They were threatened that if they did not finish their work they would not receive food rations.<sup>3265</sup> She was forced to taste excrement to check that it was not too salty before using it as fertiliser for rice seedlings.<sup>3266</sup> EAM Yen worked at the Tuol Kruos dam as a young child, and described targets for her unit of 10 youngsters of having to move 10 cubic metres of earth, failing which they were deprived of food.<sup>3267</sup>

1019. According to NEANG Ouch alias Ta San, mobile youth units worked from 6 a.m. or 7 a.m. to 11 a.m. in the morning, then 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. in the afternoon, with medics on hand at worksites for people who fell ill.<sup>3268</sup> The Tram Kak District Records undermine NEANG Ouch alias Ta San’s evidence. For instance, one report records complaints having been made by an “enemy” in September 1977 about the 3 a.m. starts for transplanting rice in Trapeang Thom South commune.<sup>3269</sup> Witnesses who worked in mobile units gave markedly different accounts to NEANG Ouch. recalled that in rainy season, his unit frequently had to work until 10 p.m. pulling rice seedlings for transplanting.<sup>3270</sup> SAO Han described starting work at 4 a.m., with work in the evening during transplanting season.<sup>3271</sup> CHANG Srey Mom described starting work at 4 a.m. during the harvest season, otherwise starting at 6 a.m. with a final shift from 6 p.m. to 10 p.m.<sup>3272</sup> Before his family was arrested, MEAS Sokha worked in a children's unit in Sre Kruo cooperative, Cheang Tong commune.<sup>3273</sup> He described working hours of 6 a.m. to 11 a.m., then 1 p.m. to 5 p.m., with some people doing an evening shift from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m.<sup>3274</sup> He clarified that only adults or the youth units would be assigned to work at night.<sup>3275</sup> PHNEOU Yav described shifts from 6 a.m. to 11 a.m., then 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. with occasional night work, although he continued that elder children could start working at 4 a.m. and younger children were assigned night labour.<sup>3276</sup>

1020. The Chamber is satisfied that the conditions in mobile youth units assigned to worksites were especially harsh. Civil Party RY Pov was assigned to a youth mobile unit working in Kbal Pou (a worksite to produce dry season rice). He was forced to work hard, day and night, digging canals, dams and spinning water wheels. He was deprived of food and not given sufficient clothing.<sup>3277</sup> He was separated from his family, who were assigned to different unit.<sup>3278</sup> In Nhaeng Nhang commune, for example, many New People were not used to working in the rice fields and for this reason they became sick more often than Base People.<sup>3279</sup> RIEL Son participated in building dams and digging canals before he was assigned to the District Hospital, and explained that although the plan was to have clean water, at the canal worksites, people relieved themselves where they could and when there were rains the water supply became dirty. Dysentery resulted and there was no effective treatment available.<sup>3280</sup> EK

Hoeun confirmed that workers became sick or had problems feeding or died on the worksites in Tram Kak district.<sup>3281</sup> SIM Chheang likewise described to OCIJ investigators that the lack of food in his cooperative in Pen Meas was such that he saw at least one person die from starvation and “[m]any people died as a result of bad health”. This was known to those at the district and sector levels “because they controlled those levels and they inspected the areas”.<sup>3282</sup> Numerous Civil Party Applications also record detailed and specific accounts of persons dying from a combination of exhaustion, a lack of food and inadequate medical care.<sup>3283</sup> Although such Civil Party Applications are, on their own, entitled to little probative value, the Chamber finds that the number and specificity of the information contained in these particular Civil Party Applications provides substantial corroboration to the <sup>3283</sup> In particular, a significant number of Civil Party Applications describe starvation and deaths in Ta Phem and Leay Bour communes. See BUN Saroeun Civil Party Application, E3/5877, undated, pp. 2-3, ERN (En) 01067017-01067018 (describing people starving in Ta Phem commune, especially the elderly and children unable to work, so they were transported to the Champa Pagoda hospital and most were never seen again; further describing people who died from sickness and starvation in Chan Chab cooperative); MOUL Chan Bory Civil Party Application, E3/6405, undated, ERN (En) 01147984 (describing the situation in Ta Phem commune where his father MOUL Kheal fell sick because he did not have enough food; he was sent to hospital but received no medication and died. aforementioned evidence that numerous deaths resulted in Tram Kak district. The overall evidence put before the Chamber therefore establishes that this was the general and well-known situation in Tram Kak district.

10.1.7.5. Control of the population

1021. A Policy Document from September 1975 recorded that “People become a member of the cooperative at their own wish. We do not force them. If they do want to enter the cooperative, they are welcome. Those who do not want to do so, they can wait, observe and do it later.”<sup>3284</sup> NEANG Ouch testified that youths working at the worksites in Tram Kak district did so of their own free will and none refused to work.<sup>3285</sup> KHIEU Samphan observed that “without the consent of the population, these arrangements could not claim to be called ‘cooperatives’”.<sup>3286</sup>

1022. The Chamber is not persuaded that any such evidence reflects the reality of how life developed in the cooperatives over time. In particular, the Chamber notes that in an interview KHIEU Samphan subsequently provided a very different and more realistic analysis, stating that:

[T]here had to be coercion for a while, coercion to join cooperatives, because nobody would voluntarily take part in cooperatives. Even poor peasants would not accept these high-level cooperatives, because there was no private harvest for themselves: they would still be getting issued rice from others. Therefore, there had to be coercion first. It was this coercion that would impact some innocent peasants. However, this had to be: it was unavoidable. But the important point was that there were no cadres to explain why the cooperatives were organized and why all privately owned land was held collectively like that! There were no cadres to give comprehensive and correct explanations so that the people could clearly understand our goals. There was not enough time to explain even to the cadres inside our Party. We did it at once, even faster than China. This led to fractures within the Party.<sup>3287</sup>

1023. According to NEANG Ouch alias Ta San, he never heard of anybody refuse to work.<sup>3288</sup> The Chamber finds that this evidence does not reflect the reality. The evidence establishes that food was withheld as punishment for transgressions or failing to meet quotas. BUN Saroeun described being given half-rations if quotas were not achieved, and gave an example in Ta Phem commune when they spilled rice so were given one ration between two people.<sup>3289</sup> IM Vannak described being deprived of gruel if production targets for a group of 10 children, to which he belonged, were not met.<sup>3290</sup> TAK Sann described being threatened with not receiving rations if they did not finish work, but they still received food albeit not enough.<sup>3291</sup> YEM Khonny described increased workloads as a form of refashioning or re-education.<sup>3292</sup> RY Pov described how 17 April People were exposed to miserable treatment and treated like “worthless slaves” and Base People could curse and hit them.<sup>3293</sup> Similarly, IM Vannak described how base children were entitled to beat 17 April children.<sup>3294</sup> The Chamber has also found that lower rations were to be given to persons considered to be reactionary.<sup>3295</sup> The Chamber is therefore satisfied that food was used as a means to control the population. The Chamber has already found that the structure of the cooperatives, the sub-units and groups within each cooperative, and the mobile units operating further afield, were intentionally created in order to exert control the population.

10.1.7.5.1. Abolition of private belongings

1024. The DK Constitution promulgated in January 1976 suggested that, whereas “important general means of production” were collective property, “[p]roperty for everyday use remains in private hands”.<sup>3296</sup> In reality, all property was collectivised in Tram Kak district.<sup>3297</sup> The only personal belonging was a plate and spoon, but even these were kept communally.<sup>3298</sup> LONG Vonn worked in one of the district offices at Angk Roka and described recording materials such as black clothes brought to Tram Kak district to be distributed to the cooperatives.<sup>3299</sup> PECH Chim confirmed that clothes were provided to the population by the Party.<sup>3300</sup> MEAS Sokha, a child at the time, only had one set of clothes that he wore all year round.<sup>3301</sup> VORNG Sarun worked for some time in a mobile unit in Trapeang Thum commune, and only had one set of worn clothes.<sup>3302</sup> PHNEOU Yav told OCIJ investigators that people in Unit 1 had two sets of black clothes per year.<sup>3303</sup> When EM Phoeung was disrobed from the monkhood, he was issued with black clothes, and a pair of shoes.<sup>3304</sup> YEM Khonny's clothes were confiscated and she received a black uniform in return.<sup>3305</sup>

1025. After 17 April 1975, everything that people had privately owned was gathered and put for communal use, thereby ending private ownership.<sup>3306</sup> SAO Han described collectivisation taking place after the fall of Phnom Penh, but people did not dare say anything for fear that they would be killed.<sup>3307</sup> The documentary evidence confirms that the slightest threat to this collective system was considered traitorous. For instance, the Chamber has traced documentary evidence which revealed that four women from Sre Ronoung commune were accused of having broken spoons in the cooperative to “make it become private again”.<sup>3308</sup>

Youth discussed “experiences in managing youth” and called it “imperative” to have regular criticism/self-criticism meetings and revolutionary outlook assessments “as designated”.<sup>3310</sup> The February-March 1976 Revolutionary Flag described how, since liberation, Party members and revolutionary cadres educated the popular masses, convened short study sessions, mass meetings, cooperative or production team conferences, to equip people with views on the new revolutionary situation. It emphasised the importance of seizing the noon rest times at worksites, or “idle time” at night after lifestyle meetings “to organize joint newspaper and magazine reading with short discussions immediately afterwards or to organize brief discussions on some issue that has been seen that the people do not yet understand”. It recommended holding morning or half-day meetings of the masses to “whip” them up, or hold two-day cooperative conferences or regular short study sessions.<sup>3311</sup>

1027. The April 1976 Revolutionary Flag described criticism and self-criticism as the “most important means of eradicating all the non-revolutionary elements within us”.<sup>3312</sup> It explained that there had to be a “criticism/self-criticism regime” in frequent and regular lifestyle meetings on work with the objective of “eradicating the disease and saving the patient”.<sup>3313</sup> It set out a prescriptive method of criticism and self-criticism, whereby people would criticise and be criticised in a collective setting in order to change.<sup>3314</sup> The June 1976 Revolutionary Flag stressed the need for the Party to “grasp the cooperatives” to counter the enemy, which involved grasping them organisationally, collectively, and grasping biographies so that the “forces of the masses in the cooperatives” could be used to “counter the enemy”.<sup>3315</sup> It continued that zone troops (i.e. military) “must go down to the cooperatives to disseminate the Party line”.<sup>3316</sup>

1028. The May 1976 issue of Revolutionary Youth described criticism/self-criticism as the “most important weapon to conduct revolutionary battles” – to be used instead of weapons like “guns, grenades, knives, scythes, or clubs to attack”.<sup>3317</sup> The July 1976 issue of Revolutionary Flag, when discussing the CPK's Statute, described it as "imperative to rely upon the masses in the cooperatives" to "grasp the biographies" in order to "know clearly which person is good and which person is not good".<sup>3318</sup> The November 1976 issue of Revolutionary Flag emphasised the need for the masses to "understand the issues and understand the lines" so that "if anything is different from the lines, the masses will struggle against it".<sup>3319</sup> The March 1978 issue of Revolutionary Flag explained that educational methodology involved meetings, listening to the radio, studying short documents read aloud, using documents supplied by the zone or sectors.<sup>3320</sup>

1029. The evidence establishes that these approaches were implemented in Tram Kak district. CHANG Srey Mom described three main meetings per month, taking place every 10 days, with further meetings in smaller units when they also criticised each other. One per month there was a big meeting of the "whole unit" comprising 11 villages chaired by the commune chief. This meeting took place at the Samnap pagoda in Trapeang Snao village.<sup>3321</sup> SAO Han described meetings when the unit chief reiterated that people who broke spoons or ploughs were enemies of the cooperative.<sup>3322</sup> SAO Han distinguished major meetings chaired by the unit chief, from smaller meetings chaired by group chiefs. He explained that group chiefs received the work plan from the unit chief. He seldom attended meetings at the commune level.<sup>3323</sup> KHIEV Neou similarly described being called to self-criticism sessions every two weeks, presided over by the village chief or the commune chief.<sup>3324</sup> YEM Khonny explained that re-education could mean being criticised or punished with extra workloads, but everybody wanted to avoid this because they were already skinny and collapsed from exhaustion.<sup>3325</sup> EAM Yen described self-criticism sessions when she, as 1030. The Tram Kak District Records record various instances whereby the collectives judged the conduct of persons and imposed penalties, such as selecting people to live in separate groups with names such as “the thief group” or the “lazy and mischievous group”.<sup>3328</sup> A further example noted by the Chamber pertained to KONG Vaet from Angk Ta Saom commune who, as recorded in documentary evidence dated 18 July 1978, was successively educated by the group, the unit, in collective meetings and finally by “hot measures” before he was sent to Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>3329</sup> A report from Leay Bour commune dated 7 April 1977 records that, following many attempts to educate PHUON Li “collectively and personally”, he had not listened so he had been transferred to live in a “free group”, which entailed being sent to the dry-season rice field.<sup>3330</sup> A final example noted by the Chamber pertained to POK Bunly and AOM Chanta, also from Angk Ta Saom commune, who had been re-educated at the commune office but were then sent up to Meng’s place.<sup>3331</sup>

1031. SAO Han, a Candidate Person, explained that when people arrived in his area biographies were taken from them and a search for former soldiers and teachers followed.<sup>3332</sup> He identified Ta Ek and Achar Neang as going around the evacuees and those discovered to have been soldiers or teachers then disappeared.<sup>3333</sup> CHOU Koemlan arrived in Tram Kak district approximately 22 days after the fall of Phnom Penh. were twice asked to make biographies. The first time was on arrival in Pou Ta Sab. The second was after they were asked to live in huts.<sup>3335</sup> The village chief, deputy chief and another female noted down the information provided in order to produce a biography.<sup>3336</sup>

1032. Once people were dispersed to the communes, a sustained policy to take biographies was therefore implemented.<sup>3337</sup> NUT Nov described how thousands of individual New People who arrived in Nhaeng Nhang commune, but no biographies were screened at first.<sup>3338</sup> There were then meetings between commune chiefs and village chiefs about taking biographies.<sup>3339</sup> Villages sent completed biographies to the commune which could then be forwarded on to the “upper level”.<sup>3340</sup> KHOEM Boeun explained how, shortly after the evacuations, her commune commenced taking biographies from people who used to be teachers, policemen or civil servants following an order from the upper echelon. After the biographies were provided, the upper echelon then gave KHOEM Boeun names of people to arrest. She testified that those arrested were mostly former soldiers and policemen.<sup>3341</sup> EK Hoeun confirmed 17 April People had to give biographies on a regular basis in the cooperatives or communes in order to identify any political tendencies.<sup>3342</sup> LON Nol soldiers and officials were registered on communal lists “with a view to redistributing them to communes and villages”. They were then separated at the base. Commune chiefs screened and checked evacuees’ backgrounds to identify military ranks.<sup>3343</sup> According to CHANG Srey Mom, her unit chairman compiled biographies based on his own observations.<sup>3344</sup> Base People had to do biographies too, but they worked separately.<sup>3345</sup> Experiences could vary depending on the precise location. #### 10.1.7.5.3. Dislocation of families

1033. The September-October 1976 issue of Revolutionary Flag discussed the “bad characteristics and dangers of private ownership” by giving the example that “anyone who thinks a lot about family interest always deceives the revolution, renounces the revolution, and lives separately seeking family happiness, not seeking happiness inside the Party” which would lead people “not to work hard”.<sup>3347</sup> The division of people into different work groups dislocated families. Units building dams or canals were unable to return home from their worksite.<sup>3348</sup> RIEL Son testified that a unit chief in his commune, before he worked at the District Hospital, instructed inhabitants that if they went to visit their family members without permission they would be in trouble.<sup>3349</sup>

1034. Families were separated into male, female and children’s units to do work such as ploughing rice fields or transportation.<sup>3350</sup> Children were assigned labour and often responsible for tending to cows and collecting cow dung.<sup>3351</sup> MEAS Sokha testified that the children’s unit was for children aged 10-15 years. He had to tend the cows and could not refuse this work.<sup>3352</sup> There were two militiamen with the six children tending cows.<sup>3353</sup> In the children’s unit in Sre Kruo village, Cheang Tong commune, he was allowed to visit home every 10 days for about 20 minutes, but he sometimes ran off to try to find his parents.<sup>3354</sup> He explained that the 10-day visit was theoretical and did not happen in practice. Travelling back and forth between the worksite and home was impossible if they were still engaged in work on the tenth day.<sup>3355</sup>

1035. TAK Sann was a mother of two children who were taken away from her and who were only allowed to visit her on the tenth and twentieth day of the month.<sup>3356</sup> EAM Yen described how she was allowed to visit her parents on the tenth and twentieth of the month, but this reduced over time to once per month and she missed her parents terribly.<sup>3357</sup> She was around seven years old at the time and worked at the Tuol Kruos dam site in a unit of 50 youngsters divided into groups of 10.<sup>3358</sup> On one occasion she ran away to find her parents, but was caught, beaten and the unit chief “Rom” buried her up to the neck for two or three hours without food or water as punishment.<sup>3359</sup> When she was arrested a second time for stealing a cassava, she was sent to the Ta Suy dam to work there.<sup>3360</sup> BENG Boeun described an incident while he was ploughing and one of his children was in another unit carrying fertiliser. He saw his child being beaten for carrying the fertiliser too far, but he was unable to intervene.<sup>3361</sup> IM Vannak was a New Person evacuated from Takeo town and placed into a children’s mobile unit at Leay Bour pagoda in around 1976, by the chief of Angk Neareay village Ta Veth.<sup>3362</sup> She was only allowed to see her parents once per month, and was beaten by her unit chief (herself only 15 years old) for escaping to try to see them.<sup>3363</sup>

There were approximately 100 children of Base People placed in a unit located at Angk Ponnareay.<sup>3364</sup> He described how parents never visited their children, but children were allowed to visit their parents on the tenth and twentieth day of the month.<sup>3365</sup> YEM Khonny was at first separated then reunited with her mother Veth, who then wanted them to return to their native village. people. She never saw them again.<sup>3366</sup> BUN Saroeun described being in a children's unit at Trapeang Chaeng cooperative, but in the evenings he was allowed to go home to see his mother.<sup>3367</sup> OEM Saroeun described how she was separated from her one year-old son because she was sent to a different unit while her son was put in the care of older women. Her son IM Rithy died of measles at this time.<sup>3368</sup>

1037. CHOU Koemlan was a New Person who arrived in Leay Bour commune. She described how her children were three, 10, 12 and 14 years of age, and the elder three were assigned to a children's unit east of Ta Mok's house.<sup>3369</sup> The youngest one died because of starvation, losing her hair beforehand and refusing to accept food.<sup>3370</sup> One of her elder sons called Vanara disappeared and she believes he was killed.<sup>3371</sup> THANN Thim was allowed to see his children (when in Trapeang Thum North commune) on the tenth, twentieth or thirtieth day of the month, in the evening after they had finished work that day. Sometimes he went to see his two children but usually he did not manage to see them because they were either asleep or scavenging for food.<sup>3372</sup> He described how he was arrested because his daughter was beaten and forced to confess that he was a former first lieutenant.<sup>3373</sup> RY Pov told the Chamber that persons in the youth mobile unit were allowed to see their parents on one occasion for three days during a CPK anniversary.<sup>3374</sup> CHANG Srey Mom's husband was at Leay Bour while she was in Nhaeng Nhang, and they only met every 10 days.<sup>3375</sup> education.<sup>3377</sup> More detailed evidence from persons directly involved with teaching, revealed the limited nature of the schooling activities which came second to children's work commitments. CHANG Srey Mom was assigned to work in the mobile unit to help look after children, prepare food and teach them under the trees. She was removed as an assistant teacher in 1977 because her family had questionable links and her father was executed – teachers had to have good class backgrounds so she was no longer eligible.<sup>3378</sup> She described following printed books for teaching. There were also courses in arts, to sing and to dance and to perform labour work.<sup>3379</sup> She clarified, however, that her teaching was not based on actual hard copy documents or books. Rather she taught some letters and alphabets. There were no real textbooks, at least when she was teaching between 1975-1976.<sup>3380</sup> PHNEOU Yav confirmed that children were assigned labour, responsible for tending to and bringing back one cow and collecting cow dung.<sup>3381</sup> The children lived in a long building.<sup>3382</sup> If children got sick, he would send them to their parents or to a nearby hospital in Angk Ponnareay.<sup>3383</sup> Female children were looked after in a different unit, by another person to the east of where PHNEOU Yav was based.<sup>3384</sup> The commune level instructed PHNEOU Yav to teach the children for three hours per day: from 11 a.m. to 12 p.m., then lunch, then he continued until they were allowed to go to tend the cows.<sup>3385</sup>

1039. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that previously established family structures were dislocated pursuant to the reorganisation of people into work units, and that persons were punished for trying to see their family members outside of limited authorised times. Children were forcibly separated from their parents and made to perform labour. Parents lost contact with their children and still do not know what happened to them. Parents disappeared for reasons never explained to their children.

10.1.7.6. *Medical care*10.1.7.6.1. District hospital

1040. The Chamber has discussed elsewhere in this Judgement the CPK's policy towards health and medical care.<sup>3386</sup> For most of the relevant period, the Tram Kak District Hospital was based at the Trapeang Kul Mean Leakh Pagoda in Trapeang Svay village, Trapeang Thum North commune.<sup>3387</sup> Before moving there, it was located at Champa Pagoda in 1975 and some of 1976.<sup>3388</sup> Witness RIEL Son became the deputy chief of the District Hospital in 1976. He was not a Party member, but he was considered to be a "progressive person" and therefore of a suitable class background to hold such a position.<sup>3389</sup> He worked under "Met", Neary Neang who was the niece of brothers PECH Chim and PREAB Kit, and "Ya".<sup>3390</sup> The hospital chiefs had no medical knowledge and Met, the overall chief, did not even know how to read.<sup>3391</sup> They were considered to be qualified for their positions because they were members of the CPK.<sup>3392</sup> The overall hospital chief took charge of political training and discipline.<sup>3393</sup> This approach to the staffing of the hospital is consistent with the categorisation of the population discussed above, whereby any position of authority was reserved for Base People with suitable class backgrounds.<sup>3394</sup>

1041. RIEL Son did not have substantial medical training.<sup>3395</sup> The extent of his knowledge was that he knew how to administer injections and had sold medicines from his house in the previous regime.<sup>3396</sup> Once assigned, he received a first instalment of some 20 days' training delivered on and off over a period of three months.<sup>3397</sup> A second instalment of 15 days' training at the Sector Hospital in Trapeang Roneab followed, delivered on and off over a period of six months.<sup>3398</sup> In turn, RIEL Son convened sessions for staff at the District Hospital.<sup>3399</sup> There were staff meetings every week to discuss the code of conduct, rules and discipline in the hospital. Staff were instructed to be humble and gentle to patients when giving injections.<sup>3400</sup>

1042. More than 90 staff worked in the District Hospital. This figure included staff cooking, transporting and other non-medical tasks.<sup>3401</sup> There were two male medics in addition to RIEL Son and five female medics.<sup>3402</sup> In addition, eight or nine female staff worked with “modern medicines” and others used “traditional medicines”.<sup>3403</sup> There were five or six midwives.<sup>3404</sup> There were few medicines, and notably RIEL Son classified serum, calcium B11 or B12 vitamins as medicines.<sup>3405</sup> There were no “17 April” People working at the District Hospital, which again confirms the general approach to, and consequences of, the categorisation of the population in Tram Kak district<sup>3406</sup>

1043. The hospital was divided into five departments: general medicine; obstetrics; production of medicine (including modern and traditional); training and kitchens. RIEL Son supervised them all together with the overall chief.<sup>3407</sup> When recruiting staff, the district favoured peasant women who were not too educated – it was feared that others might betray the Party.<sup>3408</sup> Mostly the female staff were aged between 13 to 20 and did not know how to read.<sup>3409</sup> They were all from Takeo province except one.<sup>3410</sup> RIEL Son tried to train the illiterate staff by studying the alphabet with them. Many staff did not know how to administer injections.<sup>3411</sup>

1044. RIEL Son described three main buildings at the hospital at Trapeang Kul Mean Leakh Pagoda. One was a concrete (former) school building whereas the others were made from wood with roof tiles.<sup>3412</sup> There was a building for childbirth.<sup>3413</sup> RIEL Son described patients attending to ask for medicine then leaving, whereas other patients were hospitalised. His evidence was unclear as to the overall numbers of patients.<sup>3414</sup> Additionally, 10 to 20 children came per day seeking treatment for headaches or diarrhoea because they had been carrying cow dung.<sup>3415</sup>

1045. To be admitted to the Tram Kak District Hospital, a patient had to be sent by their respective communes with a letter.<sup>3416</sup> Most admissions were caused by diarrhoea, “swollen bodies” and malaria.<sup>3417</sup> In RIEL Son’s assessment, the majority of admissions were female because they were weaker, did not have enough food and were overworked.<sup>3418</sup> Both Base and New People were admitted to the District Hospital.<sup>3419</sup> They were admitted from communes all over the district.<sup>3420</sup> RIEL Son explained that both Base People and New People died in the hospital, but there was no discrimination as to whether patients should be moved for further treatment at the Sector Hospital or treated with medicine.<sup>3421</sup> He told DC-Cam that 17 April People in particular died from malnutrition, whereas Base People were seldom malnourished.<sup>3422</sup>

1046. The District Office supplied food and other meals to the hospital.<sup>3423</sup> Before the end of each month, RIEL Son attended meetings with the District Chief at the District Office to deliver oral reports on the District Hospital.<sup>3424</sup> It was his function to report on patients, whereas the hospital chief reported on party activities.<sup>3425</sup> The hospital did not have sufficient medicine.<sup>3426</sup> RIEL Son recounted an incident when he reported to the district level that patients were suffering from swelling, diarrhoea and a lack of nutrition, but Ta Chay then District Chief, accused him of attacking the cooperatives.<sup>3427</sup> Ta Chay accused RIEL Son of being bourgeois and an intellectual.<sup>3428</sup> After this, RIEL Son did not dare raise issues with the District Chief because he was very afraid.<sup>3429</sup>

1047. The ration in the hospital was 50 cans of rice for 250 patients, with four cans per kilogram – significantly less than ordinary rations which the Chamber considers to be explained by the fact that patients were not working and therefore unproductive.<sup>3430</sup> The hospital initially had 25 to 50 cans of rice for more than 200 people, but in the later period they did not have rice so RIEL Son tried to collect rice from other sources, or asked relatives to take back patients.<sup>3431</sup> According to RIEL Son, the main cause of dysentery was the lack of food with overwork. There was an area for burying bodies located 1km from the hospital.<sup>3432</sup> The death toll at the hospital increased dramatically towards the end of the regime due to malnutrition and dysentery. RIEL Son described people arriving in large numbers. About one month from the end of the DK regime, approximately 10 to 20 patients were dying every day.<sup>3433</sup> RIEL Son estimated to DC-

Cam that some 2,000 patients were registered at the District Hospital during his tenure, and that just over 400 died.<sup>3434</sup> The Chamber finds as coherent, consistent and credible RIEL Son's first-hand description of the hospital facilities, including the food supply, as having been inadequate, and that people died from malnutrition and overwork.

1048. RIEL Son testified that he was ordered by the District Committee to identify enemies among the patients of Tram Kak District Hospital. He described this as a "general instruction".<sup>3435</sup> This is consistent with a typed report from Kraing Ta Chan, which records that hospital staff had reported a patient for saying that markets and money would be allowed by the regime soon.<sup>3436</sup>

10.1.7.6.2. Zone and sector hospitals

1049. The military hospital (Hospital 22) headed by Kang was at Pou Doh village in Trapeang Thum North commune.<sup>3437</sup> Ordinary people were not allowed to go near the military hospital.<sup>3438</sup> The Chamber has made findings in relation to the purge of staff at Hospital 22 in its findings on Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>3439</sup> RIEL Son also described a general hospital at Angk Ta Saom at the Daeum Chambak school.<sup>3440</sup> He described sector health facilities including at Angk Roneab Pagoda, where he had received some training.<sup>3441</sup> RIEL Son testified that the sector's treatment methods were better and more effective than the District Hospital.<sup>3442</sup> In particular, Sei the sector hospital chief, was the only person who had been a doctor before 17 April 1975.<sup>3443</sup> The sector hospital had more medicines than the district hospital, so RIEL Son referred patients to there.<sup>3444</sup>

10.1.7.6.3. Medical facilities in communes

1050. RIEL Son supervised 12 commune medical facilities which had approximately five to seven medics each. commune chiefs also had oversight of the facility in their respective communes.<sup>3445</sup> The Chamber heard limited evidence about commune medical care. At training attended by RIEL Son, there were medics present from communes also being trained by Sei from the Sector Hospital.<sup>3446</sup> The evidence reveals, however, that medical care in the communes was scarce. OEM Saroeurn identified the Leay Bour Hospital as “Hospital 17”. When she fell sick with malaria in 1976 she was given an injection made from coconut juice injected into her leg. She has not walked properly since.<sup>3447</sup> CHOU Koemlan described delivering her baby in Leay Bour commune: there was a rural midwife in the village, but no proper hospital or medicine.<sup>3448</sup> VONG Sarun testified that her baby daughter became seriously ill when she was just over one year old. She had just started to walk. She requested for her daughter to be sent to a hospital but the village chief denied the request.<sup>3449</sup> CHANG Srey Mom described people being afraid if they fell sick because they were accused of having mental problems.<sup>3450</sup> RY Pov explained that in his youth mobile unit there was no medical treatment and nobody was sent to a clinic: if people fell ill or died from starvation, it was viewed as the “will of history”.<sup>3451</sup> He explained that persons who fell sick were accused of being an “infiltrator or enemy”, describing in particular the site at Kbal Pou (a worksite to produce rice during the dry season) as being without medical facilities.<sup>3452</sup> He also gave a specific example of two members of his unit who died at Ou Krouch from starvation and wounds.<sup>3453</sup> RIEL Son confirmed that to be admitted to the commune hospital required authorisation from the unit chief or village chief.<sup>3454</sup> EK Hoeun confirmed that unit chiefs could send people without seeking higher authorisation.<sup>3455</sup> KHOEM Boeun testified that she did not distinguish in who should be sent to hospital for medical care.<sup>3456</sup> The Chamber therefore finds that medical treatment required pre-authorisation, even within communes, but that conditions at worksites such as Kbal Pou and/or Ou Krouch could be particularly lacking in medical care.

1051. The Tram Kak District Records reveal commune medical staff reporting to the Party. For example, a report dated 23 May 1976 from Angk Ta Saom commune to Tram Kak district records that medics at the commune hospital had discovered that a person wanted to run away, following which the commune Committee had the militia bring him in for interrogation using cold methods. The report continued that the district should question him because his wife, who was in the rice transplanting unit, had suggested that district Angkar was “lenient”.<sup>3457</sup>

10.1.8. Security

10.1.8.1. Militia and monitoring

1052. The 1976 Statute of the CPK’s Youth League provided for “District, Commune, and Village Militias” with corresponding levels of CPK organisation to “collectively examine, deliberate and decide”.<sup>3458</sup> In the communes, the roles of militia included guarding the security of the commune or village and engaging in rice production as needed.<sup>3459</sup> Militia members were generally aged between 18 to 30 and wore black uniforms like ordinary people.<sup>3460</sup>

1053. At the district level, NEANG Ouch alias Ta San described a platoon of some 30 militia who could be deployed throughout the district.<sup>3461</sup> VAN Soeun, a former commune militiaman then member of the District Military who also worked as a messenger from Kraing Ta Chan, described a district unit known as the “50 member unit” albeit comprised of between 10 to 12 members.<sup>3462</sup> VAN Soeun also referred to a “100-member unit” commanded by Chhoeun, which comprised 50 to 70 members.<sup>3463</sup> KHOEM Boeun identified Phy and Chorn as supervisors of the district militia.<sup>3464</sup> According to PECH Chim, Phy had a handicap in his legs was indeed at the District Office “at some point” but he was in charge of medical services and the only work he could do was distribute medicines and take care of the sick.<sup>3465</sup> The Chamber finds that this does not reflect Phy’s role at all times.<sup>3466</sup>

1054. Each commune had a militia unit of some 10 youths or more.<sup>3467</sup> VAN Soeun told OCIJ investigators in 2013 that there were about 10 different “50 member” units in Tram Kak district.<sup>3468</sup> The evidence is unclear whether the “50 member” units was another name for the commune militia, or whether there was a separate military unit. In any event, the evidence demonstrates that commune militia reported to the commune and to security at the district level.<sup>3469</sup> In addition to the district and commune militia, EK Hoeun identified “sector police” arresting people throughout the sector.<sup>3470</sup>

10.1.8.2. Offences

1056. The delineation between serious and light offences was not always clear in the evidence. As a fundamental matter, however, conduct which betrayed or undermined the CPK's lines and policies was one of the most serious offences a person could commit. For instance, Commune Secretary KHOEM Boeun explained that the most serious offence was to destroy the cooperative's property and anybody who stole collective property such as dishes or pots was considered to be the enemy.<sup>3482</sup> EK Hoeun agreed that stealing plates or pottery from the cooperative was a serious crime.<sup>3483</sup> This is confirmed by the documentary evidence. A report from Srae Ronoung commune on 1 September 1977 recounted that three female youths and one girl had broken spoons during dinner, then asked Angkar to decide what to do with them.<sup>3484</sup> The Chamber identified these persons, aged between 14 and 19, as having been described in notebook E3/4083, revealing that they were sent to Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>3485</sup>

1057. As for taking food, NEANG Ouch alias Ta San testified that this was a light offence, akin to laziness or moral misconduct.<sup>3486</sup> Persons were often re-educated at the cooperative level because the district understood that some people stole because they were hungry.<sup>3487</sup> KHOEM Boeun likewise testified that stealing food was a minor offence, for which the person would be detained and brought to the village or perhaps the commune level to be re-educated, which included explaining to them that everybody was in the situation so stealing was prohibited.<sup>3488</sup> EK Hoeun testified that stealing a cassava was not a "big deal" so the offender would not be punished to carry dirt.<sup>3489</sup> Persons who took tools to use, however, such as ploughs or a rake, were treated like moral offenders and had to carry dirt as a punishment.<sup>3490</sup> In PECH Chim's view, those who stole food such as potatoes or roots should not have been implicated as having been the enemy.<sup>3491</sup> According to PECH Chim, persons who committed "minor offences” were not to be executed, but he caveated this by stating that practice varied from place to place.<sup>3492</sup> Despite these accounts, there is extensive evidence demonstrating that stealing food could be considered a serious offence, especially if perpetrated by New People or accompanied by other words or conduct deemed threatening to the revolution. IM Vannak described being beaten by a militiaman when trying to collect sdau leaves to drink their juices.<sup>3493</sup> If children of 17 April People stole, they could be threatened with execution by the unit chief.<sup>3494</sup> However, stealing by Base children was “tolerated” because they were the children of Base People.<sup>3495</sup> A report from Angk Ta Saom commune to Kraing Ta Chan described how a New Person had questioned the rations and said that the only way to eat enough was to steal.<sup>3496</sup> OEM Saroeun described how she was caught stealing and was sent for re-education, which involved being told that if she stole again she would be in danger but since it was her first offence she was released.<sup>3497</sup> The Chamber heard numerous, consistent and convincing accounts that inhabitants of the cooperatives in Tram Kak district went hungry because rations were insufficient, but they were too scared to take food growing on trees.<sup>3498</sup>

1058. NEANG Ouch alias Ta San explained that spying was a serious offence.<sup>3499</sup> According to SAN Lorn, however, treason was betraying the Party’s lines and policies, and traitorous crimes included activities of opposition or disobedience.<sup>3500</sup> EK Hoeun explained that moral offenders would be released after they had corrected themselves and worked hard.<sup>3501</sup> Several witnesses recalled that light offences, including “moral offences”, resulted in varying lengths of detention and work at “Meng’s place” at Angk Roka.<sup>3502</sup> According to KHOEM Boeun, a rapist in Popel commune had his head shaved to leave a cross and he was walked from Popel to Cheang Tong.<sup>3503</sup>

1059. The detention place at Angk Roka operated as both a re-education office in its own right,<sup>3504</sup> and as a transit point for prisoners to be sent to other locations, including Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>3505</sup> For instance, the Chamber has traced in the documentary evidence the fate of five widows from Trapeang Thum North commune who were at Meng’s place as at 7-8 August 1978 but entered Kraing Ta Chan on 9 August 1978 following an instruction to execute them.<sup>3506</sup> The report from the commune to Meng described the five women as having complained that they worked “nearly to death both at daytime and night and eat no delicious good. You shout ‘Storming attack, storming attack’. What shit! I won’t do it.”<sup>3507</sup> A further example traced by the Chamber was two “traitors” from Popel commune sent to Meng’s place on or around 9 July 1978 then transferred to Kraing Ta Chan on or around 15 July 1978, following directions from District Secretary NEANG Ouch alias Ta San.<sup>3508</sup>

1060. The Chamber finds that the most serious offences, for which the punishment was death, included innocuous conduct and/or speech perceived as attacking the revolution and the collective system.

10.1.8.3. Arrests and disappearances10.1.8.3.1. Reports and authority

1061. As noted in the above discussion of the aftermath of the evacuations, District Secretary Yeay Khom who was Ta Mok's daughter, gave repeated instructions in meetings to smash all capitalists, feudalists or reactionaries and kill them all wherever they were until not one remained. She said this in the meetings in villages and at the district, and militiamen repeated her statements back to her.<sup>3509</sup> EK Hoeun understood this to apply to former teachers, village and commune chiefs, LON Nol soldiers, and those who had political tendencies.<sup>3510</sup> According to EK Hoeun, Yeay Khom was implementing a clear plan and large numbers of people were arrested pursuant to these orders.<sup>3511</sup> Yeay Khom's orders were passed to Ta Chim and Ta Chay, then on down to Dorn, the District Office chief.<sup>3512</sup>

1062. SENG Soeun described a short political session he attended on an unspecified date after 17 April 1975. It was launched by Bao, the commander of his battalion, to educate the lower-ranking leaders about the policy of the CPK. The session last some three days and was convened in Takeo. It focused on cleansing and included an announcement that former soldiers and officials of the Khmer Republic would not be spared.<sup>3513</sup> RIEL Son described a large meeting near Angk Roka market when commune and village representatives were instructed to purge various groups including former LON Nol officials from the rank of first assistant to the level of chief of communes, and military and police from the rank of warrant officer or first adjutant and above.<sup>3514</sup> He identified PECH Chim as the District Secretary at the time, with Ta Chay in attendance.<sup>3515</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that this meeting took place in 1976 or later because RIEL Son had been assigned to work at the District Hospital at the time.<sup>3516</sup> Chiefs of communes and various villages were instructed to search for former soldiers with ranks from adjutant up, or former policemen from first deputy chief up then purge them.<sup>3517</sup> At times RIEL Son's evidence wavered on the precise timing of this meeting. At one point he seemed to suggest that such a meeting took place earlier because he referred to many evacuees from Phnom Penh and Takeo at the time.<sup>3518</sup> At another point, he suggested it may have taken place before the evacuation of Phnom Penh.<sup>3519</sup> He then corrected himself on the basis that he attended as the representative of the District Hospital.<sup>3520</sup> Indeed he recalled leaving the meeting and returning to the District Hospital.<sup>3521</sup> While it is possible that RIEL Son attended more than one meeting, the Chamber considers that his recollection of the capacity in which he attended the meeting is reliable, which therefore assists the Chamber in finding that it took place in 1976 or later. RIEL Son's evidence is corroborated by the contents of the September-October 1976 issue of Revolutionary Flag, which discussed "life-and-death contradictions" with government officials, policemen, soldiers and students who could not be reformed by education.<sup>3522</sup> It continued that:

[T]here are contradictions within the old peasants from upper-middle peasants on up, in particular with the wealthy peasants, that are life-and-death contradictions. There are also contradictions within the new peasants, contradictions with capitalists and feudalists that are life-and-death contradiction. When individuals reform, they are not life-and-death contradictions, but they do not easily reform.<sup>3523</sup>

1063. The Chamber therefore finds that, although instructions were issued not to harm former LON Nol soldiers and officials after May 1975, the position changed in 1976 and later on.<sup>3524</sup> KHOEM Boeun also recalled receiving successive instructions from the district to sweep clean "high ranking" soldiers or officers.<sup>3525</sup> This is corroborated by documentary evidence from Cheang Tong commune: a report dated 30 April 1977 which refers to the enemy situation in the base then states: "after having received successive instructions from Angkar on vigilance against enemies and purges of ranking enemy soldiers” pursuant to which two persons were to be arrested.<sup>3526</sup> A report from To Phem commune dated 28 April 1977 likewise refers to having “examined and purged ranking enemies” specifying that “Upon instructions from the Party, we went to the field to examine them and found that there were still six more ranking persons who changed their names” proceeding to identify six former soldiers with the rank of first or second lieutenant.<sup>3527</sup> The Chamber has found that documentary evidence confirms there to have been a concerted effort to round up those suspected of being former Khmer Republic soldiers or officials from April 1977 in particular.<sup>3528</sup>

1064. The documentary evidence also confirms that New People who opposed the CPK were to be arrested: a report from Sre Ronoung commune dated 4 January 1977 recorded that “concerning the New People, there are still many others who are opposing Angkar (organization) and the Party, thus I will arrest them and send them up successively”.<sup>3529</sup>

1065. NEANG Ouch alias Ta San testified that, on security matters, the communes reported to the district, after which he relayed information to Ta Rorn (i.e. the Sector Secretary) or Ta Bith – a reference to SAM Bit at the Southwest Zone level.<sup>3530</sup> According to PECH Chim, it was the sector level which made all decisions, and the district only transmitted matters to let sector authorities decide if they wanted to arrest people.<sup>3531</sup> According to PECH Chim, district secretaries did not have authority over arrests – this lay with the sector, whereas district secretaries had authority over propaganda, education, livelihood, “getting rid of traitors” and mobilising forces to fight enemies.<sup>3532</sup> PECH Chim stated that “in principle” the sector then had to consult with the Southwest Zone before making decisions on arrests or executions, but he was unable to say whether this procedure was adhered to in every instance.<sup>3533</sup> He accepted that the communes sent names to the district requesting to make arrests.<sup>3534</sup>

1066. Witnesses from the commune level testified that they did not possess independent authority to arrest. The procedure generally described by several witnesses in a position to know was that communes reported on suspects, either individually or in lists, then received instructions from the district to arrest. NUT Nov testified that only the sector or the zone level had authority to authorise arrests and smash.<sup>3535</sup> KHOEM Boeun's evidence was that the commune levels did not have the authority to eliminate or smash anybody or send anyone for re-education. Instead they forwarded matters to the district level.<sup>3536</sup> PHANN Chhen, a former secretary of Kus commune before 17 April 1975, similarly stated that he did not have the authority to arrest; only the "district level" had that authority.<sup>3537</sup> EK Hoeun also testified that only district units had the right to make arrests.<sup>3538</sup> NUT Nov also described an announcement that neither the village nor the commune level had the right to decide who was an enemy; the commune could only make reports.<sup>3539</sup> Even when he became a commune chief, he said he did not know what happened to people who were arrested because everything was so secretive.<sup>3540</sup> This is corroborated by the documentary evidence before the Chamber, which shows repeated examples of various communes seeking instructions from the district level on arrests.<sup>3541</sup>

1067. EK Hoeun gave a detailed account of some aspects of the arrests process. He confirmed that only district units had the right to make arrests, not the communes who simply reported lists of people and received instructions.<sup>3542</sup> However, he testified that this rule was not always respected and sometimes people who were considered to be strong opponents or serious offenders were arrested and disappeared without waiting for a decision from the sector level.<sup>3543</sup> Generally, the communes reported on people to the district, which considered the matter and consulted with the sector. Upon reception of sector's feedback, Dorn, the chief of the District Office, passed on instructions from the sector downwards.<sup>3544</sup> These instructions sometimes materialised through a list of names annotated in red or in blue. The district reported those names to the communes to implement the arrests,<sup>3545</sup> but in some cases district soldiers were ordered to go straight to apprehend the person(s) without the commune's involvement.<sup>3546</sup> EK Hoeun suggested that red annotations on lists of persons meant that person was to be arrested then executed.<sup>3547</sup> EK Hoeun contrasted red annotations from blue annotations. He described blue circles around a name indicating that the person would be brought to Angk Roka to be re-educated for more minor offences, without being beaten or tortured.<sup>3548</sup> EK Hoeun remembered seeing such lists with red and blue ink when looking for cigarette papers in the Tram Kak District Commerce Office, where he worked. The lists were put in the rubbish bin after it had been decided that district soldiers would make arrests.<sup>3549</sup> While the Chamber accepts that EK Hoeun saw the lists he described, the precise meanings he attributed to the red and blue markings appear to have been his own interpretation without independent verification.<sup>3550</sup>

1068. KHOEM Boeun, the Secretary of Cheang Tong commune, accepted that she received instructions from Ta An, the head of Kraing Ta Chan, following which she ordered the commune militia to search for and arrest the people identified.<sup>3551</sup> District soldiers and commune militia worked together to conduct arrests, but she said was not directly involved in this.<sup>3552</sup> She testified that she, as a commune secretary, did not have any rights to eliminate or smash anyone. Rather, the commune forwarded reports to the district.<sup>3553</sup> There is some support for this account in the Tram Kak District Records. For example, a report to the “Party of District 105” dated 21 July 1977 and sent by KHOEM Boeun passes on information from “Comrade Huo, Committee of Unit 4” regarding a conversation he had with NEANG Dam. During this conversation NEANG Dam, a former “policeman” of district 105, criticised the Party because among other things he saw it “much more unjust because it [sic] personally implemented many killings under their power”, including of people who were loyal to Angkar.<sup>3554</sup> There is a corresponding entry for NEANG Dam in one of the Kraing Ta Chan Notebooks.<sup>3555</sup>

1069. The Chamber is satisfied that the zone and sector levels retained extensive oversight of arrests in Tram Kak district, but the district level retained considerable discretion when responding to reports from communes. The Chamber further finds that the District Secretary frequently authorised arrests.

10.1.8.3.2. Implementation

1070. There is extensive evidence of people being arrested and disappearing from Tram Kak district during the relevant period. The Chamber has evaluated generalised evidence and examples of specific individuals.

1071. PECH Chim testified that, when he was District Secretary, he was frequently approached by people asking for information about the fate of their relatives. In his view, people had been too scared to approach Yeay Khom, the previous District Secretary. PECH Chim continued that he listened and considered such requests, and would decide whether or not the person could be released.<sup>3556</sup> PECH Chim described a fluid authority structure in Tram Kak district whereby a person could be promoted, but then disappeared one or two months later, and people in the locality would not know what happened to that person.<sup>3557</sup> MOENG Vet, a military messenger who delivered messages to Sector 13 secretary, described how, when he returned to visit his village in Tram Kak district in late 1977 having left in March of that year, “many people” had disappeared.<sup>3558</sup> EK Hoeun testified that disappearances were a source of fear for everyone, and that everyone was afraid because there were so many arrests.<sup>3559</sup> NUT Nov confirmed that, when he was at the Tuol Kruos worksite digging canals, he knew that people disappeared and explained that it was the district and sector units in charge.<sup>3560</sup> EM Phoeung testified that former Khmer Republic officials were targeted, and a method was used whereby they were told that Angkar needed them for work which led many to reveal their past; only very few who hid their identity survived.<sup>3561</sup> KHOEM Boeun admitted to the OCIJ investigators that persons from Phnom Penh evacuated to Cheang Tong commune were killed, but before the Chamber claimed not to have been aware of it and could not give figures.<sup>3562</sup> The Chamber finds this evidence to be indicative of large numbers of people disappearing in Tram Kak district.

1072. The Chamber heard detailed accounts of specific individuals who disappeared. CHOU Koemlan’s husband was called SUOS Dim alias Nuon.<sup>3563</sup> He was a captain then later promoted to a major in the LON Nol military. He had been a military medic working at two hospitals in Phnom Penh.<sup>3564</sup> When they first arrived in Tram Kak district, they were asked to prepare biographies but they did not reveal his former position.<sup>3565</sup> In around August 1975, however, after building huts to the north of Leay Bour commune office to house New People, he was arrested at around 9 p.m., after a meeting had ended at around 8 p.m.<sup>3566</sup> The arrest followed the discovery of photographs which identified him as a former soldier.<sup>3567</sup> His hands were tied behind his back then he was walked away by people with a gun.<sup>3568</sup> Around two hours later, CHOU Koemlan heard three gun shots, then the next day she was sent from the north of the commune office to another unit to the south.<sup>3569</sup> She never saw her husband again but subsequently heard from Base People that her husband was killed behind Leay Bour Pagoda, to the west in a forest.<sup>3570</sup> The Chamber finds that CHOU Koemlan's account is detailed, precise, consistent internally and with the evidence concerning the purge of Khmer Republic soldiers, therefore it is satisfied that SUOS Dim alias Nuon was killed.

1073. OEM Saroeurn was separated from her husband, OY Mut, a former LON Nol soldier, in 1976.<sup>3571</sup> She received confirmation of her husband's death as well as of the deaths of other family members, including her father (IM Phum), uncle (IM Chat) and elder brother (UNG Lim) who had asked for extra food from another former detainee at Kraing Ta Chan called Hou, who was also a former LON Nol soldier and escaped after the liberation.<sup>3572</sup> The Chamber is unable to establish whether these persons died at Kraing Ta Chan but, in light of the circumstances surrounding the disappearances of OEM Saroeurn's relatives, of the biographies of these last and of the purge directives in force in the district, the only reasonable inference is that they were killed.

1074. RIEL Son's testified that his uncle LONG Neak complained about the cooperative he lived in, which led to his disappearance. He described how people kept disappearing. People would come at night and then they would disappear.<sup>3573</sup> His wife told him how his uncle and brother-in-law were taken away from their house. The brother-in-law was taken at noon from RIEL Son's own house then his uncle, who lived next door, was taken at night.<sup>3574</sup> His elder brother, RIEL Oem who was a warrant officer in the police force who wanted his rank reinstated also disappeared.<sup>3575</sup> None of these people were seen again by their relatives.

1075. LONG Vonn worked at the Tram Kak District Office, but explained that he was terrified while in Tram Kak district and did whatever he was told to do. The father of one of his cousins had been a former soldier, and was assigned to a mobile unit but then disappeared and was never seen again by his relatives. Similarly, an uncle of his who had been a former teacher disappeared and also was never seen again by his relatives. These disappearances and other deaths left him terrified.<sup>3576</sup>

1076. MEAS Sokha recalled the arrest of his father and brother-in-law in June 1976. They had been involved in a request to replace the cooperative chief in order to improve living conditions. His brother-in-law was arrested on the day of a meeting he had called, whereas his father was arrested at midday or 1 p.m. the next day.<sup>3577</sup> MEAS Sokha witnessed the arrest of his father by three militiamen, including Chea, the chief of the commune's militia, and Roeum. His father left MEAS Sokha a plate and cutlery and told him to go home. He never saw his father again.<sup>3578</sup> The Chamber has made further findings in relation to these arrests elsewhere in this Judgement.<sup>3579</sup> In relation to the Tram Kak Cooperatives, these events further confirm that any conduct perceived as challenging the revolution was met with the severest consequences, with whole families swept up in the resultant arrests.

1077. SAO Han described the disappearance of LUON Ham (his elder brother who was a LON Nol soldier) and TAUCH Chhan (a teacher). They were told that they were being sent away for re-education but they disappeared and were never seen again by their relatives. Their wives and children were not arrested.<sup>3580</sup> LUON Ham was arrested by militia men led by Pang, with Ta Ek and group chief Ta Lonya involved in the arrests. LUON Ham was taken away on a horse cart, but not tied up.<sup>3581</sup>

1078. TAK Sann arrived in Tram Kak district from Vietnam together with her husband and children, as part of an exchange of Vietnamese and Khmer Krom persons. She described how her husband was taken away on a cart and disappeared forever.<sup>3582</sup> IM Vannak's brother IM Mach also disappeared and was never seen again by his relatives. She asked a villager called SAU Vann what had happened to him. She was told that he was accused of moral misconduct, but she recalled him having been a former LON Nol soldier and saw him in uniform when she was young.<sup>3583</sup> LOEP Neang lived in Tnaot Chnang village. She described being told that her elder brother and sister (LOEP Lek and LOEP Meu) were taken to hospital with fever and dysentery, but they then disappeared.<sup>3584</sup> Two of her younger siblings (LOEP Leh and LOEP Vy) were taken away on a cart while she was digging a canal, and disappeared.<sup>3585</sup>

1079. THANN Thim, a New Person who arrived in Trapeang Thum North in late 1977, was evacuated with several hundred other New People from Kirivong district. He worked in Trapeang Trav village in the transportation or oxcart unit, whereas his wife was assigned to transplanting.<sup>3586</sup> He was arrested and accused of being a first lieutenant – having been implicated by his young daughter.<sup>3587</sup> THANN Thim explained that his family knew nothing of his arrest: they just noticed that he had disappeared and thought that he had died.<sup>3588</sup> The Chamber finds that this is indicative of the general practice when persons were arrested and sent for re-education.

1080. The documentary evidence confirms that New People, former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials, and Khmer Krom persons were particularly susceptible to arrest for thoughts, speech or conduct considered contrary to the revolution. A report dated 3 May 1977 requests an opinion from “respected Angkar” on solving a problem with a New Person, then asks for Angkar to decide whether the person should be sent away.<sup>3589</sup> A report from Popel commune to the District Party dated 11 April notes that “For those people who hold a ranking position, we will send them out [to you] consecutively and for soldiers and some teachers who attempted to destroy [and] our revolution, could you please give us advice what to do or let us decide at some bases – so please gives us your advice. With high commitment to destroy/smash the spy of the enemy to its total extinction in order to serve the Socialist Revolution and Building Socialism for our Party and the people as required”.<sup>3590</sup> A note dated 24 April 1977 from Ta Phem commune includes an instruction annotated to “watch in advance on whether they are new or base people”.<sup>3591</sup> A report dated 6 May 1977 from Khporp Trabaek commune to Angkar, Tram Kak district, provided information on four persons “with former ranks and positions” who had been transferred up to the commune’s base the previous day.<sup>3592</sup> A report dated 8 May 1977 from Popel commune to District Angkar confirmed that “the number of military families smashed by the Angkar and died is 393 or 106 families [...] 892 persons or 231 military families remain”.<sup>3593</sup> This latter evidence reveals a killing operation underway from April 1977, when massive numbers of former military together with their families were being killed in Tram Kak district.

1081. A report from Angk Ta Saom dated 24 July 1977 records that a New Person who had arrived in the area in 1975, but it had now been discovered that he had studied abroad, including in the United States. recorded that three New People had been reported to the commune by a number of Base People for having made comments that they had been mistreated and would not survive.<sup>3595</sup> A report from Nhaeng Nhang commune dated 17 December 1977 reported that two New People had been making negative comments against the revolution, and noted the Party's decision for them to be arrested and sent to "comrade brother".<sup>3596</sup> A report from Trapeang Thum South commune dated 3 January 1978 to "Comrade Ann" described the "problems" of two New People who had been sent over, detailing negative comments that the persons had made.<sup>3597</sup> A report dated 1 March 1978 from Angk Ta Saom commune to the "Comrade Police of Tram Kak District" described comments made by VANN Em, a former teacher working in the Planting Unit, who predicted trouble ahead for Angkar.<sup>3598</sup> This corresponds to an entry for VAN Em in one of the Kraing Ta Chan Notebooks.<sup>3599</sup>

1082. The documentary evidence further establishes that arrested persons were mistreated during interrogations in the communes. A report from Trapeang Thum South commune to the Party in September 1977 describes how MOEUN Sun had confessed following both "cold and hot methods of interrogation".<sup>3600</sup> A report to the Party describing individuals in Angk Ta Saom commune recorded that youths in the youth mobile unit were allowed to wrap NEANG An's face with a plastic sheet, shackle and interrogate him.<sup>3601</sup> Further documentary evidence confirms that physical beatings were contemplated as an available method of interrogation. For instance, a report from K-105 to Angkar on 5 May 1977 described the interrogation of HIM Chhun, with the author stating "I took his confession peacefully and without beating him and because of this, I don't know the truth".<sup>3602</sup> A report from Angk Ta Saom commune to Kraing Ta Chan dated 18 August 1978 recorded that KONG Vet had already been "educated so far by the group, unit, and by the (collective meetings)" but it was only after he was

“individually educated” that he confessed.<sup>3603</sup> The documentary evidence further records instances of killings at the commune level. A report from Saen to Angkar dated 24 April records the view that a woman named PUOT Kimpheng had pretended to be insane but was in fact lazy so “it is fine if she is taken away to be shot”. It further reports that her husband was SENG Hieng and that “we smashed two of their children”.<sup>3604</sup>

1083. According to NUT Nov, arrests generally happened at night, when the militia would come after receiving reports.<sup>3605</sup> EK Hoeun also testified that arrests were made in the evening and at night rather than openly.<sup>3606</sup> Consistent with these general remarks, THANN Thim described how he was arrested at approximately 7 p.m. or 8 p.m. one evening, after returning to his unit. He was told that he was being summoned for a meeting but was taken to a militia station where militiamen jumped out, beat him, and transported him to Angk Roka.<sup>3607</sup> CHOU Koemlan described the arrest of her father one night around 9 p.m. in Leay Bour commune in around August 1975.<sup>3608</sup> CHANG Srey Mom learned from her mother and sister that her father had been arrested at 7 p.m. one evening.<sup>3609</sup> She further recalled the arrest of 10 people at around 6 p.m. one evening in 1978.<sup>3610</sup> While the Chamber is satisfied that this represented a typical form of arrest in Tram Kak district, the evidence is not uniform. EK Hoeun described a militia force close to Yeay Khom which would, he said, take people away to the forests in broad daylight.<sup>3611</sup> MEAS Sokha described the arrest of his father at around 1 p.m., whereas his brother-in-law had been arrested the previous day.<sup>3612</sup>

10.1.9. Treatment of Buddhists

1084. The CPK had considered monks to be a “special class” from before 17 April 1975: although monks were similar to peasants in some respects, they depended upon peasants to support their livelihoods which set them apart in a different category.<sup>3613</sup> In contrast, the FUNK official political programme proclaimed that “Buddhism is and will remain to be the state religion”.<sup>3614</sup>

1085. On the morning of 17 April 1975, the supreme patriarchs of the two main Buddhist orders (Mohanikay and Thammayut) broadcast a call for the fighting to end.<sup>3615</sup> At around lunchtime on 17 April 1975, a further radio announcement explained that the liberating forces had met with the two supreme patriarchs together with Khmer Republic generals, and the surrender was finalised.<sup>3616</sup> Witnesses including EM Phoeung, a monk at Wat Sampeou Meas in Phnom Penh, recalled hearing the Supreme Patriarch HUOT Tat on the radio saying that he was pleased with the liberation and it was time for people to join hands to rebuild the country.<sup>3617</sup> EM Phoeung was then evacuated from Phnom Penh to Tram Kak district.<sup>3618</sup> He recalled that HUOT Tat stayed in Phnom Penh with around 20 monks, but they disappeared.<sup>3619</sup> This was partially corroborated by Duch, who told OCIJ investigators that he learned that the Division 703's Security Centre killed the Venerable HUOT Tat shortly after 17 April 1975.<sup>3620</sup> While the evidence does not establish precisely what happened to HUOT Tat and other monks who remained in Phnom Penh, the Chamber is satisfied that they disappeared.

1086. In a radio broadcast on 21 April 1975, KHIEU Samphan, in his capacity as GRUNK Deputy Prime Minister, Minister of National Defence and CPNLAF Commander in Chief, paid homage to "every venerable Buddhist monk". He continued: "we would like to convey best wishes to all our Buddhist monks and brother countrymen for excellent health and great fighting will".<sup>3621</sup> Then a communiqué broadcast on 28 April 1975 described a Special National Congress having been convened in previous days, and claimed that 20 representatives of the Buddhist clergy had attended.<sup>3622</sup> The Chamber finds this to have been part of the FUNK façade – presenting Buddhism as the State religion at that time. It is unclear whether these were the 20 monks whom EM Phoeung described having remained in Phnom Penh. On 3 May 1975, NORODOM Sihanouk also referred to the National Congress in a message from China, congratulating KHIEU Samphan on the liberation. He noted the text of the resolutions adopted by the Special National Congress, describing it as a "special congress of Cambodian mass organizations, the three CPNLAF categories, monks, the NUFC and RGNUC".<sup>3623</sup>

1087. PRAK Yut travelled from Sector 13 to attend a three to five day meeting in Phnom Penh in late May 1975. PRAK Yut testified that one of the principles discussed was the re-establishment of pagodas because people needed to be able to practise their religion.<sup>3624</sup> She earlier testified, however that "[b]etween 1975 and 1979 there were no Buddhist monks and there were no pagodas".<sup>3625</sup> Her evidence was therefore fundamentally inconsistent. PECH Chim testified that District Secretary Yeay Khom attended a meeting in Phnom Penh in May 1975, and when she returned to Tram Kak district she organised a morning meeting in order to pass on instructions related to, among other things, the abolition of money, markets and the disrobing of Buddhist monks.<sup>3626</sup> PECH Chim testified that District Secretary Yeay Khom ordered the defrocking of monks and the destruction of Buddhist statues. He described a specific District Committee meeting when this instruction was issued to the communes to implement.<sup>3627</sup> At one point, PECH Chim claimed that he did not know about the provenance of any order to Yeay Khom.<sup>3628</sup> At another point, however, PECH Chim asserted that the same policy applied across multiple districts and suggested he read about it in Revolutionary Flag.<sup>3629</sup> PECH Chim suggested that he did not like this decision; he would have preferred a more gradual process whereby existing monks were allowed to remain but no new monks would be ordained.<sup>3630</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that a clear order was conveyed through Tram Kak district after the May 1975 meeting whereby monks were to be defrocked and Buddhist symbols destroyed.

1088. Later documentary evidence confirms PECH Chim's account over PRAK Yut's description of the May 1975 meeting. A CPK Policy Document from September 1975 assessed that, already by that time, 90 to 95 percent of monks had left the monkhood:

In addition most of the monks. from 90 to 95 percent of them, abandoned their monkhood. Pagodas which are the core foundations for the existence of the monkhood were abandoned. People have no longer gone to pagoda. They no longer offer alms [to the monks]. On the contrary, they are keen to build dams and dig canals etc. This [religious] practice has disappeared. The political, economic, cultural bases were dug up and destroyed. This is an unstoppable movement moving forwards. Monks abandoned pagodas to work in the rice field. Based on this trend we assume that 90 to 95 percent of the monks and Buddhist practices will no longer exist. So this special layer [of the society] will no longer cause any worry. Thus, significant change is observed in our society.<sup>3631</sup>

1089. Although this assessed the position nationwide, it is also pertinent to the position in Tram Kak district. Moreover, in October 1975 NORODOM Sihanouk gave an interview to Le Monde in his capacity as the recently returned Head of State. He explained that, whereas he had met the “patriotic monks”, the traitors had “left for Thailand” and others had had “given up their frocks and are rebuilding the country with other people”.<sup>3632</sup> This further confirms that the defrocking of monks had been deliberate, organised and widespread.

1090. The DK Constitution promulgated in January 1976 provided that every citizen had “the right to worship according to any religion and the right not to worship according to any religion”. It continued, however, that “Reactionary religions which are detrimental to Democratic Kampuchea and Kampuchean people are absolutely forbidden”.<sup>3633</sup> KHIEU Samphan summarised the motivation behind this provision as follows:

[O]ur stand is not to allow any foreign imperialists to use religion to subvert us. We are determined to fight them no matter what disguises they use. The imperialists continue to look for means to attack us, among which is the use of a religious cloak to infiltrate our country. We should oppose them at all costs.<sup>3634</sup>

1091. After late 1975 and early 1976, there is scant recorded evidence of official mention of Buddhism or monks in CPK publications, speeches or broadcasts. One exception is the June 1977 issue of Revolutionary Flag – the same issue which announced Tram Kak district as one of only three model districts. This referred to those who had given up the monkhood as “petty bourgeoisie” – and suggested they had been easy source to be “convinced by enemies”.<sup>3635</sup> A second exception is POL Pot’s speech of 27 September 1977 publicly announcing the existence of the CPK. POL Pot described the armed struggle before 17 April 1975 and how, at that time, the CPK had made efforts to mobilise “the Samdech Supreme Patriarch CHUON Nath of the Mohanikay Buddhist Order and the Samdech Supreme Patriarch of the Thammayutika Nikay Buddhist Order”.<sup>3636</sup> POL Pot did not expand upon the subsequent fates of these Buddhist Orders. It is notable that POL Pot did not mention HUOT Tat by name in this speech.

1092. According to Duch, who attended this event, during the CPK's anniversary meeting in September 1978, POL Pot further explained that the Party was trying to "eliminate" Buddhism and the way to do this was to make monks build dams and blend together with the popular masses.<sup>3637</sup>

1093. The Chamber finds that the CPK was intent on eliminating Buddhism from Cambodian society and that the defrocking of monks was a deliberate means to achieve this aim.<sup>3638</sup> The purported protection in the DK Constitution was clearly disregarded. The Chamber rejects NUON Chea's suggestion to the Chamber that the CPK "did not have any measure to ban Buddhism".<sup>3639</sup> NUON Chea also explained to the Chamber that, in his speeches during the DK era, he did not pay respect to monks because he did not want to mix religion with politics and no monks were "participating" at time.<sup>3640</sup> In light of Yeay Khom's instructions noted by the Chamber, this evidence is directly relevant to particular events in Tram Kak district, to which the Chamber now turns.

10.1.9.1. Events at Angk Roka Pagoda

1094. The Closing Order charges that monks evacuated from Phnom Penh and Takeo were instructed to stay at Angk Roka pagoda then told to disrobe.<sup>3641</sup> For a monk to defrock ("phsoek" in Khmer) means to leave the statutes of Buddhist discipline and return to the status of an ordinary person.<sup>3642</sup> The Chamber finds that for several months after 17 April 1975, a sustained operation took place to gather a large number of monks at Angk Roka Pagoda, which was situated close to the District Office, and force them to leave the monkhood.<sup>3643</sup> PECH Chim confirmed that a "provincial committee" of monks oversaw matters in order to implement the defrocking of monks gathered at Angk Roka Pagoda.<sup>3644</sup> This suggests that attempts were made to placate the monks being defrocked. EM Phoeung was, as already noted, a monk evacuated from Phnom Penh and he arrived at Angk Roka Pagoda after one or two months.<sup>3645</sup> The phrase EM Phoeung used before the OCIJ was that all the monks from Takeo province were “gathered up” at Angk Roka pagoda.<sup>3646</sup>

1095. EM Phoeung described how younger monks left the monkhood first, then older monks followed until by 1976 no monks remained.<sup>3647</sup> EK Hoeun, who worked at the nearby District Office in the period immediately after 17 April 1975, likewise described a gradual process of disrobing monks, perhaps one or two monks at a time.<sup>3648</sup> In EM Phoeung’s assessment, the immediate period after 17 April 1975 was “not so strict” in that Base People even came to the Pagoda to meet the monks gathered there,<sup>3649</sup> and monks could attend Buddhist rituals for funerals. The position became stricter over time and by 1976 people were “on their own”.<sup>3650</sup> They were no longer allowed to hold any Buddhist rituals at Angk Roka Pagoda.<sup>3651</sup>

1096. RIEL Son described one particular event, the precise timing of which was unclear to the Chamber, when he visited the monks at Angk Roka Pagoda to take them food and offer alms, in particular his former Buddhist teacher from Wat Langka in Phnom Penh.<sup>3652</sup> This confirms EM Phoeung’s account that Base People were able to visit the monks at Angk Roka for a period of time after 17 April 1975. RIEL Son estimated there were more than 100 monks gathered at Angk Roka Pagoda when he visited.<sup>3653</sup>

1097. Eventually, however, the monks gathered at Angk Roka Pagoda were told that they could no longer stay at the pagoda – they had to go to work for Angkar.<sup>3654</sup> EM

Phoeung described a meeting called by an unspecified “commune committee” when the monks were instructed that they had to leave the monkhood in one month’s time and replacement clothes were issued.<sup>3655</sup> They were issued with black clothes: a pair of trousers, a shirt, a scarf, and a pair of tyre sandals.<sup>3656</sup> He recalled that the person who issued the instructions presented himself as a member of the commune in charge of youth. He was accompanied by armed militia.<sup>3657</sup>

1098. In any event, the instructions were clear and the monks did not dare to refuse to follow them.<sup>3658</sup> EM Phoeung elaborated to DC-Cam in 2005 that the monks wanted to resist, but there were whispers among them that if they did not defrock they would be dead immediately.<sup>3659</sup> Before the Chamber, EM Phoeung explained in more measured terms that the monks were afraid and if instructions were not followed that would be a “matter of concern”.<sup>3660</sup> When asked what this meant, EM Phoeung was clear that they were forced to leave the monkhood.<sup>3661</sup> It was, however, a relatively orderly process in that monks followed proper disciplines, with Buddhist statues remaining undisturbed in the Pagoda, which allowed them to leave the monkhood in front of the statues with a witness to formally acknowledge the moment. Indeed, EM Phoeung’s own teacher was his witness when he left the monkhood.<sup>3662</sup>

1099. EM Phoeung’s evidence is corroborated by KHIEV Neou who was also defrocked at Angk Roka Pagoda.<sup>3663</sup> KHIEV Neou was ordained as a monk in 1951 in Trapeang Thum Pagoda where Ta Mok, who was one of his relatives, was also a monk before he disrobed. Prior to the collapse of the LON Nol regime KHIEV Neou was required by Angkar to move and stay in the Angk Roka pagoda. After 17 April 1975, he saw monks who were among people coming from Phnom Penh, or from Takeo, crowdedly travelling on the roads. He testified that all monks were gathered and instructed to stay only in Angk Roka pagoda and shortly after a group of local militia came and ordered him and all the monks to leave the monkhood. He added that “When [they] were ordered to disrobe, [they] just did that so [they] could survive; [they] did not think much of the rest”.<sup>3664</sup> He further clarified that “actually the plan to defrock monks had been prepared a long time ago and it was generally known that the communism did not allow monk to exist, thus it took no monk by surprise”.<sup>3665</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that monks were collected at Angk Roka pagoda in an organised manner and were ordered to disrobe in a climate of fear and coercion.<sup>3666</sup>

1100. RIEL Son suggested that the head of Angk Roka Pagoda, Ta Ech, was beaten for protesting the defrocking taking place there. RIEL Son did not, however, witness this beating. He was told about it by others, including the monk himself, who described the beating as painful.<sup>3667</sup> EM Phoeung also mentioned Ta Ech as being the last monk to disrobe and described him as a Buddhist teacher at Angk Roka Pagoda. However, EM Phoeung did not mention the use of physical violence.<sup>3668</sup> The Chamber finds that the hearsay nature of RIEL Son’s account to be insufficient to establish whether physical violence was used against Ta Ech. Notwithstanding this finding, the combination of the presence of armed militia, the imperative nature of the instructions, and the combination of EM Phoeung and RIEL Son’s evidence, satisfy the Chamber that all of the monks at Angk Roka Pagoda had no choice but to defrock.

1101. RIEL Son further described seeing Khmer Rouge cadres – 10 or 20 people – demolishing sculptures, removing small Buddha statues and throwing them into water, while others dug a pit in front of the monk house and threw a small Buddha shrine into the pit and buried it.<sup>3669</sup> The Chamber finds this evidence credible and finds that these events must have taken place after the monks including EM Phoeung had defrocked.

1102. Angk Roka Pagoda was no longer used for religious purposes. When PIN Yathay and large numbers of other people were assembled at Angk Roka in approximately September 1975 in order to be transferred to other locations on trucks, the pagoda had been ransacked.<sup>3670</sup> On this basis, the Chamber is satisfied that the monks gathered at Angk Roka Pagoda had been defrocked by approximately September 1975. The pagoda was subsequently used as a dining hall and a location for meetings.<sup>3671</sup> SAO Van also described it being used as a gathering point to send Vietnamese families from Cheang Tong commune, from where he understood they were to be sent back to Vietnam.<sup>3672</sup> NEANG Ouch alias Ta San, who arrived in Tram Kak district in late 1977, confirmed that Angk Roka Pagoda was not used as a place of worship.<sup>3673</sup>

10.1.9.2. Other pagodas, Buddhist symbols and practices

1103. Although describing the period shortly after January 1979, KEO Chandara testified that there were 56 pagodas in Tram Kak district.<sup>3674</sup> Notwithstanding that the Chamber only heard evidence of events at portion of these pagodas, the evidence demonstrates that pagodas were systematically requisitioned for non-religious practices, that Buddhist symbols were attacked pursuant to the orders of Yeay Khom described above, and people were not allowed to practice Buddhism in Tram Kak district.

1104. CHANG Srey Mom, a Candidate Person who lived mainly in Nhaeng Nhang commune, described a big meeting at Angk Raleay Pagoda in Kus commune and another at Angk Roka pagoda, when it was said that religion and pagodas would no longer exist.<sup>3675</sup> The attendees were instructed not to believe in Buddhism because it was a merely superstition and the Buddha was “only concrete”.<sup>3676</sup> Her younger brother-in-law was among those forced to disrobe, and they were all teased that they had been tricked by Buddhism’s concrete stones. CHANG Srey Mom testified that, after the monks had defrocked, they were put to work in the youth unit.<sup>3677</sup> EM Phoeung likewise recalled meetings at villages or commune level when monks were described as “worms” or “leeches”.<sup>3678</sup> SAO Han testified that in Tram Kak commune, people were prohibited from practising their religions.<sup>3679</sup> EK Hoeun confirmed that everyone had to work to construct canals with no distinction made for monks.<sup>3680</sup>

1105. KHIEV Neou described a limited practice of some Buddhism continuing after 17 April 1975 in that monks continued to stay at Pchek Chrum Pagoda and villagers were able to visit to offer food for a period of time, before all the monks were disrobed. KHIEV Neou thought the disrobing happened more than one year after April 1975.<sup>3681</sup> He confirmed, however, that nobody could practice Buddhism openly.<sup>3682</sup> EM Phoeung witnessed Buddhist manuscripts and paintings being destroyed and used as hats.<sup>3683</sup> SAO Han described Buddhist statues and books taken from a pagoda and monks’ dining halls turned into workshops in Tram Kak commune.<sup>3684</sup> PHNEOU Yav described the disrobing of monks in Samraong commune, at Tuek Chrum Pagoda (over 100 monks) and Angk Ponnareay Pagoda (around 30 monks). This started from 1975 and Buddhist statues were thrown into the water and monasteries were used as meeting places, dining halls and detention centres.<sup>3685</sup> He also described how, at Tuek Chrum Pagoda, villagers destroyed statues and threw them into water under the orders of the unit chief while the monks were being defrocked.<sup>3686</sup> SOK Sim, a member of the Ta Phem Commune Committee, told OCIJ investigators that Champa Pagoda was later used as a hospital.<sup>3687</sup> NUT Nov testified that Sre Ronaung Pagoda was used as the commune headquarters.<sup>3688</sup> MEAS Sokha testified that temples were used for various functions, including clinics, pigsties, or security centres, having referred in his OCIJ interview to the Moeang Char Pagoda being turned into a clinic and the Angk Baksei Pagoda turned into a cooperative with the temples dismantled and Buddhist statues buried.<sup>3689</sup> CHOU Koemlan explained that Leay Bour Pagoda was used both as a place where children stayed and as a prison.<sup>3690</sup> NEANG Ouch alias Ta San, a senior official in Tram Kak district from late 1977, confirmed that there were no pagodas or monks left in the district.<sup>3691</sup> Monks were no longer responsible for presiding over funeral rituals.<sup>3692</sup> The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the events at Angk Roka Pagoda were not an isolated incident, but were reflective of the general pattern across Tram Kak district.

1106. Some witnesses, in particular more senior CPK officials from Tram Kak district, suggested to the Chamber that people remained free to follow Buddhism. For instance, PECH Chim testified that people were free to follow Buddhism if they wished and suggested there was no order prohibiting or punishing Buddhist practices.<sup>3693</sup> PECH Chim accepted, however, that Buddhist monks were “classified differently”.<sup>3694</sup> SAO Van, who was a full-rights member of the CPK, asserted that he continued to practise Buddhism after 1975 and testified that Buddhism was not prohibited.<sup>3695</sup> EK Hoeun gave more nuanced evidence, explaining that the lack of offerings and the general regulations meant that monks had to defrock and go to work building dams and canals in order to have any food.<sup>3696</sup> CHANG Srey Mom described how she secretly went to a pagoda that still had a stone statute in order to pray.<sup>3697</sup>

1107. The Chamber accepts that some residents in Tram Kak district secretly maintained their Buddhist beliefs. This does not alter the Chamber’s conclusion that any outward practice of Buddhism was prohibited and important aspects of Buddhism were targeted for elimination. For instance, PECH Chim claimed that he sought to nail down the doors and windows at Ang Montreay Pagoda in Kus village in order to protect the Buddha statue there.<sup>3698</sup> Irrespective of the truth of his defensive efforts, the Chamber finds that this further demonstrates the widely known jeopardy in which

Buddhists symbols were placed in Tram Kak district. BUN Saroeun likewise described how pagodas were no longer sacred places and this left him feeling deprived of any psychological base.<sup>3699</sup> His elder brother, who had been a monk, also disappeared. He described seeing his monk's robe and being asked to retrieve objects he had with him by the militia chief.<sup>3700</sup> There had been 15 monks at BUN Saroeun's local pagoda, including his uncle and brother. The pagoda was empty and all of the monks were gone.<sup>3701</sup> Documentary evidence confirms that Buddhism was banned in Tram Kak district. A report to Angkar dated 31 August 1977 discusses events in Leay Bour commune reported on a person called POM Oeun who had complained that there was no Buddhism and no monks, and who suggested it might be better if Angkar allowed Buddhism. The report notes POM Oeun was sent to "Meng's place" in Angk Roka.<sup>3702</sup>

1108. When Elizabeth BECKER visited Leay Bour commune in December 1978, it was evident that "Buddhism had been entirely wiped out" because pagodas were used as granaries". Her guide THIOEUNN Prasith also explained to her that Buddhism was a "reactionary faith" which the people no longer respected, and the Leay Bour "cooperative leader repeated this formula".<sup>3703</sup> This is consistent with YUN Yat's statement to Yugoslavian journalists who visited Cambodia in March 1978 that Buddhism was considered to be incompatible with the revolution.<sup>3704</sup> The Yugoslavian journalists confirmed that, with the exception of some ancient Buddhist monuments in Stanić, Kampuchea – Socialism Without a Model (Socialist Thought and Practice), E3/2307, October 1978, p. 74, ERN (En) 00046706. Both E3/2306 and E3/2307 incorrectly identify YUN Yat as wife of IENG Sary, but consistently quote her as telling journalists that "Buddhism is incompatible with the revolution" and that there were no more problems because it had been an instrument of exploitation. Phnom Penh and at Angkor Wat, “the majority of pagodas have been transformed into storehouses for rice or have been abandoned to the elements”.<sup>3705</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that the practice of Buddhism was banned in Tram Kak district.

1109. The Chamber heard some evidence which suggested monks or former monks were killed in Tram Kak district. For example, CHOU Koemlan recounted the disembowelling of her nephew (the son of her elder brother) who was a former monk. However, her account of this incident was based on hearsay.<sup>3706</sup> Although the Chamber is satisfied that he died during relevant period, the Chamber is unable to establish the precise circumstances of his death. It has not been established that monks or disrobed monks were killed in Tram Kak district.

10.1.10. Treatment of Vietnamese

1110. PECH Chim testified there were both Vietnamese soldiers and civilians “everywhere” in Tram Kak district and the CPK “facilitated” their return to Vietnam. He described a repatriation process over two nights to “empty the area” of Vietnamese soldiers and civilians, based on guidance or instructions from Zone Secretary Ta Mok, with Sector Secretary Ta Saom also involved.<sup>3707</sup> He described a process whereby District Secretary Yeay Khom worked with Chorn (Yeay Boeun’s husband and later the chief of Popel commune) on the “task” of the Vietnamese, who in turn reported to the district level on the number of people involved.<sup>3708</sup> So far as he knew, Vietnamese who had married Cambodians or had children with “mixed blood” were allowed to stay in Tram Kak district.<sup>3709</sup> According to PECH Chim, there were no executions of Vietnamese at this time – rather it was an exchange of persons to resolve issues, but he also mentioned that “shortcomings” existed without providing details of their nature or importance.<sup>3710</sup> The Chamber understands that the process described by PECH Chim took place during the period which Yeay Khom remained in Tram Kak district, so until approximately March 1976.

1111. EK Hoeun, who had worked in the District Office in the period immediately after 17 April 1975, gave a somewhat different account. He suggested the occurrence of both planned exchanges and also killings of Vietnamese persons. He testified that District Secretary Yeay Khom's plan was to kill Vietnamese and dated this plan to approximately March 1976 – around the time Yeay Khom left Tram Kak district to move to Koh Kong province.<sup>3711</sup> He also described a 1976 meeting at the District Office when Ta Chay issued instructions to purge Vietnamese. EK Hoeun had served refreshments for a district meeting with commune chiefs, when he overheard discussion of a plan to arrest Vietnamese and send them back to Vietnam.<sup>3712</sup> According to EK Hoeun, Ta Chay (on behalf of the district) appointed Lorn alias Maunh to use a truck to round up the Vietnamese from some six communes in Tram Kak district, including Leay Bour, Popel, Ta Phem, Kus, Angk Ta Saom, Nhaeng Nhang and Srae Ronoung communes.<sup>3713</sup> According to EK Hoeun, the plan at the time was to kill Vietnamese – not merely to send them back to Vietnam. He explained that communes closer to the base of the mountain (i.e. mostly to the western parts Tram Kak district) such as Khporp Trabaek, Trapeang Thum North, Trapeang Thum South, Samrong, part of Kus and Nhaeng Nhang, were to carry out killings themselves, in the forest of Prey Kmaoch Kaun Khmeng, whereas other communes required the district's assistance.<sup>3714</sup> EK Hoeun also described an exchange of Vietnamese people with Khmer people living in Vietnam arranged by Zone Secretary Ta Mok, and instructions he issued to Ta Chay to gather these Vietnamese people for this purpose. But according to EK Hoeun, Ta Mok later cancelled the exchange programme because arrivals of Khmer Krom were

See T. 7 May 2015 (EK Hoeun), E1/298.1, pp. 94-96; EK Hoeun Interview Record, E3/9582, 19 March 2014, p. 9, ERN (En) 00983574 (Answer 54, elsewhere in his evidence he identified Lorn as Ta Mok's brother-in-law).

“difficult to control”.<sup>3715</sup> The Chamber therefore understands EK Hoeun to have direct knowledge of both instructions to kill Vietnamese and instructions to move them to Vietnam as part of an exchange process. His evidence did not always distinguish one set of instructions from another.

1112. EK Hoeun testified that, soon after some of the instructions described above, he met SANN Lorn alias Maunh by the side of a road in Tram Kak district.<sup>3716</sup> SANN Lorn was driving a big truck which had a long trailer with some 18 wheels.<sup>3717</sup> EK Hoeun recalled performing land survey work at the time, and testified that he recognised there to be Vietnamese persons in the truck. So he asked SANN Lorn alias Maunh how many people he had transported. According to EK Hoeun, SANN Lorn alias Maunh replied that 9,000 had been gathered from various communes. EK Hoeun testified that he was unsure whether this figure referred to 9,000 individuals or 9,000 families. After they finished their conversation, the truck headed to the west – i.e. away from the Vietnamese border.<sup>3718</sup> EK Hoeun explained that he was alert to these events because his family was Vietnamese, but they were spared in the end because they did not speak Vietnamese on a daily basis.<sup>3719</sup> According to EK Hoeun, Vietnamese were told they were being taken for study sessions, but instead they were being taken to be executed. He mentioned specific examples of six or seven Vietnamese families in Trapeang Chrey and Trapeang Krambrae villages in Trapeang Thum South commune who were executed, but the precise basis for his knowledge of this was not explained to the Chamber.<sup>3720</sup> The Chamber understands that the events described by EK Hoeun took place in 1976.

1113. SANN Lorn alias Maunh was Ta Mok’s younger brother-in-law: Ta Mok had married SANN Lorn’s elder sister, SANN Khoem.<sup>3721</sup> SANN Lorn was the former village chief of Prakheab village, but he came to work as a messenger for the District Office in Angk Roka for District Secretary Yeay Khom.<sup>3722</sup> Although he was evasive at times when interviewed by OCIJ investigators, before the Chamber he accepted that he was indeed involved in an operation to transport a “huge number” of Vietnamese in Tram Kak district. He suggested that this took place during the dry season (i.e. late) 1975.<sup>3723</sup> He testified that this operation lasted approximately four days.<sup>3724</sup> He drove a truck which could hold 50 or 60 people at a time, and collected Vietnamese from various commune then took them to the vicinity of the District Office. Sometimes he travelled back and forth to the same commune more than once.<sup>3725</sup> He recalled collecting Vietnamese from Ang Ta Saom, Leay Bour, Popel, Nhaeng Nhang and Kus communes, but he could not remember every commune involved.<sup>3726</sup> In the communes, the commune chiefs were present, calling Vietnamese people to board the truck. They were told they would be sent back to Vietnam and they were not handcuffed or tied up during this transportation exercise.<sup>3727</sup> When SANN Lorn later unloaded people from his truck, the Tram Kak district militia chief was at the District Office together with some 10 soldiers.<sup>3728</sup>

1114. At some points in his testimony before the Chamber, SANN Lorn appeared to accept that approximately 9,000 Vietnamese persons were transferred at this time (i.e. the figure which EK Hoeun testified that SANN Lorn had told him at the time).<sup>3729</sup> At other points, however, SANN Lorn questioned the accuracy of this figure.<sup>3730</sup> He even claimed not to recognise the name EK Hoeun or UL Hoeun, but then testified that he was not sure whether he did talk to EK Hoeun at the time and/or have such a discussion about numbers.<sup>3731</sup> The Chamber accepts EK Hoeun’s evidence to the extent that SANN Lorn indeed said this figure to him at the time. The Chamber is unable to accept, however, that 9,000 is an accurate figure of those actually transported. On the basis of the evidence, it is improbable that a single truck holding 50-60 persons at a time could transport such a large number of people in such a short period of time, even allowing for the possibility of repeat journeys. That said, as SANN Lorn accepted, a “huge number” of Vietnamese were indeed transported from several communes to the vicinity of the District Office in Angk Roka.<sup>3732</sup> SANN Lorn testified that he does not know what happened to these people after he handed them over to the district militia. He never saw them again.<sup>3733</sup>

1115. Whereas EK Hoeun described instructions from KHOEM Boeun alias Yeay Boeun and/or Ta Chay,<sup>3734</sup> and PECH Chim described Yeay Khom working with Chhorn, SANN Lorn testified that he received oral instructions from Phy at the District Office, whom he knew to be in charge of various offices including the education office and “next in ranking after the district secretary”.<sup>3735</sup> However, SANN Lorn recalled that Yeay Khom was District Secretary at the time.<sup>3736</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that, although SANN Lorn’s direct orders came from Phy, they originated from the District Secretary. At times in his evidence, SANN Lorn stated that orders followed a visit to the District Office by Zone Secretary Ta Mok and Ta Tith from the sector level.<sup>3737</sup> At another point, however, he suggested that orders came via Ta Mok’s messenger, Touch, and it came from the sector to the district.<sup>3738</sup> It is unclear to the Chamber whether SANN Lorn attributed these visits and/or messages to the particular events involving the transportation of Vietnamese, or to more general observations of events at the District Office. Notwithstanding this lack of clarity, this does not raise any material discrepancy in the otherwise consistent account that instructions were issued from at least the district level to round up Vietnamese from various communes, and those instructions were implemented. The Chamber understands that, according to SANN Lorn, these transportations of Vietnamese took place when Yeay Khom was District Secretary, meaning in early 1976. Kraing Ta Chan is a narrative description that “In January 1976 Angkar rounded up the Yvon [Vietnamese] people and sent them back to Vietnam”.<sup>3739</sup>

1116. Turning to further evidence of the events in particular communes, CHANG Srey Mom testified that some Vietnamese – or persons who pretended to be Vietnamese in an attempt to leave Cambodia – were taken from Nhaeng Nhang commune when Angkar was searching for Vietnamese to be “sent back to their country”. She recalled people boarding “trucks” (in Khmer she did not specify whether there was more than one truck) with their hands tied behind their backs, after which they headed in the direction of the mountains rather than Vietnam.<sup>3740</sup> CHANG Srey Mom’s evidence suggests that these events took place in “late 1976” when the commune chief made the announcement.<sup>3741</sup> CHOU Koemlan also described an announcement made in 1976 in her village in Leay Bour commune, when they were told that Vietnamese “had to be gathered up and sent back to their country” via Tram Kak, Kampot, and/or via the river.<sup>3742</sup> She recalled one Vietnamese family and Kampuchea Krom people who spoke with an accent who fell for this “vicious trick”.<sup>3743</sup> However, neither CHANG Srey Mom, nor CHOU Koemlan described killings of Vietnamese people who resisted deportation when these 1976 events occurred.

1117. RIEL Son confirmed that Vietnamese disappeared at night time or during the time he was working in the field or at canal work sites: they were simply called out and taken away.<sup>3744</sup> He recalled that during meetings the situation of both the Vietnamese and Khmer Krom was discussed, so people disappeared: whole families and personal belongings simply vanished and nobody knew what happened to them.<sup>3745</sup> PHANN Chen, the former chief Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre before Ta An, knew about instructions from the District Committee, specifically Nhev, to “smash” Vietnamese. He was unsure whether this was targeted at troops or Vietnamese people, but “it was generally toward Vietnam”.<sup>3746</sup> He described hearing instructions to eliminate Vietnamese issued through broadcasts, but he never received such orders or instructions at his specific location (after he left Kraing Ta Chan) as there were no Vietnamese there at that time.<sup>3747</sup> He described this as the type of information which was “open” in that announcements were made at various meetings in the units, commune and at the district level.<sup>3748</sup> The Chamber accepts that RIEL Son and PHANN Chen’s accounts reflect the general tenor of the instructions issued and that such persons indeed vanished without people knowing their fate. The Chamber further finds that neither person witnessed killings of Vietnamese persons, nor personally received instructions related to killings.

1118. That a significant number of Vietnamese left Tram Kak district in 1975-1976 is consistent with the April 1976 issue of Revolutionary Flag, which discussed in general terms having swept clean “hundreds of thousands” of foreigners and having “expelled” them out the country.<sup>3749</sup> Despite the lack of an express reference, the only reasonable interpretation is that this reference to “foreigners” referred to Vietnamese previously present in Cambodia.<sup>3750</sup> This is also consistent with evidence before the Chamber concerning the nation-wide pattern of expulsion of Vietnamese from Cambodia in 1975 and 1976.<sup>3751</sup>

1119. In addition to the above events, the Chamber heard a number of in-court testimonies concerning sizeable exchanges of people between Vietnam and Cambodia in 1976, part of which included the arrival of large numbers of Khmer Krom persons in Tram Kak district. RY Pov arrived in Tnaot Chum village, Khporp Trabaek commune, in June 1976 as part of this process. He described between 1,000 to 1,500 families previously living in Vietnam who were divided into batches to be returned to Cambodia.<sup>3752</sup> RY Pov was part of a first phase of exchanges when Khmer Krom were sent to Khporp Trabaek and Samraong communes, whereas a second phase, which he thought took place approximately six weeks later, sent Khmer Krom to Popel and Ta Phem communes.<sup>3753</sup> Their identification documents were destroyed on arrival.<sup>3754</sup> They stayed put for about 10 days until they were sent to work in a mobile unit to the south, then returned to Prey Ta Khbab village in Samraong commune.<sup>3755</sup> RY Pov's unit chief and Khmer Rouge cadres referred to Khmer Krom as having "a Khmer body with a Vietnamese head".<sup>3756</sup> Before the Chamber, RY Pov said he did not know about further batches of exchanged persons, because he was "not allowed to move freely".<sup>3757</sup> However, this was in response to a question based on a document from 1977. The Chamber finds that this did not undermine his claim to know about subsequent exchanges in 1976.<sup>3758</sup>

1120. RY Pov's account of exchanges in 1976 whereby Vietnamese left Cambodia, and Khmer Krom arrived in Cambodia, was corroborated by Civil Party TAK Sann, who came with her husband and their two children and who described being part of a second exchange when she and hundreds of other people arrived in Trak Kak district from Vietnam and were sent to Trapeang Thum North commune, where all their belongings were confiscated.<sup>3759</sup> She travelled with her parents, children and husband.<sup>3760</sup> Later her husband was taken away on a cart and disappeared – she never saw him again.<sup>3761</sup> BENG Boeun also described events in Trapeang Ampeak (Thmar Kaev) village Nhang Nhang commune, when people were separated according to their ethnicity. At first people stayed with their own families, but then they were separated into Khmer, Chinese and Vietnamese groups. He was placed with a Chinese group and
