Vietnamese group, whereas Khmer lived in a different village.<sup>3762</sup> The leaders of different groups were all Base People.<sup>3763</sup> BENG Boeun recalled the exchange of Vietnamese because a Vietnamese family left his village and said they were allowed to return back to their country.<sup>3764</sup> THANN Thim, a New Person who arrived in Trapeang Thum North commune from Kirivong district in 1977, also heard that exchanges of Vietnamese and Cambodian had occurred by the time he arrived.<sup>3765</sup>

1121. According to EK Hoeun, however, the exchanged Khmer Krom persons who arrived in Tram Kak district came to be viewed as “problematic” in that they (in generalised terms) were accused of stealing, which caused the exchange program to be cancelled and an escalation of the killing of Vietnamese persons left in Tram Kak.<sup>3766</sup> RIEL Son also recalled a specific instruction issued in relation to Khmer Krom persons in that those who came to Tram Kak district without children were considered to be Vietnamese spies.<sup>3767</sup> He further described how commune and village chiefs were instructed by the district level to prepare lists, including of former LON Nol officials, and send lists “upwards”.<sup>3768</sup> Contrary to this evidence, however, PECH Chim testified that the political line was to welcome the Khmer Krom to Tram Kak district and treat them well because they were “Khmer people by blood” and had suffered at the hands of Vietnamese.<sup>3769</sup> PECH Chim also denied EK Hoeun’s allegation, which was based upon hearsay, that he had arranged for the execution of 90 Khmer Krom persons whom Ta Mok had assigned to help construct the Khporp Trabaek canal.<sup>3770</sup>

1122. The documentary evidence sheds significant light on the events just described. For instance, NUT Nov accepted that in 1977 a census was established of people of Vietnamese or Khmer Krom descent, with these lists kept at the commune offices.<sup>3771</sup> Consistent with NUT Nov’s evidence, before the Chamber are lists of Khmer Krom people living in Kus commune dated 29 April 1977;<sup>3772</sup> Angk Ta Saom commune dated 30 April 1977;<sup>3773</sup> and an undated list of Khmer Krom people from Popel commune.<sup>3774</sup> The genesis of these lists is explained by a report from Angk Ta Saom commune to “District Angkar” dated 26 April 1977, which sought clarification concerning “the registration in the list of Kampuchea Krom people”. Angk Ta Saom commune asked the district level whether to distinguish (i) Cambodian husbands with Vietnamese wives; from (ii) Vietnamese husbands with Cambodian wives. It explained that now the registration had taken place, people had started to request to leave Cambodia for Vietnam. The report concludes: “If all of them were Yuon (Vietnamese), we would send on to the Angkar (Organization) [Incomprehensible]. If it was like this, what would the Angkar decide then?”<sup>3775</sup> This report reveals a clear understanding as to what to do with “pure Vietnamese” families – they would be sent up to the district level. There was, however, uncertainty over what to do with mixed families: “If it was like this, what would Angkar decide then?”. The documentary evidence does not reveal a specific answer to the question posed. It is evident, however, that Vietnamese people were being identified based on their perceived race or ethnicity and this is consistent with EK Hoeun’s evidence that, as Khmer Krom persons fell under suspicion, there was an escalation of killing persons perceived as Vietnamese who were left in Tram Kak at that time.<sup>3776</sup>

1123. The documentary evidence confirms the focus on Vietnamese persons in Tram Kak district. A report from a cornfield dated 2 May 1977 discusses PHON Ly, described as a “half breed Khmer-Vietnamese” with a Khmer father and Vietnamese mother.<sup>3777</sup> A report from Popel commune dated 2 May 1977 records the number of Kampuchea Krom and Vietnamese who came to live in the area as being 64 families, totalling 228 persons – describing this group of people as those “exchanged against Yuon”.<sup>3778</sup> This directly corresponds to a partial list of Kampuchea Krom people in Popel commune which provides detailed information on identified families numbered from 36 up to 64 – with the names of husbands, wives and the number of children in each family provided.<sup>3779</sup> This further confirms the evidence of exchanges discussed above and provides substantial corroboration to RY Pov’s account that Khmer Krom had been sent to Popel commune, among other places, as part of an exchange process. Another report from Popel commune dated 4 May 1977 refers to a Khmer Krom called CHAU Ny “who was brought over (to your place), on 3/4/77”.<sup>3780</sup> An undated list identifies more than 54 people as Khmer Krom, mentioning various locations such as Angk Ta Ngel, Trapeang Pring, Trapeang Pou, Trapeang Leang, Trapeang Thma, Ta Sman, Paen Meas, Ta Saom, Prey Kokir.<sup>3781</sup> The Chamber finds that some places mentioned in this list relates to locations in Samraong, Kus and Cheang Tong communes.<sup>3782</sup>

1124. One of the Tram Kak District Records dated 5 June 1977 reports to the district on three people living in different communes who “came from Vietnam” to live there.<sup>3783</sup> A report from Kbal Pour dated 4 August describes Hiek, a New Person, described as “a half-breed Vietnamese”.<sup>3784</sup> A report from Leay Bour commune to the Party dated 4 September 1977 reported on Hi Di, a youth in Leay Bour commune who had said that it would be better to die. There follows an annotation dated 6 September 1977 addressed to Comrade An from Kit stating: “Request that a thorough interrogation be conducted, because this person is an organised string of the CIA”.<sup>3785</sup> The Chamber finds that contents of the report bear no relation whatsoever to anything to do with a foreign intelligence service. 1125. The Chamber finds that the foregoing evidence establishes that large numbers of Vietnamese were gathered up in Tram Kak district from late 1975 into early 1976, with many expelled and/or disappearing. There followed an exchange process whereby a large number of Khmer Krom arrived in Tram Kak district in mid-1976 and were distributed to various communes.<sup>3788</sup> From approximately April 1977 onwards, however, these arrivals fell under increasing suspicion and many were arrested. In addition, the evidence established that persons identified as Vietnamese were being targeted on the basis that they were Vietnamese and instructions to kill Vietnamese were issued at various times, specifically in March 1976.

10.1.11. Tram Kak as a Model District

1126. On 30 March 1976, the CPK Central Committee settled upon a plan to select “model districts” which may be presented with the “Great Leap” Flag.<sup>3789</sup> The June 1977 issue of Revolutionary Flag announced that the Central Committee had decided to award the 1976 “Honorary Red Flag of the Central Committee” to Tram Kak district (together with Prasaut district in the East Zone, and Kompong Tralach Leu district in the West Zone).<sup>3790</sup> The Letter Presenting the Honorary Red Flag of the Central Committee of the CPK published in Revolutionary Flag was dated 30 June 1977 and it described the Red Flag as the CPK’s highest honour.<sup>3791</sup> The text of the letter was broadcast on the radio on the morning of 24 July 1977.<sup>3792</sup> The announcement identified

In addition to Tram Kak district, two further districts received the Honorary Red Flag: Prasaut district in the East Zone and Kampong Tralach Leu district in the West Zone.

It is clear from the structure and content of the broadcast that it corresponds to the letter printed in Revolutionary Flag. However, there are differences in FBIS’s translation of the radio broadcast. In light of this, the Chamber various factors as meriting the award, including increased production, improvements to living standards, independence and self-reliance, revolutionary stance, waging class struggle and a spirit of self-sacrifice and solidarity.<sup>3793</sup>

1127. PECH Chim, the former secretary of Tram Kak district, recalled receiving this award. He described receiving it personally from Ta Mok during a Sector 13 study session. He could not remember the month, and his evidence was inconsistent as to the year, but he remembered it taking place after the harvest season.<sup>3794</sup> Ta Mok said to him that Tram Kak had “scored number 1” and he explained that the honorary red flag was equivalent to a gold medal.<sup>3795</sup> According to PECH Chim, there were three reasons for the award: the district had good forces which had contributed to the revolutionary movement; the majority of the people in the district were middle or lower class and loyal to the revolution; and while the district was poor and the soil of low quality, production was better than other districts and they produced two yields per year.<sup>3796</sup> NUON Chea does not remember the Red Flag or “whatever flag” being given to Tram Kak district specifically.<sup>3797</sup> There is evidence to indicate that news of this award percolated downwards. CHOU Koemlan’s evidence was that the chief of a unit told her that Tram Kak district had been recognised as a model district in terms of its productivity.<sup>3798</sup>

1128. Tram Kak district’s model status was also referred to later occasions. There was a further reference to the award in a radio broadcast on 28 August 1977, which encouraged cooperative peasants throughout the country to cultivate rainy season rice by the end of September 1977.<sup>3799</sup> In September 1977, the Party issued a Special Issue of Revolutionary Flag to celebrate the 17th Anniversary of the Party and POL Pot’s official domestic and international announcement of the existence of the CPK. The first photograph in the issue depicted “Peasants in a cooperative in Tram Kak district” who were said to be “on the offensive spreading fertilizer to care for the wet season rice so it will grow well”.<sup>3800</sup> When the Chinese delegation visited Leay Bour commune in December 1977, they were told that Tram Kak was “one of the three pace-setter districts praised by the CPK Central Committee”.<sup>3801</sup> At a mass meeting on 15 April 1978 to mark the third anniversary of the liberation of Phnom Penh, a resolution was broadcast that, in the field of socialist construction, everybody should solemnly pledge to learn from the progressive production corps including those in Tram Kak district.<sup>3802</sup>

1129. In addition to Tram Kak being a model district, there was a model cooperative in Leay Bour commune which was exhibited to visiting foreigners. ##### 10.1.12.1. CHOU Koemlan’s identification evidence

1131. When interviewed by OCIJ investigators in 2011, CHOU Koemlan described a visit by NUON Chea, KHIEU Samphan, POL Pot and Ta Mok to her worksite at around 8.30 a.m. one morning in February 1977.<sup>3824</sup> She referred to an irrigation canal in Prey Leu, where she worked with 200 other workers and explained that she recognised KHIEU Samphan as soon as he stepped out the car because she had seen pictures of him before.<sup>3825</sup> The day before the visit, her mobile team chief told her that the leaders were going to visit and explained who they were. She elaborated that, when the leaders arrived she had a clear view of them for at least one minute, before she was told to look down and get back to work.<sup>3826</sup> Ta Mok then ordered CHOU Koemlan’s group leader to give the workers sweetened water.<sup>3827</sup> The leaders only spoke with the chiefs and a group of mobile chiefs and commune chiefs followed them around.<sup>3828</sup> She mentioned various others as present in the group including persons she identified as Ta San, Ta Hounh, Ta Nouv and Ta Oeun.<sup>3829</sup>

1132. Before the Chamber, CHOU Koemlan made some corrections to the above account. She clarified that she was not sure of the month: it could have been slightly later in 1977 but it was still the dry season.<sup>3830</sup> She clarified that the visit took place at the Ou Chambak canal worksite rather than Prey Leu (where she also worked).<sup>3831</sup> She corrected that it was the day of the visit itself that she learned the leaders were coming, not the day before.<sup>3832</sup> She estimated there to have been 300 to 400 people digging and carrying soil at the worksite at the time.<sup>3833</sup> She described two vehicles: the leaders were in a black vehicle whereas Ta Mok was in a jeep.<sup>3834</sup> Both vehicles arrived from the north and parked on the roadside around the bend of National Road 2, facing west towards Leay Bour commune, initially at a distance of approximately 100 metres from where CHOU Koemlan was working.<sup>3835</sup> She then saw the four leaders for about 15 minutes when they were standing nearby: they were drinking sugar palm juice and she heard Ta Mok say that if it could not be made, then wine should be added. CHOU Koemlan described the leaders pointing for workers to dig the canal deeper in order to hold more water.<sup>3836</sup> She described the distance between her and the leaders as “pretty close”.<sup>3837</sup> CHOU Koemlan remembered that they walked past to the west of the canal and that she smiled at them while working hard.<sup>3838</sup> They were accompanied by unit chiefs, group chiefs and the commune representatives.<sup>3839</sup> She understood that the leaders came to inspect “the model work site” because Leay Bour was a “model cooperative and we produced good rice product”.<sup>3840</sup>

1133. CHOU Koemlan further explained that she knew Ta Mok from a long time ago because she saw him frequently when he went around inspecting places in 1977.<sup>3841</sup> CHOU Koemlan confirmed that she recognised KHIEU Samphan because his photo had been published in newspapers before the Khmer Rouge came to power, and she had also heard his name during the DK regime.<sup>3842</sup> Her unit chief also identified KHIEU Samphan to her and said they had come to inspect the worksite.<sup>3843</sup> The unit chief also identified NUON Chea to her, apparently having been told his identity by the district chief and commune committee.<sup>3844</sup> After the leaders left, a lunchtime meeting followed where different units of about 30 workers each gathered.<sup>3845</sup> They were told that the leaders had the rank or status equivalent to king in the previous regime.<sup>3846</sup> Ta Oeun, the unit chief, told CHOU Koemlan about the visit.<sup>3847</sup> He described the leaders and specifically identified NUON Chea.<sup>3848</sup> There followed a meeting when the unit chiefs called upon all people, including 17 April and Base People, and instructed them to strengthen their stance in order to follow the “leap forward”.<sup>3849</sup> After lunch they were all called for a meeting by the group and unit chiefs. Her group and unit chiefs recounted having had a meeting under a mango tree with the leaders.<sup>3850</sup>

10.1.12.2. OEM Saroeurn’s identification evidence

1134. OEM Saroeurn also described a visit by Ta Mok, Ta San, NUON Chea, KHIEU Samphan and POL Pot to Ou Chambak in 1977, while she and others were digging a canal to build Ou Chambak “railway station”. She explained that Ta Mok arrived in a jeep from the west, and “Yoeun” told her the names of those persons she had not seen before.<sup>3851</sup> She identified Yoeun as the chief of unit number 3 and a Base Person.<sup>3852</sup> They were standing on the National Road, on her right about five or six metres away.<sup>3853</sup> She saw the leaders for a “brief moment”.<sup>3854</sup> She also mentioned Ta Mok, Ta San, Ta Nouv and Ta Hounh as present at the time, suggesting that they had leadership positions.<sup>3855</sup> OEM Saroeurn explained that she only had a “quick look” at KHIEU Samphan but the leaders’ names were “whispered” to her after they left.<sup>3856</sup>

10.1.12.3. Findings

1135. The Chamber is not satisfied that the identification evidence is sufficiently reliable to establish that NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan visited the Ou Chambak canal worksite in 1977. For instance, the Chamber notes that the Civil Parties identified significant other persons present at the time, such as: Ta Nouv, which the Chamber finds to be a reference to NUT Nov, a member of the Leay Bour Commune Committee until late 1977 and later chief of neighbouring Sre Ronoung commune;<sup>3857</sup> and Ta San, which may refer to NEANG Ouch alias Ta San. Yet NUT Nov testified that he never met KHIEU Samphan and never saw him at Leay Bour or anywhere else.<sup>3858</sup> When CHOU Koemlan’s account was put to NEANG Ouch alias Ta San, he pointed out that he only arrived in Tram Kak district in about June 1977.<sup>3859</sup> He maintained that he never met KHIEU Samphan, and the only time he met NUON Chea was at an annual study session.<sup>3860</sup>

1136. The Chamber further weighs the inconsistencies within and between CHOU Koemlan’s and OEM Saroeurn’s accounts. While the Chamber is satisfied that they both witnessed a visit by some senior leaders to a location where they worked, and it is entirely plausible that NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan indeed visited Leay Bour commune and other locations within Tram Kak district,<sup>3861</sup> in these circumstances their purported identifications of the Accused, made decades later, are insufficiently secure to be relied upon by the Chamber.<sup>3862</sup>

1137. PECH Chim confirmed, however, that both NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan visited Tram Kak district.<sup>3863</sup> He suggested that a person called HOU Sen escorted KHIEU Samphan, but he could not remember when this took place. He then appeared to suggest that this visit took place after PECH Chim had moved to the Central (old North) Zone, but he learned this information on a return visit to Tram Kak district.<sup>3864</sup> In the final analysis, although it is likely that NUON Chea and KHIEU Samphan visited Tram Kak district during the relevant period, and although the Chamber has found above that NUON Chea visited Ta Mok in nearby Takeo town,<sup>3865</sup> the evidence does not establish the circumstances of any particular visit of these leaders to Tram Kak district with sufficient specificity.

10.1.13. Legal Findings

10.1.13.1. Murder and extermination

1138. As limited to Case 002/02, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of murder in relation to Buddhists at the Tram Kak Cooperatives.<sup>3866</sup> The Chamber recalls that the evidence did not establish that monks were killed in Tram Kak district.<sup>3867</sup> The Closing order further charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of extermination in relation to people who were killed or died en masse, including in the Tram Kak Cooperatives.<sup>3868</sup> It finds in general terms

<sup>3861</sup> Tram Kak District Record, E3/4127, 16 January 1978, ERN (En) 00362232 (report from Trapeang Thum South commune to Kraing Ta Chan noting that an enemy had suggested that “KHIEU Samphan used to boast that he served people. But what service? In reality, he travelled by car, ate good foods as he wished while I worked very hard but only had gruel to eat.”).

<sup>3862</sup> The Chamber notes that, although the first recorded identification was by CHOU Koemlan in her 2011 Interview Record, she referred therein to having discussed the visit with her sister “after 1979” who worked in another cooperative 1km away who told her that the leaders also visited that location. See CHOU Koemlan, Interview Record, E3/5635, 28 February 2011, p. 6, ERN (En) 00678307. that perpetrators' acts and omissions caused the deaths of a very large number of people "including through the creation of conditions that were calculated to bring about the destruction of part of the population".<sup>3869</sup> In particular, the Closing Order finds that deaths resulted from the deprivation of food, accommodation, medical care and hygiene, as well as from forced labour.<sup>3870</sup> It clarifies that the "direct perpetrators acted with the knowledge that such [living] conditions would result in a large number of deaths" and "[d]espite being informed of the number deaths resulting from those conditions, they still persisted in imposing them".<sup>3871</sup>

1139. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the charge of extermination is limited to deaths from starvation, health issues and executions of Vietnamese. It further submits that the Closing Order does not establish a link between any lack of food and subsequent diseases.<sup>3872</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence also submits that the charge is restricted to deaths from hunger in two communes only, concerning which the evidence is weak and, on its own, fails to establish deaths on sufficient a scale to satisfy a necessary element of the crime of extermination.<sup>3873</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that the evidence does not establish large scale deaths by killings and, in relation to any deaths which resulted from the conditions, it was not proved they were imposed deliberately in order to cause deaths on any scale.<sup>3874</sup> No other Party responded to the Defence submissions.

1140. The Chamber accepts the KHIEU Samphan Defence's submission that the section of the Closing Order on the Tram Kak Cooperatives does not charge killings (in the sense of executions or other conduct involving direct intent) in general as a basis for the charge of extermination. Although the Closing Order refers to fears of killings, it does not articulate actual killings other than in relation to Kraing Ta Chan or the execution of an unquantified number of Vietnamese.<sup>3875</sup> Although the Closing Order refers to cooperative residents “[continuing] to disappear”,<sup>3876</sup> or people who were “arrested and taken away”,<sup>3877</sup> it does not find that those persons were killed. The Chamber therefore accepts the submission that the charge of extermination is restricted to deaths caused by the conditions imposed in the Tram Kak Cooperatives. It is therefore unnecessary to consider the further submissions on the scale of any further killings indicated in the evidence.

1141. The Chamber rejects the distinction drawn by the KHIEU Samphan Defence between starvation on the one hand, and disease or medical conditions, on the other. The Closing Order expressly refers to deaths from starvation in the Tram Kak Cooperatives,<sup>3878</sup> and it also refers to people dying following inadequate medical treatment.<sup>3879</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that the Closing Order charges extermination in the Tram Kak Cooperatives on the basis of the overall conditions which the Co-Investigating Judges found were imposed.

1142. The Chamber has found that there were periods of acute food shortages in Tram Kak district and that people died as a result.<sup>3880</sup> Food remained generally insufficient until the 1976-1977 harvest, and the period immediately before harvests were particularly inadequate.<sup>3881</sup> The Chamber has established that various people died from malnutrition, overwork and sickness including in later periods and that New People in particular were affected.<sup>3882</sup> Those working at worksites in Tram Kak district had particular problems obtaining food and some died as a result.<sup>3883</sup> Further, people died in the District Hospital among other locations because of inadequate medical treatment, malnutrition and overwork.<sup>3884</sup>

1143. The evidence often failed to establish to the requisite standard, however, whether such deaths occurred on a massive scale in Tram Kak district. Although there are some indications of large-scale deaths, including a suggestion that 500 people may have died in Leay Bour commune alone at one stage,<sup>3885</sup> and some 400 people died at the District Hospital, with larger numbers seemingly dying towards the end of the regime,<sup>3886</sup> the evidence was insufficiently precise in relation to any calculation to bring about the destruction of such large numbers of people. The Chamber is unable to make findings in this regard. The evidence in relation to the intent of the perpetrators was mixed, with local authorities sometimes claiming that they sought to withhold rice for the population in their particular communes.<sup>3887</sup> While the Chamber considers it likely that the overall economic policies implemented by the CPK contributed to large-scale deaths from starvation and overwork in Tram Kak district, the charge of extermination has not been established in relation to the Tram Kak Cooperatives.

1144. However, as set out above, Internal Rule 98(2) provides that the Chamber may change the legal characterisation of the facts set out in the Closing Order, provided that no new constitutive elements are introduced.<sup>3888</sup> In the present case, the Chamber does not introduce new constitutive elements to those in the Closing Order and finds that the above facts satisfy the elements of murder. In particular, the Chamber finds that the actus reus of murder, namely an act or omission of the perpetrator that caused the death of the victim,<sup>3889</sup> is established with respect to the deaths resulting from the working and living conditions described above. The relevant acts and omissions are constituted by the imposition on the inhabitants of the Tram Kak Cooperatives of conditions that caused their death, by the absence of appropriate measures to change or alleviate such conditions and, in particular, the extreme levels of control exerted over the population which left them with no option other than to accept their fate, including when the result was foreseeably going to be fatal.

1145. The Chamber allows for the possibility that some factors beyond the will of the authorities in Tram Kak district may have partly contributed to the lack of food and/or medical facilities at times. The Chamber finds however, that the evaluation of all the evidence clearly establishes that people were deliberately forced to work in a climate of control, threats, fear, hunger and discrimination, with the most extreme consequences for those who protested. The Chamber finds that the maintenance of these conditions for an extended period of time, including after the effects became apparent on workers and also on the weakest inhabitants, including the elderly, the infants and the sick, demonstrates that the authorities in Tram Kak district willingly imposed such conditions with the knowledge that they would likely lead to deaths or in the acceptance of the possibility of this fatal consequence. This satisfies the mens rea of murder in the form of dolus eventualis. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that both the actus reus and the mens rea of murder are established. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of murder is established at the Tram Kak Cooperatives.

1146. Finally, the Chamber recalls that the scope of the charges regarding the treatment of Vietnamese, as set out in the Closing Order and restricted by the Severance Decision, encompasses facts notably related to the following: genocide by killing (nationwide from April 1977 to 6 January 1979); murder as a crime against humanity (Vietnamese who resisted deportation in 1975-1976, and nationwide from April 1977 to 6 January 1979); and extermination as a crime against humanity (nationwide from April 1977 to 6 January 1979). With regard to the facts relevant to Tram Kak district, the evidence did not establish to the requisite standard that Vietnamese who “resisted deportation in 1975-1976” were killed. Further, allegations of executions of Vietnamese mainly related to events in 1976, but the available evidence failed to establish to the requisite standard any particular killings. Therefore, the Chamber will not enter any findings based on the charges of genocide, murder or extermination of Vietnamese in Tram Kak district. Other findings concerning the treatment of Vietnamese in relation to the charges of deportation, persecution on racial grounds, and other inhumane acts in the form of enforced disappearances, are addressed below.

10.1.13.2. Enslavement

1147. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of enslavement on the basis that personnel in the cooperatives deliberately exercised total control and all powers attaching to the right of ownership over inhabitants.<sup>3890</sup> It finds that personnel controlled victims’ physical environment, their access to food and medical care, and subjected them to constant surveillance.<sup>3891</sup> Decisions were taken by local CPK authorities to achieve Party goals, starting with the expropriation of all individual property and imposition of residence in cooperatives.<sup>3892</sup> The Closing Order finds various relevant indicia of enslavement, including: the separation of families; the abolition of religious practices and cultural traditions; the lack of freedom of speech and thought; total control being exercised by the CPK over food, accommodation, access to medical care and movement; constant surveillance by local militia; criticism and self-criticism meetings; enforced disappearances; severe punishment for attempted escapes; the daily use of force; cruel treatment and abuse; and various forms of threats and coercion – all in order to impose compliance.<sup>3893</sup> It further finds that there was forced labour, with work venues and schedules imposed without consent such that people were entirely stripped of their free will in that they dared not refuse for fear of being killed.<sup>3894</sup> It specifies some particular features of the Tram Kak Cooperatives as relevant in this regard, including their creation, progressive collectivisation, forced and difficult labour, a system of surveillance and control over the population, the denial of freedoms, and punishments for those who complained.<sup>3895</sup>

1148. The NUON Chea Defence submits that this charge is based on ignorance or bias against socialism, which is in fact an ideology driven by the people's interests and their standard of living.<sup>3896</sup> It contends that cooperatives were designed to improve people's livelihoods, albeit acknowledging that conditions might have varied in different locations.<sup>3897</sup> Any hardships or shortages must be viewed in context and, properly understood, there was no intention either to mistreat or enslave the population.<sup>3898</sup> The NUON Chea Defence further submits that it was the duty and right of DK citizens to build their country, including through a peasant alliance organised in cooperatives.<sup>3899</sup> It submits that work assigned to able-bodied citizens did not enslave them: rather, it was a legitimate communist system, organising the workforce to create the most value to be distributed equally.<sup>3900</sup> Production targets were a legitimate means to pool limited resources.<sup>3901</sup> The submission made is that, in these circumstances, the work in the cooperatives cannot be characterised as forced. Setting rations and organising the labour force was to ensure the survival of the population in challenging circumstances.<sup>3902</sup> No other Party addressed the particular way in which these submissions were formulated.

1149. As a preliminary point, the Chamber notes that the merits of socialism are not at issue in this case. The only issue to be determined is whether crimes were committed, in this particular context enslavement as a crime against humanity. The pursuit of an ideology or political system, be it socialism or indeed any other, does not change whether the evidence establishes the requisite elements of the crimes charged. The NUON Chea Defence's theoretical submissions are rejected accordingly.

1150. The Chamber has found that all individual property in Tram Kak district was collectivised and the only personal belongings allowed were a plate and spoon, but even those were kept communally.<sup>3903</sup> To break property such as a spoon was considered an extremely serious offence, with offenders considered "enemies of the cooperative".<sup>3904</sup> The population generally had one set of black clothes to last the entire year.<sup>3905</sup> Regular meetings were held when people had to criticise each other, or undergo self-criticism sessions.<sup>3906</sup> Those who arrived in Tram Kak district had to produce biographies.<sup>3907</sup> Food was tightly controlled by the communes and the cooperatives.<sup>3908</sup> People were dependent on their cooperative and commune for rations, with periods of acute shortages and malnutrition resulting.<sup>3909</sup> Lists of people were maintained and these were updated regularly.<sup>3910</sup> Over time the population was categorised and people of the same category were kept together in distinct work units.<sup>3911</sup> Positions of power, however, were reserved for Base People who controlled all matters of daily life including movement, working, eating and sleeping arrangements.<sup>3912</sup> The Chamber has found that the express purpose of the division of the population into different units was to exert control over the population.<sup>3913</sup>

1151. The Chamber has found that the population of Tram Kak district was put to work on extensive irrigation projects.<sup>3914</sup> The Chamber has found objective evidence that people were compelled to work against their will in a situation of extreme fear, and perceived laziness was a ground for re-education, arrest and/or even being sent to Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>3915</sup> Communes were obliged to provide workers for the district mobile forces, which consisted of some 8,000 persons.<sup>3916</sup> The Chamber has found that food could be withheld as a punishment for transgressions or failing to meet quotas.<sup>3917</sup> The division of the population into work units caused significant dislocation to families: an apparent rule that family members were supposed to see each other every 10 days was often not observed in practice.<sup>3918</sup> Children who sought to see their parents could be severely punished.<sup>3919</sup> Access to family members also revolved around days deemed significant by the CPK, such as Party anniversaries.<sup>3920</sup>

1152. The Chamber has established that access to medical treatment was controlled and decided by the local authorities, for example access to the District Hospital required permission from the relevant commune (i.e. the CPK).<sup>3921</sup> Patients were monitored by hospital staff and reported if they said anything considered to challenge the revolution.<sup>3922</sup> Extensive monitoring of people took place in the cooperatives: people reported on each other and militia listened into conversations in houses to see if anything said was contrary to the revolution.<sup>3923</sup> Wholly innocuous conduct and/or speech could be perceived as an attack upon the revolution and/or the collective system, which could result in arrest and death.<sup>3924</sup> Mere perceived opposition to the CPK was a sufficient reason for arrest and people lived in extreme fear.<sup>3925</sup> The Chamber has found that large numbers of people disappeared in Tram Kak district and this contributed to the continuous atmosphere of fear and uncertainty.<sup>3926</sup> The Chamber has further found that religious practices and cultural traditions were forcibly abolished in Tram Kak district.<sup>3927</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that an extreme level of control was exercised over the population of Tram Kak district.

1153. While the degree of control exerted over Base People, in particular Full-Rights People, was less than that exerted over Depositees or New People,<sup>3928</sup> the Chamber is satisfied that Base People were also forced to work, including young children such as MEAS Sokha.<sup>3929</sup> They too were susceptible to arrest and punishment for deeds or thoughts considered contrary to the CPK.<sup>3930</sup>

1154. The Chamber is satisfied that, in the circumstances of this case, the cumulative effect of all these factors amounted to the exercise of all powers attaching to the right of ownership over individuals, reducing them to commodities in pursuit of the CPK's goals. The Chamber recalls that there is no enslavement where the exercise of control has an objective other than enabling the exercise of powers attaching to ownership.<sup>3931</sup> Notwithstanding this, the Chamber is satisfied that numerous indicia of enslavement are established on the facts of this case, including: control over the population's physical environment and freedom of movement; psychological control through criticism and self-criticism sessions, monitoring, reporting and the dislocation of existing family structures; threats of being sent for re-education; subservience to the cooperatives including forced labour; threats, arrests and disappearances. Rations and access to food was a further means by which people were controlled. The Chamber finds that the prevailing regime of mandatory work imposed upon people in the cooperatives entailed their physical and economic exploitation to their physical and psychological detriment. All of these indicia amounted to a highly regimented mixture of indoctrination, threats, restricted movement, forced labour, fear and violence.

1155. The Chamber rejects any notion that these features were justified by the context, or the situation of purported calamity or a national emergency. The Chamber recalls that if a person is required to work in cases of emergency or calamity, the nature and conditions of the work need to be balanced against the nature of the threat to the wellbeing of the community and the circumstances of the emergency. Furthermore, if the crisis or emergency situation is the result of the perpetrator's own unlawful activity then such measures would not be justifiable. However, the nature of the ownership and control over the population bore no relation to the nature of any threat to the wellbeing of the community or the circumstances of any emergency, including the armed conflict and ongoing threat from Vietnam or any other source.<sup>3932</sup> The Chamber is further satisfied that the CPK authorities in Tram Kak district intended to exercise total control over the people and this equated to the powers attaching to the right of ownership over all those persons. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that both the actus reus and the mens rea of enslavement are established. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of enslavement is established at the Tram Kak Cooperatives.

10.1.13.3. Deportation

1156. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of deportation with respect to the removal of a large number of Vietnamese from Tram Kak district.<sup>3933</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that there are defects in the Closing Order which cannot be cured, repeating submissions that the Co-Investigating Judges had no jurisdiction over deportation from Tram Kak Cooperatives.<sup>3934</sup> The Chamber has rejected these challenges.<sup>3935</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that any return of Vietnamese to Vietnam was voluntary and/or that certain elements of the crime are not established, namely their lawful presence on Cambodian territory and the absence of a legitimate justification for their removal.<sup>3936</sup> No other Party addressed these submissions directly.

<sup>3933</sup> Closing Order, paras 320. The Closing Order further finds there is no evidence to suggest that persons thus displaced were not entitled or authorised to reside in the places from which they were displaced, and there is no indication that "cleansing" Cambodia of Vietnamese was conducted for any legitimate reason such as ensuring the security of the population or military necessity. See Closing Order, paras 1397-1399.

1157. The Chamber has found that large numbers of Vietnamese were gathered up in Tram Kak district from late 1975 into early 1976.<sup>3937</sup> In particular, a “huge number” were gathered up from various communes over a four day period in early 1976.<sup>3938</sup> The evidence indicated that people from some communes volunteered to leave and were not, for example, handcuffed during the process.<sup>3939</sup> Other evidence revealed, however, that people from Nhaeng Nhang commune had their hands tied behind their backs.<sup>3940</sup> The evidence revealed another possible explanation for these different events in that certain communes, including Nhaeng Nhang commune, were instructed to organise killings themselves, whereas others involved more direct assistance from the district level.<sup>3941</sup> The Chamber has accepted the generalised evidence that Vietnamese persons vanished and disappeared from Tram Kak district.<sup>3942</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that the overall environment surrounding these events was coercive. The Vietnamese people involved lacked any genuine choice. The Chamber has found that instructions were being issued by the district level to kill and purge Vietnamese persons during the period when they were expelled.<sup>3943</sup> The involvement of Phy and the district militia when SANN Lorn delivered Vietnamese to the District Office confirms this conclusion.<sup>3944</sup> The coordinated and coercive nature of the exercise to gather up such a large number of Vietnamese persons also satisfies the Chamber that they had been lawfully present in Tram Kak district at the time.

1158. The evidence established clear instructions to kill Vietnamese from the district level and the gathering of large numbers of Vietnamese over the course of a few days in 1975 or early 1976. However, the available evidence failed to demonstrate specific instances of particular executions of Vietnamese during this period. Nor did the evidence allow the Chamber to track with specificity the fate of particular Vietnamese persons gathered up at this time. Notwithstanding these evidential gaps, the Chamber is satisfied that the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the overall evidence is that – at a bare minimum – significant numbers of them were expelled to Vietnam, as confirmed by the Chamber’s assessment of the April 1976 issue of Revolutionary Flag and Chamber's findings as to the exchange whereby Khmer Krom arrived in Tram Kak district in return for Vietnamese people who left.<sup>3945</sup> This satisfies the Chamber that some Vietnamese persons gathered up in Tram Kak district indeed crossed the international border and were sent to Vietnam and that there existed an overarching intention to displace these persons across a national border.

1159. Even though this process appears to have taken place as part of an organised and intentional exchange – and was therefore part of an agreement – between DK and Vietnamese authorities, this does not establish that the displacement occurred on a ground permitted under international law – either for the security of the civilian population or for imperative military reasons.<sup>3946</sup> Although the Chamber has found that a state of armed conflict existed between Cambodia and Vietnam from at least May 1975, this does not provide a lawful basis upon which to coercively transfer civilians across the border. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that both the actus reus and the mens rea of deportation are established in relation to the large number of Vietnamese expelled from Tram Kak district and sent to Vietnam without their consent in 1975 and 1976. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of deportation is established at the Tram Kak Cooperatives.

10.1.13.4. Imprisonment

1160. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of imprisonment on the basis of commune militiamen arresting, holding and interrogating people in “a detention centre which was operated by the commune militia”.<sup>3947</sup> It finds that people were arrested after complaining about work or living conditions,<sup>3948</sup> or after being identified for re-education: in the latter case, persons were subsequently sent to Kraing Ta Chan.<sup>3949</sup> The Chamber has held that detention sites such as “Meng's place” at Angk Roka were not charged in the Closing Order, and accordingly does not consider such locations in its evaluation of the charge of imprisonment.<sup>3950</sup>

1161. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the Closing Order purports to charge imprisonment based upon illegal detention at a detention centre in Samrong commune, but that the evidence relied upon relates to another location, outside Tram Kak district.<sup>3951</sup> No other Party made relevant submissions in this regard. The Closing Order refers to “a detention facility run by the subdistrict militia” based on interviews with two persons.<sup>3952</sup> The first interview, with PIL Kheang refers to Paen Meas cooperative in Samraong commune, Tram Kak district. He explained that, although he was sent to Treang district, he returned to the Paen Meas cooperative when the conflict with Vietnam escalated. He described a meeting when he saw males and females who had committed misconduct had their hair shaved in “x” shapes, after which they were paraded then placed in the detention facility.<sup>3953</sup> The second interview, with BUN Thien, is more confusing: it refers to various events in Sector 13 and makes an apparently generalised statement that: “In communes there were no security office; there was only a detention place for militiamen”.<sup>3954</sup> The Chamber accepts that BUN Thien referred to districts other than Tram Kak.

1162. Notwithstanding this apparent error in the Closing Order, the Chamber is satisfied that the Closing Order specifically charges imprisonment with respect to the detention of persons by commune militia. The Closing Order must also be read holistically, and the Chamber notes a related charge of torture committed by commune militia during such detention.<sup>3955</sup>

1163. The available evidence does not establish to the requisite standard the locations and circumstances of any detention sites in the various communes of Tram Kak district. This is understandable given the Closing Order’s focus on Kraing Ta Chan – i.e. the district re-education office. In the circumstances, however, the Chamber is not satisfied that the actus reus of imprisonment is established in relation to events elsewhere in Tram Kak district.

1164. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of torture on the basis of mistreatment during interrogations, aimed at obtaining information and extracting confessions from the victims.<sup>3956</sup> In relation to Tram Kak district, it describes arrests, detention and interrogation performed by commune militia using undefined “hot” and “cold” methods.<sup>3957</sup> More specifically, it describes commune militia arresting, detaining and interrogating people and youths wrapping a person’s face with a plastic sheet.<sup>3958</sup>

1165. The Chamber has held that detention sites such as “Meng’s place” at Angk Roka were not identified in the Closing Order. Therefore the Chamber does not consider such locations in its evaluation of this charge.

1166. The Chamber’s findings on the conduct of interrogations in the communes, outside the context of the provision of biographies and self-criticism meetings, are primarily based on the documentary evidence.<sup>3959</sup> These documents variously refer to the use of “hot measures”, covering a detainees face with a plastic sheet, and contemplate beatings as a possible method of interrogation. The only reasonable interpretation of these documents is that physical violence was indeed used in the communes to extract confessions from arrested persons. The Chamber also accepted THANN Thim’s account that his arrest had followed his young daughter being beaten which caused her to implicate him.<sup>3960</sup>

1167. The Chamber is satisfied that commune militia acted on behalf of the CPK and that the documentary evidence in particular demonstrates that the purpose of acts during such interrogations was to obtain information or a confession. The Chamber concludes, however, that the available evidence is insufficiently precise to allow the Chamber to be satisfied that commune militia inflicted acts which caused severe physical and/or mental pain. There is insufficient detail on the conduct of particular interrogations or any general practice at the commune level. In all the circumstances, the evidence is insufficient to establish specific incidents when torture as a crime against humanity was committed by commune militia in the Tram Kak Cooperatives. The Chamber is therefore not satisfied that the actus reus and the mens rea of torture are established.

10.1.13.6. Persecution on political grounds

1168. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the charge of persecution on political grounds is restricted to three categories of enemy expressly mentioned in the Closing Order under the heading of “Legal Findings” (namely, former Khmer Republic officials, New People and Cambodians returning from abroad).<sup>3961</sup> This submission has been addressed and rejected elsewhere in this Judgement.<sup>3962</sup>

1169. The KHIEU Samphan Defence further submits that the Closing Order does not charge any discrimination against New People because it describes the same treatment applied to all inhabitants.<sup>3963</sup> It submits that the only discrimination charged is a denial of certain political rights, the underlying evidence for which is said to be too weak.<sup>3964</sup> In relation to former Khmer Republic officials and soldiers, the KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that a reference to “surveillance” in the Closing Order is insufficient to amount to persecution, and any other information is too unclear.<sup>3965</sup> No other Party addressed this point directly. The Chamber addresses these submissions in its analysis below.

1170. The Closing Order charges the Accused with persecution on political grounds of “real or perceived enemies of the CPK”, which it defines as those whose real or perceived political beliefs were contrary to the CPK.<sup>3966</sup> The particular acts amounting to persecution must be expressly charged.<sup>3967</sup> According to the Closing Order, such people “were subjected to harsher treatment and living conditions” than the remainder of the population and they were “arrested en masse for re-education and elimination”. Contrary to the submission of the KHIEU Samphan Defence, the Closing Order specifically finds that New People were subjected to harsher treatment than Old People with a view to re-educating them and/or identifying enemies among them.<sup>3968</sup> It further states that “‘enemy’ groups, such as the New People and personnel of the Khmer Republic, were treated differently”.<sup>3969</sup>

1171. The Closing Order finds that the population in the Tram Kak district was divided into three categories, Full-Rights, Candidates and Depositees, with people separated further into various work units.<sup>3970</sup> It finds that there were fewer rights for the Depositees, who were also called New People or 17 April People, and whose units were controlled by Base People.<sup>3971</sup> It states that New People lacked political rights, could not be unit chiefs, and were controlled by Full-Rights or Candidate Persons.<sup>3972</sup> It also finds that New People suffered from particular health problems because they were not used to living in rural areas.<sup>3973</sup> It outlines a process implemented against those persons identified as enemies whereby they would be re-educated by the village and/or commune then, if they continued to disobey, the commune would seek the opinion of the district committee.<sup>3974</sup> The Chamber therefore rejects the KHIEU Samphan Defence’s submissions that the discrimination described in the Closing Order is limited to the mere exercise of certain political rights.

1172. In relation to former Khmer Republic armed forces and police officers, the KHIEU Samphan Defence correctly identifies the Closing Order’s reference to them being “closely monitored”.<sup>3975</sup> However, the Closing Order also refers to a “purge of enemies within and outside the ranks, who had tendency for the LON Nol people”.<sup>3976</sup> It describes how commune militia kept a close eye on arrivals from Phnom Penh and if they said anything against the CPK, they were arrested and taken away.<sup>3977</sup> A later section of the Closing Order on Kraing Ta Chan includes findings relevant to the Tram Kak Cooperatives. It describes the process of arrest before prisoners reached Kraing Ta Chan. It describes of a purge of evacuees and former LON Nol soldiers and officials, with a finding that while many were sent to Kraing Ta Chan, others simply disappeared from the cooperatives.<sup>3978</sup> The Chamber therefore rejects the KHIEU Samphan Defence's submission that the Closing Order only alleges "surveillance" in relation to former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials.

1173. The NUON Chea Defence makes various submissions on the strength or meaning of the evidence relevant to political persecution. It submits that any policy towards former LON Nol soldiers was legitimate and the CPK's focus was on activities which threatened security.<sup>3979</sup> It further submits that New People were members of cooperatives which meant being treated equally.<sup>3980</sup> It contends that there is no evidence of any policy to deliberately subject New People to harsher treatment.<sup>3981</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that the CPK's real aim was to integrate everybody.<sup>3982</sup> It submits that any "temporary formal categories" were introduced only for "administrative purposes" and/or to "address more accurately everyone's needs".<sup>3983</sup> It contends that, once the cooperatives had reached the objective of integrating all people, the categorisations became irrelevant and were abandoned accordingly.<sup>3984</sup> It further submits that, to the extent that categories were even implemented in Tram Kak district, it is not established that any discrimination followed in fact.<sup>3985</sup> No other Party addressed these submissions directly, but the Co-Prosecutors contend that the evidence establishes persecution on political grounds.<sup>3986</sup>

1174. The discernibility of the targeted group may be assessed by examining whether the victims belonged to a category of the group as identified by the Party leadership. The Chamber finds elsewhere in this Judgement that the targeted group of "real or perceived enemies of the CPK" was sufficiently discernible to determine whether consequences occurred for this group.<sup>3987</sup> In relation to New People, the documentary evidence is clear that the CPK continually referred to the New People as a distinct category of persons.<sup>3988</sup> The Chamber is therefore satisfied that this group was sufficiently discernible. The Chamber similarly finds that former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials were identified by the Party leadership, and sufficiently discernible as a group of persons.

1175. The Chamber has found that, in the period immediately after 17 April 1975, members of the former Khmer Republic military and police were screened at Champa Pagoda and, having identified themselves, many were taken away and disappeared never to be seen again.<sup>3989</sup> This included OEM Saroeurn's uncle IM Chak who was taken away and never seen again.<sup>3990</sup> The Chamber has found that the same process took place at other locations in Tram Kak district and victims included RIEL Son's brother-in-law, YA San, and SAO Han's elder brother, LUON Ham.<sup>3991</sup> The Chamber has established that different instructions were disseminated at later points in time. Whereas there was clear plan to purge and kill former Khmer Republic soldiers in Tram Kak district in the aftermath of 17 April 1975,<sup>3992</sup> on at least one occasion thereafter instructions were disseminated not to harm former military officers between the ranks of second lieutenant and colonel.<sup>3993</sup> The Chamber has found that in later periods, however, in particular from April and May 1977, former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials were again targeted for arrest and killed.<sup>3994</sup> A large number of former military families were smashed in Popel commune in May 1977, and the Chamber has established that an organised killing operation was underway in Tram Kak district from April 1977 with large numbers of persons taken to Kraing Ta Chan and "successive instructions" issued to sweep clean former soldiers in particular.<sup>3995</sup> The Chamber is satisfied these persons were targeted on the basis of their former role(s).

1176. In relation to New People more broadly, the Chamber has found that they were classified as Depositees or "parasitic" people in the Tram Kak Cooperatives.<sup>3996</sup> New People were treated as subordinate and had to "bow" to the cooperatives under the control of Base People.<sup>3997</sup> At times and in some locations, there existed entirely separate cooperatives for New People.<sup>3998</sup> At other times and in other locations, the situation was more mixed, but people were still organised into separate groups to work with people of the same categorisation.<sup>3999</sup> Although no such distinction appears to have existed consistently across all mobile units, the evidence did not address the basis on which persons were selected to join these units.<sup>4000</sup> The Chamber has found there was an announcement in mid-1978 that Base and New People were to be treated equally from then onwards.<sup>4001</sup> Whether or not this was entirely implemented is unclear, but the Chamber is satisfied that this announcement confirms there to have been systematic, and widely known, discrimination against New People before mid-1978. The Chamber has further found that the distinction between New and Base People persisted after this announcement.<sup>4002</sup>

1177. The Chamber has found that convincing evidence established that New People received less food than Base People, even after communal dining was imposed and people ate together.<sup>4003</sup> The largest rations were expressly for poor and lower-middle class peasants, whereas persons considered to be “reactionary” received the least.<sup>4004</sup> The Chamber has found that New People in particular suffered and died from malnutrition, whereas Base People were less likely to be malnourished.<sup>4005</sup> The Chamber has further found that working conditions varied depending on a person’s categorisation, with Full-Rights Persons generally enjoying better conditions.<sup>4006</sup> The Chamber has accepted evidence that New People were exposed to miserable treatment and treated as “worthless slaves”, with particular cadres exclusively selected from Base People cursing them or hitting them, including the children of New People.<sup>4007</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that the differentiation between categories of people was deeply ingrained, widely known and implemented throughout Tram Kak district.<sup>4008</sup> Indeed, one of the features in the award of the Red Flag model district award to Tram Kak district in mid-1977 was that the majority of the population were middle or lower class and considered to be loyal to the revolution.<sup>4009</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that the discrimination against New People went much further than matters of political rights or their ability to participate in decisions in the cooperatives or work units. The Chamber has found that New People, Khmer Republic soldiers and officials, and other perceived threats to the CPK were targeted for arrest for innocuous thoughts, speech or conduct considered to be contrary to the revolution.<sup>4010</sup>

1178. The Chamber finds that all these acts were deliberately committed with the intent to discriminate on political grounds, namely against anybody considered to be opposed to the CPK. Having found that the victims were in fact perceived to be enemies and therefore part of the targeted group, the Chamber is satisfied that all the foregoing acts were discriminatory in fact. Acts committed against this group variously infringed upon and violated fundamental rights and freedoms pertaining to movement,<sup>4011</sup> personal dignity,<sup>4012</sup> life, liberty and security,<sup>4013</sup> freedom from arbitrary or unlawful arrest,<sup>4014</sup> a fair and public trial and equality before the law as enshrined in customary international law.<sup>4015</sup>

1179. The Chamber has found that some of the conduct established above amounts to the independent crimes against humanity of enslavement and other inhumane acts. These crimes, considered in the surrounding context and together with the extensive evidence of arrests and killings of New People and former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials in Tram Kak district established above, cumulatively rise to the requisite level of severity such as to constitute persecution. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the actus reus and the mens rea of persecution on political grounds are established. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of persecution on political grounds is established at the Tram Kak Cooperatives.

10.1.13.7. Persecution on religious grounds

1180. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of persecution on religious grounds against Buddhists on the basis that Buddhism was prohibited, pagodas and sanctuaries were destroyed or converted for other purposes, and images of Buddha were also destroyed. It further charges that Buddhist monks and nuns were defrocked and some monks were threatened with death or killed if they did not comply.<sup>4016</sup> In relation to Tram Kak district specifically, the Closing Order charges that religion and associated practices were banned district-wide, and particular reference is made to the forcible defrocking of monks at Angk Roka Pagoda.<sup>4017</sup> The Closing Order also refers to the destruction of statues and the conversion of monasteries variously into meeting halls, detentions centres, dining halls, pig farms and warehouses, with people no longer allowed to perform religious practices such as burning incense, cremating bodies or holding funeral ceremonies.<sup>4018</sup>

1181. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that any reference to the murder of Buddhists is outside the scope of Case 002/02.<sup>4019</sup> No other Party addressed this submission directly, but the Co-Prosecutors referred to evidence that some Buddhist monks were executed, apparently in locations other than Tram Kak district.<sup>4020</sup> The Chamber accepts that the Closing Order does not describe the killing of any monks in Tram Kak district specifically and therefore agrees with the KHIEU Samphan Defence's submission. In any event, the available evidence did not establish that any monks were killed in Tram Kak district.<sup>4021</sup>

1182. The Chamber has already noted various submissions made by the NUON Chea Defence with respect to religious persecution.<sup>4022</sup> The Chamber has found that freedom of thought, conscience and religion is recognised as a fundamental right, and explained that it would assess any restrictions on freedom or manifestation of religion on the facts of the case.<sup>4023</sup> The NUON Chea Defence further submits that there was no prohibition of religion, the CPK did not consider Buddhism to be reactionary, pagodas may have been destroyed during the civil war or by US bombings, and/or the use of pagodas for non-religious purposes was justified in the circumstances.<sup>4024</sup> It submits that the restriction of religious rituals did not violate any fundamental right and accordingly did not amount to the crime of persecution.<sup>4025</sup> The NUON Chea Defence further submits that asking monks to disrobe and work, using pagodas for non-religious purposes and/or the absence of religious rituals, did not constitute discrimination on the basis of religion amounting to persecution.<sup>4026</sup> In essence, the NUON Chea Defence submits that Buddhists were “treated like everyone else in DK” therefore there was nothing persecutory about their treatment.<sup>4027</sup> No other Party addressed these submissions directly.

1183. The Chamber has found that over 100 monks were deliberately gathered at Angk Roka Pagoda and forced to defrock.<sup>4028</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that monks were deliberately gathered up from surrounding areas and sent to Angk Roka Pagoda, including monks such as EM Phoeung who arrived in Tram Kak district from Phnom Penh.<sup>4029</sup> This in turn satisfies the Chamber that those involved in this process identified monks on the basis of their religious identity and targeted them because they were monks. There is no other explanation for the events at Angk Roka Pagoda, particularly noting that the Chamber has found that this followed direct instructions from then District Secretary Yeay Khom.<sup>4030</sup> The Chamber has also found that monks were forcibly disrobed at other pagodas and this reflected the general pattern across Tram Kak district.<sup>4031</sup> While the evidence does not allow the Chamber to make a precise finding as to the total number of monks defrocked in Tram Kak district, the Chamber’s findings demonstrate that hundreds of monks were disrobed across various communes.<sup>4032</sup> The discriminatory intention behind the process is confirmed by references to monks as “worms” or “leeches” and announcements dismissing Buddhism as a mere superstition and the Buddha as “only concrete”.<sup>4033</sup> The Chamber is also satisfied that this group was thus sufficiently discernible.

1184. The Chamber has found that Buddhist symbols were destroyed, and pagodas were no longer allowed to be used for religious purposes, and instead used for a range of other purposes across Tram Kak district.<sup>4034</sup> The Chamber resultantly found that Buddhism was banned.<sup>4035</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that all of these events infringed the fundamental freedom to practise or manifest religion. Contrary to NUON Chea’s submissions, the evidence reveals the complete abolition of Buddhist practices, not a mere restriction on certain manifestations of Buddhism. This was an organised sustained attack against religion because it was considered to be incompatible with the implementation of the revolution.<sup>4036</sup>

1185. The Chamber rejects as misconceived the notion that forcing monks to leave the monkhood did not discriminate against them. The NUON Chea Defence fails to address the importance of religious beliefs and practices to those monks, and their place in Cambodian society at the time. The prior significance of monks was recognised by KHIEU Samphan and POL Pot, among others.<sup>4037</sup> The Chamber rejects the NUON Chea Defence’s submission that monks were “treated like everyone else”. The findings set out above clearly demonstrate that the conduct established in this case intentionally discriminated against Buddhist monks, because they were monks. Further, as the victims of this conduct were members of the targeted religious group (Buddhist monks), the conduct was discriminatory in fact. The NUON Chea Defence fails to address the differing impact which absolute physical equality inevitably has depending on people’s differing backgrounds. To force Buddhist monks to renounce their faith discriminates against Buddhist monks in fact. The result is not equal in fact because the submission ignores the overall gravity of the treatment, in particular what the monks were forced to give up. NUON Chea’s submissions to the contrary are rejected and the Chamber is satisfied that the forcible defrocking of hundreds of monks in Tram Kak district amounted to persecution on religious grounds as a crime against humanity.

1186. The Chamber further finds that the elements of religious persecution are established in relation to the destruction of Buddhist symbols, the disappearance of former monks, the requisition of places of worship, and the banning of outward expression of religious practice or belief. This discriminated against all those who believed in Buddhism and infringed upon the fundamental right to freedom of religion. The NUON Chea Defence's submissions bear no relation to the evidence, which established a district-wide ban on the practice of Buddhism and its manifestation, with no pagodas left to be used for religious purposes.<sup>4038</sup> The Chamber found that the abolition of religious practices, symbolism, and the inability of residents to make offerings to monks, deprived people of their "psychological base".<sup>4039</sup> The evidence did not establish any instances of monks or former monks being forcibly married in Tram Kak district. The Chamber has found elsewhere in this Judgement, however, in general wedding ceremonies were not conducted according to Cambodian tradition.<sup>4040</sup> The Chamber also gives weight to this general finding in assessing the charge of persecution on religious grounds. The Chamber is satisfied that the physical and mental impact of these events infringed fundamental rights to a degree of gravity similar to that of other crimes against humanity. It discriminated in fact because it targeted those with Buddhist beliefs and backgrounds, based entirely on what these places, symbols and practices meant to those persons. Irrespective of whether equality of outcome was the ultimate goal, this discriminated in fact and amounts to the crime against humanity of persecution on religious grounds.

1187. Acts committed against Buddhist monks denied and infringed upon the fundamental right of freedom of thought, conscience and religion.<sup>4041</sup> Further, there was no convincing evidence presented that these restrictions were necessary to protect the public safety, order, health, morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.<sup>4042</sup> The Chamber further finds that the discriminatory acts committed against Buddhist monks in Tram Kak district cumulatively rise to the requisite level of severity such as to constitute persecution. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that both the actus reus and the mens rea of persecution on religious grounds are established. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of persecution on religious grounds is established at the Tram Kak Cooperatives.

10.1.13.8. Persecution on racial grounds

1188. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of persecution on racial grounds on the basis that Vietnamese people were “deliberately and systematically identified and targeted due to their perceived race” as they were perceived by the CPK to be “racially distinct from Cambodian people”.<sup>4043</sup> It refers to the expulsion of Vietnamese people and, in some cases, that they were arrested, detained or killed.<sup>4044</sup> It describes examples of disappearances of Vietnamese from a village (Prey Ta Lei village, Trapeang Thom North commune) and an announcement in Nhaeng Nhang commune that persons of Vietnamese ethnicity would be sent back to Vietnam, with two phases whereby some were “sent home” at first, but others were executed later on.<sup>4045</sup>

1189. The Chamber has found that significant numbers of Vietnamese were deported to Vietnam in the period around 1975 to 1976. The Chamber is satisfied that the persons were targeted for deportation on the discriminatory basis that they were Vietnamese and that the Vietnamese living in Cambodia were sufficiently discernible as a racial group to determine whether consequences occurred for this group. The Chamber is further satisfied that those deported were in fact Vietnamese and that the acts were therefore discriminatory in fact.

1190. The deportations committed against this group variously denied and infringed upon fundamental rights and freedoms pertaining to movement,<sup>4046</sup> personal dignity,<sup>4047</sup> liberty and security,<sup>4048</sup> freedom from arbitrary or unlawful arrest,<sup>4049</sup> a fair and public trial and equality before the law as enshrined in customary international law.<sup>4050</sup> The Chamber has considered this conduct, which amounts to the crime against humanity of deportation, in its surrounding context and finds that it cumulatively rises to the requisite level of severity such as to constitute persecution. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the actus reus of persecution on racial grounds is established in relation to these events in 1975 and 1976.

1191. With respect to the mens rea, the Chamber notes the systematic targeting of Vietnamese individuals due to their perceived race, as evidenced by the instructions and orders given regarding the transportation of Vietnamese, contemporaneous reports, as well as contemporaneous publications in the Revolutionary Flag targeting the Vietnamese. The Chamber is satisfied on this basis that Vietnamese were intentionally targeted in Tram Kak district in relation to the events in 1975 and 1976 on the basis of their race. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the mens rea of persecution on racial grounds is established.

1192. The Chamber has also found that discriminatory animus against the Vietnamese continued later, after mid-1976. Persons continued to be identified on a discriminatory basis, as revealed by the repeated references in the documentary evidence to persons as “half-breed” or “pure Yuon”.<sup>4051</sup> The fate of families was understood by the commune level to turn on whether the entire family was Vietnamese, or whether they were mixed Vietnamese and Cambodian.<sup>4052</sup> However, the evidence is not conclusive as to particular acts being carried out on this basis. Further, the evidence frequently conflated Khmer Krom (not subject to the charge of persecution on racial grounds)<sup>4053</sup> with Vietnamese, meaning that based on the available evidence the Chamber is unable to establish with any certainty whether any conduct was discriminatory in fact for the targeted group. Although the Chamber found that, in general terms, Khmer Krom who arrived in Tram Kak district fell under increasing suspicion and, parallel to this, remaining Vietnamese were also targeted,<sup>4054</sup> the evidence did not establish with sufficient specificity the fate of any particular Vietnamese persons in Tram Kak district during the period after mid-1976. The Chamber's findings in relation to the persecution of Vietnamese on racial grounds are therefore limited to the circumstances surrounding their deportation to Vietnam in the period before mid-1976 in Tram Kak district. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of persecution on racial grounds is established at the Tram Kak Cooperatives within this context only.

10.1.13.9. Other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity

1193. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity for depriving the civilian population of food, shelter, medical assistance, and minimum sanitary conditions, which inflicted serious mental and physical suffering and injury.<sup>4055</sup> It finds that there was a general "lack of food in the cooperatives" with people either afraid to complain, or arrested in the event they did complain.<sup>4056</sup> It finds that many people had health problems, particularly New People who were not used to living in rural areas. It further finds that only rudimentary medical treatment was available, delivered by persons without medical training, and that when people died families were not informed.<sup>4057</sup>

1194. The NUON Chea Defence submits that serious food and health problems arose because of other causes, and the CPK had a legitimate and lawful policy to establish cooperatives.<sup>4058</sup> The NUON Chea Defence highlights the context in which the CPK took over a "country in ruins".<sup>4059</sup> It submits that people's standard of living was central to the CPK's system of governance.<sup>4060</sup> No other Party made specific submissions in response.

1195. The Chamber has found that the period after the arrival of large numbers of evacuees in Tram Kak district involved severe food shortages.<sup>4061</sup> People died as a result, including CHOU Koemlan's baby.<sup>4062</sup> The Chamber has found that there were further times of acute food shortages, in particular in the months before harvests.<sup>4063</sup> Although the general situation improved at the time of the 1976-1977 harvest, further periods of severe food shortages followed.<sup>4064</sup> New People in particular suffered from malnutrition.<sup>4065</sup>

1196. The Chamber has found that the population of Tram Kak district was put to work on extensive irrigation projects, remodelling the rice fields and digging canals and reservoirs.<sup>4066</sup> Conditions at canal worksites in Tram Kak district deteriorated as people had nowhere to relieve themselves so the water supply became polluted and dysentery resulted with no effective treatment available.<sup>4067</sup> The Chamber has established that, although working conditions and hours varied depending on the location and time of year, there were periods of extremely hard work for the population with 3 a.m. starts and night labour.<sup>4068</sup> The tasks performed such as carrying cow dung caused children to seek medical treatment at the District Hospital.<sup>4069</sup>

1197. The Chamber has established that medical facilities available in Tram Kak district, in particular at the District Hospital, were completely inadequate. To complain was considered to be an attack against the cooperatives.<sup>4070</sup> The food available in the hospital was also inadequate.<sup>4071</sup> The medical staff did not have any real medical training.<sup>4072</sup> Instead, persons with medical experience such as KEO Chandara were sent to perform manual labour in order to temper themselves.<sup>4073</sup> Although the Chamber accepts that shortages of medicines and other supplies may have resulted from a variety of factors, there is no rational justification for staffing medical facilities in this way. The Chamber has further found that access to medical treatment was restricted and

1198. The conditions in the Tram Kak Cooperatives were such that some people tried to escape, or expressed secret plans to escape, which was considered to be a reason for arrest.<sup>4076</sup> The Chamber has found that there existed a pervasive atmosphere of fear because there were so many arrests and disappearances, with people unwilling to say anything which might be considered to challenge the CPK.<sup>4077</sup> People were also afraid that falling sick and being unable to work would lead them to be accused of having mental problems.<sup>4078</sup> The Chamber has found elsewhere in this Judgement that large numbers of persons were arrested and taken to Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre, often for wholly innocuous “offences”.<sup>4079</sup> The Chamber has found that the imposition of work units on the population caused extreme dislocation to existing family structures, with people losing track of their relatives and unaware of their ultimate fate to this day.<sup>4080</sup>

1199. The Chamber finds that the nature of the conditions in the Tram Kak Cooperatives, in particular the circumstances of forced work in conditions of extreme hunger, fear, with wholly inadequate medical care, constituted serious attacks against human dignity that were of a nature and gravity similar to other enumerated crimes against humanity. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the actus reus of other inhumane acts is established in light of the continuous subjection of people to serious mental and physical suffering or injury. The Chamber is also satisfied that the mens rea of other inhumane acts is established in light of the widespread and repeated nature of this conduct pursuant to the mass irrigation projects being undertaken in Tram Kak district. The Chamber allows for the possibility that other factors may also have contributed to a lack of food and/or medical facilities at times. Notwithstanding this possibility, the Chamber finds that the evaluation of all the evidence before it clearly establishes the existence of intentional attacks against humanity in this case by very deliberately forcing people to work in a climate of control, threats, fear, hunger and discrimination, with the most extreme consequences hanging over individuals should they complain or question the CPK's policies. The Chamber therefore finds that the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity is established at the Tram Kak Cooperatives.

10.1.13.10. Other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances

1200. The Closing Order charges the Accused with other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances on the basis of the arrest, detention or abduction of loved ones in conditions which placed them outside the protection of the law and the refusal to provide access to, or convey information, on the fate or whereabouts of such persons.<sup>4081</sup> It describes a modus operandi which concealed the fate of individuals with authorities providing false reasons to justify disappearances.<sup>4082</sup> It refers to a climate of “uncertainty and terror” that disappearances generated.<sup>4083</sup> In relation to Tram Kak district, it describes the arrest of persons by militia – with residents of the cooperatives continuing to disappear during the regime, often taken away at night.<sup>4084</sup>

1201. The Chamber has found that a number of specific persons were detained and disappeared in Tram Kak district, including from Champa Pagoda in the immediate aftermath of 17 April 1975, for example OEM Saroeurn's uncle IM Chak, among other persons.<sup>4085</sup> Others persons who disappeared following actions by the CPK authorities included RIEL Son's brother YA San,<sup>4086</sup> his uncle LONG Neak<sup>4087</sup> and his brother RIEL Oem,<sup>4088</sup> SAO Han's elder brother LUON Han,<sup>4089</sup> IM Vannak's brother IM Mach,<sup>4090</sup> various relatives of LOEP Neang,<sup>4091</sup> TAK Sann's husband<sup>4092</sup> and people from Angk Roka Pagoda (other than monks).<sup>4093</sup> After evacuees started to settle into cooperatives, biographies were taken and former soldiers and teachers continued to simply disappear.<sup>4094</sup> Political opponents and/or serious offenders could be arrested and disappeared.<sup>4095</sup> Vietnamese persons were rounded in 1975 and 1976, following which they were deported and/or disappeared from Tram Kak district.<sup>4096</sup> The Chamber has accepted evidence that whole families of Khmer Krom disappeared.<sup>4097</sup> This is consistent with the Chamber's findings in relation to Kraing Ta Chan that lists of Khmer Krom were prepared in various communes in late April 1977.<sup>4098</sup> This further satisfies the Chamber that Khmer Krom were targeted for arrest and they disappeared. OEM Sarouern's husband OY Mut and various other family members disappeared, and the Chamber found that the only reasonable inference was that they were killed.<sup>4099</sup> YEM Khonny's family members were placed on a truck and left, after which she never saw them again.<sup>4100</sup>

1202. The Chamber finds the arrest of THANN Thim to be instructive because, although he survived despite having been implicated by his younger daughter, his family had no idea what became of him during the three months he was detained.<sup>4101</sup> Weighing also the Chamber's finding in relation to Kraing Ta Chan, the Chamber is satisfied that disappearances from the Tram Kak Cooperatives were widespread, with people taken from villages and worksites, never to return.<sup>4102</sup> These incidents also demonstrate that disappearances occurred in circumstances where persons were deprived of their liberty, and that widespread arrests were performed by agents on behalf of the CPK.

1203. The Chamber has found that District Secretary PECH Chim was regularly approached by people enquiring about the fate of their relatives. PECH Chim juxtaposed this with Yeay Khom's tenure as District Secretary when people were too scared to approach her.<sup>4103</sup> The Chamber finds that this evidence demonstrates the total absence of any lawful process whereby persons could properly seek and obtain information about the fate of their relatives. At most this indicates that the District Secretary could, if he or she chose, provide some information or take steps in relation to a person who had been arrested. But this was not a measure generally available to people throughout the Tram Kak district because it depended upon access to the District Secretary and it depended entirely on the perceived personality of the District Secretary rather than any lawful process. This finding applies throughout the relevant period. The Chamber is satisfied that this climate amounted to a generalised refusal to provide information about the fate of disappeared persons. The Chamber is further satisfied that enforced disappearances were much more widespread than the specific instances identified above, and recalls in this regards its findings in relation to persons taken to Kraing Ta Chan Security Centre.

1204. The Chamber accordingly finds that enforced disappearances occurred in the Tram Kak Cooperatives. These enforced disappearances constituted attacks on human dignity against those who disappeared, and caused serious mental or physical suffering to those left behind without any information as to their fate. In this context, the Chamber recalls it accepted EK Hoeun's evidence that people shivered with fear because of the widespread arrests.<sup>4104</sup> Considered holistically in the atmosphere of fear that permeated the worksite, the disappearances were of a nature and gravity similar to other enumerated crimes against humanity. The actus reus of the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts is therefore established. The mens rea of the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts is also established in light of the widespread and repeated nature of this conduct, establishing that it was performed intentionally. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances is established at the Tram Kak Cooperatives.

11. WORKSITES

11.1. Trapeang Thma Dam Worksite

11.1.1. Closing Order

1205. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crimes against humanity of (i) murder; (ii) extermination; (iii) enslavement; (iv) persecution on political grounds; and other inhumane acts through (v) attacks against human dignity; (vi) conduct characterised as forced marriage; (vii) conduct characterised as rape within the context of forced marriage and (viii) conduct characterised as enforced disappearances at the Trapeang Thma Dam.<sup>4105</sup> The Chamber notes that the charges of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as forced marriage and conduct characterised as rape within the context of forced marriage related to this crime site are dealt with in the section on Regulation of Marriage.<sup>4106</sup>

11.1.2. Preliminary Issues

1206. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the Closing Order mistakenly charges other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances at the Trapeang Thma Dam on the basis of facts that were not mentioned in the Introductory Submission. It contends in particular that paragraph 46 of the Co-Prosecutors' Introductory Submission does not mention the disappearance of workers at the worksite.<sup>4107</sup> As a consequence, in its view, KHIEU Samphan does not have to answer to charges of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances.<sup>4108</sup> In this respect, the Chamber notes that the KHIEU Samphan Defence did not raise these issues as part of its preliminary objections.<sup>4109</sup> Therefore, the Chamber finds that these arguments have been raised outside of the time limit set by Internal Rule 89 and rejects them as belated.<sup>4110</sup>

1207. The KHIEU Samphan Defence further submits that the residual category of other inhumane acts constituting a crime against humanity “did not tally with the subdivisions of the Closing Order and then of the 002/01 Judgment” at the time of the facts.<sup>4111</sup> The Civil Party Lead Co-Lawyers refer to the Supreme Court Chamber’s determination that enforced disappearances, forced transfer and attacks on human dignity did not exist as separate categories of crimes against humanity in 1975.<sup>4112</sup> No other Party makes relevant submissions in this regard. The Chamber recalls that none of the categories of conduct underlying the charged crime of other inhumane acts, including attacks against human dignity, had crystallised as independent crimes against humanity by 1975,<sup>4113</sup> and therefore it will assess all relevant facts against the definition of other inhumane acts.

11.1.3. General Considerations on Evidence

1208. In reaching the findings below, the Chamber has relied primarily on the live testimony of 11 witnesses and four Civil Parties who testified on the topic of the Trapeang Thma Dam.<sup>4114</sup> One other Civil Party heard during another trial topic provided information relevant to the administrative structures of the Northwest Zone.<sup>4115</sup> The Chamber has taken into account previous statements of these witnesses and Civil Parties with a view to determining their overall credibility and assessing any inconsistencies in their evidence. The Chamber also relied on the statements provided by one witness before the Supreme Court Chamber.<sup>4116</sup> The Chamber has further considered a number of other statements from individuals who did not appear before it. The Chamber has made use of these statements in accordance with the principles outlined in the Preliminary Issues section of this Judgement.<sup>4117</sup> With respect to IM

Chaem, the Chamber recalls its decision not to call her to testify as, during the proceedings in Case 002/02, she was a charged person in a judicial investigation partly related to facts relevant to the Trapeang Thma Dam Worksite.<sup>4118</sup> However, the Chamber has considered a statement she made to DC-Cam which was admitted into evidence.<sup>4119</sup> Some general considerations on the evidence are set out below.

1209. The Chamber finds the testimony of Witness CHHUM Seng, a company chief within one of the mobile units operating at the Trapeang Thma Dam, and the evidence provided by Civil Party SEN Sophon, a New Person<sup>4120</sup> and a worker at the construction site, particularly relevant to many aspects of the structure and functioning of the Trapeang Thma Dam.<sup>4121</sup> Their in-court statements were consistent with previous statements provided during the investigative phase or to DC-Cam, and the Chamber thus relies extensively on their recollection of the events.

1210. The Chamber finds that Witness LING Lrysov, who was a member of a mobile unit and worked at the Trapeang Thma Dam construction site, had memory problems, <sup>4120</sup> The people evacuated from Phnom Penh and other cities were referred to as “17 April People” or “New People”, whereas those coming from the villages were called “Base People” or “Old People”. See also, T. 20 August 2015 (LING Lrysov), E1/334.1, p. 47 (explaining that her understanding was that “the New People came from Phnom Penh”). The Chamber heard evidence that the term “17 April People” was used to refer to both the New People and the Old People. See T. 30 November 2015 (PAN Chhuong), E1/359.1, pp. 59-60 (testifying that both New People and Old People were called “17 April People”); T. 19 August 2015 (TAK Boy), E1/333.1, p. 46 (“Q. Could you tell the Court whether there were any differences regarding work conditions between the 17 April People and the Base People? A. Regarding this matter, I could tell you that, in fact, they were all the 17 April People, and the difference was that one group of people had been living in the city, and the other one had been living in the villages.”); T. 27 October 2015 (MUN Mot), E1/357.1, p. 31; T. 11 August 2015 (KAN Thorl), E1/328.1, p. 29. The Chamber will hereinafter only use the terms “New People” and “Old People” to distinguish between people evacuated from the cities and those coming from villages, respectively. The Chamber also notes that it refers to New Person or Old Person to indicate an individual who was identified as being part of the New People or the Old People, respectively.

<sup>4121</sup> T. 17 August 2015 (CHHUM Seng), E1/331.1; T. 18 August 2015 (CHHUM Seng), E1/332.1; T. 19 August 2015 (CHHUM Seng), E1/333.1; T. 27 July 2015 (SEN Sophon), E1/323.1; T. 28 July 2015 (SEN Sophon), E1/324.1. The Chamber notes that while CHHUM Seng himself testified that he was a company chief (T. 17 August 2015 (CHHUM Seng), E1/331.1, pp. 51-52), Witness MUN Mot, who knew CHUUM Seng and was himself a company chief at the Trapeang Thma Dam, said that CHHUM Seng was a platoon chief within his company (and not a company chief) and that later he was reassigned to a different unit (T. 27 October 2015 (MUN Mot), E1/357.1, pp. 11-12). The Chamber considers CHHUM Seng to be a credible witness and finds that he was in a better position to know what his role was at the time, being the person concerned. The Chamber therefore prefers his testimony on this point to that of MUN Mot.

which she admitted, and could not recall many of the events she experienced.<sup>4122</sup> She had to be reminded frequently of specific information provided in her written record of interview and at times she provided contradictory statements or denied the accuracy of information previously given to OCIJ investigators. For example, while in court she said that she got malaria when working at the Trapeang Thma Dam and was taken to hospital, in her written record of interview she had stated that she got malaria while farming at Kampong Thom.<sup>4123</sup> When confronted with this inconsistency, the witness said that her statement to OCIJ investigators was not correct.<sup>4124</sup> After initially indicating in court that she had never seen any killings at the worksite, she was reminded that she stated to OCIJ investigators that she saw a pregnant woman being tied, beaten and dropped by three “Khmer Rouge [...] killers [...] in black uniform[s]” into the pit of the first bridge’s edge of Trapeang Thma Dam.<sup>4125</sup> Following this reminder she amended her testimony to say that she had witnessed this killing.<sup>4126</sup> Furthermore, in court she stated that she had only seen one incident where 15 to 20 people were arrested and tied up one behind the other.<sup>4127</sup> She added that she heard these people crying and begging for their release, and being beaten with sticks, after which “they were silent”.<sup>4128</sup> However, she was “so afraid that [she] did not dare look at this execution scene”.<sup>4129</sup> When reminded that in her written record of interview she had indicated that she saw people being arrested three times at the worksite, she said she did not remember this.<sup>4130</sup> In light of these issues, the Chamber has decided to rely on this witness’s testimony only where it is consistent with other evidence.

1211. The Chamber finds the evidence of Witness CHHUY Huy, who stated in court that he was a company chief in the Sector 5 mobile unit at the Trapeang Thma Dam construction site,<sup>4131</sup> at times inconsistent with the previous statements he provided to OCIJ investigators. For example, during his interview with the OCIJ investigators he stated that he saw a man being shot at the construction site.<sup>4132</sup> Conversely, in court he stated that this event occurred at night time, and that he did not see it, but only heard the gunshot and “assumed that the man was killed”.<sup>4133</sup> Moreover, the witness could not recall many aspects of his experience during the DK period.<sup>4134</sup> The Chamber notes that six years passed between CHHUY Huy’s interview with the OCIJ investigators and his in-court testimony, which makes memory loss likely. The Chamber approaches his evidence with caution and relies on it only where it is corroborated by other evidence.

1212. With respect to Witness TAK Boy, a platoon chief within one of the mobile units operating at Trapeang Thma Dam,<sup>4135</sup> the Chamber does not find any inconsistency in his testimony about his role as a LON Nol soldier. In fact, the witness stated at the beginning of his testimony that he was a “private, a rank-and-file soldier” and that he “did not hold any position” at that time.<sup>4136</sup> TAK Boy affirmed this later in his testimony when asked by the NUON Chea Defence.<sup>4137</sup> The Chamber also finds credible the witness’s explanation as to why he was not killed despite his background as a LON Nol soldier. In particular, TAK Boy testified that he wrote several biographies where he indicated that he was a soldier for only a short period of time in order to conceal his membership in the LON Nol army, and finally, when asked by the new cadres coming from the Southwest Zone, claimed that he had always been an ordinary citizen.<sup>4138</sup> He also explained that as a private he was sent to be re-educated.<sup>4139</sup> The witness further said that he was placed under the command of people from the Northwest Zone who, in fact, were people from his area, village or commune.<sup>4140</sup> The Chamber finds this explanation consistent with his previous statements to DC-Cam.<sup>4141</sup> This explanation is also consistent with the evidence provided by CHHUM Seng, a company chief at the Dam, who indicated that at the beginning of the DK period there was a certain degree of tolerance towards former LON Nol soldiers as the militiamen in the villages had personal links with some of them.<sup>4142</sup> The Chamber notes that there appears to be an inconsistency in the witness's testimony about his position within the mobile unit while working at the Trapeang Thma Dam. While in his statement to OCIJ investigators he said that he was an "ordinary member in a company of 100 men", in court he consistently stated that he was a platoon chief.<sup>4143</sup> As his former statement was not confirmed in court, the Chamber relies on his live testimony that he was a platoon chief.

<sup>4131</sup> T. 24 August 2015 (CHHUY Huy), E1/335.1, pp. 11-12. The Chamber notes that the witness initially stated that he was the chief of “a 55-member squad”. See T. 24 August 2015 (CHHUY Huy), E1/335.1, p. 11. However, on further questioning, he confirmed he was a company chief.

1214. With respect to Witness PAN Chhuong, who was a cadre assigned to the Trapeang Thma Dam, the Chamber notes that there are numerous inconsistencies in his evidence. In court he denied being the deputy chief of the Sector 5 mobile unit, contrary to what he had stated in one of his OCIJ interviews and in his DC-Cam statement.<sup>4144</sup>

However, the witness admitted that he reported to Ta Val and was in charge of the Dam when the latter was absent, stating that he was called the “commander of the battlefield”, which meant that he had “to go around all places where our workers were performing their tasks on dam construction”.<sup>4145</sup> Regarding work quotas, he initially said that there was none, but later stated that at Trapeang Thma Dam there was a three-cubic-metre work quota.<sup>4146</sup> He also stated that the three-cubic-metre work quota was not implemented while he was working at Trapeang Thma Dam and that such quota might have been imposed at the worksite only after he was reassigned to the fishing unit. Moreover, while the witness indicated in his DC-Cam statement that the work quota was imposed by the Sector committee and Ta Hoeng in particular, in court he initially denied that the Sector committee decided on the work quota and stated that the work quota was imposed by the regiment commanders, and later indicated that he did not know who actually set the quota.<sup>4147</sup> Furthermore, while in his DC-Cam statement PAN Chhuong stated that he attended a meeting called by Ta Rin and IM Chaem at the time the Vietnamese attacked Svay Rieng, in court he denied having attended such a meeting.<sup>4148</sup> The witness explained this inconsistency by saying that the minute-taker from DC-Cam recorded his statement incorrectly. He subsequently stated that he heard of this meeting from others who attended the meeting.<sup>4149</sup> The Chamber finds that, due to his position in the Sector 5 mobile unit and the fact that he worked closely with Ta Val, PAN Chhuong had access to relevant information about the functioning and reporting structure of the Trapeang Thma Dam and Sector 5. However, the inconsistencies described above indicate that the witness tried to downplay his role. Additionally, even taking into consideration the impact of the time passed since the events and between the statements, some of the discrepancies are too significant to be explained by the passage of time. In light of this, the Chamber approaches this witness's testimony with particular caution and assesses whether it may be relied upon on a case-by-case basis.

Mobile units of Sector 5 consisted of about three to four companies and about five to six platoons (each company consisted of 100 people and each platoon consisted of 30 people).” See CHHAY Phan Interview Record, E3/9497, 19 May 2013, p. 5, ERN (En) 00950737.

1215. The Chamber has also considered a number of contemporaneous documents which were tendered into evidence by the Parties in this trial. These documents have been relied on in particular to reach conclusions as to the exact dates in which the alleged events took place.<sup>4150</sup>

1216. The Chamber has received documentary evidence of a visit of Yugoslavian journalists to the Northwest Zone and the Trapeang Thma Dam. An undated telegram reporting on this visit was sent by Kan and copied to Uncle, Uncle Nuon, Brother Van, Brother Vorn, Office and Documentation and received on 15 March 1978.<sup>4151</sup> It appears from the report that the CPK cadres provided the journalists with information on the construction project, the number of workers involved in it, the food provided to workers, the regulation of marriage among workers at the Dam, work conditions and other related matters. The Chamber notes that some of the comments made by the CPK cadres as reported in this telegram appear to minimise the problems experienced by workers at the site and give a better picture of conditions than these were in reality. In this regard, it was reported that the cadres stated: “[i]t is not difficult here. There is a three-day break per month and one morning or one or two hours are spent for education.”<sup>4152</sup>

1217. The visit to DK and Trapeang Thma Dam is also described in a report prepared by the Yugoslavian journalists dated 31 March 1978.<sup>4153</sup> The Chamber finds that the Party Centre wanted to strictly control the information accessible to the visitors, as illustrated by the fact that the Khmer Rouge did not allow them to talk to the workers “at any great length” or visit the kitchens at the locations visited.<sup>4154</sup> Further, it appears that the information provided to the journalists did not accurately reflect the situation in the country, but was rather intended to give a picture of the working and living conditions which accorded to the CPK official discourse and propaganda. This is illustrated by the fact that the journalists reported being told that the workers were given three portions of rice a day and always enough meat and fish to eat,<sup>4155</sup> and that they could communicate with their cousins and friends through local couriers who conveyed letters.<sup>4156</sup>

11.1.4. Location and Establishment

1219. The Trapeang Thma Dam construction site was located in the Paoy Char commune, Phnom Srok district, Battambang province (present-day Banteay Meanchey province).<sup>4157</sup> Pursuant to the CPK administrative division of Democratic Kampuchea, Trapeang Thma Dam was located in Sector 5 of the Northwest Zone.<sup>4158</sup> The Dam had two dykes: one that was approximately nine kilometres long running east-west along the south side of the reservoir, and one that was approximately 13 kilometres long running north-south along the east side of the reservoir.<sup>4159</sup> Bridge 1 was situated west of the nexus of the two dykes. Bridge 2 was 3.2 kilometres west of Bridge 1. Bridge 3 was a further 3.5 kilometres west of Bridge 2.<sup>4160</sup> The Trapeang Thma Dam has been “rehabilitated” in 2004 to harden its structure, and it still exists today with the same main features and the same size.<sup>4161</sup>

The Chamber received evidence placing the start of the Dam’s construction between early 1976 and early 1977.<sup>4162</sup> However, the evidence shows that there was a peak of activity during the year 1977, which coincided with the visit of a Chinese delegation accompanied by POL Pot and other senior CPK leaders in December 1977.

1221. Workers were told that the construction had to be completed in a short period of time.<sup>4163</sup> The Dam was largely completed by the end of 1977 or mid-1978, with some workers remaining on site until the arrival of the Vietnamese troops.<sup>4164</sup>

The Chamber notes that Witness PAN Chhuong testified that no timeline was set for the completion of the Trapeang Thma Dam and that they “could complete the dam worksite whenever we were able to”. See T. 30 November 2015 (PAN Chhuong), E1/359.1, p. 69. The Chamber notes that PAN Chhuong provided a different statement to DC-Cam in this respect, explaining that Ta Hoeng instructed that the plan had to be completed as soon as possible and that workers had to finish three cubic metres per day. See PAN Chhuong DC-Cam Interview, E3/9094, p. 30, ERN (En) 00728670. In light of this inconsistency, the Chamber does not consider that this evidence undermines the other witnesses’ evidence that there was a specific timeline for the completion of the Dam and that workers were instructed to complete their tasks as soon as possible.

1222. The Closing Order finds that an inauguration ceremony was held at the Dam in December 1977 which was presided over by POL Pot accompanied by a Chinese delegation and attended by senior CPK cadres.<sup>4165</sup> The Chamber heard conflicting statements on this event and finds that the available evidence does not establish beyond reasonable doubt when, if ever, the Trapeang Thma Dam was “inaugurated”.<sup>4166</sup> However, the evidence is clear in showing that on 8 December 1977, when the construction of the Dam was almost completed, the Chinese Vice-Premier CHEN Yonggui visited the Trapeang Thma Dam together with CPK Secretary POL Pot, Northwest Zone Secretary RUOS Nhim and VORN Vet.<sup>4167</sup> This visit followed a trip While TAK Boy referred to the movie shot in China being screened during the meeting in both his DC-Cam Interview and in court, the witness did not indicate in court that the meeting took place on the occasion of the 17 April Anniversary (which he indicated in his DC-Cam Interview), and he did not state in his DC-Cam Interview that the visitor was Chen Yonggui (which he did in court). The Chamber is therefore unable to conclude that the meeting this witness testified about in court is the same as the one he discussed in his DC-Cam Interview and thus occurred around April 1977). See also, PHI Phuon Interview Record, E3/9536, 28 November 2013, p. 5, ERN (En) 00975046 (“In mid-1977, I came to visit Trapeang Thma reservoir dam with the delegations of diplomatic corps from countries such as Romania, Yugoslavia, Cuba, Vietnam, Laos etc.”). See above, paras 1216-1217. See below, paras 1253, 1254-1259.

It was the decision from the Zone and the higher level. So that was not actually the decision of the sector. This is to my knowledge.”). The Chamber notes that in his DC-Cam Interview, the witness indicated that “the irrigation project” came from the “Central Party” from Phnom Penh and that they asked the local authority to conduct a study on

among zone, sector, district and mobile unit chiefs to discuss the construction project.<sup>4171</sup> CHHIT Yoeuk indicated that he was told that “Central Party members” also

However, the witness also indicated that “all the tasks could not be only decided by Ta Val and Ta Hoeng. Without the instructions from the upper echelon, the lower level could not do the work as they wanted. See T. 30 November 2015 (PAN Chhuong), E1/359.1, p. 71; Weekly Report of Sector 5 Committee, E3/178, 21 May 1977, p. 14, ERN (En) 00342721 (talking about fulfilling “the 77 duty”); Section 10.1.7.1: Tram Kak Cooperatives: Economic Plans and Production Targets.

The witness also testified that Ta Val and Ta Hoeng, his two direct supervisors and the only people he personally knew among the participants, took part in this meeting); T. 13 August 2015 (CHHIT Yoeuk), E1/330.1, pp. 42-43 (testifying that he was told that a meeting was held in Svay and a subsequent meeting was held at Trapeang Thma Dam, and that information was disseminated on the Dam construction work plan). The Chamber notes that in his DC-Cam Interview, CHHIT Yoeuk indicated that the meeting in Svay Sisophon was held one or two months before the construction of the Dam began in order to conduct a study on the site before making the decision and forming a committee. See CHHIT Yoeuk DC-Cam Interview, E3/9008, p. 23, ERN (En) 00731127. The witness also indicated that Ta Val, Ta Nhim, members of the Sector Committee and people from the “Central Party” were present at the meeting. However, in court the witness only confirmed that they were told that “tomorrow there will be a meeting with Central Party members, district committee, chief of zone and region” and that he did not know the details of the names of those people. See T. 13 August 2015 (CHHIT Yoeuk), E1/330.1, pp. 42-43. With respect to this meeting in Svay Sisophon, the Chamber also notes that PAN Chhuong testified that the meeting was held once the preparatory works for the Dam had been completed. See T. 30 November 2015 (PAN Chhuong), E1/359.1, p. 52. Despite a discrepancy between the two witnesses’ recollection of the timing of this meeting, the Chamber finds that they testified about the same event. The Chamber thus concludes that a meeting was held to discuss the work at the Trapeang Thma Dam, and that cadres from the zone, sector, district and mobile unit levels participated in it.

participated in this meeting.<sup>4172</sup> The Chamber notes, however, that this witness did not attend the meeting. Given that PAN Chhuong, who was present at the meeting in Svay, provided no evidence regarding the presence of “Central Party members” at that meeting, the Chamber is not able to conclude that “Central Party members” participated in the meeting regarding the construction of the Dam.<sup>4173</sup> CHHIT Yoeuk also testified that people from the Sector came often to support, consult and discuss the issues related to the Dam’s construction.<sup>4174</sup>

<sup>4174</sup> T. 13 August 2015 (CHHIT Yoeuk), E1/330.1, p. 79 (explaining that people from the sector level came to the Dam two or three times per month). The Chamber notes that CHHIT Yoeuk knew very well the structure of the Preah Netr Preah district and who was who in Sector 5 (see CHHIT Yoeuk Interview Record, E3/9456, 26 April 2013, p. 4, ERN (En) 00923046 in particular, where he talks about Ta Hoeng, Ta Cheal and Rin), because he worked in the administrative section of Preah Netr Preah district (CHHIT Yoeuk Interview Record, E3/9456, 26 April 2013, p. 3, ERN (En) 00923945) and as a member of militia reporting to Sector 5 army chief (CHHIT Yoeuk Interview Record, E3/9456, 26 April 2013, p. 4, ERN (En) 00923046). It therefore seems reasonable that he knew who the people from the Sector level who came to the Dam were.

<sup>4175</sup> T. 17 August 2015 (CHHUM Seng), E1/331.1, pp. 70 (explaining that he knew the principal head in charge of the sector’s mobile brigades, Ta Val), 71 (explaining that Ta Val had overall supervision over the battalion and that he directly supervised all forces in the mobile brigades of Sector 5), 88 (explaining that he was quite close to Ta Val and received orders from him); T. 19 August 2015 (CHHUM Seng), E1/333.1, p. 3 (testifying that Ta Val was in charge of three battalions involved in the construction of Trapeang Thma Dam); T. 27 July 2015 (SEN Sophon), E1/323.1, p. 47 (stating that Ta Val had overall supervision over Sector 5); T. 28 July 2015 (MAM Soeurm), E1/324.1, pp. 56, 61; T. 26 October 2015 (MUN Mot), E1/356.1, p. 57 (testifying that Ta Val was the Sector 5 mobile unit chief); T. 11 August 2015 (LAT Suoy), E1/328.1, p. 64 (testifying that Ta Val led his mobile forces to build the Dam construction project); T. 12 August 2015 (LAT Suoy), E1/329.1, pp. 38 (“Ta Val was the commander over there so all mobile units subordinate to Sector 5 had to report to Ta Val. They had to prepare all the reports about work quota and work achievement from all mobile units to Ta Val.”), 51. See also, T. 19 August 2015 (TAK Boy), E1/333.1, pp. 63-64, 74-75 (testifying about the hierarchical structure of Trapeang Thma Dam and stating that “above the battalion, it was Ta Val who had overall supervision over the dam worksite”); CHHUM Seng DC-Cam Interview, E3/9010, 18 June 2011, p. 14, ERN (En) 00728621. The Chamber notes that the document S-21 list of prisoners entering on 28 June 1977, E3/9646, 29 June 1977, p. 3, ERN (En) 01139860, entry no. 29 lists Ta Val as “Assistant for Dam Construction and Fertiliser Production, Sector 5.” The Chamber finds that this does not call into question Ta Val’s role as Sector 5 mobile unit chief and person responsible for the Dam construction in light of the consistent oral and documentary evidence on this point. The Chamber notes the following statements to OCIJ investigators indicating that, as Sector 5 mobile unit chief, Ta Val was also in charge of supervising the construction of other dams and canals in Sector 5, as the mobile unit was involved in all these construction sites. See CHEAM Kin Interview Record, E3/9524, 13 March 2014, p. 6, ERN (En) 00985176 (stating that Ta Val led forces to build Spean Sraeng Dam, Ang Trapeang Thma Dam and other dam sites); CHHAY Phan Interview Record, E3/9497, 19 May 2013, pp. 3-4, ERN (En) 00950735-

1226. According to PAN Chhuong, Ta Val assigned the work at Trapeang Thma Dam pursuant to instructions received from Ta Hoeng.<sup>4179</sup> Witness MUN Mot, a company chief, testified that Ta Val set the three cubic metres of soil per day work quota based on orders from his superiors. He also testified that Ta Val summoned unit chiefs to meetings on the work plan, the progress of the work and the workers who were present, absent, sick and who fled from the worksite.<sup>4180</sup> According to CHHUM Seng, a

<sup>4177</sup> T. 17 August 2015 (CHHUM Seng), E1/331.1, p. 87 (explaining that Ta Val visited once fortnightly or every two or three days); T. 11 August 2015 (LAT Suoy), E1/328.1, p. 66 (Ta Val visited the worksite every two or three days or sometimes every day); T. 12 August 2015 (LAT Suoy), E1/329.1, p. 19 (Ta Val visited every day). See also, BOU Mao Interview Record, E3/9551, 21 February 2014, p. 4, ERN (En) 00982756 (explaining that “Ta Val did not stay at the Trapeang Thma Dam worksite. [...] Usually he stayed in his office in Svay Sisophon.” The witness also stated that, as far as he knew, “the Sector office was in Svay Sisophon. Ta Val worked at the Sector Committee echelon.”).

<sup>4179</sup> T. 30 November 2015 (PAN Chhuong), E1/359.1, pp. 59, 71-72 (explaining that Ta Val relayed the instructions to PAN Chhuong and other five people and that the instructions were provided orally).

<sup>4180</sup> T. 26 October 2015 (MUN Mot), E1/356.1, p. 78; T. 27 October 2015 (MUN Mot), E1/357.1, p. 36 (testifying that Ta Val himself set the three cubic metres quota and that he had received orders to do so from his superiors). The Chamber notes that in his DC-Cam interview, PAN Chhuong stated that Ta Val received instructions on the work plan at meetings held with Ta Hoeng and other mobile unit chiefs at company chief who reported to Ta Val, the latter held meetings with all chiefs of companies and battalions in order to discuss “a new plan or a specific plan”.<sup>4181</sup> At times he also met with the workers to provide them with instructions.<sup>4182</sup> SOT Sophal, a member of the children unit, testified that his unit chief indicated that the work assignments came from Ta Val.<sup>4183</sup> KAN Thorl, an Old Person who held the role of platoon deputy chief within a mobile unit operating at the worksite, explained that he and the other members of his platoon received orders from the “upper echelon”, by which term the witness referred to a company or regiment.<sup>4184</sup> Based on these testimonies, the Chamber concludes that, pursuant to instructions from his superiors, Ta Val summoned company and battalion chiefs to meetings during which he gave orders related to the work plan. The company and battalion chiefs in turn disseminated these instructions to their subordinates.<sup>4185</sup>

the sector level. See PAN Chhuong DC-Cam Interview, E3/9094, 18 June 2011, pp. 15-18. Further, CHHIT Yoeuk, when discussing his assignment as Ta Val’s assistant, testified that there was a Committee that passed tasks down the line, so the tasks were not given at the discretion of Ta Val’s alone. See T. 13 August 2015 (CHHIT Yoeuk), E1/330.1, p. 73. However, the witness did not clarify which Committee this was and who its members were. While the Chamber understands that Ta Val received instructions from his superiors, including in particular Ta Hoeng, and that therefore he did not determine the work plan on his own initiative, it is not in a position to determine precisely which Committee level was the one CHHIT Yoeuk discussed.

<sup>4181</sup> T. 17 August 2015 (CHHUM Seng), E1/331.1, p. 88 (“During that time, Ta Val told me to go and work. You can say I was quite close to him, because he was my immediate supervisor. He could call me to do the job as long as he wanted. He ordered me to do the job here and there.”). With respect to CHHUM Seng’s position vis-à-vis Ta Val, the Chamber notes that in another part of his testimony, CHHUM Seng indicated that his immediate supervisors were Ta Khauv and Ta Vorn (T. 17 August 2015 (CHHUM Seng), E1/331.1, p. 70) and that he received orders from Ta Khauv, who received them from Ta Val (T. 18 August 2015 (CHHUM Seng), E1/332.1, p. 72). The Chamber finds that these different statements may possibly be explained by the fact that the witness worked with all three superiors: as a company chief his immediate superiors were the battalion chiefs Ta Khauv and Ta Vorn, but he possibly also received orders directly from Ta Val, as he testified that he received assignments and instructions from him and attended meetings held by Ta Val.

<sup>4182</sup> T. 29 September 2015 (SOT Sophal), E1/351.1, p. 88 (explaining that he, as a member of the children unit, attended meetings where Ta Val was present “two or three times, and it varied. Sometimes it happened every fortnight or every month. It’s up to them to call us to meetings.”).

<sup>4183</sup> T. 30 September 2015 (SOT Sophal), E1/352.1, p. 52 (“every time my chief told us about the work assignment, he always mentioned his chief, Ta Val, that the instructions came from Ta Val, that’s when we had to build a dam or dig a canal, or that later on we had to dig a pond”).

<sup>4184</sup> T. 10 August 2015 (KAN Thorl), E1/327.1, p. 53 (testifying that the three cubic metres quota was decided upon by the “upper echelon”); T. 11 August 2015 (KAN Thorl), E1/328.1, p. 31 (explaining that by “upper echelon” he meant the company and regiment, so the units above his in the structure of the Dam).

At the worksite everyone was afraid of Ta Val.<sup>4186</sup> Witness LAT Suoy, a soldier from the Phnom Srok district military who was assigned to work at the Dam as a guard tasked to report the existence of damage, testified that Ta Val was firm, strict and strong and generally a very mean person.<sup>4187</sup> PAN Chhuong, who was close to Ta Val, testified that the latter was an agitated and cruel person, quick-tempered and irritated; however, the witness thought that “he was agitated only in words but he had a good heart”.<sup>4188</sup> PAN Chhuong also stated that when Ta Val was angry he would call those who made mistakes to be refashioned.<sup>4189</sup> CHHUM Seng testified that Ta Val sometimes disguised himself as a worker and went to oversee the workers; if someone was not working he would beat that person with a wooden stick he was carrying.<sup>4190</sup>

<sup>4186</sup> T. 18 August 2015 (CHHUM Seng), E1/332.1, pp. 51-52, 79 (explaining that whenever they heard the name of or saw Ta Val at the construction site, the workers tried to work as hard as possible and that the witness himself tried to do his best when Ta Val was around); T. 2 September 2015 (SAM Sak), E1/340.1, p. 49 (“I did not dare to look at his face. I heard of the name, I have never seen him.”); T. 17 August 2015 (CHHIT Yoek), E1/331.1, p. 4 (“From his speech I could say that he was a mean person and we were afraid of him”); T. 19 August 2015 (TAK Boy), E1/333.1, p. 78 (testifying that when he spoke, Ta Val’s looks were very frightening and that he was cruel. The witness explained that he would stand next to Ta Val and watch him talking in a loud and aggressive voice when he was supervising workers); T. 11 August 2015 (LAT Suoy), E1/328.1, p. 67 (testifying that every time Ta Val arrived everybody was afraid and they had to try to work harder, adding that he himself was so afraid of Ta Val that he did not dare look at this face); T. 12 August 2015 (LAT Suoy), E1/329.1, pp. 52-53 (testifying that if Ta Val found out that a person had committed an offence, he would send that person to be executed; for that reason people feared him). See also, T. 28 July 2015 (SEN Sophon), E1/324.1, p. 20 (stating that he heard people say that Ta Val was aggressive). The Chamber notes MUN Mot’s evidence that he never saw Ta Val lay out any threat to the workers. See T. 26 October 2015 (MUN Mot), E1/356.1, p. 79. However, the Chamber does not find this statement to contradict the other witnesses’ consistent evidence that workers were afraid of Ta Val due to his cruel personality. The Chamber notes that witness CHHUM Seng worked directly with Ta Val as Ta Val was his immediate supervisor (T. 17 August 2015 (CHHUM Seng), E1/331.1, p. 88), and it therefore finds his testimony particularly relevant due to the particular position of contact he had with Ta Val.

<sup>4192</sup> T. 26 October 2015 (MUN Mot), E1/356.1, p. 63 (testifying that the first Southwest Zone cadres arrived in the Northwest Zone in early 1977); T. 28 July 2015 (MAM Soeurm), E1/324.1, pp. 59-60 (indicating that in late 1977, Southwest Zone cadres came to supervise the work and most leaders disappeared and people fled everywhere); T. 10 August 2015 (KAN Thorl), E1/327.1, p. 72 (testifying that Trapeang Thma Dam came under the control of the Southwest zone cadres from late 1977 onwards); T. 1 December 2015 (PAN Chhuong), E1/360.1, p. 19 (testifying that the Southwest group arrived in July or August 1977); T. 17 August 2015 (CHHIT Yoeuk), E1/331.1, p. 9 (testifying that the Southwest Zone cadres arrived to the worksite in mid-1977). See also, IM Chaem DC-Cam Interview, E3/5657, 4 March 2007, p. 1, ERN (En) 00089771 (stating that in 1977 she left Takeo province for Trapeang Thma, and that she arrived at the Dam in December 1977); CHHIT Yoeuk Interview Record, E3/9456, 26 April 2013, p. 4, ERN (En) 00923046 (confirming that Yeay Chaem arrived in Preah Netr Preah district and became a district chief in late 1977 or early 1978). The Chamber notes SEN Sophon's statement that he could recall that it was in 1978 that the Southwest Zone people came to take control of the Northwest Zone and that IM Chaem was the one who came to arrest Ta Val's network (T. 27 July 2015 (SEN Sophon), E1/323.1, p. 74). The Chamber finds that this statement does not call into question the consistent evidence of other witnesses that cadres from the Southwest arrived around the second half of 1977, particularly in light of SEN Sophon's admission that he did not recall well when it was that the Southwest Zone had taken control of the Northwest Zone.

<sup>4193</sup> T. 17 August 2015 (CHHIT Yoeuk), E1/331.1, p. 8 (explaining that cadres arrived from the East Zone); T. 20 August 2015 (TAK Boy), E1/334.1, p. 14 (DC-Cam Interview indicating that the West Zone cadres came from Kampong Chhnang, to supervise the Northwest Zone cadres); T. 11 August 2015 (KAN Thorl), E1/328.1, p. 22 (testifying that he saw a person named Ta Sorn who was in charge of the mobile unit in 1978 and who said he came from the West Zone); T. 1 December 2015 (PAN Chhuong), E1/360.1, p. 19 (testifying that before the arrival of the Southwest group in July or August 1977 there was another group of cadres from the West Zone, and that the West Zone group was integrated into the communes and cooperatives mobile units and were not involved with the unit at the sector level). See also, T. 12 August 2015 (LAT Suoy), E1/329.1, pp. 7-8 (testifying that a group arrived from Kampong Chhnang).

I noticed that, after the arrival of the southwest people in the Northwest Zone, almost all cadres of Northwest Zone were removed.").

<sup>4195</sup> T. 27 October 2015 (MUN Mot), E1/357.1, p. 22 (testifying that the Southwest cadres told workers at the Dam that Angkar had arrested the traitors, namely Hoeng, Val and Cheal). See also, T. 12 August 2015 (LAT Suoy), E1/329.1, pp. 7-9 (testifying that he learnt from his chief that Ta Nhim stated at a meeting that the Northwest Zone cadres were accused of being traitors and would be arrested by the Southwest Zone cadres. The witness also stated that a few days after this meeting Ta Nhim was arrested), 75 (testifying that he heard this being said by his colleagues).

1230. In June 1977, Ta Val was arrested and taken to S-21.<sup>4196</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that Ta Val was lawfully arrested because he was cruel and encouraged unit chiefs at the Trapeang Thma Dam to implement harsh punishments on the workers.<sup>4197</sup> It also contends that Ta Val was arrested because he was involved in preparing a rebellion against the Khmer Rouge and that after his arrest the construction site leadership was replaced by the Southwest Zone cadres, who were appointed to “redress the situation”.<sup>4198</sup> The Co-Prosecutors respond that the Defence’s allegation that Ta Val and other Northwest Zone cadres were involved in a rebellion is not supported by the evidence.<sup>4199</sup> In particular, they submit that the only evidence on the existence of secret plans, which was provided by MUN Mot, was inconsistent and unpersuasive.<sup>4200</sup> They further submit that, for two reasons, there is no merit in the NUON Chea Defence’s submission that the Party Centre carried out its purge of the Northwest Zone cadres because the latter had mistreated the workers at the Trapeang Thma Dam.<sup>4201</sup> First, the workers were told that the purge had occurred because the Northwest Zone cadres were traitors to the revolution; second, in the Co-Prosecutors’ view, if the purge had been carried out to improve conditions at the worksite, the evidence would show that the conditions in fact improved. However, things not only did not improve but worsened.<sup>4202</sup> Neither the KHIEU Samphan Defence nor the Civil Party Lead Co-Lawyers made any relevant submissions in this regard.

1231. The Chamber does not find the NUON Chea Defence’s submissions to be persuasive. There is no evidence that Ta Val was arrested because of his cruelty. Several witnesses testified that they were told that the Northwest Zone cadres, including Ta Val, were arrested because they were considered to be traitors to the revolution.<sup>4203</sup> There is no indication that Ta Val was informed of the reasons of his arrest or that he had an opportunity to challenge the legality of his arrest. The Chamber is not satisfied that Ta Val was arrested by the Southwest Zone cadres in order to “redress the situation”, as the working and living conditions at the worksite did not substantially change upon their arrival. Some witnesses indicated that the conditions in fact deteriorated, that some of the Southwest Zone cadres were “crueller” than Ta Val, and that many more people were killed and died of starvation after the Southwest Zone cadres took control of the worksite.<sup>4204</sup> With regard to Ta Val’s involvement in a rebellion against the Khmer Rouge, the Chamber did not find evidence of a planned rebellion in the Northwest Zone, aside from that organised by TOAT Thoeun.<sup>4205</sup> According to his own testimony, TOAT Thoeun initiated the rebellion only because attempts had been made on his life by the Party Centre.<sup>4206</sup> This rebellion had no connection or support from Vietnam.<sup>4207</sup> Further, TOAT Thoeun fled to the forest upon his return from China around mid-1977 or November 1977 and engaged in fighting the Southwest forces led by Ta Mok around August 1978, at which time Ta Val had already been taken to S-21.<sup>4208</sup> The Chamber does not find, therefore, that Ta Val was involved in preparing a rebellion against the Khmer Rouge. In light of the above, the NUON Chea Defence's submission is rejected.

1232. The Chamber heard conflicting evidence about the replacement of Ta Val once he was arrested. According to CHHUM Seng, Ta Poal from the Southwest Zone replaced Ta Val.<sup>4209</sup> On the contrary, TAK Boy stated that Ta Yun replaced him.<sup>4210</sup> CHHIT Yoeuk provided contradictory statements on this issue, initially stating that Ta Pheng from the Phnom Srok district committee of the Northwest Zone replaced Ta Val, and then indicating that Brother Yoan was in charge of Sector 5 mobile unit "under the supervision of Ta Pheng".<sup>4211</sup> Therefore, the Chamber cannot conclude with certainty who replaced Ta Val in the supervision of the Trapeang Thma Dam once he was arrested, but finds that such responsibility was then transferred to cadres from the Southwest Zone.

of the Sector 5 Committee.<sup>4223</sup> However, the Chamber received conflicting evidence about the exact role he played. The Co-Prosecutors rely on PAN Chhuong's statements in submitting that Ta Cheal was Hoeng's deputy.<sup>4224</sup> However, the witness himself stated in court that he heard of this from others and was not sure if it was true.<sup>4225</sup> The Chamber notes a 27 June 1977 document and S-21 Prisoners' lists indicating that Cheal was an "assistant" in Sector 5.<sup>4226</sup> The Chamber also notes the evidence of CHHIT Yoeuk, who knew the structure of the Preah Netr Preah district and Sector 5 very well because he worked in the administrative section of Preah Netr Preah district and as a member of militia reporting to Sector 5 army chief.<sup>4227</sup> In his statement to OCIJ investigators, while mentioning that Ta Cheal replaced Hoeng for a few months when the latter was arrested, he did not say that Cheal was his deputy, instead indicating that he did not know who Hoeng's deputy was at the time.<sup>4228</sup> Based on this evidence, the Chamber is unable to reach a conclusion as to Ta Cheal's exact role within Sector 5. However, it finds that when Hoeng was arrested, Ta Cheal replaced him for a few months, after which Ta Rin alias Mey (or Mei) from the Southwest Zone became the 1237. The NUON Chea Defence submits that the Trapeang Thma Dam, as an irrigation project, was “[l]ike other infrastructures [...] under the joint authority of the ministries of public works and of industry, both supervised by Vorn Vet, Deputy Prime Minister in charge of economics” and that, as such, it was not under the authority of NUON Chea.<sup>4237</sup> The Chamber finds that the evidence relied upon by the NUON Chea Defence does not support its submission. In particular, the Chamber finds that this evidence only establishes that the Public Works Committee was attached to the Ministry of Industry, whose chief was VORN Vet,<sup>4238</sup> that in April 1976 the Standing Committee decided that TOUCH Phoeun alias Phin would be the secretary of the Public Works Committee,<sup>4239</sup> and that the Public Works Committee “controlled the construction, the rock breaking at Trapeang Kraloeng in Kampong Speu province, and electricity and hydroelectricity at Kirirum Stoeng Chral” as well as the construction and renovation of houses, building and roads.<sup>4240</sup> The Chamber cannot conclude from these documents that Trapeang Thma Dam was under the authority of the Ministries of Industry and Public Works.

11.1.5.3. Communications

1238. Information on the progress of the Trapeang Thma Dam’s construction and, more generally, on the security and the “people situation” (that is, people’s livelihood, food and health conditions) in Phnom Srok district and the other districts of Sector 5 was shared with the superior levels of the DK administrative structure. This information was transmitted to the zone level through weekly reports of the Sector 5 Committee and to the Party Centre through reports and telegrams sent by the zone office to Office 870.

1239. This is illustrated by a weekly report of the Sector 5 Committee dated 21 May 1977, summarising the progress made in the construction of the Dam and the situation of the food rations in Sector 5. This report was sent to the zone secretary, “M-560” (the Northwest Zone office) and “Documentation”.<sup>4241</sup> It states that, at Phnom Srok district, “food was gone since mid-April” and that there may not have been enough rice until September or October.<sup>4242</sup> The proposed solution was to plant more food crops and to mix the remaining rice with other vegetables such as cassavas, sweet potatoes, vegetables, maize or beans.<sup>4243</sup> Additionally, the ration on the “front line” was reduced to two tins of rice from three.<sup>4244</sup> This allowed for the third tin to be given to the “deficient districts”.<sup>4245</sup> This report also addresses the “dry situation” which was “different from the normal one” and mentions the possibility of requesting Angkar to block the major river and dig canals in order to get water.<sup>4246</sup>

1240. Communications were sent from the zone to the Party Centre as illustrated by several reports from the Northwest Zone to Office 870. In particular, a report from Office 560 dated 29 May 1977 reviews the situation in the Northwest Zone and reports that the construction of the three sluice gates of Trapeang Thma was underway and expected to finish in May.<sup>4247</sup> With respect to the “people situation” it is stated:

We have strengthened the collectivity to a better extent than before. People's living standard is a shortage in many regions. Now people in Regions 1, 2, 4, 6 and 7 are the most needy. Most people at support bases eat thin rice soup [gruel] while those at front battles have in some regions [a ration of] 2 cans of rice per day and eat in some other regions either of alternative rice and gruel twice a day.

People lack clothes though clothing has been managed to provide to the people as advised by Angkar. The salt supplied by Angkar is sufficient in all places. Important shelters for people have been built. There have now been no people without lodging and sleeping on the ground as there were in 1975 and 1976.<sup>4248</sup>

1241. The same report indicates that people were given injections and that anti-malaria sprays were applied throughout the zone. It also indicates that some people were infected with malaria and suffered symptoms such as fainting spells, diarrhoea and fever.<sup>4249</sup> The report also states that in Sector 5 the drought had destroyed much of the crops.<sup>4250</sup>

1242. The Chamber notes that the recipients of this report are not indicated in the document itself. However, the Chamber considers the evidence provided by SON Em in this regard. In his statement to OCIJ investigators, SON Em explained that from 1975 to June or July 1977 he worked as a messenger and receptionist at Office 560 in Battambang, the Northwest Zone office.<sup>4251</sup> In that capacity, he received and compiled reports from the different sectors of the zone and transmitted them to the central level.<sup>4252</sup> He also clarified that “[t]he sector level reports were written manually each time when the zone committees invited sector committees to attend meetings. After the meeting, I typed those reports with a typewriter and sent those reports to the central level, Office 870.”<sup>4253</sup> SON Em also explained that when he sent a report to the Party Centre, he put the report in “an envelope on which it was addressed ‘[f]rom the Northwest Zone to the Standing Committee of Office 870’”.<sup>4254</sup>

1243. In court, SON Em stated that during the time he worked as a messenger for the Northwest Zone office, he received sector-level cadres who went to attend meetings with the zone committee members, including RUOS Nhim.<sup>4255</sup> The Civil Party explained that the frequency of those meetings varied, as they were held “sometimes once every one month or once every three months or once every six months”.<sup>4256</sup> During those meetings, issues like “building of the country and the defending of the country” were discussed, including the construction of irrigation systems and rice production.<sup>4257</sup> The Civil Party also confirmed in court that once he had prepared the report on the situation in the different sectors of the zone, he was instructed to “insert the message into the envelope and then I had to write on the envelope that, ‘[i]t is with respect to be sent to 870 Committee.’ It was my own handwriting on that envelope”.<sup>4258</sup> The Civil Party explained that office “870 was the central office of the Communist Party of Kampuchea”.<sup>4259</sup>

1244. The Chamber notes that the report from Office 560 dated 29 May 1977<sup>4260</sup> is typewritten and that its content is consistent with the issues discussed at meetings of the sector-level cadres and the zone committee, as described by SON Em. The content of this report is also consistent with that of another report sent by RUOS Nhim to Angkar 870 on 11 May 1978 and discussed below.<sup>4261</sup> While the recipients are not indicated in the report, the Chamber finds it reasonable to conclude that, in accordance with SON Em’s explanation, the indication of the recipients is missing from the document because it was put on the envelope by the Civil Party. The Chamber therefore concludes that this report was sent from the Northwest Zone office to Office 870.<sup>4262</sup>

1245. On 10 May 1978, a communication was sent from the Northwest Zone office to the Party Centre indicating that “[t]he Region, which faces famine the most, is Region 5”.<sup>4263</sup> In correspondence addressed to Angkar 870 dated 11 May 1978, RUOS Nhim, <sup>4262</sup> Section 6.2.2: Communication Structures: Lines of Communication: Between the Party Centre and the Zones or Autonomous Sectors.

<sup>4263</sup> Document E3/948, 10 May 1978, ERN (En) 00003534. The Chamber considers that the word “region” or “regions” in this document is equivalent to the word “sector” or “sectors”. The Chamber notes that this document appears to be cut-off as it does not have a letterhead indicating the addressee and the nature of the communication (report or telegram). However, the Chamber has examined its content and format and it is satisfied that it is similar to that of other reports sent by the Northwest Zone office to the Party Centre. In particular, the document covers the same topics consistently included in the secretary of the Northwest Zone, stated that there were food shortages in Sectors 1, 4 and 5. In particular, the report states that all the four districts of Sector 5 faced shortages and that RUOS Nhim had met with Comrade Rin to find a solution. The report states that:

As for ration, in the long future, there will [have to] be one and a half cans [empty condensed-milk can] of rice [to be provided to one person], but for the immediate future, there will [have to] be [only] one can of rice [to be provided to one person]. [We found out that] the given rice [by Angkar] would be running out by May 10 [1978] and [people] were eating some rive [sic] seeds.<sup>4264</sup>

1246. Additionally, in Sectors 1 and 4, only one and a half cans of rice per person were to be provided “in the immediate future”, with the rice supplies running out in June 1978.<sup>4265</sup> It is also reported that it was necessary to also have enough meat and fish and that issues such as malaria, clothing and dwelling “must be gradually addressed”.<sup>4266</sup> The work at Trapeang Thma Dam was further “strengthened”.<sup>4267</sup>

1247. Further communications were transmitted by the zone level to the Party Centre via telegrams. For example, on 6 November 1977, a telegram sent by San to Brother Nhim and copied to Uncle, Uncle Nuon, Brother Van, Brother Vorn, Brother Khiev, Brother Nhim, Office and Documentation states that the people’s “rations are increased step by step [...]. Comrade Toeun of [Sector] 32 constantly asks about the rice issue.”<sup>4268</sup>

these communications (the “internal and external enemy situation”, the “people situation” and “building socialism”). Its content is also similar to that of a report sent just the day after, on 11 May 1978 [E3/950], by RUOS Nhim indicating that there were food shortages in Sectors 1, 4 and 5 of the Northwest Zone. Finally, this document’s format is similar to that of the other reports in that it is typed and includes numerals dividing the different sections. Despite the absence of clear indications as to the addressee and the nature of this document, the Chamber therefore concludes that this communication was sent by the Northwest Zone to the Party Centre with a view to informing it on the situation in the Zone.

<sup>4268</sup> DK Telegram, E3/1120, 6 November 1977, ERN (En) 00441627. According to the original Khmer version of this document, the Chamber finds that the number “32” refers to district 32 rather than sector 32. With respect to aliases, see Section 7: Roles and Functions – NUON Chea, para. 529. The Chamber finds that the sender of this telegram, San, was a cadre who worked in the Northwest Zone office. See T. 21 November 2016 (SON Em), E1/500.1, p. 36 (explaining that San was in charge of Division 2 and later went to work close to the Civil Party in Zone Office 560); SON Em Interview Record, E3/9477, 2 June 2014, pp. 6-7, ERN (En) 01034085-01034086.

1248. On 17 May 1978, a telegram addressed to Angkar 870 from RUOS Nhim states that “[p]eople have already made written reports [on their poor living conditions]”,<sup>4269</sup> and that Sector 5 “is the most difficult”.<sup>4270</sup> RUOS Nhim reported that despite having “provided 10,000 sacks of rice to Region 5, Comrade Rin reported that it still faces more difficulties”.<sup>4271</sup>

1249. The Chamber also heard oral evidence about the exchange of work-related instructions, plans and information between the lower and the superior administrative levels of the DK. The Chamber notes that many witnesses referred to the “upper echelon” or the “upper level” without being able to clarify which administrative level of the CPK hierarchy they were referring to. CHHIT Yoeuk provided information on the relationship between the “upper echelon” and Ta Val, Ta Maong, Ta Sam At and Ta Rin, which the witness characterised as “low-level officials”.<sup>4272</sup> The Chamber interprets the witness’ statements as indicating that these cadres were not part of the “upper echelon”.<sup>4273</sup> The witness explained that, in his opinion, “whatever the low-level officials did came to the attention of the upper echelon. If they did not receive 100 percent information they would know about 30% or 40% of the work.”<sup>4274</sup> PAN Chhuong testified that it was his personal conclusion that the instructions related to the construction of Trapeang Thma Dam were given to Ta Val by the “upper level” because “[w]ithout the instruction from the upper echelons, they [Ta Val and Ta Hoeng] would not have the authority to do so”.<sup>4275</sup> The Chamber notes that in his DC-Cam statement, PAN Chhuong indicated that the “upper one” was the Party’s Central Committee and that it was the Party’s Central Committee that ordered Ta Hoeng to change the plan from building a road to building the Dam.<sup>4276</sup> However, the witness could not recall this in court.<sup>4277</sup> The Chamber also notes IM Chaem’s statement to DC-Cam that the working plan between 1977 and 1978 “was made from Zone, province and down” to the lower levels.<sup>4278</sup> IM Chaem further stated that when making plans on how to organise the work of her forces in Preah Netr Preah, she would submit her plan to the zone for approval and that “all the reports were sent to the highest level of the central committee”<sup>4279</sup>.

1250. Based on the evidence analysed above, the Chamber concludes that there was communication between the local levels (district and sector) and the superior levels (zone and Party Centre) of the DK administrative structure with respect to work-related plans and instructions, and people’s living conditions including food and health. In particular, the Chamber finds that Office 870 was constantly informed through reports and telegrams about the situation at the local level and that, conversely, instructions were provided and disseminated down to the local echelon.

1251. The Chamber has also considered SON Em’s evidence that reports prepared at the sector level containing information about the situation in the cooperatives and districts indicated that “the people received food rations of three times a day as the plan set by the Party. Yet in reality the people did not receive the food rations as outlined in those reports.”<sup>4280</sup> The Civil Party confirmed in court that “in reality, the practice could not achieve the result as planned because the rice yield could not be as the same as what was on the piece of paper. People lacked food, and for that reason, it could not conform to the policy and that was what I saw.”<sup>4281</sup> SON Em also stated that:

[Those] reports were deceitful because they were afraid that if they could not achieve the work quota as planned by the Party, as I knew then they would disappear, as they did not meet the quota. And the disappearance here means that they could not achieve the work quota as determined by the Party and for that reason, they would be considered as weak people or people who were inattentive to the work assigned by the Party.<sup>4282</sup>

1252. The Chamber accepts SON Em’s evidence that some reports transmitted to the zone and Party Centre were deceitful, in particular with regard to information on the food shortages and the amount of food provided to people, as well as the progress made on the completion of work projects. The Chamber also accepts the Civil Party’s explanation that these reports provided a better picture of the local situation in order to show that local cadres were complying with the Centre's policies and directions on food and work plans. However, as discussed above, the Chamber has also found that information on people's living conditions, including food shortages, was shared with the zone and the Centre through regular reports and telegrams. Further, as explained below, the Centre had an opportunity to get to know the real situation at the local level also through visits of the CPK leaders to the Northwest Zone. Therefore, while accepting that the local cadres concealed some information in order to avoid punishment or other negative consequences, the Chamber finds that the zone and Centre were informed about the problematic situation in the zone. Any further conclusion as to the impact of SON Em's evidence on the knowledge of the Accused is made in other sections of this Judgement.<sup>4283</sup>

1253. The Party Centre was also informed of the local situation via telegrams sent by Minister for Foreign Affairs (MFA) representatives who accompanied foreign delegations. A telegram reporting on the visit paid by Yugoslavian journalists to the Northwest Zone was sent by Kan and copied to Uncle, Uncle Nuon, Brother Van, Brother Vorn, Office and Documentation, and received on 15 March 1978.<sup>4284</sup> The report indicates that the journalists visited, among other places, Trapeang Thma Dam.<sup>4285</sup>

11.1.5.4. Visits by CPK leaders

1254. KHIEU Samphan visited the Northwest Zone and Trapeang Thma Dam in particular during the DK period.<sup>4286</sup> During Case 002 hearings, he stated:

As for the Trapeang Thma dam, it looked like a sea in the middle of the field where there used to be dry land. And as a result, those dry lands transformed into chequered rice fields to the horizon, and that excited me."); Book by Khieu S.: Cambodia's Recent History and the Reasons Behind the Decisions I Made, E3/18, March 2000, p. 114, ERN (En) 00103780 ("I saw with my own eyes some of the achievement I had wished for, especially irrigation in the countryside. See also, IM Chaem DC-Cam Interview, E3/5657, 4 March 2007, ERN (En) 00089778 ("Chinese and uncle Khieu Samphan also came and visited there. I was excited when I saw those large-scale dams. But during the course of the proceedings before this Chamber, when I have heard the testimonies of the witnesses, I was so shocked, as I was not aware that the dams, the canals were constructed in exchange of such great loss. I did not know that. And I was also extremely shocked whenever I heard the testimony of any witness or Civil Party.<sup>4287</sup>

1255. POL Pot also visited the Trapeang Thma Dam.<sup>4288</sup>

1257. RUOS Nhim often visited Trapeang Thma Dam.<sup>4291</sup> Ta Khleung, Ta Hoeng and

<sup>4289</sup> Record of the Standing Committee’s visit to the Northwest Zone, 20-24 August 1975, E3/216, p. 1, ERN (En) 00850973. The Chamber notes that the report concerning the Standing Committee’s visit to the Northwest Zone does not indicate who participated in this visit. It notes that KHIEU Samphan was travelling to China, Vietnam and North Korea in late August 1975 when the Standing Committee visited the Northwest Zone (see Section 8: Roles and Functions – KHIEU Samphan, paras 590, 592). Concerning NUON Chea, while the Chamber notes that the Accused was present in Cambodia in late August 1975, it finds that there is insufficient evidence to establish to the required standard that he participated in the visit to the Northwest Zone. However, the Chamber is satisfied that, by virtue of their positions of seniority within the Party, both Accused were aware of the report and participated in the development of plans and policies reflected therein. See Section 16: Common Purpose, para. 3888.

<sup>4290</sup> Summary of the Decisions of the Standing Committee in the Meeting of 19-20-21 April 1976, E3/235, p. 6, ERN (En) 00183421 (reporting that “[t]he Standing Committee will go down to the bases in May [...] Push early season rice especially in the large zones like the Northwest, North, Southwest, and Siem Reap.”). The Chamber is not in a position to establish who, among the Standing Committee members, was present at the April 1976 meeting in which a new visit to the Northwest Zone was decided.

<sup>4291</sup> Chen Yung Kuei’s Cambodia Visit Reported (in FBIS collection), E3/1783, 23 December 1977, ERN (En) 00498181 (reporting that RUOS Nhim participated in the visit of the Chinese Vice-Premier to Trapeang Thma Dam in December 1977); T. 10 August 2015 (KAN Thorl), E1/327.1, p. 69 (testifying that he saw Ta Nhim, the secretary of the Northwest Zone, visit the worksite three times); 71 (explaining that RUOS Nhim drove the car and visited the workers and asked them how many cubic metres of earth they carried per day); T. 27 October 2015 (MUN Mot), E1/357.1, pp. 12-13 (testifying to seeing Ta Nhim very often at the worksite and that he never got close to the workers but simply went into the office of the senior people, that is Ta Val’s office).

Ta Cheal also visited the worksite.<sup>4292</sup>

1258. Several witnesses and Civil Parties testified that they saw delegations visiting the worksite. Civil Party NHIP Horl, a worker at Trapeang Thma Dam and member of a 100-person youth unit, gave evidence about a visit of a delegation of guests, although he could not remember the date of the event.<sup>4293</sup> On that occasion, young workers were asked to line up on the two sides of the road that stretched from Trapeang Thma village to the first bridge of Trapeang Thma Dam to welcome the guests. The Civil Party did not know who the guests were but saw black coloured cars drive along the road. The Civil Party also indicated that at that time only the healthy people were allowed to welcome the guests.<sup>4294</sup> MUN Mot testified that around 1976 he saw a convoy of between 20 to 30 4x4 white-and-egg-shell coloured vehicles. While the witness did not know who the guests were as they remained in the vehicles while visiting the Dam, word spread among the workers that perhaps IENG Sary was accompanying a Chinese delegation.<sup>4295</sup> LAT Suoy testified that Angkar visited the worksite but that he was not able to identify anyone.<sup>4296</sup> While the guards were instructed to stand with their backs turned to the visitors and “not to look at the Angkar’s face”, the witness explained that he took a glance at the visitors and only saw people wearing short-sleeve white shirts.<sup>4297</sup> The witness also explained that by “Angkar” he meant “the upper echelon, the higher upper echelon. Angkar were the ones who introduced the law for the civilians in the countryside”.<sup>4298</sup> The witness stated that when Angkar visited, the delegation would come in a long fleet of vehicles and that soldiers and civilians were instructed not to look at the visitors’ faces.<sup>4299</sup> SAM Sak, a New Person and a worker in the Sector 5 mobile unit at Trapeang Thma Dam, stated that the Khmer Rouge leadership paid visits to the worksite and a Chinese delegation came to the site; the Chinese were in black clothes and had a fair complexion.<sup>4300</sup> SEN Sophon indicated that he never witnessed anyone visiting the Trapeang Thma Dam construction site.<sup>4301</sup> However, the Civil Party's testimony remains isolated and thus the fact that he did not see anyone visiting the Dam does not detract from the other witnesses' and Civil Parties' evidence about visits by delegations.

1259. Based on the evidence reviewed above, the Chamber concludes that a number of delegations visited the Trapeang Thma Dam.<sup>4302</sup> As set out above, the Chamber can reasonably conclude that KHIEU Samphan and POL Pot visited the Trapeang Thma Dam. It can also conclude that zone and sector leaders visited the worksite, including RUOS Nhim, Ta Khleng, Ta Hoeng and Ta Cheal. It is not in a position to establish who else among the CPK leaders visited the worksite as part of these delegations.

1260. With respect to these visits, the Chamber notes that attempts were made by local authorities to hide certain aspects of the real situation faced by workers on the ground, as explained by several witnesses who testified that only the healthy-looking workers were allowed to stand in line close to the guests.<sup>4303</sup>

1261. The NUON Chea Defence contends that "the generally-fleeting visits of high-ranking leaders to crime sites are completely irrelevant unless it can be shown that during the visit, the leaders learned specific knowledge of charged crimes allegedly committed there".<sup>4304</sup> The Co-Prosecutors contend that KHIEU Samphan acknowledged visiting Trapeang Thma Dam and that, while there, he "personally observed the workers carrying out their tasks and urged them to keep working hard".<sup>4305</sup> No other Party makes relevant submissions in this regard. The Chamber notes that, for the purposes of assessing any knowledge relevant to the crimes charged on the part of the Accused, it will assess all of the information before it, including the visits of CPK leaders to specific crime sites.<sup>4306</sup>

1262. The Chamber finds that the number of workers at the Dam construction site may have varied over time. In giving particular weight to the contemporaneous documents and official DK publications which provide information on the number of workers, the Chamber considers that between 10 and 20 thousand were assigned to this worksite during the time of its construction and in particular in 1977 during a peak of activity.<sup>4307</sup> Workers were recruited to work at the Dam from the different districts of Sector 5, namely Preah Netr Preah, Serei Saophoan, Thma Puok and Phnom Srok.<sup>4308</sup> The workers were members of the Sector 5 mobile unit or the district and commune mobile units.<sup>4309</sup> Evacuees from Phnom Penh also formed part of the workforce and worked 1265. In this regard, the Chamber notes that many witnesses talked about "children" units but in fact at least some of them referred to adolescents from 13 or 14 years of age and above, as explained by Witness CHHIT Yoeuk who stated that "[r]egarding the children who were working at Trapeang Thma worksite, they were not actually small children, they were adolescents or teenagers. The Chamber notes that the term “battalion” was used by MAM Soeurm to refer to the unit consisting of three 30-member units, whereas it was used by CHHUM Seng to refer to the 300-member unit which consisted of three 100-member units (also called “companies” by him). The Chamber relies on CHHUM Seng’s account in light of the fact that he was in a more senior position (company chairman) compared to MAM Soeurm’s (platoon member) and had a better understanding of the overall structure of the workforce at Trapeang Thma Dam. Additionally, MAM Soeurm by his own admission did not have a full picture. See T. 28 July 2015 (MAM Soeurm), E1/324.1, p. 58 (“that is my understanding because I was not sure about big units or small units, I just knew that I belonged to a small unit and there were 30 workers in the unit”). Furthermore, the Chamber does not find MAM Soeurm’s evidence to contradict CHHUM Seng’s evidence, but on the contrary, deems it corroborative of the finding that three 30-member units formed a bigger 100-member unit (when additional people like the cooks and fishermen were added on top of the workers’ numbers). See also, T. 19 August 2015 (TAK Boy), E1/333.1, p. 74 (testifying that above the platoon there was the company).

1268. Those people who were considered as not hard-working were punished by being put in a “case unit” and were made to work harder compared to workers in normal units.<sup>4331</sup> PAN Chhuong testified in court that a “case unit” was made up of people who were sent to the hospital for a check-up.<sup>4332</sup> However, in his previous statements to OCIJ investigators he stated that the “case unit” was composed of people who had made mistakes.<sup>4333</sup> Given these contradictory accounts, the Chamber’s cautious approach to this witness’s evidence, and the consistent evidence indicating that the “case unit” was made up of people considered as not hard-working, the Chamber does not rely on this particular aspect of PAN Chhuong’s testimony.

1269. The NUON Chea Defence submits that, contrary to the Closing Order’s findings, a special unit was not “a place of punishment, rather, special units gathered exceptionally productive workers who were ‘an exemplary model for the mobile units’”.<sup>4334</sup> As illustrated below, the Chamber has established that at the worksite there existed a distinction between more productive and less productive units on the basis of which a differentiated food regime was applied.<sup>4335</sup> In this regard, the Chamber concurs that there existed units of exceptionally performing workers. In this regard, it interprets LAT Suoy’s testimony concerning a “special unit” consisting of people who worked faster and whose workers received a privileged food treatment of two cans of rice per person per day, as supporting the evidence showing that this distinction existed.<sup>4336</sup> However, in the Chamber’s analysis, the units which accomplished more work, which some witnesses define as “special”, and the “case unit”, which was made up of workers who were considered less hard-working, were two distinct realities at the worksite. Accordingly, the Chamber rejects the NUON Chea Defence’s submission.

11.1.7. Working Conditions

1270. Workers were required to work regardless of the weather conditions.<sup>4337</sup> If rain was not heavy, workers would be told to work; however, when there was heavy rain, workers were allowed to rest.<sup>4338</sup>

1271. The Chamber is satisfied that working conditions at the worksite were very difficult and affected the workers both physically and mentally. SAM Sak explained that his life at the construction site “could be regarded as the life of an animal, and that applies to all the workers. As for the benefit, we knew nothing about the benefit of what the purpose of building the dam.”<sup>4339</sup> MUN Mot explained that they did not know for sure when they would stop working as they kept working on one assignment after the other; he described the situation as being treated like cattle.<sup>4340</sup> Civil Party MEAN Loeuy, a Base Person and member of a 100-person unit, stated that “[m]entally and physically the work was hard for me because at Trapeang Thma worksite I had to carry dirt in extremely huge work quota. My back was almost bent because of the hard work so in terms of mentally and physically situation [sic] it was very hard.”<sup>4341</sup> NHIP Horl stated that workers suffered from pain in their chest because of overwork.<sup>4342</sup>

1272. While SEN Sophon attested to the occurrence of work-related accidents at the worksite, NHIP Horl indicated that he never got injured while working at Trapeang

I suffer from night blindness, and I walked into tree trunks when I worked.”).

Thma Dam.<sup>4343</sup> MAM Soeurm, a member of the Sector 5 mobile unit under the supervision of Ta Nhav, and TAK Boy testified that they never saw work-related accidents.<sup>4344</sup> MEAN Loeuy indicated that he never saw anybody get hurt or wounded as a result of being involved in an accident.<sup>4345</sup> In light of this evidence, the Chamber concludes that there were some work-related accidents at the worksite but that not all workers witnessed them.<sup>4346</sup>

1273. The working conditions did not change substantially once the Southwest Zone cadres took control of the worksite.<sup>4347</sup> MUN Mot explained that the work quota of three cubic metres remained the same but that more tasks were added, among which repair work to specific parts of the Dam.<sup>4348</sup> In SEN Sophon's view, things stayed the same with respect to work assignments and work quota.<sup>4349</sup> CHHIT Yoeuk indicated that while under Ta Val's supervision workers used to work at night, this did not happen after the Southwest Zone cadres came to the worksite.<sup>4350</sup>

1274. However, the Southwest Zone cadres imposed stricter control over the workers and more deaths occurred after their arrival.<sup>4351</sup> MUN Mot testified that when the Southwest Zone cadres arrived, he was under the "closest monitoring".<sup>4352</sup> CHHUM Seng testified that the Southwest Zone cadres intensified their surveillance of the Northwest Zone cadres and they started to arrest an increasing number of people.<sup>4353</sup>

11.1.7.1. Work assignments

1275. Work entailed digging the soil, placing it on earth-carrying baskets and carrying it to the top of the Dam.<sup>4355</sup> Workers were rotated to perform these different tasks.<sup>4356</sup> The workers had to carry the soil uphill between 10 to 50 metres from where they dug it to where they dumped it.<sup>4357</sup> Evidence varied with respect to the weight workers had to carry, with some witnesses estimating that they had to carry up to 30 to 40 kilograms per trip.<sup>4358</sup>

1276. Trapeang Thma Dam was referred to as a “hot battlefield” due to the hard work workers had to perform there.<sup>4359</sup> MUN Mot explained that the workplace where workers had to dig their quota of soil was called the “defence line” as if the workers were in a military structure.<sup>4360</sup> Witness SOT Sophal explained that the expression “storm attack” signified that workers had to work harder to complete the work plan.<sup>4361</sup> The word “offensive” referred to periods of time during which workers had to do their best to accomplish a specific plan or target.<sup>4362</sup>

11.1.7.2. Working hours

11.1.7.2.1. Government policy regarding work hours

1277. The Chamber recalls its findings that (1) the Party Centre issued instructions concerning working hours; (2) the Party Centre had knowledge that the instructions were not followed locally with workers exposed to extremely hard conditions; (3) the Party Centre envisaged “special cases” where working outside of normal hours was required; and (4) “no-good elements” were allegedly blamed and found responsible for disregarding the working hours instructions.<sup>4363</sup>

11.1.7.2.2. Experience of workers at the Trapeang Thma Dam

1278. While evidence regarding working hours varied, it appears that the typical working day entailed three shifts: morning, afternoon and evening.<sup>4364</sup> However, according to MEAN Loey, evening shifts were not the rule and workers worked in the evening from 6 or 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. only occasionally when an “offensive” was needed.<sup>4365</sup> Similarly, MAM Soeurm testified that the evening shift from 6 to 9 p.m. was not a regular one and was only done “during the time when the situation was Sector 5”). See also, T. 20 August 2015 (LING Lrysov), E1/334.1, p. 44. The Chamber notes PAN Chhuong’s testimony that Trapeang Thma Dam was not a hot battlefield (T. 30 November 2015 (PAN Chhuong), E1/359.1, p. 69) but does not consider this statement to undermine the consistent evidence of the other witnesses.

The Chamber notes that NHIP Horl stated that in his unit working hours were not actually determined, and that workers simply had to work to complete the quota for the day. They got up around 3 a.m., or sometimes at 4 or 5 a.m. and then went to work and work until 5 p.m. to complete the work quota. See T. 25 August 2015 (NHIP Horl), E1/336.1, pp. 16, 37.

demanding or when there was an emergency to patch the dam or to actually complete the remaining workload for the particular segment of the worksite”.<sup>4366</sup> MUN Mot testified that in his unit they did not work in the evening as usually every worker had to complete their work by 5 p.m.<sup>4367</sup> PAN Chhuong testified that he never saw anyone working in the evening, while acknowledging that it might have happened in other units.<sup>4368</sup> The Chamber does not find the evidence concerning the evening shift to be contradictory as working hours varied from one unit to another, and it is therefore possible that night shifts were the rule for some units and the exception for others.

1279. Some witnesses stated that they had to commence work at 4 or 5 a.m., others at 7 a.m. and they worked until 11 or 11:30 a.m., at which time they were allowed to have a break.<sup>4369</sup> Work resumed at 1 p.m. and continued until 5 or 6 p.m.<sup>4370</sup> After dinner and a short break, they worked from 6 or 7 p.m. to 10 or 11 p.m.<sup>4371</sup> MUN Mot testified that

The witness also indicated that some workers in his unit could finish their quota by 3:30 p.m. or 4 p.m. and they could go to their resting quarters or would go find supplementary food including crab and rice field mice. However those who could not complete the quota had to continue until their quota was met).

there was no set time for workers to start working and that each unit could decide the time when it started to work.<sup>4372</sup> The witness stated that “[t]hey did not care when we started work as long as our daily work quota could be met”.<sup>4373</sup> The Chamber finds that MUN Mot’s statement does not call into question other evidence that in some units working hours were set, as different regulations applied to different working units.

1280. During “offensives” and when workers had to complete a specific work plan, they were required to work around the clock, taking minimal time to rest.<sup>4374</sup> Workers took a two-hour break for lunch, a two-hour break for dinner and then kept on working during the night.<sup>4375</sup> Once the project was completed on schedule, the workers could rest as usual.<sup>4376</sup> unit chiefs were more liberal than others, but it considers that permissions to take a break were exceptional. Workers were not allowed to have any rest days.<sup>4378</sup>

1282. The NUON Chea Defence submits that pursuant to Ta Val's instructions, local cadres and unit chiefs at the Trapeang Thma Dam "enjoyed wide discretion to set working and living conditions of their respective teams".<sup>4379</sup> The Defence submits that, as a consequence, the working and living conditions greatly varied from one unit to another and any crimes that may have been committed were the result of the local cadres acting in deviation from the CPK official policy and directives on working hours and resting time.<sup>4380</sup> No other Party makes relevant submissions in this regard.

1283. The Chamber has established that working hours and conditions at the Trapeang Thma Dam varied from one unit to another, with workers performing work at night in some units and not in others, and some workers being allowed to take breaks while others not.<sup>4381</sup> Further, the Chamber has established that CPK official policy and instructions related to work hours and conditions were not consistently followed locally.<sup>4382</sup> In this regard, the Chamber finds that sick workers at the Dam were allowed to rest, although they were still monitored to ensure they were not feigning their sickness.<sup>4383</sup> This is consistent with a report from the Sector 5 Committee to the zone secretary dated 21 May 1977, indicating that the movement was encouraged to use "as many forces as possible except the sick, the pregnant, the persons who just gave birth to the child, the elders that cannot work but receive the leave ration as set out by the Angkar".<sup>4384</sup> However, the Chamber has found that, contrary to the CPK official policy, workers at the Dam who were not sick were not allowed to have any rest days.<sup>4385</sup>

A. I did not have any resting time within my unit. After the dam had been built, we were required to patch the broken parts of the dam. And some people who completed their work, they could go back to villages. As for me, who was assigned to build the dam, after the construction work was completed, we had to go and fix damaged areas and construct bridges. Therefore, I could not go anywhere. I was assigned to remain at the worksite." (emphasis added)); T. 27 July 2015 (SEN Sophon), E1/323.1, p. 47.

1284. Further evidence that workers were required to work hard in very difficult conditions which were not in line with CPK instructions is provided by PAN Chhuong. While discussing the different Sector 5 dam construction projects he was involved in, the witness testified that regiment chiefs determined on their own initiative the time frame for the completion of a specific project, which often differed from the timeline set by Angkar.<sup>4386</sup> With reference to the construction of Kambaor Dam, the witness explained that if the upper echelon established a timeline of four or five months to complete the project, Ta Val would convene a meeting with the unit chiefs asking them whether they were “courageous enough” to “make a commitment” to the construction project.<sup>4387</sup> In response, the regiment chiefs would say that they could complete the work before the set deadline in order, according to the witness, “to be promoted or gain favour”.<sup>4388</sup> The witness explained that completing the project before the deadline “was not the original plan issued by the upper echelon, but by the local chiefs and the regimental chiefs who decided to execute their own plan”.<sup>4389</sup> Completing the project before the deadline had “negative consequences on workers” as the workers needed to work harder.<sup>4390</sup> According to PAN Chhuong, had they instead followed Angkar’s original plan, they would not have exhausted themselves.<sup>4391</sup> Recalling its assessment of this witness, the Chamber treats this testimony with particular caution.<sup>4392</sup> While accepting PAN Chhuong’s evidence that workers were subjected to particularly hard working conditions, the Chamber finds that the witness sought to shift responsibility when blaming the lower-level cadres exclusively for such treatment. Further, as discussed below, the Chamber has established that the Party Centre had knowledge of the hard working conditions imposed on the workers and did not take effective measures to improve them.

1285. The Chamber has also found that the Party Centre had knowledge that official policy and instructions related to work hours and conditions were not consistently followed locally, with workers exposed to extremely hard conditions.<sup>4393</sup> In this regard, the Chamber notes that the July-August 1977 issue of Revolutionary Youth reported with respect to the Trapeang Thma Dam construction that “[b]rothers fought to dig up and carry the earth all day and night under the burning sun for the entire dry season without any complaining”.<sup>4394</sup> This Revolutionary Youth issue also noted that workers were facing a problem of water shortage, as “the carts and trucks were not able to deliver water to the worksite on time and as needed”, but that the workers “had fought to endure all kinds of hardships until they completed the plan and successfully constructed the Trapeang Thma water reservoir”.<sup>4395</sup> Similarly, a New China News Agency article describing the December 1977 visit to the Trapeang Thma Dam construction site where POL Pot and other CPK senior cadres accompanied Chinese Vice-Premier CHEN Yonggui, reports that RUOS Nhim said that “[d]rought set in when we started to build the reservoir and the 20,000 people engaged in construction even had not enough drinking water”.<sup>4396</sup>

1286. Despite being aware that the workers were exposed to extremely hard conditions, the Party Centre did not take effective measures to minimise their impact on the workers, let alone ensure the implementation of satisfactory living and working conditions. The only response provided by the Party Centre was to send Southwest Zone cadres to “redress the situation” by purging local cadres in the Northwest Zone. However, the evidence has established that the working and living conditions at the worksite did not substantially change upon the Southwest Zone cadre’s arrival. Some witnesses indicated that the conditions in fact deteriorated, that some of the Southwest Zone cadres were “crueller” than Ta Val and that many more people were killed and died of starvation after the Southwest Zone cadres took control of the worksite.<sup>4397</sup>

1287. The Chamber therefore concludes that the Party Centre knew about the difficult regime imposed on the workers and did nothing to change or address the situation. The NUON Chea Defence’s submission is accordingly dismissed.

11.1.7.3. Work quotas

1288. Many witnesses testified that each worker was assigned to dig on average three cubic metres of soil per day, while others recalled that they were asked to carry two or possibly three cubic metres of dirt, if they could complete such work by daytime.<sup>4398</sup> The work quota further varied depending on the units at the Trapeang Thma Dam. SEN Sophon stated that those who were in the so-called “front battlefield” were required to dig four cubic metres of soil per day.<sup>4399</sup> NHIP Horl explained that in his unit they were initially assigned three cubic metres of soil to dig per day but that if by 1 or 2 p.m. they had completed that quota, their workload would be increased to 5 cubic metres.<sup>4400</sup> The children units received a smaller work quota.<sup>4401</sup> SOT Sophal, a member of the children

[...] And for me, I was asked only to complete three cubic metres of soil per day”); T. 28 July 2015 (MAM Soeurm), E1/324.1, pp. 70 (speaking of a work quota of two or three cubic metres of soil to complete per day), 78 (testifying that their work quota was two cubic metres per day and that if workers could complete this work quota by daytime, an additional cubic metre would be given for the evening shift); T. 19 August 2015 (TAK Boy), E1/333.1, pp. 46 (testifying that everyone, including the unit and group leaders, had to meet the daily work quota of three cubic metres of dirt), 48 (explaining that at the beginning they were assigned two cubic metres of soil per day and that if they were able to accomplish that work quota, their work quota would be increased up to three cubic metres of soil per day); T. 10 August 2015 (KAN Thorl), E1/327.1, p. 53 (testifying that in his platoon, workers had to accomplish three cubic metres of earth per person within a day); T. 26 October 2015 (MUN Mot), E1/356.1, p. 78 (testifying that the quota of three cubic metres was imposed to him as a company chief in the same way as to the workers under his supervision); T. 2 September 2015 (MEAN Loey), E1/340.1, p. 64 (explaining that they had to complete three cubic metres of soil per day). With respect to MEAN Loey, the Chamber notes that in his Civil Party application (MEAN Loey Civil Party Application, E3/4889, p. 2, ERN (En) 01061251), the Civil Party indicated that the quota was five-cubic-metres per day. However, when asked to clarify this discrepancy between his application and his in-court statement by the KHIEU Samphan Defence, the Civil Party stood by his in-court statement that the work quota was three cubic metres per day. The Chamber notes the following statements: T. 28 July 2015 (SEN Sophon), E1/324.1, pp. 40-43 (explaining that a plot of 30 cubic metres was assigned to his 10-people group per day but that often they could not meet their daily work quota); T. 11 August 2015 (LAT Suoy), E1/328.1, p. 83 (testifying that there was no individual work quota but there was a group quota of 15 metres high with 10 metres width). The Chamber does not find SEN Sophon’s and LAT Suoy’s statements that there was a group quota to contradict the consistent evidence of the other witnesses and Civil Parties indicating that the work quota was assigned to each individual worker as different units may have assigned the work differently. See also, T. 20 August 2015 (LING Lrysov), E1/334.1, p. 39.

<sup>4399</sup> T. 27 July 2015 (SEN Sophon), E1/323.1, pp. 44-45 (stating that “[t]he work quota was different from one another. The people who were in the so-called front battlefield were required to complete four cubic metres of soil per day. And for me, I was asked only to complete three cubic metres of soil per day [...] [b]ecause I was in the so-called rear battlefield.”), 64 (explaining that he was in a group with less than regular manpower and that “[t]hose from the rear battlefield were considered weaker than those in the front battlefield.”).

This was measured using a pole sign. The witness added that “they would plan a signpost for us on a daily basis, five cubic metres for a person. They would measure it on a daily basis for individual worker.”), 37 (explaining that the five-cubic metres quota was a special requirement to complete the construction of the first bridge).

1289. Once they returned from meetings with Ta Val, company and battalion chiefs met with chiefs at the lower level to disseminate information about the work plan. Chiefs at the lower level in turn disseminated the information to the people under their supervision.<sup>4403</sup> In particular, they set the work quota for the workers, held meetings at different levels to instruct them on the work plan and asked them to reiterate their commitment to complete the tasks allocated according with Angkar's instructions.<sup>4404</sup> Unit chiefs supervised the workers, measured the quotas and reported to their superiors.<sup>4405</sup>

1291. The Chamber heard different accounts as to what happened to workers who could not complete their work quota. Some witnesses testified that such workers would be called to attend criticism and self-criticism sessions.<sup>4407</sup> In particular, SAM Sak

September 2015 (SAM Sak), E1/340.1, pp. 49-50 (explaining that unit chiefs verified the work quota and make a report); T. 30 November 2015 (PAN Chhuong), E1/359.1, pp. 72-73 (testifying that regiment commanders went to see Ta Val every evening, and submitted to him a report about the daily completion of work quotas).

<sup>4406</sup> T. 25 August 2015 (NHIP Horl), E1/336.1, p. 15 (explaining that if he could complete five cubic metres by 5 p.m., he had to help his co-workers to complete their task, while some other days when he could not complete his quota, others in his unit helped him); T. 28 July 2015 (MAM Soeum), E1/324.1, p. 81 (testifying that sometimes his co-workers helped him to reach the quota); T. 10 August 2015 (KAN Thorl), E1/327.1, p. 80 (testifying that if one could not accomplish the work quota, the platoon chief or deputy chief or a member of the platoon could help that person); T. 26 October 2015 (MUN Mot), E1/356.1, p. 55 (testifying that if a worker could not complete the quota, he or she was assisted by others); T. 13 August 2015 (CHHIT Yoek), E1/330.1, pp. 81-82; T. 27 July 2015 (SEN Sophon), E1/323.1, pp. 65 (explaining that if he could not complete the three-cubic-metre work quota he would have to continue working until 10 p.m. before he would be allowed to stop working and eat), 67 (stating that they were given food to eat at 10 p.m. even if the quota was not completed). The Chamber notes that, during the 28 July 2015 hearing, in response to the NUON Chea Defence's questioning, the Civil Party stated that he "could not meet the three cubic metre quota. From the time I started working, I could not meet it. I had to work hard, until 10 p.m., that was when I was told to stop and then I could rest. And as I said, I could not meet the three cubic metres quota." (T. 28 July 2015 (SEN Sophon), E1/324.1, p. 16). In reaction to this answer, the NUON Chea Defence reminded the Civil Party that "[y]esterday, you said that people who didn't finish their quota would be either deprived of food, or whipped. Were you deprived of food or whipped 60 times? Or is that not correct, what I'm saying?" The Civil Party answered that he never experienced that. The Defence went further asking him if he had ever witnessed anyone being deprived of food or whipped for not meeting their work quota, to which the Civil Party answered in the negative (T. 28 July 2015 (SEN Sophon), E1/324.1, p. 17). The Chamber finds that the Defence has mischaracterised the Civil Party's original testimony. SEN Sophon, in fact, only stated that if he did not meet his work quota he would be deprived of food until such time he finished working in the evening at around 10 p.m. This explanation was consistently provided by the Civil Party during both days of his in-court testimony. The Chamber also notes that the Defence has conflated another statement of the Civil Party, that if a worker was lazy the unit chief would come and whip him and then chase him to go to work (T. 27 July 2015 (SEN Sophon), E1/323.1, p. 68), with the questions related to the failure to meet the work quota and thus erroneously concluded that the whipping was another form of punishment for not meeting the work quota. The Chamber notes that the Civil Party's statement as to the treatment of lazy workers was separate from his statements on the work quotas and that the two punishments were not associated in the Civil Party's account. Furthermore, the Chamber finds that the Civil Party provided a recollection of what happened to those who were whipped during the 28 July hearing which is consistent with what said on 27 July ("These people were whipped in the morning when they did not wake up after the bell rang. And they were whipped to leave the hall to work." See T. 28 July 2015 (SEN Sophon), E1/324.1, p. 17). See also, T. 20 August 2015 (LING Lrysov), E1/334.1, pp. 39-40 (explaining that sometimes she had to work at night to complete the quota and that if she could not complete the quota by night-time, she would receive a new quota the day after which she had to complete together with the uncompleted one).

<sup>4407</sup> T. 2 September 2015 (MEAN Loey), E1/340.1, p. 65; T. 28 July 2015 (MAM Soeum), E1/324.1, pp. 78, 81 (testifying that when he could not complete the quota he was criticised). See also, T. 10 August 2015 (KAN Thorl), E1/327.1, p. 55 (testifying that those who could not achieve the work quota would be called to "self-criticize session or refashion"); LING Lrysov Interview Record, E3/9338, p. 3, ERN (En), 00288640. See also, THIM Sovany Interview Record, E3/9544, 11 November 2014, p. 9, ERN (En) 01053881 ("Q. According to the answers of other witnesses, every evening at Trapeang Thma indicated that he attended a criticism and self-criticism session and was criticised for not having fulfilled his daily work quota. After being criticised by someone in the group, he admitted the mistake and committed to completing the work quota.<sup>4408</sup> In this regard, the Chamber notes a difference between the Civil Party's statements provided in court and those given to OCIJ investigators. In court, SAM Sak stated first that those who did not meet the work quota had their food reduced and given to those groups who had completed the work quota, and later, that they were called to participate in criticism and self-criticism meetings.<sup>4409</sup> In contrast, he previously told the OCIJ investigators that those who did not complete their work quota were summoned for re-education, which meant that they would be killed.<sup>4410</sup> The Chamber notes that none of the Parties raised this inconsistency in court. However, in light of the evidence provided by the other witnesses on this issue described below, the Chamber understands the statements provided by SAM Sak as evidencing a common pattern of treatment of workers who did not meet the work quota.<sup>4411</sup> The available evidence shows that individuals who did not meet the expected quota were called to attend criticism and self-criticism meetings, where they were asked to commit to completing their work in accordance with the imposed standard, or were re-educated. In addition, as indicated below, their daily food ration was reduced and in case of repeated failure to meet the work quota imposed, they were taken away and disappeared.

1292. Some witnesses indicated that workers who did not meet their work quotas were taken for re-education.<sup>4412</sup> LAT Suoy testified that workers in units which could not

The Chamber notes that this witness also said that those who could not complete their daily task would continue working in the evening (T. 13 August 2015 (CHHIT Yoeuk), E1/330.1, p. 82). The Chamber does not find these two statements to be contradictory as both things seemed to have happened at different times to different workers. See also, DK Telegram, E3/1113, undated, p. 1, ERN (En) 00434864 (stating that bad or lazy people were “trained with politics and consciousness.”); T. 11 August 2015 (LAT Suoy), E1/328.1, p. 80 (explaining that those who pretended to have night-blindness were taken to re-education; the re-education process was the duty of the unit chiefs or group chiefs of the mobile units and the workers who needed to be re-educated would be criticised as “they had to be refashioned and they had to change their behaviours”. He further clarified that “if after re-education, the person did not learn the lesson or not change, then the unit chief would have to deal with that issue” and “the only solution was to kill that worker”). The Chamber notes that LAT Suoy also indicated that workers who failed to meet the work quota had their meet the assigned work quota were considered traitors and “were taken care of”.<sup>4413</sup> He clarified that being “taken care of” meant being taken away for execution.<sup>4414</sup> The Chamber notes that LAT Suoy’s testimony is consistent with other evidence, in particular that of MEAN Loeuy who indicated that if workers were criticised a few times and still failed to meet the work quota, they would be “in trouble”, meaning that they would disappear or be taken away for re-education or be killed.<sup>4415</sup> However, the Civil Party indicated that he “did not witness the disappearances but there was disappearance”, that he never saw anyone being arrested or killed while at the Dam and that he never witnessed any beatings or any other form of physical violence at the worksite.<sup>4416</sup>

1293. Other witnesses testified that if workers could not fulfil their work quota, they would be whipped by the unit chief and asked to go to work,<sup>4417</sup> deprived of food,<sup>4418</sup> their food ration would be reduced,<sup>4419</sup> or the food ration for the working group would be reduced and given to other groups who had completed the work quota.<sup>4420</sup> SOT Sophal testified that if workers failed to meet their work quota, their food ration would be reduced.<sup>4421</sup> In addition, he clarified that while failure once or twice was met with a

The witness testified that his co-worker was later “taken away and killed”.<sup>4424</sup>

1294. Based on the evidence analysed above, the Chamber concludes that workers who did not meet the work quota assigned to them were progressively punished by first being called to attend criticism and self-criticism meetings, being called to re-education sessions and by then being deprived of food or having their food reduced.<sup>4425</sup> In case the workers continued to fail to meet the work quota, they were subjected to physical punishment, and finally taken away and disappeared.<sup>4426</sup> Findings on the ultimate fate of workers who were taken away and disappeared in these circumstances are made further below.<sup>4427</sup>

11.1.7.4. Criticism and self-criticism meetings

And they warned us that if you keep doing that then you should be mindful of the Angkar’s phrase,

The workers were criticised and criticised one another in particular for not completing the work quota.<sup>4430</sup> After a worker was criticised, he or she had to admit his or her mistake.<sup>4431</sup> While MAM Soeurn indicated that such meetings were held when needed, usually when the work plan was imposed and once it was completed, other witnesses indicated that they were held almost every day, every month or every other month.<sup>4432</sup> Based on this evidence, the Chamber finds that criticism and self-criticism meetings were a common practice at the construction site, but that the frequency of the said meetings varied depending on the units. Such meetings were aimed at maintaining strong pressure on workers and urging them to work hard, either through encouragement or through threats, which contributed to create a climate of fear.

11.1.7.5. Manual versus mechanical work

11.1.8. Living Conditions

11.1.8.1. Water

1297. The Chamber heard different accounts as to the quantity of water provided to the workers. While SEN Sophon and CHHIT Yoeuk stated that there was not enough water to drink, KAN Thorl testified that there was enough water and that it came from a stream nearby.<sup>4437</sup> CHHUM Seng testified that enough water was provided for the workers to drink during mealtimes, but that no water was provided when they rested.<sup>4438</sup> SOT Sophal testified that when they worked close to the lake they could take water from it. When they worked far away from a water source, the water was transported by truck and the workers received enough water to fill their bottle for that day.<sup>4439</sup> developed diarrhoea as a result of drinking it.<sup>4440</sup> Depending on the place they were assigned to, the workers took water directly from the pond,<sup>4441</sup> the lake,<sup>4442</sup> the stream<sup>4443</sup> or drank rainwater.<sup>4444</sup> KAN Thorl explained that before 1975 or after 1979, it was common for villagers in the area where he lived to drink water directly from the pond.<sup>4445</sup> When there was a shortage of water or when workers worked far from the water source, the water was taken from nearby streams and ponds, transported by truck to the worksite and distributed to each unit.<sup>4446</sup> The Chamber finds that workers faced shortages of water. The Northwest Zone faced a serious drought during the time the Dam was built.<sup>4447</sup>

11.1.8.2.2. Food rations at Trapeang Thma Dam

1300. During the initial stages of construction of the Dam, workers had three meals per day; subsequently, they only had two meals per day.<sup>4449</sup> The Chamber notes that visiting Yugoslavian journalists mentioned in a report dated 25 March 1978 that workers were given three portions of rice a day and always enough meat and fish to eat.<sup>4450</sup> The Chamber disregards this document in this respect, as it appears that the information provided to these visitors did not accurately reflect the situation at the worksite, but was rather intended to give a picture of the working and living conditions at Trapeang Thma Dam which accorded to the CPK official discourse on living conditions of the workers.<sup>4451</sup>

1301. The majority of the witnesses and Civil Parties stated that the food received was generally insufficient and that it did not provide workers with enough energy to complete the quota of three cubic metres of dirt per day.<sup>4452</sup> In contrast, TAK Boy, a

They were starving.”); T. 2 September 2015 (SAM Sak), E1/340.1, pp. 11 (“I could not eat my fill; it was not enough for me. I would not eat the thick gruel right away. I had to go and collect edible leaves to mix with the thick gruel to fill my stomach.”), 19-20 (“Sometimes we were so hungry and we spoke to one another. platoon chief, testified that there was sufficient food for everyone and that they ate ordinary steamed rice.<sup>4453</sup> MUN Mot testified that the rice was sufficient as they were given one milk can of rice for lunch and another one for dinner, so they received two milk cans of rice per day, but they did not have enough soup.<sup>4454</sup> CHHUM Seng testified that cadres received a little bit more food than workers below that rank.<sup>4455</sup> The Chamber finds that there existed a differentiated treatment between cadres and workers with respect to food rations which explains TAK Boy's and MUN Mot's statements that the food was sufficient as both witnesses held leadership positions at the worksite. The Chamber also notes RUOS Nhim's 11 May 1978 report indicating that there were food shortages in Sectors 1, 4 and 5.<sup>4456</sup> In light of the above, the Chamber finds that TAK Boy's and MUN Mot's statements do not undermine the other consistent evidence about the insufficiency of food.

1302. The rice was prepared for the workers by the economic section.<sup>4457</sup> However, during busy periods, the food was prepared at the worksite to save time.<sup>4458</sup> The workers ate their meals in the pits they dug; they did not go anywhere else to eat.<sup>4459</sup>

1303. Workers received different types of food. In this regard, SAM Sak indicated that workers were given thick gruel in a small bowl and that during the dry season they were given rice.<sup>4460</sup> NHIP Horl stated that the food ration consisted of a bowl of porridge

The Chamber is satisfied that a differentiated food regime based on workers’ productivity existed at the worksite, whereby those who accomplished more work received more food, and those who accomplished less were given reduced food rations.<sup>4466</sup> In particular, CHHUM Seng explained that the members of the mobile units were divided into three different units: the special unit, whose members dug four or five cubic metres per day, and received two or three cans of rice each; units which could complete two or three cubic metres, whose members received a maximum of two cans of rice each; and the invalid unit, composed of night-blind, myopic or handicapped people, whose members usually received half a can of rice or maximum one can of rice

It was foreseen that two side dishes, namely soup and dried food, would also be provided and dessert would be provided once every three days in 1977, once every two days in 1978 and daily in 1979 and 1980. The plan also provided for fresh fish and meat to be given two times per week whereas dried fish and preserved fish were to be given three times. 1306. The Chamber heard conflicting evidence with respect to the food rations provided at the worksite after the arrival of the Southwest Zone cadres. received before.<sup>4475</sup> This is corroborated by a report dated 11 May 1978 sent by RUOS Nhim to Angkar 870, reporting food shortages across sectors 1, 4 and 5 of the Northwest Zone, and stating that “for the immediate future, there will [have to] be [only] one can of rice [to be provided to one person]”.<sup>4476</sup> The fact that the food ration was reduced also seems to be corroborated by LAT Suoy, who testified that when the Southwest Zone cadres arrived, “they limited the food supply to one can of rice per 100 people”.<sup>4477</sup> SEN Sophon gave evidence that when Ta Val was in charge not many people died, and those who did mostly died of starvation. However, when IM Chaem was in charge more people died, both of starvation and because they were taken away to be killed.<sup>4478</sup> However, the Chamber notes that CHHIT Yoeuk and MAM Soeurm testified that the food remained the same.<sup>4479</sup> In light of this, the Chamber finds that at a minimum the food rations were not increased after the arrival of the Southwest Zone cadres to the Trapeang Thma Dam.

1307. In mid-1976, IENG Thirith visited the Northwest Zone and noted the poor conditions, including malaria, diarrhoea and homelessness, and the fact that young children, pregnant women and old people were working in the fields in the heat.<sup>4480</sup> During an interview with Elizabeth BECKER, IENG Thirith stated that she reported those conditions to POL Pot and that, on the basis of her report, POL Pot launched an inquiry that concluded that the poor conditions in the Northwest Zone were the result of Vietnamese “agents” having infiltrated the Northwest Zone CPK branch.<sup>4481</sup> These claims remain unsupported.

11.1.8.5. Health

11.1.8.5.1. CPK approach to health

1312. The CPK approach to healthcare must be assessed in its historical context. The Cambodian population was seriously affected by years of war preceding the fall of Phnom Penh, including the heavy US bombing campaigns.<sup>4493</sup> The CPK revolutionary ideology in this regard established a plan for a radical change of society, the development of agriculture as the highest priority for economic development and the forced movement of city dwellers to the countryside in order to participate as new peasants or new workers to farming work within cooperatives, as well as the realisation of irrigation projects in areas devoid of sanitary installations and public health institutions (e.g. hospitals). In this regard, the June 1976 issue of the Revolutionary Flag stressed that the CPK “stand[s] on agriculture to expand other sectors”, including public health and social affairs.<sup>4494</sup> “The hospitals are for looking after the sick. The medicine, especially the preventive medicine is food. When there is enough to eat, few get sick.”<sup>4495</sup>

1313. The CPK approach to healthcare was also impacted by the related ideological stance of self-reliance considered as the founding principle for ensuring DK independence and sovereignty. This led the new Cambodian authorities to consider that DK had to rely on its own resources and refuse not only food, but also medical aid from foreign countries out of fear that such aid would be provided under specific and unacceptable conditions, with the limited exception of China.<sup>4496</sup> In this regard, the Chamber notes a Ministry of Commerce document related to the period 1 to 14 August 1976 reporting that Chlorokin and Primakin tablets were distributed in the Northwest Zone.<sup>4497</sup> These medicines appear to have been brought from China.<sup>4498</sup>

1314. Therefore, beyond ensuring sufficient national rice production, a September 1975 document outlining the “policy line on restoring the economy and preparations to build the country in every sector” highlights the need to produce more traditional medicines, and to exchange rice and rubber for medicines from foreign countries.<sup>4499</sup> It states that China was helping with medicines and reports that: “[t]his matter of purchasing is transitional. The important thing is to make it ourselves.”<sup>4500</sup> The Four-Year Plan similarly sets out the intention to produce medicine throughout the country during the period from 1977 to 1980.<sup>4501</sup> There was also a plan for malaria eradication and for establishing general hygiene practices.<sup>4502</sup>

1315. This political line is also illustrated in an article of a magazine published in December 1977 in France by “le Comité des Patriotes du Kampuchéa Démocratique”, reporting excerpts of radio broadcasts from the Voice of Democratic Kampuchea which indicate that the “revolutionary doctors” must strictly adhere to the CPK stance on collectivism and be “determined to debunk the notion that only foreign medicines are

1316. In their speeches, the CPK leaders never expressed doubts concerning the accuracy of their policy, highlighting the progress realised by the DK health system, in particular in the treatment of malaria. In a speech delivered on 15 April 1977, KHIEU Samphan stated that people’s health was generally good, that malaria was less of a problem than in previous years since workers enjoyed adequate rest hours, that medicines had become increasingly available and that anti-malaria programmes had been implemented.<sup>4504</sup> In a speech made during a reception organised on the occasion of a visit of CPK leaders to China, POL Pot stated as follows:

We have been able to solve satisfactorily the problems of the livelihood of the people. It is continuing to improve as the supply of grain is fully assured for everyone and the health conditions of the people become better and better. In 1977, the first year of the four-year plan for the eradication of Malaria, we have already realized 70 to 80% of our objectives.<sup>4505</sup>

1317. However, the information provided by the zones to the Party Centre was more nuanced. For example, a report from Office 560, the Northwest Zone, dated 29 May 1977, states:

People are also given injections and anti-malaria sprays are applied throughout the zone. As of today, malaria has been much lessened although there have been some people affected with the disease. In all regions such disease as fainting spell, diarrhoea and fever are most prominent.<sup>4506</sup>

1318. In a telegram dated 12 August 1977 and addressed to Angkar 870, the Northwest Zone Secretary RUOS Nhim stated that the ready-made intravenous fluid being provided to patients was causing reactions, which made the patients tremble or hiccup, but were “not dangerous”.<sup>4507</sup> A report on the meeting with Chinese delegates on 15 January 1978 states that China had agreed to provide a number of different medicines at Cambodia’s request and that the handover would happen in January or February.<sup>4508</sup>

1319. Furthermore, the organisation of the health system was influenced by CPK policy towards the enemies and the necessity to solve social antagonisms through class struggle. This and the disregard for the practitioners linked to the previous regime is also illustrated in the article published in December 1977 by “le Comité des Patriotes du Kampuchéa Démocratique”, which suggests that the new or revolutionary doctors had a correct social background as all were “the offspring of poor people”, and adds that “[u]nder the just and farsighted leadership of the Communist Party of Kampuchea, our revolutionary men and women combatant doctors nationwide are highly determined to eradicate all the ideas promoted by the doctors from the old society, who exploited disliked and despised the poor”.<sup>4509</sup> Finally, it is important to note that the purges of the medical staff conducted in Phnom Penh and in the zones negatively affected the proper functioning of the health system and the possibility to deliver effective medical care during the DK period.<sup>4510</sup> In light of this, the Chamber finds that those tasked with attending to the workers’ health situation at the Trapeang Thma Dam and other worksites were not professionally trained doctors but laypersons who were not qualified to provide the necessary assistance. Therefore, the Chamber refers to these individuals as “medics”, as opposed to “doctors”.

The Chamber notes SOT Sophal’s statement that he never saw a medical worker at the worksite (T. 30 September 2015 (SOT Sophal), E1/352.1, p. 46). The Chamber finds that the fact that this witness did not see medics at the worksite does not call into question the fact that medics were in fact present at the worksite, as consistently indicated by the other witnesses and Civil Parties. The Chamber further notes that SOT Sophal indicated that he never knew how medics dressed during the DK as every person wore black clothes (T. 30 September 2015 (SOT Sophal), E1/352.1, p. 80).

1323. The NUON Chea Defence contends that medicines were used to fight malaria and that DK authorities fought malaria by all means.<sup>4530</sup> In this regard, MUN Mot, confronted with a report on the situation in the Northwest Zone covering the period from 4 to 29 May 1977 which states that people were given injections and that anti-malaria sprays were applied throughout the Zone, testified that he did not see anti-malaria pills being distributed and that only those who were sick were given the medicines, which were inadequate.<sup>4531</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that the DK authorities were aware of persistent issues concerning malaria and made some efforts to prevent it.<sup>4532</sup> However, the efforts made were insufficient given the scarcity of modern medicines, the use of ineffective traditional medicines, and the living conditions imposed to the workers at Trapeang Thma Dam site, in particular the absence of hygiene and mosquito nets.<sup>4533</sup>

1324. The Co-Prosecutors submit that sick workers were treated with “ineffective ‘rabbit dropping pellets’ regardless of the disease they were suffering from”.<sup>4534</sup> The Civil Party Lead Co-Lawyers refer to the Civil Parties’ evidence on the lack of adequate medical care and the fact that “rabbit drop-like pellets” were given for any type of disease.<sup>4535</sup> The NUON Chea Defence indicates that “sick people were treated with traditional medicines”.<sup>4536</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that Michael VICKERY indicated in his book that peasants had a preference for traditional medicine which “had a few notable successes”.<sup>4537</sup> The Chamber notes that, in the same book, Michael VICKERY also indicated that “[t]he DK general theory then that there should be no privileged professions and that everyone should first learn to live like poor peasants delayed the full development of health care and undoubtedly caused the death of many people who could otherwise have been saved”.<sup>4538</sup> Furthermore, the Chamber places more weight on the evidence provided by the eyewitnesses and Civil Parties who were present at the worksite and had a better, first-hand understanding of whether the medicines they were provided with were effective or not.

When there were many patients, they were taken to the hospital in Anlong Sar, in the Preah Netr Preah district, which was meant to receive members of the mobile units.<sup>4543</sup> Patients at the Anlong Sar hospital suffered from diarrhoea, dysentery and the so-called swollen illness.<sup>4544</sup> Few people recovered after being admitted to the hospital; those who did were sent back to their respective units.<sup>4545</sup> The majority of those

The Chamber notes that SOT Sophal testified in Court that there was no hospital at Trapeang Thma Dam (T. 30 September 2015 (SOT Sophal), E1/352.1, p. 79). Similarly, MEAN Loeuy stated that he did not witness any incidents whereby workers were taken to the hospital (T. 2 September 2015 (MEAN Loeuy), E1/340.1, p. 84). the existence of local couriers and that the information provided by the Khmer Rouge to these visitors misrepresented the reality.<sup>4568</sup> It thus relies on the testimony of the witnesses and Civil Parties who lived and worked at the Dam in this regard.

1332. SOT Sophal testified that militiamen beat the workers and pushed them with long swords when they were working slowly to force them to work hard.<sup>4569</sup> He saw two incidents in which people were beaten to death at the bottom of the Dam; after the execution, the militiamen told bystanders that they would suffer the same fate if they failed to work hard or follow instructions.<sup>4570</sup> SEN Sophon stated that the unit chiefs went around and chased workers to go to work.<sup>4571</sup> TAK Boy testified that his battalion chief told him that no one should avoid work as otherwise they would disappear.<sup>4572</sup> According to KAN Thorl, at meetings workers were told that their food ration would be reduced if they failed to abide by the disciplinary rules, which included respecting working hours and coming to and leaving the worksite on time.<sup>4573</sup> Some witnesses stated that the slogan “to keep you is no gain, to lose you is no loss” was repeated to the workers at meetings by the unit chiefs or by the militia also outside of meetings.<sup>4574</sup> MEAN Loey understood this to mean that those who did not follow the guidelines of Angkar would be taken away and killed.<sup>4575</sup> For SOT Sophal this meant that they were considered useless workers and that “it was no gain to keep us, and it was no loss to remove us”.<sup>4576</sup>

1333. Workers who attempted to flee from the worksite were arrested.<sup>4577</sup> In this regard, LAT Suoy testified that if workers escaped from the worksite and returned to their village or commune, the local village or commune militiamen, referred to as chhlop, would arrest them and send the workers back to the worksite or to their base.<sup>4578</sup> While arrests were not its primary function, LAT Suoy’s guard unit sometimes received orders from Ta Nak to arrest workers who tried to flee and return them to their respective units so that the chief of the mobile unit or the chief of the regiment could deal with them.<sup>4579</sup> SEN Sophon indicated that after his request to visit home was rejected, he did not dare to disregard the decision as he had heard from his unit chief at meetings that those who disobeyed instructions were killed.<sup>4580</sup>

1334. Based on this evidence, the Chamber is satisfied that workers had no freedom to move; they were under constant control and were threatened with being killed, disappearing or having their food reduced if they engaged in any behaviour considered to be against Angkar. Such behaviour included refusing work assignments, not respecting working hours or disobeying instructions, such as going home despite having been denied permission. Workers were chased to go to work and those who attempted to flee the worksite were arrested. This constitutes objective evidence that the workers were compelled to work and to follow the disciplinary rules imposed at the worksite.

In particular, the Chamber notes that SOT Sophal was a member of the children unit and that his young age can explain why he was not asked to provide a biography.

11.1.9.2. Surveillance

evacuated from the cities, “absorbed” by the cooperatives.<sup>4600</sup> However, as there was mistrust towards the New People, the Standing Committee specified that the latter had to be “submissive to the cooperatives politically and economically” and that it was necessary to “be vigilant against no-good elements among the new people”.<sup>4601</sup> These guidelines were implemented strictly by the local cadres of the Northwest Zone, not only in the cooperatives, but also in the worksites created in order to build dams, which were characterised as “hot battlefields”, including in Sector 5 where the Trapeang Thma Dam was located.

1341. In a weekly report dated 21 May 1977 addressed to the Northwest Zone secretary, the Sector 5 Committee explained the approach it followed concerning the appointment of cadres.<sup>4602</sup> This report shows that, in accordance with the CPK ideological stance, there existed a policy aimed at “purifying” the Party cadres of “a number of elements that are not warm” and at taking “an absolute measure against those elements who cause destruction to the collective regime and socialism, by decreasing and sweeping clean by means of implementing the proletarian class dictatorship”.<sup>4603</sup> In this regard it was necessary to “increase the ability and be readily for preparing the forces of all sectors which are the strategic forces to ensure the continuity of the socialist revolution based on the poor peasants, lower middle-class peasants. The cause of action [being] carried out step by step according to the Party’s plan.”<sup>4604</sup>

1342. However, it was also noted that there was a “shortage of the core organization, progressive masses given that the 17 April elements are overpopulated in Sector 5”, and that “the appointment [of cadres] has been still mixed up which is not suitable to continue to work the socialist revolution”.<sup>4605</sup> The report further clarifies that “the good mass cannot still be found because we have appointed all 17 April mass to perform the work”.<sup>4606</sup> It concludes that “the measure [is] taken [...] to gather and search for the pre-17 April elements of ours both men, mostly women”.<sup>4607</sup>

1343. The same report also:

[O]bserved that advantageously we have tried to gather the forces of the poor peasants, lower middle-class peasants to the maximum to prepare the qualification, in the manoeuvre and strategic period, which is the force to build the socialism one leve[l] further; actually, have prepared to divide the cadres, the coordinators, the progressive masses to go down to the cooperatives, the hot battlefields, all spearheads to lead the movement, to be the core that promotes and controls the movement in order to guarantee and achieve the socialism plan; prepare, build up all parts of strategic forces to be ready in the forthcoming period to change the 17 April elements that are in the army, the offices, the ministries, other locations, all sections that we have continuously used because we lacked our core, progressive masses. Have integrated the youth and the children that are our strategic forces and that are the children of the poor peasants, lower middle-class peasants who are our base people to grasp all parts of techniques; in the future it will lead to the decrease of all old technicians.<sup>4608</sup>

1345. Concerning the situation at the Trapeang Thma Dam, the Chamber notes that, in the working units, all of the witnesses who had a leadership role within the workforce structure were Old People.<sup>4610</sup> CHHUM Seng stated that Old People cadres were

Another illustration of the mistrust towards New People is shown in the same report which explained that it was decided to change “the teachers who were not the poor peasants, lower middle-class peasants because in some locations teachers from former regime have been used to teach the children”. appointed to be unit or squad chiefs and MUN Mot indicated that within his company, the platoon chiefs were Old People.<sup>4611</sup> As illustrated above, unit chiefs disseminated the information on the work plan received from their superiors to the workers under their supervision, they set and measured the work quota, supervised the workers and reported to their superiors.<sup>4612</sup> SAM Sak gave evidence that the Old People played a different role at the worksite. For example, they monitored the New People's activities and words.<sup>4613</sup> SEN Sophon stated that while the New People were assigned to do the work, the Old People just observed and were assigned to be group leaders.<sup>4614</sup> Based on this evidence, the Chamber is satisfied that Old People were normally assigned to leadership roles and designated to monitor workers in their units.

existed a differentiated treatment between the workers and the chiefs whereby the former had to work and the latter did not have to work.

1347. With respect to workers, KAN Thorl and MUN Mot testified that New People and Old People received the same food ration.<sup>4618</sup> The Chamber observes that all units comprised both Old People and New People, and that eating was organised communally. It further notes that while some witnesses indicated that the workers in the Sector 5 mobile unit led by Ta Val had different food rations compared to workers in the mobile units at the district, cooperative and commune levels which had a majority of New People,<sup>4619</sup> this was because their workers were supposed to work harder.<sup>4620</sup> The Chamber does not find that there existed a differentiated treatment between Old People and New People workers with respect to food rations.

1348. The same weekly report of the Sector 5 Committee discussed above also indicates that the “17 April elements from Phnom Penh” were constantly “searched for and found”.<sup>4621</sup> Several witnesses also testified that company and battalion chiefs were instructed by Ta Val to identify students and intellectuals in their units and that, if these were reported to him, they would be taken away and killed.<sup>4622</sup> MAM Soeurm testified about the arrest of some members of his unit who were from Phnom Penh.<sup>4623</sup> Based on this evidence, the Chamber finds that New People were the target of arrests and executions and were therefore subjected to discriminatory treatment compared to Old People.

1349. CHHUM Seng testified that the workers who were subjected to the test to establish if they were night-blind were people from Phnom Penh.<sup>4624</sup> However, the Chamber finds that this statement alone is insufficient to establish that workers were subjected to this test because they were New People.

1350. Finally, the Sector 5 Committee indicated in its report the need to “eliminate the culture of the imperialists, feudalists, capitalists, and other oppressive classes”.<sup>4625</sup> This was to be achieved through the elimination of the imaginative consciousness of the 17 April elements from Phnom Penh that have disseminated the living pattern of the old regime like having disseminated or recalled the photographs from the old society, living in the old society, talking in the old society, dressing old style, knowledge of the old society to prevent and destroy the effect of the foreign country as some elements have secretly tuned on and listened to the Thai treacherous radio etc.<sup>4626</sup>

1351. This report shows that behaviours such as listening to songs on the radio, and other demeanours that recalled the old society were considered not in line with the socialist revolution.<sup>4627</sup> The Chamber finds that there were general instructions for the entire Sector 5 which discriminated against New People on the basis of conduct perceived as incompatible with the socialist revolution. However, while these instructions show a clear discriminatory intent, the Chamber has not heard evidence concerning their implementation at Trapeang Thma Dam and will not rely on them to make factual findings.

1352. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the evidence relied on in the Closing Order to charge the crime of persecution on political grounds is insufficient to substantiate the charges.<sup>4628</sup> In particular, it contends that the three WRIs relied on in the Closing Order to charge that New People were subjected to harsher working conditions do not reveal any discriminatory treatment imposed on the New People.<sup>4629</sup>

11.1.11. Deaths, Killings and Disappearances

11.1.11.1. Arrests and disappearances

1354. Numerous workers “went missing” and were never seen again at the worksite by their fellow workers. In particular, SEN Sophon stated that he noticed members of his unit disappeared one after another from time to time and explained that Oeun, a member of his unit, “disappeared; he was taken away and killed”.<sup>4630</sup> However, the Civil Party clarified that he did not witness Oeun being taken away but he assumed he had disappeared because he did not see him anymore.<sup>4631</sup> CHHIT Yoeuk testified that at the worksite people disappeared for no reason and no one dared to ask questions about this issue.<sup>4632</sup> MEAN Loeuy stated that those who were accused of having an imaginary sickness disappeared and that no information was provided concerning their disappearance.<sup>4633</sup> He also indicated that if workers were criticised a few times and still failed to meet the work quota, they would be “in trouble”, meaning that they would disappear.<sup>4634</sup> In some instances, workers were told that a person was reassigned to another unit but in fact, the person disappeared. In this regard, TAK Boy explained that after Comrade Bo was transferred to a new unit, he just disappeared completely which led the witness to assume that he may have died because he never saw him again.<sup>4635</sup> The witness also indicated that most of the people who disappeared were former soldiers or civil servants of the LON Nol regime from his village.<sup>4636</sup> TAK Boy also stated that people disappeared, were killed and buried at night time on the Dam.<sup>4637</sup> The Chamber notes that some of the witnesses indicated in court that they assumed that those who had disappeared were killed.<sup>4638</sup> However, the Chamber considers that the evidence is unclear as to the fate of the people who disappeared in these circumstances, but is satisfied that numerous disappearances took place and that they contributed to a general climate of fear, which affected the workers emotionally. The Chamber also notes the evidence indicating that seriously sick workers were sent to the hospital,<sup>4639</sup> and that some workers fled from the worksite.<sup>4640</sup> The Chamber further notes that mobile units could be deployed to labour at different locations, depending on the needs of the worksite.<sup>4641</sup> The movement of these units, even in the absence of information or notice to the co-workers, was thus perceived as a routine movement of the workforce, which did not have an impact on the atmosphere of fear otherwise permeating the worksite.

1355. In other cases, workers were seen being arrested following which they disappeared. CHHUM Seng testified that two members of his unit, Phon and Rom, were arrested by Khmer Rouge soldiers and taken away.<sup>4642</sup> From that moment, “they just disappeared from the company” and never returned.<sup>4643</sup> CHHUM Seng indicated that the two workers possibly disappeared because they failed to conceal their backgrounds, as Phon was a former LON Nol soldier and Rom came from a capitalist family of the previous regime.<sup>4644</sup> SOT Sophal testified that every two or three days he saw people from another children’s unit working nearby being arrested by the young militiamen tasked with watching over the workers.<sup>4645</sup> The witness explained that he knew that those arrested never returned because he could see that they were missing and that sometimes the missing people were replaced by other workers.<sup>4646</sup> SOT Sophal could not estimate the exact number of workers who were taken away as arrests happened randomly and while one day only one worker was taken away, on another day two or three were arrested.<sup>4647</sup> The witness did not know whether there were prisons or re-education centres near the worksite.<sup>4648</sup> KAN Thorl testified that he saw people being tied up and arrested at night by people he assumed were soldiers.<sup>4649</sup> SAM Sak indicated that at Trapeang Thma Dam people were taken away, which made him afraid.<sup>4650</sup> PAN Chhuong witnessed the arrest of a number of people who were taken away on a vehicle.<sup>4651</sup> The names of these people were on a list that the witness thought was given by Ta Cheal to Ta Rin once the Southwest Zone cadres arrived to the Trapeang Thma Dam.<sup>4652</sup> LING Lrysov testified that she saw 15 to 20 people being tied up, arrested and taken away. Later she heard them being beaten and crying, and after that, silence.<sup>4653</sup> When she asked her unit chief why those people were arrested, she was told to mind her business and her unit chief said: “don’t be curious about other’s business. Do you want to die?”, as a result of which the witness was frightened and could not sleep at night.<sup>4654</sup> The Chamber finds her evidence to be consistent with that of other witnesses on this issue. Before the OCIJ investigators, MAM Soeurm alias HENG Samuoth, a worker of a mobile unit assigned to the Trapeang Thma Dam construction, stated that one evening he saw members of his group, who were 17 April People, arrested and trucked away. He clarified that the arrests were made secretly and that “[n]o one would dare ask anything when their relatives were under arrest”.<sup>4655</sup> In court, he also testified about the arrest of some members of his unit who were from Phnom Penh.<sup>4656</sup>

1357. Some of the people arrested at the Trapeang Thma Dam were Northwest Zone cadres who were transferred to S-21. In this regard, CHHIT Yoeuk testified about the arrest and disappearance of Ta Hat, the Secretary of Phum Srok district, who, according to S-21 records, entered S-21 on 4 September 1977.<sup>4659</sup> The workers were afraid of being arrested with the start of the purge of the Northwest Zone cadres by the Southwest Zone cadres. In particular, MAM Soeurm testified that when the Southwest Zone cadres came to supervise the work at the construction site, the leaders of the Northwest Zone were arrested and workers were afraid of being arrested too because they were their subordinates.<sup>4660</sup> MUN Mot was shocked and scared when he saw his superior Ta San being arrested and taken away.<sup>4661</sup> PAN Chhuong was frightened even though he was loyal to Angkar because he saw that loyal cadres were not spared from the arrests.<sup>4662</sup>

1358. S-21 confessions from arrested Northwest Zone cadres were regularly sent to Angkar and the Northwest Zone with a view to have the local authorities deal with the “network” revealed by the “traitors”.<sup>4663</sup>

1359. When asked whether workers disappeared at the Dam during the time he worked there, PAN Chhuong replied that “nothing happened”.<sup>4664</sup> The Chamber has previously noted a number of inconsistencies in his evidence, and considers that the witness sought to minimise his role, which makes it necessary to approach his testimony with particular caution.<sup>4665</sup> The Chamber notes that this close collaborator of Ta Val provided clear evidence concerning the arrest of other Northwest Zone cadres, but has always tried to lessen the conditions experienced by the workers who were under his authority. In this regard his testimony frequently contradicts consistent evidence provided by other witnesses. Therefore, the Chamber accords no weight to his assertion that “nothing happened” to the workers.

1360. TAK Boy testified that in his unit no one was arrested but that he did not know what happened in other units.<sup>4666</sup> However, as noted below,<sup>4667</sup> he later clarified that educated intellectuals would be identified in their units, arrested and taken to be killed.<sup>4668</sup> The Chamber further notes that TAK Boy was a platoon chief and, due to his position, he may also have tended to deny any arrest concerning workers under his own authority.

1361. NHIP Horl indicated that he did not know about any disappearances or arrest in his unit.<sup>4669</sup> MEAN Loeuy indicated that at the worksite he did not witness any arrest or disappearances, “but there was disappearance”.<sup>4670</sup> SEN Sophon stated that he never witnessed any arrests at the worksite but he witnessed disappearances.<sup>4671</sup> However, the Chamber finds that this evidence does not undermine the evidence provided by the other witnesses and Civil Parties that arrests and disappearances occurred at the Dam. In particular, the Chamber notes that some of the arrests were conducted secretly at night, and it further finds it reasonable to conclude that the size of the worksite and the fact that workers were operating in different areas of the Dam, may have prevented some workers from witnessing scenes that occurred in other parts of the construction site.

11.1.11.2.1. Killings of identified enemies

1362. The Chamber heard from a number of witnesses that workers considered to be enemies were taken away to be killed. CHHUM Seng testified that as a company chief he attended a meeting held by Ta Val where chiefs of companies and battalions were instructed to monitor one person a day and to find out who was a student, an intellectual or a LON Nol soldier.<sup>4672</sup> CHHUM Seng further clarified that if after being monitored and identified by their unit chief a specific person was reported to Ta Val, he or she would be taken away and killed by armed soldiers who were tasked with arresting and killing those considered to be enemies.<sup>4673</sup> Before the arrival of the Southwest Zone cadres at Trapeang Thma Dam, soldiers from the Northwest Zone were in charge of taking people away and killing them; later, the Southwest Zone cadres replaced the latter in arresting and killing the workers.<sup>4674</sup>

1363. According to CHHUM Seng, company or unit chiefs reported that a specific person was opposed to Angkar, was a former LON Nol soldier, a student, an intellectual, a capitalist or feudalism or came from a rich family in the event that person protested against their work assignment,<sup>4675</sup> the unit chief hated them<sup>4676</sup> or even when the chief had a little argument with them.<sup>4677</sup> Unit chiefs were not punished for arbitrarily reporting these people as enemies; on the contrary, Angkar praised these as good reports.<sup>4678</sup> CHHUM Seng stated that, pursuant to Ta Val's order, unit chiefs had the right to execute those people who were opposed to Angkar, were former LON Nol

The Chamber notes that the killings of the workers identified as enemies accords broadly with the general description given by Sector 5 of the progress made by the socialist revolution. In its weekly report dated 21 May 1977, Sector 5 authorities emphasised that: “the socialist revolution movement has been advancing rapidly one level forward as it has proceeded very well, progressively, destroying the enemy that opposed the socialism, strengthening and expanding the regime, the collective regime and socialist locations, and sweeping clean and uprooting further the remains of the capitalist class and other oppressive class”. 1364. KAN Thorl indicated that in his unit there were no people of Vietnamese origin, but that he heard through “word of mouth” that any Vietnamese who were found would be “sent away to be executed”.<sup>4682</sup> TAK Boy indicated that educated intellectuals were identified in their units, arrested and taken to be killed.<sup>4683</sup> While he claimed to know that intellectuals from Phnom Penh were taken to be killed because the battalion and company chiefs were summoned to a meeting where they were instructed to identify intellectuals, he did not provide evidence of specific incidents of such killings.<sup>4684</sup>

1365. The Chamber has found that many workers disappeared from the worksite without explanation and that many others were seen being arrested following which they disappeared.<sup>4685</sup> The Chamber has also established a number of specific incidents of killings, some of which were carried out in public, that show that the execution of workers at the construction site was a reality, as described by many witnesses.<sup>4686</sup>

1366. Dead bodies were found at the worksite. KAN Thorl saw a pit containing three corpses in the eastern part of Trapeang Thma Dam near the roadside.<sup>4687</sup> TAK Boy, while never seeing the dead bodies, once stepped on soft soil while carrying dirt and he thought that there were bodies covered with dirt below as the bodies were actually not deeply buried.<sup>4688</sup> The witness also testified that he came across pits at the base of as well as on the Dam.<sup>4689</sup> The witness came across many bodies half-buried in the pits and concluded that they were corpses of people killed the night before, because members of the mobile units would be normally killed and buried at night, and because the soil would normally be hard and it was only soft when the workers dumped it on specific places.<sup>4690</sup> In the open fields between 200 and 300 metres away from the base of the Dam where they worked, he could smell the stench when he went to relieve himself.<sup>4691</sup> TAK Boy also provided evidence on Veal Ta Kuy, which was the paddy field located beyond the reservoir and close to the base of Trapeang Thma Dam Worksite, where corpses of members from mobile units were buried individually, not in one big pit.<sup>4692</sup> The witness explained that he knew that corpses were buried there because on one occasion when he went to relieve himself there, he saw the cracking pits and smelt the odour coming out of them.<sup>4693</sup> While he never personally saw anyone being killed at Veal Ta Kuy or elsewhere, the witness concluded that those corpses must 1367. The Chamber is satisfied that an order to identify and kill enemies was given by Ta Val to company and battalion chiefs and that this order was consistent with the general measures implemented at the sector level to achieve the socialist revolution by "destroying the enemy".<sup>4695</sup> The Chamber has considered the evidence provided by CHHUM Seng, KAN Thorl and TAK Boy that those identified as enemies, including those who were considered as betraying or disobeying the instructions of Angkar, were targeted, taken away and killed together with the evidence that dead bodies were found at the worksite. Further, it has taken into account the evidence regarding the large number of workers who disappeared from the worksite, as well as that indicating that some executions were carried out in public. The Chamber finds it impossible to establish with certainty whether the corpses found around the Dam were those of people who died of illness or accidentally, or those of workers who were executed. It also cannot determine the exact number of people who died in these circumstances. However, the Chamber finds that the only reasonable inference to draw from the existence of a clear order to kill enemies, the evidence of the three witnesses, the disappearances, the public executions and the discovery of dead bodies at the worksite, is that some of the workers, who were identified as enemies, were killed pursuant to Ta Val's orders.

11.1.11.2.2. Night blindness-related killings

1368. The Chamber also heard evidence that workers were killed if it was determined that they were feigning night blindness.

<sup>4694</sup> T. 20 August 2015 (TAK Boy), E1/334.1, p. 13 (testifying that he did not see anyone being executed with his own eyes at Trapeang Thma Dam but that he was told by another mobile unit member about the killings); T. 19 August 2015 (TAK Boy), E1/333.1, p. 87. The Chamber notes that TAK Boy indicated in his Case 004 Civil Party Application that he witnessed militiamen taking groups of people to be killed at the south of Trapeang Thma Dam in the area called Veal Ta Kuy. See TAK Boy Civil Party Application, E3/9442, 17 March 2013, p. 7, ERN (En) 01001614. However, when asked to explain this inconsistency, TAK Boy stated that he stood by his statement in court that he did not witness or know of the taking of those people by militiamen. T. 20 August 2015 (TAK Boy), E1/334.1, p. 13 (testifying that it was not possible that those were corpses of soldiers who had died in combat because during the war with the LON Nol army, there were no dead bodies over there, adding that he knew that because he grew up in that area and there were only rice fields over there).

1369. CHHUM Seng personally witnessed a test carried out to determine whether people suffered from night blindness by making them walk through a place with hot embers in order to check if they would walk on or if they would avoid them.<sup>4696</sup> As a result of the test, 11 out of 12 workers were determined to be feigning night blindness, were tied up and taken away by soldiers, never returning to their workplace.<sup>4697</sup> The witness did not see their execution but was assigned to flatten the earth the day after and, while doing so, found and saw the dead bodies.<sup>4698</sup> The witness concluded that those were the bodies of the workers who had avoided the hot embers while undertaking the test because the dead bodies were without shirts and the people wore no shirts while walking on the embers.<sup>4699</sup> The Chamber finds that the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn from the evidence is that those 11 workers were killed, based on the fact that the witness saw the test being carried out, saw the 11 people being arrested and taken away, and the next day found dead bodies without shirts. The Chamber therefore concludes that those 11 people were executed by staff of the worksite as a result of the test.

1370. The evidence provided by CHHUM Seng is corroborated by other evidence of the treatment inflicted on those who claimed they were night-blind. In this regard, KAN Thorl explained that those who had poor night vision were tested to see if they were feigning. They were led to walk over a hole on the ground and if the person avoided the hole, he or she was not considered sick but if the person fell into it, it was established that the person had night vision problems.<sup>4700</sup> Similarly, SAM Sak and LAT Suoy stated that people claiming to be night-blind were tested by being guided towards the latrines.<sup>4701</sup> Those who were pretending to be night-blind managed to avoid the latrine pit, but those who were in fact night-blind either fell into it or were prevented from falling by people at the pit.<sup>4702</sup> While those who were actually night-blind survived, those who were pretending disappeared one after another,<sup>4703</sup> were re-educated<sup>4704</sup> or reprimanded,<sup>4705</sup> and if they continued pretending to be sick would be taken away and killed.<sup>4706</sup>

1371. Based on the evidence discussed above, the Chamber is satisfied that tests were carried out to determine if workers suffered from night blindness and these resulted in the death of those who were considered to be feigning.<sup>4707</sup>

11.1.11.2.3. Public executions

1372. Additional executions were carried out in public. SOT Sophal testified that he saw two incidents in which people were beaten to death with sticks at the bottom of the Dam and that he was asked together with his co-workers to bury the dead bodies.<sup>4708</sup> The witness clarified that the militiamen who carried out the executions were not the same as the ones who went around the construction site watching over the workers and poking them with swords.<sup>4709</sup> After the victim had been killed, the militiamen told the other workers that they would eventually suffer the same fate if they failed to work hard or follow instructions, a threat which, in the witness's view, was made to terrify the

The witness clarified that his previous statement to OCIJ investigators that he saw the Khmer Rouge kill hundreds of people (SOT Sophal Interview Record, E3/7755, 4 February 2009, p. 4, ERN (En) 00293004) did not refer to killings that occurred at the Dam but elsewhere. The witness confirmed in court that at the Trapeang Thma Dam Worksite he only saw two people being killed on two separate occasions (T. 30 September 2015 (SOT Sophal), E1/352.1, pp. 63-64).

other workers.<sup>4710</sup> The killings were witnessed by around 50 to 100 people.<sup>4711</sup> This evidence is corroborated by that of witness LING Lrysov who, eventually, affirmed her previous statement to OCIJ investigators that she saw a pregnant woman being beaten with sticks by three men wearing black clothes who, after she fell into a pit close to the first bridge, dropped a stone on her to crush her. The witness clarified that she was 20 to 30 metres away from the location of the incident.<sup>4712</sup>

11.1.11.2.4. Exculpatory evidence

1373. NHIP Horl stated that he never witnessed any killing or maltreatment of workers while he was working at Trapeang Thma Dam.<sup>4713</sup> NHIP Horl and MEAN Loeuy stated that while working at Trapeang Thma Dam they were never disciplined by their superiors and were never beaten by anyone.<sup>4714</sup> MUN Mot testified that he never saw killings at the worksite but that he heard rumours.<sup>4715</sup> He also stated that he did not know whether there was a prison or a security centre at Ta Val's location.<sup>4716</sup> MUN Mot also testified that he never hit or used physical violence against his workers because they finished the work before the time set.<sup>4717</sup> The Chamber finds that the fact that these witnesses and Civil Parties did not witness any killings or violence perpetrated against other workers does not undermine the evidence provided by the ones who witnessed those incidents. In this regard, it considers it possible that NHIP Horl and MEAN Loeuy who were both mere workers, simply did not witness any scenes of violence at the Dam construction site. In this regard, the Chamber notes that the size of the worksite and the fact that workers were operating in different areas of the Dam, may have prevented some workers from witnessing scenes that occurred in other parts of the construction site. Concerning MUN Mot, the Chamber notes that he was a company chief and that, due to his position of authority, his evidence must be considered with caution, as he may tend to minimise the severity of the conditions experienced by the workers at the Dam.<sup>4718</sup>

1374. The Chamber is satisfied that some of the workers who were identified as enemies were killed pursuant to Ta Val's orders, that tests were carried out to determine if workers suffered from night blindness which resulted in the death of those who were considered to be faking and that executions were carried out in public at the worksite.

11.1.11.3. Deaths resulting from working and living conditions

1375. At the worksite, workers frequently died after collapsing to the ground while working.<sup>4719</sup> SOT Sophal testified that he and his co-workers watched a person convulse and draw his last breath, after which the body was taken away.<sup>4720</sup> Some workers died of illness.<sup>4721</sup> In this regard, CHHUM Seng testified about a man in his company who fell ill and disappeared for three days. When the witness went to find out about him, he saw him die in his bed from sickness as he had a fever.<sup>4722</sup>

1376. Some witnesses and Civil Parties did not see anyone die due to overwork, exhaustion or other ill health at the worksite.<sup>4723</sup> The Chamber finds that the fact that these witnesses and Civil Parties did not witness any death resulting from the working and living conditions does not undermine the evidence indicating that such deaths occurred. Conditions varied from one unit to another at the construction site, which resulted in some witnesses having different experiences at the Dam. Given the size of the construction project and the number of workers employed in it, facts that occurred at one location of the worksite were not necessarily known to people working at another location. Furthermore, the Chamber notes that workers who were seriously sick were sent to the hospital where, in case they died, their deaths would not have been witnessed by their co-workers at the worksite.

11.1.12. Legal Findings

11.1.12.1. Murder and extermination

11.1.12.1.1. Executions

1377. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of murder in relation to the surveillance of individuals at worksites, which was aimed at identifying enemies, notably those who refused to be transferred or those unable to perform work, who were then executed in situ.<sup>4724</sup> With respect to Trapeang Thma Dam in particular, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of murder on the basis of the execution of those who were accused of being CIA agents or “Yuon” who would be tied and escorted to the execution place,<sup>4725</sup> workers who failed to meet their work quota,<sup>4726</sup> groups of up to 20 people on a nightly basis,<sup>4727</sup> those who failed to seek permission to marry from unit chairmen.<sup>4728</sup> It also finds that workers were killed by being beaten and thrown into the reservoir basin.<sup>4729</sup> The Closing Order also charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of extermination in relation to the people who were killed or died en masse at Trapeang

Thma Dam.<sup>4730</sup> It finds that the perpetrators, through their acts or omissions, caused the death of a very large number of people.<sup>4731</sup>

1378. The Chamber is satisfied that some workers who were identified as enemies were killed pursuant to Ta Val's orders.<sup>4732</sup> Having considered that battalion and company chiefs were instructed to identify and kill enemies, that witnesses testified that those who were considered enemies were taken away and killed, that many workers disappeared from the worksite and that dead bodies were found at the worksite, the Chamber infers that the victims died as a result of the acts of the perpetrators. The actus reus of murder is established. The specific instruction to identify and kill enemies indicates that the killings were intentional. The mens rea of murder is therefore established. The Chamber concludes that the crime against humanity of murder is established in relation to these incidents.

1379. The Chamber has established that tests were carried out to determine if workers suffered from night-blindness, which resulted in the death of those who were considered to be faking.<sup>4733</sup> While these killings were not witnessed, bodies of the victims were seen and identified as those who had failed the night-blindness test. While the Chamber was not able to identify the exact perpetrators of these killings, it can reasonably infer that the perpetrators were the soldiers who took the workers away after the test.<sup>4734</sup> The actus reus of murder is therefore established. Considering the context in which these killings took place and in particular the fact that the workers who claimed they were night-blind were subjected to the test, were identified, tied and taken away, the Chamber concludes that the perpetrators intended to kill the victims. It is therefore satisfied that the mens rea of murder is established. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of murder is established in relation to these incidents.

1380. The Chamber has also found that at least two executions were carried out in public whereby workers were beaten to death with sticks.<sup>4735</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits in this regard that SOT Sophal was unable to provide any details on the exact identity of the victims or the perpetrators and that his evidence is not corroborated by any other testimony.<sup>4736</sup> The Chamber recalls that a conviction for murder is not precluded because it is impossible to establish the identity of the direct perpetrators or their victims.<sup>4737</sup> Furthermore, it recalls that SOT Sophal's evidence on this issue is corroborated by that of LING Lrysov.<sup>4738</sup> The Chamber finds that the deaths of the victims were caused by beatings inflicted by unidentified militiamen at the Dam, and is therefore satisfied that the actus reus of murder is established. The manner of execution, the fact that the perpetrators executed their victims in public and warned the bystanders they could face the same treatment indicates that the perpetrators intended to cause the death of the victims. The mens rea of murder is therefore satisfied. The Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of murder is established in relation to these incidents.

1381. The Chamber did not receive evidence on the remaining instances of killing charged in the Closing Order and is therefore not satisfied that those killings occurred.

1382. Regarding the charges of extermination based on the execution of large numbers of people at the worksite, the Chamber recalls that there is no minimum number of victims required to establish extermination and that the requirement of scale is to be assessed on a case-by-case basis.<sup>4739</sup> It is possible for the scale element of extermination to be established on an aggregated basis by accumulating separate incidents; however, these incidents need to form part of the same murder operation.<sup>4740</sup> In this regard, the Chamber has found that tests were carried out to determine if workers suffered from night-blindness, which resulted in the killing of those who were considered to be feigning, and that at least two executions were carried out in public whereby workers were beaten to death with sticks.<sup>4741</sup> The Chamber has further found that some workers who were identified as enemies, were killed pursuant to Ta Val's orders.<sup>4742</sup> However, it is unable to quantify with sufficient precision the number of those who were killed in these latter circumstances. The Chamber is satisfied that all of these deaths were the result of the same murder operation which targeted individuals who were considered enemies or non-compliant with the disciplinary rules imposed at the worksite. However, even considering these incidents in aggregate, the Chamber does not find that the scale element of extermination is established to the required standard of proof in the circumstances. The actus reus of extermination is therefore not established and no findings of extermination can be made with respect to deaths resulting from killings and executions.

11.1.12.1.2. Deaths resulting from working and living conditions

1383. The Closing Order further charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of extermination based on the large-scale deaths resulting from the conditions imposed at worksites, including the deprivation of food, accommodation, medical care, hygiene and hard labour, that were calculated to bring about the destruction of part of the population.<sup>4743</sup> The Closing Order also charges that at Trapeang Thma Dam workers died of starvation, exhaustion and illness.<sup>4744</sup> continuously.<sup>4754</sup> Furthermore, those who fell ill were frequently accused of imaginary sickness,<sup>4755</sup> they were usually provided with ineffective medicines<sup>4756</sup> and had only access to medics who were incompetent.<sup>4757</sup> Taking into account all of these findings, the Chamber is satisfied that the death of those who collapsed at the worksite was due to the overwork, exhaustion and lack of food. Workers died of illnesses developed as a result of the hard work and the unhealthy living conditions, which was further aggravated by the lack of appropriate basic medical care. The Chamber is satisfied that the imposition of these conditions caused the death of the workers at the construction site.

1385. The NUON Chea Defence submits that there is no credible evidence of large-scale deaths due to the conditions.<sup>4758</sup> Contrary to this submission, the Chamber has found that workers died almost every day after collapsing<sup>4759</sup> and that people died of illness.<sup>4760</sup> The Chamber recalls that the Trapeang Thma Dam was a huge project in which between 10 and 20 thousand workers were employed,<sup>4761</sup> all of whom were affected by the working and living conditions described above.<sup>4762</sup> Although the Chamber is not able to establish with precision the number of deaths resulting from these conditions, it finds that the scale element of extermination is satisfied and that the actus reus of extermination is established.

1386. With respect to the requisite mens rea, the NUON Chea Defence submits that in order to prove extermination based on the imposition of conditions of life, it is necessary to show that those conditions were deliberately inflicted to cause death on a large scale; conditions beyond anyone's control cannot be used as evidence of extermination.<sup>4763</sup> In this regard, it submits that NUON Chea did not have direct intent to cause large-scale deaths or knowingly create conditions of life that would lead to large number of deaths.<sup>4764</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence contends that the evidence showing that sick people were hospitalised, traditional medicines were manufactured to cure the sick and modern medicines were administered, indicates that the Trapeang Thma Dam staff were not driven by an intent to kill the workers by imposing working conditions upon them calculated to lead to their deaths.<sup>4765</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submit that the Party Centre's acceptance of the risk that deaths due to the conditions would occur "follows not only from its knowledge of the conditions at the site (as reflected in the Revolutionary Youth article and leaders' frequent visits to the worksite) but also from its use of the language of armed struggle, describing the worksite as a 'hot battlefield' and the work projects as 'offensives'".<sup>4766</sup>

1387. The Chamber has found that sick workers were treated with traditional medicines and were allowed to rest.<sup>4767</sup> When their condition was particularly serious, they were taken to the hospital for treatment.<sup>4768</sup> Further, while insufficient, food was provided to the workers<sup>4769</sup> and a differentiated food regime based on the workers' productivity was used as an incentive for workers to accomplish their tasks.<sup>4770</sup> When there was a shortage of water or when the workers were assigned to work far from a water source, water was transported by trucks to the worksite and distributed to each unit.<sup>4771</sup> Although the conditions were clearly difficult and resulted in deaths, the Chamber is not satisfied that the conditions were imposed with the intention of killing workers. Instead, the authorities appear to have intended to exploit the workers for their working capacity by providing them with the minimum conditions that allowed them to keep working, while being indifferent to their well-being and accepting the risk of their death in order to achieve their objective. Contrary to the submission of the Co-Prosecutors, the Chamber recalls that the crime of extermination is incompatible with the notion of dolus eventualis.<sup>4772</sup> Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the requisite mens rea of extermination is not satisfied and it is therefore unable to conclude that the crime against humanity of extermination is established at the Trapeang Thma Dam.

1388. However, as set out above, Internal Rule 98(2) provides that the Chamber may change the legal characterisation of the crime as set out in the closing order, provided that no new constitutive elements are introduced.<sup>4773</sup> In the present case, the Chamber, without introducing new constitutive elements to the ones set out in the Closing Order, finds that the above facts satisfy the elements of murder. In particular, the Chamber finds that the actus reus of murder, namely an act or omission that caused the death of the victim, is established with respect to the deaths resulting from the working and living conditions described above.<sup>4774</sup> In this respect, the relevant act or omission is constituted by the imposition on the workers of conditions described above that caused their death. This includes the unwillingness to adapt working hours and working or living conditions to the workers' needs, and to provide basic appropriate medical care.

1389. The maintenance of these conditions for an extended period of time, including after their effects on the workers became apparent to the worksite authorities, shows that the worksite authorities willingly imposed such conditions with the knowledge that they would likely lead to the death of the victims or in the acceptance of the possibility of this fatal consequence. This satisfies the mens rea of murder in the form of dolus eventualis.

1390. The Chamber accordingly finds that the crime against humanity of murder is established at the Trapeang Thma Dam.

11.1.12.2. Enslavement

1391. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of enslavement with respect to the intentional exercise of total control and all the powers attaching to the right of ownership over people by the personnel of worksites.<sup>4775</sup> In particular, the personnel controlled the victims' physical environment, their access to food and medical care and subjected them to constant surveillance.<sup>4776</sup> In addition, the victims were forced to perform work without their consent.<sup>4777</sup>

1392. The NUON Chea Defence makes a number of submissions regarding the charges of enslavement. It contends that the work carried out at the Trapeang Thma Dam cannot be considered forced labour because the requisition of labour is lawful in cases of “emergency or calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community”.<sup>4778</sup> It further submits that there was no exercise of ownership over people; that no control was exercised over the workers; that any restriction of movement was justified and lawful as freedom of movement as a human right is not absolute; and that any restriction on access to food and medicine was justified to ensure that “everyone had a fair share of the limited resources available, rather than a measure of control”.<sup>4779</sup> Finally, it contends that there is no credible evidence of cruel treatment or abuse at the worksites.<sup>4780</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submit that it was “the fear of death or other punishment that motivated workers to do what they were instructed to do” and that the workers were considered as expendable assets by Angkar.<sup>4781</sup> The Civil Party Lead Co-Lawyers and the KHIEU Samphan Defence do not make any relevant submissions in this regard.

1394. The Chamber is satisfied that the workers could not refuse to go to work at the Trapeang Thma Dam for fear they would face serious repercussions.<sup>4784</sup> Furthermore, the workers could not refuse their assignments as they were afraid of being killed, arrested or disappeared as a consequence.<sup>4785</sup> Consistent with this belief, the Chamber has found evidence of such repercussions. Workers were threatened with being killed, disappearing or with having their food ration reduced should they engage in any behaviour considered to be against Angkar or should they not carry out their assignments.<sup>4786</sup> Witnesses saw workers killed in front of them and were threatened with being killed too if they did not work hard or follow the discipline.<sup>4787</sup> The Chamber has also established that workers were punished if they did not complete the work quota assigned to them.<sup>4788</sup> The Chamber has found that this constitutes objective evidence that workers did not have a choice regarding working at the Dam and completing their assigned tasks.<sup>4789</sup> The Chamber will now consider the NUON Chea Defence's submissions that the Chamber is nonetheless precluded from concluding that this amounts to forced labour.

1395. The Chamber recalls that Article 8(3)(c)(iii) of the ICCPR provides that forced labour does not include inter alia any service exacted in cases of emergency and calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community.<sup>4790</sup> In this regard, the Chamber recalls that the nature and conditions of the work need to be balanced against the nature of the threat to the well-being of the community and the circumstances of the emergency.<sup>4791</sup> Furthermore, if the crisis or emergency situation is the result of the perpetrator's own unlawful activity then such measures would not be justifiable.<sup>4792</sup> In this case, the Chamber has found that the Dam was built as an irrigation project with a view to enable dry season farming.<sup>4793</sup> In pursuing this project, the worksite cadres should have taken into account the conditions imposed on the workers to achieve their objective. In contrast to this requirement, the Chamber has established that workers were required to work regardless of the weather conditions,<sup>4794</sup> had to perform hard work<sup>4795</sup> for very long hours,<sup>4796</sup> were not allowed to have any rest days,<sup>4797</sup> were constantly monitored by their unit chiefs to see how much work they produced,<sup>4798</sup> and were criticised if they did not complete the work quota.<sup>4799</sup> The Chamber has also found that the work conditions were directly responsible for the deaths of some workers.<sup>4800</sup>

These findings clearly demonstrate that the authorities went far beyond simply requiring people to contribute their work in a situation of emergency; instead, they had complete disregard for the conditions imposed and their impact on the workers. Some of the related conduct on the part of the authorities has been determined elsewhere to have been unlawful.<sup>4801</sup> The Chamber accordingly rejects the NUON Chea Defence's submissions on this point and finds that forced labour occurred at the Trapeang Thma Dam. In any event, the Chamber observes that the crime charged in this case is not forced labour but enslavement, which encompasses a broader actus reus than that of forced labour.<sup>4802</sup> The Chamber notes that Article 8(1) of the ICCPR provides that nobody shall be held in slavery and that no exception or derogation is provided to this provision, which is part of customary international law.<sup>4803</sup> The Chamber therefore assesses the facts against the elements of the crime of enslavement.

1396. The Chamber considers the following factual findings as indicia of enslavement: the findings made at paragraph 1394 above; the workers were not free to move around the worksite or to leave it at their will to visit home;<sup>4804</sup> at the worksite, the workers were organised in groups according to a military structure;<sup>4805</sup> if the workers did not complete the work quota they could not go to wash themselves;<sup>4806</sup> and workers had to sleep in communal shelters.<sup>4807</sup> Additionally, the findings on the manner and conditions in which forced labour was implemented at the worksite are taken into consideration.

1397. Contrary to the NUON Chea Defence's submission, the Chamber has established that worksite leaders and cadres had a substantial degree of control over the workers. In particular, it found that workers were monitored by armed guards and those who attempted to flee the worksite were arrested.<sup>4808</sup> The Chamber has also established that unit chiefs and medical staff checked if workers who claimed to be sick were in fact ill and punished those who were considered to be faking.<sup>4809</sup> Workers were provided with insufficient food but did not dare complain about it.<sup>4810</sup> With regard to food in particular, the Chamber rejects the NUON Chea Defence's submission that any restriction on the access to food and medicines was justified to ensure that everyone had a fair share of the limited resources available, in light of the evidence showing that while the workers received insufficient food, cadres received bigger rations<sup>4811</sup> and that the distribution of food was used as a reward and punishment system for the amount of work accomplished by the workers.<sup>4812</sup> With respect to medicines, the Chamber notes that the traditional medicines given to sick workers were ineffective.<sup>4813</sup> With regard to modern medicines, the Chamber has found that the reason why access to medicine was restricted had more to do with the DK authorities' ideological stance that Cambodia had to be "self-reliant" and rely on its own resources, than with the intent to guarantee that everyone had a fair share of the limited resources available.<sup>4814</sup>

1399. Finally, the Chamber has found ample evidence of cruel treatment and abuse inflicted on the workers by the Dam personnel. This included: threats,<sup>4817</sup> beatings,<sup>4818</sup> punishments,<sup>4819</sup> arrests<sup>4820</sup> and executions.<sup>4821</sup> The Chamber has also established that workers were made to work irrespective of the weather conditions,<sup>4822</sup> they were subjected to working and living conditions that affected them physically and mentally,<sup>4823</sup> and they had to work long working hours with insufficient food.<sup>4824</sup> Workers who did not complete their work quota were deprived of food or had their food ration reduced.<sup>4825</sup> Sick workers also had their food ration reduced.<sup>4826</sup> The NUON Chea Defence's submission that there is no credible evidence of cruel treatment or abuse at the worksite is also accordingly dismissed.

1400. The Chamber is satisfied that all of these measures taken together demonstrate that the physical perpetrators exercised any or all powers attaching to the right of ownership over workers at the Dam.<sup>4827</sup> The actus reus of enslavement is thus established.

1401. The fact that workers were monitored, criticised and threatened for any behaviour considered being against Angkar, the duration of the treatment and the systematic way in which it was organised, reveal that the exercise of any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership was performed intentionally.<sup>4828</sup> The mens rea of enslavement is also established.

1402. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of enslavement is established at the Trapeang Thma Dam.

11.1.12.3. Persecution on political grounds

and that some workers, especially New People, would be arrested by CPK cadres for re-education meetings and subsequently disappear.<sup>4831</sup> CPK soldiers and cadres collected biographies of workers at the site in order to identify those to be later arrested or killed.<sup>4832</sup> Informants were placed in the work units to identify individuals for arrest, who were subsequently accused of being an “American CIA agent” or linked to the “Yuon”, arrested and taken to an execution place.<sup>4833</sup> Those who were considered not hard-working were labelled as traitors and placed in case units, where they were subjected to observation and re-education and had to meet the highest work quotas.<sup>4834</sup> Any worker failing to meet these quotas would be taken away and killed.<sup>4835</sup> Those who did not complete their work quotas were considered to have “ideological problems” and were labelled as traitors, punished physically, with the reduction of food or by being placed in the case unit.<sup>4836</sup>

1404. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the Closing Order identifies only three targeted groups for the purposes of the crime of persecution on political grounds: former Khmer Republic officials, New People and Cambodians returning from abroad.<sup>4837</sup> This submission has been addressed and rejected elsewhere in this Judgement.<sup>4838</sup>

1405. The KHIEU Samphan Defence contends that the sections of the Closing Order related to the Trapeang Thma Dam Worksite only make mention of one of the above groups, namely New People.<sup>4839</sup> It further submits that the only relevant alleged discriminatory conduct against New People is described at paragraph 343 of the Closing Order as harsher working conditions, notably bigger work quotas and unjustified punishments.<sup>4840</sup> The Closing Order clearly indicates with respect to cooperatives and worksites that “real or perceived enemies of the CPK were subjected to harsher treatment and living conditions than the rest of the population”.<sup>4841</sup> It further charges that “the identification of people as targets for persecution, on the basis that anyone who disagreed with the CPK ideology was excluded, amounts to persecution on political grounds”.<sup>4842</sup> For these reasons and having considered the entirety of the charges of persecution on political grounds in the Closing Order as set out above, the KHIEU Samphan Defence’s submission is rejected.

1406. The NUON Chea Defence contends in this regard that the alleged victims of persecution were not members of a discernible political group.<sup>4843</sup> The Civil Party Lead Co-Lawyers submit that Civil Party evidence “indicates that the imposition of harsher living and working conditions upon New People amounted to persecutory acts against that group”.<sup>4844</sup> No other Party makes relevant submissions in this regard.

1407. The Chamber must satisfy itself that the targeted group of “real or perceived enemies of the CPK” referred to in the Closing Order was sufficiently discernible, such that it is able to establish that the requisite persecutory consequences occur for the group.<sup>4845</sup> The discernibility of this group may be assessed by examining whether the victims belonged to a category of the group as identified by the Party leadership. In this regard, the Chamber has established that, compliant with the measures implemented at the sector level, Ta Val instructed company and battalions chiefs to identify people with “bad background”, LON Nol soldiers, “Yvon”, CIA agents, students, intellectuals and those who were considered to have engaged in activities against Angkar in their units.<sup>4846</sup> Pursuant to these instructions, battalion and company chiefs identified these individuals for arrest. Workers were also monitored to see how much work they produced<sup>4847</sup> and those who were considered not hard-working were placed in “case units”.<sup>4848</sup> Furthermore, some official DK documents made reference to the New People as a category of individuals who could not be trusted or who needed to be screened because of the presence of traitors among this group.<sup>4849</sup> Witnesses and Civil Parties indicated that they knew the New People as those who were evacuated from the cities and that they could tell who the New People were by their accent.<sup>4850</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that the “real or perceived enemies of the CPK” was a clearly discernible group.

1408. The NUON Chea Defence submits that there is no evidence of discrimination at the Trapeang Thma Dam as all workers were subjected to the same conditions and any differentiation depended on peoples’ skills and abilities.<sup>4851</sup> The Co-Prosecutors contend that Khmer Rouge cadres at Trapeang Thma Dam singled out members of certain groups for additional mistreatment, including New People and the “Yuon”.<sup>4852</sup> No other Party makes relevant submissions in this regard.

1409. Contrary to the NUON Chea Defence’s submission, the Chamber has found numerous instances in which workers considered to be enemies of the CPK were subjected to harsher treatment and living conditions. New People were excluded from having any leadership positions which were instead attributed to Old People with the task of monitoring the New People in their units.<sup>4853</sup> Those who were considered not hard-working were put in a “case unit” where they were made to work harder compared to workers in normal units.<sup>4854</sup> Company and battalions chiefs were instructed to identify and kill those who were found to have a “bad background”, LON Nol soldiers, “Yuon”, CIA agents, students, intellectuals and those who were considered to have engaged in activities against Angkar in their units.<sup>4855</sup> As illustrated above, the Chamber is satisfied that some of the workers who were identified as enemies were killed pursuant to Ta Val’s orders.<sup>4856</sup> Based on the analysis above, the Chamber concludes that these acts were discriminatory in fact as it is clear that the consequences occurred because workers were perceived as part of a targeted group of enemies.

1410. The Chamber finds that the instruction to identify the categories of enemies indicated above, including those with a “bad background”, LON Nol soldiers, “Yuon”, CIA agents, students, intellectuals and those who were considered to have engaged in activities against Angkar, the fact that the “17 April elements from Phnom Penh” were constantly “searched for and found” and the appointment of Old People to leadership positions and to monitor the behaviour of their subordinates, were carried out with a specific intent to discriminate against the targeted group.

1412. The acts charged as persecution include acts found to amount to independent crimes against humanity (including murders and other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity) as well as acts which, on their own, do not necessarily amount to crimes (in particular, being punished for not achieving the work quota, being subjected to monitoring by unit chiefs). Considered together and within the context these acts were committed, the Chamber is satisfied that they cumulatively rise to the requisite level of severity such as to constitute persecution on political grounds.

1413. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that both the actus reus and the mens rea of the crime are established. Accordingly, it finds that the crime against humanity of persecution on political grounds is established at the Trapeang Thma Dam.

11.1.12.4. Other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity

1414. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity on the basis of the serious mental and physical suffering and injury as well as the serious attacks on human dignity inflicted by the CPK authorities on victims by depriving the civilian population of adequate food, shelter, medical assistance and minimum sanitary conditions at the

Trapeang Thma Dam.<sup>4861</sup>

1415. The Chamber has established that the following conditions were imposed on the workers at the Trapeang Thma Dam: workers were provided with insufficient food for the amount of work they had to perform,<sup>4862</sup> with some witnesses indicating that they were given gruel or porridge.<sup>4863</sup> They did not have access to clean drinking water.<sup>4864</sup> Workers slept in communal halls without beds or pillows and did not get enough sleep.<sup>4865</sup> Workers did not have access to proper sanitation facilities and the hygienic conditions were inadequate.<sup>4866</sup> They were made to work against their will.<sup>4867</sup> They had to work for very long hours,<sup>4868</sup> were not allowed to have any rest days<sup>4869</sup> and were required to work regardless of the weather conditions.<sup>4870</sup>

1416. The Chamber is satisfied that these conditions caused serious mental and physical suffering for the workers at the construction site. It has established that the working conditions affected the workers physically and mentally, with some witnesses testifying that at the construction site they were treated like animals.<sup>4871</sup> Workers were constantly afraid of being killed for any mistake they may have made or for any accusations made against them.<sup>4872</sup> They were threatened with being killed should they disobey instructions.<sup>4873</sup> Some executions were carried out in public to terrify the workers.<sup>4874</sup> Recurrent disappearances of workers at the worksite created a general climate of fear which affected the workers mentally.<sup>4875</sup> Workers developed a number of diseases as a result of the conditions at the worksite, and were very skinny and pale.<sup>4876</sup> Medicines provided to the workers were ineffective.<sup>4877</sup>

1417. The NUON Chea Defence submits that the gravity assessment to be made in respect of the crime of other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity must take into account the context in which the crimes occurred.<sup>4878</sup> It contends that, “given the dire circumstances that Cambodia was in at the time”, the working and living conditions alleged to constitute attacks against human dignity are not of a comparable gravity to other crimes against humanity.<sup>4879</sup> No other Party makes relevant submissions in this regard.

1418. The Chamber recalls that the gravity assessment may take context into consideration.<sup>4880</sup> In this case, the Chamber has established that conditions in Cambodia during the DK period were difficult due to years of civil war and the damaging US bombing campaign.<sup>4881</sup> However, even if resources including food and medical assistance might have been scarce at the worksite and in the entire country, it was within the power of the site authorities to take measures to alleviate the impact of the scarcity of resources and not impose on the population extremely harsh working and living conditions. On the contrary, instead of adapting the work schedule or improving safety and living conditions, the authorities deliberately continued subjecting the workers to working and living conditions that caused severe mental or physical suffering or injury despite being aware of their impact on the workers.<sup>4882</sup>

1419. The Chamber finds that this constituted a serious attack on the human dignity of the workers. The evidence shows the serious and lasting impact of the working and living conditions on the victims and the scale on which these affected the population. In light of the above, the Chamber is satisfied that these acts, considered holistically, are of similar gravity to the enumerated crimes against humanity, and accordingly rejects the NUON Chea Defence’s submission in this respect. The Chamber is satisfied that the actus reus of the crime is therefore established.

1420. The prolonged duration of the imposition of these conditions on the workers, and particularly their continuation when the results of these conditions had already become evident, shows that they were imposed intentionally. The Chamber is satisfied that the mens rea of the crime is also established.

11.1.12.5. Other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances

1422. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances in respect of the great suffering experienced by victims because of the arrest, detention or abduction of loved ones and others in conditions that placed them outside the protection of the law and the subsequent refusal to provide information on their whereabouts.<sup>4883</sup> With respect to Trapeang Thma Dam in particular, the Closing Order charges that some workers, especially New People, were arrested by CPK cadres for “re-education meetings” and subsequently disappeared.<sup>4884</sup>

1423. The NUON Chea Defence submits that “the fact that certain workers were no longer seen at their previous workplace does not establish beyond reasonable doubt that enforced ‘disappearances’ or arbitrary arrests occurred”.<sup>4885</sup> In the NUON Chea Defence’s contention, workers at the Trapeang Thma Dam were rotated or reassigned to other sites, which may explain why some people were not seen again at their previous workplace.<sup>4886</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submit that “[w]orkers simply vanished on a regular basis, without any explanation to their fellow workers of where they had been taken or why” and that “[t]hese unexplained disappearances caused terror in the other workers, who wondered whether they would be next”.<sup>4887</sup> The Civil Party Lead Co-Lawyers recall the evidence of the Civil Parties who described the disappearance of their unit chiefs or co-workers.<sup>4888</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence does not make any specific submission in this regard.

1424. The Chamber has established that some workers vanished with no notice from the worksite and were never seen again by their co-workers.<sup>4889</sup> The Chamber has found that some workers were hospitalised and that some escaped.<sup>4890</sup> It recalls that mobile units could be deployed to work at different locations.<sup>4891</sup> However, the Chamber finds that these explanations do not account for the totality of the disappearances from the worksite. In this regard, the Chamber notes the particular context of these disappearances, including the fact that some of those who disappeared had been accused of having an imaginary sickness or were former LON Nol soldiers and civil servants.<sup>4892</sup> The Chamber also notes the frequency and the large numbers of workers concerned.<sup>4893</sup> The Chamber has also established that company and battalion chiefs were instructed by Ta Val to monitor the members of their units to identify those who had a “bad background” or were considered enemies.<sup>4894</sup> The Chamber further recalls that a general policy to eliminate enemies existed during the period in which the Trapeang Thma Dam was being constructed.<sup>4895</sup> Furthermore, there is evidence of workers seen being arrested by soldiers or militiamen prior to disappearing and it is reasonable to believe under the circumstances that this may have happened also on some other occasions that were not witnessed by anyone who appeared before the Chamber in this case.<sup>4896</sup> In this regard the Chamber recalls that there is evidence that some arrests were made during night-time and were kept secret.<sup>4897</sup> Workers at the Dam were under constant control and surveillance by the worksite authorities.<sup>4898</sup> They had no freedom to move.<sup>4899</sup> The leadership at the Dam exercised powers attaching to the right of ownership over the workers.<sup>4900</sup> Workers had no access to a court system or to any mechanism where they could file a complaint concerning their treatment.<sup>4901</sup> Also, there is no evidence of any system of recording or registering the personal details of the persons who disappeared from the worksite that would have been accessible to the public, or any other procedural protection during the time workers were assigned to the worksite.<sup>4902</sup> On the contrary, the key standard to be applied by CPK members was, as always during the DK period, to maintain secrecy. The authorities in charge of the Dam construction provided no information concerning the fate of workers who disappeared or they gave false or unverifiable information, stating for example that workers had been reassigned to another location.<sup>4903</sup>

1425. Having considered all of the above, the Chamber does not consider it to be a reasonable possibility that all of the workers who were not seen any more at the worksite were hospitalised, escaped, or were re-assigned to labour at different locations as members of mobile units. It therefore finds that the only reasonable inference that can be drawn from the evidence is that a significant number of workers who disappeared and were never seen again at the worksite were in fact deprived of their liberty by the worksite authorities and disappeared in the absence of any information provided to their co-workers or their family members as to their fate or whereabouts.

1426. Regarding arrests, the Chamber finds that militiamen or soldiers deprived the workers of their liberty.<sup>4904</sup> Workers were afraid to ask about their fate as they feared being arrested as well,<sup>4905</sup> and some workers were discouraged from inquiring about their colleagues' whereabouts.<sup>4906</sup> These arrests and subsequent disappearances created fear and anxiety in the workers who were left behind.

1427. The Chamber finds that the acts described above caused serious mental suffering to the victims, namely those who disappeared and those who were left behind at the worksite, and constituted a serious attack on their human dignity. These disappearances made workers at the construction site live in constant fear of being arrested and disappeared, and made them wonder when their day would come. The Chamber considers all of these acts holistically and in the context of the general atmosphere at the worksite and finds that the widespread and systematic nature of these acts and their lasting impact on the victims show that they are of similar gravity to the other enumerated crimes against humanity. The Chamber is satisfied that the actus reus of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances is established.

1428. The systematic and organised nature of these arrests and disappearances and the fact that they occurred over a prolonged period of time demonstrate that these acts were performed intentionally. The Chamber is satisfied that the mens rea of the crime is established.

1429. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the crimes against humanity of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances is established at the Trapeang Thma Dam.

11.2. 1st January Dam Worksite

11.2.1. *Closing Order

1430. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crimes against humanity of (i) murder; (ii) extermination; (iii) enslavement; (iv) persecution on political grounds; (v) persecution of the Cham on religious grounds; and other inhumane acts through (vi) attacks against human dignity, and conduct characterised as (vii) forced marriage and (viii) enforced disappearances, in connection with the construction of the 1st January Dam Worksite.<sup>4907</sup> According to the Closing Order, between late 1976 or early 1977 and early 1978, the 1st January Dam was built in Sectors 42 and 43 of the Central (old North) Zone, damming the Steung Chinit River to create a reservoir for the irrigation of rice fields in the area.<sup>4908</sup> Tens of thousands of people participated in the construction of the 1st January Dam, including New People, Cham, Vietnamese and Chinese.<sup>4909</sup> The charge of forced marriage in relation to the 1st January Dam Worksite will be addressed in the chapter on Regulation of Marriage.<sup>4910</sup>

11.2.2. Preliminary Issues

1431. The KHIEU Samphan Defence raises several preliminary objections concerning the charges pertaining to the 1st January Dam Worksite.<sup>4911</sup> First, it submits that the charges of murder at this worksite are limited to killings that occurred at the worksite itself and exclude killings at other locations, including the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda. As facts concerning other locations were not contained in the Introductory Submission, the Co-Investigating Judges were not properly seised thereof, and the facts are therefore outside the scope of the trial.<sup>4912</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence further submits that charges of political persecution contained in the Closing Order are “illegal” because the Introductory Submission did not make any reference to discriminatory treatment or the categorisation of workers.<sup>4913</sup> Similarly, the Co-Investigating Judges were not seised of facts concerning religious persecution of the Cham because it was not mentioned in the Introductory Submission.<sup>4914</sup> Finally, it submits that facts supporting the charge of enforced disappearances were not contained in the Introductory Submission and are also outside the scope of the trial.<sup>4915</sup>

1432. The NUON Chea Defence submits that certain adduced evidence is outside the scope of charges in Case 002/02, including events related to the 6th January Dam or any canals connecting to the 1st January Dam.<sup>4916</sup> It also submits that any evidence about local villages, communes or other locations “unrelated to the construction of the 1st January Dam”, such as the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda, are outside the scope of the charges.<sup>4917</sup>

1434. The Chamber recalls its ruling that the Closing Order’s reference to the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda in connection with the 1st January Dam together with specific reference to this paragraph in the annex to the Case 002 First Severance Decision provided notice to the Accused that it formed part of Case 002/02.<sup>4919</sup> The Chamber further recalls its ruling that the 6th January Dam and the canal network of the 1st and 6th January Dams form part of the Closing Order, rejecting the KHIEU Samphan Defence's objections to the contrary.<sup>4920</sup> The Defence teams have provided no new arguments to justify revisiting these issues and the Chamber accordingly rejects their respective submissions in this regard. However, it notes that evidence was presented at trial of killings that occurred in villages which had supplied workers to the 1st January Dam.<sup>4921</sup> These villages cannot be considered as part of the Case 002/02 as they were not identified in the Closing Order and the Chamber therefore declines to make factual findings on such events.

1435. The Chamber rejects the KHIEU Samphan Defence's challenges to the inclusion of charges related to political persecution, religious persecution and enforced disappearances, recalling its prior ruling that "any request concerning the Trial Chamber's authority to deal with parts of the Closing Order which is raised after the expiry of the time limit for the filing of preliminary objections shall be considered untimely and denied".<sup>4922</sup>

1436. Finally, the NUON Chea Defence submits that the Closing Order lacks clarity, particularly in relation to any underlying factual allegations pertaining to the treatment

<sup>4919</sup> T. 25 May 2015, E1/304.1, pp. 95-96, 99-103, 107 (Judge Lavergne: "The objection made by the Defence teams is denied. of former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials.<sup>4923</sup> No other Party made relevant submissions on this issue. The Chamber notes that the Closing Order specifically finds that CPK authorities identified several groups as “enemies” based on their real or perceived political beliefs, including former Khmer Republic officials and “New People”.<sup>4924</sup>

1437. As regards the 1st January Dam, the Chamber notes that the Closing Order specifically found that people knew they would be arrested if they did anything wrong. It further found that workers disappeared, mostly at night. The Closing Order found that many of those who disappeared had perceived links to the former Khmer Republic regime.<sup>4925</sup> The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the Closing Order clearly sets out a number of findings with respect to the treatment of former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials, such that related charges are properly before the Chamber. The NUON Chea Defence’s submission is therefore rejected.

11.2.3. General Considerations on Evidence

1438. The Chamber heard seven witnesses and five Civil Parties on the topic of the 1st January Dam.<sup>4926</sup> Six other witnesses were heard during Case 002/01 or during other trial topics who also provided information on the 1st January Dam Worksite and/or Central (old North) Zone administrative and communication structures.<sup>4927</sup> During the judicial investigation, OCIJ investigators interviewed several witnesses who did not appear in court but whose statements were admitted.<sup>4928</sup> The Chamber will rely on this evidence in accordance with the principles set out in the section on preliminary issues for the purposes of corroboration.<sup>4929</sup>

1439. The Chamber first notes the testimony of Witness SAUT Toeung, who was

NUON Chea's bodyguard and messenger from the middle of 1975 until 1978.<sup>4930</sup> He testified that he provided security outside the locations where the Standing and Central Committees met.<sup>4931</sup> When KOY Thuon was the Central (old North) Zone Secretary, SAUT Toeung observed him entering meetings with POL Pot, NUON Chea, SON Sen, KHIEU Samphan, IENG Sary, VORN Vet at K-3, Angkar's office near Phsar Thmei in Phnom Penh.<sup>4932</sup> SAUT Toeung's testimony contained some internal inconsistencies as well as some inconsistencies with his prior statements.<sup>4933</sup> Further, he was close to the Khmer Rouge senior leadership and may have had an incentive to minimise his own responsibility.<sup>4934</sup> However, SAUT Toeung explained that he had not told the full truth in his first Written Record of Interview because he had been afraid and that after being informed about the law and procedures he decided to tell the truth.<sup>4935</sup> Considering this background, the Chamber approaches his testimony with due caution.

1440. The Chamber also relies on the testimony of Witness BAN Seak alias HANG Phos, who was appointed Deputy Secretary of Chamkar Leu district in Sector 42 around February or March 1977.<sup>4936</sup> Although BAN Seak sought to limit his personal responsibility for his involvement in the treatment of the Cham, the Chamber has found that he was otherwise cooperative and forthcoming, including when providing evidence concerning administration, structure and hierarchy, and therefore considers him to be a credible witness on these topics.<sup>4937</sup>

1441. The Chamber further notes that among those who were enlisted by KE Pauk, the Central (old North) Zone Secretary, in the construction of the 1st January Dam were Witness PECH Sokha, a member of the technical group overseeing the work on the Dam, IENG Chham, KE Pauk's messenger and later chief of public works, and KE Pich Vannak, KE Pauk's son, all of whom trained together at the Russei Keo technical school in Phnom Penh.<sup>4938</sup> PECH Sokha testified in Case 002/02. IENG Chham and KE Pich Vannak each provided statements to OCIJ investigators but died before trial. While it was not possible to hear in Court the authors of these last statements, the Chamber, as indicated above, will rely on this evidence in accordance with the principles set out in the section on preliminary issues. Further, in order to assess the probative value of these two WRIs, the Chamber considers that, the following factors are relevant. IENG Chham was identified by several witnesses as KE Pauk's messenger and the chief of public works responsible for the plans and construction of the 1st January Dam.<sup>4939</sup> As such, he was in a position to have significant information about the construction of the 1st January Dam and the related administrative structures, although he appears to minimise his own responsibility. Where sufficiently corroborated, the Chamber therefore relies on his WRI.

1442. KE Pich Vannak, son of KE Pauk and of Witness SOU Soeurn, the Chamkar Leu District Secretary in Sector 42, also provided a WRI to the Co-Investigating Judges prior to his death.<sup>4940</sup> He worked as KE Pauk's driver and sometime bodyguard, providing significant information concerning administrative structures and purges within the Central Zone.<sup>4941</sup>

1443. The Chamber did not have the opportunity to hear KE Pauk's testimony due to his death in 2002,<sup>4942</sup> it relies however upon his autobiography.<sup>4943</sup> Stephen HEDER testified in Case 002/01 that this document was given by KHEM Ngun to a number of people, including a journalist who in turn provided it to him. Mr. HEDER stated that to his knowledge either KE Pauk wrote himself his autobiography, or it was taken down by KHEM Ngun as a result of an interview he did with KE Pauk.<sup>4944</sup> KHEM Ngun was a CPK soldier, 3rd Division (later Division 164), who became Ta Mok's chief of staff after the DK period, until KHEM's defection in 1998 or 1999.<sup>4945</sup> The Chamber has no indication that KE Pauk was ever detained or under duress at any time, including when the autobiography was written. Therefore, there is no reason to consider that this document may have been tainted by any form of coercion. To the contrary, the recitation of events was given by one Khmer Rouge cadre to another in apparent defence of his actions during the DK period. Taking into consideration the potential for self-serving assertions in the autography and the uncertainty surrounding its provenance, the Chamber approaches the document with due caution and will rely on it only for corroboration.

KE Pauk then appointed IENG Chham to be in charge of the continuation of construction of the Dam (though not the connecting canals)).

The Chamber further notes that the Parties often rely upon this Interview Record in their Closing Briefs. See e.g., NUON Chea Closing Brief, paras 294, 298, 376, 409, 1033, 1044, 1103; KHIEU Samphan Closing Brief, paras 687, 816, 1172, 1711, 1849; Co-Prosecutors' Closing Brief, paras 303, 341-342, 367-368, 386, 408, 479, 1151.

1444. Finally, the Chamber notes that many of the witnesses who testified were in positions of authority at the 1st January Dam and had an incentive to minimise their own culpability for alleged crimes at the site. Notably, Witness OR Ho, who was the Prey Srangae village chief, supervised 100 people in a work unit at the 1st January Dam.<sup>4946</sup> PECH Sokha was also in privileged position at the 1st January Dam Worksite as part of the technical team guiding its construction.<sup>4947</sup> Witness YEAN Lon admitted that he was a militiaman in Kang Sau village and was identified by UTH Seng as riding

Similar considerations apply to the testimonies of PECH Sokha and SOU Soeurn, which are noted in the credibility assessments below.

11.2.4. Location and Establishment

1445. OCIJ investigators determined that the original 1st January Dam on the Steung Chinit River was made of compressed earth construction forming an embankment approximately 66 kilometres long, 7 metres wide at the top and 20 metres wide at the base with a mean height of two to three metres with a canal 20 metres wide running along the entire length of the dam.<sup>4950</sup> The Dam is currently located in Kampong Thom province and extends over current-day Baray and Santuk districts, which at the time of the construction were respectively located in Sectors 42 and 43 in the Central (old North) Zone.<sup>4951</sup> The closest town is Kampong Thma which is approximately 130 km from Phnom Penh along National Road Number 6.<sup>4952</sup> The Chamber also has before it video of construction of the 1st January Dam as well as the completed spillway likely recorded during the visit of China's Deputy Premier and member of the Politburo, CHEN Yonggui, to commemorate the inauguration of the dam in December 1977.<sup>4953</sup>

1446. Testimonial evidence before the Chamber confirmed the size and location of the Dam. Witness OR Ho, who was Prey Srangae village chief, in Ballang commune, Baray district, Kampong Thom province (within Sector 42) from 1975,<sup>4954</sup> testified that the 1st January Dam started from Prey Srangae village and continued about 3 kilometres until it joined the 6th January Dam, with the total distance of both dams being 10 kilometres.<sup>4955</sup> PECH Sokha testified that, when the entire length of the canal systems was also considered, the combined length of the 1st and 6th January Dams and canals was 60 kilometres.<sup>4956</sup> The Chamber finds that all parts of this structure were related to the 1st January Dam Worksite and considers evidence pertaining to all of it.<sup>4957</sup>

1447. During construction, small logs and plants closely laid were used for reinforcement before leaves and earth were deposited into the structure to complete the Dam.<sup>4958</sup> Based on the consistent evidence of IENG Chham and PECH Sokha, the Chamber finds that the construction of the 1st January Dam began in late 1976 or early 1977 and continued until the beginning of 1978.<sup>4959</sup> There was a temporary break in construction work, at least for some workers, during the rainy season around June 1977.<sup>4960</sup> Although PECH Sokha testified that the work was never fully completed, both he and IENG Chham stated that the Dam was put into use starting at the end of 1977 or

11.2.5. Purpose of the 1st January Dam

1448. The primary purpose of the 1st January Dam was to provide agricultural irrigation to nearby rice fields and thus help attain the three-tonnes-per-hectare crop yield set by the Party.<sup>4963</sup> This purpose was understood by district secretaries and work unit supervisors at the 1st January Dam, although it may not have been effectively communicated to the workers themselves.<sup>4964</sup>

1449. POL Pot explained the rationale for the policy of constructing dams in a 27 September 1977 speech:

In the field of agriculture, our Party has focused on solving the key problem of water conservation in order to maximize rice production, which is the fundamental staple food. In the past dry season of 1977, the people of our cooperatives built many large water reservoirs in every village and region [...] In total, in 1977 our cooperative peasants built all sorts of water projects, which solved the water problem during all seasons, dry as well as rainy, for 400,000 hectares of farmland.<sup>4965</sup>

1450. The Dam was eventually put to use and permitted the farming of rice in the dry season as well as the wet season.<sup>4966</sup> However, much of this rice was shipped outside of the workers' communes even when there was a shortage of food. Witness OM Chy, a commune level work unit chief who supervised 500 workers at a canal worksite connected to the 1st January Dam, testified that after the harvest in 1978 trucks came to take the harvested rice, but he did not know where they went.<sup>4967</sup> He was told that it was in order to help the military.<sup>4968</sup> BAN Seak testified that both prior to and after the internal purges in the Central Zone (in 1977), people did not have rice to eat despite the extra water coming from the canals and that he did not know where the rice yield had been sent.<sup>4969</sup> Witness SOU Soeurn testified, based upon her membership in the Chamkar Leu District Committee throughout the DK period,<sup>4970</sup> that she had no idea where the rice produced in the district was sent.<sup>4971</sup> However, she noted that a certain amount of rice was sent to the sector and that commune chiefs told her that some of the rice was for the cooperatives, some was for feeding soldiers and none was for export abroad.<sup>4972</sup>

1451. Witness HUN Sethany testified that when she returned to her village in the rainy season of 1977,<sup>4973</sup> from August through November, there was a food shortage in her

1452. While the situation may have varied over the years, the food shortages described above contrast significantly from the situation presented in some official public statements of CPK leaders. For example, on 16 January 1977, during a mass meeting in Phnom Penh celebrating the ninth anniversary of the Kampuchean Revolutionary Army, NUON Chea proudly announced that:

[E]ach Cambodian has 312 kilograms of rice to eat per year. This is a very large quantity of rice. The living conditions of our people have gradually improved. In other words, our people have enough to eat. We have reserved two bushels of paddy for each person in 1977. At the same time we have a surplus of more than 150.000 tons of rice for export. This means that we have totally achieved the 1976 plan.<sup>4978</sup>

1453. In April 1978, POL Pot declared that the water issue had been solved, allowing rice yield quotas to be met.<sup>4979</sup> Setting forth the CPK vision of modernising agriculture in Democratic Kampuchea in ten to fifteen years by increasing rice yields to eight tons per hectare,<sup>4980</sup> he stated, “If in terms of rice yields we can achieve the food supply plans and we could export more than last year, this will lead to our strongest

This provided us with enough food for our people, an average of 312 kilograms per capita, and also enabled us in 1977 to begin exporting tens of thousands of tons of rice, in order to accumulate capital for our national defence and construction efforts.”. See Revolutionary Flag, E3/11, September 1977, ERN (En) 00486256. See also, Section 10.1.7.3: Tram Kak Cooperatives: Rations and Communal Eating.

The reason we achieved this is [that] we sorted out the water issue according to the plans and exceeded the plans. Farming rice requires water, and growing other crops requires water. We were able to fundamentally resolve water during this past year following our plans. [...] We built many reservoirs from 100 to 200 million cubic meters: Zone units built them. Every Zone built reservoirs. As for intermediate ones of 20-30-40-60 million cubic meters, we built many of them. As for small reservoirs, we built many. We also build many dams along tributaries. [...] Two were built on the Steung Chinit.”).

1454. The Chamber finds that the 1st January Dam was constructed to permit the irrigation of surrounding rice fields in an effort to boost rice production and to develop its exportation. While it was also part of a plan aimed at improving living conditions of local population, evidence shows that food shortages were experienced.<sup>4982</sup>

11.2.6. Administrative Structures – Central (old North) Zone and (new) North Zone

1455. Prior to 17 April 1975, KOY Thuon alias Thuch alias Khuon was the old North Zone (Zone 304) Secretary.<sup>4983</sup> KE Pauk was the Deputy Secretary of the North Zone and commander of the North Zone military.<sup>4984</sup>

1456. After April 1975, KOY Thuon was transferred to Phnom Penh to become Minister of Commerce and KE Pauk became the Secretary of the Central (old North) Zone (re-designated Zone 303)<sup>4985</sup> which consisted of parts of Kampong Cham, Kampong Thom and Western Kratie (Sectors 41, 42 and 43).<sup>4986</sup> Sector 41

1460. The Chamber accepts this evidence and finds that as Central (old North) Zone Secretary, KE Pauk was responsible for the completion of the 1st January Dam and reported to Office 870.

11.2.7. Purges of Cadres in the Central (old North) Zone

1461. There was a significant change in the leadership of the sectors and districts within the Central (old North) Zone in late 1976 and early 1977 which coincided with the construction of the 1st January Dam.<sup>4996</sup> As this may impact the criminal responsibility for the actions of individuals following orders within the administrative hierarchy, the Chamber sets forth the relevant events below.

1462. After KOY Thuon's transfer to Phnom Penh around June 1975, he was implicated in several confessions, leading POL Pot to order his arrest and detention at S-21 where he was interrogated by Witness KAING Guek Eav alias Duch personally.<sup>4997</sup> Duch testified that after KOY Thuon's confessions in which he implicated cadres, hundreds of people were arrested from the North Zone starting in early 1977.<sup>4998</sup> KE Pauk stated in his autobiography that the first wave of Central (old

The Chamber notes that, according to KE Pich Vannak, the purging in the districts of the Central (old North) Zone started with the arrival of the Southwest Zone cadres.<sup>5008</sup> It further notes that the Zone Committee, the General Staff and the committees surrounding the Party Centre made decisions on arrests and that S-21 was used by the Standing Committee of the Central Committee to detain prisoners who had been arrested from across Cambodia.<sup>5009</sup>

The Chamber notes that although SUON Kanil testified that Sreng was the Secretary of Sector 41, he told OCIJ investigators that Sreng was the Deputy Zone Secretary. Further, the S-21 lists only indicate that Sreng was a member of the Zone Committee and that Taing was the Sector 41 Secretary. The Chamber therefore considers that Taing was the Sector 41 Secretary until his removal and that Sreng was a member of the Central (old North) Zone committee.

1467. KE Pich Vannak saw cadres identified for arrest and execution on a list of names sent from S-21, with the names of some leaders crossed out in red ink, including Yean (chairman of the logistics division) and Lorn (chairman of the Zone office).<sup>5022</sup> He testified that the Central (old North) Zone sent those persons to Phnom Penh to be purged.<sup>5023</sup> Even relatives of the Zone cadres could not be saved as the orders from the Party Centre were non-negotiable.<sup>5024</sup> Lists from S-21 show a stream of prisoners arriving from the Central (old North) Zone throughout 1977.<sup>5025</sup>

had to be made. By contrast, if the decision (to arrest) was made by the zone, KE Pauk would have some reservations.<sup>5027</sup> KE Pauk stated that by June 1977, the first stage of the arrests was completed and only he remained of the original leadership in the Central (old North) Zone.<sup>5028</sup> Further purges occurred later in 1977.<sup>5029</sup> In June 1978, a directive was issued by the Party, via Office 870, indicating that those who were alleged to be in CIA and KGB networks were pardoned and would be given equal status to other ordinary people.<sup>5030</sup> KE Pich Vannak explained that people in the Central (old North) Zone were afraid of being purged and fled into the jungle and that the Upper Echelon later distributed leaflets to announce a pardon.<sup>5031</sup> Office 870 directed that medium and light offenders should be released from detention.<sup>5032</sup> Sector 42 Secretary Oeun, KE Pauk's brother-in-law, informed the districts in Sector 42 of the Central Committee directive and ordered that executions should cease.<sup>5033</sup> OM Chy, a commune level work unit chief who supervised 500 workers at a canal worksite connected to the 1st January Dam, testified that after the circular was issued, anyone who violated the guidelines remained subject to arrest. 1469. The Chamber finds that in 1977 Southwest Zone cadres were sent to the Central (old North) Zone by the Standing Committee, including POL Pot and NUON Chea to conduct purges which were orchestrated by the Party Centre based upon lists of implicated persons from S-21. Under the direction of KE Pauk, the Southwest Zone cadres took over leadership positions and executed the arrests of dozens of cadres who were sent to S-21.

1470. The Chamber notes that there is some evidence of a possible breakdown in the administrative hierarchy. KE Pich Vannak recounted how KE Pauk told him that Poch (Baray District Committee from the Southwest Zone) had ordered that 200 families be arrested and taken to Krava Baksna village to be killed. At that time, AO An, a trusted Southwest Zone cadre, was acting Central (old North) Zone Secretary because KE Pauk was leading a military unit to the East. KE Pauk summoned Poch to explain the situation, but the latter did not present himself.<sup>5036</sup> KE Pich Vannak claimed that his father, KE Pauk, then ordered that the killings not go forward, however there is no documentary evidence to corroborate this assertion, nor is there any evidence that sanctions were imposed to “Poch”.<sup>5037</sup> While this alleged incident might suggest that the Baray District Committee was insubordinate and thus not subject to KE Pauk’s orders, it occurred at a time when AO An was acting as the head of the Central Zone.<sup>5038</sup> Further, there was no apparent connection between the incident and the 1st January Dam. While the possibility of insubordination cannot be entirely excluded, the Chamber considers that this incident does not create doubt as to the overall control of the Party Centre over the administrative hierarchy of the Central Zone and the 1st January Dam Worksite.

11.2.8.1. Telegrams

1472. SUON Kanil was the head of the telegraph unit for the Central (old North) Zone from several weeks after the evacuation of Phnom Penh in April 1975 until the arrival of Vietnamese forces in 1979.<sup>5040</sup> He testified that KE Pauk worked with people in the Telegraph Section, reporting to the Zone Secretary KOY Thuon, who relayed messages to the upper authority.<sup>5041</sup>

1473. Telegrams were meant for military communication and for communication between people in the zones and sectors.<sup>5042</sup> Most of the telegrams from the Party Centre to the Central (old North) Zone were directives to pass on to the sectors for dissemination.<sup>5043</sup> SUON Kanil authenticated in court numerous telegrams from KE Pauk to POL Pot originating between 1975 and 1978.<sup>5044</sup> KE Pauk's reports to the Party Centre included reports on rice production and other activities of the people.<sup>5045</sup>

1474. All incoming and outgoing telegrams were registered and KE Pauk was always informed.<sup>5046</sup> Office 870 decided to whom the telegram would then be copied.<sup>5047</sup> SUON Kanil confirmed that at the zone level nothing could be done without approval from the Upper Echelon as the subordinate had to respect the order of the superior.<sup>5048</sup>

42, testified that telegrams were only used upon explicit instructions from “upper Angkar”.<sup>5049</sup> She said that messengers were the preferred method of communication and that they travelled between Kampong Cham and Phnom Penh by car or motorbike to bring written letters and reports.<sup>5050</sup> The Chamber considers that her testimony does not necessarily contradict that of SUON Kanil, but complements it, and finds that both telegrams and written correspondence exchanged through messengers were used to communicate between the Party Centre and the Central (old North) Zone as well as within the zone to the sectors.

11.2.8.2. Zone, sector and district meetings

1476. At the zone, sector and district levels, meetings were utilised to disseminate the Party line and to communicate work plans.<sup>5051</sup> PRAK Yut, the Kampong Siem District Secretary working under AO An in Sector 41, testified that KE Pauk disseminated the Central Committee’s work plans at meetings held at the Zone Office in Kampong Cham.<sup>5052</sup> Zone-level meetings were held every three months at the office of KE Pauk in Kampong Cham and were attended by the sector committees and the Zone Committee.<sup>5053</sup> The meeting reviewed the work plans, including rice production or the building of dykes.<sup>5054</sup> IENG Chham, corroborated the fact that such meetings were held in Kampong Cham.<sup>5055</sup>

1477. Information and directives were then conveyed to districts and work units. BAN Seak attended Sector Committee meetings chaired by Oeun, the Sector 42 Secretary, at which instructions and work plans were distributed with a view to further dissemination to lower levels.<sup>5056</sup> OR Ho, a work unit chief, attended fortnightly or monthly commune meetings at which he was given instructions by the commune chief.<sup>5057</sup> These work plans were then conveyed to work units.<sup>5058</sup> At times, senior cadres from the district or sector level attended these meetings.<sup>5059</sup>

1478. SOU Soeurn, the Chamkar Leu District Secretary in Sector 42, had meetings with commune chiefs who reported to her on the progress of their respective cooperatives and important issues regarding the building of dams, canals or rice production.<sup>5060</sup> She relayed the work plans, including the goal of three harvests per year, discussed the work on the Dam and the food supply, and assigned forces to work at worksites.<sup>5061</sup>

1479. Several witnesses gave consistent evidence that NUON Chea held study sessions for district secretaries and heads of cooperatives concerning the cultivation of rice and how to dig canals, build dams and organise workforces among cooperatives.<sup>5062</sup> SOU Soeurn further testified that NUON Chea came to her district to organise workforces to send them to worksites.<sup>5063</sup> There were also mass meetings to discuss rice production and encourage workers to meet Angkar's plan to be prosperous in the following years.<sup>5064</sup>

1480. The Chamber finds that the Central Committee's workplans were disseminated at the zone, sector and district levels through regular meetings as well as training sessions, Party celebrations and meetings organised in Phnom Penh. The Chamber is also satisfied that NUON Chea presided over study sessions on how to engage in work at the worksites and cooperatives and was actively engaged in coordinating the gathering of workforces to some worksites.

11.2.8.3. Direct supervision of the 1st January Dam

1481. KE Pauk monitored the status of the 1st January Dam Worksite and conveyed plans to cadres tasked with technical matters. KE Pauk worked at Office 71 located in Ta Prok commune, Chamkar Leu district, Kampong Cham province about six to seven kilometres from the 1st January Dam, which he visited daily.<sup>5065</sup> PECH Sokha who was a member of the technical group in charge of overseeing the Dam's construction, confirmed that KE Pauk visited the 1st January Dam almost every day by jeep with his two or three bodyguards, obviating a need to make written reports. KE Pauk met with the technical group, including PECH Sokha and IENG Chham, advising them not to deviate from the construction plan.<sup>5066</sup> The technical group would in turn provide updates on the progress of work.<sup>5067</sup> OR Ho reported daily to KE Pauk about the number of workers in his work unit who became ill and what work had been completed.<sup>5068</sup>

1482. While IENG Chham stated that KE Pauk visited the 1st January Dam only once or twice a month,<sup>5069</sup> the Chamber notes that evidence tested in court consistently indicated that KE Pauk's visits were more frequent. The Chamber therefore finds that KE Pauk visited the worksite nearly every day throughout its construction and was familiar with the conditions at the site.<sup>5070</sup>

11.2.9. Inauguration of the 1st January Dam and Visits of Senior Cadres and Foreign Delegations

1483. According to the Closing Order, POL Pot and KHIEU Samphan visited the 1st January Dam with foreign visitors, and NUON Chea went to the worksite to encourage people to preserve water for planting rice.<sup>5071</sup>

1484. The Chamber heard clear and consistent evidence that on 1 January 1977, KE Pauk presided over the inauguration of the Dam in the presence of other senior leaders (including POL Pot and IENG Sary), district level leaders (including SOU Soeurn) and workers from Sectors 41, 42 and 43.<sup>5072</sup> The 1st January Dam was named for the day work began, although at least some work began earlier.<sup>5073</sup>

1485. YEAN Lon, a worker at the 1st January Dam and a militiaman in Kang Sau village, heard that KHIEU Samphan also attended the inauguration, although he had never seen KHIEU Samphan before and his account was uncorroborated.<sup>5074</sup> On that occasion all of the workers were encouraged to work hard.<sup>5075</sup>

1486. In addition, SAUT Toeung, who was NUON Chea's bodyguard and messenger from the middle of 1975 until 1978,<sup>5076</sup> testified that he sometimes accompanied NUON Chea who travelled to the provinces, every two to three months, often visiting dams or other worksites.<sup>5077</sup> He said that NUON Chea visited the 1st January Dam, on the Chinit River on two occasions meeting with the leaders responsible for its construction.<sup>5078</sup> NUON Chea reviewed the status of the Dam's construction as well as the rice cultivation and the performance of cooperatives in the area.<sup>5079</sup> SAUT Toeung did not specify when NUON Chea visited the 1st January Dam, but stated that it was during the construction of the Dam when he observed people carrying dirt,<sup>5080</sup> which the Chamber has found took place between October 1976 and 1978. SAUT Toeung did not specifically recall that NUON Chea met with KE Pauk.<sup>5081</sup>

1487. SAUT Toeung recalled that when NUON Chea observed that the Dam was not constructed well, he summoned others who were responsible for the projects to advise him.<sup>5082</sup> NUON Chea sometimes summoned the head of the cooperatives to address them. At other times, he spoke to the masses.<sup>5083</sup>

1489. KE Pich Vannak stated that POL Pot made two official visits to the 1st January Dam and many unofficial visits, recalling that the latter once carried soil himself.<sup>5089</sup> Civil Party UN Rann, a worker at the 1st January Dam, witnessed the visit of four senior leaders to the 1st January Dam, one of whom with a large belly was identified by her colleagues as POL Pot. The senior leaders wore dark green clothes and arrived by military vehicle to examine the dam.<sup>5090</sup> Civil Party CHAO Lang, a mobile unit worker, saw, whom others told her was POL Pot visiting the 1st January Dam on about three occasions.<sup>5091</sup> Although none of the witnesses specified the exact dates of POL Pot's visits, the Chamber finds that these visits occurred during the construction of the Dam between late 1976 and 1978.

1490. Based on the above, the Chamber is satisfied that POL Pot and NUON Chea both visited the 1st January Dam on multiple occasions, personally observing the conditions at the site. Given that there is only uncorroborated hearsay evidence from YEAN Lon, it is not proved to the requisite standard that KHIEU Samphan visited the Dam Worksite.

1491. A number of foreign delegations visited the 1st January Dam accompanied by senior DK leaders. The construction of the Dam was used by the CPK to show the self-reliance of the Cambodian people and their ability to achieve a Great Leap Forward,<sup>5092</sup> and thus had propagandistic value. These visits also served to apprise the CPK leadership of the living and working conditions at the worksite.

1492. In April 1977, a Laotian women's delegation visited the 1st January Dam along with IENG Thirith.<sup>5093</sup> Workers were told that KE Pauk was also present.<sup>5094</sup> They were instructed to line up along the Dam's walkway to greet the visitors.<sup>5095</sup> Unit chiefs told them to run for the benefit of the delegation.<sup>5096</sup> The delegation of Laotian women also visited Chamkar Leu district to see the dams and canals, to observe how people in the cooperatives worked, how many tonnes of rice were achieved per year, and how canals and dams were built.<sup>5097</sup>

Although it is likely that IENG Thirith also noted the conditions faced at the 1st January Dam, there is no direct proof that IENG Thirith notified the Standing Committee of the adverse working conditions at the 1st January Dam specifically.<sup>5107</sup> Other visits by NUON Chea nonetheless provided such notice to the CPK Standing Committee.<sup>5108</sup>

These visits apprised the CPK Standing Committee of the prevailing conditions at worksites, including the 1st January Dam.

11.2.10. Gathering the Workforce

In general, the strongest people were selected to work at the 1st January Dam Worksite.<sup>5118</sup>

1499. An announcement was made at the inauguration of the Dam indicating that over 20,000 people were working on the Dam, including 10,000 from Sector 42, 10,000 from Sector 43 and 1,000 additional workers from mobile units and Sector 41.<sup>5119</sup> SOU Soeurn estimated that there were between 20,000 and 30,000 workers at the 1st January Dam Worksite or perhaps as many as 40,000.<sup>5120</sup> Although it is difficult to verify the precise number of workers as none of witnesses observed all of the workers at the same time and no lists of 1st January Dam workers were presented in evidence,<sup>5121</sup> all of those who worked at the Dam were convinced that there were tens of thousands of workers present.<sup>5122</sup> The Chamber notes that the size of the worksite and the fact that workers were not allowed to move about freely made it difficult for workers to have a complete overview of the project and total number of people engaged in construction.<sup>5123</sup> However, the estimates and announcements made all mentioned tens of thousands of workers.

1500. There was also credible evidence that some workers were rotated between the 1st January Dam Worksite and other locations depending on work requirements so that the number of those present was not static.<sup>5124</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that over the span of its construction, the number of workers at the 1st January Dam was in the tens of thousands, ranging between 20,000 and 40,000 during peak construction periods.

1501. Workers were organised in units based upon their village of origin. Within each unit, twelve workers comprised a group.<sup>5125</sup> Witness OM Chy's 500 workers were divided into groups according to their respective villages with a chief for each village unit.<sup>5126</sup> OR Ho similarly testified that about 30 workers were selected from each village to work on the mobile units to clear the land and the bushes.<sup>5127</sup> Subsequently, a larger force was requested.<sup>5128</sup> Eventually, a total of 70-80 people were selected to work in mobile units and 100 were selected to work in the middle-age force.<sup>5129</sup> MEAS Laihour testified that there were 50 workers from each village who were grouped together into a special mobile unit.<sup>5130</sup>

1502. In other cases, mobile units were composed of people from different villages. Civil Party UN Rann stated in court that her unit of 100 workers were from different villages, including people from Santuk, Sandan and Stoung districts in Sector 43.<sup>5131</sup> Witness UTH Seng testified that young people from various villages were grouped together in the mobile units, but men and women stayed in separate quarters to prevent moral offences.<sup>5132</sup>

1503. The Chamber finds that the workforce for the 1st January Dam was organised based upon orders handed down from the Upper Echelon. These orders were implemented by sectors, districts, and villages/cooperatives which selected workers to be sent to the worksite.

11.2.11. *Work Hours*11.2.11.1. Hot battlefield

1504. Numerous witnesses testified that the 1st January Dam was considered a “hot battlefield” which meant that there was a strict timetable and deadlines to be respected, to complete the Dam as scheduled.<sup>5133</sup> This required working at night.<sup>5134</sup> In contrast, according to one witness the 6th January Dam was not considered a hot battlefield. Therefore the working hours were reduced and the dirt did not have to be carried as far.<sup>5135</sup> However, the conditions remained difficult.<sup>5136</sup>

11.2.11.2. Government policy regarding work hours

1505. The surviving documentary evidence on governmental policy regarding work hours at worksites shows that the CPK made assertions as to the establishment of limited working hours, but the policy established by the CPK foresaw exceptions and therefore the policy was not implemented consistently. The October-November 1977 Revolutionary Flag makes general reference to a five o'clock bell ringing to stop work at the end of the afternoon.<sup>5137</sup> However, the same edition of the Revolutionary Flag in reference to the Steung Chinit tributary refers to “attacking it now, attacking it after the harvest, without waiting for early next year” because “[t]his would be a big waste of water”.<sup>5138</sup> The Four-Year Plan establishes a “Working and Resting Regime” entailing three rest days per month (one rest day in every ten), between 10 and 15 days for “rest, visiting, and study each year” and two months’ rest for pregnancy and confinement.<sup>5139</sup> It also provides that resting time for hospitalised people would be considered according to the concrete situation.<sup>5140</sup>

1506. A 1975 document concerning “Economy, Finance, Culture and Social Action” states: “[o]ur people are striving and working hard, fifteen hours a day. This is having an impact on the health of our people.”<sup>5141</sup> Further, a commentary broadcast by the CPK in May 1977 described the situation as follows:

Our cooperative peasants’ key task in the current dry season is to build more waterworks than in 1976. Fully grasping the significance of this new orientation, our fraternal cooperative peasants throughout the country have become deeply involved in building irrigation projects day and night in a most vigorous, seething and active manner.

Whatever construction is still underway, the brothers are plunging deeper into the battle to complete the work quickly, working day and night.

[O]ur cooperative peasant masses pledge to further develop a great momentum to successfully fulfil and even overfulfill the task of solving the water conservancy problem during the current dry season in order to increase rice production to the maximum, contributing to further improving our people’s living standard and defending and making our country prosper at a “great leap forward” speed”.<sup>5142</sup>

1507. Another Revolutionary Flag issue from April 1978 reports a speech by POL Pot on occasion of the third anniversary of the 17 April victory, in which he makes general reference to work hours at cooperatives being from 6 am to 10:30 am and from 3:30 pm to 6 pm, stating “the Party does not let the cooperatives work the rice fields at night”. However, these hours appear to have been limited to work in the rice fields and not relevant to worksites.<sup>5143</sup> Furthermore, this same speech very clearly referred to the CPK policy towards work hours:

The second task is to continue to push building work. It is necessary to build the entire country, [including] the countryside. The workers of every unit in the factories, ministries, offices must launch a storming attack [on the construction] in an organised manner. With regard to launching the storming attack, it is noted that some leadership committees give work instructions without considering working hours. The Party did not give such instructions. There are working hours. We launch a special storming attack outside the normal working hours only when it comes to special cases. Normally we have working hours. But some no-good elements have them [workers] work all over the place all the time, without working hours, night and day, with no rest, with no results but with more diseases.<sup>5144</sup>

1508. KHIEU Samphan stated in relation to the work at dams and worksites:

On this, I recall the mobilisation of the people to build dams and dig feeder canals. The wake-up gong was sounded at 3 or 4 a.m. The communal meal started in the evening and was not even finished by midnight. Due to a shortage of plates, they had to eat in turns. In the morning, the gong was sounded again to wake the people at 3 or 4 a.m. to get them into formation. By the time they were in formation, it was daybreak.<sup>5145</sup>

1509. Based on these documents, the Chamber considers that (1) the Party Centre issued instructions concerning working hours; (2) the Party Centre had knowledge that the instructions were not followed locally with workers exposed to extremely hard conditions; (3) the Party Centre envisaged “special cases” where working outside of normal hours was required; and (4) “no-good elements” were allegedly blamed and found responsible for disregarding the working hours instructions.<sup>5146</sup>

1510. When asked about working hours at the 1st January Dam, SOU Soeurn gave evidence that in meetings in Chamkar Leu district, NUON Chea said that workers did not have to work at night.<sup>5147</sup> As noted below, the Chamber considers her testimony to have limited probative value on the work conditions imposed at the 1st January Dam

11.2.11.3. Experience of workers at the 1st January Dam

1511. The numerous testifying witnesses and Civil Parties who worked or served in supervisory roles at the 1st January Dam Worksite overwhelmingly gave evidence that work hours were long and arduous.<sup>5149</sup> Workers awoke before sunrise in order to walk to their respective work stations and begin work at the break of dawn.<sup>5150</sup> Workers were not permitted adequate sleep.<sup>5151</sup> Work hours were set by the chief of the worksite for the sector of which the worksite chiefs were informed to implement.<sup>5152</sup> Despite the long and tiring hours, none of the workers dared to protest even as they struggled to complete the work.<sup>5153</sup> There was pressure to complete the canal construction before the rainy season as the rain would make it more difficult for the workers to build.<sup>5154</sup>

1512. The evidence was inconsistent with respect to whether work hours regularly extended into the night time hours. A number of witnesses indicated that night shifts (after sunset) occurred on a regular basis. Civil Party UY Samna alias NUON Narom, a worker in a mobile unit, stated that work groups included New and Base People and were both instructed to work day and night without rest. She further explained that at night, there were light posts on the dam, but she had to guide the people who had night blindness because of the dark before reaching the worksite.<sup>5155</sup> PECH Sokha also stated that work at night was facilitated by the use of lights.<sup>5156</sup> KONG Uth, a worker in a mobile unit, also said that work continued after dinner starting at 7 p.m., adding that sometimes they also had to attend meetings after work hours.<sup>5157</sup> She was categorical that work had to be done regularly at night.<sup>5158</sup> MEAS Laihour testified while working on the 1st January Dam that if one could not complete the work within the work hours, they were required to until the quota was filled even if it meant to work until midnight.<sup>5159</sup> There was also credible and consistent evidence that even those who Concerning working hours she stated as follows: “We were instructed to work starting from 4 o’clock in the morning, and for the morning session we only had a 15-minute break. We had lunch at 11.00. We rested a little bit, and we resumed working again at 1.00 p.m., and continued working until 5.00. And after dinner, we had to return to work at 7.00 p.m., and only after we finished the night work, we would be allowed to rest. And sometimes there were meetings at night time. And if there was any meeting on that night, we could only go to sleep by 12.00 p.m.”).

1513. A number of witnesses testified that night shifts were not regular or that they did not occur. OM Chy, who was a commune-level supervisor of 500 workers, testified that when the work plan was demanding there was also a night shift from 6 p.m. until 11 p.m.<sup>5161</sup> He was aware of the guideline to limit night work,<sup>5162</sup> but he said that the guideline was not fully implemented and it depended upon who led the work group.<sup>5163</sup> YEAN Lon, who was in charge of a group of 50 workers, corroborated this account, stating that there were strict instructions from the higher echelon as to working hours and that they were forced to work until 10 p.m. at times.<sup>5164</sup>

1514. Civil Party UN Rann said that workers only worked at night when the moon was bright.<sup>5165</sup> UN Rann clarified that fluorescent lamps were installed on the crest of the Dam to work in the dark, but that work was not possible at the base of the Dam without the light of the moon.<sup>5166</sup> On those days, the worker quota was increased to 12 cubic metres for a two-person team without any further food rations.<sup>5167</sup> The English translation of her testimony incorrectly reflected that work only continued during the “waxing moon”, when she actually stated that work was required when the moon was bright. UTH Seng also testified that there were night shifts and lights were used in special cases, but it was not clear how often that occurred.<sup>5168</sup>

1515. SOU Soeurn testified that workers finished work around 5 p.m.<sup>5169</sup> However, there were numerous inconsistencies in her testimony. She initially testified that she visited her husband, KE Pauk, at the 1st January Dam Worksite many times.<sup>5170</sup> Later she claimed that she only visited once every month or every other month.<sup>5171</sup> Finally, she stated that it was only once every two to three months.<sup>5172</sup> She also testified that she did not discuss work matters with her husband, which would have prevented her from knowing about the working hours at the Dam.<sup>5173</sup> Therefore, the Chamber does not consider her testimony on this point to be credible or reliable.

1516. PECH Sokha testified that workers were occasionally asked to strive to work hard but that they mainly worked during the daytime.<sup>5174</sup> The Chamber considers that PECH Sokha minimised the harshness of conditions when he asserted that daytime work was the norm.<sup>5175</sup> He did not suffer under the same conditions due to his privileged role as a technician and had an incentive to deflect blame for harsh conditions suffered by other workers.<sup>5176</sup> OR Ho, who was a work unit chief, explained that as the deadline for the completion of the Dam approached, the work hours increased in order to meet the one-year deadline.<sup>5177</sup> OR Ho also testified that workers wanted to work at night as they could find fish in the water to eat.<sup>5178</sup> The Chamber does not find this assertion to be credible in view of the harsh working conditions at the site. Although some workers may have sought to obtain additional food at night, it is not consistent with the evidence that workers would voluntarily seek to return to the Dam at night to complete additional hard labour. There was no dispute that the workers did not receive any pay for their efforts.<sup>5179</sup>

1517. The pressure to complete the project as scheduled was illustrated by a speech given by KHIEU Samphan marking the second anniversary of the 17 April 1975 victory.<sup>5180</sup> He said that all construction of dams, reservoirs and ditches would be completed pursuant to the 1977 plan, including the Dam to block the Chinit Stream (i.e. the 1st January Dam). He noted that each project is manned by as many as 10,000, 20,000 or 30,000 people without the assistance of machines and urged “[t]he production corps, which are already progressive, should struggle even harder to overfulfil the [rice planting] plan to their fullest capacity”.<sup>5181</sup> He further stated that:

We must continue the struggle on the basis of the principles of independence and self reliance and implement and carry out our revolutionary organization’s 1977 plan 100% and even more. We must fulfil or overfulfil production plans both within the framework of the overall 1977 plan and within the framework of each production battlefield, front, unit or base.<sup>5182</sup>

1518. The Chamber finds that as the deadline set up by the CPK leaders approached, work hours increased and night shifts were commonplace.<sup>5183</sup>

1519. Based on the overwhelming evidence from workers at the 1st January Dam, the Chamber finds that in addition to the long working hours imposed during the day, workers were also required to work at night on a regular basis. Southwest Zone cadres who were appointed by the Party Centre, including POL Pot and NUON Chea, to replace former Central (old North) Zone cadres, did not improve working conditions at

11.2.11.4. Rest days

1520. Generally, workers were given one rest day every tenth day. OR Ho testified that every 10 days the workers were permitted to visit home.<sup>5185</sup> Workers in MEAS Laihour's mobile unit were permitted to rest every 10 days and dessert was served.<sup>5186</sup> According to her, it was a happy day when workers rested, talked amongst themselves, sang and danced.<sup>5187</sup> At times, she was granted permission to visit her home village where her mother lived.<sup>5188</sup>

1521. Other witnesses spoke of eating meat or being given dessert on this tenth day of rest.<sup>5189</sup> Certain workers had diarrhoea on those days because of the richness of the food that they were infrequently permitted.<sup>5190</sup> Criticism and self-criticism meetings were also held on these days.<sup>5191</sup> Although UN Rann testified that she did not have a day of rest every tenth day, this does not appear to accord with the experience of most witnesses.<sup>5192</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that the workers were usually granted a day of rest every 10 days.

11.2.11.5. Rotation of workers

1522. SOU Soeurn, Chamkar Leu District Secretary and KE Pauk's wife, testified that there was a system of rotations whereby tired workers would stay at the 1st January Dam Worksite for a limited number of months before being replaced by another, fresh group.<sup>5193</sup> For example, a group of middle-aged workers were replaced by a group of teenagers who were 17 or 18 years old. She said that at other times, workers were transferred from the 1st January Dam to work at dam or canal worksites at the district level.<sup>5194</sup> Before a rotation of workers, new workers were recruited and those who were removed from the 1st January Dam were sent to build dams and canals in Chamkar Leu district.<sup>5195</sup>

1523. OR Ho, a chief of a unit of 100 workers, testified that some workers who became tired were permitted to return home and were replaced by other workers from the village.<sup>5196</sup> He added that some people who did not achieve their quotas were replaced, and that those who returned to the village were still required to work.<sup>5197</sup> OR Ho further stated that some workers were replaced while others were not replaced because they were able to achieve their work quotas.<sup>5198</sup>

1524. However, this description differs from those made by many witnesses and Civil Parties who, unlike OR Ho, were not in a position of authority and who testified that they did not witness any rotations of workers. MEAS Laihour testified that workers were not rotated between her unit and village.<sup>5199</sup> UN Rann stated that there was no rotation of workers in her unit.<sup>5200</sup> Civil Party SEANG Sovida<sup>5201</sup> stated that during her three months at the 1st January Dam, there was no rotation of workers who were sick or tired.<sup>5202</sup> KONG Uth said there was no system of rotating workers; once assigned to an area, a worker remained until the end, although workers who were married were rotated to do rice farming.<sup>5203</sup>

1525. OM Chy also testified that the 500 workers he supervised at the 1st January Dam diminished in number as the work progressed. Some workers were recruited to the army, others got married and a few (five to 10) very sick persons were sent to hospital.<sup>5204</sup> Additional sick people were constantly staying in their sleeping quarters at the worksite.<sup>5205</sup> By the end of the project only about 300 workers remained.<sup>5206</sup>

1526. The Chamber finds that some rotation of workers did occur, but that there was no uniform and generalised practice, and that both SOU Soern and OR Ho, who were in supervisory roles, had an incentive to place work conditions in the best possible light by exaggerating the benefits of such a practice. There was overwhelming evidence that conditions at the 1st January Dam were debilitating despite such measures. The Chamber therefore finds that the rotation of workers, when applied, did not measurably decrease the difficulty of working conditions of the large proportion of workers who remained at the 1st January Dam.

11.2.12. Work Conditions and Quotas

1527. Working conditions at the 1st January Dam were difficult. The vast majority of the work done was by hand with the assistance only of hand tools.<sup>5207</sup> Tractors were used at the outset to clear the land for dam construction.<sup>5208</sup> Two witnesses further claimed that tractors were available later in the dam construction process,<sup>5209</sup> but the evidence showed that mechanical devices present on site were exceptional, as the former workers heard in court testified that they had to carry out the hard work of carrying dirt by hand over and over.<sup>5210</sup> There was evidence that explosives were used to break rocks.<sup>5211</sup>

1528. The rocky nature of the soil in some locations created difficulties for the workers. While breaking rock for use in the Dam, young men from HUN Sethany's village were hit in the legs with rock fragments and had wounds all over their legs for which they did not receive any treatment. They used tree leaves to cover their wounds.<sup>5212</sup> KONG Uth recalled that one worker who was breaking rocks, was crushed to death when a rock was dislodged from a bridge and fell upon him or her.<sup>5213</sup>

1529. Working conditions for supervisors and technicians were not as difficult. For example, PECH Sokha, a technician, testified that on the rare occasion that he dug earth, he was to carry it about 50 metres to put it on the dam.<sup>5214</sup> When working hours ended, he did not need to carry on.<sup>5215</sup> MEAS Laihour testified that unit chiefs did not carry

1530. Work quotas originated from the Upper Echelon.<sup>5219</sup> UN Rann testified that quotas were checked by the big unit chief at the end of the day by using a tree branch to measure what had been completed.<sup>5220</sup> HUN Sethany testified that her unit chief attended meetings at the commune or district level after which they relayed the instructions they received to the workers. Workers were encouraged to work as quickly as possible.<sup>5221</sup> According to SEANG Sovida, the land to be dug was measured for the workers of the whole mobile unit and was divided between the smaller groups, and the quota was set for workers in each of these groups to be completed in a particular period of time.<sup>5222</sup> HUN Sethany testified that the group and unit chiefs, rather than the Upper Echelon, determined the work, but she was not in a position to know whether those higher in the administrative chain had conveyed the quotas.<sup>5223</sup> YEAN Lon, the chief of a group of 50 workers, said that his entire group was given a quota which they subdivided amongst smaller work groups.<sup>5224</sup> MEAS Laihour, a mobile unit member from Ballangk commune, testified that everyone had the same quota, including New People and Base People.<sup>5225</sup> OR Ho explained that his group of 100 workers was given a set distance of canal where it had to dig and this constituted the basis for the work quota to be completed, including the length, depth and width of the canal.<sup>5226</sup>

1532. The worksite chiefs sought to urge workers to meet the work quota through competition and by instilling a constant fear of repercussions for violating CPK regulations.

1533. In the first instance, workers were called upon to achieve the highest work output in competition with other work units. To this end, the uncontradicted evidence at trial was that daily work quotas were imposed.<sup>5228</sup> Work units normally worked in mixed-gender teams with men digging earth and women carrying it.<sup>5229</sup> Three women estimated that the baskets they carried weighed 30-40 kilograms.<sup>5230</sup> If the daily output was not achieved, workers were ordered to continue at night, during breaks, or early

1536. Overall, fear was the predominant motivating force to meet work quotas. OR Ho, who was a work unit chief himself, testified that if unit chiefs had ill intentions and reported to the Upper Echelon that the work quota was not met, there would be problems.<sup>5239</sup> He agreed that the workers were afraid that if they did not do what they were told, something bad would happen to them.<sup>5240</sup> Those who did not meet work quotas were considered to be infiltrated enemies, obstructing the progress of work or the worker's movement.<sup>5241</sup> For example, if others achieved the work quota and OR Ho's team did not, in some cases workers or the chief of a unit would be taken away.<sup>5242</sup> Others were spared if their work unit chief covered for them.<sup>5243</sup> Also, if the chief was able to explain the reasons for missing the quota, the group would not suffer consequences.<sup>5244</sup> HUN Sethany testified that killing of people would take place continuously for failing to meet the work quotas.<sup>5245</sup> SAUT Toeung, who was NUON Chea's bodyguard and messenger from the middle of 1975 until 1978 and who accompanied NUON Chea at the 1st January Dam Worksite, answered affirmatively that he saw "torture" inflicted on the people if they failed to meet work quotas. However no clarification was given on what he may have seen and no detail was provided concerning the alleged torture. In addition, these statements appear to be inconsistent with a previous answer provided by the same witness as he characterised the situation at the dam as "normal" noting merely that many people carried dirt.<sup>5246</sup> However, UN Rann testified that food rations were reduced if one did not make the work quota.<sup>5247</sup> meant to kill a person.<sup>5249</sup> The Chamber considers, however, that there were punishment measures imposed on workers that fell short of killing. These may have been characterised as “re-fashioning” or “re-education”. For example, one sick co-worker told UN Rann that she had been ordered to collect human waste with her bare hands as a punishment, to serve as a lesson for others who claimed to be sick.<sup>5250</sup> When four or five workers were sick, the unit chief warned the workers and asked them whether they wanted to die.<sup>5251</sup> Upon hearing this threat, those who were sick due to a lack of food or malnutrition would force themselves to work out of fear.<sup>5252</sup> Although UN Rann never saw anyone being taken for refashioning for not working enough days, the threats contributed to creating a charged atmosphere.<sup>5253</sup>

1538. MEAS Laihour testified that those who did not work were considered to be enemies opposed to Angkar.<sup>5254</sup> New People were monitored, and if they were considered to be lazy, they were educated to reform. If such warnings were unsuccessful, they were taken away and killed.<sup>5255</sup> In addition, YEAN Lon gave evidence that the unit chief, Yi, walked around to assess whether workers met their work quota. Those who met their quota could rest, while those who did not had to work harder.<sup>5256</sup> He also said that none of the workers in his unit was ever under disciplinary action.<sup>5257</sup>

1539. Some of NUON Narom’s colleagues were beaten although they were resting only because they were sick.<sup>5258</sup> For example, a woman named Eng fell sick and requested to rest. Her request was rejected and she was beaten by the female unit chief with a pole.<sup>5259</sup> One day, NUON Narom was sick and went to her sleeping quarters with another sick colleague named Vorn. Vorn was criticised and beaten with her hands tied behind her back, being warned that she was not to go anywhere besides the worksite.<sup>5260</sup> NUON Narom did not know why she herself was not beaten.<sup>5261</sup>

1540. There were some accounts that threats were not used in certain units. SEANG Sovida testified that her unit chief, Sieng, did not threaten the workers but encouraged them to work hard.<sup>5262</sup> OM Chy stated that although some group leaders requested that corporal punishment be permitted, he did not allow it.<sup>5263</sup> The Chamber notes with respect to this evidence that having supervised 500 workers, OM Chy had an incentive to create a positive impression of the work environment he oversaw. Furthermore, these impressions were not shared by most.

1541. The Chamber finds that threats and punishment were used by work unit chiefs in order to urge the work force to meet quotas.

11.2.13. Oversight of Workers by Soldiers and Militiamen

1542. The harshness of living and working conditions at the Dam was exacerbated by the presence of sometimes-armed soldiers and militiamen watching over the workers in order to ensure they kept working as much as possible.

1543. HUN Sethany testified that Khmer Rouge guards watched over the workers to prevent them from escaping the worksite and to deter them from staying too long in the forest to relieve themselves.<sup>5264</sup> If workers went too far, cadres would shout at them to return.<sup>5265</sup> Militiamen and soldiers stood guard near where she was working and told the workers that if they were discovered speaking they would be arrested.<sup>5266</sup> She recalled that two siblings who were talking to one another were forced to separate.<sup>5267</sup> She was told by her sister that their father, who also worked at the Dam Worksite, was once called by militiamen and taken away purportedly to carry logs, but disappeared thereafter.<sup>5268</sup>

1544. MEAS Laihour corroborated the testimony of HUN Sethany, stating that there were many Baray district soldiers armed with AK-47s, who watched over the workers when they relieved themselves in the bushes.<sup>5269</sup> If the workers rested too long or stayed too long in the forest during a toilet break, the soldiers would order them to get back to work.<sup>5270</sup> She said that two or three commune soldiers were assigned to guard the workers from each commune and would be stationed 100 to 150 metres apart.<sup>5271</sup> Those who tried to avoid work were brought back to the worksite by militia.<sup>5272</sup> However, MEAS Laihour also testified that the soldiers were not allowed to fire their rifles freely and they were told to be armed to protect the mobile units.<sup>5273</sup> Soldiers slept in their own camp and did not watch over mobile unit workers at night.<sup>5274</sup>

1545. KONG Uth confirmed that armed militiamen and guards, some of whom came from her commune, were at the 1st January Dam watching the workers. They were on patrol, carrying weapons and watching over the workers.<sup>5275</sup> She was not able to say why they were present.<sup>5276</sup> SEANG Sovida also testified that the sub-group chiefs watched over the workers. rifles.<sup>5277</sup>

1547. Elizabeth BECKER also saw armed soldiers at the 1st January Dam Worksite during her visit in 1978.<sup>5282</sup>

1548. One Civil Party gave evidence that there were no armed soldiers or militia. UN Rann stated that she never saw any militiamen, soldiers, or anyone armed at the 1st January Dam.<sup>5283</sup> She said that workers were not prohibited from relieving themselves in the bushes near her work area.<sup>5284</sup> UTH Seng testified that it was difficult to know whether militia were always present at the worksite as everyone wore black uniforms, but he did not see soldiers with firearms.<sup>5285</sup> The Chamber notes that UN Rann was not in the same work unit as HUN Sethany and MEAS Laihour as they originated from different villages and communes.<sup>5286</sup>

1549. Other witnesses gave evidence that militiamen were there to protect the Dam from enemies or external threats. PECH Sokha, a technician with a privileged position of authority at the worksite, testified that zone soldiers were there to ensure that the enemy did not destroy the Dam. They patrolled on foot armed with AK-47 rifles, guarding the workers.<sup>5287</sup> The Chamber finds that this testimony is not inconsistent with that of the other witnesses – it is possible that the militiamen were indeed guarding against external threats while at the same time monitoring the workers.

1550. OR Ho, who also had a privileged position as chief of a 100 workers unit, gave similar evidence that militiamen were there to protect the Dam against external threats and were not concerned with the workers.<sup>5288</sup> The Chamber notes, however, OR Ho's other evidence that he told soldiers not to report mistakes by his workers to the commune.<sup>5289</sup> The Chamber considers that this presupposes that soldiers were in fact monitoring what actions were taken by the workers. In addition, the Chamber considers that OR Ho, as a work unit chief, had an incentive to minimise his culpability or complacency for mistreatment of workers.

1551. The Chamber does not consider that the evidence given by OR Ho, UN Rann or UTH Seng undermines the testimony of numerous other witnesses that the presence of armed soldiers and militiamen monitoring the workers heightened the fearful

11.2.14. Criticism and Self-Criticism Meetings

1552. Criticism and self-criticism meetings were generally held every tenth day and were an additional way to convey the urgency of building the Dam and the consequences for failing to work hard. Workers were sometimes beaten at the meetings.

1553. OM Chy, a Base Person who supervised about 500 workers, testified that study sessions were held every tenth day for criticism and self-criticism.<sup>5291</sup> During these sessions, they were told to meet targets for the worksite and to adhere to the work plan determined by the Party.<sup>5292</sup> Meetings were held to identify those who were committing “acts of sabotage” and if the Upper Echelon identified those people they could be taken away for “torture” or “re-education.”<sup>5293</sup>

1554. OR Ho, a work unit supervisor, testified that the meetings were chaired by people from the commune, and workers were encouraged to complete the Dam quickly to improve farming.<sup>5294</sup> If there were new plans from the Upper Echelon, the commune leaders would pass these along.<sup>5295</sup> The leaders at the meetings also said that enemies had to be “removed”.<sup>5296</sup> OR Ho stated that these were not criticism meetings, but that they were held “to encourage” workers to do their work.<sup>5297</sup>

1555. CHAO Lang, a mobile unit worker, confirmed attending criticism and self-criticism meetings at which workers were encouraged to fulfil the work plan and to support the “great leap forward”.<sup>5298</sup> After such meetings, workers would routinely disappear. They were told that lazy workers were sent for re-education, but the workers never saw again those who disappeared.<sup>5299</sup> Similarly, UN Rann was told to work hard and not to fall sick too often, or risk being sent for refashioning.<sup>5300</sup>

<sup>5290</sup> UN Rann was in a different work unit from HUN Sethany and MEAS Laihour and would have therefore had a different experience. OR Ho had an incentive to minimise the harshness of conditions and the possibility of ill-treatment as he was a supervisor at the site. UTH Seng’s testimony was ambivalent, as he also testified that he was generally fearful throughout his time at the site and also saw people arrested by soldiers. See T. 2 June 2015 (UTH Seng), E1/308.1, p. 111; T. 3 June 2015 (UTH Seng), E1/309.1, pp. 8-9, 54-55.

1556. SEANG Sovida said the purpose of the meetings was to push workers to work as hard as possible to finish work before other villages.<sup>5301</sup> Self-criticism was encouraged whereby workers would observe their colleagues to catch mistakes and to criticise them during the meetings.<sup>5302</sup> Slogans were disseminated such as “[Angkar] had many eyes as pineapple [sic]” and “if you interfere with your leg or your arm, it [will] crush you” and “to keep [you] is no gain; to lose [you] is also not a loss”.<sup>5303</sup> The meetings discussed increasing the agricultural production to three tonnes per hectare.<sup>5304</sup>

1557. UTH Seng said that workers were urged to work harder to achieve the work plan, but that no one dared criticise another for fear of retribution, so the youth merely listened to the instructions from the unit chief.<sup>5305</sup> Workers were told that they should not “obstruct the wheel of history” by skipping work due to sickness.<sup>5306</sup> Others were told to work harder without explanation as to why.<sup>5307</sup>

1558. Workers were also beaten if they did not work hard enough. UTH Seng’s unit chief warned his unit that if they did not work hard, they would be placed in a special unit in which they would have to do more work on fewer food rations than other units.<sup>5308</sup> Those in the special unit would be lined up at night for self-criticism sessions and the special unit chief would beat them with a whip under their knees in front of other units working nearby.<sup>5309</sup> The beatings did not cause severe injuries,<sup>5310</sup> but were used to deter other young workers from becoming lazy.<sup>5311</sup>

1559. NUON Narom stated that they were told at meetings that the work had to be completed before the rainy season, and in fact she had to work day and night carrying earth, regardless of whether they were sick to achieve that goal.<sup>5312</sup>

1560. The Chamber is satisfied that workers were required to attend criticism and self-criticism meetings on a regular basis, during which they were told to work hard in order to meet the construction goal of the worksite and to help the revolution make a “great leap forward”. The meetings were also used to warn the workers of the consequences for failing to perform the required work, which could include public beatings.<sup>5313</sup>

11.2.15. Arrests and Disappearances

1561. The evidence shows that there were a number of unexplained disappearances from the Dam construction site. UTH Seng saw soldiers arrest two or three workers and concluded that they had been killed based upon what militia members later said.<sup>5314</sup> He explained that people would be called out with the excuse that they had to work at night, as in the dark it was easier to tie them up.<sup>5315</sup> construction site: when workers disappeared from the village, other villagers were told that the workers had been sent to other places where the work was more demanding.<sup>5318</sup> Some of SEANG Sovida's male colleagues, who were 17 April People, disappeared and she was told that they were sent to work at other worksites.<sup>5319</sup> The disappearances began to occur frequently later in 1977.<sup>5320</sup> These witnesses did not clearly articulate who arrested these individuals.

1563. OM Chy, the supervisor of 500 workers at a connecting canal worksite, saw an 18 or 19-year-old worker from another unit being publicly arrested by district security forces. He surmised that this was in order to deter other workers from following his example, although he conceded that he did not know the real reason for the arrest.<sup>5321</sup> Unit chiefs were able to reclaim arrested workers on certain occasions. But if workers were accused of serious wrongdoing, they could not be reclaimed.<sup>5322</sup>

1564. NUON Narom testified that after their work at the 1st January Dam was just finished, a New Person named Danich, known as the daughter of a former lawyer, disappeared.<sup>5323</sup> CHOEU Saing, a worker in a mobile unit, stated before OCIJ investigators that, one afternoon, he personally saw two soldiers "shoot and kill Hieng, who had escaped and fled from the security site", adding that "then they dragged him along a feeder canal". He also indicated that one day while he was walking to dig bamboo shoots he saw two pits full of bodies. He claimed that: "At that time the unit chiefs and team chiefs, both male and female, resolved that if anyone did anything wrong they would be taken away and killed, without any need for soldiers or security personnel".<sup>5324</sup> The Chamber notes that this evidence was not tested in court and is not sufficiently corroborated. The Chamber will not rely on it to support finding on the killings of workers.

1565. Some former supervisors gave evidence that workers who disappeared were not sent to their deaths. YEAN Lon, the chief of a group of 50 workers and a militiaman in

Kang Sau village, testified that he was instructed to arrest people at the 1st January Dam Worksite who had committed moral offences.<sup>5325</sup> He said that these people were re-educated at Tbeng Kaong and later allowed to return to the worksite.<sup>5326</sup> However, he acknowledged that some of these persons were arrested at the Tbeng Kaong office by the commune militia, and he did not know whether they had been killed.<sup>5327</sup> As noted previously, the Chamber considers that YEAN Lon minimised his role in arrests and killings. In view of the testimony recounted above, the Chamber has no doubt that at least some, if not all, of those arrested were killed.<sup>5328</sup>

1566. SOU Soeurn testified that commune chiefs informed her that workers were taken from the 1st January Dam Worksite, both 17 April and Base People, when they were sent to study sessions,<sup>5329</sup> though she did not know where.<sup>5330</sup> Some of these workers later returned and others were said to have been sent to live in other districts.<sup>5331</sup> KE Pich Vannak, KE Pauk's son, stated in his WRI that he never heard about arrests or killings at the 1st January Dam.<sup>5332</sup> The Chamber finds that both SOU Soeurn and KE Pich Vannak, respectively the wife and the son of KE Pauk, tried to minimise the incidents of disappearances due to their positions and possible responsibility related to those events. The Chamber does not find it credible that all of the workers who were taken from the 1st January Dam for not working hard enough were re-educated and returned to their units. The evidence was clear that there were repercussions for failing to adhere to the orders, work quotas and schedules imposed by supervisors.<sup>5333</sup> Some of these individuals were likely killed. However, the Chamber finds that the evidence does not support a finding to the requisite standard that those who disappeared were killed, apart from those who were transferred to Baray Choan Dek. The Chamber therefore rejects the suggestion that all workers who were arrested were reassigned to work in their villages or at other worksites and finds that a significant number of workers were forcibly removed from the worksite, never to be found again.

11.2.16. Killings at Baray Choan Dek Pagoda

1567. Workers at the 1st January Dam worked under the constant fear that if they made a mistake, they would disappear, be arrested, tortured and/or killed.<sup>5334</sup> There is credible evidence that these fears were well-founded: workers disappeared from the site, some of whom were taken to the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda Security Centre and were killed.<sup>5335</sup>

1568. According to the Closing Order, the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda, located near the 1st January Dam, was known as a place where people were taken to be killed, although people were killed at other locations too.<sup>5336</sup> The Chamber notes that, in support of the charges of murder at the 1st January Dam, the Co-Investigating Judges rely on the interviews of several individuals, including a guard, a villager and one former prisoner, who had direct experience of the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda Security Centre.<sup>5337</sup> None of these individuals testified at trial and the Chamber accordingly relies upon their evidence only in corroboration.<sup>5338</sup>

1569. The Baray Choan Dek Pagoda was located in Tras village, Ballangk commune, Baray district, Sector 42, within one to two kilometres of the 1st January Dam.<sup>5339</sup> Prior to March 1977, the Security Office Chairman was EM Min alias Sen.<sup>5340</sup> Leadership from that point until the end of the DK regime changed frequently, but the evidence was not entirely consistent as to the chain of succession.<sup>5341</sup> Nonetheless, the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda was under the control of the Baray District Secretary as seen below.

1570. The Chamber considers that the Secretary of Baray District was initially TOEM Sreoung alias Aun until his arrest on 19 March 1977.<sup>5342</sup> Moul took over as Secretary for a short time and was replaced by TEP Poch prior to September 1977 until the fall of the DK regime.<sup>5343</sup> TEP Poch visited the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda at least once a month or sent a subordinate to go there on his behalf and was aware of arrests that had been made.<sup>5344</sup> There was credible evidence that Poch also visited the 1st January Dam and its surrounding canal worksites.<sup>5345</sup> Further, OM Chy testified that Poch, the prior Baray District Secretary Moul, and the Sector 42 Secretary Oeun told him that anyone who did not follow regulations was blocking the progress of construction, was an enemy and should be smashed.<sup>5346</sup> Poch was notorious for having ordered that 70 families in the district be killed and the Southwest Zone had a reputation for treating the people in Baray district harshly.<sup>5347</sup>

1571. In his statement to OCIJ investigators in 2009, TEP Poch attempted to deflect

The former Baray District Secretary, TOEM Sreoung alias Aun was arrested on 19 March 1977 and killed at S-21. See S-21 list of prisoners smashed on 8 July 1977, E3/2285, 9 July 1977, p. 315, ERN (En) 00873433. The Chamber considers that TEP Pauch alias Poch was not forthcoming with the OCIJ investigators and was attempting to minimise his culpability for events in Baray District. He contradicted his prior statement to DC-Cam, claiming he was not the Baray District Secretary when multiple witnesses identified him as such. The Chamber therefore accepts the evidence that TEP Poch was the Baray District Secretary from around March 1977. See below, para. 1571.

responsibility for events at Baray Choan Dek Pagoda by claiming that he did not arrive in Baray district until 1978, that he was never the District Secretary and that Moul was in charge.<sup>5348</sup> OM Chy also places TEP Poch in Baray district in 1978.<sup>5349</sup> However, this timing was not consistent with the evidence of BAN Seak who stated that Poch was in charge of the Baray district and the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda killing site from early 1977.<sup>5350</sup> The Chamber also notes that in a subsequent interview with the OCIJ investigators in 2013, TEP Poch admitted that he was sent to Baray district to take over as District Secretary from Moul.<sup>5351</sup> He also stated that the Sector 43 Secretary was named Chan.<sup>5352</sup> The Chamber notes that KOAM Chann alias Chan, the Sector 43 Secretary, was arrested in September 1977.<sup>5353</sup> The Chamber therefore considers that for Poch to have known Chan, he must have taken over from Moul as Baray District Secretary prior to September 1977.

1572. The Chamber is also convinced that workers from the 1st January Dam were sent to the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda. OR Ho, who was the chief of Prey Srangae village, Ballangk commune, Sector 42, and later a work unit chief at the worksite, described the purpose of the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda during the construction of the 1st January Dam.<sup>5354</sup> He testified that if work at the Dam did not go to plan, the upper level would accuse the lower, village level of betrayal and kill them.<sup>5355</sup> At times, the middle, commune level also arrested and killed the lower level.<sup>5356</sup> OR Ho did not know who carried out the killings, but victims were arrested and sent to be detained at the

Baray Choan Dek Pagoda, which had been converted to a security office after the monks had been disrobed.<sup>5357</sup> Some workers were taken from the 1st January Dam to the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda for re-education.<sup>5358</sup> Most of them would not return to the worksite.<sup>5359</sup> He placed the responsibility for arrests on the security forces.<sup>5360</sup>

1573. While a majority of the unit chiefs reported and arrested their own team members, accusing them of being enemies, OR Ho testified that none of his workers was taken away, as he and his fellow group chiefs tried to resolve any work issues within the group.<sup>5361</sup>

1574. OR Ho admitted however that he saw many people arrested and taken away, though he did not remember all their names. He recalled that Born and Vut, members of the Ballangk Commune Committee, were arrested, taken to the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda and never returned.<sup>5362</sup> Previously, Vut had an important role as he was tasked with reporting to the higher levels on a daily basis concerning workers who proved to be lazy.<sup>5363</sup> OR Ho also recognised a security officer named Mao, who worked at the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda, as the person who arrested Born and Vut.<sup>5364</sup> Although OR Ho stated he never witnessed any executions,<sup>5365</sup> the disappearance and transfer of arrested workers to the Pagoda was corroborated by several witnesses.<sup>5366</sup> The Chamber considers that OR Ho was minimising his role in arrests of workers, but accepts his evidence that workers at the 1st January Dam were sent to the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda.

Pagoda was located, gave evidence that a boy of 14 to 15 years of age named Try was arrested and killed at the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda. MEAS Laihour testified that she saw that Try, a Base Person, was held in a cage for re-education because he was considered lazy, and later disappeared.<sup>5367</sup> KONG Uth was also from Tras village and testified that she knew Try, who carried soil at the 1st January Dam Worksite, and corroborated the fact that he disappeared. She heard that Try was taken and killed.<sup>5368</sup> The Chamber finds that Try was punished because he did not work hard enough. However, this second hand account is not sufficient to buttress a finding beyond reasonable doubt that Try was killed. MEAS Laihour further stated that she saw multiple cages and that “for each commune there were soldiers who were assigned to guard in that area”. She clarified that another person named NEARY Leap was placed in a cage for re-education, because she did not go to work. However it is not clear whether MEAS Laihour herself saw NEARY Leap in a cage or if this was only hearsay.<sup>5369</sup> Without corroborating testimony, or any further evidence of a generalised practice, the Chamber cannot conclude that there was a practice of putting workers in cages.

1576. There is circumstantial evidence to support the conclusion that after workers from the 1st January Dam were sent to Baray Choan Dek Pagoda, they were killed. MEAS Laihour testified that Baray Choan Dek Pagoda was located in her village.<sup>5370</sup> She passed by the pagoda every tenth day when visiting her village. On one such occasion, she was confronted by two soldiers who came out pointing rifles at her and threatening her life.<sup>5371</sup> Her unit chief informed her that people were being killed inside.<sup>5372</sup> Her village chief also told her that three or four people from her work unit,

1579. The Chamber also has before it photographic evidence of skulls and human bones excavated in a pit near the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda in 1980.<sup>5386</sup> Based upon the trial record, it is not possible to determine the exact number of human remains or how many of these remains are the result of killings of workers from the 1st January Dam Worksite. However, MEN Le, who was involved in the excavation of the remains at the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda in 1980, and who had been detained in the Pagoda during the regime, estimated that five thousand people were killed there in 1978.<sup>5387</sup> YIN Daut, a guard and executioner at the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda, who had an incentive to minimise the numbers killed, estimated that less than 1000 people were killed at the site.<sup>5388</sup>

11.2.17. Living Conditions

1581. As a preliminary issue, the Chamber notes that it heard evidence regarding conditions at the worksite from SOU Soeurn, KE Pauk's wife and the Chamkar Leu District Secretary. This evidence differed significantly from the majority of the rest of the evidence heard by the Chamber, in that it painted a much more positive picture of those conditions.

1582. SOU Soeurn testified that sleeping and living conditions at the 1st January Dam were proper, and that the food provided was adequate.<sup>5389</sup> The food supply was provided by Angkar and there was a sufficient supply of food and rice for the workers.<sup>5390</sup> Workers were neither skinny nor fat; they ate steamed rice and gruel along with plenty of fish from the Tonlé Sap; they did not have fruit, but they were given some sugar, rice and dried fish.<sup>5391</sup> There were proper sleeping and eating halls.<sup>5392</sup> Some workers had blankets and mosquito nets. No one was ever forced to sleep directly on the ground.<sup>5393</sup> SOU Soeurn testified that the state distributed clothes and that each worker was given at least one or two sets of black clothes to wear.<sup>5394</sup> This was Angkar's responsibility.<sup>5395</sup> SOU Soeurn said there were some flies, but not many,<sup>5396</sup> and that flies increased when workers failed to attend to their hygiene.<sup>5397</sup> SOU Soeurn acknowledged that there were sometimes shortages of food and medicine at the 1st January Dam, but she did not observe it herself since she was not always there and when she visited, Angkar had provided adequate food and medicine.<sup>5398</sup>

1583. SOU Soeurn also acknowledged that some workers were ill due to sanitation issues and the large number of flies.<sup>5399</sup> On this last issue her statement was inconsistent with a previous one where she claimed that there were not so many flies. She claimed that medical staff took care of the sick and that seriously ill workers were taken to the hospital in Kampong Cham for treatment.<sup>5400</sup>

1584. The Chamber does not consider SOU Soeurn's description of the 1st January Dam Worksite to be credible. Given SOU Soeurn's position, and her responsibility as a District Secretary for selecting workers to be sent to the 1st January Dam, she has an incentive to minimise the extent of harsh conditions at the worksite.<sup>5401</sup> Further, she claimed to have only visited the worksite on rare occasions and her testimony was contradicted by multiple witnesses on each of these points. Although SOU Soeurn acknowledged some of the difficulties of the dam, her testimony significantly minimised the brutality of the conditions and the hardships faced by the workers. The Chamber therefore accords minimal weight to her testimony on these points.

1585. There was extensive and generally consistent evidence presented on the living conditions at the 1st January Dam Worksite, including with respect to food, water and hygiene, sleeping conditions, medical care and children. The Chamber briefly summarises this evidence below.<sup>5402</sup> than regular members.<sup>5412</sup> UN Rann testified that the unit chiefs and medics ate steamed rice, while work unit members ate only gruel.<sup>5413</sup> KE Pauk's nephew acknowledged that when he drove KE Pauk to the 1st January Dam site, he ate well, as did KE Pauk, who dined alone.<sup>5414</sup> PECH Sokha, a technician, testified that he ate only cooked rice with cassava and banana stems.<sup>5415</sup>

11.2.17.1. Food

1588. The Chamber heard evidence from PECH Sokha that appeared to minimise the difference between the food given to the workers and that given to the unit chiefs and technicians. PECH Sokha testified that the workers were in normal shape, he did not see anyone collapse,<sup>5416</sup> and he never observed anyone die of starvation.<sup>5417</sup> However, he acknowledged in his prior statement that people's health was weak,<sup>5418</sup> gave evidence that the food was insufficient,<sup>5419</sup> and stated that it was surprising that workers (including himself) had survived their experience at the 1st January Dam, working day and night without adequate food.<sup>5420</sup> Similarly, while acknowledging that workers were not in the best of health,<sup>5421</sup> OR Ho stressed that no one in his group died of starvation even though one or two may have died of illness.<sup>5422</sup> The Chamber finds that PECH Sokha's evidence was internally inconsistent, and that both of these witnesses had an interest in minimising their responsibility with respect to the conditions of the workers. The Chamber accordingly disregards their evidence with respect to the workers' food conditions.

1589. Some workers risked scrounging for food to supplement their diets. MEAS Laihour secretly collected tree leaves, mixing them with salt.<sup>5423</sup> But she said that those who stole food were arrested for refashioning and no one dared complain about the food for fear of being arrested and killed.<sup>5424</sup> UN Rann testified that a cook sometimes left uneaten rice crusts for her to eat.<sup>5425</sup> She ate the rice but feared being accused of betraying Angkar and being killed for doing so.<sup>5426</sup> OR Ho contended that those with a little food were permitted to bring it to the worksite and that workers were permitted to catch fish in the stream after work,<sup>5427</sup> but agreed that private food supplies were not generally permitted.<sup>5428</sup> The Chamber considers that OR Ho, as a unit chief, was trying to minimise his responsibility for the suffering of his workers. The Chamber therefore finds that workers feared retribution for seeking additional food.

1591. OR Ho gave evidence of a special work force which received fish sauce and more delicious meals including fish.<sup>5431</sup> However, he noted that in 1976 and early 1977 there was a drought during which everyone suffered because food and fish were not abundant.<sup>5432</sup> During 1976, the drought occurred during the Pchum Ben traditional festival [October 1976] affecting the 1976 harvest which was to be consumed in 1977. The drought hit hard and not much rice was produced for 1977.<sup>5433</sup> The Chamber accepts that a special work force may have been favoured over others, but finds that everyone suffered food shortages.<sup>5434</sup>

1592. SEANG Sovida testified that food rations were relatively good in her village of Ruessei Keo in Kratie and that she sometimes brought vegetables from her village to the worksite.<sup>5435</sup> In her village, there was both gruel and steamed rice with pumpkin or gourd soup for every meal.<sup>5436</sup> In contrast, this witness said that the food at the 1st January Dam was insufficient and described the living conditions there as “like [...] living in hell”.<sup>5437</sup> Therefore, the Chamber does not consider that her testimony about food in her village creates doubt as to the meagre rations provided to workers at the Dam and the fact that they became malnourished as a result.

1593. The food supply at the 1st January Dam was centrally controlled by villages or cooperatives. According to OM Chy, who supervised 500 workers at a canal connecting to the 1st January Dam, food was brought from Ta Prok village to Ballangk commune and was distributed by the economic section of the commune which was responsible for supplying the work units.<sup>5438</sup> Individual work units would then request to be supplied by their respective villages.<sup>5439</sup> Food was brought from the village to the worksite by the person in charge of the economy every four to 10 days.<sup>5440</sup> SOU Soeurn similarly testified that the State and the zone were responsible for providing rice to the workers at the 1st January Dam, and that cooperatives only provided rice to cooperative members.<sup>5441</sup>

1594. The Chamber is also satisfied that rice taken from the zones was exported. As

Further noting that POL Pot stated that these rations were adequate and that the November 1976 issue of Revolutionary Flag again specified “four regimes: Number one forces, three cans; number two forces two and a half cans; number three forces, two cans; number four forces, one and a half cans”).

noted above, it was the CPK's policy to finance the modernisation of agriculture in Cambodia by exporting rice.<sup>5442</sup> Documentary evidence from the Commerce Ministry shows that substantial amounts of rice were in fact exported from Cambodia.<sup>5443</sup>

1595. The Chamber is accordingly satisfied that the amount of food provided to workers was insufficient, and that workers were afraid to look for supplementary food for fear of being accused of being enemies. Finally, the Chamber is satisfied that the food supply was centrally controlled by villages and cooperatives and that significant amounts of rice were exported despite the insufficient supply of food for workers.<sup>5444</sup>

11.2.17.2. Water and hygiene

1596. The movement of tens of thousands of workers to the 1st January Dam site without adequate provision of clean water, soap, latrines, or pest treatment created a dangerously unhygienic environment.

1597. Drinking water at the Dam was muddy and unsanitary.<sup>5445</sup> Work units were directed to boil water before drinking to prevent disease,<sup>5446</sup> but due to time and resource constraints this practice was limited and workers were left to drink unboiled used ashes to wash clothes, so lice were abundant.<sup>5462</sup>

1602. Furthermore, there were no sanitary pads so the women's menstrual blood would mix with rain water and turn the pit they were working red.<sup>5463</sup> Women used a piece of cloth to absorb their menstruation and washed the blood away in the river water.<sup>5464</sup> If they worked away from the river, women worked with stained trousers.<sup>5465</sup>

1603. In light of the above, the Chamber finds that the hygiene conditions were extremely poor and inadequate to sustain the workers in the assignments they had to undertake. Workers were given a bare minimum of clothing and no means to wash which contributed to an unhygienic environment, led to disease, and exacerbated the suffering of the workers at the 1st January Dam Worksite.

11.2.17.3. Sleeping quarters

hospital.<sup>5482</sup>

1608. MEAS Laihour testified that treatment at larger district hospitals was equally ineffective. At the Wat Chambak District Hospital, there were only traditional healers, named Ta Voar and Ta Sorn, who boiled herbs for the sick. There was nothing more sophisticated except for an orange liquid that was sometimes given.<sup>5483</sup> New and Old People were given the same treatment, but it was ineffective.<sup>5484</sup>

1609. CHAO Lang testified that she became ill with fever and was sent to a hospital. A colleague visited her at the hospital to give her traditional medicine and, upon begging the medic, was given one tablet of aspirin.<sup>5485</sup> CHAO Lang, who had been a trained medic, said that there was no effective medicine available and it appeared the medics were not properly trained.<sup>5486</sup> Only rabbit drop pellets were available as medicine at that time. She tried to use Kapok leaves to help her illness, although she was not convinced of their effectiveness.<sup>5487</sup>

1610. The Chamber finds that proper medical care was not provided to the workers at the 1st January Dam. Medicines were in short supply and medical workers received very little training. Workers were nonetheless forced to continue working while ill and some workers who were sent to clinics or district hospitals died of illness. Living conditions, including food, hygiene and medical care, were extremely poor and inadequate to sustain the workers in the assignments they had to undertake.

11.2.17.5. Children

1611. Most of the workers building the Dam were eighteen years old or older.<sup>5488</sup> Young children were instead told to collect cow dung.<sup>5489</sup> Parents would be allowed to visit their children at night if they were in nearby villages. But parents who worked far from their village were not allowed to visit their children.<sup>5490</sup>

1612. On occasion, children below the age of 18 worked at the 1st January Dam. HUN Sethany's younger sister HUN Kol Thida was 16 years old when they were sent together to work on the 1st January Dam.<sup>5491</sup> Some witnesses and Civil Parties recalled a boy named Try was put in a cage to frighten people who were lazy as being 14 or 15 years old.<sup>5492</sup>

1613. SEANG Sovida was 11 or 12 years old when she was sent to work at the dam, but she appears to have been an exceptional case due to her young age and the tasks assigned. She was not given a work quota, though she was tasked with assisting others and fetching water for older workers from the kitchen which was kept in canteens.<sup>5493</sup> She testified that most of the workers in her unit were under twenty years old and that she was the youngest and one of the smallest in stature.<sup>5494</sup>

1614. The only evidence of a general policy of forcing children to work at the 1st January Dam came from HUN Sethany. She testified that one mobile unit, whose chief was named An, consisted mostly of children aged 9 to 13 from the surrounding villages who worked apart from their parents.<sup>5495</sup> These children were instructed to do the same work as adults, such as carrying dirt, and received the same food ration. There was no empathy or sympathy for children.<sup>5496</sup> They had been appointed to work by the village chief, a very tall man named Ol.<sup>5497</sup> She testified that the children's health suffered as a result of the hard work and when they fell sick no one came to visit them.<sup>5498</sup>

1615. Apart from this one mobile unit (consisting of 12 to 30 workers),<sup>5499</sup> the Chamber finds that there was no evidence of a consistent practice of forcing children under 18 years old to work at the 1st January Dam, although there were clearly individual instances of children working there.

11.2.18. Forced Labour and Freedom of Movement

1616. The consensus among workers at the 1st January Dam was that they had no choice but to complete the hard labour required of them. HUN Sethany testified that she had no choice but to work at the 1st January Dam. Workers could not complain or refuse to work.<sup>5500</sup> SEANG Sovida testified simply that she was forced to work and was not permitted to speak to other New People.<sup>5501</sup> There was no right to challenge the working conditions.<sup>5502</sup> UTH Seng agreed that he was forced to work hard.<sup>5503</sup> The situation was no different for Base People such as MEAS Laihour. She was instructed to constantly engage in the work until quotas were met.<sup>5504</sup> She stated that she never thought of escaping as she could not go very far and stated that no one was free at that time.<sup>5505</sup>

1617. OM Chy, a mobile unit supervisor of 500 workers at a canal connected to the 1st January Dam, testified that none of the workers under his supervision at the worksite in 1978 had volunteered.<sup>5506</sup> The workers were required to work.<sup>5507</sup> If anyone disobeyed, they would be accused of opposing the society under the Khmer Rouge leadership<sup>5508</sup> and put themselves at risk of being arrested, and sent for re-education at a detention centre or commune office.<sup>5509</sup> He therefore instructed his unit chiefs to keep workers under control and not to let them wander around.<sup>5510</sup>

1618. PECH Sokha who was a technician with a privileged position of authority at the worksite, asserted that he did not know if other workers were there voluntarily or were forced to work.<sup>5511</sup> He recalled however that revolutionary songs were played everywhere to lend an air of happiness, but in reality, everything was horrible. PECH Sokha testified that it was impossible to complain and that he merely worked hard to survive.<sup>5512</sup>

1620. In addition, SOU Soeurn said that none of those selected by the commune chiefs to work at the 1st January Dam refused. The workers were willing to go.<sup>5514</sup> She said that workers were not threatened with punishment but merely informed that they had to respect discipline and working hours.<sup>5515</sup> No one dared to refuse because they had been instructed to work hard together so that everyone would have enough to eat. Workers went to work voluntarily.<sup>5516</sup> The Chamber rejects this testimony due to SOU Soeurn's self-interest in minimising her own responsibility, particularly as she was involved in gathering the workforce for the 1st January Dam.<sup>5517</sup>

1621. The evidence also showed that workers' freedom of movement was highly restricted. They had no rights and could only travel back to their cooperatives with authorisation, which would often be accorded on every tenth day.<sup>5518</sup> UN Rann testified that she was not permitted to move about freely and was told that if she refused to do the work she would be taken away and killed.<sup>5519</sup> UTH Seng testified that workers were not permitted to visit their sick parents.<sup>5520</sup>

1622. SOU Soeurn testified that no one tried to flee the worksite.<sup>5521</sup> They remained at work although they were exhausted and hungry.<sup>5522</sup> However, her testimony was squarely rejected by multiple witnesses. Notably, PECH Sokha, despite the fact that he had a better position as a technician than many workers, testified that he was afraid but he did not know where to escape.<sup>5523</sup> The Chamber therefore rejects SOU Soeurn's testimony on this point.

1623. The Chamber concludes that workers at the 1st January Dam were forced to undertake hard labour against their will. They continued to work under extremely inhumane conditions as they feared for their lives. The Chamber further concludes that movement was heavily restricted, with authorisation required to leave the worksite to visit family.

11.2.19. Deaths Resulting from Working and Living Conditions

1624. KE Pich Vannak stated to OCIJ investigators that he knew that patients at the worksite were dying because of a lack of medicine and informed KE Pauk,<sup>5524</sup> but he did not specify how many had died.

1625. Civil Party NUON Narom stated that when she fell sick with a high fever she was hospitalised for two weeks in a makeshift hospital in a pagoda, where she recovered.<sup>5525</sup> She then stayed in a village with her mother for one month after which she was sent back to her mobile unit which was engaged in farming.<sup>5526</sup> She grew skinny and became weaker by the day.<sup>5527</sup> She gave evidence of people fainting or collapsing who were then carried by young men in hammocks back to the sleeping quarters.<sup>5528</sup>

1626. HUN Sethany testified that a Base Person named Ry died from overwork. Ry was unmarried and did whatever was assigned to him, including breaking rocks manually.<sup>5529</sup> He fell sick at the worksite and returned to the village of origin during the rainy season. During this period of rest, he received rabbit drop pellets as treatment until he died a fortnight later.<sup>5530</sup> HUN Sethany lived six houses away from Ry and was present in the village when he died.<sup>5531</sup> There were no funeral rites for him.<sup>5532</sup> UTH Seng also testified that of the five people in his work group who he knew well, two died of illness – though he did not specify where they died.<sup>5533</sup>

1627. As noted above, there were also multiple reports of landslides occurring at the 1st January Dam Worksite, injuring or killing several workers.<sup>5534</sup> These events were precipitated by an atmosphere of intense competition.<sup>5535</sup> UN Rann said that the small unit chiefs were in charge and were trying to impress their superiors.<sup>5536</sup> KONG Uth also recalled that one person was crushed by a rock that fell off a bridge that was under construction.<sup>5537</sup>

1628. MEAS Laihour, a mobile unit worker, witnessed a landslide on people who worked in another commune area digging soil, killing them before they could be unburied.<sup>5538</sup> Hearsay evidence corroborates that such accidents took place. HUN Sethany heard that someone had died from an incident.<sup>5539</sup> UTH Seng likewise heard there was a fatal accident due to a landslide caused by earth which was dug very deep.<sup>5540</sup> UN Rann also heard about a landslide which covered three workers, killing one on the spot.<sup>5541</sup> NUON Narom gave evidence that she saw soil collapse around a hole in the ground that some youth were digging.<sup>5542</sup> The Chamber is not able to ascertain whether these witnesses were referring to the same or different incidents. However, it finds that they were credible in describing the deaths of at least several workers due to landslides precipitated by the expedited pace of work at the worksite and the lack of appropriate precautionary measures.

1629. The available evidence before the Chamber shows that few people died of illness or injury at the 1st January Dam, but usually individuals who were seriously sick were sent back to their villages or to local clinics where they died when treatments failed.<sup>5543</sup> The Chamber therefore finds that it was proved that workers died due to work-related accidents or due to conditions imposed at the 1st January Dam.

11.2.20. Knowledge of KE Pauk and the Upper Echelon of Living and Working Conditions at the 1st January Dam

1630. Although almost all of the Central (old North) Zone cadres were purged in 1977, KE Pauk and his family (e.g. KE Pich Vannak, SOU Soeurn, Oeun) remained untouched or, in the case of Oeun, who became Sector 42 Secretary after the purge, benefitted from higher appointments.<sup>5544</sup> KE Pauk was entrusted with executing arrests in furtherance of the Central (old North) Zone purge and with pursuing security concerns in the new North Zone.<sup>5545</sup> Furthermore, KE Pauk disseminated the political stance of the party in Kampong Cham, set up cooperatives in groups of 100 families,

As a result, patients died); T. 4 June 2015 (SOU Soeurn), E1/310.1, pp. 66, 73-74 (sick people at the 1st January Dam were returned to their respective cooperatives after they had been hospitalised at the Kampong Cham hospital); T. 2 June 2015 (SEANG Sovida), E1/308.1, p. 27 (stating that if someone was seriously ill, they would be taken back to their village as there were no proper hospitals at the worksite).

organised military forces to defend the country and labour forces to construct dams and irrigation systems.<sup>5546</sup> The Chamber therefore finds that KE Pauk was a trusted member of the Party.

1631. KE Pauk was apprised of the conditions at the 1st January Dam Worksite from personal supervision.<sup>5547</sup> He knew that people starved, that foreign aid was not accepted, and that people in cooperatives were forced to work very hard.<sup>5548</sup> In addition, KE Pich Vannak reported to his father KE Pauk complaints about food shortages and that the sick did not have medicine.<sup>5549</sup> The latter ordered the sectors to assign medics to help the patients, but the sectors did not have medicine. KE Pich Vannak also knew that patients were dying because of a lack of medicine.<sup>5550</sup> Due to the close personal connection between KE Pich Vannak and KE Pauk, and due to his personal supervision of the worksite, the Chamber finds that KE Pauk was also aware of the lack of medicine at the 1st January Dam Worksite.

1632. KE Pauk attempts to displace blame for some of the activities of Southwest Zone cadres in the Central (old North) Zone. He states that some of the Southwest cadres “added salt” by mistreating the people in their districts, arresting or killing innocent people in Baray and Sandann districts in particular.<sup>5551</sup> KE Pauk concludes that “evil cadres from Southwestern Zone cause a lot [of] troubles to my zone”.<sup>5552</sup> The Chamber notes that in writing his autobiography, KE Pauk had an incentive to burnish his own reputation and may have attempted to displace blame on others for arrests he facilitated or to which he acquiesced. In fact, the evidence above shows that KE Pauk cooperated with the Party Centre in sending Central (old North) Zone cadres to S-21.<sup>5553</sup> Furthermore, KE Pauk remained the Zone Secretary even after the Southwest Zone cadres took over positions in the Central (old North) Zone. There is no evidence to show that he actively took measures to sanction or restrain cadres in his zone in order to avoid excess in the implementation of the purge policy. The Chamber therefore considers that not only did KE Pauk know that workers were being mistreated at the 1st January Dam, but he acquiesced to this conduct, as he supported the implementation of the purge policy in his zone.

1633. KE Pauk communicated to the Upper Echelon that there was a lack of food and medicine. He sent a telegram to POL Pot on 2 April 1976, describing the situation in the Central (old North) Zone, noting that among the entire population in the zone “there has been much fever and diarrhea”. He attributed this to working and overheating, indicating that hot water should be drunk and that measures would be taken to reduce working hours.<sup>5554</sup> On 10 May 1978, KE Pauk sent another telegram to Office 870, noting with regard to “People’s Lives” that “some places have two rice meals [a day], some places have only one rice meal and one porridge meal [a day] and some places have two porridge meals [a day]”.<sup>5555</sup> Given that the 1st January Dam was a project that was prioritised by the Party Centre,<sup>5556</sup> and that KE Pauk was a trusted Party member, the Chamber considers the only reasonable inference is that KE Pauk also informed the Party Centre about the specific difficulties encountered on the 1st January Dam Worksite.

1634. NUON Chea also knew from personal experience about the food scarcity. SAUT Toeung, who accompanied NUON Chea as his bodyguard on two visits to the 1st January Dam, testified that the leaders must have known that people were punished for failing to meeting work quotas and that they were overworked and dying of starvation.<sup>5557</sup> NUON Chea visited the cooperatives.<sup>5558</sup> He ordered the cooperative and sector committees to hold criticism meetings and said they must produce three tonnes of rice per hectare.<sup>5559</sup> It was SAUT Toeung’s view, however, that NUON Chea had planned to provide people with enough meals and that the Sector Committees failed to follow it by forcing people to work very hard.<sup>5560</sup> The Chamber finds that NUON Chea knew of the lack of food and medicine at the worksite. His participation in the Party Centre's decision to push forward on the expedited timeframe for the 1st January Dam despite this knowledge was inconsistent with an aspiration that people should eat enough.

1635. IENG Thirith visited the 1st January Dam in April of 1977, following which she reported to her leaders about the lack of food and medicine in the provinces.<sup>5561</sup> However, there is no record that she reported to the Party Centre specifically about the conditions at the 1st January Dam.<sup>5562</sup>

1636. SOU Soeurn's testimony as to what she told the Upper Echelon was somewhat ambiguous. She stated that when she met with NUON Chea, either in her district or in Phnom Penh, he inquired as to how well the cooperatives were being run and whether the livelihood of the people had improved.<sup>5563</sup> It is not clear what type of message she conveyed to NUON Chea and whether she conveyed that some people did not have enough food to eat. SOU Soeurn believed that the Upper Echelon was under the impression that her district was producing abundant food and she concluded that there was likely rice stock available in each cooperative.<sup>5564</sup> On the other hand, she also testified that people did not have three meals a day in some communes even though they were achieving high yields,<sup>5565</sup> that the rice was being sent outside the district,<sup>5566</sup> and that Dam workers complained they did not have enough to eat.<sup>5567</sup> She testified that these reports were forwarded to the sector, but there were no replies.<sup>5568</sup> The Chamber notes that the sector secretary was his youngest brother Oeun and the zone secretary was her husband and that it was easy to follow up on this matter. However, it is not clear from her testimony what reports were provided to NUON Chea.

1637. There is reason to doubt that SOU Soeurn provided a positive impression of the food situation to NUON Chea. She testified that a lot of rice was produced and the food situation in Chamkar Leu district, Sector 42 in the Central (old North) Zone was comparatively good.<sup>5569</sup> In contrast, BAN Seak, who was SOU Soeurn's deputy, testified that in the communes they planted a lot of corn in order to supplement their diet and despite the extra water coming from the canals, people did not have rice to eat.<sup>5570</sup> This corroborates the evidence of workers at the 1st January Dam about the scarcity of food which the Chamber has accepted. The Chamber therefore considers that SOU Soeurn's testimony as to the abundance of food in Chamkar Leu is not credible. However, even if she had provided a nuanced report to the Party Centre about the food situation, the Party Centre had direct information from KE Pauk and NUON Chea's own visits to apprise them of the lack of food and medicine at the 1st January Dam.

1638. The Special Revolutionary Flag issue of October-November 1976 notes:

We said it was normal for the people to suffer shortages in 1975 and 1976, that it is normal for them to suffer shortages in 1977, and that it will be normal when they suffer shortages in 1978. Enduring shortages is normal in making revolution. It is, however, to pass through them and leave them behind quickly. If that's not happening, it means that we are no yet imbued with the Party's line. It will be necessary in 1978 to put the Party's systems completely into practice. The solution is more bananas, tubers, sakou [...] and corn.<sup>5571</sup>

1639. It further acknowledges that:

Some places, the problem of meals and drink has not yet been achieved according to the ration. In examining this aspect, it would continue to sink further. [...] Where there are shortages in terms of meals and drink, there must be resolution. Resolve things by helping to provide food is one thing. However, it is necessary to resolve the responsible cadres.<sup>5572</sup>

“Bad class elements” are later blamed for the lack of rice to eat in contrast to “good classes” who “produce enough to eat and to have a large surplus for provision to the state”.<sup>5573</sup> But the problems are left without a resolution as the document concludes,

“Solutions are needed wherever there are shortages of good [sic] to eat and water to drink”.<sup>5574</sup> The Upper Echelon nonetheless continued to push the workers at the Dam to complete all of the dry season work as quickly as possible working night and day.<sup>5575</sup>

1640. The Chamber therefore finds that the Party Centre, including NUON Chea, knew that there was a lack of sufficient food and medicine at the 1st January Dam Worksite, and yet maintained the deadline for the Dam which risked the lives of the workers.

11.2.21. Treatment of New People compared to Old People

1641. As a preliminary matter, the Chamber notes that the treatment of New People at the 1st January Dam Worksite must be viewed in the broader context of how such people were treated in the communities from which they were selected, as well as the overall CPK policy towards New People.<sup>5576</sup> The 1st January worksite was not an “isolated bubble”; on the contrary, it was geographically and operationally interlinked with the sectors, districts and communes around it. In this regard, the Chamber notes its findings that anyone who opposed the revolution was considered an enemy and that New People were at particular risk of being accused of making mistakes.<sup>5577</sup> The Chamber therefore recalls that it may rely on evidence that falls outside of the temporal or geographic scope of the Closing Order in three circumstances: (1) to clarify a given context; (2) to establish by inference the elements, in particular the mens rea, of criminal conduct occurring during the material period; or (3) to demonstrate a deliberate pattern of conduct. The Chamber will therefore only rely on this evidence for these limited purposes and exclusively when the out-of-scope evidence is consistent with other evidence.<sup>5578</sup>

1642. OR Ho, who was the chief of Prey Srangae village in Ballangk commune, in Baray district, Sector 42, and later the chief of a work unit of 100 workers, testified that 300 families of New People arrived in Baray district after 17 April 1975.<sup>5579</sup> Their biographies were taken and they were divided up into different villages and communes.<sup>5580</sup> If former Khmer Republic officials or soldiers were discovered by the security personnel in the commune, these people would be arrested, taken to the security office, and killed.<sup>5581</sup> Guards (militiamen), disguised as 17 April People, spied on the New People to identify those who had held a certain rank.<sup>5582</sup> They tricked people by saying that they were captains and that they lost their wives.<sup>5583</sup> There was also a former teacher who was indoctrinated and who received new clothes from Chab, the commune chief, to incentivise the search for New People or anyone who had ranks in the former regime.<sup>5584</sup> OR Ho claimed that he once received a list of fifteen families of former civil servants and policeman in his village who were selected by the upper level, and that he helped to conceal eight of the families.<sup>5585</sup> However, the other seven families were taken on the pretext that they would go to live with relatives.<sup>5586</sup> In actuality, they were killed.<sup>5587</sup> OR Ho further noted that New People were not allowed to cast their votes for the elections which took place during DK regime, in contrast to Base People.<sup>5588</sup>

1643. OR Ho's evidence as to the treatment of New People in Baray and Santuk districts is corroborated by multiple other witnesses. HUN Sethany testified that during the LON Nol regime her father was a teacher in a college in Kompong Cham and was sent to work on the construction of the 1st January Dam.<sup>5589</sup> HUN Sethany was informed by her younger sibling that he witnessed the arrest of their father by militiamen who asked him to come and carry logs.<sup>5590</sup> Since then he disappeared and was never seen again.<sup>5591</sup> She heard that he had been killed at the Baray Choan Dek pagoda.<sup>5592</sup> Around the same time her mother and five siblings who were in a village were taken away with other families.<sup>5593</sup> They disappeared, but some of their clothes were returned and recognised by HUN Sethany.<sup>5594</sup> This last witness heard that her mother and siblings were dropped into wells in Chamkar-Andoung.<sup>5595</sup>

1644. UTH Seng testified that in Kang Sau village, Kampong Thma commune, Santuk district, where he had been transferred, there were covert militiamen who monitored activities of the villagers as they were eavesdropping under the house, in particular, the New People were the target.<sup>5596</sup> They monitored the conversation and all of the activities of New People.<sup>5597</sup> UTH Seng also recalled seeing the local militia calling away a few workers who were working close to his unit.<sup>5598</sup> These workers came from a new village and were known as having connection with the former LON Nol soldiers.<sup>5599</sup> The workers disappeared and afterwards, he overheard the chief of the youth battalion making light of the fact that these workers had been put in a well the previous night.<sup>5600</sup>

1645. Finally, UTH Seng testified that the chief of the local militia, Witness YEAN Lon, rode his bicycle around the village with dried blood on his sword, and watched over the New People.<sup>5601</sup> He also saw YEAN Lon at the 1st January Dam Worksite.<sup>5602</sup>

1646. YEAN Lon admitted that he was a militiaman and had witnessed the arrest of New People accused of being policemen, soldiers or spies.<sup>5603</sup> He corroborated OR Ho's testimony that when New People arrived, chief of communes and villages went around and gathered personal biographies.<sup>5604</sup> In his statement to the OCIJ investigators

he was more precise, stating the orders to arrest about 50 people who had been policemen, soldiers or spies, including Base People and New People, were given from the district and provincial levels.<sup>5605</sup> A letter was sent to Thlang who conveyed the order to arrest people.<sup>5606</sup> Those to be arrested were called to attend a meeting at the commune; they were tied up, put loaded onto trucks and taken to be killed.<sup>5607</sup>

1647. YEAN Lon, also testified that those accused of being former soldiers and policemen from the LON Nol era were arrested, but YEAN Lon did not know where they were taken.<sup>5608</sup> Based upon his personal experience, the Chamber considers that the witness was in a position to know the identities of individuals who were arrested. His testimony to the contrary is therefore not credible. The Chamber considers that when former LON Nol soldiers and policemen were arrested, it was with very few exceptions for the purpose of executing them. The Chamber therefore considers that YEAN Lon's limited admission further buttresses its findings as to the arrest and execution of former officials and soldiers of the Khmer Republic.

1648. Finally, the Chamber notes the evidence of BAN Seak, who was the Deputy Secretary of Chamkar Leu District in Sector 42. He told the OCIJ investigators that New People were considered to be bad elements. Those who talked too much or complained were purged.<sup>5609</sup>

1649. The picture that emerges from this evidence is the segregation and mistreatment of New People, in line with the CPK policy on the treatment of enemies of the regime. Therefore, the evidence arising from the 1st January Dam and discrimination faced by the workers at the worksite must be viewed in this context.

1650. In a number of ways, both New People and Old People were subjected to the same difficult conditions. KONG Uth, a worker at the 1st January Dam, whom the Chamber found to be generally credible, testified that all people, Old Persons, New Persons, and Cham were treated the same at the 1st January Dam.<sup>5610</sup> MEAS Laihour, an Old Person, also testified that her mobile unit was made up of Old and New People working together.<sup>5611</sup> The New People had arrived after the evacuation of the cities and were immediately assigned to worksites.<sup>5612</sup>

1651. OM Chy testified that New People and Old People worked together without discrimination.<sup>5613</sup> OR Ho further explained that even if people were divided into three different groups, namely full rights members, candidate people and deposites, all three groups conducted the same work in the fields.<sup>5614</sup> Full-rights people were very poor. Those who had enough to eat in the year were candidate or preparatory people, while those transferred from Phnom Penh or Cham people were deposites.<sup>5615</sup> The Chamber recalls however that OM Chy and OR Ho were both supervisors who had an incentive to minimise their culpability for the mistreatment of workers or discrimination against particular groups.<sup>5616</sup>

1652. In contrast to the testimony noted above, there were also reports of discrimination against New People. For example, senior positions such as unit chief, battalion chief were only held by Old People.<sup>5617</sup> New People were perceived as enemies so workers did not dare to be friends with Old People.<sup>5618</sup> New People could not request to work in a specific place.<sup>5619</sup> There was testimony that New People were not entitled to any new clothes or sandals.<sup>5620</sup> OR Ho also testified that New People were reprimanded for minor offences and if they committed serious wrongdoings, the commune chief could not guarantee their safety.<sup>5621</sup> Civil Party HUN Sethany confirmed this and testified that Old People could justify minor mistakes but New

People were under tremendous pressure and would merely accept criticism without speaking in order to survive.<sup>5622</sup> She further stated that while Old People and New People all had to do the same work,<sup>5623</sup> Old People were a bit more privileged.<sup>5624</sup> For example, she stated that New People were not allowed to attend the inauguration ceremony as only Old People were permitted to attend.<sup>5625</sup> She said that New People grew weaker and weaker due to their mistreatment.<sup>5626</sup> UN Rann stated that as she “was a 17 April person, [she] could not come and rest at the sleeping quarters as often as those Base people”.<sup>5627</sup> Sometimes an Old Person would receive two ladles of food, when a New Person would only receive one ladle, based upon the instructions of the chief of the economic section or the chief of the youth battalion.<sup>5628</sup> SEANG Sovida testified that both Old and New People worked under the same conditions, but, as New People were considered as enemies, only Old People had the position to control them and had more rights.<sup>5629</sup>

provide corroboration and is not sufficient to reach a finding that there was a general practice of discrimination beyond reasonable doubt in this regard.

11.2.22. Treatment of Cham

1654. The Chamber notes its findings in Section 13.2: Treatment of the Cham that the CPK imposed restrictions on Cham religious and cultural practices in various locations within the Central (old North) Zone and in other locations in Cambodia throughout the DK period. This included the prohibition of daily prayers; forcing Cham to eat pork, wear the same dress and haircuts as Khmer people and speak the Khmer language; the burning of Korans and dismantlement of mosques or their use for purposes other than prayer.<sup>5630</sup> The Chamber considers that the treatment of the Cham at the 1st January Dam must also be viewed in the context of how they were treated in the villages from which they were selected in Sectors 41, 42 and 43.

1655. UTH Seng testified that in Kang Sau village, there were about ten Cham families. One day all of the Cham disappeared and their scarves and Cham sarongs were distributed amongst the households in the village.<sup>5631</sup> After 1979, a Cham woman from that group returned to the village looking for her parents. But UTH Seng never saw any of the other Cham after they disappeared.<sup>5632</sup> YEAN Lon, the chief militiaman from Kang Sau village, testified that the commune chief had received instructions from the sector or provincial level to arrest those Cham people.<sup>5633</sup>

1656. With this backdrop, the Chamber now considers the treatment of the Cham people at the 1st January Dam. There is credible evidence that Cham who were transferred to the 1st January Dam to work in its construction suffered discrimination.<sup>5634</sup> OR Ho testified that they were even lower than 17 April People and

1657. Many Cham people transferred from the East Zone were transported to Prey Sraeng Pagoda (Preaek Sandaek), which was overcrowded, and were split up into various villages and assigned to work in various mobile units.<sup>5643</sup> However, not all work units had Cham members.<sup>5644</sup>

1658. KONG Uth testified about the disappearance of a Cham woman, named Roen or Yat, from her mobile unit.<sup>5645</sup> But she provided few details about the disappearance and did not clarify whether the woman disappeared because she was Cham.

11.2.23. Treatment of Former Khmer Republic Officials

1660. The Chamber recalls its finding that former Khmer Republic officials and soldiers were considered to be enemies and would be targeted for arrest and often disappeared.<sup>5646</sup> In the areas surrounding the 1st January Dam, the Chamber notes particularly the testimony of OR Ho, who was the chief of Prey Srangae village in Ballangk commune, Baray district, Sector 42, and later the chief of a work unit of 100 workers. As noted above, he testified that biographies were taken and if former Khmer Republic officials or soldiers were discovered by the security personnel in the commune, these people would be arrested and taken to the security office.<sup>5647</sup> Guards (militiamen) attempted to identify those who had held a certain rank. Further, OR Ho recalled how families of former civil servants and policeman in his village were identified to be arrested.<sup>5648</sup>

1661. PRAK Yut also testified that the district secretaries, including herself, made lists of former LON Nol soldiers, including their respective ranks and reported this information to the Sector 41 Secretary (in the Central (old North) Zone), AO An.<sup>5649</sup> She examined their biographies to determine who was good and, conversely, who needed re-education.<sup>5650</sup> If she was unable to re-educate them, PRAK Yut would refer them to AO An.<sup>5651</sup> But she claimed not to know what would happen to them if referred to the upper echelon.<sup>5652</sup> YOU Vann testified that PRAK Yut ordered her to compile a list of Cham, Vietnamese, and LON Nol soldiers.<sup>5653</sup> She said that PRAK Yut indicated that those on the list should be “cleaned up” or “purged”, although YOU Vann claimed that she did not know what that meant.<sup>5654</sup> The Chamber considers that there was a practice of identifying LON Nol soldiers of high rank through the compilation of lists at the district and sector levels for the purposes of arresting them.

1662. HUN Sethany testified that her father, who had been a teacher during the LON

Nol regime, was arrested at the 1st January Dam and presumed killed at Baray Choan Pagoda. Around the same time, her mother and five siblings disappeared from a village nearby and they were presumed killed in Chamkar-Andoung.<sup>5655</sup>

1663. At the 1st January Dam, UTH Seng said that his unit was working near a group of 17 April people with connections to former LON Nol soldiers. One night, militia asked two or three of those people to go with them and the workers were killed.<sup>5656</sup> UTH Seng overheard youth militia members say that the workers had been put into a well and that keeping them was no gain, removing them was no loss.<sup>5657</sup> The Chamber notes that this testimony was consistent with the general practice of the CPK to identify former officials and soldiers of the Khmer Republic. The Chamber further notes that UTH Seng's testimony was internally consistent and convincing. It therefore accepts his evidence that these individuals had been targeted for arrest and disappeared due to their association with former members of the Khmer Republic.

11.2.24. Legal Findings

1664. With respect to the 1st January Dam Worksite, the Closing Order charges the Accused with the crimes against humanity of (i) murder; (ii) extermination; (iii) enslavement; (iv) persecution on political grounds; (v) persecution of the Cham on religious grounds; and other inhumane acts (vi) through attacks against human dignity, and conduct characterised as (vii) forced marriage and (viii) enforced disappearances.<sup>5658</sup> The charge of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as forced marriage in relation to the 1st January Dam Worksite is addressed in Section 14: Regulation of Marriage.

11.2.24.1. Murder and extermination11.2.24.1.1. Deaths as a result of killings and executions

1665. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crimes against humanity of murder and extermination in relation to people arrested at the 1st January Dam and taken away to be killed nearby.<sup>5659</sup> It specifies that the surveillance of individuals at the 1st January Dam was aimed at identifying “enemies”, that many workers disappeared from the worksite at night and that the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda, near the 1st January Dam, was known as a place where people were taken to be killed.<sup>5660</sup>

1666. The Chamber has found that the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda was a detention facility and a killing site under the control of the Baray District Secretary.<sup>5661</sup> In addition to people from the villages and the cooperatives of the district a number of workers were transferred from the 1st January Dam to Baray Choan Dek Pagoda and killed. Consistent testimonies show that killings at the pagoda occurred on a very regular basis during the entire duration of the construction of the 1st January Dam.<sup>5662</sup> The Chamber recalls that a large amount of human remains and clothing were found on site after the collapse of DK.<sup>5663</sup> People killed in this location included people from Baray district including from the villages and the cooperatives around and workers of the district mobile units arrested at the Dam construction site and cadres involved in the monitoring of the work force. Specific victims included cadres such as Born and Vut, a 14-15-year-old boy named Try, and four to five New People observed by MEAS Laihour.<sup>5664</sup> Therefore, the actus reus of murder is satisfied. The pagoda was controlled by the successive Baray District Secretaries including Poch, who kept the sector and zone level secretaries apprised of arrests and the activities of the security centre.<sup>5665</sup> The Chamber finds that these individuals were intentionally killed thereby satisfying the mens rea of murder.<sup>5666</sup> Therefore, the crime against humanity of murder has been established.

1667. The Chamber notes that for the purposes here, the main distinction between murder and extermination is the scale of the killing. Although there is no minimum number of victims required to establish extermination, the Chamber is unable to establish the number of workers killed at the 1st January Dam or the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda, particularly with regard to what proportion of people imprisoned and killed at the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda had been workers at the 1st January Dam. These uncertainties preclude a finding beyond reasonable doubt that the crime of extermination is established at the 1st January Dam Worksite as the actus reus is not satisfied.

1668. The Closing Order also charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of extermination on the basis of the many people that died as a result of the conditions imposed at the 1st January Dam Worksite, including the deprivation of food, accommodation, medical care and hygiene as well as exhaustion due to hard labour and the unsafe working conditions.<sup>5667</sup>

1669. The NUON Chea Defence submits that workers at the 1st January Dam were not deprived of necessities and that food, shelter, and medicine were provided as much as possible given the scarcity of resources. It further submits that there is insufficient credible evidence to prove that there were deaths on a large scale due to adverse living conditions.<sup>5668</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the crime of extermination was not established because it was not proved that personnel at the 1st January Dam intended to kill the workers.<sup>5669</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submit that the Accused knew that extreme work quotas would bring suffering to the people and difficult and inhumane conditions, resulting in some cases in death.<sup>5670</sup> The Civil Party Lead Co-Lawyers submit that evidence provided by Civil Parties support a finding of extermination at the 1st January Dam.<sup>5671</sup>

1670. With regard to the actus reus, the Chamber has found that at least six to ten workers at the 1st January Dam died due to the imposition of hard labour, starvation rations, and inhospitable conditions, including an unhygienic environment and insufficient and ineffective medicine.<sup>5672</sup> Workers were forced to exceed their human limits while being deprived of food and adequate treatment when they became ill.<sup>5673</sup> Others suffered the same fate at clinics and hospitals after enduring the harsh conditions at the 1st January Dam Worksite.<sup>5674</sup> The Chamber has also found that several accidents precipitated by competition between workers occurred at the worksite wherein embankments of dirt fell upon and buried workers, killing a number of them.<sup>5675</sup> The Chamber further notes the sheer number of workers at the site, about 20,000, who were not afforded proper hygiene, food and medical treatment. The only reasonable inference is that a large number of workers died as a result of these conditions. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that all of these deaths were the result of the same murder operation and finds that in aggregate the scale element of extermination is established in the circumstances, thereby satisfying the actus reus of extermination.

1671. With respect to the mens rea of extermination, the Chamber has found that both the leadership at the worksite level and the Party Centre, including NUON Chea, knew that there was a lack of sufficient food and medicine at the 1st January Dam Worksite, but nonetheless continued to push the workers at the Dam to complete all of the dry season work as quickly as possible working night and day.<sup>5676</sup> The Chamber has also found that workers were pushed to compete against each other, which contributed to fatal incidents at the Dam. Further, with regard to deaths resulting from overwork and starvation, the Chamber has found that while inadequate, food was provided. The Chamber has further found that while inadequate and inefficient, some form of medical treatment was made available. This evidence does not show direct intent to create conditions in order to kill the workers. Rather, it shows that the workers were provided with the minimum necessary to survive and accomplish the goal of building the Dam and that the leadership was prepared to accept the risk that workers would die in the process. Recalling that the crime of extermination is incompatible with the notion of dolus eventualis,<sup>5677</sup> the Chamber finds that the requisite mens rea of extermination is not satisfied with respect to these facts. The Chamber is therefore not satisfied that the crime against humanity of extermination is established with respect to the conditions imposed at the 1st January Dam.

1672. However, as held by the Supreme Court Chamber,<sup>5678</sup> Internal Rule 98(2) provides that the Trial Chamber may change the legal characterisation of the crime as set out in the Closing Order, provided that no new constitutive elements are introduced.<sup>5679</sup> In the present case, the Chamber finds it appropriate to recharacterise the facts charged in the Closing Order concerning working and living conditions from extermination to murder. In particular, the Chamber finds that the actus reus of murder, namely an act or omission of the perpetrator that caused the death of the victim,<sup>5680</sup> is established with respect to the deaths resulting from the working and living conditions described above. In this respect, the relevant act or omission is constituted by the imposition on the workers of conditions that caused their death and by the absence of appropriate measures to change or alleviate such conditions. The acceptance of the risk of the workers' death as a result of the poor and unsafe working and living conditions satisfies the mens rea of murder in the form of dolus eventualis.

1673. The Chamber therefore concludes that the crime against humanity of murder is established in this case with respect to deaths resulting from the conditions imposed at the 1st January Dam Worksite.

11.2.24.2. Enslavement

1674. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of enslavement with respect to the intentional exercise of total control and all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over the people by the personnel of worksites, including the 1st January Dam.<sup>5681</sup> In particular, the personnel controlled the victims' physical environment, their access to food and medical care and subjected them to constant surveillance.<sup>5682</sup> In addition, the victims were forced to perform work without their consent.<sup>5683</sup>

1675. The KHIEU Samphan Defence concedes that evidence presented at trial could support the charges of slavery at the 1st January Dam.<sup>5684</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that people were mobilised to participate in the Dam's construction in conformity with every citizen's duty to participate in building the country, particularly in a state of emergency.<sup>5685</sup> It contends that the labour carried out there cannot be characterised as forced, and that "the requisition of labour from both civilians and soldiers is lawful 'in cases of emergency or calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community'".<sup>5686</sup> It further submits that in the instant case the working conditions fail to demonstrate a lack of consent, exercise of ownership over people, or unlawful restrictions on freedom of movement.<sup>5687</sup>

1676. The Co-Prosecutors submit that the CPK authorities controlled every aspect of the lives of the workers at the worksite and treated them as expendable assets. They were subject to high work quotas and appalling living and working conditions. The CPK maintained a climate of fear at the worksite in order to facilitate the ownership and domination of the CPK cadres over the dam workers. Workers were deprived of their physical liberty as unauthorised movement was punished. Workers were not entitled to any salary for the hard labour performed and were deprived of all other fundamental rights.<sup>5688</sup> The Lead Co-Lawyers submit that Civil Party evidence adduced at trial establishes that workers at the 1st January Dam Worksite were subject to the exercise of any or all powers attaching to the right of ownership over a person.<sup>5689</sup>

1677. The Chamber has found objective evidence that civilian workers were compelled to work against their will.<sup>5690</sup> In particular, it has found that workers at the 1st January Dam lacked all freedom and had no choice but to undertake hard labour without any payment.<sup>5691</sup> They were forced to work under extremely hard conditions as they feared for their lives.<sup>5692</sup> The work was arduous and required them to work in dangerous conditions.<sup>5693</sup> Even after normal work hours, workers were often required to work at night.<sup>5694</sup> Workers were overseen by armed soldiers and militiamen.<sup>5695</sup> They were warned at criticism and self-criticism meetings to finish the work or to face consequences.<sup>5696</sup> Workers feared for their lives as their cohorts disappeared without explanation, some of whom were known to have been sent to Baray Choan Dek Pagoda to be killed.<sup>5697</sup> Those who tried to avoid work were brought back to the worksite by militia.<sup>5698</sup> The circumstances can only be described as coercive. The Chamber will now consider in turn the NUON Chea Defence's submissions that the Chamber is nonetheless precluded from concluding that this amounts to forced labour.

1678. The Chamber recalls that if a person is required to work in cases of emergency or calamity, the nature and conditions of the work need to be balanced against the nature of the threat to the well-being of the community and the circumstances of the emergency.<sup>5699</sup> Furthermore, if the crisis or emergency situation is the result of the perpetrator's own unlawful activity then such measures would not be justifiable.<sup>5700</sup> In this case, the Chamber accepts that the 1st January Dam was built as an irrigation project meant to increase yields of rice.<sup>5701</sup> It was also a means of creating capital through the export of rice that could have been used to reinvest in and develop the country's economy.<sup>5702</sup> However, in assessing the need to pursue this project, the Central (old North) Zone leadership should have taken into account the conditions imposed on the workers to achieve their objective. The fact that the workers were made to work very long hours without appropriate food and appropriate living conditions clearly shows that the Central (old North) Zone leadership went far beyond simply requesting people to contribute their work in a situation of emergency, having complete disregard for the conditions imposed and their impact on the workers. The Chamber accordingly rejects the NUON Chea Defence's submissions on this point and finds that forced labour occurred at the 1st January Dam.

1680. All aspects of the workers' lives were tightly controlled by the CPK, including shelter, food, and medical care, all of which were of limited and poor quality.<sup>5706</sup> Workers grew malnourished and emaciated as the food provided to them was inadequate, which was exacerbated by the demanding work requirements.<sup>5707</sup> They were not permitted to seek out their own sources of nourishment lest they be imprisoned or killed.<sup>5708</sup> Temporary shelters lacked bedding and mosquito nets and leaked in the rain.<sup>5709</sup> Medics were poorly trained and did not dispense effective medicines.<sup>5710</sup> The workers' sexual relations were also controlled as men and women were separated and those accused of moral offences were arrested for refashioning.<sup>5711</sup>

1681. Workers were not paid and did not receive any direct benefit from their work.<sup>5712</sup> Although the Dam eventually provided water for irrigating certain districts in the Central (old North) Zone which would permit increased crop yields,<sup>5713</sup> cultivated rice was centrally controlled and some of it was exported in order to raise capital pursuant to the CPK's plan to modernise and industrialise Democratic Kampuchea.<sup>5714</sup> The CPK leadership hosted banquets for foreign delegations and work unit supervisors ensured that they ate rice instead of porridge, all while workers were starving.<sup>5715</sup> Therefore, it cannot be said that workers were forced to labour at the 1st January Dam for their own benefit. The NUON Chea Defence submission that the farmers would have experienced dire living and working conditions in any event following decades of civil war and the US bombing provides no defence to the later treatment of the workers at the 1st January Dam.<sup>5716</sup>

1682. In addition to the finding of forced labour, the Chamber considers the following factual findings as indicia of the exercise of powers attaching to the right of ownership: workers were overseen by armed militia and soldiers;<sup>5717</sup> workers were not allowed to move freely around the worksite or leave it without permission;<sup>5718</sup> the location was isolated and workers had no hope of escape;<sup>5719</sup> workers were not allowed to speak freely with one another;<sup>5720</sup> those who were accused of being enemies for engaging in any behaviour considered against the Revolution were arrested;<sup>5721</sup> workers were used to engage in dangerous tasks without protective equipment such as when they had to burn explosives which resulted in injuries and deaths;<sup>5722</sup> no compensation was paid;<sup>5723</sup> workers were assigned to sleep with their respective units and eat communally;<sup>5724</sup> and workers were required to attend criticism and self-criticism meetings.<sup>5725</sup>

1683. The Chamber is satisfied that all of these indicia considered together demonstrate that the leadership at the Dam exercised powers attaching to the right of ownership over the workers.<sup>5726</sup> Furthermore, the fact that workers did not get any payment for the work done and did not receive direct benefit from their work, indicates that the workers were used to “accrue some gain”.<sup>5727</sup> The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the actus reus of enslavement is established. Furthermore, the actions of the unit supervisors, district, sector and zone leadership, the degree of control and the prolonged duration of this treatment showed an intent to treat the workers as commodities without any consideration of their willingness to be involved at the worksite. Workers were selected by district and commune leaders, upon orders from the upper levels, to work at the 1st January Dam without any opportunity to refuse.<sup>5728</sup> The Chamber finds that the perpetrators intentionally exercised “any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership” over the workers at the 1st January Dam. The Chamber therefore rejects the NUON Chea Defence submission that the CPK intended to act benevolently.<sup>5729</sup> The mens rea of enslavement is therefore satisfied.

1684. The Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of enslavement of about at least 20,000 people at the 1st January Dam Worksite is established beyond reasonable doubt.

11.2.24.3. Persecution on political grounds

1685. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of persecution on political grounds at worksites, including the 1st January Dam, of “real or perceived enemies of the CPK”.<sup>5730</sup> The particular acts amounting to persecution must be expressly charged.<sup>5731</sup> According to the Closing Order, such enemies were subjected to harsher treatment and living conditions than the rest of the population.

1686. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the charge of persecution on political grounds is restricted to the three categories of enemy particularised in the Closing Order under the heading of “legal findings” (namely, former Khmer Republic officials, New People and Cambodians returning from abroad).<sup>5732</sup> This submission has been addressed and rejected elsewhere in this Judgement.<sup>5733</sup>

1687. The Chamber must satisfy itself that the targeted group of “real or perceived enemies of the CPK” referred to in the Closing Order is sufficiently discernible.<sup>5734</sup> The discernibility of this group may be assessed by examining whether the victims belonged to a category of the group as identified by the Party leadership.<sup>5735</sup> The Chamber finds that New People were clearly identified as enemies due to their real or perceived political beliefs or opposition to the CPK. The Chamber further recalls that former Khmer Republic officials or soldiers were identified through biographies, arrested and taken to the security office.<sup>5736</sup> Guards (militiamen) attempted to identify those who had held a certain rank and families of former civil servants and policeman were identified to be arrested.<sup>5737</sup> The Chamber is satisfied accordingly that concerning New People as well as former Khmer Republic officials and soldiers, as targeted groups of “real or perceived enemies of the CPK”, were sufficiently discernible.

1688. While conditions were harsh for most workers at the 1st January Dam, the Chamber has identified a number of ways in which New People were discriminated against at the worksite, particularly in comparison to Old People. New People were more readily reprimanded for offences or mistakes, and prevented from taking leadership positions, which further exacerbated their precarious situation.<sup>5738</sup> As the consequences of these acts were suffered by New People, the Chamber is satisfied that the acts were discriminatory in fact. With respect to mens rea, the Chamber has found that New People were under heightened scrutiny. They were reprimanded for minor offences and risked adverse consequences, such as arrest.<sup>5739</sup> Based on the treatment of New People, the message was clear to all of the workers that the reason for the discriminatory treatment of New People was because of their membership in that group.<sup>5740</sup> sufficiently trustworthy to participate in elections or attend official ceremonies at the worksite and were more readily reprimanded for offences or mistakes. Workers who were New People had to hide their affiliation, as they were in constant fear of being arrested or refashioned, because of the presence of militiamen tasked to spy on them, because of the disappearances at the Dam site of workers known as New People and because of the disappearances of their relatives who remained in the villages.<sup>5742</sup> Although the acts found above to have been discriminatory against New People do not on their own amount to independent crimes, the actus reus of persecution is nevertheless established with regard to New People.

1690. The Chamber has also found that there was a practice of identifying former LON Nol soldiers of high rank through the compilation of lists at the district and sector levels for the purposes of arresting them.<sup>5743</sup> It has found that the father of HUN Sethany was arrested and disappeared and further found credible UTH Seng's evidence that a group of workers who were former LON Nol soldiers were arrested and disappeared.<sup>5744</sup> The Chamber therefore finds that there was a specific intent to discriminate against former Khmer Republic soldiers and officials and that they suffered discrimination in fact.

1692. Therefore, the Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of persecution on political grounds is established at the 1st January Dam Worksite.

11.2.24.4. Persecution on religious grounds

1693. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of persecution on religious grounds on the basis that there was a countrywide suppression of the Cham, including at the 1st January Dam. The practice of Islam was forbidden and Cham people were forced to eat pork. Religious leaders and learned Islamic scholars were arrested and killed.<sup>5749</sup>

1694. The Chamber recalls that several witnesses associated with the 1st January Dam testified as to the disappearance or killing of Cham families in villages in the Central (old North) Zone.<sup>5750</sup> These facts were not charged with regard to the 1st January Dam and therefore the Accused were not on notice of these charges.<sup>5751</sup> The Chamber will not enter findings in relation to these incidents.<sup>5752</sup>

1695. The Chamber has found that Cham workers at the 1st January Dam suffered discrimination as they were forced to eat pork, they were prevented from worshipping and speaking their native tongue.<sup>5753</sup> In light of the above, the Chamber is satisfied that these restrictions were discriminatory in fact and deliberately perpetrated with the intent to discriminate against the Cham because of their religious and cultural practices.<sup>5754</sup> Therefore, the mens rea of the crime is established.

1696. Acts committed against these groups of workers infringed upon and violated their fundamental rights pertaining to freedom of religion as enshrined in customary international law.<sup>5755</sup> Furthermore, there was no evidence presented that these restrictions were necessary to protect the public safety, order, health, morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.<sup>5756</sup> The above-noted acts at the 1st January

<sup>5752</sup> The Chamber notes that it has made findings regarding treatment of the Cham in other villages in the old (North) Zone that were not associated with the 1st January Dam. See Section 13.2.6.2: Restrictions on Cham Religious and Cultural Practices in the Central (old North) Zone.

Dam which were discriminatory against Cham people do not amount to independent crimes. Considered together and within the context these acts were committed, the Chamber is satisfied that they cumulatively rise to the requisite level of severity such as to constitute persecution. Therefore, the actus reus of the crime is established. Accordingly, the Chamber is satisfied that the restrictions on religious and cultural Cham practices at the 1st January Dam constituted persecution on religious grounds.<sup>5757</sup>

11.2.24.5. Other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity

1698. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity on the basis that workers at the 1st January Dam Worksite were deprived by CPK authorities of adequate food, shelter, medical attention and sanitation, which inflicted on victims serious mental and physical suffering and injury as well as serious attacks on human dignity.<sup>5758</sup>

1699. The KHIEU Samphan Defence concedes that there is evidence that could support the conclusion that conditions of life at the 1st January Dam, including hunger, sickness, and overwork led to deaths at the worksite.<sup>5759</sup> It emphasises however that certain measures were taken to place sick persons in hospitals, to treat them with traditional and modern medicines, and notes that other measures were taken to improve the hygienic conditions at the site (such as spraying insecticide).<sup>5760</sup>

1700. The NUON Chea Defence submits that “to the extent that living and working conditions may have been difficult, they were not deliberately imposed on the people, but a regrettable reality of the general situation of the country [...] despite the undertaking of all feasible efforts to ensure reasonable conditions”.<sup>5761</sup> It submits that the accounts of upper and middle-class Cambodian refugees are unreliable because these people were “unused to life outside the cities”, noting that the poverty in which many Cambodians lived and the large number who still do not have piped water.<sup>5762</sup> It is submitted that the 1st January Dam was a legitimate and fully functioning project and that living and working conditions were much like those in Cambodia prior to 1975.<sup>5763</sup> The NUON Chea Defence further submits that the evidence was insufficient to establish a general practice of physical punishment.<sup>5764</sup>

1701. The NUON Chea Defence submits that unit chiefs exerted wide discretion in determining what breaks to give workers, how to care for the sick, how to organise food, discipline and punishment.<sup>5765</sup> Conditions varied based upon the individual unit chief and generalisations cannot be made based upon the evidence of individual witnesses.<sup>5766</sup> However, the NUON Chea Defence contends that “the CPK had clear guidelines on working hours, none of which came even close to enslavement or mistreatment”.<sup>5767</sup>

1702. The Co-Prosecutors submit that the Accused knew that there were food and medicine shortages and nonetheless pushed a famished population to work even harder to build more and bigger dams.<sup>5768</sup> The Accused ensured the implementation of the three-tonnes-per-hectare policy and the building of dams and canals at the pace expected by the Party.<sup>5769</sup> The 1st January Dam was designated as a “hot battlefield” where a number of workers had to work through the night carrying earth.<sup>5770</sup>

1703. The Chamber has found that workers at the 1st January Dam suffered from malnourishment and became emaciated because they were deprived of adequate food.<sup>5771</sup> Seeking out supplemental food sources was forbidden upon pain of imprisonment or death.<sup>5772</sup> Workers suffered pangs of hunger through the night and grew weak.<sup>5773</sup> Some women ceased menstruating or suffered irregular menstruation due to the lack of food.<sup>5774</sup> Shelters lacked bedding and mosquito nets and leaked in the rain, rendering workers cold, wet and miserable.<sup>5775</sup> The drinking water was muddy and unsanitary and many workers contracted dysentery, leading some to die.<sup>5776</sup> Numerous witnesses spoke of swarms of black flies throughout the worksite which contaminated food and spread illness.<sup>5777</sup> Due to these harsh conditions, many workers suffered from debilitating illnesses and pain throughout their bodies as their health deteriorated.<sup>5778</sup> Medics were ill equipped to deal with disease as they were poorly trained and did not dispense effective medicines.<sup>5779</sup> Some workers fainted from the overexertion and lack of nutrition.<sup>5780</sup> Others grew night blind and were forced to continue working.<sup>5781</sup> Shoes and clothing were not provided in sufficient quantities to satisfy the workers basic needs.<sup>5782</sup> The Chamber finds that these conditions caused serious mental or physical suffering or injury to the victims and further constituted a serious attack on their human dignity. The Chamber also finds that evidence shows the serious and lasting impact of the working and living conditions on the victims and finds that the relevant conduct is of similar gravity to the enumerated crimes against humanity. The Chamber finds that the actus reus of the crime is therefore satisfied.

1704. The manifest inadequacy of medical treatment and pest mitigation only highlight the inhumane and inhospitable living conditions that persisted at the 1st January Dam. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submissions in this regard are therefore rejected.<sup>5783</sup>

1705. Life at the 1st January Dam Worksite imposed hardships on all people. The Chamber heard numerous accounts of farmers and Base People who uniformly agreed that conditions at the worksite were inhumane, regardless of whether they were accustomed to rural living conditions. The fact that the 1st January Dam in the end was used for irrigation does not legally justify the means used to complete the project. Further, responsibility for the mistreatment of workers cannot be blamed upon the work unit supervisors alone. As discussed above, the Party Centre was aware of the living and working conditions at the worksite and yet imposed strict and demanding timelines for the completion of the 1st January Dam. CPK guidelines limiting workhours did not clearly apply to “hot battlefields” and were routinely disregarded in order to achieve these deadlines.<sup>5784</sup> Despite the trust the CPK Party Centre placed in KE Pauk, there was no evidence that the Party Centre had ordered KE Pauk to limit work hours or to remediate working conditions at the 1st January site. Therefore, the Chamber rejects the NUON Chea Defence submissions.<sup>5785</sup>

1706. These conditions were imposed for a prolonged period of time and communicated upward through the chain of command through regular reports to district and sector leaders as well as to the Zone Secretary KE Pauk.<sup>5786</sup> KE Pauk in turn informed the CPK Standing Committee through at least one telegram.<sup>5787</sup> By continuing to insist upon the deadline for the completion of the 1st January Dam and by taking no meaningful or effective measures to remediate the inhumane conditions at the worksite, the CPK Upper Echelon intentionally imposed such conditions upon thousands of workers at the worksite.<sup>5788</sup> The mens rea of the crime is accordingly also established.

11.2.24.6. Other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances

1708. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances at the 1st January Dam. DK authorities concealed the fate of individuals who had disappeared by ensuring that witnesses did not reveal information about them. The authorities provided false reasons to justify the absence of those who disappeared. The disappearance of these persons caused victims to endure “great suffering, or serious mental suffering or injury or a serious attack on human dignity” due both to the arrest, detention or abduction of loved ones which placed them outside the protection of the law and to the refusal to provide access to or convey information about their fate.<sup>5789</sup>

1709. The NUON Chea Defence asserts that there is no credible evidence of illegal deprivation of liberty or concealing of information in this regard by the DK authorities at the 1st January Dam.<sup>5790</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence does not make particular submissions regarding the charges of other inhumane acts of enforced disappearances at the 1st January Dam, although it concedes that other inhumane acts, understood as an all-encompassing category, may have occurred at that crime site.<sup>5791</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submit that workers were called to attend meetings or to study, or were tied up and taken away into trucks or oxcarts, in effect disappearing. They submit that disappearance applied notably to people who did not obey orders and that many of them were New People.<sup>5792</sup> The Lead Co-Lawyers identify the evidence of one Civil Party who testified as to enforced disappearances at the 1st January Dam.<sup>5793</sup>

1710. The Chamber has found that dozens of individuals disappeared from the 1st January Dam Worksite, many of whom were sent to the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda.<sup>5794</sup> There was also evidence of workers being arrested by soldiers and militia and disappearing from the 1st January Dam.<sup>5795</sup> Some unit supervisors suggested that these individuals had been sent to other locations such as other districts or worksites.<sup>5796</sup> However, those who were arrested, amounting to a large number of individuals, were never heard from again.<sup>5797</sup> The Chamber is accordingly satisfied that these individuals were deprived of their liberty. Workers were forced to rely on what they overheard to try to ascertain the fate of those arrested as their unit supervisors did not provide concrete information.<sup>5798</sup> When information was provided, the Chamber has found that supervisors, including work unit chiefs working under the auspices of the CPK, disingenuously told those who inquired that the arrested workers had been sent to other worksites or districts.<sup>5799</sup> As set out above,<sup>5800</sup> the fact that many workers were no longer seen by their co-workers generated in them extreme anxiety and contributed to the creation of a general climate of fear which affected the workers emotionally. Witnessing the arrests and disappearances at the worksite made the workers fear that they would also be accused of being enemies and taken away, particularly to the Baray Choan Dek Pagoda, where workers feared others were taken to be killed. The Chamber is accordingly satisfied that these enforced disappearances caused serious mental suffering. The Chamber considers all of these acts holistically and in the context of the general atmosphere at the worksite, together with the impact of these acts on the victims, to conclude that the relevant acts are of the similar gravity as the other crimes against humanity. The actus reus of the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances is therefore established.

1711. The manner in which the arrests were made, often in the context of criticism meetings, shows that these acts were performed intentionally with at least the goal of perpetuating an atmosphere of fear amongst the other workers. Having considered the widespread, consistent and repeated occurrence of these disappearances, the Chamber concludes that the conduct which caused great suffering to the victims was performed intentionally. The mens rea of the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances is therefore satisfied.

characterised as enforced disappearances at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield.<sup>5801</sup> The Closing Order finds that the Airfield was under the control of RAK Centre Division 502, and that it was used to purge and temper RAK members, from Division 502 and other divisions, considered to be “bad elements”.<sup>5802</sup>

11.3.2. Preliminary Issues

1714. The KHIEU Samphan Defence makes a number of general submissions concerning the facts and the crimes charged in connection with Kampong Chhnang Airfield which the Chamber finds appropriate to address at the outset. In particular, the KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the Closing Order mistakenly charges a number of crimes on the basis of facts that were not mentioned in the Introductory Submission. These include the killing of workers from the East Zone at Mongol Khan Pagoda in Tuol Kpos village after 6 January 1979 charged as murder;<sup>5803</sup> the deaths caused by work-related accidents, illness or exhaustion charged as extermination;<sup>5804</sup> and the lack of medical care at the worksite which formed part of the conditions of life charged as other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity.<sup>5805</sup> The Chamber notes that the KHIEU Samphan Defence did not raise these issues as part of its preliminary objections.<sup>5806</sup> Therefore, the Chamber finds that these arguments have been raised outside of the time limit set by Internal Rule 89 and rejects them as belated.<sup>5807</sup> While the facts that occurred after 6 January 1979 are beyond the temporal jurisdiction of the ECCC, the Chamber recalls that it may rely on evidence that falls outside of the temporal or geographic scope of the Closing Order for certain purposes.<sup>5808</sup> The Chamber will therefore deal with the evidence related to the execution of workers from the East Zone at Mongol Khan Pagoda in Tuol Kpos village in accordance with such principles.<sup>5809</sup>

<sup>5801</sup> Closing Order, paras 1373-1374, 1377, 1379-1380 (murder), 1381-1383, 1387-1390 (extermination), 1391-1396 (enslavement), 1416, 1418 (political persecution), 1434-1435, 1437, 1439-1440 (other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity), 1470-1478 (other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances). The Chamber notes that the Closing Order, despite using the word “airport”, indicates that Kampong Chhnang Construction Site “was a military construction site and almost all the workers, men and women, had been RAK members” (see Closing Order, para. 389). The Chamber notes that the NUON Chea Defence indicates in its Closing Brief that: “Despite the Closing Order’s use of ‘airport’, the Defence will use ‘airfield’ instead as it considers this description more factually accurate in light of the military nature of the site” (see NUON Chea Closing Brief, para. 973, fn. 3237). The Co-Prosecutors also use consistently the term “airfield” in their Closing Briefs (see Co-Prosecutors’ Closing Brief, paras 1168-1209). The Chamber, based on the Parties’ arguments and its own analysis of the nature of this construction site illustrated below, also uses the term “Airfield” to describe the worksite at Kampong Chhnang.

1715. With respect to the KHIEU Samphan Defence's submissions regarding other inhumane acts,<sup>5810</sup> the Chamber has recognised that none of the categories of conduct underlying the charged crime of other inhumane acts, including attacks against human dignity and enforced disappearances, had crystallised as independent crimes against humanity by 1975.<sup>5811</sup> For this reason, as illustrated below, it has proceeded to assess all relevant facts against the definition of other inhumane acts and not of the underlying conduct as an independent crime.<sup>5812</sup>

1716. Finally, the KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the facts related to the transfer of workers from the Kampong Chhnang Airfield to S-21 are not relevant with respect to the charges of murder, as the death of those transferred is not alleged in the relevant parts of the Closing Order.<sup>5813</sup> The Chamber agrees that the killing of workers transferred to S-21 is not alleged in the specific section of the Closing Order which supports the charges of murder at Kampong Chhnang Airfield.<sup>5814</sup> The Chamber clarifies that the fate of workers sent to S-21 may have some relevance concerning the existence of a general policy to purge enemies including with regard to events which occurred at Kampong Chhnang Airfield, but any findings related to the killing of workers at S-21 are made in the relevant section on Security Centres.<sup>5815</sup> The Chamber therefore limits its analysis with respect to this crime site to whether the facts related to the arrest and transfer of workers to S-21 amount to the crime of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances.

11.3.3. General Considerations on Evidence

1717. The Chamber heard seven witnesses<sup>5816</sup> and two Civil Parties<sup>5817</sup> on the topic of the Kampong Chhnang Airfield construction site.

1718. The Chamber finds certain parts of Witness CHAN Morn's evidence to be inconsistent with the preponderance of the evidence in this trial. This concerns specifically his purported escape from S-21. In particular, the Chamber notes that the description he provides of S-21 is inconsistent with the other evidence heard by the Chamber on this security centre. Consequently, the Chamber approaches his evidence with particular caution and relies on it only where it is corroborated by other evidence.

1719. The Chamber finds the evidence provided by Civil Party CHUM Samoeurn unconvincing due to the numerous inconsistencies between her Civil Party application and her live testimony.<sup>5818</sup> The Chamber recalls its position on the limited probative value attributable to Civil Party Applications,<sup>5819</sup> and notes that CHUM Samoeurn indicated that she did not read the content of the statements reported in her application before signing it.<sup>5820</sup> While in similar situations the Chamber has given more weight to the statements made in court,<sup>5821</sup> it notes that the Civil Party at times contradicted herself and was unable to provide a satisfactory explanation for the discrepancies in her in-court statements.<sup>5822</sup> Further, the Civil Party was often confused in her recollection

<sup>5818</sup> The Chamber noted the following inconsistencies in CHUM Samoeurn's statements: first, in her Civil Party application, the Civil Party said that her brothers were killed by Comrade Pet because they were considered enemy agents (E3/6160, at ERN (En) 00842140). Conversely, in court she stated first that she did not know who killed her brothers and denied having given a statement related to their death (see T. 24 June 2015 (CHUM Samoeurn), E1/321.1, p. 72), and later that her older brothers were not killed by Pet (see T. 24 June 2015 (CHUM Samoeurn), E1/321.1, p. 73). Second, in her Civil Party application, she indicated that prior to 17 April 1975 she was a medic in Division 502 (E3/6160, at ERN (En) 00842140), while in court she stated that she was never a medic or a nurse (see T. 24 June 2015 (CHUM Samoeurn), E1/321.1, pp. 74, 84). Third, in her Civil Party application, she said she was ordered by Angkar to investigate the background of all the soldiers (E3/6160 at ERN (En) 00842140), whereas in court she stated that she was never instructed to do so as she did not have the authority to perform such an action (see T. 24 June 2015 (CHUM Samoeurn), E1/321.1, p. 84). Confronted with her contradictory statements as to her re-education, the Civil Party's response was evasive and unclear (see T. 24 June 2015 (CHUM Samoeurn), E1/321.1, pp. 83-84). Finally, it appears that the Civil Party did not read her statement before signing it (see T. 24 June 2015 (CHUM Samoeurn), E1/321.1, pp. 84-85).

<sup>5822</sup> The Chamber notes that in court the Civil Party indicated that when she was transferred to Kampong Chhnang Airfield she was considered a prisoner due to her bad biography (see T. 24 June 2015 (CHUM of the events, many of which concerned her personally.<sup>5823</sup> The Chamber has, therefore, approached this Civil Party's testimony with caution and only relies on it for corroboration when it is largely consistent with that of other witnesses.

1720. Three other witnesses and one other Civil Party heard during other trial topics also provided information on the Kampong Chhnang Airfield construction site.<sup>5824</sup> The Chamber has also considered a number of other out-of-court statements and written records of interview of witnesses who were heard by OCIJ investigators, but did not subsequently testify in court. The probative value of these statements has been assessed in accordance with the principles set out above in the sections of this Judgement addressing the assessment of the evidence.<sup>5825</sup>

<sup>5865</sup> The Chamber notes that all of the witnesses who testified on the Kampong Chhnang Airfield construction site came from Divisions 502, 310 and 450. responsibility and with supervising the workers.<sup>5868</sup> The Chamber notes in this respect that many witnesses testified that their chiefs and supervisors were from the Southwest Zone.<sup>5869</sup> Based on the testimonies of KHIN Vat and NUON Trech, the Chamber concludes that the cadres from the Southwest Zone referred to by the witnesses when they testified about their supervisors were in fact cadres from Division 502.<sup>5870</sup> However, those members of Division 502 who were considered “bad elements” were sent to the Airfield as part of the workforce. For example, the Chamber heard evidence from KEO Kin that, after having worked as a messenger and a bodyguard for Lvey from 1972 to 1975,<sup>5871</sup> he was alleged to have a connection to the previous regime because his father had been a former deputy of a village. Lvey thus lost trust in the witness and KEO Kin was prohibited from working closely with him. He was first assigned to clear the land and guard a food supply warehouse at the Pochentong market and subsequently, in February 1976, was sent to Kampong Chhnang Airfield to work at the garage.<sup>5872</sup> KHIN Vat testified that she believed that she was sent to the Airfield because her husband was alleged to have had affiliations with the Vietnamese and had been “removed”.<sup>5873</sup> Similarly, CHUM Samoeurn indicated that she was sent to work

The Chamber does not consider KHIN Vat’s statement that she was still “attached to Division 502” when she escaped the Vietnamese to be in contradiction with the other statements by the same witness and the evidence provided by other witnesses on this point. The Chamber considers that those sent to Kampong Chhnang Airfield were all soldiers who were in fact treated as laborers once assigned to work there. However, as there was no formal demotion, it appears possible that some of the workers/soldiers considered themselves still attached to the RAK, which would explain KHIN Vat’s statement. See also, Case 001 Transcript (KAING Guek Eav), E3/7477, 15 September 2009, p. 83, ERN (En) 00377742 (“Let me state again that the people who were transferred into the unit at the airfield was already decided as partly a prison already so their status was like the status of those who were sent to Prey Sar”); T. 27 July 2016 (MOENG Vet), E1/449.1, p. 96 (“The cadres who had been removed from their duties were sent to Kampong Chhnang airfield to break rock”).

uniforms,<sup>5888</sup> others testified either that black clothing was not a military uniform or that during the DK period everyone, including ordinary villagers, militiamen and soldiers, wore black.<sup>5889</sup> The Chamber notes that workers at Kampong Chhnang Airfield wore various clothes, and it is unable to conclusively establish whether the black clothing worn by some of the workers was considered a military uniform. However, it is satisfied that the evidence consistently demonstrates that the workers at the construction site were all soldiers who were reassigned from their respective units to perform manual work at the Airfield where they were considered as simple labourers until a decision was made, if any, that they were sufficiently refashioned to be trusted again and able to be reintegrated within the armed forces fighting against Vietnam.<sup>5890</sup>

The Closing Order indicates that “Kampong Chhnang Airport Construction Site functioned as one of the means of implementation of the purge process of RAK members as it was used as a tempering site for RAK members considered as ‘bad elements’ from Division 502 itself or from other divisions or military units”.<sup>5891</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that the witnesses who claimed they were sent to the Airfield to be tempered “failed to identify any DK authority or document explicitly stating that their transfer to the Airfield was punishment”,<sup>5892</sup> and that their assertions of being sent to labour as a form of punishment are “personal conclusion[s]” not based on any objective source.<sup>5893</sup> The Chamber rejects the NUON Chea Defence’s submissions on this point as the evidence clearly shows that the workers were told by Khmer Rouge cadres they had to work to refashion themselves because they were traitors or their former chiefs were traitors and that in fact they were made to work hard.<sup>5894</sup> Witness NUON Trech in particular testified that at the Airfield his chief held a meeting and said that the workers “were the offenders and that we had to strive to work hard to temper ourselves. And if we cannot catch up with the history, then we might be punished further.”<sup>5895</sup> This consistent evidence is sufficient to establish that soldiers were sent to the Airfield to be punished for their alleged enemy affiliations.

1735. The Chamber finds that, as indicated by the NUON Chea Defence,<sup>5896</sup> the Airfield was intended as a military project and its construction was assigned to Division 502 at a time in which the purges had not started yet.<sup>5897</sup> At the beginning of its construction in early 1976, only a small group of Division 502 soldiers and Chinese technicians were assigned to the worksite.<sup>5898</sup> Trusted people from Division 502 were assigned roles of responsibility,<sup>5899</sup> whereas those considered “bad elements” were assigned to be part of the workforce.<sup>5900</sup> The Chamber heard consistent evidence that once the purges of the North and East Zones started in 1977 and 1978, the worksite was filled with people considered enemies who were deprived of their status and sent to labour to be tempered and refashioned. In this regard, KEO Kin explained that to his understanding, “some soldiers were sent to work there as part of their military duties while others were there when they were being disciplined and they were sent there for refashioning”.<sup>5901</sup> The Chamber finds, therefore, that at the Airfield a distinction existed

1737. Workers were engaged in a number of different tasks including breaking rocks,<sup>5903</sup> pulling grass and digging pits,<sup>5904</sup> carrying earth and cement,<sup>5905</sup> cutting trees and uprooting them.<sup>5906</sup> Manual labour was mostly employed to transport rocks from the mountain to the worksite, which was less than one kilometre away.<sup>5907</sup>

1738. 1740. The NUON Chea Defence submits that “the lowest level authorities – unit or group chiefs – had a lot of discretion on the living and working conditions, which varied widely from unit to unit”.<sup>5923</sup> The Chamber concurs that there were differences among units with respect to working hours, rest times and food rations. At the same time, the Chamber has established that instructions related to the work plan were passed through the chain of command by SOU Met to Lvey, and were then relayed to the unit chiefs who, in turn, instructed the workers in their units.<sup>5924</sup> This finding is corroborated by the evidence of CHAN Morn, a unit chief who testified that instructions relating to the tasks to be completed, their location and the number of people to be assigned to them, as well as to the amount of food and medicines to be provided to the workers, were relayed by Lvey to him orally.<sup>5925</sup> In light of the above, the Chamber concludes that while general instructions on work assignments, food and health were provided by the worksite leadership to the unit chiefs, the latter also enjoyed a margin of discretion in determining how to meet the working targets and regulate the workers' working and living conditions at the Airfield.

1741. The NUON Chea Defence also contends that, contrary to what is stated in the Closing Order,<sup>5926</sup> there is no evidence that different working and living conditions were imposed on the workers "depending on 'how much of a traitor' they were perceived to be".<sup>5927</sup> While there is no direct evidence of orders or directives explicitly aimed at implementing differentiated treatment among the workers on the basis of such perception, the Chamber finds that the available evidence concerning the working conditions indicates that those workers considered "bad elements" or enemies were subjected to harsher treatment than the loyal Division 502 soldiers and cadres. In this sense, the Chamber recognises, as pointed out by the NUON Chea Defence,<sup>5928</sup> that CHAN Morn, a trusted member of Division 502, worked alongside East Zone workers to cut and collect trees in the forest. The Chamber notes, however, that he did so in a supervisory position.<sup>5929</sup> Furthermore, CHAN Morn testified that when he was initially assigned to accompany the Chinese to survey and take measurements at the Airfield, he would stay with them at the Chan Sari barracks where the workers' supervisors also stayed, whereas the workers would sleep inside the worksite "where they were dropped to work".<sup>5930</sup>

1742. Workers from Divisions 310 and 450 were subjected to longer working hours.<sup>5931</sup> Some witnesses have also indicated that the units assigned to the dangerous

And when I arrived at the location I just relayed the instruction from him to the people there. And the same thing applied when I went to collect medicine, and he never issued me any letter of authorisation at all. He only gave me his instructions verbatim and there was nothing else. The same rule applied when I was assigned to lead workers to complete tasks in various locations. He just told me what tasks to be completed, how many people would go with me and where to go.").

task of breaking rocks were the ones from the East Zone, suggesting that the worksite authorities did not care if those workers died while carrying out the assignment.<sup>5932</sup> As discussed in more detail below, workers from Divisions 310, 450 and from the East Zone were arrested following allegations of treason within their ranks. The Chamber concludes that they were subjected to longer working hours as punishment for their association with Divisions considered as traitorous.

1743. The Chamber rejects the NUON Chea Defence's submission that Division 310 workers were assigned to work closely with the Chinese experts on technical tasks in the same way as Division 502 members.<sup>5933</sup> The Chamber notes that, of the witnesses referred to by the NUON Chea Defence,<sup>5934</sup> CHAN Morn and KEO Kin belonged to Division 502.<sup>5935</sup> KEO Loeur, who belonged to Division 310,<sup>5936</sup> was assigned to work on the terrain surveying section after having completed a training in Phnom Penh. However, it is not clear from the evidence that the terrain surveying section was composed of Chinese technicians at the time the witness was assigned to work there, as terrain surveying was undertaken by the Chinese when the construction of the Airfield began.<sup>5937</sup> The witness was sent there only after having been re-educated, which indicates that he may not have been considered an enemy or a bad element anymore, despite his provenance from the allegedly traitorous Division 310.<sup>5938</sup> In fact, the testimony of SEM Hoeurn, the only member of Division 310 referred to by the NUON Chea Defence, only indicates that Chinese experts were placed within working units to supervise the workers and provide them with advice on how to best clear the land and

Workers could not refuse to work, otherwise they would be accused of being an enemy, would disappear or would be threatened.<sup>5940</sup> Specifically, they were told that those who disobeyed instructions would be removed or killed.<sup>5941</sup> Workers were afraid of being killed if they did not work hard.<sup>5942</sup> On the basis of this evidence, the Chamber finds that the workers were forced to work.

1745. Workers did not get any payment for the work done.<sup>5943</sup> They worked every single day of the month without the possibility of taking any day off.<sup>5944</sup> The working conditions were very demanding.<sup>5945</sup> The workers also had to work when it was

They did not have access to clear drinking water.<sup>5954</sup>

1749. With regard to hygiene, workers did not have soap to wash their hands or bodies.<sup>5955</sup> There was neither a toilet nor a proper bathroom and people had to relieve themselves in the nearby forest.<sup>5956</sup> The area where workers lived and worked was not regularly cleaned.<sup>5957</sup>

1750. Workers developed a number of diseases, including malaria,<sup>5958</sup> and suffered from symptoms such as swollen limbs, high temperature and fever.<sup>5959</sup> A number of witnesses believed that workers became sick due to the hot weather and the exhaustion.<sup>5960</sup> KONG Siek explained that the cement she had to carry was too heavy for her and stated:

Similarly, CHUM Samoeurn explained that when her menstruation was interrupted she was accused of being pregnant and that she had abdominal pain, which affected her physically and emotionally.<sup>5962</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that the hard work had a serious negative impact on the physical and psychological condition of the workers at the Airfield.

The Chamber notes that some workers were treated with modern medicines and others with traditional medicines.

The Chamber does not place relevance on KEO Kin’s statement that there were no medics at the Airfield (see T. 11 June 2015 (KEO Kin), E1/314.1, p. 31). While KEO Kin’s testimony may be an accurate representation of the witness’ personal experience at the worksite, this does not reflect the overall situation as described by the consistent evidence of the other witnesses who testified that medics were in fact present at the Airfield.

<sup>5968</sup> T. 7 December 2016 (NUON Trech), E1/508.1, p. 18. The Chamber has made general findings about the medical treatment provided during the DK period in the Trapeang Thma Dam section of this Judgement. See Section 11.1.8.5.1: Trapeang Thma Dam Worksite: CPK Approach to Health.

workplace,<sup>5970</sup> in halls or shelters.<sup>5971</sup> Mats and mosquito nets were not provided in some units,<sup>5972</sup> but were in others.<sup>5973</sup> Workers normally slept on the floor.<sup>5974</sup>

1754. In light of the above, the Chamber finds that the living conditions, including insufficient nutrition, lack of hygiene and extremely poor sanitary conditions, were inadequate to sustain the workers in the assignments they had to undertake.

11.3.9. Injuries and Deaths resulting from Working and Living Conditions

1755. Those who worked at the rock breaking unit sometimes got injured because rock fragments hit them after an explosion, despite the fact that a wall was built in order to protect them.<sup>5975</sup> KEO Kin testified that he saw workers who were hit by rock fragments and died on the spot.<sup>5976</sup> NUON Trech, who was assigned to cut rocks in order to install the explosive in the hole,<sup>5977</sup> testified that he personally saw wounded workers who were taken away to the hospital. However, he did not know whether they subsequently died or survived.<sup>5978</sup> Witness HIM Han, a worker from Division 310 who was assigned to transport rocks, testified that there were no protection kits for workers engaged in breaking rocks and that people were killed by the rock fragments.<sup>5979</sup> He also explained that the lighting wire of the explosive was short, so the person tasked with igniting it would not have time to find shelter from the explosion in time.<sup>5980</sup> The witness also testified that a worker injured by the rock fragments would be carried to the ambulance if it came on time. Otherwise, “that individual would be left alone like animal”.<sup>5981</sup> HIM Han indicated that “people died from the fragments of the rock almost every day” showing that a large number of people were involved in this type of accident.<sup>5982</sup> Based on this evidence, the Chamber concludes that many people died as a result of the explosions and insufficient safety precautions, including the lack of protective gear.

1756. Witnesses also indicated that these forms of hard labour were used as a “method of execution” against people considered “bad elements”.<sup>5983</sup> In his statement to the OCIJ investigators, SRUN Chey clarified that the task of breaking rocks was given to people with bad backgrounds, namely those from the East Zone.<sup>5984</sup> HIM Han testified that workers from the East Zone were assigned to use explosives to break the rocks as this was a particularly dangerous activity which often caused the death of the people assigned to do it.<sup>5985</sup> The Chamber finds that the breaking of rocks was highly risky for the workers involved. In addition, the lack of protective gear and the manner in which the explosions were triggered allows the Chamber to conclude that the lives and physical security of those involved in these activities were at the very least considered as expendable.

1757. In addition to accidents connected with the rock breaking, many workers at the Airfield were injured or died as a result of other accidents.<sup>5986</sup> The injured workers were taken to the Kampong Chhnang hospital.<sup>5987</sup>

1758. Some workers died from overwork and starvation.<sup>5988</sup> There was no ritual ceremony for the deceased;<sup>5989</sup> the dead body would simply be buried.<sup>5990</sup>

1759. The Chamber notes that the Closing Order charges that suicides of workers occurred on a weekly basis, based on the evidence of CHAN Morn.<sup>5991</sup> The Chamber heard evidence by CHAN Morn and KHIN Vat on this issue and notes that both of them provided hearsay evidence.<sup>5992</sup> The Chamber notes that the conditions at the worksite were so appalling that the occurrence of suicides would have been unsurprising. However, the available evidence is not sufficient to support a finding beyond reasonable doubt that suicides occurred.

1760. During Closing Statements, the NUON Chea Defence contended that the Co-

The witness did not see the woman walking into the roller but he was told by a colleague that that was what had happened); T. 29 July 2015 (KHIN Vat), E1/325.1, pp. 80-81 (explaining that she heard of a young worker who ran into a truck and was thus killed. The witness heard about this accident from a rock transportation driver who told his mates that a young worker suddenly ran into his truck and that he could not press the brake in time so the person was killed. KHIN Vat also heard of another person working at the truck garage who hung himself).

Prosecutors had failed to prove any causal link between alleged deaths and the working or living conditions at cooperatives and worksites.<sup>5993</sup> The Chamber rejects this contention considering that the evidence reviewed above clearly shows that at Kampong Chhnang Airfield workers died as a direct result of those conditions, including from explosions, fatal accidents, overwork and lack of food.

11.3.10. Meetings

1761. Meetings were held regularly in each unit.<sup>5994</sup> They were chaired by the unit chiefs.<sup>5995</sup> The nature of the meetings varied, and included criticism and self-criticism meetings,<sup>5996</sup> as well as meetings where workers were instructed to work hard and complete their tasks under threat that they would be killed or refashioned if they did not.<sup>5997</sup> At meetings workers were told that they had to be tempered because their

<sup>5994</sup> Witnesses' accounts differ as to the frequency of these meetings, ranging from every day (SRUN Chey Interview Record, E3/5526, 11 December 2009, p. 5, ERN (En) 00426310) to once every three days (see T. 7 December 2016 (NUON Trech), E1/508.1, p. 19). The Chamber notes in particular a report made by Ren on the activities of Division 170 in Kampong Chhnang Airfield, where it is indicated that "[a] number of combatants pretend to be lazy to perform their work, and some were lazy to attend the meetings. They say there is no point holding a meeting every day and they are so lazy; they do not care wherever they will be taken to". See Report on Division 170, E3/1182, 6 July 1977, ERN (En) 00598174 (emphasis added). The Chamber does not consider HIM Han's statement that there were no meetings at the Airfield (see T. 23 June 2015 (HIM Han), E1/320.1, p. 89) to undermine the consistent evidence provided by the other witnesses that meetings were held regularly at the worksite. The Chamber considers it possible that HIM Han's unit did not hold any meetings, and that therefore, while the witness' statement reflects his personal experience, it is not indicative of the overall situation at the worksite.

11.3.11. Chinese Support and Presence

1762. China and Cambodia had a strong relationship during the DK period and China provided extensive support and assistance to Cambodia.<sup>5999</sup> In the context of official visits and meetings between the two countries' leaders, both China and Cambodia described their relationship as one between "comrades-in-arms"<sup>6000</sup> or "brothers in arms".<sup>6001</sup> Chinese leaders paid visits to Cambodia on several occasions.<sup>6002</sup> CPK leaders similarly travelled to China to attend meetings.<sup>6003</sup>

Some of them engage in construction work and some others are helping the Cambodians to fight on the battlefields. They number more than 1,500.").

China provided substantial support in building the Airfield at Kampong Chhnang.<sup>6005</sup> Heavy machinery was brought from China, including bulldozers, trucks, vehicles, earth-carrying baskets, steel and other materials which arrived at Kampong Som and were sent to the Kampong Chhnang Airfield worksite.<sup>6006</sup> Advisers and technicians also came from China and assisted in the construction of the Airfield.<sup>6007</sup>

1764. At the inception of the Airfield construction, a group of Chinese came to test the soil and measure the terrain.<sup>6008</sup> Lvey usually accompanied the Chinese visitors at the worksite.<sup>6009</sup>

1765. Chinese technicians and engineers were present at the construction site.<sup>6010</sup> They worked together with the Khmer people and would sometimes give instructions directly to the workers,<sup>6011</sup> or show them how to do a task while the workers observed.<sup>6012</sup> KHIN Vat testified that Chinese technicians together with cadres from Division 502 surveyed the construction of the runways, the water routes, the installation of electrical wires and

1768. Within the worksite, workers were under constant surveillance by guards or their unit chiefs.<sup>6026</sup> In this regard, KEO Loeur testified that unarmed guards wearing a military uniform were assigned to watch over a group of 30 or 40 workers.<sup>6027</sup> The witness also explained that he saw the security guards on patrol only at night time at around 8 or 9 p.m. and that they wore khaki uniforms.<sup>6028</sup> SEM Hoern testified that unit chiefs would constantly watch over the workers to check if they were engaged in the work or if anyone was absent from work.<sup>6029</sup> While the Chamber approaches SEM Hoern's evidence with caution, it accepts his evidence on this point as it is corroborated by that of Civil Party CHHAE Heap.<sup>6030</sup>

11.3.12.2. Arrests and disappearances

1771. The Chamber heard evidence regarding arrests and disappearances of workers. In certain cases, workers simply disappeared with no notice and were never seen again at the worksite; in others, the workers were seen to be arrested following which they disappeared or were transferred to S-21. The Chamber assesses these in turn below.

1772. Numerous workers disappeared and were never seen again at the worksite by their fellow workers.<sup>6041</sup> HIM Han testified that he knew that people disappeared from other units, and noticed that those workers who stood and watched the people injured by the rock explosions being transported into the ambulance would disappear.<sup>6042</sup> NUON Trech testified that people were “removed” at daytime and the next morning or evening the co-workers were told that those people were reassigned to another location.<sup>6043</sup> KEO Kin testified that if a worker, after being criticised, did not “deter”, he or she would disappear and that the Airfield authorities told the other workers “not to follow the steps of the individual that disappear[ed]”.<sup>6044</sup> CHHAE Heap stated that while he did not personally see arrests at the worksite, he heard that some units assigned to work did not return in the evening.<sup>6045</sup> Several witnesses testified that not seeing their co-workers anymore caused them to fear they would also vanish should they do something against Angkar’s prescriptions.<sup>6046</sup> While the evidence is unclear as to the fate of the people who disappeared in these circumstances, the Chamber is satisfied that these disappearances took place and finds that they contributed to a general climate of fear which affected the workers emotionally.

<sup>6041</sup> The Chamber finds that the statements made by CHAN Morn regarding the disappearance of workers corroborate the evidence provided by Witnesses HIM Han, NUON Trech, KEO Kin and CHHAE Heap analysed below. CHAN Morn testified that on occasion he was asked by people coming from outside the worksite about certain names on a list. The witness noticed that some of the people he was asked about later in the evening would “just [have] disappeared” (see T. 9 June 2015 (CHAN Morn), E1/312.1, pp. 40, 80; CHAN Morn Interview Record, E3/5278, 4 March 2009, p. 6, ERN (En) 00292824 (“When a list of names of workers was forwarded one person came to the construction site to tell victims that they have to go to the meeting. Then the victims were arrested, tied and transported to the direction of Phnom Penh. There were at least three victims in each arrest and the arrest occurred everyday. See also, T. 9 June 2015 (CHAN Morn), E1/312.1, p. 58 (testifying that due to the general atmosphere at the Airfield “everyone was afraid and terrified”).

1773. Arrests of workers, carried out in some instances by way of tying their hands behind their back and taking them away,<sup>6047</sup> took place after they were called into a meeting or during the night.<sup>6048</sup> KEO Loeur in particular confirmed his statement to the investigators that trucks would come to arrest people every night, arresting about 20 people each time.<sup>6049</sup> There were different reasons for the arrests. Successive arrests were made of those people who were accused of being enemies, CIA or KGB agents.<sup>6050</sup> In this regard, KEO Kin explained that the accusation of being CIA or KGB agents came from the “upper level” and that those who were accused did not even know what the CIA or the KGB was.<sup>6051</sup> Similarly, arrests were made of those workers accused of being enemies for engaging in any behaviour considered to be against Angkar,<sup>6052</sup> such as picking tobacco leaves for personal use,<sup>6053</sup> walking away from their unit,<sup>6054</sup> committing moral misconduct,<sup>6055</sup> complaining about the food or the working conditions.<sup>6056</sup> In this regard, the Chamber recalls its findings made in the section of this Judgement related to Real or Perceived Enemies.<sup>6057</sup>

1774. While the fate of many people arrested at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield is unknown, the Chamber is convinced on the basis of the available evidence that some were sent to S-21.<sup>6058</sup>

1775. Eyewitnesses saw trucks of arrested people leaving the Airfield in the direction of Phnom Penh. In this regard, KEO Kin testified having seen East Zone workers called to a meeting, tied, arrested and put onto trucks and transported in the direction of Phnom Penh on National Road 5.<sup>6059</sup> The witness also explained that “most of the people who were arrested were from the East Zone, as they were alleged or accused of betraying Angkar, and they were accused of being KGB or CIA agents”.<sup>6060</sup> KHIN Vat testified that she learned from people who worked with her husband that he was arrested by the “upper echelon” and was transported by truck to Phnom Penh.<sup>6061</sup> While the Chamber cannot conclude with certainty that all of the trucks directed to Phnom Penh took those arrested to S-21, it has established that at least some of the workers at the Airfield were taken to this security centre.

1776. KHIN Vat also stated that the “upper echelon” did not provide her with the reasons of her husband’s disappearance and she did not dare ask about him for fear of her life.<sup>6062</sup> SEM Hoeurn explained that he was extremely afraid when he saw the arrest of two co-workers.<sup>6063</sup>

1777. The evidence indicates that the arrests were carried out by the worksite security personnel.<sup>6064</sup> The arrest of the workers was always supervised by the worksite leadership; Lvey would always be present when there were arrests at the worksite.<sup>6065</sup>

1778. Having considered the evidence above, the Chamber has found that many people were arrested and taken away from the Kampong Chhnang Airfield. In some cases, the fate of those arrested is unknown, while in others the evidence shows that some workers were transported to Phnom Penh and others were taken to S-21. No information was provided to the other workers with regard to the fate or whereabouts of those who were arrested. Workers were afraid to ask any information for fear of facing the same treatment. The arrests were carried out under the oversight and with the approval of the worksite leadership.

11.3.12.3. Killings

1779. The Chamber heard evidence about killings at and in the proximity of the worksite. CHAN Morn testified that one night in 1977, he saw a military truck coming from the direction of the mountains or the head of the Airfield and going past the transportation unit where he used to stay when working at the construction site.<sup>6066</sup> The truck was carrying troops to an area in the northwest of the Airfield about three kilometres from the runway and located between 200 to 400 metres from the

<sup>6063</sup> T. 22 June 2015 (SEM Hoern), E1/319.1, pp. 46-47 (explaining that out of fear he did not even dare to respond to Pheap's request to bring a message to his family upon being arrested). The Chamber accepts SEM Hoern's evidence on this point as it is consistent with the testimony of many other witnesses about the generalised atmosphere of fear at the worksite.

CHAN Morn explained that during the time he worked at the Airfield, he stayed in two different places: at Chan Sari barracks in Kampong Chhnang provincial town during the time he did terrain measurements and accompanied the Chinese, and at the transportation unit within the worksite, when he was assigned to cut and transport wood in mid-1977. See T. 9 June 2015 (CHAN Morn), E1/312.1, pp. 43-44; CHAN Morn Interview Record, E3/5278, 14 March 2009, p. 5, ERN (En) 00292823. The witness also explained that this incident happened when he had already been assigned to transport wood and was therefore staying at the transportation unit. See T. 9 June 2015 (CHAN Morn), E1/312.1, pp. 43-44: ("It happened only after I went to transport wood, and while I was undertaking the terrain measurement, I stayed at the Chan Sari barracks. transportation unit;<sup>6067</sup> in that area there was a big tree and a stream located near Steung Pagoda.<sup>6068</sup> After a while CHAN Morn heard screams coming from that area.<sup>6069</sup> The screaming lasted for about two to four minutes, then the witness heard the sound of the truck returning.<sup>6070</sup> Several days later, when he passed by the area to collect plants near the big tree, he smelt a strong odour,<sup>6071</sup> and saw the tracks of the vehicle on the spot.<sup>6072</sup> He saw a few pits at that location where the truck left.<sup>6073</sup> The witness indicated that when he heard the screaming he thought that the screams were from people hunting wild animals but that later he understood what had happened by connecting the stench to the screaming.<sup>6074</sup> The witness said that the screams he heard “could be the screaming of people who were being killed there”.<sup>6075</sup> However, the witness did not see corpses,<sup>6076</sup> and no remainders belonging to human skeletons were subsequently found at the place.<sup>6077</sup> During the site inspection, the investigator did not find any signs of grave pits but saw circular marks in the location identified by CHAN Morn.<sup>6078</sup> The witness testified of hearing screams from that area almost every night while he was staying at the transportation unit but could not estimate how many times he witnessed these incidents.<sup>6079</sup>

1780. With respect to this evidence, the Chamber considers that the witness did not see the dead bodies and that no human remains have subsequently been found at the

The Chamber notes that the Site Identification Report, E3/8043, 2 January 2010, p. 4, ERN (En) 00436946 indicates that the distance from the area to the transportation unit where the witness lived was 180 metres and not 200, 300 or 400 as indicated in the witness in-court testimony. The Chamber accords more authority to the statements made by the witness in court.

location where the people were allegedly killed. The Chamber also notes that CHAN Morn is the only witness who testified about killings at this particular location and recalls the need to approach this witness's evidence with particular caution.<sup>6080</sup> In light of the above, the Chamber finds the available evidence insufficient to establish beyond reasonable doubt that workers from the Airfield construction site were killed at that location.

1781. SEM Hoeurn testified that there was a killing site located to the west of the Kampong Chhnang Airfield, 500 metres to one kilometre away,<sup>6081</sup> and that those who were arrested from the worksite were sent there to be killed.<sup>6082</sup> According to the same witness, people were killed with hoes or wooden sticks as the Khmer Rouge did not use bullets to avoid being heard by the workers at the construction site.<sup>6083</sup> The Chamber heard contradictory evidence about the source of SEM Hoeurn's knowledge. His statement to DC-Cam indicates that he learned about the existence of the killing site from "the people working in the Special Unit of Troops which was sent there to protect the site",<sup>6084</sup> whereas his in-court testimony suggests that he deduced that the location was a killing site because the workers at the construction site were prohibited from trespassing that area.<sup>6085</sup> As SEM Hoeurn did not confirm the former view when confronted in court, the Chamber is satisfied that his evidence on the existence of the killing site is based on a conclusion that he drew from the fact that workers were forbidden to access the area to the west of the Airfield. On this basis, it is unclear how the witness could have known that people were executed with hoes or wooden sticks, considering that based on his account he never personally witnessed any of the killings and never went to the site.<sup>6086</sup> It is reasonable to conclude, therefore, that he either deduced this from the fact that workers at the worksite did not hear any bullets being fired or he heard it from someone else. The Chamber cannot exclude that there might have been another reasonable explanation as to why workers were forbidden from accessing the area to the west of the Airfield. The Chamber also expressed reservations on the credibility of this witness and, in the absence of any corroboration of this account, cannot conclude beyond reasonable doubt that a killing site existed west of the Airfield or that people were killed there.

<sup>6085</sup> T. 22 June 2015 (SEM Hoeurn), E1/319.1, p. 43 ("We were prohibited from trespassing that area, as they told us it was a forbidden area. And of course, we concluded that we were prohibited from trespassing that area since it was a killing site, and they did not want us to see what happened because they were afraid that their secret would be revealed. And that's how I came to know about the site.").

<sup>6086</sup> T. 22 June 2015 (SEM Hoeurn), E1/319.1, p. 43 ("Q. Did you know about it? And did you actually go to that location and see it personally? A. I knew about it, but I did not go to that location.").

1782. The Chamber notes SRENG Thi's statement before OCIJ investigators that he saw many dead bodies in pits at Piem Lok mountain approximately five kilometres from the Airfield.<sup>6087</sup> He presumed that those bodies were of people from the Airfield construction site as a number of people in his unit disappeared.<sup>6088</sup> However, this statement constitutes the only account concerning this burial site and there is no available evidence to establish that all or any of the corpses were those of workers from the Kampong Chhnang Airfield.

1783. The Closing Order charges that when the Vietnamese reached Kampong Chhnang province in early 1979, workers were moved from the Airfield construction site, most of them to a location 20 kilometres south, the Romeas train station in Teuk Phos district.<sup>6089</sup> Exceptionally, workers from the East Zone were separated from the rest and executed at Mongol Khan Pagoda in Tuol Kpos village and at the former French fort in Kbal Lan village.<sup>6090</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that facts related to the killing of East Zone workers occurred after 6 January 1979 fall outside of the temporal jurisdiction of the Court and therefore are outside the scope of Case 002/02.<sup>6091</sup> It further submits that there is no detailed or credible evidence on the specific circumstances of these alleged killings and that in any case they "are irrelevant to how East Zone soldiers were previously treated at the construction site".<sup>6092</sup> With regard to the same facts, the KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the executions at Mongol Khan Pagoda occurred outside Kampong Chhnang Airfield and have no relation to the operation of the worksite.<sup>6093</sup> The Co-Prosecutors contend that, while these killings occurred outside of the temporal jurisdiction of the court, "they demonstrate that the CPK viewed the workers as expendable, and ‘enemies’, better dead than alive”.<sup>6094</sup>

1784. The Chamber did not hear oral testimony on these events. However, written records of interview indicate that East Zone workers who had left the construction site when the Vietnamese troops had reached Kampong Chhnang province in January 1979 were separated and executed at the Pagoda in Tuol Kpos village and at the former French fort in Kbal Lan village.<sup>6095</sup> The Chamber notes that these statements are detailed and consistent and therefore finds them credible. As noted by the Parties, these events fall outside the scope of the Court’s temporal and geographic jurisdiction.

1785. The Chamber recalls however that it may rely on evidence that falls outside of the temporal or geographic scope of the Closing Order for certain purposes.<sup>6096</sup> The Chamber will therefore deal with the evidence related to the execution of workers from the East Zone at Mongkol Khan Pagoda in Tuol Kpos village and at the former French

When the trucks left, those soldiers were tied up with their hands to the backs, blindfolded and marched by the armed men to be executed at the old fort which is about 200 metres from the fort. On the same day, those who raised their hands saying they were from the East Zone were taken towards the south of Tuol Khpuos Pagoda where pits had been dug. Five days later, when KHOEM Samhuon and other people were removed to other villages about one kilometre from Tuol Khpuos, he saw many piles of clothes. He was told by an individual that the owners of those clothes had been killed within the compound of the pagoda in Tuol Khpuos. While riding on a truck passing by the pagoda of Tuol Khpuos village, KHOEM Samhuon “smelled the decomposed corpses from near the Tuol Khpuos pagoda” so he “assumed that the people who had been escorted there were all killed and put into the pit that I saw them dig.”); UM Man Interview Record, E3/7893, 23 December 2009, pp. 2-3, ERN (En) 00455251-004552524 (stating that he became aware of the construction of the Kampong Chhnang Airfield in early January 1979 when thousands of people were transferred from there to Wat village, Tuol Khpuos commune, where UM Man lived. fort in Kbal Lan village in accordance with such principles.<sup>6097</sup> In particular, the Chamber will rely on this evidence for the sole purposes of assessing the mens rea of persecution of East Zone soldiers assigned to the Airfield construction site during the indictment period.<sup>6098</sup>

1786. The Chamber has established that numerous workers disappeared from the worksite: some vanished,<sup>6099</sup> and others were seen being arrested.<sup>6100</sup> In both cases, workers were never seen again. While the evidence is unclear as to the fate of the people who disappeared in these circumstances, the Chamber notes that these disappearances took place frequently and concerned large numbers of workers. The Chamber recalls its findings that a general policy to purge RAK members existed during the period in which the Kampong Chhnang Airfield was being constructed.<sup>6101</sup> It has also established that SOU Met took active part in the purge of Division 502,<sup>6102</sup> and that workers, especially from Division 310 and 450, were sent to the Airfield to temper and refashion because they were considered traitors.<sup>6103</sup> The Chamber has established that East Zone soldiers were regarded as particularly expendable.<sup>6104</sup> The Chamber notes Duch's evidence that the soldiers from Division 310, 450, 170 and 290 were sent to work at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield and later on from what he heard "they were gathered and smashed en masse".<sup>6105</sup> The evidence demonstrates a significant likelihood that at least some of the large number of people who disappeared from the worksite were killed there. However, as no human remains were found at the Airfield and the evidence on the existence of burial sites is inconclusive, the Chamber cannot conclude beyond reasonable doubt that killings took place at the worksite following these disappearances.

1788. While the Chamber is satisfied that a number of delegations of senior leaders visited the worksite, it is not in a position to determine precisely who was part of these delegations.<sup>6106</sup>

1789. More specifically, SEM Hoern provided evidence about a visit to the Airfield by KHIEU Samphan.<sup>6107</sup> In particular, he testified that in late 1977 he saw a helicopter about to land at Kampong Chhnang Airfield and he was told that KHIEU Samphan was coming to inspect the worksite.<sup>6108</sup> Once the helicopter landed, he and his co-workers watched KHIEU Samphan walk around and inspect the worksite.<sup>6109</sup> While in his second statement to the OCIJ he explained that he recognised the visitor on the helicopter as KHIEU Samphan because in mid-1973 he went to welcome him while he was visiting Angkor Wat Temple,<sup>6110</sup> in court the witness explained that he knew that the person was KHIEU Samphan because he was told so by his colleagues and recognised him in the courtroom.<sup>6111</sup> During his testimony the witness also stated that he had once seen KHIEU Samphan in Phnom Penh in 1975 and was told that was KHIEU Samphan.<sup>6112</sup> However, in his first OCIJ statement of 2008,<sup>6113</sup> SEM Hoern did not mention any such visit of the Accused to the Airfield and only indicated that he saw KHIEU Samphan in 1973 at Angkor Wat and that he never saw him again. as an indication that this event did not occur, the Chamber is unable to conclude whether the witness had personal knowledge of who KHIEU Samphan was at the time of the alleged visit, as the in-court evidence on this point allows only the conclusion that his knowledge was based on hearsay.

1790. KHIN Vat, a worker from Division 502, also testified on this matter. While in her OCIJ statement KHIN Vat stated that she saw KHIEU Samphan visiting the worksite in late 1977,<sup>6114</sup> in court she clarified that in fact she was told by a friend who was at the worksite at that time,<sup>6115</sup> that KHIEU Samphan came to inspect the Airfield construction, “during the later part of the year when the airport site was almost completed”.<sup>6116</sup> He came together with the leadership of Division 502, consisting of Lvey and Thuok,<sup>6117</sup> and with Ta Mok.<sup>6118</sup>

1791. LENG Chhoeung, KHIEU Samphan’s driver from 1978 to 1979,<sup>6119</sup> stated to the investigators that the Accused never went to visit the Kampong Chhnang Airfield during the time he was his driver.<sup>6120</sup> While he was not asked specifically about any visit to the Airfield, LENG Chhoeung testified in court that he only accompanied KHIEU Samphan outside Phnom Penh on two occasions: once on a trip to Takeo and once on a trip to Kandal.<sup>6121</sup> The Chamber finds this witness’s statements credible and consistent. However, this evidence does not preclude visits to the Airfield by car before the time LENG Chhoeung became the Accused’s driver in 1978 or by any other transportation means at any given time.

by any other evidence and that this witness's evidence has to be treated with caution, the Chamber finds that a visit of KHIEU Samphan at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield cannot be established beyond reasonable doubt.

1793. With respect to NUON Chea, the Chamber notes that while the Closing Order finds, based on KEO Loeur's statements to the investigators,<sup>6122</sup> that he visited the worksite, in court KEO Loeur could not confirm his statements on this issue.<sup>6123</sup> The Chamber is not satisfied that NUON Chea ever visited the Airfield. The Chamber also notes that the Co-Prosecutors Closing Brief does not make any reference to NUON Chea's visit to the worksite.<sup>6124</sup>

11.3.13.1.1. Executions

1794. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of murder in relation to victims who "were arrested and taken away to be killed nearby" the Kampong Chhnang Airfield;<sup>6125</sup> workers, particularly those from the East Zone, who had disappeared and had been killed;<sup>6126</sup> the killing of people west of the Airfield;<sup>6127</sup> the discovery of dead bodies presumably of workers from the Airfield in pits approximately five kilometres from the construction site;<sup>6128</sup> and the transportation of people by trucks to a pit site from where a former cadre heard screams.<sup>6129</sup> The Closing Order further charges that when the Vietnamese reached Kampong Chhnang province in early 1979, workers from the East Zone were separated from the rest and executed at Mongol Khan Pagoda in Tuol Kpos village and at the former French fort in Kbal Lan village.<sup>6130</sup> The Closing Order also indicates that none of the witnesses personally observed the execution of workers and that there is no evidence of any executions taking place at the construction site itself.<sup>6131</sup> The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of extermination in relation to the deaths of a large number of people.<sup>6132</sup>

1795. As noted above, the Chamber was not satisfied that killings of Airfield workers occurred at the location near the transportation unit<sup>6133</sup> and west of the Airfield.<sup>6134</sup> Further, based on the available evidence, the Chamber is not in a position to determine the fate of the many people who were arrested at the worksite and disappeared after.<sup>6135</sup> Similarly, the Chamber is not satisfied that the only inference that can be reasonably drawn from the circumstances surrounding the disappearance of workers from the Kampong Chhnang Airfield Construction Site without being seen arrested is that these workers were killed.<sup>6136</sup>

1796. As explained above, the Chamber recalls that any findings related to the killing at S-21 of those workers who were transferred to the security centre after their arrest at the worksite, are made in the relevant section on security centres.<sup>6137</sup>

1797. Regarding the execution of former East Zone soldiers at Mongol Khan Pagoda in Tuol Kpos village and at the former French fort in Kbal Lan village in early 1979, the Chamber recalls that these events are beyond its temporal and geographic jurisdiction, but that evidence related to these events will be used in accordance with its findings on the permissible use of out-of-scope evidence.<sup>6138</sup>

1798. As to the remaining instances of killings found in the Closing Order, the Chamber is not satisfied that those killings occurred.<sup>6139</sup>

11.3.13.1.2. Deaths resulting from working and living conditions

1799. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of extermination on the basis of the many people who died as a result of the conditions imposed at the worksite, including the deprivation of food, poor accommodation, insufficient medical care and hygiene as well as the exhaustion due to the hard labour and the unsafe working conditions.<sup>6140</sup> The Closing Order also indicates that the suicide of workers occurred on a weekly basis.<sup>6141</sup> For the purposes of establishing whether extermination was committed at Kampong Chhnang Airfield, the Chamber has therefore considered all of the deaths resulting from the working and living conditions at the worksite.

1800. With respect to the actus reus of extermination, the Chamber has found that conditions were imposed which resulted in the death of many people, including by placing people in unsafe working conditions, and forcing them to work extended hours without sufficient food.<sup>6142</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that all of these deaths were the result of the same murder operation and finds that in aggregate the scale element of extermination is established in the circumstances.

1801. With respect to the mens rea of extermination, the Chamber has found that workers were expected to work in extremely poor and unsafe working and living conditions, and they had to work intensively to complete the Airfield construction as soon as possible. In particular, with respect to the deaths resulting from the rock blasting, the Chamber has found that workers were not provided with any protective kit and that despite the repeated occurrence of these accidents, they were still required to engage in this dangerous activity.<sup>6143</sup> However, a small wall had been built for the workers' protection and injured workers were often taken to the hospital after this type of accident.<sup>6144</sup> The Chamber finds that there is insufficient evidence to prove an intention to kill the workers through the imposition of unsafe working conditions as such. Rather, it shows the direct perpetrators' indifference as to the fate of those workers or their acceptance of the likelihood of their death.

1802. With regard to deaths resulting from overwork and starvation, the Chamber has found that food was provided to the workers, even though it was insufficient given the type and quantity of labour they were forced to perform.<sup>6145</sup> This evidence does not show intent to create conditions in order to kill the workers. Rather, it shows that the workers were provided with the minimum necessary to survive and accomplish the goal of building the Airfield, and that the leadership was prepared to accept the risk that workers would die in the process in order to achieve their goal.

1803. Recalling that the crime of extermination is incompatible with the notion of dolus eventualis,<sup>6146</sup> the Chamber finds that the requisite mens rea of extermination is not satisfied with respect to these facts. The Chamber is therefore unable to conclude that the crime against humanity of extermination is established at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield Construction Site.

1804. However, as set out above, Internal Rule 98(2) provides that the Chamber may change the legal characterisation of the facts set out in the closing order, provided that no new constitutive elements are introduced.<sup>6147</sup> In the present case, the Chamber does not introduce new constitutive elements to the ones set out in the Closing Order and finds that the above facts satisfy the elements of murder. In particular, the Chamber finds that the actus reus of murder, namely an act or omission that caused the death of the victim,<sup>6148</sup> is established with respect to the deaths resulting from the working and living conditions described above. In this respect, the relevant act or omission is constituted by the imposition on the workers of conditions that caused their death and by the absence of appropriate measures to change or alleviate such conditions.

1805. The Chamber finds that the maintenance of these conditions for an extended period of time including after their negative effects on the workers became apparent, shows that the worksite authorities willingly imposed such conditions with the knowledge that they would likely lead to the death of the victims or in the acceptance of the possibility of this fatal consequence. This satisfies the mens rea of murder in the form of dolus eventualis.

1806. The Chamber therefore concludes that the crime against humanity of murder is established at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield Construction Site.

11.3.13.2. Enslavement

1807. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of enslavement with respect to the intentional exercise of total control and all the powers attaching to the right of ownership over people by the personnel of worksites without them being given any real right to agree.<sup>6149</sup> In particular, the personnel in charge of supervising the workers controlled the victims' physical environment, their access to food and medical care, and subjected them to constant surveillance.<sup>6150</sup> In addition, the victims were forced to perform work without their consent, unpaid and without the opportunity to reap the direct benefit thereof.<sup>6151</sup>

1808. The NUON Chea Defence makes a number of submissions with regard to the charges of enslavement. It contends that forced labour does not in itself constitute enslavement, and that in order to amount to enslavement, forced labour must be accompanied by the exercise of property rights or other similar deprivation of liberties over the victim.<sup>6152</sup> It submits that the work carried out at Kampong Chhnang Airfield cannot be considered forced labour because this work was of a military nature and required of military personnel as part of their military duties,<sup>6153</sup> and that the requisition of labour from civilians and soldiers is lawful in cases of "emergency or calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community".<sup>6154</sup>

1809. The Chamber recalls that the crime against humanity of enslavement is characterised by the intentional exercise over a person of any or all powers attaching to the right of ownership.<sup>6155</sup> While not a prerequisite for the crime to be established, forced labour may be sufficient on its own to establish enslavement as a crime against humanity where all the elements of that crime are met.<sup>6156</sup>

1810. In the present case, the Chamber has established that the workers were forced to work against their will.<sup>6157</sup> In particular, the Chamber has established that workers could not refuse to work otherwise they would be accused of being enemies, threatened and in some cases disappeared. Further, they were told that those who disobeyed instructions would be removed or killed.<sup>6158</sup>

1811. The Chamber notes that the workers at Kampong Chhnang Airfield were all soldiers from various RAK divisions, and the work they were carrying out at the time was for military purposes. Therefore, the Chamber concurs that the work they performed was “service of a military character”. Article 8(3)(c) of the ICCPR provides that forced labour does not include any service of a military character or any service exacted in cases of emergency and calamity threatening the life or well-being of the community.

1812. However, the Chamber observes that the crime charged in this case is not forced labour but enslavement, which encompasses a broader actus reus than that of forced labour.<sup>6159</sup> The Chamber notes that Article 8(1) of the ICCPR provides that nobody shall be held in slavery. This provision is part of customary international law.<sup>6160</sup> No exception or derogation to this prohibition is provided.<sup>6161</sup> The crime of enslavement can be perpetrated against both civilians and members of the military as “there is no requirement nor is it an element of crimes against humanity that the victims of the underlying crimes be civilians”.<sup>6162</sup> The Chamber further notes that while enslavement may encompass forced labour, this is not a necessary requirement for the establishment of the crime. The Chamber therefore rejects the NUON Chea Defence's submission concerning the exceptions of Article (8)(c) to forced labour as irrelevant in this case.

The Chamber notes that Article 4 ECHR prohibits slavery in the same way as Article 8 ICCPR. The Chamber further notes that according to Article 5 ICCPR: “Nothing in the present Covenant may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms recognized herein or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the present Covenant.” [emphasis added]). Therefore, the limitation of the definition of forced labour by the exclusion of “service of a military character” shall be understood narrowly and cannot be interpreted as limiting the scope of the prohibition of slavery by excluding from this prohibition any situation where people are asked to perform “service of a military character”.

1813. The Chamber will accordingly assess the facts against the elements of the crime of enslavement. Summarising its findings, the Chamber recalls that the workers were forced to work, their contacts and movements were restricted and controlled, their living conditions were inadequate and threats were used habitually.<sup>6163</sup>

1814. The NUON Chea Defence further submits that any restriction of movement at the Airfield was justified and lawful as "freedom of movement as a human right is not absolute".<sup>6164</sup> With respect to freedom of movement, the Chamber recognises that this is not an absolute right. However, it finds that the prohibition of movement at the Airfield was unnecessary and excessive, as the Chamber has established that workers had to remain in the location where they were assigned to work, they could not cross into an area where a nearby unit was stationed as they would be arrested if they did and were not allowed to leave the worksite without permission.<sup>6165</sup> Further, the violation of these restrictions was met with harsh punishments including arrest and being labelled as an enemy. The Chamber accordingly rejects the NUON Chea Defence's submission on this point and finds that the restrictions on the freedom of movement imposed on the Airfield workers were not lawful.

1815. The Chamber is satisfied that all of these indicia considered together demonstrate that the leadership at the Airfield exercised powers attaching to the right of ownership over the workers.<sup>6166</sup> Furthermore, the fact that workers did not get any payment for the work done, indicates that the workers were used to "accrue some gain".<sup>6167</sup> The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the actus reus of enslavement is established.

1816. The degree of control imposed on the workers, the prolonged duration of these treatments and their nature, as well as the severity of the punishment meted out to those who did not follow the instructions, show that the perpetrators intentionally exercised

“any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership” over the Airfield workers. The mens rea of enslavement is therefore satisfied.

1817. Accordingly, the Chamber concludes that the crime against humanity of enslavement is established at Kampong Chhnang Airfield Construction Site.

11.3.13.3. Persecution on political grounds

1818. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of persecution on political grounds at worksites against “real or perceived enemies of the CPK”.<sup>6168</sup> The particular acts amounting to persecution must be expressly charged.<sup>6169</sup> According to the Closing Order, such people “were subjected to harsher treatment and living conditions” than the rest of the population.<sup>6170</sup>

1819. The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that the charge of persecution on political grounds is restricted to the three categories of enemies particularised in the Closing Order under the heading of “Legal Findings” (namely, former Khmer Republic officials, New People and Cambodians returning from abroad).<sup>6171</sup> This submission has been addressed and rejected elsewhere in this Judgement.<sup>6172</sup>

1820. The KHIEU Samphan Defence contends that none of the above three groups are mentioned in the context of the Kampong Chhnang Airfield construction site,<sup>6173</sup> and that therefore KHIEU Samphan must not answer charges of persecution on political grounds with respect to this crime site.<sup>6174</sup> With respect to Kampong Chhnang Airfield, the Chamber finds that the targeted group of enemies included all people perceived as traitors or “bad elements” who were transferred to the worksite to labour in very hard conditions in order to be tempered, as their conduct was considered as contravening the Party line, or punished for their alleged traitorous affiliations, as described in the sections of the Closing Order related to the Airfield construction site.<sup>6175</sup> For these reasons, the KHIEU Samphan Defence's submission is rejected.

1821. The Chamber must satisfy itself that the targeted group of "real or perceived enemies of the CPK" referred to in the Closing Order was sufficiently discernible.<sup>6176</sup> The Chamber finds that those soldiers who were sent to Kampong Chhnang Airfield to work were clearly identified as enemies due to their real or perceived political beliefs or opposition to the CPK. As discussed above, the Chamber found that Divisions 310 and 450 and East Zone division soldiers were sent to the Airfield because they had been accused of having links to the enemy's network or because they were considered affiliated with their superiors who had been arrested and purged.<sup>6177</sup> Members of Division 502 who were considered "bad elements" were also sent to the Airfield to engage in hard labour.<sup>6178</sup> At meetings, workers were told that they had to be tempered because they were traitors and enemies, and because their leaders had been traitors.<sup>6179</sup> Accordingly, the Chamber is satisfied that the targeted group of "real or perceived enemies of the CPK" was sufficiently discernible.

1822. The Chamber finds that the transfer of soldiers considered traitors to the Airfield to work in poor and inadequate conditions, and the treatment they were subjected to at the worksite, in itself constitutes harsher treatment than that inflicted on the rest of the population. Furthermore, the Chamber has found numerous instances in which the workers considered as enemies were subjected to harsher treatment compared to that of loyal Division 502 soldiers and cadres at the Airfield.<sup>6180</sup> Members of Division 310 and 450 in particular worked longer hours.<sup>6181</sup> The Chamber has also found that some of the workers, especially those coming from the East Zone, were involved in particularly dangerous activities such as the blasting of rocks which placed at risk their life and physical security.<sup>6182</sup> The Chamber further found that workers were required to attend criticism and self-criticism meetings during which their unit chiefs would criticise them for their performance.<sup>6183</sup>

1823. The Chamber has found that workers were specifically informed that they needed to temper themselves by working hard,<sup>6184</sup> and that they were offenders who had to strive to work hard.<sup>6185</sup> In other instances, such as when workers from Divisions 310 and 450 were subjected to longer working hours and workers from the East Zone were assigned to the dangerous task of breaking rocks, it is clear from the facts that harsher treatment was imposed on certain workers because they were considered to be enemies.<sup>6186</sup>

1824. Furthermore, the evidence regarding the execution of East Zone workers at the Pagoda in Tuol Kpos village and at the former French fort in Kbal Lan village is consistent with other evidence regarding the targeting of these workers and can be used to infer the mens rea of persecution targeting these individuals because of their alleged affiliation with enemies.<sup>6187</sup> The Chamber has established that East Zone soldiers were taken to the Airfield because they were considered affiliated with the leaders of the East Zone who had been purged. The fact that when the workers had left the construction site in January 1979 the East Zone soldiers were identified, separated from the rest of the workers and executed at Tuol Khpuos pagoda and at the former French fort in Kbal Lan village is consistent with the evidence indicating that they were subjected to a persecutory treatment as they were considered members of the targeted group of the enemies. This supports the finding that these acts were carried out with the specific intent to discriminate against workers targeted because of their perceived enemy status.

1825. Having found that the victims as described in the preceding paragraphs were in fact perceived to be enemies and therefore part of the targeted group, the Chamber is satisfied that their treatment was discriminatory in fact.

1826. Acts committed against these groups of workers infringed upon and violated their fundamental rights pertaining to life,<sup>6188</sup> personal dignity,<sup>6189</sup> liberty and security<sup>6190</sup> and freedom from arbitrary or unlawful arrest,<sup>6191</sup> as enshrined in customary international law.

1827. The acts charged as persecution include acts found to amount to independent crimes against humanity (including other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity) as well as acts which rise to the same level of gravity or seriousness, including acts which do not necessarily amount to crimes (in particular, arrests, subjection to longer working hours, working without protective gear, attending criticism and self-criticism meetings). Considered together and within the context these acts were committed, the Chamber is satisfied that they cumulatively rise to the requisite level of severity such as to constitute persecution on political grounds.

1828. The Chamber is satisfied that both the actus reus and the mens rea of the crime are established. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of persecution on political grounds is established at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield Construction Site.

11.3.13.4. Other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity

1829. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity on the basis of serious mental and physical suffering and injury as well as serious attacks on human dignity inflicted by the CPK authorities on victims by depriving the civilian population of adequate food, shelter, medical assistance and minimum sanitary conditions.<sup>6192</sup>

1830. The NUON Chea Defence submits that the gravity assessment to be made in respect of the crime of other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity must take into account the context in which the crimes occurred.<sup>6193</sup> It contends that “given the dire circumstances that Cambodia was in at the time” the working and living conditions alleged to constitute attacks against human dignity are not of a comparable gravity to other crimes against humanity.<sup>6194</sup>

1831. The Chamber recalls that the assessment of the gravity of the relevant act or omission may take context into consideration.<sup>6195</sup> In the present case, the Chamber has established that the food workers received at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield was not sufficient;<sup>6196</sup> that working conditions were very demanding and that workers worked every single day of the month;<sup>6197</sup> that the hard work had a detrimental physical and psychological impact on them;<sup>6198</sup> that some workers died of overwork and starvation;<sup>6199</sup> that the living conditions were poor and inadequate;<sup>6200</sup> and that workers did not have facilities to bathe and relieve themselves.<sup>6201</sup>

1832. The Chamber acknowledges that conditions in Cambodia during the DK period were difficult due to years of civil war and the damaging US bombing campaign. However, even if resources including those concerning food and medical assistance might have been scarce at the worksite and in the entire country, it was within the power of the site authorities to mitigate and/or avoid the devastating effects of the lack of resources on the workers by adapting working hours and at least to some degree working conditions accordingly. On the contrary, instead of adapting the work schedule or improving safety and living conditions, the authorities deliberately continued subjecting the workers to work and living conditions that caused severe mental or physical suffering or injury.

1833. With regard to the specific situation of soldiers, the Chamber also recalls the consistent jurisprudence of human rights tribunals regarding the duty of care that state authorities have towards military recruits. The European Court of Human Rights held that:

[T]he State has a duty to ensure that a person performs military service in conditions which are compatible with respect for his human dignity, that the procedures and methods of military training do not subject him to distress or suffering of an intensity exceeding the unavoidable level of hardship inherent in military discipline and that, given the practical demands of such service, his health and well-being are adequately secured by, among other things, providing him with the medical assistance he requires.<sup>6202</sup>

1834. The Inter-American Court of Human Rights has held that army recruits are in a special position of subjection to the state authorities which is comparable to that of detainees. This situation puts the state in a position of guarantor, whereby it has an obligation to guarantee the wellbeing of soldiers, ensures that their work and discipline do not exceed the level of suffering inherent to their function and provide a satisfactory explanation when their right to health is affected.<sup>6203</sup>

1835. The Chamber finds that the conditions to which workers at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield were subjected constituted a serious attack on the human dignity of the workers. The evidence shows the serious and lasting impact of the working and living conditions on the victims and the scale on which these affected them. The Chamber is satisfied that these acts, when considered holistically, are of similar gravity to the other enumerated crimes against humanity and that the actus reus of the crime is therefore established.

1836. The prolonged duration of the imposition of those conditions on the workers, and particularly their continuation when the results of these conditions had already become evident, shows that they were imposed intentionally. The Chamber is satisfied that the mens rea of the crime is also established.

1837. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity is established at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield Construction Site.

11.3.13.5. Other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances

1838. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances in respect of the great suffering experienced by victims as a result of the arrest, detention or abduction of loved ones and others in conditions that placed them outside the protection of the law and the subsequent refusal to provide information on their whereabouts.<sup>6204</sup> At Kampong Chhnang Airfield witnesses observed the disappearance of numerous workers and noted a correlation between criticism and self-criticism meetings and the disappearances.<sup>6205</sup> Many witnesses also saw trucks transporting workers outside the Airfield who never came back and indicated “they could not be sure about the real fate of the disappeared persons”.<sup>6206</sup>

1839. The Chamber has established that in some instances workers were seen being arrested after being called into a meeting or during the night and that no information was provided to the other workers with regard to the fate or whereabouts of those who were arrested;<sup>6207</sup> workers had no available means to know about the outcome of the arrests and were afraid to ask any information for fear of facing the same treatment;<sup>6208</sup> and the arrests were carried out under the oversight and with the approval of the worksite leadership.<sup>6209</sup> The Chamber has established that in other instances workers simply vanished while under the control of the Airfield authorities and were never seen again at the worksite by their fellow workers.<sup>6210</sup>

1840. With regard to the arrests of workers followed by their disappearance or their transfer to S-21 described above,<sup>6211</sup> the NUON Chea Defence contends that the evidence does not establish that any of the alleged disappearances constituted an illegal deprivation of liberty, that the DK authorities were involved in them or that they intentionally concealed information on the whereabouts of those allegedly disappeared.<sup>6212</sup> The Chamber rejects these arguments. The evidence clearly indicates that arrests at the worksite were arbitrary in nature, considering that workers were arrested on the basis of unfounded accusations, sometimes without explanation, always without due process.<sup>6213</sup> Furthermore, the DK authorities either refused to provide information on what happened to those arrested or made people so afraid that they would not dare to ask for fear of being arrested themselves.<sup>6214</sup> Finally, the evidence shows that the security personnel conducted the arrests with the approval and knowledge of the Airfield leadership.<sup>6215</sup>

1841. With respect to the instances described above in which workers simply disappeared with no notice and were never seen again at the worksite,<sup>6216</sup> the NUON Chea Defence submits that it cannot be established beyond reasonable doubt that the alleged disappearances occurred at the worksite as the witnesses did not provide detailed evidence on the circumstances of such disappearances.<sup>6217</sup> The Chamber concurs that the evidence indicating that workers vanished from the worksite and were never seen again is not sufficient on its own to establish the occurrence of enforced disappearances. Furthermore, in certain instances explanations exist for the disappearance of these workers. For example, the Chamber has found that one worker was sent from the Airfield to attend trainings in Phnom Penh and was subsequently returned to the worksite.<sup>6218</sup> In another instance, the Chamber has established that West Zone sector troops captured and arrested individuals who attempted to escape from the Airfield,<sup>6219</sup> and the Chamber considers it possible that some workers may have succeeded in escaping. However, the Chamber finds that these explanations do not account for the totality of the disappearances from the worksite. In this regard, the Chamber takes into consideration the context of the disappearances at the Worksite, their frequency and the large numbers of workers concerned.<sup>6220</sup>

1842. As set out above, there is evidence of workers being arrested prior to disappearing and it is reasonable to believe under the circumstances that this also happened on occasions that were not witnessed by anyone who appeared before the Chamber in this case. The Chamber further recalls that a general policy to purge RAK members existed during the period in which the Kampong Chhnang Airfield was being constructed,<sup>6221</sup> and that soldiers were transferred to work at the Airfield because they were considered “bad elements” and because they were the subordinates of arrested division leaders and were thus perceived as having affiliations with the enemy.<sup>6222</sup> Workers at the Airfield were under constant control and surveillance by the Airfield authorities.<sup>6223</sup> They had no freedom to move.<sup>6224</sup> The leadership at the Airfield exercised total control and the powers attaching to the right of ownership over the workers.<sup>6225</sup> Workers had no access to a court system or to any mechanism where they could file a complaint concerning their treatment. Also, there is no evidence of any system of recording or registering the personal details of the persons who disappeared from the worksite that would have been accessible to the public, or any other procedural protection during the time workers were assigned to the Airfield worksite.<sup>6226</sup> On the contrary the key standard to be applied by CPK members was, as always during the DK period, to maintain secrecy. The authorities in charge of the Airfield provided no information concerning the fate of workers who disappeared or they gave false or unverifiable information, stating for example that workers had been reassigned to another location.<sup>6227</sup>

1843. Having considered all of the above, the Chamber finds that the only reasonable inference that can be drawn from the evidence is that a significant number of workers who disappeared and were never seen again at the worksite were in fact deprived of their liberty by the Airfield authorities and disappeared in the absence of any information provided to their co-workers or their family members as to their fate or whereabouts.

1844. The Chamber finds that the acts described above caused serious mental suffering to the victims, namely those who disappeared and those who were left behind at the worksite. As set out above, the fact that many workers were no longer seen by their co-workers generated in them extreme anxiety and contributed to the creation of a general climate of fear which affected the workers emotionally.<sup>6228</sup> Witnessing the numerous and widespread disappearances at the worksite, in the circumstances described above, made the workers fear that they would also be taken away. The Chamber considers all of these acts holistically and in the context of the general atmosphere at the worksite, together with the impact of these acts on the victims, to conclude that the relevant acts are of the similar gravity as the other crimes against humanity. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the actus reus of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances is established.

1845. Having considered the widespread, consistent and repeated occurrence of these particular disappearances, the Chamber concludes that this pattern of conduct which caused great suffering to the victims was performed intentionally. The Chamber is therefore satisfied that the mens rea of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances is established.

1846. Accordingly, the Chamber finds that the crime against humanity of other inhumane acts through conduct characterised as enforced disappearances is established at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield Construction Site.

12. SECURITY CENTRES, EXECUTION SITES AND INTERNAL PURGES

12.1. NUON Chea Defence regarding the Threat of Vietnam, Internal Factions and Justification of the DK National Security Policy

12.1.1. Preliminary Issues

1847. The Chamber notes that the NUON Chea Defence in the submissions regarding its central defence,<sup>6229</sup> cites to confessions from S-21, particularly that of KOY Thuon, YIM Sambath, HU Nim, VORN Vet and NEY Sarann alias Ya.<sup>6230</sup> The Chamber has previously found that a real risk exists that torture was used at S-21 and other security centres to obtain confessions.<sup>6231</sup> As a consequence the Chamber ruled that it “will not permit the invocation of such evidence, unless a Party proposing to use such evidence establishes that a real risk does not exist that it was obtained through torture, or it falls within the exception to Article 15 [of the CAT]”.<sup>6232</sup> The Supreme Court Chamber clarified that “the effect of the exclusionary rule is that statements falling under it may not be used to prove the truth of its content or even to imply that it might be truthful, for instance by confronting a witness with it”.<sup>6233</sup>

1848. The Chamber recalls that it has previously denied a request filed by the NUON Chea Defence during proceedings in order to be allowed to use, for the truth of their contents, statements made at S-21 by KOY Thuon, YIM Sambath and CHEA Non alias Suong.<sup>6234</sup> The Chamber was not satisfied that the evidence before it demonstrated the existence of specific circumstances sufficient to rebut the preliminary determination that there is a real risk that torture was used to obtain the said statements.<sup>6235</sup>

<sup>6229</sup> The NUON Chea Defence refers to this as “the heart of its case”. See NUON Chea Closing Brief, para. 107; NUON Chea’s Submissions on the Relevance of Evidence of Treasonous Rebellion to his Individual Criminal Responsibility in Case 002/02, E395/2, 10 June 2016, para. 5.

1849. The Chamber notes that the Accused are charged with torture, including with regard to the authors of the S-21 statements cited in the NUON Chea Defence Closing Brief.<sup>6236</sup> In the section of this Judgement relevant to the charges concerning S-21, the Chamber finds that the S-21 confessions of KOY Thuon, YIM Sambath, HU Nim, VORN Vet and NEY Sarann alias Ya were obtained under torture.<sup>6237</sup> Therefore, Article 15 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment mandates the exclusion of these statements which will only be used within the exception and limitations defined in the Chamber's decision on the use of evidence obtained through torture.<sup>6238</sup>

1850. In addition, the NUON Chea Defence relies upon transcripts of interviews taken by THET Sambath and Robert LEMKIN which were not admitted as evidence because the authorship and reliability of the statements could not be established.<sup>6239</sup> This evidence is not considered in this Judgement, as these sources of evidence are unreliable.

1851. Finally, the Chamber notes the NUON Chea Defence's contention that the evidence it cites in support of these submissions "proves" its theory of the case.<sup>6240</sup> The Chamber recalls that the Accused are presumed innocent until proved guilty and that they bear no burden of proof to establish facts.<sup>6241</sup>

The Defence also relies upon the transcript of an interview with TOAT Thoeun which was admitted into evidence. See Decision on the NUON Chea Internal Rule 87(4) Request to Admit Documents Related to Robert Lemkin (2-TCW-877) and on Two Related Internal Rule 93 Requests, E416/4, 28 December 2016, para. 21. The Chamber notes that there are discrepancies in the spelling of the name of this witness and that while the THET Sambath-Robert LEMKIN transcripts use the spelling "TOIT Thoeun", the Chamber has decided, for ease of reading and sake of clarity, to spell it uniformly as "TOAT Thoeun".

12.1.2. Overview of Party Submissions

1852. The Chamber outlines the NUON Chea submissions and the Parties' generalised responses before addressing the major events put forward by the Defence and the submissions based on particularised evidentiary materials.

12.1.2.1. NUON Chea Defence submissions

1853. The NUON Chea Defence submits that the case presented by the Co-Prosecutors is Manichean in that it is oversimplified and in some cases totally false.<sup>6242</sup> It presents the CPK as monsters and Vietnam's invasion as humanitarian based on Vietnamese propaganda, stories of middle and upper-class Cambodian refugees, the media, and academics.<sup>6243</sup> The NUON Chea Defence therefore seeks to "rewrite history" by countering the Manichean narrative and submits that the evidence that it has compiled proves NUON Chea's account.<sup>6244</sup>

1854. The NUON Chea Defence submits that there were a series of attempted coups d'état throughout the Khmer Rouge era, some of which were fomented by Vietnam. It submits that the existence of these coups undercuts and raises reasonable doubt as to NUON Chea's responsibility for crimes charged in the Closing Order because members of the charged criminal enterprise were pursuing goals that were diametrically opposed to CPK policy as they sought to overthrow the legitimate DK government.<sup>6245</sup>

1855. The NUON Chea Defence submits that Vietnam posed a formidable, existential threat to DK, endangering its national security, territorial integrity and sovereignty,<sup>6246</sup> and that owing to this threat, during the entire DK period, there existed a constant state of emergency.<sup>6247</sup> The Vietnamese threat was the paramount consideration in all CPK policy decisions,<sup>6248</sup> which the Defence submit were "logical, rational, proportionate, and lawful responses to the existential threat of treason from within and annihilation from without".<sup>6249</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that it was therefore lawful for the CPK to identify, arrest, detain and, in most circumstances, execute internal and external enemies due to legitimate suspicions and convictions of unlawful activities such as treason, subversion, collaborating with the enemy and espionage.<sup>6250</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that “a significant proportion of [CPK’s] top leaders” were traitors to the CPK who sought to overthrow the DK government and install a new regime loyal to Vietnam.<sup>6251</sup>

1856. The NUON Chea Defence submits that prior to the DK era, (North) Vietnam long threatened Cambodia’s survival as a nation-state, planning to create an Indochinese Federation composed of Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia with the latter two states being subjugated to Vietnam.<sup>6252</sup> During the DK era, Vietnam sought to influence events in Cambodia by cultivating new leadership that was loyal to Vietnam, most prominently Northwest Zone Secretary RUOS Nhim and East Zone Secretary SAO Phim,<sup>6253</sup> and seeking to take control of the country first in 1975 by attempting to assassinate POL Pot and later, between 1976-1978, staging three attempted coups d’état (referred to collectively as “Plan A”).<sup>6254</sup> In order to deplete the CPK’s ability to fend off these attacks, it is alleged that traitors within the CPK were siphoning off supplies necessary to the CPK’s survival, such as military materiel and food, destroying these supplies if necessary and disrupting working productivity.<sup>6255</sup> Vietnam also sought to foment discontent to make people resent the CPK and make them more amenable to treason.<sup>6256</sup> When these attempts failed, the NUON Chea Defence submits that Vietnam launched an illegal military invasion of DK supported by the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact allies to take control of Cambodia (referred to as “Plan B”).<sup>6257</sup>

1857. The NUON Chea Defence submits that throughout the DK era, many Standing and Central Committee members, DK ministers, zone secretaries and RAK leaders (apart from those in the Southwest Zone) were collaborating with Vietnam in defiance of the lawful instructions of the legitimate DK government.<sup>6258</sup> Citing to a number of S-21 confessions, including those of HU Nim, KOY Thuon and VORN Vet, the NUON Chea Defence submits that the CPK leadership was riddled with Vietnam's collaborators.<sup>6259</sup> It submits that NUON Chea did not have effective control over cadres belonging to most zonal, autonomous sectors, and centre military division forces,<sup>6260</sup> and did not have effective control over the collaborators with Vietnam. Further, even if he did, it submits that he took concerted efforts to investigate and punish acts of sabotage and subversion.<sup>6261</sup> However, the NUON Chea Defence submits that the Accused could not have prevented or punished such cadres as they were often acting autonomously, secretly and independently of him,<sup>6262</sup> and without his, POL Pot's or other DK leaders' direction, knowledge or approval.<sup>6263</sup>

1858. The NUON Chea Defence therefore submits that it was the leaders of treasonous rebellions who were responsible for the deaths and other criminal acts that occurred in areas under the control of Vietnam's collaborators.<sup>6264</sup> It submits that where NUON Chea may have been acting in concert with loyal members of the CPK forces, such as POL Pot, Ta Mok, SON Sen and KE Pauk, it was with the aim of achieving a more equitable communist society and abuses that took place were the sole responsibility of brutal lower-level leaders acting outside the lawful framework of CPK policies and instructions.<sup>6265</sup> It further submits that the existence of these treasonous rebellions created a permanent state of emergency throughout the DK period, owing to the existential threat posed by Vietnam and the decimated conditions in Cambodia at the time the CPK took power, and that this rendered the alleged CPK policies to be “not only entirely rational and perfectly legitimate but absolutely lawful”.<sup>6266</sup>

1859. In describing the alleged treasonous rebellions and members thereof, the NUON Chea Defence points to evidence from before, during, and after the DK era – what it refers to as the head, body and tail of the crocodile.<sup>6267</sup> The NUON Chea Defence uses the term coup d'état to describe a variety of different factual allegations, including: an attack on a radio station in Phnom Penh; the explosion of a grenade; attempts to assassinate POL Pot; the storage of food, clothing, and weapons in preparation for an eventual attack; and meetings to plan the overthrow of the CPK Party Centre.<sup>6268</sup>

12.1.2.2. Co-Prosecutors' submissions

1860. The Co-Prosecutors submit that there is no credible evidence that thousands of victims detained, tortured and killed at DK security centres, many of whom were children, were planning a rebellion. Rather, they were detained and executed based only on the fact that they had been implicated in confessions obtained by torture.<sup>6269</sup> There was no possibility of due process because the DK abolished the courts.<sup>6270</sup> Contrary to what is argued by the NUON Chea Defence, there is no right to extrajudicial killings under international law.<sup>6271</sup> Even the DK Constitution cited by the NUON Chea Defence does not provide for a punishment of death.<sup>6272</sup>

1861. The Co-Prosecutors acknowledge that there were groups and individuals who resisted POL Pot's rule, including Cham rebellions and former Khmer Rouge soldiers who fought in the forests in mid-1978 to escape mass executions of East Zone forces.<sup>6273</sup> They also acknowledge that some individuals went to Vietnam and cooperated with the Vietnamese invasion that brought an end to the Democratic Kampuchea regime. However, they note that many top-level leaders who were purged commanded significant armed forces, and yet none of them led any military operation against POL Pot. They submit that instead, SAO Phim and his East Zone forces led DK's resistance to the Vietnamese incursion.<sup>6274</sup> They further note that none of the zone leaders resisted arrest or attempted to escape, noting particularly the case of SAO Phim.<sup>6275</sup>

1862. The Co-Prosecutors submit that NUON Chea's fake version of history is the same fake history that the Khmer Rouge tried to sell to the world at the time of the crimes.<sup>6276</sup> The Defence submissions are based on illogical speculation and, in many cases, on confessions obtained by torturing people.<sup>6277</sup>

1863. As to evidence from S-21 confessions, the Co-Prosecutors submit that every person in S-21 and at other security centres was subjected to torture.<sup>6278</sup> They submit that S-21 confessions do not support the NUON Chea Defence case and point to the statement by Stephen HEDER that "the idea that there was a pro-Vietnamese faction within the DK is a fiction that was being circulated by both the Khmer Rouge and the Vietnamese as it served both of their interests".<sup>6279</sup>

1864. The Co-Prosecutors point to evidence that S-21 confessions were obtained through torture and included evidence that was untrue, particularly as it falsely implicated prisoners as being CIA agents.<sup>6280</sup>

12.1.2.3. Lead Co-Lawyers' submissions

1865. The Lead Co-Lawyers submit that the counternarrative presented by the NUON Chea Defence is just as Manichean as the one they condemn as well as being disconnected from the trial.<sup>6281</sup> They note that the Defence has cited to about 100 documents in its closing brief that were not admitted at trial, creating confusion as to what elements the Chamber will consider in its deliberations.<sup>6282</sup>

1866. The Lead Co-Lawyers submit that the NUON Chea Defence narrative does not explain the responsibility for crimes in the Southwest Zone, nor what happened at Trapeang Thma Dam or at Wat Au Trakuon at a time when, on NUON Chea's telling, all of the traitors had been legitimately executed.<sup>6283</sup>

12.1.2.4. KHIEU Samphan Defence submissions

1867. The KHIEU Samphan Defence does not directly confront the NUON Chea Defence narrative of internal factions and rebellions. It does however agree that Vietnam was the aggressor in the armed conflict with the DK regime.<sup>6284</sup> The DK sought to avoid conflict because it was not in its interest to fight a war against a stronger army.<sup>6285</sup> In addition, the KHIEU Samphan Defence does not contest the facts at S-21, which it concedes can be qualified as murder, extermination, enslavement, imprisonment, torture, political persecution, and other inhumane acts – although it contests whether racial persecution was proved.<sup>6286</sup>

1868. The Chamber will only consider the NUON Chea Defence submission insofar as they are based on identified evidence. Likewise, the Chamber will only address submissions concerning events outside the temporal jurisdiction of the ECCC if and insofar as they directly impact upon the criminal responsibility of the Accused. The Chamber will disregard submissions that are based improperly on torture-tainted evidence.

12.1.2.5. Trial Chamber observations

1869. The core of the NUON Chea Defence revolves around Vietnam's existential threat to Cambodia and its Plan A and Plan B to take control over the country. According to the NUON Chea Defence, Plan A consisted of assassination attempts against POL Pot in 1975 and three attempted coups d'état in 1976, 1977 and 1978. Specifically, the 1976 coup d'état consisted of explosions in Siem Reap and Phnom Penh, with KOY Thuon and CHAN Chakrei at the centre of these attempts.<sup>6287</sup> According to the NUON Chea Defence, the 1977 coup d'état was to entail the capture of Phnom Penh and taking control over much of the DK territory. The leading forces of this second coup d'état were the North Zone-affiliated Centre Division 310 and its leader SBAUV Him alias Oeun (takeover of Phnom Penh) and the Secretary of the Northwest Zone, RUOS Nhim (seizing control of the territory).<sup>6288</sup> The third coup d'état consisted of the East Zone forces' attempted coup d'état under the leadership of Zone Secretary SAO Phim, in collusion with Vietnam, beginning in May 1978 and ending with SAO Phim's suicide in June 1978.<sup>6289</sup> Following the failure of these three coups d'état Vietnam shifted its focus to directly invading Cambodia and implemented Plan B.<sup>6290</sup> 1870. The Chamber addresses the arguments related to the 1975-1976 assassination attempts, the three attempted coups d'état in 1976, 1977 and 1978 before turning to the implementation of Plan B.

12.1.3. 1975-1976 Assassination Attempts

1871. The NUON Chea Defence submits that there was an assassination attempt on POL Pot at the Olympic Stadium in 1975 that was the doing of SAO Phim.<sup>6291</sup> The Chamber notes that the evidence in support of this submission is likely torture-tainted. CHHAOM Se told DC-Cam that the reason they suspected that SAO Phim was behind the attempt was because he was from the East Zone and AN Sopheap alias Pheap stated that when people from the East Zone had been interrogated, they confessed.<sup>6292</sup> CHHAOM Se told the DC-Cam interviewers, during the same interview, that no shots had been fired in the assassination attempt.<sup>6293</sup> Therefore, it appears that this was a suspected plot that was purportedly uncovered in torture-tainted confessions. The

Chamber therefore considers that the assertion that SAO Phim was responsible for this plot is not well-founded. Even if the evidence of the plot originated from a source of knowledge that was not torture-tainted, at the time of the purported assassination attempt in 1975, SAO Phim was a trusted member of the CPK, who received numerous visits from NUON Chea and POL Pot himself in the East Zone. Therefore, taking into account the apparently good relations between these individuals,<sup>6294</sup> and noting the absence of any reliable evidence to the contrary, the Chamber is not convinced that SAO Phim sought to assassinate POL Pot in Phnom Penh.

1872. The NUON Chea Defence submits there were further plots to kill POL Pot in 1975 at a meeting (no location was indicated) and also when one of his flights landed at Pochentong Airport, which were averted when POL Pot changed his plans.<sup>6295</sup> These assertions are based on the transcript of an interview with Witness 1 by Robert LEMKIN and THET Sambath which was rejected by the Chamber as unreliable.<sup>6296</sup> As they lack any basis on the admitted evidence, the Chamber does not find these submissions to be substantiated.

1873. The NUON Chea Defence also submits there was an attempt to poison POL Pot in mid-1976 which was planned by CHAN Chakrei.<sup>6297</sup> In support of this submission, it cites to a book by Nayan CHANDA, who in turn bases his assertion on a dissertation by Kenneth QUINN which does not appear on the Case File.<sup>6298</sup> The Chamber is unable to assess the original source of this information. However, the evidence as to plots of CHAN Chakrei and SAO Phim against the CPK, noted below, is founded upon torture-tainted evidence which is not permissible.

1874. Finally, the NUON Chea Defence points to a DK official statement made in 1978, cited by Ben KIERNAN, to the effect that Phnom Penh radio was attacked in September 1975 by East Zone forces in an attempted coup d'état, although the plot

The Chamber recalls that it has found that the identity of Witness 1 was uncertain. Contrary to the Defence submission, the Supreme Court Chamber has never “confirmed” the identity of Witness 1 and while the Defence claimed that IN Thoeun was very likely Witness 1, Robert LEMKIN indicated that this was not the real name of Witness 1 and that he was not “free to divulge his real name”.

failed because the assailants did not know the identities of the CPK leadership.<sup>6299</sup> The Chamber notes that by 1978, hundreds of East Zone forces had been purged at S-21, and considers that a DK official statement at that time is best explained as an attempt to justify CPK actions against the East Zone cadres. There was no further substantiation for this submission.

1875. The evidence of specific instances of assassination attempts against POL Pot put forward by the NUON Chea Defence is scarce, speculative, tainted by torture or otherwise unreliable. In any case, the Chamber considers that even if there may have been attempts to kill POL Pot in 1975 and 1976, this cannot excuse or justify the actions of the CPK in purging all those suspected of this activity or their family members, particularly without due process.<sup>6300</sup> Nor can it provide justification for the criminal conduct allegedly resulting from CPK policies implemented at worksites and cooperatives.<sup>6301</sup>

12.1.4.1. The Siem Reap explosions (February 1976)

12.1.4.1.1. Submissions

1876. The NUON Chea Defence submits that an explosion on 25 February 1976 in Siem Reap which destroyed a munitions depot was likely an effort by Sector 106 Secretary PA Phal alias Soth to set in motion a coup d'état working together with KOY Thuon.<sup>6302</sup> After the explosion, CPK defectors reported to a publication<sup>6303</sup> that there was a meeting in May 1976 with instructions to get men, weapons and ammunition ready, although they were not told for what purpose.<sup>6304</sup>

1877. The Co-Prosecutors submit that DK radio at the time blamed the Siem Reap explosion on American bombings and that other experts have blamed it on Thai or Vietnamese airplanes. They also submit that the allegation that KOY Thuon would attempt to overthrow the government in Phnom Penh by blowing up his own store of ammunition does not make any sense.<sup>6305</sup>

12.1.4.1.2. Findings

1878. On 25 February 1976, a series of explosions occurred in Siem Reap town, and there were numerous competing accounts as to their cause. The CPK's version of events, which it maintained throughout the DK period, was announced in a 26 February 1976 statement, accusing the United States of dropping bombs over the centre of Siem Reap town, killing 15 people, including combatants and children, and wounding more than 40 before flying back in the direction of Thailand.<sup>6306</sup> The CPK said that the bombing caused heavy damage to Siem Reap town, especially the hospital, the child care centre and schools.<sup>6307</sup> The statement provided that three bombs were dropped by an F-[111] at 8.30 a.m. and that two additional F-[111]s returned at 2 p.m. to drop bombs at the same location.<sup>6308</sup> On 27 February 1976, Office 870 sent out a communiqué blaming the events on the American government and urging vigilance and the protection of the secret locations of ammunition and food warehouses.<sup>6309</sup>

1879. In the days that followed, the CPK held a series of rallies throughout the country, reiterating these accusations, condemning American aggression and justification for attacking "U.S. imperialists and their lackeys".<sup>6310</sup> On 29 February 1976, a small group of diplomats based in Cambodia, as well as several diplomats visiting the country, were invited to tour the location of the explosions.<sup>6311</sup> A 4 March 1976 radio announcement about the tour expanded upon the official CPK narrative, indicating that a jet dropped two bombs on a kindergarten at 8.30 a.m. and that while “citizens and combatants” were fighting the fire from the morning raid, at 2.00 p.m. two other jets bombed the same location.<sup>6312</sup> It noted that all of the kindergarten buildings and the children’s park were completely destroyed, all trees around the school were stripped, and the bombs had left three different sized craters which were shown to the diplomats present.<sup>6313</sup> The radio announcement included the voice of IENG Sary, blaming the events on U.S. imperialists.<sup>6314</sup> Allies of Democratic Kampuchea, reportedly issued statements supporting DK and condemning American aggression for bombing Siem Reap.<sup>6315</sup>

1880. On 5 March 1976, the CPK provided a purported rationale for the bombing: the U.S. resorted to the act of bombing and killing civilians, combatants and children in Siem Reap because it was humiliated by the defeat of the Khmer Republic it had supported,<sup>6316</sup> by the liberation of 17 April 1975, and because the CIA had failed in its attempts to set up reactionary forces and agents to commit subversion and sabotage against the Cambodian revolution.<sup>6317</sup> The explosions were also attributed to American bombing during a meeting in June or July 1976 in the Southwest Zone, presided over by the Sector 25 secretary.<sup>6318</sup> The CPK maintained its position that Americans were responsible for the bombing (at least publicly) until at least November 1977.<sup>6319</sup>

1881. Several documents also support the conclusion that the highest echelons of the CPK were not merely spreading propaganda, and actually believed at the time that the Americans were responsible for the Siem Reap bombing.<sup>6320</sup> An entry from IENG Sary's Diary records a meeting held at the DK Ministry of Foreign Affairs between May and July of 1976, during which the Americans were described as desperate in their tactics as evidenced by the Mayaguez incident and the bombing in Siem Reap.<sup>6321</sup> Likewise, a military committee meeting on 3 August 1976, attended by POL Pot, VORN Vet, SON Sen, MEAS Muth, Nget, Dim and Touch (notetaker), made apparent reference to the bombing in Siem Reap and notes "Comrade Secretary's advice" that the Americans may continue to pose a threat to Siem Reap, seeking to perpetrate an air raid against military targets.<sup>6322</sup>

1882. There is reason to doubt the veracity of the CPK's version of the event. A Swedish diplomat was quoted in a then confidential US State Department cable, indicating that the Swedish intelligence evaluators had concluded that the damage caused by the explosion was not recent and probably caused by internal conflict and not an aircraft bombing.<sup>6323</sup> The Swedish envoy reported having seen one large crater and some destruction to houses but could not determine what had happened and when.<sup>6324</sup> American, French and Soviet diplomats were also apparently "in the dark" as to who was responsible for the explosion.<sup>6325</sup> The fact that US government cables disclaiming any US responsibility for the explosion were at the time confidential internal communications, suggests that the information contained within them was an honest appraisal of the situation.

1883. There was no shortage of alternative explanations. The AFP reported on 1-2 March 1976, based on a “reliable source”, that a group of 300-400 former Khmer Republic soldiers, called the Black Cobra commandos, had “swept down from their highland bases near the Thai border on Siem Reap”, and were responsible for the attack which caused an ammunition dump to explode.<sup>6326</sup>

1884. Ben KIERNAN has written that “[n]o fewer than four possible culprits have been identified” for the Siem Reap explosions.<sup>6327</sup> In addition to the theory of American bombing, other hypotheses attribute the explosions to: (1) Thai air force jets; (2) Vietnamese MiGs; or (3) Chinese-built MiGs from Phnom Penh attacking counter-revolutionary forces in Siem Reap after a conspiracy had been uncovered.<sup>6328</sup> Ben KIERNAN does not find any of the four theories to be convincing and determines that these theories lack substantial evidentiary support.<sup>6329</sup> For his part, KHIEU Samphan has written that the reason for the Siem Reap explosion is not yet understood.<sup>6330</sup>

1885. The purported evidence that PA Phal alias Sot, the Secretary of autonomous Sector 106, was responsible for the attack is either based on documents not admitted into evidence or contained within S-21 confessions that were taken through the use of torture and are therefore inadmissible.<sup>6331</sup> The Chamber will therefore disregard these submissions.

<sup>6331</sup> NUON Chea Closing Brief, paras 234, 244, 277 citing S-21 Confession – KOY Thuon, E3/1604. See above, paras 1847-1849. The Chamber notes that PA Phal alias Sot was arrested and imprisoned at S-21 in February 1977. See S-21 Confession – PA Phal alias Sot, E3/1754, 25 February 1977, 19 March 1977, p. 29, ERN (En) 00822357; S-21 list of prisoners entering in February 1977, E3/10266, multiple 1886. The Chamber further notes that the NUON Chea Defence submissions are logically contradictory. It would be inconsistent for PA Phal alias Sot (in conjunction with KOY Thuon) to cache weapons within his area of control (Siem Reap) to assist in the attack on Phnom Penh,<sup>6332</sup> only to self-sabotage that same effort by destroying his own weapons and killing his own troops in a Siem Reap attack. The submissions are also contradictory in suggesting that PA Phal alias Sot held effective and nominal power in Autonomous Sector 106, while at the same time was plotting to initiate a rebellion within that same sector.<sup>6333</sup> The assertion that PA Phal alias Sot was planning a rebellion amounts to speculation. However, presuming the Party Centre accepted this speculation as truthful, it also explains why the Party Centre purged high-ranking cadres believing that it was surrounded by traitors.

1887. In sum, the Chamber is not convinced that the cause of the 25 February 1976 explosions in Siem Reap were part of a plan to rebel against POL Pot. Even if there were such a plan, or even if the CPK leaders were personally convinced that it existed, the Chamber does not consider that the existence of such a plan or the mere belief that such plan existed would justify the wholesale execution at S-21 of cadres and civilians, allegedly involved in its preparation or implementation, without due process.

12.1.4.2.1. Submissions

1888. The NUON Chea Defence submits, based upon the S-21 Confession of YIM Sambath (who answered to CHAN Chakrei), that six weeks after the Siem Reap attacks, a second attack in April 1976 was carried out when a grenade exploded at the Royal Palace in Phnom Penh. According to the NUON Chea Defence, this was part of attempted 1976 coup d'état along with plans to fire on the School of Fine Arts.<sup>6334</sup> It is submitted that CHAN Chakrei, Secretary of Division 170, was also responsible for stirring up discontent by ordering his troops to raise banners with slogans such as “long live Buddhism” and “long live the White Khmer Front of Liberation from Rice by the

Can”.<sup>6335</sup> CHAN Chakrei was also responsible for troops that raised tracts near the Wat Botum which stated, “small fry eats little, big shot eats a lot”.<sup>6336</sup> Therefore, the NUON Chea Defence submits that CHAN Chakrei was behind the Phnom Penh bombing and the 1976 coup d'état attempt.<sup>6337</sup>

1889. The Co-Prosecutors submit that the grenade explosion at the Royal Palace in April 1976 injured no one and apparently had not target. They further submit that the claim that this was a coup attempt distorts history to spread paranoia in an effort to justify killings.<sup>6338</sup>

12.1.4.2.2. Findings

1890. In the early morning hours of 2 April 1976, a hand grenade exploded behind the Royal Palace in Phnom Penh.<sup>6339</sup> Soldiers from Division 170, some of whom were stationed nearby,<sup>6340</sup> were rounded up and taken to S-21 for interrogation and execution.<sup>6341</sup> Among those arrested during the first week of April 1976 was YIM Sambath who confessed under torture that he had thrown the grenade on the orders of CHAKK Yun, another member of Division 170.<sup>6342</sup> According to KAING Guek Eav alias Duch, YIM Sambath's aim was not to kill anyone, but rather to cause a slight disturbance.<sup>6343</sup> Duch's prefatory notes to YIM Sambath's confession indicate that

Its forces were composed of soldiers from the East Zone and were under the command of CHAN Chakrei who was appointed Deputy Chief of the General Staff of the Revolutionary Army of Kampuchea and remained commander of the 170th Centre Division. there had been gunfire at the Fine Arts School in Phnom Penh in October 1975 which was also initiated by CHAKK Yun.<sup>6344</sup> CHAKK Yun was arrested in May 1976 and, in his confession, implicated CHAN Chakrei, Secretary of Division 170,<sup>6345</sup> for subversive activities. CHAN Chakrei was then arrested on 20 May 1976.<sup>6346</sup>

1891. Based upon Duch's reports, SON Sen believed that CHAN Chakrei was responsible for the gunfire at the Fine Arts School, the grenade explosion(s) at the Royal Palace, and the distribution of leaflets critical of the CPK leadership.<sup>6347</sup>

1892. The distribution of critical leaflets (or tracts) had occurred in a number of locations and was the subject of a meeting between SON Sen and the staff of S-21, which had conducted interrogations to determine the source of the leaflets.<sup>6348</sup> During this meeting SON Sen reported that on 26 August 1976, there was unrest at Ang Prouch on the border between Kandal Steung district and Sector 33 and that prior to these events people in Sector 25 raised a white banner proclaiming "Long Live Buddhism" and "Long Live the White Khmer Front of Liberation from Rice by the Can".<sup>6349</sup> SON Sen reported to the Divisions and Regiment Secretaries that 160 persons were arrested and that "responses", which were obtained through torture, implicated CHAN Chakrei in the organisation of the dissent.<sup>6350</sup> Leaflets were also distributed in June, July and September 1976 stating: "Small fry eats a little, big shot eats a lot" and proclaiming the existence of a "Pure, New Revolutionary Organization" were found near the Wat

Botum, the Chinese Embassy and the Royal Palace.<sup>6351</sup> Duch reported to SON Sen on the responses of Division 170 cadres who had been arrested and interrogated at S-21 under torture regarding these events.<sup>6352</sup> Duch concluded that no one had paid heed to the leaflets but he identified whom he deemed most responsible: [ROS] Phuon, who was a Division 170 committee member.<sup>6353</sup> SON Sen agreed that the leaflets did not pose a danger, but were an attempt to divide CPK forces. 21.<sup>6360</sup> By the end of the DK regime, a total of 437 Division 170 soldiers were killed at S-21.<sup>6361</sup>

1894. CHAN Chakrei was arrested after he was implicated in these subversive activities by several torture-tainted confessions arising from S-21 which, as discussed earlier, cannot be relied on for the truth of their content.<sup>6362</sup> Witness CHHOUK Rin also told OCIJ investigators that CHAN Chakrei tried to overthrow POL Pot in 1976, but the source of his information is not clear and he makes reference to S-21 confessions being broadcast on DK radio.<sup>6363</sup> For his part, OUK Bunchhoeun told Stephen HEDER that he thought that CHAN Chakrei was arrested for impregnating a woman and not for attempting a coup against the government.<sup>6364</sup> However, SON Sen and the Standing Committee were suspicious of CHAN Chakrei for reasons independent of the confessions. SON Sen notes that Angkar had ordered CHAN Chakrei to investigate Sophan,<sup>6365</sup> but that CHAN Chakrei had instead informed Sophan that Angkar suspected him of being an enemy.<sup>6366</sup> One year earlier, the Standing Committee also noted that prior to 17 April 1975, CHAN Chakrei had abandoned his post.<sup>6367</sup> On this basis, the Standing Committee assumed that there was reason to question CHAN Chakrei's loyalty to the Party.

1895. SON Sen's conclusion that the gunfire at the Fine Arts School, the grenade explosion at the Royal Palace and the distribution of critical leaflets were linked appears to arise from torture-tainted confessions, what renders this conclusion to be suspect.

Nevertheless, the evidence is clear that individuals from Division 170, including CHAN Chakrei, were arrested and executed at S-21 as suspected traitors in connection to these events.<sup>6368</sup>

1896. However, the Chamber does not consider that the gunfire at the Fine Arts School, the grenade explosions at the Royal Palace and the distribution of leaflets critical of the CPK leadership are accurately characterised as an attempted coup d'état. The distribution of materials critical of the regime does not evince an attempt to overthrow it. Even SON Sen and Duch, who were suspicious of the activity, did not consider it to pose a danger to the regime. Nonetheless, they reacted with extreme prejudice by arresting hundreds of Division 170 soldiers, extracting torture-tainted confessions, killing them without due process and sending others either to Prey Sar or to the Kampong Chhnang Airfield Construction Site for tempering.<sup>6369</sup>

1897. Further, the grenade explosion(s) at the Royal Palace did not target any senior CPK officials, as they were located elsewhere in Phnom Penh. Although former King NORODOM Sihanouk may have been present in the compound, he did not form part of the senior CPK leadership, and there was no suggestion by SON Sen or Duch that he was the target of an attack. Even if the Chamber accepts Duch's conclusion that the grenade explosion was meant to cause mischief, it does not support the claim that this was an attempted coup. Finally, although there is limited evidence on the gunfire at the Fine Arts School, there is no evidence that it targeted the senior CPK leadership or that it resulted in any casualties or injuries.<sup>6370</sup>

1898. The Chamber accepts that some within the divisions and regiments of the Kampuchean Revolutionary Army were dissatisfied with the regime and sought to express this by distributing critical leaflets. However, these attempts did little to cause disruption to the CPK senior leadership and were met by the mass killing of a large number of Division 170 soldiers on the basis of confessions obtained through torture.

If this were a coup attempt, it was a feeble one that was crushed by the CPK. It cannot be said that these incidents undermined the authority or power structure in Democratic Kampuchea in a way that would impact the criminal responsibility of the Accused. Furthermore, the extraction of torture-tainted confessions can neither be considered due process nor would it in any way justify the imposition of capital punishment on Division 170 soldiers.<sup>6371</sup>

1899. The Chamber notes that Duch's reports to SON Sen as well as the Standing Committee minutes recording discussions of CHAN Chakrei make no mention of any difficulties in securing arrests of Division 170 soldiers.<sup>6372</sup> Once arrests were ordered by the Standing Committee they were in most cases, if not all, executed.<sup>6373</sup> The Chamber therefore considers that the purge of Division 170 soldiers shows the degree of control exercised by the CPK in its ability to identify suspects and secure their immediate arrest without resistance.

12.1.5.1.1. Submissions

1900. The NUON Chea Defence submits that a second coup d'état attempt occurred in 1977. This was led principally by Central (old North) Zone Division 310, with SBAUV Him alias Oeun at its head, seeking to capture Phnom Penh from the CPK.<sup>6374</sup> Although it submits that evidence suggests the involvement of other divisions as well, the Defence does not cite any additional evidence, submitting that this is due to the Chamber's denial of its motions for new investigations.<sup>6375</sup> Further, it submits the coup leaders would have sought the assistance of Vietnam if necessary.<sup>6376</sup>

1901. Based on the testimony of nine witnesses, in particular SEM Hoern, a soldier in Division 310, and DC-Cam statements, the NUON Chea Defence submits that Oeun formulated a plan to attack Phnom Penh militarily to topple the DK regime.<sup>6377</sup> The plan was to cut off Phnom Penh's access to the outside world, cripple the capital's defences and directly target POL Pot.<sup>6378</sup> His troops were therefore to seize the Phnom Penh radio station and airport as well as the Ministry of Defence, in coordination with East Zone forces.<sup>6379</sup> Further, POL Pot was to be attacked.<sup>6380</sup>

1902. The Co-Prosecutors submit that the testimony of SEM Hoern was not credible. Although he claimed in his DC-Cam statement that he was a battalion commander, SEM Hoern testified that he was only a platoon commander. He further told DC-Cam that he burned down civilians' homes and arrested civilians in Vietnam, but later testified that he had not even been to Vietnam.<sup>6381</sup> SEM Hoern also testified that HUN Sen was the Deputy Commander of Division 310, which was part of the Northern Zone, when the evidence indicates that HUN Sen was actually based in the East Zone.<sup>6382</sup> As to his statements concerning Oeun's alleged plan to commit a coup d'état, SEM Hoern testified that he had no knowledge of this and had never received any orders from Oeun – although Oeun's S-21 confession had been broadcast to all of the troops.<sup>6383</sup> The Co-Prosecutors further submit that the fact that Division 310 troops may have placed slogans protesting the regime does not justify the summary detention and execution of the entire division.<sup>6384</sup>

be the head of the plot to overthrow POL Pot, was arrested on 19 February 1977 and brought to S-21.<sup>6387</sup> His deputy, Voeung,<sup>6388</sup> was also arrested and taken to S-21.<sup>6389</sup>

1904. The evidence before the Chamber shows that a few days or weeks before the arrest of Oeun, a meeting was held at Wat Phnom in Phnom Penh, where Oeun addressed a number of Regiments of Division 310. During the meeting Oeun announced a planned attack on Phnom Penh. The attack, however, never occurred.<sup>6390</sup> Approximately two weeks after Oeun was arrested, his arrest was announced at meetings in Phnom Penh where both his and KOY Thuon's audio-recorded confessions were broadcast.<sup>6391</sup>

1905. As noted above, the NUON Chea Defence identifies nine witnesses it submits are relevant to the alleged plot by SBAUV Him alias Oeun and Division 310 to execute a coup d'état.<sup>6392</sup> The Chamber notes that the statements of four of these witnesses were recorded by DC-Cam, were not interviewed by OCIJ investigators and did not testify at trial.<sup>6393</sup> The Chamber accords little weight to such statements in the absence of their testimony.

1906. Of the remaining witnesses, four testified at trial and are considered below. The final witness, KHORN Prak, was interviewed by OCIJ investigators, but did not testify in court.<sup>6394</sup> Without the opportunity for cross-examination, the Chamber approaches this witness's testimony with due caution.

1907. Four witnesses heard in court testified to a plan by SBAUV Him alias Oeun, the commander of Division 310, to overthrow the DK regime. In addition to the four witnesses identified by the NUON Chea Defence, the Chamber notes that NUON Trech, another member of Division 310 sent to Kampong Chhnang Airfield, also gave evidence on an alleged plan to attack Phnom Penh.<sup>6395</sup> The Chamber will therefore also consider his testimony in its assessment of the evidence.

1908. The evidence is consistent in relation to SBAUV Him alias Oeun’s arrest, which is known to have taken place in February 1977 and to which many witnesses referred.<sup>6396</sup> His confession was broadcast several weeks later.<sup>6397</sup>

12.1.5.1.2.1. Evidence of a planned “coup d’état”

1909. First, SEM Hoern was a soldier in Division 310 and fought in numerous battles under Oeun starting in 1970, and entered Phnom Penh in 1975 with his battalion.<sup>6398</sup> He testified that about one month prior to SBAUV Him alias Oeun’s arrest, he and his battalion of 36 men transported six truckloads of weapons from the Division 310 warehouse at Wat Phnom in Phnom Penh to a village in Kampong Cham, where the Sector Secretary CHAN Mon alias Tol accepted them.<sup>6399</sup> SEM Hoern said that the transportation of weapons was in preparation of an attack on Pochentong Airport.<sup>6400</sup>

1910. Concerning SEM Hoern’s reliability, the Chamber notes that he initially testified that he did not know about Oeun’s acts of treason, but was told that he was affiliated with a traitorous network.<sup>6401</sup> Nonetheless, he said that he thought that Oeun wanted to create a movement to fight against DK because the regime was killing people.<sup>6402</sup> During the second day of his testimony, SEM Hoern provided more concrete details about Oeun’s plan. He testified that Oeun hatched a plan for Division 310 to occupy the national radio station in Steung Mean Chey and Pochentong Airport, and ultimately to commit a coup d’état sometime in 1977.<sup>6403</sup> SEM Hoern also testified that he transported weapons one month prior to Oeun’s arrest (in February 1977) but also stated that Oeun had been disarmed in August 1976 and never received

Around 24 August 1976, SEM Hoern was accused of being liberal because he moved about freely and spoke with soldiers from another unit in Phnom Penh. He subsequently was forced to write a biography on 24 August 1976. See Prisoner Biography – SEM Hoern, E3/7516, 24 August 1976, pp. 1-6, ERN (En) 00885201-00885206.

weapons thereafter.<sup>6404</sup> Although SEM Hoern may have confused certain dates, the contradiction here raises doubt as to the reliability of his evidence.

1911. After Oeun was arrested in 1977, SEM Hoern learned that the latter had created the Khmer Sar or “White Khmer” to overthrow the DK regime.<sup>6405</sup> He said that Khmer Sar was established after 1975, but upon further questioning he said that he did not know when it was established.<sup>6406</sup> BAN Seak and TOAT Thoeun also provided testimony as to the use of the term “White Khmer” in the Northwest and Central (old North) Zones. However, the Chamber finds this evidence to be based on unreliable hearsay.<sup>6407</sup>

1912. SEM Hoern initially stated that he did not know who would be poised to replace the DK leadership and indicated to be unaware of whether SAO Phim or RUOS Nhim was to be involved.<sup>6408</sup> In response to leading questions from the NUON Chea Defence, however, SEM Hoern testified that it was SAO Phim and KOY Thuon who were involved in the planned rebellion; with the centre army (Division 310) to attack Phnom Penh and the sector forces to attack at the sector level.<sup>6409</sup> The source of SEM Hoern’s knowledge was hearsay and the inferences he made based thereon.<sup>6410</sup> These factors, as well as the fact that SEM Hoern was unable to remember important details, raise doubts as to the reliability of his evidence.

1913. Further, SEM Hoern testified that HUN Sen had a military position in Division 310, though admitted not knowing what it was.<sup>6411</sup> In his DC-Cam interview, he stated that HUN Sen was the Deputy Chief of Division 310 and that SEM Hoern joined HUN

I was told that, ‘your division chief was a traitor, betrayed the Party and Angkar’ and after that time, I was asked whether I wanted to hear the recording.”), 89 (asked about KOY Thuon’s role in a rebellion, witness responded, “The reason that I knew there was a plan was because he was the head of the North Zone. [...] I never saw the two individual[s] [KOY Thuon and Oeun] had a discussion together but I knew the two individuals and as for how they communicated or discussed the matter, I have no idea.”).

Sen in battle when the latter suffered an injury to his eye.<sup>6412</sup> This is not consistent with HUN Sen's version of these events. In 1980, the latter told Ben KIERNAN in an interview that he had lost his eye on 16 April 1975, in the battle for Phnom Penh.<sup>6413</sup> Moreover, there is no evidence in the Case File that corroborates SEM Hoern's account that HUN Sen served in the Central (old North) Zone.<sup>6414</sup> These inconsistencies raise further doubts as to SEM Hoern's credibility as a witness.

1914. Second, KEO Loeur was a member (and for one to two weeks, the chief) of Battalion K-4 which consisted of injured and disabled soldiers forming part of Division 310.<sup>6415</sup> He testified that prior to Oeun's arrest he saw a truck in front of Calmette Hospital in Phnom Penh which was transporting weapons from the north toward Phnom Penh.<sup>6416</sup> He asked where it was going and was told to mind his own business.<sup>6417</sup> KEO Loeur also testified that prior to the arrest of Oeun, food was brought to Battalion K-4 to be cooked and packaged in support of the rebellion.<sup>6418</sup> He also testified that a few days before Oeun was arrested, he attended a meeting north of Wat Phnom in Phnom Penh whereat Oeun spoke to four Regiments of Division 310 discussing a "plan to overthrow the DK regime".<sup>6419</sup> Oeun said that Battalion K-4 was to assist the rebellion by cooking and packaging food.<sup>6420</sup> Oeun stated that soldiers should receive wages, live comfortably and be authorised to visit their parents.<sup>6421</sup> Oeun was arrested the next day.<sup>6422</sup> The Chamber found KEO Loeur's testimony to be reliable and to support the notion that Oeun was planning an attack on the CPK leadership.

1915. Third, SEM Om, who was a soldier in Battalion 502 of Division 1 which became Division 310 and later worked as the messenger for HIM Hon, chairman of Regiment 13 in Division 310,<sup>6423</sup> testified that about two weeks before SBAUV Him alias Oeun's arrest that he saw camouflaged uniforms, boots and weapons stored at a Regiment 13 (Division 310) warehouse "opposite the Ministry of Propaganda" near the Central Market.<sup>6424</sup> The uniforms were of poor quality, perhaps war spoils, and SEM Om was told they were for use by soldiers.<sup>6425</sup> The weapons were a mix of war spoils and others originating from the U.S., China, the Soviet Union and Cuba.<sup>6426</sup> The witness did not know about a plan to attack Pochentong Airport and only later, after hearing Oeun's confession, concluded that the uniforms and weapons were for use in preparation of an attack on Phnom Penh.<sup>6427</sup> The Chamber is not convinced that the mere fact that weapons had been stored leads to the conclusion that there was a plot to overthrow POL Pot. SEM Om's inference that the weapons and uniforms were for an attack on Phnom Penh was not supported by any direct evidence.

1916. SEM Om also testified that Oeun's messenger told him about a document indicating that within 24 hours of the initiation of a plan, the United States would come in to help.<sup>6428</sup> The Chamber is not convinced that the U.S. planned to assist Division 310 in an attack on POL Pot as there is no credible documentary or testimonial evidence to support SEM Om on this point.

1917. SEM Om also testified that in mid-August or early September 1978 he was operating a radio near the border with Vietnam where he heard Khmer language broadcasts containing entreaties to Cambodians to lay down their weapons and join the movement to overthrow the POL Pot regime because it was killing Khmer people.<sup>6429</sup>

The Chamber considers this evidence, while credible, unrelated to the attempted 1977 coup by Oeun.

1918. There were multiple accounts from witnesses, some of whom were credible, that Oeun's arrest was announced at a meeting or meetings. NUON Trech testified that approximately two weeks after Oeun was arrested, a three-day meeting was held at a school to the north of Wat Phnom.<sup>6430</sup> The meeting was chaired by Nha, the new commander of Division 310, who came from the Southwest Zone,<sup>6431</sup> and was attended by all cadres and soldiers from Division 310.<sup>6432</sup> The new commander of Division 310 announced that Oeun and those in the Central and the North Zones had planned to attack Phnom Penh,<sup>6433</sup> that they were traitors and had therefore been arrested.<sup>6434</sup> During the meeting, a tape recording of Oeun's confession was played through a loudspeaker in which he admitted to planning to attack Phnom Penh.<sup>6435</sup> Some witnesses testified that other confessions were also played including those of KOY Thuon, Voeng and Kim (a deputy commander of Division 310).<sup>6436</sup> Therefore, there may have been more than one meeting shortly after Oeun's arrest in February 1977 at which a suspected plot to attack the CPK in Phnom Penh was discussed.

1919. SEM Hoern testified that at a study session at Wat Phnom during which Southwest Zone people took over the North Zone, SEM Hoern was told that KOY Thuon and Oeun were arrested because they were part of a traitorous network.<sup>6437</sup> SEM Hoern testified that a recording of Oeun's confession was played at the session and that Oeun's recorded voice was hoarse probably because he had been tortured.<sup>6438</sup> SEM Om also attended a meeting of 1,000 people at the hospital behind Wat Phnom during which SON Sen announced the arrest of Oeun and played a recording of his confession in which SEM Om distinguished the sound of chains.<sup>6439</sup> While NUON Trech did not recall hearing the voice of SON Sen, the witness also admitted he did not know what SON Sen looked like.<sup>6440</sup> KEO Loeur attended a meeting at a school during which the recordings of Oeun and Kim's S-21 confessions were played.<sup>6441</sup> SUOY Sao was a soldier in Division 310 under Ta Oeun,<sup>6442</sup> who when questioned about these same events during his testimony was unable to recall them.<sup>6443</sup>

<sup>6443</sup> T. 18 August 2016 (SUOY Sav), E1/460.1, p. 57. In assessing SUOY Sao's reliability, the Chamber notes that he told DC-Cam that he attended a meeting before the arrest of Oeun, held south of Phsar Thmei (Central Market). When he testified in court, however, he could neither recall this meeting nor many other details. See also, SUOY Sav DC-Cam Interview, E3/7535, 20 January 2005, p. 22, ERN (En) 00324176. More precisely, SUOY Sao told DC-Cam that he attended a meeting at which Oeun called for an attack on Phnom Penh and that the latter had established a special squad of 100 combatants who were shipped weapons for the attack. See SUOY Sav DC-Cam Interview, E3/7535, 20 January 2005, pp. 14, 17-18, ERN (En) 00324168, 00324171-00324172. Upon testifying, he stated that he never attended such a meeting and never received a shipment of weapons, and only heard about these events from others (see T. 18 August 2016 (SUOY Sav), E1/460.1, pp. 14, 52-53, 69). He further testified that he only learned about Oeun's planned attack after Oeun was arrested (see T. 18 August 2016 (SUOY Sav), E1/460.1, p. 32). SUOY Sao did not recall fellow Division 310 soldiers being arrested despite the fact that more than 1,000 had been round up, predominantly after the arrest of Oeun (see T. 18 August 2016 (SUOY Sav), E1/460.1, pp. 46-47). SUOY Sao did not explain why his DC-Cam statement and testimony varied to such a significant degree. The NUON Chea Defence asserted during the day-long hearing of SUOY Sao's testimony that something must have happened during a lunch break in the proceedings that was affecting the witnesses' answers (see T. 18 August 2016 (SUOY Sav), E1/460.1, pp. 54, 70). Upon careful review of the transcripts of this hearing, the Chamber does not find there to be support for Defence's submission. See Section 2.4.7.4: Considerations Regarding Specific Witnesses: Witnesses SOY Sao (SUOY Sav) and SEM Om (SEM Am). First, the witness denied that he had been approached by anyone seeking to alter his testimony (see T. 18 August 2016 (SUOY Sav), E1/460.1, p. 75). The Chamber notes that SUOY Sao was confused and forgetful throughout his testimony. He could not recall important events from the outset, including when or how he participated in the liberation of Phnom Penh from the LON Nol regime (see T. 18 August 2016 (SUOY Sav), E1/460.1, pp. 7, 44). He was likewise unable to recall large parts of his DC-Cam interview, and when he did, it was only after lengthy tracts thereof were read out in court (see T. 18 August 2016 (SUOY Sav), E1/460.1, pp. 15-17, 18, 20). This despite the fact that his DC-Cam interview had been read back to him prior to his testimony (see T. 18 August 2016 (SUOY Sav), E1/460.1, pp. 4-5). Even on its own, SUOY Sao's DC-Cam interview contained inconsistent statements, which were confusing and imprecise. See SUOY Sav DC-Cam Interview, E3/7535, 20 January 2005, pp. 9, 12, ERN (En) 00324163, 00324166 (stating at various times in the interview that he was in Regiment 14 or Regiment 12). Therefore, the Chamber considers SUOY Sao's evidence to be of limited reliability.

1920. After the meeting during which Oeun was condemned, both SEM Hoern's battalion commander, Et, and his company commander, Eng (to whom SEM Hoern was related), were arrested and taken to Prey Sar.<sup>6444</sup> In early 1977, SEM Hoern was disarmed and sent to work at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield worksite.<sup>6445</sup> He was aware that people from Division 310 were being arrested around 4 April 1977 as people from his unit were disappearing.<sup>6446</sup> Despite the Chamber's concerns with SEM Hoern's credibility, the Chamber finds that these details were consistent with other evidence of the purge of East Zone cadres.

1921. NUON Trech was also sent to be refashioned at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield worksite about two weeks after the meeting.<sup>6447</sup> SEM Om testified that after Oeun was arrested, things became chaotic and people in the battalion and regiment shot themselves.<sup>6448</sup> SEM Om's former chief, HIM Hon, committed suicide by riding his motorcycle into a parked car, breaking his neck.<sup>6449</sup> Division 310 soldiers were sent to work the fields in Boeng Prayab, Kab Srov and at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield worksite.<sup>6450</sup>

1922. One further witness cited by the NUON Chea Defence, KHORN Prak, did not testify at trial, although he was twice interviewed by DC-Cam and once by the Co-Investigating Judges.<sup>6451</sup> KHORN Prak stated that he had worked directly under commander Oeun in the 306th Special Forces Battalion (before the evacuation of Phnom Penh) and later within Division 310 (since its creation after the evacuation).<sup>6452</sup> Oeun had administered KHORN Prak's oath to become a full-rights member of the Party.<sup>6453</sup>

1923. KHORN Prak stated that several weeks before Oeun was arrested, KHORN Prak attended a meeting at Wat Phnom at which his battalion commander, Yim, spoke to about 300 combatants and told them to prepare their weapons for an attack on Phnom Penh.<sup>6454</sup> They were to attack the radio station near Wat Phnom to make a special announcement – the content of which was unknown to him.<sup>6455</sup> Hak and Pin, both from Division 310, had distributed tanks and were prepared to open fire at about 3 o'clock, but when the appointed time arrived, none of the regiments were reachable by radio as they had been called into meetings to be arrested.<sup>6456</sup>

1924. KHORN Prak told DC-Cam that he was subsequently called to a meeting near Wat Phnom where the taped confessions of Oeun, Sinuon (Ministry of Commerce), and all the regimental/battalion commanders were played.<sup>6457</sup> KHORN Prak later told the Co-Investigating Judges that he only heard the voice of Sinuon on the recording.<sup>6458</sup> The bulk of evidence however supports KHORN Prak's earlier statement that Oeun's taped confession was also played. The Chamber considers that the change between the accounts KHORN Prak provided to DC-Cam and the OCIJ investigators can be attributed to the passage of time and does not impact the overall reliability of his statements. His statements were otherwise credible and support other accounts that Oeun had plans to attack POL Pot's forces.

1925. Apart from the testimonies heard at trial, the Chamber has before it certain documentary evidence regarding Oeun's activities. In March and May 1976, Oeun reported to SON Sen on measures to capture enemies within the CPK and RAK ranks.<sup>6459</sup> Oeun reported that he had tracked down and arrested those accused of stealing food or seeking to flee the CPK.<sup>6460</sup> In May and August 1976, Oeun participated in meetings of military commanders during which he reported to SON Sen on a variety of issues, including rice production by Division 310 and the identification of enemy elements.<sup>6461</sup> Finally, there is a report from Ren to the General Staff Office indicating that Oeun was cooperating in the identification and investigation of suspected traitors.<sup>6462</sup> The Chamber notes that this documentary evidence shows that Oeun was working to achieve CPK policies by increasing rice yields and identifying enemy elements. Furthermore, in one meeting, Oeun voiced his opposition to collectivisation, stating that mobilising forces from one place to another would waste time and energy adversely impacting the health of workers.<sup>6463</sup> Rather than attempting to hide his disagreement with CPK policy, Oeun told his superior, SON Sen, in a meeting with other military commanders that other means would be necessary to obtain CPK objectives in rice production. Nonetheless, neither does this obviate the possibility that Oeun later became discontented nor that he sought to displace the CPK leadership.

12.1.5.1.2.2. Conclusion

1926. In addition to the credibility issues noted above, the Chamber notes that each of the witnesses who testified at trial regarding Oeun's plans were exposed to his torture-tainted confession which was played at a meeting announcing his arrest.<sup>6464</sup> Torture-tainted confessions are inherently unreliable.<sup>6465</sup> In addition, the Chamber recalls it has already found SEM Hoern's evidence problematic and treated it with caution.<sup>6466</sup>

1927. The Chamber considers that the movement of weapons, as described by KEO Loeur, may have been implemented for various reasons and in itself this does not lead to the conclusion that these weapons were to be used in an attempted coup. The fact that they were being sent from Phnom Penh towards Kampong Cham (in the direction of Vietnam) can also be considered consistent with the fact that hostilities with Vietnam were on the rise throughout 1977.<sup>6467</sup> Similarly the storage of camouflaged uniforms and boots in Division 310 warehouses, as described by SEM Om, does not establish in itself the existence of a planned coup and the same can be said of the preparation of food for soldiers. The Chamber acknowledges however, the evidence provided by several witnesses that the food and other supplies were for use in an attempted coup and that uniforms and weapons were available to Division 310 soldiers.

1928. The Chamber considers that, as described above, the evidence provided by the witnesses who testified as to preparations for a coup raises a number of reliability issues due to: variations in the accounts given by a particular witness; the lack of clarity of the evidence provided; equivocal factual descriptions; the fact that evidence was tainted by torture, marred by a common narrative or based on hearsay and impossible to test. Nonetheless, the Chamber considers that, based on an overall assessment there is enough credible evidence, not tainted by torture, that Oeun was planning to lead Division 310, or members thereof, to attack the DK government in Phnom Penh. The Chamber notes in particular SEM Hoern's testimony that Oeun wanted to create a movement to fight against DK because the regime was killing people based upon a meeting he attended wherein Oeun announced an intent to take over Phnom Penh.<sup>6468</sup> Although the Chamber has doubts concerning the reliability of SEM Hoern's evidence, this account was corroborated by KHORN Prak's statements that his battalion commander Yim, who was Oeun's subordinate, had told his troops to prepare to attack Phnom Penh. The evidence was further corroborated by KEO Loeur who attended a meeting north of Wat Phnom in Phnom Penh whereat Oeun told four Regiments in Division 310 his plans to overthrow the DK regime.<sup>6469</sup> The Chamber is also convinced that Oeun sought to obtain better conditions for his soldiers, the right to visit their parents and to receive wages.<sup>6470</sup> There was no evidence however that Oeun was acting on behalf of any foreign power.

1929. Before any attack unfolded, Oeun and the leadership of Division 310 were arrested.<sup>6471</sup> Audio-recordings of their confessions were played to Division 310 soldiers and Southwest Zone cadres took over all of the leadership positions in Division 310.<sup>6472</sup> After Oeun's arrest in February 1977, hundreds of members of Division 310 were arrested and between March and August 1977, about 600 individuals from Division 310 were killed,<sup>6473</sup> including at least nine wives and children of Division 310 members.<sup>6474</sup>

Other members of Division 310 were first sent to work at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield worksite, where some of them were arrested and killed.<sup>6475</sup> Ultimately, at least 1,268 Division 310 members were killed at S-21 without any due process.<sup>6476</sup> As KHORN Prak told his interviewers,

[If you opposed the leaders], then you die. But no matter how good you were, it was death, there were no courts to try you in time, it was pure dictatorship. Like I said, there were no courts or justice of any kind, none. If they thought they hated us, they killed us.<sup>6477</sup>

1930. The soldiers within Division 310 were stripped of their weapons. Many were sent to be tempered through farming or to the Kampong Chhnang Airfield worksite.<sup>6478</sup>

1931. The Chamber concludes Oeun initiated a plan to fight against the CPK leadership because he disagreed with its policies. It is not clear that this posed any threat to the DK regime because soon after the plot was discovered, Oeun and his deputy and subordinates were arrested without any reported fight. The Chamber does not consider the existence of this planned coup deprived the CPK Standing Committee of control over the locations of crimes alleged in Case 002/02. There was no evidence that Oeun was involved in any of the alleged crimes in Case 002/02. Any connections he may have had with East Zone leadership are addressed below. Furthermore, the mass arrest and execution of hundreds of Division 310 soldiers without due process or any indication, apart from torture-tainted confessions, that they were fighting against the CPK leadership, cannot legally be excused or justified.<sup>6479</sup> Even if some of these soldiers had planned to follow Oeun's orders to attempt a coup d'état, when these soldiers were disarmed and arrested, they were entitled to due process. rejects the submission that the above events eradicated soldiers' rights and justified torturing, killing or otherwise persecuting hundreds of Division 310 soldiers at S-21.

12.1.5.2. Northwest Zone and RUOS Nhim

12.1.5.2.1. Submissions

1932. The NUON Chea Defence submits that as part of the coup d'état, Vietnamese collaborators were to “break the CPK’s spine by seizing control of the country” simultaneously with the take-over of Phnom Penh by Division 310 discussed above. It further suggests that the East Zone would also participate in executing the plot.<sup>6480</sup> The Defence identified ten witnesses to trace this aspect of the plot to the Northwest Zone and RUOS Nhim.<sup>6481</sup> According to the NUON Chea Defence, in order to achieve this, the Northwest Zone Secretary RUOS Nhim was attempting to deplete the CPK’s capacity by siphoning off supplies, such as military materiel and food and disrupting working productivity generally.<sup>6482</sup> Citing to transcripts of a conversation recorded by THET Sambath and Robert LEMKIN which it attributes to CHAN Savuth,<sup>6483</sup> the Defence submits that the Northwest Zone was stockpiling rice, hiding it from POL Pot or destroying it.<sup>6484</sup> The NUON Chea Defence submits that RUOS Nhim also sought to subvert the CPK by distributing money to pay salaries and refusing to engage militarily with Vietnam.<sup>6485</sup> It is submitted that RUOS Nhim ordered arrests to create chaos, foment discontent, and prevent work from being completed.<sup>6486</sup> It is also submitted that a series of meetings were held around Phnom Penh from May 1975 and in the Northwest Zone in late 1976 to organise the rebellion.<sup>6487</sup> However, the NUON Chea Defence submits, the plan was gradually thwarted and the leaders of the rebellion arrested.<sup>6488</sup>

The Chamber therefore does not take into account the submissions based upon these unadmitted transcripts alone.

1933. The Co-Prosecutors respond that the fact that POL Pot travelled frequently to the Northwest and East Zones and was received by RUOS Nhim and SAO Phim respectively shows that the latter two did not intend to overthrow and kill POL Pot.<sup>6489</sup> They ask how the Khmer Rouge could have won the war and maintained power if six of the seven zone secretaries, and five of nine army divisions, were traitors as alleged by the NUON Chea Defence.<sup>6490</sup> RUOS Nhim and SAO Phim even cooperated with Angkar in arresting their own soldiers, which contradicts the Defence submission that they were plotting against the Party Centre.<sup>6491</sup>

12.1.5.2.2. Preliminary issues

1934. In the section of its Closing Brief regarding RUOS Nhim's alleged participation in an attempted rebellion, the NUON Chea Defence relies heavily on the transcript of a witness (W3) interviewed by THET Sambath and Robert LEMKIN, whom it asserts is CHAN Savuth, a former Northwest Zone hospital director.<sup>6492</sup> The Chamber denied the NUON Chea Defence request to admit this transcript into evidence and therefore does not take these submissions into account.<sup>6493</sup>

1935. In addition to TOAT Thoeun's testimony before the Supreme Court Chamber during appeal proceedings in Case 002/01,<sup>6494</sup> the Trial Chamber admitted TOAT Thoeun's Written Record of Interview and the transcript of an interview of TOAT Thoeun conducted by THET Sambath and Robert LEMKIN sometime between 2006 and 2009.<sup>6495</sup> As to this last document, the Chamber noted that issues regarding challenges to the transcript's reliability would be considered by the Chamber when assessing the document's probative value.<sup>6496</sup> The Chamber finds that TOAT Thoeun's testimony, his OCIJ Written Record of Interview and THET-LEMKIN transcript were largely consistent and that his testimony was credible. Although the Parties did not have an opportunity to question the witness in the context of Case 002/02 as he died prior to his scheduled testimony,<sup>6497</sup> all Parties were permitted to question him in the Case 002/01 appeal hearings. In addition, the Chamber admitted the THET-LEMKIN transcript of TOAT Thoeun's interview, which may assist in determining the consistency of his testimony. The Chamber therefore finds that it may rely upon the testimony of TOAT Thoeun before the Supreme Court Chamber, as well as his Written Record of Interview and THET-LEMKIN transcript in this Judgement, particularly as the NUON Chea Defence places so much emphasis on them.

1936. TOAT Thoeun testified that he was a messenger and occasional bodyguard of RUOS Nhim from 1970 until 1975.<sup>6498</sup> In late 1975, he became deputy chief of the General Staff for the Northwest Zone.<sup>6499</sup> The Chamber notes that TOAT Thoeun's evidence pertains to events from 1975 until early 1976 when he was sent by his foster father, RUOS Nhim, to study in China.<sup>6500</sup> Upon TOAT Thoeun's return to DK in the latter part of 1977, and after two attempts were made to arrest him, he fled into the forest, seeking to steal rice to eat.<sup>6501</sup> In February 1978, Ta Mok stationed a battalion (around 480 soldiers) in the forest and TOAT Thoeun started a rebellion.<sup>6502</sup> He testified that he met RUOS Nhim prior to the latter's arrest which occurred in May or June 1978.<sup>6503</sup> The Chamber discusses each of these aspects of TOAT Thoeun's evidence as they arise below.

<sup>6503</sup> The Chamber notes that TOAT Thoeun did not provide a precise date when he met with RUOS Nhim. TOAT Thoeun did state however that he met with RUOS Nhim prior to the latter's arrest when it was clear to RUOS Nhim that his own arrest was imminent. See TOAT Thoeun Interview Record, E3/9610, p. 13, ERN (En) 00974023 (stating that prior to RUOS Nhim's arrest in August 1978, he came to meet with the witness). See also, T. 6 July 2015 (TOAT Thoeun), F1/3.1, pp. 85-87 (stating that when RUOS Nhim suspected that his own arrest was imminent, he met with the witness); TOAT Thoeun Interview by THET Sambath and Robert LEMKIN, E3/10665, undated, ERN (En) 01151759 (stating that Ta Mok's forces came to the Northwest Zone around February 1978, after which RUOS Nhim met with the Witness). As noted below, RUOS Nhim was arrested in June 1978. See below, para. 1944.

12.1.5.2.3. RUOS Nhim's opposition to CPK policies

1937. RUOS Nhim was the Secretary of the Northwest Zone until he was arrested and sent to S-21 in May or June 1978.<sup>6504</sup> TOAT Thoeun testified that prior to a CPK conference in Phnom Penh in May 1975, RUOS Nhim met with Northwest Zone sector secretaries, discussed the CPK policies, and decided to advocate to the Party Centre that the circulation of money be permitted and former Khmer Republic soldiers be allowed to return back to their homes.<sup>6505</sup> After the May 1975 Phnom Penh conference, TOAT Thoeun said there was a meeting at Borei Keila in Phnom Penh, in which the participants said that the Party Centre should allow people to return to their respective homes and villages, that money should be printed and put into circulation and that international assistance should be accepted for the war-ravaged country.<sup>6506</sup> Around the same time, RUOS Nhim also complained about these issues to his subordinates Keu, Paet, Tom and Mai.<sup>6507</sup> However, according to TOAT Thoeun, there was no plan to rebel at that time.<sup>6508</sup>

1938. According to the THET-LEMKIN transcript of TOAT Thoeun's interview, in mid to late 1977, RUOS Nhim told TOAT Thoeun that he had left POL Pot's Party and that he and SAO Phim were organising forces to resist.<sup>6509</sup> In the same transcript, TOAT Thoeun clarified that RUOS Nhim had the idea of resisting but he did not do so.<sup>6510</sup> TOAT Thoeun was angry with RUOS Nhim because the latter had arrested their fellow soldiers in the Northwest Zone on the orders of the Security Office (Santebal) and SON Sen.<sup>6511</sup>

1939. TOAT Thoeun stated that the Party Centre was to blame for the poor living conditions and, particularly for the lack of rice.<sup>6512</sup> He said that the people doing the hard labour only ate porridge while the rice harvest was taken by Angkar based on designated quotas.<sup>6513</sup> People in the Northwest Zone starved because there was nothing to eat and there were no medicines.<sup>6514</sup> He said this was all caused by the evacuation of cities as teachers, and other people who had never worked the earth, were forced to labour with insufficient food.<sup>6515</sup> TOAT Thoeun said it was the Party Centre's decisions that caused these deaths and because his foster father, RUOS Nhim, was a member of the Party Centre, he too was to blame.<sup>6516</sup> Further to this, on 11 May 1978, a report indicated that cadres in Region 5 of the Northwest Zone hid rice without giving it away to people and stated that this problem had already been solved.<sup>6517</sup> By this time, the Southwest Zone cadres led by Ta Mok were in control of the Northwest Zone. It was TOAT Thoeun's view that if RUOS Nhim had resisted POL Pot, as he himself did, many lives would have been saved.<sup>6518</sup>

1940. The Chamber considers that TOAT Thoeun's account of RUOS Nhim's motivations and actions is internally consistent and accepts TOAT Thoeun's evidence that RUOS Nhim did not plan or initiate steps to rebel against the CPK Standing Committee from the outset of the DK era in 1975.

12.1.5.2.4. Purge of the Northwest Zone

1941. Witness LAT Suoy, a guard at the Trapeang Thma Dam,<sup>6519</sup> testified that when the Southwest Zone cadres first arrived in June 1977 in the Northwest Zone, RUOS Nhim convened a meeting of the big chiefs to tell them that they had been accused of being traitors and that they should be careful of being arrested.<sup>6520</sup> While LAT Suoy was not present at that meeting, he testified that he learned this from his chief, Ta Nak, who then convened a meeting to inform his group of what transpired.<sup>6521</sup> LAT Suoy did not understand what treachery was being referred to, although he heard from sector soldiers that it may have been because a Chinese diplomat was killed by zone soldiers.<sup>6522</sup> A few days later, in June 1977, all Northwest Zone cadres such as Ta Val, Ta Maong, and Ta Hoeng, were arrested by the Southwest Zone cadres and taken away, along with their family members.<sup>6523</sup> LAT Suoy became fearful as more and more cadres down the rank were arrested.<sup>6524</sup> LAT Suoy's guard unit was instructed to lay down their arms and were reassigned to a mobile unit to collect cow dung.<sup>6525</sup>

1942. According to TOAT Thoeun and as illustrated in a telegram from RUOS Nhim to Office 870 (copied to "Uncle", "Uncle Nuon", "Brother Vann" and "Brother Vorn"), RUOS Nhim was cooperating with the Party Centre in the arrests ordered by SON Sen.<sup>6526</sup> RUOS Nhim was therefore acceding to the orders of the Party Centre when he sent his cadres to meetings in Phnom Penh.<sup>6527</sup> Other evidence on the Case File shows that until his arrest, RUOS Nhim was reporting to the Party Centre and implementing the Party Centre's orders.<sup>6528</sup>

1943. TOAT Thoeun testified that before RUOS Nhim's arrest in May to June 1978, he fled to the forest in order to fight against POL Pot.<sup>6529</sup> Two attempts had been made to arrest TOAT Thoeun and he confronted his foster father, RUOS Nhim, who asserted that it was the Party Centre, Office 870, that had ordered TOAT Thoeun's arrest.<sup>6530</sup>

1944. TOAT Thoeun testified that he was approached by RUOS Nhim in the forest around prior to the latter's arrest which occurred in May or June 1978.<sup>6531</sup> TOAT Thoeun's testimony before the Supreme Court Chamber, OCIJ Written Record of Interview and interview with THET Sambath and Richard LEMKIN were largely consistent as to what was expressed during that meeting. TOAT Thoeun testified that he told RUOS Nhim that perhaps NUON Chea had betrayed them and that is why the Northwest Zone cadres were killed.<sup>6532</sup> RUOS Nhim requested 300 troops from TOAT Thoeun for his own protection because his troops had been arrested.<sup>6533</sup> TOAT Thoeun agreed (at least to lend 150 soldiers) on condition that the troops not be sent to Angkar in Phnom Penh as they would be killed.<sup>6534</sup> RUOS Nhim understood that he and TOAT Thoeun would eventually be arrested by the Party Centre, but he did not accept TOAT Thoeun's invitation to join his resistance group.<sup>6535</sup> TOAT Thoeun stated that RUOS Nhim voiced support for his resistance movement, but that could not protect him anymore, as he knew that he himself would be arrested.<sup>6536</sup> About 10-14 days later, RUOS Nhim was indeed arrested and taken to S-21 where he was killed.<sup>6537</sup>

1945. Based on its own review of the evidence on the Case File, the Chamber finds that the contemporaneous S-21 documentation allows the identification of at least 1,423

1948. MUN Mot, a company chief who worked at Trapeang Thma Dam, stated in court that he saw supplies, including sandals, scarves, cigarette lighters and white shirts which were distributed to the unit chiefs.<sup>6548</sup> Although he told DC-Cam that weapons were brought from the East Zone, in court he testified that he did not see any weapons.<sup>6549</sup> MUN Mot also testified that the sandals were named "bopea" or "East" sandals.<sup>6550</sup> MUN Mot indicated that the materials were stored at Ta Val's location, which was the Trapeang Thma Dam worksite.<sup>6551</sup>

1949. CHHORN Vorn told investigators that he was RUOS Nhim's bodyguard and that he was always with Ta Nhim.<sup>6556</sup> He further told OCIJ investigators that in 1977, he used to escort RUOS Nhim to Phnum Den Mountain on the Vietnamese border so that Ta Nhim could transport military uniforms, which the latter said originated from Vietnam, to his home in Ampil Prahaong.<sup>6557</sup> But in a prior interview with OCIJ investigators, CHHORN Vorn said that as RUOS Nhim's driver, he always stayed in the car and never went to Sectors 3, 4, and 5 in Northwest Zone with RUOS Nhim.<sup>6558</sup> He added that RUOS Nhim went to Phnum Den only "once in a long while".<sup>6559</sup>

1951. In his testimony, CHHORN Vorn initially denied that he had driven RUOS Nhim to Phnum Den, saying it was another driver.<sup>6560</sup> He later recalled that he went there on one occasion at night with other guards.<sup>6561</sup> Although he did not know who actually brought the uniforms and he never heard people speaking Vietnamese, he assumed that the uniforms he transported were Vietnamese.<sup>6562</sup> He further stated that the uniforms were given to RUOS Nhim's bodyguards.<sup>6563</sup> The Chamber considers that the inconsistencies in this witness's testimony about the nature of his relationship with RUOS Nhim, the description of his assignment, the frequency of the trips to Phnum Den and the origins of the uniforms render his testimony unreliable. The Chamber further notes that Phnum Den was located in Southwest Zone under the supervision of

Ta Mok, which would have been an unusual location to try and evade the Party Centre.<sup>6564</sup>

1952. The Chamber considers that the distribution of sandals, uniforms and hammocks to workers at the Trapeang Thma Dam is unremarkable and not indicative of a plot to overthrow the DK regime. The Chamber further accepts TOAT Thoeun's evidence that the caching of weapons was not for the purpose of fighting the CPK. TOAT Thoeun left Cambodia for nearly two years and after his return retrieved the weapons that he had stored.<sup>6565</sup> It was only when he decided to take up arms against the Party Centre that the weapons were put to use.

1953. The Chamber also notes the Written Record of Interview of KHOEM Vai, a Sector 13 messenger in the Southwest Zone who was sent to the Northwest Zone in early 1977 to work in the Commerce Committee.<sup>6566</sup> Ta Mok sent a large contingent of Southwest Zone cadres and soldiers with IM Chaem at the lead to replace Northwest Zone cadres who had been purged or who were later to be removed.<sup>6567</sup> The group stopped in Phnom Penh on the way to the Northwest Zone and attended a meeting during which NUON Chea said there were traitors in the Northwest Zone.<sup>6568</sup> KHOEM Vai stated that clothing and rice, both of which should have been distributed to the people, were maintained in Northwest Zone warehouses until they were old or spoiled.<sup>6569</sup> He added: "There was plentiful of rice in the Northwest Zone. There was no reason why people were given only rice gruel to eat".<sup>6570</sup> The Chamber notes that KHOEM Vai's arrival in the Northwest Zone coincided with the purge in that location and that his protestations of ignorance of the purge are not credible given the extent of the purges and his assignment to work as a cadre in a key position at Sector 5. There is also reason to doubt the witness's claim that there was plentiful rice to feed the Northwest Zone but for the acts of traitorous cadres. The evidence at trial was that workers at the Trapeang Thma Dam continued to suffer shortages of food after the arrival of Southwest Zone cadres.<sup>6571</sup> Even if the latter required time to remedy the situation, food shortages continued in 1977 and were exacerbated by the purge of Northwest Zone cadres.<sup>6572</sup>

12.1.5.2.6. Forces sent to Phnom Kaun Khlaeng (June 1977)

1954. The NUON Chea Defence makes reference to Northwest Zone forces fleeing with weapons to the forest, in Phnom Kaun Khlaeng, to fight the arriving Southwest Zone forces.<sup>6573</sup> Witness CHHUM Seng, a company chief within one of the mobile units operating at the Trapeang Thma Dam, testified of having heard from Ta Val, mobile unit chief of Sector 5 in charge of Trapeang Thma Dam, that RUOS Nhim sent reinforcement forces of around 200 or 300 people to Phnom Kaun Khlaeng and that later he withdrew them.<sup>6574</sup> However, CHHUM Seng clarified that, according to Ta Val, the forces were unarmed, carrying only farming tools.<sup>6575</sup> While the witness did not indicate in court when this event occurred, considering that CHHUM Seng testified to having received the assignment from Ta Val and that S-21 records indicate that Ta Val was arrested and taken to S-21 in June 1977,<sup>6576</sup> this event must have occurred sometime before that date. However, there is an apparent contradiction in his version of events since he indicated in his DC-Cam statement that this happened “[w]hen we were almost done with Trapeang Thma reservoir”,<sup>6577</sup> and the Chamber has found that the Dam was largely completed by the end of 1977 or mid-1978.<sup>6578</sup> Therefore, the date of this event is not clear.

1955. LAT Suoy heard sector soldiers speak about their plan of transporting weapons to the Phnom Kaun Khlaeng<sup>6579</sup> forest in order to counter the attack of Southwest Zone cadres and to prevent them from taking control of Sector 5.<sup>6580</sup> It is not clear that CHHUM Sen was discussing the same events as LAT Suoy given the differences in timing of the events. LAT Suoy's evidence was that soldiers fled to the forest with their weapons when they learned that RUOS Nhim was about to be arrested and stayed for about a fortnight, later withdrawing to Svay.<sup>6581</sup> Given that RUOS Nhim was arrested around June 1978,<sup>6582</sup> LAT Suoy's evidence would place this event in the first half of 1978. By this time, hundreds of Northwest Zone cadres had been arrested and executed at S-21.<sup>6583</sup> After the arrival of the Southwest Zone cadres, the soldiers were arrested by the Southwest Zone cadres.<sup>6584</sup> LAT Suoy's testimony was not corroborated. In any event, the Chamber finds that the movement of soldiers to Phnom Kaun Khlaeng would not signify an aggressive plan to attack the Party Centre in Phnom Penh but instead amounted to a response of several hundred soldiers seeking to protect the Northwest Zone from an imminent takeover by the Southwest Zone cadres and from subsequent purges.

1956. Witness MUN Mut, a company commander, testified that he heard information about a plan and that he, together with other unit chiefs, was invited to a meeting at Phnom Kaun Khlaeng during which it was said that all of the unit chiefs would become captains.<sup>6585</sup> But he did not understand what was meant.<sup>6586</sup> Ten to fifteen chiefs of companies and battalions participated in the secret meeting (or meetings), including PAN Chhuong (who had an important role in Sector 5),<sup>6587</sup> Mao (a female cadre from Doun Chaeng), Phoan and San.<sup>6588</sup> It seemed that there were no serious plans and those present made a joke of it during the meeting.<sup>6589</sup> There was no evidence that RUOS Nhim was present at, or had knowledge of, the secret meeting and the secret plan was never executed.<sup>6590</sup> Therefore, the Chamber does not consider that this evidence clearly implicates RUOS Nhim in a plot to overthrow POL Pot.

12.1.5.2.7. TOAT Thoeun's rebellion

1957. In around January 1976, RUOS Nhim sent TOAT Thoeun to China to study and he returned in around mid-1977 or November 1977.<sup>6591</sup> Upon his return and after two attempts were made to arrest him, TOAT Thoeun fled into the forest with nine others, seeking to steal rice to eat.<sup>6592</sup> In February 1978, Ta Mok sent a battalion to take control of the forest and TOAT Thoeun took his men to fight them, destroying most of the opposing forces but for 40 men who were able to escape.<sup>6593</sup> Mobile units started to join TOAT Thoeun in the forest, and later, non-combatants, fearing for their lives, also joined in hundreds and thousands.<sup>6594</sup> TOAT Thoeun took the weapons from the cache to fight against the Southwest Zone forces led by Ta Mok, known as the Army of the Centre, around August 1978.<sup>6595</sup> The Party Centre started calling TOAT's forces the Khmer Sar (White Khmer) although he never coined that term.<sup>6596</sup>

<sup>6587</sup> However, Witness PAN Chhuong testified that he never heard of any secret meeting being held. See T. 1 December 2015 (PAN Chhuong), E1/360.1, p. 32. PAN Chhuong also testified that there was no plan to rebel contemplated by Ta Val and Ta Prum. See T. 1 December 2015 (PAN Chhuong), E1/360.1, p. 93.

<sup>6593</sup> TOAT Thoeun Interview by THET Sambath and Robert LEMKIN, E3/10665, undated, ERN (En) 01156801-01156802. TOAT Thoeun explained that the Southwest Zone forces were newcomers and did not know the zone which explained how his small force was able to destroy them. However, there was no corroboration for the numbers put forward by TOAT Thoeun in this interview and he was not questioned on this point by the Co-Investigating Judges or the Supreme Court Chamber.

1958. TOAT Thoeun gave evidence that his rebellion had no connection or support from Vietnam as he was based along the Thai border.<sup>6597</sup> He had contact with Vietnamese in 1970, but by 1972 or 1973, the Vietnamese had left and TOAT Thoeun no longer had any contact with them.<sup>6598</sup> He was not aware whether RUOS Nhim had any such contact.<sup>6599</sup> TOAT Thoeun initiated the rebellion only because attempts had been made on his life by the Party Centre.<sup>6600</sup>

1959. The United Front of Cambodia forces, including those of PEN Sovann, HENG Samrin, and CHEA Sim arrived in Battambang around April or May of 1979.<sup>6601</sup> According to TOAT Thoeun, his forces initially fought against them as he believed they were Chinese supporters of the Khmer Rouge, but after capturing some of the opposing forces he discovered who they were and they coordinated attacks together against Ta Mok's forces.<sup>6602</sup>

12.1.5.2.8. Distribution of currency

1960. LAT Suoy also testified that about two months before the arrival of the Vietnamese,<sup>6603</sup> he saw a 10 Riel note of currency, reddish in colour, printed in Phnom Penh with a picture of a woman with a scarf on her head harvesting rice in the field and a man digging a field with a hoe.<sup>6604</sup> Although he told DC-Cam that he also saw two 20 Riel notes, he clarified that he was told that he would receive 20 Riels as payment, but he never examined the 20 Riel note.<sup>6605</sup> When presented with a picture of DK currency printed in 1975, the witness said it was of the same reddish colour, but that the currency he saw had fewer people in it.<sup>6606</sup> He said that the money was organised by the Southwest Zone to pay a salary to combatants.<sup>6607</sup> The witness explained that when he saw the notes, the Northwest Zone cadres had already been arrested by the Southwest Zone cadres and the money was organised by the latter group.<sup>6608</sup> However, he later estimated that he saw the notes in late 1977 and that RUOS Nhim, as well as those in Phnom Penh, were preparing to circulate currency and to reopen the markets.<sup>6609</sup> The Chamber finds this evidence is inconclusive as the currency could have been DK currency from 1975 or some other currency. The witness also testified that the money was organised by the Southwest Zone, which is unsubstantiated. Although several sources indicate that RUOS Nhim and SAO Phim sought to reopen markets and distribute currency, there is no credible evidence that currency was actually distributed before they were arrested and killed.

12.1.5.2.9. Collaboration with the East Zone

1961. TOAT Thoeun told THET Sambath that RUOS Nhim and SAO Phim had started a dialogue in August 1975 when RUOS Nhim's son, Cheal alias Chhnang (Sector 5 Deputy Secretary or at least a member of the Sector 5 Committee), became engaged to SAO Phim's daughter, KANH Chrenh.<sup>6610</sup> SAO Phim came to visit his son-in-law in the Northwest Zone every four to five months.<sup>6611</sup> NONG Nim, SAO Phim's driver, and SIN Oeng, one of SAO Phim's bodyguards, confirmed that the two married, with the former testifying that it was some time in 1976.<sup>6612</sup> There was some disagreement as to which of SAO Phim's daughter's married Cheal.<sup>6613</sup> For the purposes of assessing any links between SAO Phim and RUOS Nhim, the Chamber accepts that a daughter of SAO Phim married RUOS Nhim's son Cheal in 1975 or 1976.

1962. NONG Nim also testified that RUOS Nhim and SAO Phim visited one another in Battambang, although he did not know what they discussed as he remained outside during the visits.<sup>6614</sup> He said that SAO Phim also visited Cheal at the Sector 5 office during these visits.<sup>6615</sup> SAO Phim also informed the Party Centre that he visited RUOS Nhim in the Northwest Zone, as the latter had requested 10 cadres to work at the district and subdistrict levels with which SAO Phim was willing to assist.<sup>6616</sup> RUOS Nhim also visited SAO Phim at the Samraong worksite in the East Zone.<sup>6617</sup> NONG Nim did not recognise SAO Phim in the video played for him, although he did recognise a photograph of SAO Phim.<sup>6618</sup>

1963. SIN Oeng, SAO Phim's bodyguard, testified that RUOS Nhim visited SAO Phim three times at the East Zone guard in Suong village, sometimes accompanied by his grandson.<sup>6619</sup> Visits would last only one or two hours, but he never heard the content of their conversations.<sup>6620</sup> SIN Oeng never went to the Northwest zone with SAO Phim.<sup>6621</sup> However, later in his testimony, SIN Oeng expressed doubt as to the number, duration, and location of the visits saying his memory was not good.<sup>6622</sup> Nonetheless, the Chamber accepts that RUOS Nhim visited SAO Phim in the East Zone.

1964. In response to a leading question, TOAT agreed that Chhnang alias Cheal may also have served as a messenger between RUOS Nhim and SAO Phim.<sup>6623</sup> MUN Mut also heard a rumour circulating in the mobile units that Cheal sent some information to his father-in-law SAO Phim in the East Zone. But Cheal was arrested by Southwest Zone forces and MUN Mut inferred that it was for that reason that the plan was not carried out and arrests started to take place.<sup>6624</sup> Speculating as to why a secret meeting had been held with Ta Val and 10-15 regiment, battalion and platoon commanders, the witness testified that at that time he thought that “perhaps they were armed, and they would become soldiers in the future”.<sup>6625</sup> The Chamber considers these statements to be unverifiable hearsay and that MUN Muth’s conclusions amount to speculation.

1965. LAT Suoy testified that after the Southwest Zone accused the Northwest Zone of treachery, the East Zone came to discuss the matter with the Northwest Zone.<sup>6626</sup> LAT Suoy heard that Northwest Zone soldiers were accused of the alleged killing a Chinese diplomat, after which the Northwest and East Zones joined forces against the Southwest Zone forces.<sup>6627</sup> LAT Suoy also testified that the Northwest Zone wanted to re-establish business at the cooperative level with a bartering system or a system of exchanges.<sup>6628</sup> When this matter came to the awareness of the Southwest Zone, they came to take control of the Northwest Zone and arrested the Northwest Zone cadres as they accused them of being traitors.<sup>6629</sup>

1966. PAN Chhuong, who held an important leadership role in Sector 5,<sup>6630</sup> testified that he heard about cadres from the East Zone who betrayed Angkar, including HENG Samrin and SAO Phim.<sup>6631</sup> He also heard from other people that SAO Phim had a daughter and MOUL Sambath alias RUOS Nhim had a son and they wanted their children to get married.<sup>6632</sup> However, he testified that he did not know about a secret meeting or of any plan to overthrow the Khmer Rouge regime.<sup>6633</sup>

1967. The Chamber accepts the consistent evidence of family connections between RUOS Nhim and SAO Phim, and that RUOS Nhim met with SAO Phim. However, the Chamber also notes that RUOS Nhim also met with members of the Standing Committee in Battambang two or three times in around August 1975<sup>6634</sup> and was in regular communication with the Standing Committee by telegram and courier.<sup>6635</sup> The Chamber also accepts TOAT Thoeun's evidence that the two Zone leaders discussed CPK policies and disagreed with some of them, such as the decision to close markets and to evacuate the cities as his evidence was consistent with other accounts of continuing discussions between the two zone secretaries. This does not establish however that RUOS Nhim was actively working against the CPK policies in effect at the time. In fact, the evidence from the Trapeang Thma Dam Worksite and other locations shows that RUOS Nhim was executing CPK policy, despite any reservations.<sup>6636</sup>

12.1.5.2.10. Support from Vietnam

1968. Speaking to Elizabeth BECKER in 1980, IENG Thirith recounted a visit to the Northwest Zone in mid-1976 and blamed RUOS Nhim for the poor living conditions in the zone including malaria, diarrhoea and homelessness, and the fact that young children, pregnant women and old people were working in the fields in the heat.<sup>6637</sup> IENG Thirith also indicated that RUOS Nhim and SAO Phim were in collusion with the Vietnamese in order to sabotage the CPK.<sup>6638</sup> According to her, POL Pot launched an inquiry that concluded that the illness and homelessness in the Northwest Zone were the result of Vietnamese "agents" having infiltrated the Northwest Zone CPK branch.<sup>6639</sup> However, the only evidence of an inquiry into the Northwest Zone arises

The NUON Chea Defence also relies on the interview record of KHOEM Vai as a basis for its claim that NUON Chea was personally involved in the investigation. Having reviewed the interview record in question, the Chamber finds that the NUON Chea Defence mischaracterises the evidence. KHOEM Vai simply stated that from the arrest and interrogation of Northwest Zone cadres at S-21 and the imposition of torture. As discussed in detail below, the Chamber does not have before it evidence of active Vietnamese support to Cambodian rebels or factions in the Northwest zone in order to overthrow the CPK leadership following 1973.

1969. TOAT Thoeun testified that by 1972 or 1973, Vietnamese advisors, including one named HAY Sau, had left Cambodia and he no longer had any contact with them.<sup>6640</sup> In response to leading questions and based upon information from S-21 confessions that were put to him, TOAT Thoeun said it was possible that RUOS Nhim maintained contact with HAY Sau.<sup>6641</sup> The Chamber does not find this to be convincing as it was based upon highly suggestive questioning, torture-tainted confessions and was speculative.<sup>6642</sup> LONG Sat, who was a medic in Regiment 156, Division 4 commanded by HENG Samrin in the East Zone, testified that by 1973, a decision was made to stop cross-border collaboration and all Vietnamese experts should return to Vietnam.<sup>6643</sup> OUK Bunchhoeun corroborated TOAT Thoeun's account in an interview with Stephen HEDER, stating that there was no Vietnamese support provided to CPK forces working against POL Pot.<sup>6644</sup> around mid-1976, while he was with other cadres from the Southwest Zone on the way to the Northwest, he stopped in Phnom Penh where NUON Chea stated that they had to go to the Northwest where "most of the traitors were among the 17 April People" and they had to be the leaders and give a good example. Indeed, NUON Chea reportedly stated that there were traitors in the Northwest Zone, but this does not support the submission that he was personally involved in initiating an investigation which allegedly took place after the 1976 meeting. See NUON Chea Closing Brief, para. 291; KHOEM Vai Interview Record, E3/10750, 21 December 2015, p. 14, ERN (En) 01207675. But in reality, honestly speaking, I had my own division, about ten thousand soldiers, but did not make any contact with Vietnam whatsoever. But we were still accused of doing so. That was why the secretary of Sector 23, comrade Sau, was accused of having two Vietnamese advisors, HAY Sau and BA Hay, who allegedly were in Svay Rieng to let the Vietnamese forces enter Cambodian territory. At that time, comrade Sau was 1970. BAN Seak was questioned about Vietnam's influence in Cambodia, but his testimony was influenced by torture-tainted confessions and was replete with contradictions. He said that KE Pauk had been a member of the Workers' Party (i.e. the Workers' Party of Vietnam) while fighting in the jungle in 1963 or 1964.<sup>6645</sup> KE Pauk told BAN Seak that he subsequently joined the Communist Party of Kampuchea, which was risky for him to do in the Central Zone.<sup>6646</sup> BAN Seak also heard that SAO Phim was a prominent member of the Workers' Party, which contained KGB members who had joined with the Vietnamese.<sup>6647</sup> CHEA Sim was said to be a part the Workers' Party in relation to the Indochinese Federation, but he was also said to be part of the CIA.<sup>6648</sup> The source of BAN Seak's knowledge was unclear on this point. Further, BAN Seak's evidence concerning SAO Phim's suicide and membership in the Workers' Party in 1978 is based upon torture-tainted sources. His evidence as to CHEA Sim was contradictory in suggesting that CHEA Sim was supported by the U.S. as well as Vietnam. Therefore, the Chamber does not consider this to be reliable because it is based upon hearsay and because it is based on impermissible torture-tainted sources.

1971. In sum, the Chamber does not find any support on the Case File for the submission that Vietnamese agents were active in the Northwest Zone, or that they supported a continuing Indochinese Worker's Party in Cambodia.

12.1.5.2.11. Conclusion

1972. The Chamber accepts TOAT Thoeun's evidence that RUOS Nhim had not initiated a rebellion against the Party Centre although he may have taken steps to store rice and other goods as a precautionary measure. The Chamber also notes that even if he expressed disagreement with some of the some policies of the Party Centre at the start of the regime, through his tenure as zone secretary, RUOS Nhim continued to fully implement the policies of the Party Centre until he was arrested.<sup>6649</sup> The Chamber also finds that the organised manner in which the Southwest Zone cadres were deployed to

12.1.6. 1978 Events – East Zone and SAO Phim

12.1.6.1. Submissions

1973. The NUON Chea Defence submits that a third coup d'état was attempted beginning on 25 May 1978 in the East Zone. It submits that there is a false Manichean narrative that “the 1978 coup was the admirable but futile final stand of a band of freedom fighters against a monstrous regime, [rather] it was in fact a calculated plan by central collaborators of Vietnam that had overt sponsorship from Vietnam from the start”.<sup>6650</sup> Citing publications by Nayan CHANDA and William DUIKER, the Defence submits that Vietnam decided in February 1978 to back a coup d'état to be led by East Zone Secretary SAO Phim.<sup>6651</sup> It submits that SAO Phim met secretly with Vietnamese guests to seek their assistance in overthrowing POL Pot.<sup>6652</sup> Dissident Khmer Rouge cadres in the East Zone stockpiled guns and food from the end of 1977 or early 1978 and began recruiting forces.<sup>6653</sup> However, the plot was uncovered by the CPK and crushed which the NUON Chea Defence submits was an entirely proportionate and lawful response.<sup>6654</sup>

1974. The Co-Prosecutors submit that SAO Phim remained naively loyal to POL Pot and fought the Vietnamese on the border.<sup>6655</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submit that SAO Phim cooperated with POL Pot on everything and that he executed the arrest of key East Zone leaders ordered by POL Pot and NUON Chea until about March 1978. They submit this simply is not the behaviour of a man plotting a rebellion.<sup>6656</sup>

1975. The evidence cited by the NUON Chea Defence in support of its submission that SAO Phim had plans to commit a coup d'état since May 1975 includes the evidence of an unnamed witness (W1), whose transcript of interview conducted by THET Sambath and Robert LEMKIN was rejected by the Chamber due to its unreliability, and multiple S-21 confessions which were extracted through the use of torture.<sup>6657</sup> The Chamber therefore disregards these submissions, insofar as they rely solely on such sources.

1976. In addition, other witnesses who testified on these events include CHHOUK Rin and LONG Sat. The Chamber notes that CHHOUK Rin, a relatively high-ranking military commander who testified extensively as to administrative structures in Case 002/01, was initially reticent to testify during those proceedings. CHHOUK Rin was questioned by OCIJ investigators at Prey Sar prison where he continued to be detained at the time of his testimony in Case 002/01.<sup>6658</sup> During his in court testimony in Case 002/01, CHHOUK Rin said that he was too unwell to respond to questions in detail.<sup>6659</sup> He requested that his food ration at Prey Sar be increased and that he be given glasses to read.<sup>6660</sup> Therefore, he appeared to seek better conditions at Prey Sar prison in exchange for his testimony. Nonetheless, the witness responded to questions without any recompense offered by the court. Further, he generally adhered to his prior statements during his testimony and later stated that he would endeavour to tell the court whatever he recalled.<sup>6661</sup> The Chamber considers that CHHOUK Rin was more forthcoming with OCIJ investigators than during his testimony. However, much of the content of his Case 002 Written Records of Interview was put to him during his testimony and the Parties were afforded an opportunity to test the evidence. The Chamber therefore considers that CHHOUK Rin was a credible witness and that his Case 002 Written Records of Interview, where not contradicted or disavowed by his testimony, are reliable sources of evidence. CHHOUK Rin was also interviewed by the OCIJ investigator in Case 004 and the Chamber has admitted this Written Record of Interview as evidence.<sup>6662</sup> Although the Parties in Case 002 did not have an opportunity to question the witness regarding this last Written Record of Interview Record, the Chamber will consider the Case 004 Written Record of Interview to assess the internal consistency of CHHOUK Rin's account of events.

1977. LONG Sat testified that SAO Phim was a distant uncle and that the two met three to four times a year.<sup>6663</sup> Although LONG Sat did not recognise SAO Phim in a 1978 video played during his testimony, the witness noted that the picture quality was not good.<sup>6664</sup> The Chamber considers that the failure to recognise SAO Phim does not undermine the witness's credibility, particularly in light of the detailed nature of the witness's testimony and the fact that many essential details of LONG Sat's testimony concerning the death of SAO Phim were corroborated.<sup>6665</sup> The Chamber therefore finds LONG Sat's testimony to be credible.

12.1.6.3. Findings

1978. As discussed in more detail below, the Chamber notes evidence that POL Pot sent forces to purge the East Zone, which culminated in May 1978.<sup>6666</sup> It has found that on 2 December 1978, the Kampuchean National United Front for National Salvation ("KNUFNS") was formed in Vietnam and that in late December 1978, the Vietnamese army launched a full-scale offensive against DK with the KNUFNS.<sup>6667</sup>

1979. Relying on Nayan CHANDA's and William DUIKER's publications, the NUON Chea Defence claims that Vietnam's decision to invade Cambodia came in February 1978, when it decided to support SAO Phim in an attempted coup d'état, and that this justifies the arrest and killing of East Zone cadres that occurred in May

1978.<sup>6668</sup> The NUON Chea Defence also submits that SAO Phim's interactions with Vietnam is evidence of his collusion against the CPK.<sup>6669</sup> The Chamber therefore analyses first evidence as to contacts with Vietnam below, it then assesses the evidence as to when Vietnam started to provide support to forces opposed to POL Pot as this may be relevant to the question of whether those arrested and killed were legitimate military targets. The Chamber addresses whether SAO Phim had organised a resistance prior to May 1978 to determine whether the actions of the CPK may have been justified in self-defence. The Chamber then examines the facts around the East Zone purge before analysing whether support from Vietnam provides legal justification for the purge of the East Zone. Finally, the Chamber analyses the evidence as to SAO Phim's journey to Phnom Penh, his suicide and acts of rebellion in the East Zone thereafter.

12.1.6.3.1. Contact with Vietnam

1980. The Chamber has found that the CPK was engaged in negotiations with the Socialist Republic of Vietnam up through 31 December 1977 when diplomatic ties were cut.<sup>6670</sup> It further notes the evidence below that the CPK maintained official contact with Vietnam up to December 1977.

1981. NUON Chea testified in Case 002/01 as to his personal interactions with the Vietnamese Workers' Party leadership between 1959 and 1975. He testified that around 1959, he travelled to Kandaol Chrum near the Vietnam border, to meet with Vietnamese including NGUYEN Van Linh and PHAM Hung.<sup>6671</sup> NUON Chea was escorted by HENG Samrin who had been assigned as his bodyguard by SAO Phim.<sup>6672</sup> NUON Chea was designated as responsible for the CPK's relationship with Vietnam and would meet with the Vietnamese every two months in order to negotiate border disputes.<sup>6673</sup> From the 1960s, Vietnamese revolutionaries, including LE Duan and NGUYEN Van Linh, stayed in Cambodia in areas controlled by the communist maquis.<sup>6674</sup>

1982. In addition, NUON Chea testified that since its founding in 12 January 1968, the RAK received arms from China through Vietnam; the Vietnamese would transport the arms but looted one third of them.<sup>6675</sup> In late 1970, there were negotiations between POL Pot and his Vietnamese counterpart, NGUYEN Van Linh, to facilitate cooperation.<sup>6676</sup> Despite tensions between the CPK and the Vietnam Workers' Party, or because of them, NUON Chea held discussions with NGUYEN Van Linh to make compromises regarding the presence of Vietnamese in Cambodian territory and to form a friendship with them.<sup>6677</sup> NUON Chea estimated that the last time he travelled to the Vietnam border with HENG Samrin was in 1975.<sup>6678</sup>

1983. As noted previously, in June 1975, DK sent a delegation that included POL Pot and NUON Chea to Hanoi to discuss the border clashes with the SRV's leader NGUYEN Van Linh.<sup>6679</sup> In early 1976 there were also attempts to negotiate between DK and SRV delegations with a view to a June 1976 summit that never materialised.<sup>6680</sup> For example, in March 1976, NUON Chea presided over a Standing Committee Meeting directing that political and diplomatic measures, as well as military force, were required to resolve the border situation with Vietnam.<sup>6681</sup> Around the same time, Northeast Zone Secretary NEY Sarann alias Ya led border negotiations with Vietnam, although he was arrested and taken to S-21 in September 1976.<sup>6682</sup> Therefore, the question is whether SAO Phim maintained parallel contacts with the Vietnamese in order to circumvent and to later attack POL Pot and the other members of the CPK Standing Committee.

1984. Expert Nayan CHANDA wrote that “an official Vietnamese account reveals that preparations for the most important coup attempt against the Pol Pot regime began in November 1977” when East Zone cadres started building secret food reserves in the jungle.<sup>6683</sup> The Chamber notes however, that this assertion is supported only by a reference to “Kampuchean Dossier” the provenance of which is unexplained and therefore unverifiable. Nayan CHANDA also wrote that in mid-February 1978, the Vietnamese Politburo met to discuss how to set up a Cambodian communist party and resistance organisation.<sup>6684</sup> This second point is supported only by a reference to an anonymous and unverifiable source.<sup>6685</sup> Nayan CHANDA nonetheless questions whether Vietnam provided backing for an attempted coup against the CPK, noting the lack of any evidence of direct Hanoi involvement in plots against POL Pot.<sup>6686</sup>

1985. The Chamber does not have access to Nayan CHANDA’s sources, nor does it have records of a purported February 1978 meeting of the Vietnamese Politburo. Therefore, it is difficult to substantiate the claims made in these writings. However, Nayan CHANDA does not subscribe to the view that Vietnam was providing overt support to a rebellion against the CPK in Cambodia from 1977.

1986. The Chamber does have before it several contemporaneous documents obtained from East German intelligence reports and SRV intelligence obtained by East Germany. A January 1978 report from East Germany provides, “Confidential reports state that the SRV [Socialist Republic of Vietnam] side is striving for a solution of the kind that would enable the remaining Patriotic Forces of Kampuchea to seize the initiative and wrest power from Pol Pot and his followers”. This report is unspecific as to what efforts were being made. It goes on to state however, that: “Of the current group of five in Phnom Penh, PB [Politburo] member Nuon Chea alone has yet to compromise himself directly vis à vis the SRV”.<sup>6687</sup> Therefore, the SRV believed that NUON Chea with whom it had a longstanding relationship, was possibly sympathetic to Vietnamese communism whereas the other members of the CPK Standing Committee (referred to as the Politburo), including SAO Phim, were not trusted. The Chamber considers that this report reveals a misapprehension of the situation in DK, in particular concerning NUON Chea’s position toward Vietnam and further notes that nothing suggests that SAO Phim was seen as a favoured ally for Vietnam in its efforts to remove POL Pot from power, either politically or militarily.

1987. Further East German Intelligence reports from January to March 1978 discuss the existence of internal resistance in DK supported by the SRV. A January 1978 report indicates that the SRV is deploying forces to foster internal resistance and to bolster forces working against POL Pot which would be capable of political leadership, albeit noting the SRV prefers a political solution.<sup>6688</sup> A February 1978 report reiterates that the SRV is seeking a political solution to the conflict, but notes that there are no serious indications of internal conflict in DK that would lead to the downfall of POL Pot.<sup>6689</sup> It further opines that “the Pol Pot group has hitherto succeeded in controlling the situation in the country after getting rid of the leading opposition forces”.<sup>6690</sup> Finally, a March 1978 report indicates the SRV has begun stationing special forces from the Vietnamese army (consisting of four regiments and ten independent battalions) for deployment to DK which were “requested by legitimate progressive Kampuchean forces”.<sup>6691</sup> The report does not indicate the names of the Kampuchean progressives, but indicates that “armed units of Kampuchean nationality” consist of refugees and prisoners of war.<sup>6692</sup> It further notes that the SRV leadership is directing Vietnamese combat units and their collaboration with “representatives of the Kampuchean resistance movement”.<sup>6693</sup> The Chamber notes that these intelligence reports are based upon information obtained by East German sources in Vietnam and, as hearsay evidence, merit a degree of caution. Nonetheless, the Chamber notes that SAO Phim is not referenced in these reports. Further, the Chamber considers the intelligence reports are ambiguous as to whether the forces being supported by the SRV were located in DK or in Vietnam. As noted below, however, there is credible evidence that the requests for Vietnamese military assistance came from CPK cadres who had fled DK.

1988. East German Intelligence obtained SRV intelligence reports (in Vietnamese) evaluating the biographies of numerous CPK cadres who fled DK between 1977 and 1979 to determine their suitability for leadership in the post-DK government in Cambodia.<sup>6694</sup> Within these documents, the biography of HUN Sen indicates that he “defected to Vietnam” in June 1977, establishing contact with the SRV and seeking permission “to help put together combat forces that would crush POL Pot” which he did in Long Khanh, Vietnam.<sup>6695</sup> The biography further notes that in December 1977, HUN Sen advanced to his home region with the SRV army where he was informed that his family had been killed.<sup>6696</sup> Therefore, at least part of the Kampuchean forces opposed to the CPK were being prepared outside in Vietnam.

1989. As noted below, within the biographies there is further credible evidence that the remaining East Zone leadership was not organising opposition against the CPK until SAO Phim had been targeted to be purged in May 1978. In the biography of HENG Samrin he laments that “when a pack of traitors caused a split I made no attempt to figure out who were friends and who were enemies.”<sup>6697</sup> It indicates that he finally “left the ranks of the enemy [CPK] and took to the forests” on 25 May 1978.<sup>6698</sup>

1990. The biography of CHEA Sim provides that he “took to the forests and led the population in resistance against POL Pot/IENG Sary” on 24 June 1978 and that he only approached Vietnam as a leader of a delegation from Sector 20 to seek Vietnam's assistance on 15 October 1978.<sup>6699</sup> The biography faults CHEA Sim because he continued to put trust in POL Pot/IENG Sary from 1975-1978, even though he previously harboured suspicions.<sup>6700</sup> It notes in particular that SAO Phim warned CHEA Sim in late May 1978, "If we want to successfully resist the reactionaries, we must rely on Vietnam. Although the Pol Pot/IENG Sary mob has been [sic] incited national hatred in the past, I (Muoi Xu) [very likely an alias of SAO Phim] still believe that Vietnamese comrades understand us".<sup>6701</sup> The biography concludes that CHEA Sim then understood "the reactionary nature of POL Pot and IENG Sary".<sup>6702</sup> There was no indication that HENG Samrin or CHEA Sim engaged Vietnam to assist in overthrowing POL Pot prior to their fleeing into the forests and contacting the SRV in late 1978. Further, the East German documents do not indicate that SAO Phim sought support from Vietnam to overthrow POL Pot. In fact, it transpires from these documents that the SRV was under the impression that NUON Chea was the only member of the CPK Standing Committee to be possibly sympathetic to the SRV.

1991. The Chamber also heard from members of SAO Phim's bodyguard unit who observed SAO Phim's activities during the DK era and were in a position to know with whom SAO Phim was meeting at the relevant time.

It is dated October 1978, is replete with speculation and clearly notes that "it is impossible to form an idea of the current state of the rebellion [in Cambodia] and of the intensity of border fighting in the absence of unbiased information". It provides however, the following description of SAO Phim: "So Phim is generally regarded as pro-Vietnamese. He lived in Vietnam during the war against the Americans where he made close enough ties to merit being called Muoi Xu, the affectionate South Vietnamese way of addressing a friend by his first name followed by his family rank (in this case tenth child in the family)". Further the author sets out various hypotheses concerning the outcome of the conflict, the first one of which being "a rebel victory [...] followed by the overthrow of Mr. Pol Pot who would be replaced by So Phim". The journalist did not seem to be aware of the death of SAO Phim since May 1978, several months before he wrote this article. However, the Chamber finds that it supports the possible identification of SAO Phim as Muoi Xu). 1992. NONG Nim, who was one of SAO Phim's bodyguards and his driver between 1970 and 1978, testified that he accompanied SAO Phim wherever he went, although he did not attend SAO Phim's meetings.<sup>6703</sup> He provided contradictory accounts, initially testifying that he never saw SAO Phim meet with Vietnamese.<sup>6704</sup> When confronted with a prior statement to DC-Cam, NONG Nim recalled that Vietnamese guests came to Cambodia to meet SAO Phim, but he did not recall the date, saying only that it was before or during the war against Vietnam.<sup>6705</sup> These contradictions were not explained. Due to his uncertainty as to when this meeting occurred, and the contradictions in his testimony, the Chamber does not consider that it shows collusion between Vietnam and SAO Phim against POL Pot. SIN Oeng, another of SAO Phim's bodyguards, stated that he never heard SAO Phim say anything against the Party or appear opposed to the Party's plans.<sup>6706</sup> LONG Sat, a distant relative of SAO Phim and a medic in Regiment 156, Division 4 in the East Zone who had close relationship with him, testified he was not aware of any contact between SAO Phim, or anyone from the East Zone, and Vietnamese authorities nor was LONG Sat aware of any plans by SAO Phim to overthrow POL Pot.<sup>6707</sup>

1993. The Chamber concludes that there is no credible evidence that SAO Phim maintained contact with the SRV in order to overthrow POL Pot. It was only in May 1978, when he was to be purged, that SAO Phim suggested to his troops that they should seek help from Vietnam and even then, as noted below, SAO Phim maintained faith in POL Pot, considering that SON Sen was to blame for the unjustified purges of East Zone cadres.

1995. Duch testified that SAO Phim attended Standing Committee meetings in Phnom Penh.<sup>6709</sup> Although many of the Standing Committee minutes before the Chamber do not record the names of attendees,<sup>6710</sup> the excerpt of the 11 April 1977 minutes indicates that SAO Phim was present.<sup>6711</sup> According to Duch, SAO Phim also attended a meeting with SON Sen and POL Pot during which it was decided to arrest SUOS Neou alias Chhouk, SAO Phim's deputy and Secretary of Sector 24, in 1976.<sup>6712</sup>

1996. Furthermore, SAO Phim was in regular communication with the Standing Committee members in Phnom Penh as evidenced by telegrams sent to Office 870 from November 1975 to April 1978.<sup>6713</sup> These telegrams demonstrate that SAO Phim was executing directives arising from the CPK Standing Committee meetings. For example, on 30 November 1975, SAO Phim reported to POL Pot that the East Zone was to remove 50,000 Cham people from along the Mekong River in order to send them to the North and Northwest Zones, in accordance with POL Pot's views and as stipulated at the Standing Committee Meeting.<sup>6714</sup> SAO Phim complained that KE Pauk would not accept the Cham people and therefore sought further guidance from POL Pot.<sup>6715</sup> On 21 March 1976, SAO Phim informed POL Pot that a number of Vietnamese who had been hiding in the forest near the border had been captured.<sup>6716</sup> He further reported that he had captured a person who had thrown a grenade and, that upon beating him, the man named 20 more individuals in Preah Sdech district with organisational links to South Vietnam.<sup>6717</sup>

1997. Starting in September 1977 as the armed conflict with Vietnam increased in intensity, the subject-matter of telegrams focused on the border situation, requests for supplies and troop requirements. On 15 September 1976, SAO Phim reported to Office 870 about its medical supplies and requested mechanics to repair two ships on the

1998. Telegrams become more frequent from September 1977 to January 1978 discussing in great detail the conflict with Vietnam and specific problems encountered by the RAK.<sup>6720</sup> For example, a telegram from SAO Phim alias Chhon to Office 870 reports on the situation on the border battlefields along national roads noting that on 25 October 1977 DK special troops completely destroyed the enemy's headquarters at the Samrong battlefield and had killed the "contemptible commander" along with his bodyguards.<sup>6721</sup> Another telegram from SAO Phim alias Chhon to Office 870 on 29 October 1977, reports that along Road 22, "we fiercely fought, defeating the enemies and chasing them beyond Trapeang Phlong", which is near the Vietnamese border.<sup>6722</sup>

1999. On 19 January 1978, SAO Phim reported to Brother Pa [POL Pot] about the progress of the conflict with Vietnam in Sectors 23 and 24 and along Road 22.<sup>6723</sup> He notes that "we retrieved a large number of people who were herded by the Yuon [Vietnamese] enemy to be under their temporary control and those who believed the Yuon" and informs POL Pot that these people have been sent to the rear to be screened and re-educated.<sup>6724</sup> On 23 January 1978, SAO Phim again refers to "elements of the Yuon enemy network" and preventing them from mixing with "good people".<sup>6725</sup> SAO Phim continued to report to POL Pot that Vietnamese enemy forces were being killed until the end of January 1978.<sup>6726</sup> In total, the Chamber has before it 31 telegrams from September 1977 to January 1978, sent from SAO Phim to the Party Centre, providing updates on the military situation in the fight against the Vietnamese.<sup>6727</sup>

2000. Despite the Vietnamese agreement to withdraw troops on 6 January 1978, SAO Phim reported on continued armed clashes in March 1978. Telegrams from SAO Phim (here translated as Peam) to “Brother Representative of Angkar” report on fighting at Paung and Trapeang Phong villages on the Vietnamese border, stating that the Party’s objective was to destroy those at Paung and that 47 enemies were killed and 42 were injured.<sup>6728</sup> The Chamber finds that the quantity of these telegrams illustrates that SAO Phim had kept the Party Centre well informed of his activities in the East Zone. The substance of these telegrams further indicates that SAO Phim was executing the directives of the Party Centre, killing Vietnamese troops and attempting to identify Cambodians who were sympathetic to Vietnamese ideology for re-education until at least March 1978.

2001. The Chamber further notes contemporaneous radio reports concerning important delegations visiting the East Zone, accompanied by CPK Standing Committee members. A Phnom Penh radio report on 4 January 1977 indicates that a Chinese Economic delegation, after being greeted in Phnom Penh by NUON Chea, KHIEU Samphan, IENG Sary, VORN Vet and SON Sen, made a tour of the Cambodian countryside, including the East Zone where it visited a cooperative.<sup>6729</sup> Soon after, a delegation of DPRK journalists made a similar tour, which included the East Zone.<sup>6730</sup>

In December 1977, the Chinese delegation of CHEN Yonggui visited the East Zone with POL Pot, VORN Vet, and THIOEUNN Thioeunn, meeting SAO Phim at Tonlé Bot.<sup>6731</sup> The delegation visited the East Zone headquarters of Suong where SAO Phim hosted a banquet for CHEN Yonggui, exchanging toasts to revolutionary friendship.<sup>6732</sup> The delegation then visited the Chup rubber plantation in the East Zone, accompanied by POL Pot, VORN Vet, SAO Phim, other members of the East Zone Committee, regional and sector cadres.<sup>6733</sup> The Chamber considers that the CPK exhibited confidence in its control over the East Zone by organising a visit of a prominent member of the Chinese Central Committee to the East Region and SAO Phim's locus of activity in Suong in December 1977. Although the CPK Party Centre had purged a large number of East Zone cadres in June 1977, it chose to visit SAO Phim's area, spending several days in the East Zone.

2002. After SAO Phim was identified to be purged and he committed suicide in June 1978, the journalists Malcolm CALDWELL, Richard DUDMAN and Elizabeth BECKER visited the East Zone in December 1978, arriving in Suong where they were briefed by "local responsible cadre".<sup>6734</sup> Despite the purge of East Zone cadres<sup>6735</sup> and SAO Phim's absence, the CPK Party Centre considered it to be in its interest to send a delegation of foreign journalists to the zone. This suggests that the CPK Party Centre judged that it had sufficient control of the East Zone.

2003. Several witnesses testified that Standing Committee members visited SAO Phim in the East Zone. NONG Nim testified that POL Pot, NUON Chea, KHIEU Samphan and IENG Sary visited the East Zone multiple times, travelling with five to 10 bodyguards.<sup>6736</sup> During his own visits, NUON Chea would sometimes meet with SAO Phim alone.<sup>6737</sup> OU Dav was Deputy Commander of Company 1, in Battalion

2004. SIN Oeng, one of SAO Phim's bodyguards, testified that POL Pot visited the East Zone and SAO Phim received him.<sup>6741</sup> NUON Chea also visited the East Zone and would sleep in SAO Phim's bodyguard unit headquarters in Suong during his stays.<sup>6742</sup> According to SIN Oeng, between 1976 and early 1978, SAO Phim travelled to Phnom Penh with one or more of his bodyguards twice monthly.<sup>6743</sup> The frequency of these visits and the fact that NUON Chea saw fit to sleep in the same quarters as SAO Phim's bodyguards is indicative of mutual trust between them.

2005. Based on all of the above, the Chamber finds that SAO Phim maintained constant communication and frequent contact with the other members of the Standing Committee until his final trip to Phnom Penh in May 1978 and that the other members of the Standing Committee frequently visited him in the East Zone. The Chamber considers that this is indicative of SAO Phim's cooperation with the Standing Committee of which he formed a part. It does not eliminate the possibility that SAO Phim could have maintained secret plans against his fellow Standing Committee members, as they did against him. But it shows the difficulty of moving against them when it was clear that his activities were being monitored.

According to HENG Samrin, on 30 September 1977, POL Pot gave the order to attack Vietnam.<sup>6745</sup> He received an order from KE Pauk and SAO Phim to attack Vietnam.<sup>6746</sup> Although KE Pauk and SAO Phim had disagreements as to how to fight the Vietnamese, there are multiple accounts that forces under SAO Phim executed attacks on Vietnam pursuant to POL Pot's orders.

2007. In December 1977, when the fighting started on the Vietnamese border, LONG Sat was sent to the frontline with Division 4.<sup>6747</sup> LONG Sat was present when the Regiment 156 Commanders, SAM Niet and Choeun, on the orders of the division and zone, directed their forces to attack the Vietnamese to force recognition of the demarcated border.<sup>6748</sup> At the time there were attacks and counterattacks.<sup>6749</sup> Due to their superior strength, Vietnamese troops penetrated territory held by Regiment 155 and they were able to attack Regiment 156 from behind.<sup>6750</sup> Both DK forces and Vietnamese forces suffered many casualties at the time.<sup>6751</sup>

2008. On 22 December 1977, SAO Phim sent a telegram to POL Pot, informing him of the fighting between Vietnam and DK forces in the East Zone, noting that his forces were attacking and launching defensive strikes.<sup>6752</sup> A few days later, a telegram from Phuong alias SOTH Saphon, the Secretary of the East Zone Rubber plantation in Memot, near the Vietnam border, informed Office 870 that Vietnamese had attacked the rubber plantation and that SAO Phim directed that the plantation organise a combat force.<sup>6753</sup> Although LONG Sat did not observe the attacks in Regiment 154's area of control, such as Memot, as he was with Regiment 156, he testified that these telegraphed reports accurately reflected the events at the time.<sup>6754</sup>

2009. KE Pauk also reported to Office 870 that SAO Phim was attacking the Vietnamese. In a telegram on 4 May 1978, he indicated that SAO Phim had taken action by withdrawing and redeploying one battalion of Sector 20 forces and some forces of Comrade Kim to attack the enemy at Sa-Am where Vietnamese and DK forces were engaged in combat.<sup>6755</sup>

2010. As noted below, many witnesses testified that the reason the DK forces were losing ground was because the Vietnamese possessed superior firepower and greatly outnumbered them. According to LONG Sat, DK forces were unable to push back the Vietnamese due to the “internal rift” in DK and the internal purge of East Zone cadres that had weakened DK’s defences.<sup>6756</sup> CHUON Thy, who would become the Regiment 15 Deputy Commander in new Division 340, also met with SON Sen to discuss plans to fight the Vietnamese, during which SON Sen said the Khmer Rouge forces were outnumbered.<sup>6757</sup> SIN Oeng clarified that the clashes occurred while arrests were going on.<sup>6758</sup> KE Pich Vannak said that after the arrests of East Zone commanders, there was chaos at the frontline as there were no division commanders.<sup>6759</sup> Meeting Minutes of 870 from early 1978 acknowledged the inequality of the respective force contingents of the DK and Vietnam, noting that after the 1975 war, it had purged some soldiers due to bad backgrounds and it had 70,000 soldiers, whereas Vietnam had 600,000 to 1,000,000 soldiers.<sup>6760</sup> The meeting had nonetheless agreed that Vietnam did not have adequate military forces to fight DK because Vietnamese forces were divided between its northern border, its occupational force in Laos and the interior of the country.<sup>6761</sup> The Chamber is therefore not convinced that Vietnam required assistance from SAO Phim to enter into Cambodian territory. To the contrary, the Chamber finds that DK was militarily at a disadvantage to Vietnam as it had depleted its own ranks with the internal purges.

2011. The Chamber also finds that SAO Phim was ordering attacks against the Vietnamese pursuant to the orders of POL Pot while at the same time purges were ongoing in the East Zone.<sup>6762</sup> This shows that SAO Phim was following the orders of his superiors at a time when the Party was already ordering and executing purges of the East Zone forces.

12.1.6.3.4. Purge of the East Zone

2012. The Closing Order indicates that the purges in the East Zone started in 1976 and unfolded in several stages. The first, in 1976, saw the arrests of SUOS Neou alias Chhouk, the Secretary of sector 24 and Deputy Secretary of the East Zone, CHAN Chakrei, Secretary of Division 170 as well as the purge of Division 170 (see above). This spilled into 1977, when Central and Southwest Zone cadres were sent to the East Zone between mid-1977 and 1978 to arrest East Zone cadres. As noted below, commanders were invited to meetings with KE Pauk or the Party Centre and were arrested. Thereafter, other East Zone cadres were arrested en masse and sent either to the Kampong Chhnang Airfield Construction Site, Prey Sar or to S-21.<sup>6763</sup>

12.1.6.3.4.1. 1976 Standing Committee decision to purge the East Zone

2013. KAING Guek Eav alias Duch testified that in 1976 or 1977, SON Sen telephoned him to say that the Upper Echelon was about to decide the fate of Sector 24 Secretary, SUOS Neou alias Chhouk and that Duch should prepare documents for them.<sup>6764</sup> The Chamber has before it consistent evidence indicating that SUOS Neou alias Chhouk was arrested in August 1976, and therefore finds that Duch received the phone call from SON Sen in 1976.<sup>6765</sup> Duch recalled spending three days and three nights preparing files of confessions for use in the meeting.<sup>6766</sup> After the meeting, SON Sen recounted to Duch what happened. SON Sen said that POL Pot had asked how certain it was that Chhouk was an enemy, to which SAO Phim responded that it was 100 percent certain.<sup>6767</sup> KHIEU Samphan corroborates the fact that Chhouk was implicated by two Division 170 soldiers who were arrested and that after “a period of inquiry”, Chhouk was arrested.<sup>6768</sup> The Chamber notes that KHIEU Samphan’s statements were influenced by torture-tainted confessions as Chhouk was implicated in S-21 confessions of the Division 170 soldiers.<sup>6769</sup> Nonetheless, notes taken by a guard at S-21 corroborate Duch’s evidence that SAO Phim agreed with and encouraged the purge of his Sector 24 Secretary, Chhouk, in the East Zone.<sup>6770</sup>

2014. The Chamber further notes that an S-21 Report from 8 August 1976 signed by Duch summarises the contents of confessions from Division 170 soldiers, including CHAN Chakrei, who were accused of the grenade explosion at the Royal Palace and notes that all of them were under the orders of SUOS Neou alias Chhouk.<sup>6771</sup> The notebook of S-21 interrogator POU Phally, likely from September 1976, identifies a number of cadres who are suspected of being traitors, and concludes that Chhouk is the chief of networks in Sector 24.<sup>6772</sup> It also concludes that Chhouk was responsible for Sector 24 traitorous activities and was the person who had created the leaflets fomenting discontent against the CPK.<sup>6773</sup> According to S-21 records, Chhouk was interrogated starting on 28 July 1976.<sup>6774</sup> Records also indicate that he was killed at S-21, although no date is included in the record of his execution.<sup>6775</sup> The Chamber concludes that these reports, which are based on torture-tainted confessions, led the Standing Committee to consider Chhouk a traitor and order his execution.

<sup>6770</sup> PON Tuy Notebook, E3/834, 18 June 1978, ERN (En) 00184499. The Chamber notes that a June 1978 entry in the PON Tuy S-21 Notebook indicates that SAO Phim “split” from Chhouk and attacked him in 1976 and 1977, suggesting however that SAO Phim was part of the same network as LON Nol and the CIA. The Chamber considers this was an attempt to rationalise why SAO Phim would accuse someone with whom he was colluding against POL Pot. But it corroborates the fact that SAO Phim had agreed to purge Chhouk.

2015. There is credible evidence that other members of the Standing Committee maintained faith in SAO Phim at the time of Chhouk's confession in mid to late 1976. In the confession, Duch wrote a letter refuting Chhouk's assertion that SAO Phim was a traitor because, in Angkar's analysis, SAO Phim was a good and loyal member of the Party.<sup>6776</sup> Duch went on to note in his annotation that SAO Phim had reported all of Chhouk's secret contacts in Vietnam.<sup>6777</sup> It is possible that Duch suggested to Chhouk that he had been denounced by SAO Phim, not because this was true, but in order to test his confession. However, the Chamber considers the fact that SAO Phim maintained his role as East Zone Secretary and was actively engaged in the beginning of the East Zone purges means that SAO Phim remained a trusted member of the Standing Committee at this time.

2016. By 1978, documentation emanating from the CPK Party Centre (not including SAO Phim) reveals suspicions against the leadership in the East Zone. The Central Committee Special Meeting Minutes of 22 January 1978, remarks on Vietnamese spy networks within the RAK and in Svay Rieng before concluding that it can rely on the service of SAO Phim in the East Zone.<sup>6778</sup> It notes however that the Party must still pay 2017. As noted above, the arrests of CHAN Chakrei in May 1976 and Chhouk in August 1976 triggered a continuing cycle of arrests, torture, confessions and executions of East Zone cadres. As the purge continued, Duch was instructed to remove the names of important East Zone cadres who were implicated in confessions. Duch testified that on 25 February 1978, NUON Chea instructed him to remove the names of certain people implicated in the confession of CHAP Mit from 31 January 1978.<sup>6780</sup> As seen in Duch's annotation on the confession, those implicated included Chhien from Sector 22, Mon from General Staff 203 in Sector 21, Soe from Sector 23, Tat, Sok (Comrade Sok alias KE Sok(h), CHAN Chakrei's successor as Secretary of Division 170),<sup>6781</sup> and Tal (Division 290).<sup>6782</sup> Duch testified that the names were removed in order to prevent the named individuals from discovering that they had been implicated when the confession was sent to SAO Phim.<sup>6783</sup> This is consistent with the testimony of SIN Oeng, who stated that when the Party Centre conducted arrests in the East Zone, people were not aware of the plans.<sup>6784</sup> The Chamber considers that this indicates that the remaining members of the CPK Standing Committee doubted the loyalty of SAO Phim and other high-level cadres in the East Zone, despite SAO Phim's earlier cooperation with the execution of East Zone purges.

those present at the meeting included Southwest Zone commanders Sauy, Ren,<sup>6786</sup> THY Poussé and IENG Phan.<sup>6787</sup> Also in attendance were 700 soldiers from Kampot, 1,000 from Takeo and 700-800 from Kandal.<sup>6788</sup> Ta Mok presided over the meeting and told those in attendance that they would be sent to “cleanse” those in the East Zone who had collaborated with the Vietnamese.<sup>6789</sup> They stayed overnight at Division 703 headquarters in Boeung Trabaek and soon after attended a meeting during which SON Sen reiterated the purpose of the mission and ordered commanders to prepare a comprehensive plan.<sup>6790</sup> The next day, the commanders were sent to the East Zone and later to Neak Loeng where they held many division-level meetings to prepare for the purge.<sup>6791</sup>

2019. Witness IENG Phan corroborated CHHOUK Rin’s account of a meeting with Ta Mok about arranging forces to send to Svay Rieng, testifying that it was in late 1977.<sup>6792</sup> He stated that Ta Mok spoke of first preparing forces to be sent to the East Zone to counter the Vietnamese who were invading Cambodia and second preparing additional forces to be inserted to fill out the former forces that had previously been pulled out.<sup>6793</sup> The witness also said that he frequently met with Ren, the new Division 340 Commander, who was responsible for executing the orders given by Ta Mok, his father-in-law, in Svay Rieng.<sup>6794</sup> IENG Phan also testified that when he arrived in Svay

2020. CHHOUK Rin testified that there was absolute adherence to the military hierarchy within the army of the CPK.<sup>6796</sup> Any orders of the Standing Committee had to be implemented, otherwise cadres would have been arrested and killed; there was no choice.<sup>6797</sup> IENG Phan also testified that instructions from the upper echelon were absolute and there was no compromise.<sup>6798</sup>

2021. The Chamber accepts the consistent evidence of CHHOUK Rin and IENG Phan concerning these meetings and the orders that were given by Ta Mok and SON Sen, and finds that in late 1977 the Southwest Zone forces were sent to the East Zone both to counter the Vietnamese forces and to "cleanse" those who had allegedly collaborated with the Vietnamese.

12.1.6.3.4.4. KE Pauk and SON Sen go to the East Zone

2023. CHHOUK Rin also testified that in late 1977 or early 1978, SON Sen sent over 10,000 soldiers, including Centre Division 703, to arrest cadres in the East Zone and to protect the border against the Vietnamese incursion.<sup>6802</sup>

2024. Witness LONG Sat was a medic in Regiment 156, Division 4 commanded by HENG Samrin, in the East Zone.<sup>6803</sup> He testified that prior to 1977, there was no Centre Army in the East Zone; there was only East Zone divisions.<sup>6804</sup> However, towards the end of 1977, Division 2 of the Centre Army was sent to contain the Vietnamese behind the East Zone forces who were at the battlefield.<sup>6805</sup> In 1978, Central Zone forces under KE Pauk also came to the East Zone.<sup>6806</sup> While they were supposed to help in the fight against Vietnam, they began to arrest East Zone cadres and attacked LONG Sat's regiment.<sup>6807</sup>

2025. KE Pich Vannak, KE Pauk's son, who was transporting food every two days to Svay Rieng from Phnom Penh, told OCIJ investigators that SON Sen was also stationed in Svay Rieng, in the East Zone around late 1977 to mid-1978.<sup>6808</sup> This is corroborated by Duch, who testified that in August 1977, SON Sen was transferred to the battlefield.<sup>6809</sup>

2027. Civil Party OU Dav, Commander of Company 150 under SON Sen, gave evidence that in 1977 he was sent from Kampong Som to the East Zone battlefield stopping in Phnom Penh to attend a study session at which NUON Chea spoke about the need to eliminate the "Yvon" Vietnamese, while SON Sen and Ta Mok were also present.<sup>6813</sup> From Phnom Penh, OU Dav was sent to Tonlé Bet, Kampong Cham province. SON Sen arrived soon thereafter with two Chinese advisors and several bodyguards. Soldiers were divided into units and armed with Chinese AKs and U.S.-made AR-15s.<sup>6814</sup>

2028. The Chamber finds that KE Pauk came to the East Zone around October 1977 and was joined by Central Zone forces, including many Southwest Zone cadres. At around the same time, SON Sen was sent to Svay Rieng and joined by forces from the Party Centre. These were the forces who executed the East Zone purges as found below.

2029. As noted in the General Overview of this Judgement, in October and November 1977, the border war escalated when Vietnamese forces launched an extensive attack into Svay Rieng province. Further attacks by the SRV in December 1977 captured the rubber plantation and factory in Memot, Kampong Cham province, causing significant defeats on the DK side in the East Zone. This escalation of the conflict towards the end of 1977 led to DK cutting diplomatic ties with Vietnam on 31 December 1977. Vietnamese troops voluntarily withdrew on 6 January 1978, but border clashes, including incursions by both sides, continued throughout that month. On 5 February 1978, Vietnam proposed border negotiations again, but the proposal, the sincerity of which may be questioned, was never accepted and border skirmishes continued.<sup>6815</sup>

12.1.6.3.4.5. Mass arrest and executions of East Zone cadres

2030. Starting in April and May 1978, thousands of cadres were arrested throughout the East Zone by Southwest and Centre forces commanded by SON Sen and KE Pauk.<sup>6816</sup> As found below, the evidence was that some of the cadres were killed on the spot or nearby, some were sent to the Kampong Chhnang Airfield worksite, and others were sent to S-21 to be killed.

2031. Lists of S-21 prisoners show that hundreds of cadres from Sector 23 were arrested in April-May 1978.<sup>6817</sup> Duch also testified that during a wave of East Zone purges in 1978, NUON Chea ordered Duch to have large groups of East Zone prisoners arriving at S-21 be sent out for execution the very same day without interrogation.<sup>6818</sup>

2032. CHHUN Samorn, a member of a reconnaissance group consisting of about 300 soldiers, in a special unit of Regiment 112, Sector 23, East Zone,<sup>6819</sup> testified that in late 1977 or early 1978,<sup>6820</sup> he was called to a meeting in Angk Prasrae village, where 20-30 armed Southwest Zone soldiers from the Centre Division 703 confiscated their weapons on the pretext that the weapons were too old.<sup>6821</sup> After CHHUN Samorn showed the centre forces the location of their land mines, the disarmed soldiers were transported to Veal Taprunh where they were instructed to work in the rice fields.<sup>6822</sup> CHHUN Samorn also saw many district and provincial-level military and civilian cadres arrested.<sup>6823</sup>

2034. KE Pich Vannak told OCIJ investigators that he observed the first arrests of East Zone cadres with his own eyes. He said that the purge was carried out on the direct orders of SON Sen, who came from the headquarters (in Svay Rieng) with two truckloads of about 60 security guards in black uniforms, as well as two tanks.<sup>6828</sup> KE

Pich Vannak recalled that 42 leaders were arrested including Soth, Prey Veng Sector Committee, Chan alias Toeu alias La-et, the Sector Committee and Deputy Zone Secretary, and Kim, Chairman of the East Zone military division.<sup>6829</sup> He saw with his own eyes that these people were told to remove their clothes and were forced to dig their own graves.<sup>6830</sup> The people were clubbed and dragged into the graves only 50 metres from where SON Sen was staying.<sup>6831</sup>

2035. LONG Sat testified that on May 25, 1978, Division 4 commanders and soldiers, who had been fighting the Vietnamese since 1977, were called to a meeting in the Central Zone where they were all arrested by KE Pauk's soldiers.<sup>6832</sup> This is confirmed by S-21 lists of prisoners who entered in June 1978.<sup>6833</sup> One regiment commander named Sok escaped and told LONG Sat, who had stayed at the front, what had occurred.<sup>6834</sup> At around the same time, on 26 May 1978, the head of SAO Phim's bodyguard unit, PRAK Choeuk, whom SAO Phim trusted, was arrested in Suong, the East Zone headquarters.<sup>6835</sup>

<sup>6829</sup> KE Pich Vannak Interview Record, E3/35, 4 June 2009, pp. 9-10, ERN (En) 00346153-00346154. Concerning Chan alias Toeu alias La-et, the Chamber notes that KE Pich Vannak also refers to another individual named Chan described as "the chairman of Granduncle Phim's office" and who came two days after these arrests in order to see KE Pauk. The Chamber considers the person arrested and identified as Chan alias Toeu alias La-et is not to be confused with MEAS Senghong alias Chan who was Deputy Secretary of the East Zone and, at various times, Sectors 21, 23 and 24 Secretary. See below, para. 2049. Finally, the precise identity of "Kim", chairman of the East Zone military division, is unclear, but the Chamber notes that Meas MON alias Kev Samnang, described as the Chairperson of the Army staff of the East zone, was arrested on 23 May 1978 and sent to S-21. See S-21 Prisoner List, E3/8445, p. 218, ERN (En) 01565809; S-21 Prisoner List, E3/10155, p. 2, ERN (En) 01555987.

2036. Further corroborating evidence as to these arrests was provided by several other witnesses. NONG Nim, who was one of two drivers for SAO Phim, recalled that all of the East Zone leadership disappeared, although he did not recall when.<sup>6836</sup> NONG Nim also recalled seeing people from different units arrested in many places in the East Zone and loaded onto trucks heading westward, prior to SAO Phim's arrest.<sup>6837</sup> He said that people were arrested in waves.<sup>6838</sup> SIN Oeng, one of SAO Phim's bodyguards, testified that Khmer soldiers were arrested despite the fact that they had been fighting against Vietnam at the time.<sup>6839</sup>

2037. CHHOUK Rin said that SON Sen was executing the orders of POL Pot, NUON Chea and Ta Mok.<sup>6840</sup> SON Sen ordered that commanders be sent to S-21 while about 5,000 subordinate soldiers be sent to work at the Kampong Chhnang Airfield worksite.<sup>6841</sup> Others were taken to the Kampot Security Office.<sup>6842</sup> The arrests were made on the order of the zone above SAM Bit, Division 2 Commander who became "Kampot Province Sector" [i.e. Sector 35] Secretary.<sup>6843</sup> In his Case 004 Written Record of Interview in 2015, CHHOUK Rin claimed that he did not execute any of these arrests, but merely replaced the arrested soldiers at the border to fight the Vietnamese.<sup>6844</sup> The Chamber does not find this to be convincing as it contradicts CHHOUK Rin's earlier accounts of the events and followed a line of answers in which he attempted to minimise his responsibility and that of other low-level commanders.<sup>6845</sup>

However, CHHOUK Rin's account of the internal purge was internally consistent and the Chamber therefore accepts his account of the meetings and the orders issued by SON Sen.

2038. The Chamber notes that the Co-Prosecutors in their Closing Brief include Annex F.41 which lists 2,200 prisoners at S-21 who were recorded as former East Zone cadres.<sup>6846</sup> In accordance with its approach of relying only on original lists for its findings, the Chamber does not rely on this Annex. The Chamber recalls its finding that the highest number of detainees arrested and detained at S-21 originated from the East and Northwest Zones.<sup>6847</sup> The Chamber further notes that it has independently reviewed the prisoner lists that fall into the seven categories of reliable court-tested documents as identified for the purposes of assessing S-21 related documents and confirms that there were indeed many S-21 prisoners who were arrested from the East Zone. According to the evidence, 112 cadres arrived in S-21 from the East Zone in March 1978.<sup>6848</sup> The number of arrests peaked in April 1978, with 480 East Zone cadres arriving to S-21 during this month.<sup>6849</sup> In May 1978, executions of East Zone prisoners at S-21 also reached maximum levels. According to execution logs, approximately 370 East Zone cadres were smashed in May,<sup>6850</sup> with approximately 364 executions occurring in one day, 27 May 1978.<sup>6851</sup> Large numbers of arrests in the East Zone continued throughout June and July 1978.<sup>6852</sup> More than 330 East Zone cadres arrived at S-21 throughout the month of June.<sup>6853</sup> Over 150 of these cadres were subsequently

As noted above, these East Zone cadres were removed pursuant to orders from SON Sen and KE Pauk.

12.1.6.3.5. SAO Phim’s plans to attack POL Pot

2040. Witness IENG Phan, a regiment commander in Takeo who was sent to Svay Rieng in the East Zone in mid-1978<sup>6858</sup> testified that he did not have any knowledge of plans of SAO Phim or CHAN Chakrei to overthrow the CPK leadership.<sup>6859</sup> After 1979, he heard from some Cambodian generals that they had fled to Vietnam in early to mid-1978 and received training there.<sup>6860</sup> However, he did not have any way to confirm whether SAO Phim joined the Vietnamese forces and was not aware of the acts for which SAO Phim was accused of treason.<sup>6861</sup> IENG Phan also testified that he heard voices of Khmer cadres on the radio who called for an uprising.<sup>6862</sup> IENG Phan did not indicate when this occurred. But the Chamber recalls that SEM Om overheard similar radio broadcasts in August or September 1978.<sup>6863</sup> IENG Phan did not know who the Vietnamese troops cooperated with and did not know about their plans.<sup>6864</sup>

2041. CHHOUK Rin, a Southwest Zone military cadre who, in 1977, was sent to the East Zone becoming the Regiment 402 Commander,<sup>6865</sup> testified that he learned by reading CPK documents that there were attempts to overthrow POL Pot by CHAN Chakrei in 1976 and Vietnamese commandos in 1977-1978.<sup>6866</sup> He said there were suspicions that East Zone cadres had opened the way for Vietnamese to enter the country in Svay Rieng and Prey Veng provinces.<sup>6867</sup> SAO Phim was targeted because he was considered a hidden enemy due to his relationship with Vietnam.<sup>6868</sup> The Chamber considers that these views were influenced by torture-tainted confessions as the evidence implicating CHAN Chakrei arose from S-21 confessions.<sup>6869</sup> But CHHOUK Rin also testified that he was not sure why soldiers and senior military leaders were arrested. He testified that they were terrified and accused one another when they were arrested.<sup>6870</sup> CHHOUK Rin further testified that “Pol Pot was like an old and very hungry tiger. I said this because during the three-year period, he only attacked his own subordinates; those who were fierce fighters were killed.”<sup>6871</sup> The CPK took the wrong leadership line in his view.<sup>6872</sup>

when he joined the revolutionary forces in 1975, there was no tension between any of the zone forces. However, CHHUN Samorn did hear about fighting between the East Zone secretary SAO Phim's forces and the centre forces which occurred around the time of his own arrest in August 1978.<sup>6873</sup>

2043. SAO Phim's bodyguards were of the view that POL Pot initiated a coup against SAO Phim and not the other way around. NONG Nim said that POL Pot had executed a coup d'état against the East Zone to depose SAO Phim whom he accused of being a traitor. He did not think that SON Sen had staged the coup.<sup>6874</sup> SIN Oeng also testified that when the purge of the East Zone happened there was only one party in Cambodia, the CPK, and when the Party Centre and people from the Southwest Zone arrested people in the East Zone, it was a coup d'état.<sup>6875</sup> LONG Sat was also of the view that POL Pot initiated the coup d'état against SAO Phim.<sup>6876</sup> He denied that it was SAO Phim and HENG Samrin who initiated a coup against POL Pot.<sup>6877</sup>

2044. Therefore, apart from torture-tainted evidence, there was little to suggest that SAO Phim was making plans to overthrow POL Pot and the remaining members of the Standing Committee. To the contrary, as noted above, SAO Phim had regular communication with the other members of the Standing Committee by telegram and frequent visits, in furtherance of CPK policy.

2045. As the evidence discussed above shows, even when informed of the danger of purges in the East Zone, SAO Phim took no steps to fight against the Central Zone and Southwest Zone cadres who were executing such arrests.

2046. SIN Oeng, one of SAO Phim's bodyguards, stated that he never heard SAO Phim say anything against the Party or appear opposed to the Party's plans.<sup>6878</sup> SAO

See HENG Samrin Interview by Ben KIERNAN, E3/1568, 7 December 1992, ERN (En) 00651896-00651897 ("He [SAO Phim] said we shouldn't attack friends, but should follow orders 'for a period' [...] "So Phim didn't ever protest. But he said [...]: 'Our country will have to struggle again'. That's all he said. With me personally and other close aides whom he knew were and who worked with Phim's obedient attitude is corroborated by HENG Samrin who stated in an interview that SAO Phim told him that they "should not attack friends but should follow orders for a time".<sup>6879</sup> The NUON Chea Defence takes this as an admission that SAO Phim was reluctant to attack Vietnam and was planning an attack on POL Pot. The Chamber considers however, that this statement indicates that, despite some hesitancy to fight Vietnamese forces, SAO Phim ordered attacks against these last. Further, there was no evidence that SAO Phim was making preparations to fight against POL Pot prior to May 1978.

12.1.6.3.6. SAO Phim seeks a meeting with POL Pot

2047. In late 1977, SAO Phim told LONG Sat that POL Pot had not betrayed the people in the East Zone and that it was SON Sen who had initiated attacks on the East Zone cadres.<sup>6880</sup> SAO Phim was however unsure of who was responsible for the attacks and travelled to Phnom Penh to seek clarification from POL Pot as to why Central Zone soldiers were sent to kill East Zone cadres.<sup>6881</sup> For this reason, according to NONG Nim, SAO Phim travelled to Phnom Penh in 1978 with only his bodyguards.<sup>6882</sup> He testified that had SAO Phim decided to flee, he could have. But SAO Phim was an honest person who was loyal to POL Pot.<sup>6883</sup> This is corroborated by LONG Sat who testified in court that he understood from previous conversations he had with his uncle SAO Phim, that this last went to Akreiy Ksatr because he wanted "his messengers to ask why Pol Pot sent the soldiers, armies from the Central Zone to kill the cadre[s] and kill the people of the East Zone", but the messengers he sent with a letter to the Party Centre were arrested on their way and disappeared.<sup>6884</sup>

2048. Prior to his departure to Phnom Penh, SAO Phim alerted some of the remaining East Zone cadres that they should be prepared to fight POL Pot's forces if necessary. SIN Oeng, one of SAO Phim's bodyguards, testified that prior to leaving for Phnom Penh, SAO Phim met HENG Samrin in Prey Veng town.<sup>6885</sup> SAO Phim told HENG Samrin that he was going to Phnom Penh to sort things out.<sup>6886</sup> But if he should not return in one week, HENG Samrin should gather up all the remaining soldiers to fight against POL Pot.<sup>6887</sup> SIN Oeng then accompanied SAO Phim from Prey Veng towards Phnom Penh with a group of nine persons.<sup>6888</sup>

2049. MEAS Soeun was a craftsman and son of MEAS Senghong alias Chan,<sup>6889</sup> who was Deputy Secretary of the East Zone.<sup>6890</sup> MEAS Senghong alias Chan was initially the Sector 21 Secretary, before he took over as Sectors 23 and 24 Secretary after the arrest of SUOS Neou alias Chhouk.<sup>6891</sup> MEAS Soeun told OCIJ investigators that he received a letter from SAO Phim on 25 May 1978 alerting him to a possible military coup led by SON Sen to topple POL Pot and NUON Chea.<sup>6892</sup> That night, MEAS Soeun sent the men from his workshop to defend the East Zone office in Suong against centre army troops.<sup>6893</sup> They later received a letter from SAO Phim ordering that forces temporarily stand down because he was going to Phnom Penh.<sup>6894</sup> This is also consistent with the evidence of SIN Oeng, that when SAO Phim travelled to Phnom Penh, he was unsure of whether to fight POL Pot.<sup>6895</sup>

2050. The NUON Chea Defence claims that SAO Phim had cultivated a relationship with Vietnam to intervene and was only biding time before he took power from POL Pot. However, as noted above, the CPK had a long relationship with Vietnam. SAO

Phim had cut off ties with Vietnamese couriers in September 1977 when POL Pot ordered that Vietnam be attacked. Further, there is no evidence that SAO Phim had prepared for an attack on POL Pot. The Chamber considers that it was only after the East Zone purge had escalated in May 1978, that SAO Phim decided to meet POL Pot and prepare the possibility of fighting with POL Pot's forces. Rather, as discussed above, the evidence shows their surprise and confusion as to why the Central and Southwest Zones came in to purge the East Zone and that SAO Phim remained faithful to POL Pot, not wanting to believe he was behind the killings. His statements to HENG Samrin are best understood as advice to re-engage with Vietnam if talks with POL Pot should fail as SAO Phim's East Zone cadres had been decimated by the East Zone purge and would not have the resources, absent such assistance, to wage a fight.

12.1.6.3.7. Events at Akreiy Ksatr and SAO Phim's suicide

2051. SAO Phim never arrived in Phnom Penh, reaching only Akreiy Ksatr (in Sector 22), on the opposite side of the Mekong River from the Royal Palace in Phnom Penh.<sup>6896</sup> SIN Oeng stated that upon arriving at Akreiy Ksatr,<sup>6897</sup> SAO Phim twice sent messages to POL Pot in Phnom Penh, asking that he be escorted into the city, but that on each occasion there was no response.<sup>6898</sup>

2052. As SAO Phim was attempting to reach POL Pot, leaflets were distributed in the East Zone that accused SAO Phim of being a traitor.<sup>6899</sup> According to KE Pich Vannak, who saw one of the leaflets, they were signed by POL Pot and said that SAO Phim was selling land to Vietnam and that DK armed forces should not obey SAO Phim's orders.<sup>6900</sup> Soon after, SAO Phim and his entourage were surrounded and fired upon by soldiers.<sup>6901</sup>

12.1.6.3.9. Forces against POL Pot

2058. Witnesses stated that starting from the arrest of East Zone cadres in May 1978, various groups started to organise themselves to resist POL Pot. LONG Sat testified that he took command of the remaining soldiers in Division 4 (around 340 men) north of National Road 7 (Sector 21), telling them that POL Pot was a traitor and they needed to fight against two fronts to survive: POL Pot's forces on the one hand, and Vietnamese forces on the other.<sup>6917</sup> They had very little food and attacked POL Pot's forces in guerrilla attacks in Suong district and Memot to obtain medicine, rice, food, weapons attack POL Pot's forces.<sup>6930</sup> LONG Sat said that to defeat POL Pot's forces, they needed to cooperate with Vietnamese troops who had forces and weapons.<sup>6931</sup>

2060. While the dates of the meetings, contact with Vietnam or timing of the creation of the Front of National Salvation differ slightly in the evidence, the Chamber is satisfied that the account of the events following SAO Phim's death and leading to the contact with Vietnam is consistent. The Chamber further relies upon the East German Intelligence documents noted above in finding that there was no support from Vietnam for attacks on POL Pot until late in 1978.

2062. The Chamber finds that beginning after the death of SAO Phim's death, East Zone cadres began to fight against POL Pot's forces. Although some cadres made preparations by storing food and supplies, there is no evidence that these efforts were coordinated with SAO Phim and involved aggressive actions against POL Pot's forces. Furthermore, Vietnam did not provide material support for a rebellion in Cambodia against POL Pot's forces until late in 1978. As noted above, however, the SRV made preparations inside of Vietnam, starting in January 1978 with former CPK cadres who had fled to Vietnam, refugees and prisoners of war.<sup>6933</sup> There was no evidence to suggest that SAO Phim requested or received military support from Vietnam to overthrow POL Pot.<sup>6934</sup> maintained constant contact with the other members of the CPK Standing Committee and executed CPK decisions until his final confrontation in May 1978. It has further found that KE Pauk and SON Sen were sent to the East Zone in 1977 to reinforce East Zone forces against Vietnam and, in parallel, to execute the purge of perceived enemies within the ranks of East Zone cadres. Although SAO Phim and KE Pauk had strong disagreements, SAO Phim nonetheless ordered attacks against the Vietnamese. In addition, SAO Phim did not fight against CPK forces executing arrests in the East Zone up until May 1978. In May 1978, SAO Phim sought an audience with POL Pot to clear up any misunderstandings, thinking that SON Sen was behind the unjustified arrests of East Zone cadres. It was SAO Phim's faith in POL Pot that ultimately proved to be his undoing. As he waited for an escort into Phnom Penh, SAO Phim was attacked by POL Pot's forces and committed suicide. In conclusion, and based upon these facts, the Chamber is not convinced that Vietnam provided SAO Phim unofficial assistance, particularly after 1977 or that SAO Phim had orchestrated a plot to unseat POL Pot from power.

12.1.7. Vietnam Invasion Argument

2064. The NUON Chea Defence submits that due to the failure of the attempts to overthrow POL Pot which were supported by Vietnam, it decided to begin a large-scale invasion of DK,<sup>6935</sup> seeking the assistance of the Soviet Union in order to dissuade China from interfering.<sup>6936</sup> To legitimise the invasion, Vietnam recruited Cambodian forces (including HENG Samrin), setting up guerrilla training camps and broadcasting calls for Cambodians to rise up against POL Pot.<sup>6937</sup> It is submitted that Vietnam sought to manipulate public opinion by accusing the CPK of atrocities and acts of aggression.<sup>6938</sup> Vietnam then entered Cambodia in "an unprovoked invasion of a sovereign state in flagrant violation of international law" which was condemned by the international community.<sup>6939</sup>

2065. The Chamber has already rejected the submission that Vietnam instigated or supported internal factions within the Northwest Zone in 1977 and/or the East Zone in 1978. As to Vietnam's invasion and occupation of Cambodia starting in 1979, the Chamber notes that these events relate to events outside the temporal jurisdiction of the ECCC. It further notes that the 1979 invasion cannot retroactively justify alleged criminality occurring between 1975 and 1979, regardless of its legal characterisation as a matter of jus ad bellum. The Chamber therefore rejects the submission that CPK policy between 1975 and 1979 was justified on the basis of the existential threat posed by Vietnam.

12.1.8. Summary of Findings on Internal Purges

2066. The Closing Order charges two specific purge phenomena which occurred during the CPK regime: the purge of the Old and New North Zones; and the purge of the East Zone.<sup>6940</sup>

2067. The Chamber notes that it did not include the North Zone Security Centre (paras 572-587) or the Steung Tauch Execution Site, East Zone (paras 715-738) within the scope of Case 002/02.<sup>6941</sup> Therefore it does not make findings on these paragraphs of the Closing Order.

12.1.8.1. Central (old North) Zone purge

closely associated with KOY Thuon who began confessing under torture around November 1976.<sup>6944</sup> As a result of being implicated in these initial confessions, KOY Thuon was deemed to be a traitor, and sent to S-21. KOY Thuon confessed to having been a member of a massive network of traitors, encompassing a large number of administrative and military cadres in the North Zone, triggering a massive purge of North Zone cadres supervised by KE Pauk while reporting to Committee 870.<sup>6945</sup> Lower-ranking victims of the purge were executed locally and replaced by Southwest Zone cadres that had been sent to assist in the purge by relatives of KE Pauk.<sup>6946</sup> The purges of the North Zone continued until 1978.<sup>6947</sup>

2069. The Chamber recalls its findings in the 1st January Dam section of this Judgement as follows. After KOY Thuon was transferred to Phnom Penh after April 1975, he was implicated in several confessions, leading POL Pot to order his arrest and detention at S-21.<sup>6948</sup> A first wave of Central (old North) Zone purges started in February 1977 when “Phnom Penh sent security trucks to arrest the chiefs of the ministries”.<sup>6949</sup> The security trucks returned to arrest Sector 41, 42 and 43 chiefs and in around May 1977 returned again to arrest the heads of districts and some sub-districts. Southwest Zone cadres were sent to the Central (old North) Zone by the Standing Committee, including POL Pot and NUON Chea. Under the direction of KE Pauk, the Southwest Zone cadres took over leadership positions and executed the arrests of dozens of cadres who were sent to S-21. Purges in the Central (old North) Zone had been ordered by NUON Chea, SON Sen and the Standing Committee. Prisoner lists from S-21 confirm that arrests continued throughout the country, and particularly in the Central (old North) Zone, after June 1978 until the end of the regime.<sup>6950</sup>

12.1.8.2. East Zone purge

2070. The Closing Order charges that the purges of the East Zone started from mid-1976 with the arrests of SUOS Neou alias Chhouk, former secretary of Sector 24, and CHAN Chakrei alias NOV Mean, Secretary of East Zone Division 170.<sup>6951</sup> Both were arrested pursuant to a decision of the Standing Committee, interrogated and tortured, and produced confessions in which they implicated a number of cadres from Sector 24. These confessions were analysed and by mid-September 1976, SON Sen and S-21 staff had intensified their pursuit of alleged traitors with regard to cadres and former cadres of the East Zone supposedly implicated as CIA, KGB or Vietnamese agents. This launched a series of arrests of East Zone cadres, many of whom were sent to S-21 through 1977.<sup>6952</sup>

2071. The Closing Order further charges that from mid-August 1977, arrests and transfers in the East Zone were orchestrated by SON Sen and KE Pauk using regular forces from the Party Centre, Central Zone units and former Southwest Zone troops placed under Party Centre command.<sup>6953</sup> In March 1978, it charges that a massive escalation of purges of East Zone cadres and combatants occurred in Svay Rieng in Sector 23. This was followed by even more arrests and executions in May-June 1978 in other parts of the East Zone. During this time SAO Phim, East Zone Secretary, committed suicide to avoid arrest. Purges of remaining East Zone cadres, and of cadres who, although operating outside the East Zone were originally from the East Zone continued through to the end of the CPK regime. Some of these cadres were sent from the East Zone to S-21 while others were killed on the spot or moved to other parts of the country. Many other East Zone or ex-East Zone cadres and combatants were sent for “re-education” at worksites such as the Kampong Chhnang Airfield construction site.<sup>6954</sup>

Zone and Party Centre forces commanded by SON Sen and KE Pauk.<sup>6957</sup> Some of the cadres were killed on the spot or nearby, some were sent to the Kampong Chhnang Airfield worksite, and others were sent to S-21 to be killed.<sup>6958</sup> SAO Phim attempted to speak with POL Pot, but was physically attacked and committed suicide before he could be arrested.<sup>6959</sup>

12.2. S-21 Security Centre (S-21)

12.2.1. Closing Order

2073. The Closing Order charges the Accused with the crimes against humanity of: (i) murder; (ii) extermination; (iii) enslavement; (iv) imprisonment; (v) torture; (vi) persecution on political grounds; (vii) persecution on racial grounds; and (viii) other inhumane acts through attacks against human dignity at S-21.<sup>6960</sup> The Closing Order further charges the Accused with the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of: (i) wilful killing; (ii) torture; (iii) inhumane treatment; (iv) wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health; (v) wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or a civilian the rights of fair and regular trial; (vi) unlawful deportation of a civilian; and (vii) unlawful confinement of a civilian at S-21.<sup>6961</sup>

2074. According to the Closing Order, the S-21 Security Centre was composed of a detention centre in Phnom Penh and an execution site named Choeung Ek, which was 15 kilometres to the south-west of Phnom Penh.<sup>6962</sup> It was a very important security centre in DK which conducted activities on a national scale, was considered to be an organ of the CPK and held senior-level and important prisoners.<sup>6963</sup> S-21 was under the

The Chamber has clarified that the crime of rape for which the Accused are charged is to be interpreted as excluding rape committed in security centres and cooperatives outside the context of forced marriage. See Decision on Lead Co-Lawyers' Rule 92 Submission on the Confirmation of the Scope of Case 002/02 Concerning the Charges of Rape Outside the Context of Forced Marriage, E306/7/3, 30 August 2016, paras 15-20. An appeal against this decision was dismissed as inadmissible by the Supreme Court Chamber. control of the Standing Committee for its duties in regard to security but under the control of the General Staff with respect to administrative functions, such as food production, personnel and training.<sup>6964</sup>

2075. The Closing Order found that the Military and Security Committee decided on military and security matters, including the operation of S-21,<sup>6965</sup> and that given their positions on the Military Committee, POL Pot, NUON Chea and SON Sen were in charge of S-21.<sup>6966</sup>

2076. According to the Closing Order, individuals that the Party Centre saw as political opponents and who were sent to S-21 were labelled as enemies.<sup>6967</sup> Thousands of prisoners who were mostly Cambodian, including men, women and children were detained at S-21.<sup>6968</sup> The prisoners included: former RAK members; CPK cadres;<sup>6969</sup> former soldiers and cadres of the Khmer Republic or of FUNK; teachers; professors; professionals and foreigners including some Western detainees;<sup>6970</sup> and Vietnamese civilians and soldiers who were generally arrested from or near the main conflict zone along the border with Vietnam.<sup>6971</sup> Prisoners came from all zones and autonomous sectors of Cambodia and the numbers of those who were arrested increased in waves with the internal purges.<sup>6972</sup> Prisoners were forced to work and were detained in poor hygienic conditions with insufficient food and inadequate medical care.<sup>6973</sup> Most prisoners were systematically interrogated and were frequently mistreated, humiliated and tortured by interrogators in order to extract confessions.<sup>6974</sup> The Closing Order established that in or within the vicinity of the S-21 complex and at the Choeng Ek execution site, as many as 12,273 detainees were killed or died as a result of the conditions of detention.<sup>6975</sup>

12.2.2. Preliminary Issues

2080. The NUON Chea Defence submits that KAING Guek Eav alias Duch has limited credibility as a witness, had a limited role at S-21 and enhanced his “knowledge” of events through his review of the Case File and adjusted his testimony accordingly.<sup>6979</sup> The Chamber is fully aware of this observation and approached Duch’s evidence with particular care to ensure that his testimony was not altered in any way by subsequent access and studying of the Case File. With respect to the factual findings at S-21, the Chamber has been careful to rely on Duch only to the extent that he had contemporaneous knowledge of the facts about which he testified.

2081. As with any witness, where Duch's evidence was clearly based or coloured by speculation, opinion, assumptions, secondary sources or non-contemporaneous information, the Chamber has accorded it no, or very limited, weight. Where Duch was unable to provide evidence based on his direct knowledge about specific details, the Chamber has relied primarily on other first-hand witnesses or documentary evidence. While there were shortcomings in Duch's knowledge and testimony with respect to specific issues, which are addressed in the factual findings below, this did not affect the Chamber's conclusion that in general Duch was a credible witness who testified with candour. He testified multiple times for an extended period of time and gave several interviews. His evidence stood the test of cross-examination and proved to be consistent, detailed and reliable with respect to key issues surrounding the creation, operation and oversight of S-21.

Particularly, the NUON Chea defence notes that while CHUM Mey asserted he escaped from S-21 with UNG Pech, the latter did not name CHUM Mey when listing the people with whom he escaped.<sup>6981</sup> The Chamber notes that indeed CHUM Mey was not listed by UNG Pech when he spoke in the 1979 in absentia trial of POL Pot and IENG Sary about those who survived S-21.<sup>6982</sup> In addition, CHUM Mey was not in photographs taken of S-21 survivors or interviewed by an East German film crew.<sup>6983</sup> However, the Chamber finds that there is nothing to indicate that UNG Pech exhaustively listed or could recollect the names of all survivors. Similarly, there is nothing to suggest that the photographs taken or the East German documentary purported to include all those who survived S-21. To the contrary, the Chamber is aware that some photographic evidence was removed from S-21 in 1980.<sup>6984</sup> The Chamber therefore finds that the absence of a photograph of CHUM Mey among the S-21 detainees is not conclusive, given that some photographs may have been destroyed before Vietnamese forces entered the facility or were removed from the premises thereafter.<sup>6985</sup>

also had regard to the involvement of CHUM Mey in a crime-scene re-enactment and Duch's acknowledgement of the harm suffered by CHUM Mey.<sup>6989</sup> Other witnesses including BOU Meng, PRAK Khorn and Duch himself testified that CHUM Mey was detained at S-21.<sup>6990</sup> The Chamber also finds CHUM Mey's explanation as to why he did not know the names of other individuals who were brought to S-21 from his unit to be credible, given that his unit consisted of hundreds or thousands of individuals and given the difference in the dates of arrest.<sup>6991</sup>

2085. The Chamber finds that CHUM Mey's evidence was delivered in a frank and forthright manner and his account of events remained consistent when tested during cross-examination. There was no indication that the suffering which he experienced and witnessed was fabricated in any way. Furthermore, his evidence was consistent with and was corroborated by the testimony received from other credible witnesses. The Chamber thus concludes that CHUM Mey was a credible and reliable Civil Party whose evidence could be relied upon. The NUON Chea Defence's submissions to the contrary are therefore dismissed.

12.2.3. General Considerations on Evidence

2086. In reaching its factual findings with respect to S-21, the Chamber has primarily relied on both the abundant contemporaneous written evidence recording the activities of S-21 and on the testimony of witnesses and evidence of Civil Parties who appeared in Case 002/02 or Case 002/01. The Chamber also had regard to the prior statements or interviews given by these individuals as support for their live testimony, to assess any contradictions and to consider the manner in which this evidence was discussed during live testimony.<sup>6992</sup>

2087. If a witness or Civil Party testified in Case 002/02 or Case 002/01 and Case 001, the Chamber has primarily referred to the Case 002 testimony, because while the evidence provided in previous proceedings was available to them, only during hearings in Case 002 did the Parties have the opportunity to fully explore and cross-examine the witnesses on matters relevant to the present case. As the Chamber did not expect each witness to reiterate all of the evidence that they provided in previous hearings and witness statements, it thus views the testimony from each witness in Case 002 holistically, and considers it alongside their previous interviews and statements.

2088. There were several witnesses, such as MAM Nai and BOU Meng, who testified in Case 001 but did not testify in Case 002 for various reasons, and whose transcripts of testimony were admitted in this case.<sup>6993</sup> As the Accused in Case 002 did not have the opportunity to cross-examine these witnesses, the Chamber relies on the Case 001 testimony of these witnesses within the limits set out in this Judgement, especially with regard to the evidence on the acts and conduct of the Accused.<sup>6994</sup> The Chamber has generally had regard to the testimony from Case 001 for the purpose of corroborating testimony received in Case 002 and authenticating documentary evidence.

2089. The Chamber accepts the NUON Chea Defence's submission that the findings made in Case 002 should be based on evidence heard and submissions made in this trial and not on the findings made in Case 001 with respect to S-21.<sup>6995</sup> Contrary to the NUON Chea Defence's submissions regarding Case 001,<sup>6996</sup> the Chamber has not given precedence to findings reached in Case 001 but has reached its factual and legal conclusions based on the evidence admitted and heard in Case 002.

12.2.3.1. Witness and Civil Party evidence

2090. The key witnesses and Civil Parties who testified in this case with respect to S-21 were KAING Guek Eav alias Duch, who was the Chairman of S-21 from mid-March 1976 to 7 January 1979;<sup>6997</sup> HIM Huy, who was a guard and later head of a "Special Unit" at S-21 from 1976 to mid-1978;<sup>6998</sup> CHUM Mey, a Civil Party who was detained

12.2.3.2. Documentary evidence

2091. With respect to S-21 prisoner lists, S-21 photographs and S-21 documents including prisoner biographies, the Chamber has primarily had regard to documentary evidence which has been authenticated by witnesses or which bore sufficient similarity to authenticated documents such that they could be relied upon. The Chamber addresses its approach in more detail below.<sup>7006</sup> As regards the evidence contained in the notebooks kept by S-21 staff and confessions of S-21 prisoners, the Chamber refers to its approach on torture tainted evidence.<sup>7007</sup>

12.2.3.2.1. OCIJ and OCP Prisoner Lists

2092. During the course of Cases 001 and 002, the OCP and OCIJ attempted to compile their own S-21 prisoner lists based on original documents from S-21, DC-Cam documents, and other contemporaneous sources.<sup>7008</sup> To start, on 16 January 2008 and 6 February 2008, the Co-Prosecutors requested the inclusion of two S-21 prisoner lists compiled and produced by DC-Cam staff into the OCIJ Case File, and their request was granted.<sup>7009</sup>

2093. The first DC-Cam list (hereinafter “DC-Cam Prisoner List I”) was compiled by DC-Cam staff over a period of one year and included the names of 9,805 people.<sup>7010</sup> The second DC-Cam list (hereinafter “DC-Cam Prisoner List II”) was produced by DC-Cam staff in 2006 and contained the name, alias, age, sex, nationality, “function” and date of arrest of 4,186 people detained in S-21.<sup>7011</sup> The Co-Prosecutors submitted that the second list was created by typing information contained in two black handwritten S-21 ledgers – created in 1980 – by employees of the S-21 Museum.<sup>7012</sup> Eight of these employees were heard by OCIJ investigators and corroborated this submission in their WRIs, in which they explained their methodology and role in creating the lists. The employees submitted, inter alia, that they gathered the original documents from S-21 itself and surrounding houses, they never witnessed removal of these documents from

2096. The Chamber issued its Judgement in Case 001 on 3 August 2010. It found, inter alia, that while the OCP Prisoner List II was incomplete, it established a minimum number of S-21 victims. Moreover, the Chamber found that the actual number of victims was likely to be considerably greater than the 12,273 listed.<sup>7017</sup>

echoing the Case 001 Judgement, found that this prisoner list established a minimum number of prisoners detained at S-21 during its operation. The Co-Investigating Judges in their findings also directly relied on many of the OCP Annexes' analyses of prisoner data, such as the number of men, women, and children detained, prisoner origin patterns and the date of purges of important figures.<sup>7018</sup> In 2014, the OCIJ notified the Parties of its discovery of additional DC-Cam documents related to S-21.<sup>7019</sup>

2099. On 8 August 2016, the Co-Prosecutors submitted a supplemental list, compiled based on contemporaneous documents in the 002 Case File, of individuals who were allegedly prisoners at S-21 but were not included in the above OCIJ Prisoner List. The Co-Prosecutors submitted that this information added 1,592 new entries to the S-21 prisoner total.<sup>7024</sup> On 31 August 2016, the Co-Prosecutors requested admission of this

2100. On 2 May 2017, the Co-Prosecutors filed their Closing Brief for Case 002/02, which included an annex entitled "Revised OCIJ S-21 Prisoners List" (hereinafter "OCP Prisoner List III").<sup>7027</sup> The Co-Prosecutors explain in their brief that in the course of their review of the OCIJ Prisoner List alongside execution lists and prisoner photographs, they found there to be an additional 1,440 prisoners detained at S-21. The Co-Prosecutors combined the recent additions of 1,440 and 1,592 names into the OCP Prisoner List III found in their annex, creating a new total of 18,133 prisoner entries.<sup>7028</sup> The supporting documents for these additions were admitted into evidence and form part of the Case 002/02 Case File, and are referenced in a variety of columns on the right side of the revised list.<sup>7029</sup>

2101. On 8 June 2017, the Co-Prosecutors filed a correction of their OCP Prisoner List III, stating that they had conducted a final review of the prisoner entries, and in doing so identified 70 entries which they considered to be duplicates. As such, the Co-Prosecutors submit that the new total number of prisoners should be reduced from 18,133 to 18,063.<sup>7030</sup>

Chea Defence challenged the veracity and reliability of the OCIJ Prisoner List, citing to an example of a listed prisoner with an execution date, for whom it alleged that there were no supporting documents for the said date.<sup>7032</sup> In June 2016, the NUON Chea Defence made several requests to the Trial Chamber, including a request to call witnesses HIN Sotheany and Hiroto FUJIWARA, both of whom were involved in preparation of the S-21 OCIJ Prisoner List. The NUON Chea Defence pointed out that many of the underlying documents had unusual formats or were illegible. Thus, it submitted that the testimony of Ms. HIN and Mr. FUJIWARA was necessary to examine the methodology used in creating the list. In addition, the NUON Chea Defence submitted that the majority of the individuals who appear on all the lists were only registered at S-21 before being sent to Prey Sar, Kampong Chhnang, other re-education centres, or were released and therefore not actually detained within the S-21 premises. The NUON Chea Defence stated that evidence on the Case File demonstrates that a maximum of approximately 5,000 individuals were executed at S-21, supported by the approximate 4,300 biographies found by David CHANDLER, and the 5,512 individuals with execution dates on the OCIJ Prisoner List. The NUON Chea Defence also noted that there were 406 individuals on the OCIJ Prisoner List for whom there was no date of entry, date of arrest or date of execution.<sup>7033</sup> key documents in creating the list.<sup>7036</sup> She focused mainly on prisoner entry lists, and her review did not encompass prisoner photographs or S-21 staff statements.<sup>7037</sup> The Chamber heard Ms. HIN for one full day on 9 January 2017 as to her qualifications and her methodology in creating the OCIJ Prisoner List.<sup>7038</sup>

2104. During her testimony, Ms. HIN admitted that while she included 5,512 execution dates, she did not have time to review all the available data on the number of deaths; thus, this number stems from an incomplete analysis of the available information.<sup>7039</sup> Ms. HIN admitted that while she reviewed lists of incoming prisoners from 1976 to 1979, she did not complete a full review of execution lists from this time period, and stated that “[f]rankly speaking, there may have [been] errors”.<sup>7040</sup>

2105. The NUON Chea Defence submits that due to Ms. HIN’s partial review of underlying documents, failure to establish their chain of custody and misrepresentation of their meaning, the analyst’s methodology was seriously flawed.<sup>7041</sup> The Co-Prosecutors noted the incomplete nature of the OCIJ Prisoner List and offered their updated list, which they further amended after the end of proceedings.<sup>7042</sup>

2106. The Chamber acknowledges the enormity of available S-21 data and the ensuing difficulty to precisely determine the number of people detained and executed at S-21. The Chamber notes that Ms. HIN speaks and reads Khmer, and is satisfied that, although there were limitations to her analysis, she adopted a reasonable and readily understandable methodology to create a generally reliable list of incoming numbers of S-21 prisoners, based on the information and time available to her. Ms. HIN spent two years analysing and reviewing the data, and her findings were used by the International Co-Investigating Judge for the purpose of his analysis of S-21 numbers.<sup>7043</sup> She appears to have testified truthfully as to both her methodology and experience, and her candour in admitting minor flaws in the study supports this finding.<sup>7044</sup> The Chamber also notes that HIN Sotheany and the Co-Prosecutors agree that the OCIJ Prisoner List is lacking in regard to information on executions, and was not based on a full review of the evidence.<sup>7045</sup> As such, the Chamber recognises that Ms. HIN's analysis of executions was only partial, and regards the 5,512 executions listed in the OCIJ Prisoner List as a minimum figure.

12.2.3.2.1.2. Party submissions and Trial Chamber findings regarding subsequent OCP Lists and amendments

2108. As outlined above, the Co-Prosecutors filed various amendments and new lists subsequent to the OCIJ Prisoner List.<sup>7047</sup> In August 2016, they highlighted the fact that 1,592 prisoner names from their 2009 OCP Prisoner List II were not included in the OCIJ Prisoner List.<sup>7048</sup> The last updated list, the OCP Prisoner List III, calculates the new total of prisoners to above 18,000.<sup>7049</sup>

Additional documents relevant to prisoner totals were made available only after the OCIJ list was created. For example, Professor Walter HEYNOWSKI provided the Court with the Orange Logbook and additional S-21 photographs in December 2016 and January 2017. 2109. The NUON Chea Defence submits that the Case File is incomplete regarding S-21, and that many of the documents that the OCP and OCIJ rely on in the creation of their lists lack indicia of reliability. As such, the NUON Chea Defence submits that the lists are inaccurate, and posits that the Chamber cannot use the prisoner lists to make any findings other than those related to the number of people registered at S-21.<sup>7050</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence reiterates its submission that the Parties' lists are work products that serve as tools, not evidence, and therefore the Chamber must base its conclusions on the underlying record.<sup>7051</sup> In their Closing Statements in Case 002/02, the Co-Prosecutors called attention to Duch's assertion in Case 001 that the more than 12,000 prisoner names in the OCP Prisoner List II constituted a minimum number of detainees. They further elaborated that in creating their updated list, they went through both entry and execution lists, finishing what analyst Ms. HIN started when creating the OCIJ Prisoner List, and confirmed over 18,000 arrests and 11,000 executions.<sup>7052</sup> The NUON Chea Defence disputes the reliability of the S-21 lists and submits that they have no probative value.<sup>7053</sup>

specifying which contemporaneous lists support each entry.<sup>7055</sup> Additionally, evidence on the Case File describes the process that S-21 Museum employees went through in finding and organising the documents found at S-21 shortly after the fall of the regime, shedding light on their chain of custody and reliability.<sup>7056</sup>

2111. The NUON Chea Defence contention that the Case File is incomplete as regards S-21 is accurate and uncontested. Many records from S-21 have disappeared. In addition to documentation initially found in Tuol Sleng, DC-Cam received further documents relevant to S-21 from other sources over time, such as the archives of the DK Ministry of Defence, the Cambodian Ministry of the Interior, and Sweden. There are also collections of documents in Hanoi that were taken from Cambodia, to which researchers do not have access.<sup>7057</sup> DC-Cam's collection of documents alone numbers around one million pages from various sources.<sup>7058</sup> DC-Cam provided documents to Parties upon their request, and as of February 2012, it had disclosed approximately 500,000 pages of documentation, only half of its collection.<sup>7059</sup> When HIN Sotheany created the OCIJ Prisoner List, she reviewed 13,383 documents from the archives of Tuol Sleng and DC-Cam and relied on 871 of these documents; only the latter were admitted to the Case File.<sup>7060</sup>

2112. However, as discussed above, numerous contemporaneous documents have been authenticated and confirmed in Court by witnesses such as Duch and SUOS Thy.

Further, many of the contemporaneous documents are of similar format and are corroborated by other documents, testimony and WRIs. The Chamber finds this to be an additional indication of their reliability. These lists, while not complete, constitute the foundation for the OCP lists, the OCIJ list, and the Chamber's own analysis of prisoner totals. As discussed in further detail below, they are reliable and probative.<sup>7061</sup> The Chamber therefore dismisses the NUON Chea Defence's submission that the incompleteness of the Case File renders the OCP and OCIJ S-21 Prisoner lists inherently unreliable.

2113. The Chamber reiterates that the various OCP prisoner lists and Closing Brief Annexes, like the OCIJ Prisoner List, are work products and serve as analytical tools created by the Parties to guide the Chamber through S-21 evidence, as opposed to constituting evidence in their own right.<sup>7062</sup>

12.2.3.2.2. Contemporaneous S-21 prisoner lists

2115. The Case 002/02 Case File contains over 1,000 contemporaneous S-21 lists that vary in scope, frequency, detail and length. As discussed in detail in the following sections, many of these lists were produced by S-21 cadres and staff. The Chamber accords the most weight to the contemporaneous S-21 lists that were authenticated in Chamber only relies on the above categories or similarly corroborated lists in its calculations.

2119. The Chamber considers the verified documents to be representative samples from the above-listed categories. Accordingly, other lists which fall within the seven verified list categories and which bear sufficient similarity to the authenticated documents are also found to be reliable by the Chamber. Based on the foregoing, the Chamber is satisfied that the above-listed categories of documents demonstrate sufficient indicia of reliability to serve as a basis for findings regarding the number of prisoners arrested and detained, the number of prisoners executed, and general biographical information such as gender, age and origin. The Chamber addresses each category of lists in more detail in the following sections.

12.2.3.2.2.1. Daily entry lists

2121. SUOS Thy described how he received and compiled daily lists of incoming prisoners as part of his position at S-21.<sup>7085</sup> The earliest dated daily entry list that the Chamber considered in its calculations is from 4 April 1976<sup>7086</sup> and the most comprehensive set of daily entry lists cover much of 1978.<sup>7087</sup> Because daily entry lists were authenticated in court by their author, the Chamber finds them to be generally reliable, keeping in mind that they are not necessarily comprehensive for the entire day indicated.

12.2.3.2.2.2. Daily controlling lists

2122. Daily controlling lists differ from other S-21 lists in that they compile prisoner numbers rather than names. Daily controlling lists track the total numbers of prisoners arrested and “taken out” or “subtracted” from S-21 in any given day, tallying the total number of prisoners in the facility at the start and end of each day. The lists consist of a grid dividing prisoners by origin (e.g. military section, zones and autonomous sectors and various ministries), and often include annotations at the bottom of the document giving the name and cause of death of certain prisoners. The controlling lists usually reflect data from the previous day, thus the date listed at the bottom of the document is the date the list was created rather than the date to which the figures correspond.<sup>7088</sup>

to March and late December 1977.<sup>7093</sup> As with the daily entry lists, the Chamber finds these daily controlling lists to be generally reliable based on in-court authentication by their custodian, SUOS Thy.

12.2.3.2.2.3. Monthly entry lists

2124. The evidence contains monthly entry lists recording the total number of prisoners detained at S-21 over the course of one month.<sup>7094</sup> The lists are usually either organised chronologically by date of entry or grouped by prisoner origin (either by geographical origin or by office and division).<sup>7095</sup> The Chamber has relied on these monthly lists to calculate total entries in preference to the daily entry lists, which were often repetitive or not comprehensive. While giving evidence, Civil Party PHOUNG Yat confirmed the content of a monthly entry list by identifying the name of his brother, who was detained in S-21.<sup>7096</sup> Moreover, part of the information contained in this monthly list is corroborated by another periodical entry list, the content of which was confirmed by other witnesses.<sup>7097</sup> Many other monthly entry lists are corroborated by smaller lists from within the same month.<sup>7098</sup> Thus, the Chamber finds that monthly entry lists have sufficient indicia of reliability and relies on them accordingly in its calculations.

12.2.3.2.2.4. Periodical entry lists (entry lists by origin)

2125. Many of the S-21 prisoner lists in evidence group the prisoners listed therein by origin, with entry dates spanning random time periods across the duration of S-21's existence. Often the lists do not encompass set increments of time, making them difficult to verify against other, time-bound lists or to count the listed prisoners toward total arrests or deaths without risk of repetition. These lists are labelled by the Chamber as either "periodical entry lists" or "entry lists by origin". Like the other prisoner lists in evidence, these documents often contain information on the identity of the prisoners such as their names, including their alias, gender, origin and age.<sup>7099</sup> Many of these types of lists were authenticated and had their contents affirmed in court.<sup>7100</sup> Due to the abovementioned issues with corroboration and potential repetition, the Chamber typically did not rely on these types of lists to calculate the total number of prisoners arrested or killed, but did have regard to these lists to collect biographical information and to corroborate other S-21 prisoner lists.

12.2.3.2.2.5. Interrogation lists

2126. Interrogation lists contain similar prisoner data to the abovementioned documents, but they additionally note the stage that prisoners were in at a given time during their detention at S-21, such as “confessed”, “making record”, “suspended”, “finished”, and/or the name of their interrogator. The formats of interrogation lists vary, and they occasionally note when a prisoner had died.<sup>7101</sup> There are several lists falling into this category that were verified and/or discussed in court.<sup>7102</sup>

2127. Because interrogation lists display the status of a set of prisoners at any given time at S-21, they present the same difficulties in calculating total prisoner numbers as the periodical entry lists or entry lists by origin. Interrogation lists provide a glimpse of a moment in time in the interrogation process at S-21, but the prisoners listed therein were arrested or killed on different, random dates. Thus, the Chamber relies on interrogation lists for biographical information, insight into the interrogation process and in relation to the functioning of the security centre, but it does not use these lists to calculate the total number of prisoners arrested or killed.

12.2.3.2.2.6. Execution lists

different periods of time, ranging from one day to over one year.<sup>7103</sup> Execution lists are sometimes grouped by prisoner origin, for example by vocation or geographic origin.<sup>7104</sup> Often the term “smashed” is used to indicate execution. These lists indicate that prisoners were typically killed in bigger groups and with more irregularity than the steady stream of prisoner entries into S-21.<sup>7105</sup> The Case File contains three lengthy execution lists that span each year from 1976 to 1978. These execution lists are compilations that contain many discrete lists within them and are generally comprehensive over the year in question.<sup>7106</sup> Portions of each of these three lists were testified to in court,<sup>7107</sup> and the Chamber has primarily relied on these yearly compilations when calculating the total number of deaths at S-21. The Chamber has also relied on these lists to draw conclusions as to purges across different zones.<sup>7108</sup> Many other iterations of S-21 execution lists were authenticated and confirmed by witnesses in court,<sup>7109</sup> and as such the Chamber considers execution lists to be generally reliable. The Chamber notes that, while not common, at times there are inconsistencies or lack of clarity in execution lists as to whether prisoners were killed, or died of disease or due to conditions of detention.<sup>7110</sup> This constitutes one of the reasons why the numbers the Chamber has calculated based on the S-21 prisoner lists are approximate figures rather than precise findings.

12.2.3.2.3. S-21 confessions

2129. YOUK Chhang, the director of DC-Cam, indicated in 2009 that DC-Cam had collected 5,017 confessions from several different locations.<sup>7111</sup> A large number of confessions were obtained from the Tuol Sleng archives, which were left at S-21, recovered in 1979, and preserved in situ upon the establishment of the Tuol Sleng Genocide Museum in 1980.<sup>7112</sup> The Chamber admitted at least 479 of these confessions, which were presumptively obtained through the use of torture, some of which also contain annotations by Duch.<sup>7113</sup> An additional number of original confessions were obtained from the house of a former Khmer Rouge cadre on Street 240.<sup>7114</sup> Some of these latter confessions contain annotations that Duch has identified as belonging to SON Sen and NUON Chea, although this point is contested.<sup>7115</sup> In assessing confessions, including any annotations, the Chamber scrupulously adheres to its decision on the use of torture-tainted evidence.<sup>7116</sup>

<sup>7110</sup> See e.g., S-21 list of prisoners who died from 1.7.76 to 15.6[sic].76, E3/8452, undated, ERN (En) 00843420 (the document heading states “prisoners who died” but a right-hand column indicates an “Execution Date”); S-21 list of prisoners who died at Office “S-21 Kor (C)”, E3/1539 [E3/1540], undated, pp. 10-12, ERN (En) 00182901-00182903 (eight prisoners are listed as having been smashed on 30 March 1976, but also have the label “by illness”; additionally, the bottom of the list states that nine prisoners died of sickness); S-21 list of prisoners who were executed from 15.1.77 to 31.1.77, E3/3185, undated, ERN (En) 00837640-00837641 (the list title indicates execution, but four prisoners with execution dates are listed as having died “of illness”).

2130. Although confessions may only be used for legally permissible purposes, annotations made upon the confession by someone other than the confessor do not form part of the torture-tainted statement and may be used as evidence.<sup>7117</sup> With respect to S-21 confessions, the Chamber has had regard to annotations and notes included in these confessions which tended to corroborate the arrest, mistreatment or killing of prisoners or the way in which these confessions were prepared and communicated. The Chamber has primarily relied on annotations which have been authenticated by a witness or discussed during live testimony. The Chamber has also had regard to annotations made by individuals who, according to other evidence, were S-21 cadres involved in interrogations. The Chamber is satisfied that these annotations and notes, which were made by S-21 staff or CPK officials who received the confessions, do not form part of the underlying confession. Accordingly, even if the underlying confession was tainted by torture, the Chamber is satisfied that it may safely rely on these annotations to determine the approach taken to obtaining confessions, how these confessions were used, who was involved in the interrogation process and to whom the confessions were passed. The Chamber refers to its general considerations on evidence with respect to torture-tainted evidence in Section 2: Preliminary Issues.<sup>7118</sup>

The Chamber also has before it three notebooks of former S-21 personnel or interrogators that record events and reflect political trainings that they received, with entries from approximately July and August 1976, January to July 1978, and April to December 1978.<sup>7119</sup> These S-21 notebooks include the notes of S-21 cadres or interrogators and include discussions of interrogation techniques.<sup>7120</sup> They also include evidence relevant to internal purges, the identification of enemies of the regime and the subject matter of self-criticism meetings.<sup>7121</sup> While some of the contents of these

2132. One of those notebooks belonged to MAM Nai alias Chan who was an interrogator and Duch's assistant at S-21 ("MAM Nai's Notebook").<sup>7123</sup> MAM Nai had worked with Duch in Amleang Commune in M-13 as an interrogator<sup>7124</sup> and followed Duch to S-21, where, after a brief involvement in logistical matters, he was assigned as chief of the interrogators.<sup>7125</sup> MAM Nai himself confirmed that this notebook contained his handwriting and notes he took while transcribing lectures given by Duch.<sup>7126</sup> Duch authenticated a second notebook as belonging to one of his interrogators named POU Phally ("the POU Phally Notebook"),<sup>7127</sup> and confirmed that he gave instructions consistent with those found in the notebook with respect to methods of interrogation.<sup>7128</sup>

two pages and testified that it belonged to Comrade Oeun,<sup>7132</sup> yet another interrogator at S-21.<sup>7133</sup> The Chamber notes that Duch's testimony in Case 002/02 somewhat contradicts a clarification he provided to the Co-Investigating Judges in Case 001, where he noted that the first portion of the book belonged to Tuy and proceeded to identify the signature of Tuy.<sup>7134</sup> The Chamber confirms that there are portions of this notebook which include the signature of Tuy and other portions which refer to the opinions provided by Pon. Having regard to the different handwriting in the original Khmer, the Chamber finds that this notebook is a compilation of notes made by several different S-21 cadres rather than Tuy alone.<sup>7135</sup> The Chamber will thus refer to this as the "Combined S-21 Notebook". While the Chamber cannot identify the author of each page in the Combined S-21 Notebook, the Chamber is satisfied that the notebook has been sufficiently authenticated and therefore considers it appropriate to have regard to its contents. In reaching this conclusion, the Chamber observes that the Combined S-21 Notebook makes reference to S-21 cadres, prisoners at S-21 and speeches or training sessions which have been corroborated.<sup>7136</sup>

2134. As a general observation, the Chamber notes that these notebooks refer to individuals who were arrested and detained at S-21 according to other S-21 records such as prisoner and execution lists.<sup>7137</sup> The content of the notebooks were also discussed with witnesses who testified in this case and referred to S-21 staff and training sessions.<sup>7138</sup> These factors add further weight to the authenticity and reliability of this

12.2.4. Locations and Establishment

2135. As discussed above, the M-13 Security Centre was the precursor to S-21 and it was operational by July 1971.<sup>7139</sup> From July 1971 until mid-1973, M-13, which was officially known as the Special Zone Police Office, was directed by VORN Vet and subsequently by SON Sen until January 1975.<sup>7140</sup> M-13 had two operations: M-13A, directly supervised by Duch and tasked with detaining and interrogating individuals suspected of being spies,<sup>7141</sup> and M-13B, supervised by Duch's deputy and tasked with temporarily detaining those who had committed minor offences.<sup>7142</sup> M-13 ceased operating on 30 April 1975.<sup>7143</sup> Duch continued to reside in Amleang Commune, where M-13A had been located from mid-1973, until 20 June 1975 when SON Sen called on him to attend a training in Phnom Penh, after which he was transferred to work in IN Lon alias Nat's office.<sup>7144</sup>

was later named S-21.<sup>7146</sup> S-21 was created pursuant to Article 8 of the CPK Statute and was under the authority and leadership of the CPK.<sup>7147</sup>

2137. After the creation of S-21, Duch was first assigned to collect documents in Phnom Penh from locations including LON Nol's house, the Khmer Republic party headquarters, military headquarters, the homes of senior officials of the Khmer Republic and the National Police Commissariat. These documents were to be kept at S-21 to be used as sources for further investigation.<sup>7148</sup> Former Khmer Republic officials and soldiers had already been arrested at this point, and Duch was involved in the interrogation of workers of a former paper factory, K-5 or K-10.<sup>7149</sup> One of the objectives during interrogations was to find information regarding the location of former Khmer Republic officials.<sup>7150</sup> The Chamber received evidence of Duch writing to "Brother 03", i.e. Nat, in November 1976 seeking advice and a decision on the arrest of three named individuals who were civil servants from the Khmer Republic administration.<sup>7151</sup>

confessed at S-21 as early as August and September 1975.<sup>7154</sup> The Chamber finds that this documentary evidence corroborates the live testimony that S-21 was operational by at least October 1975. In around November 1975, S-21 was transferred to the “PJ” office which was the former General Directorate of the National Police and the former premises of the judicial police, Police Judiciaire.<sup>7155</sup> Prisoners were also detained at the former Takhmau psychiatry hospital, which was used as prison that initially formed part of Division 703 and was later used by S-21.<sup>7156</sup> Some prisoners were brought from Takhmau for interrogation at S-21.<sup>7157</sup> Takhmau prison was supervised by Hor and Nat, and several S-21 guards had previously worked at Takhmau.<sup>7158</sup>

<sup>7154</sup> S-21 Confession – UM Soeun, E3/3841, p. 1, ERN (En) 00223142. The Chamber notes that UM Soeun’s name also appears on an S-21 prisoner list: S-21 list of prisoners, E3/10090, 22 January [illegible], p. 24, ERN (En) 01399030. See also, S-21 Confession – LANG Pring, E3/3652, p. 16, ERN (En) 00780855 (indicating that LANG Pring confessed in September 1975).

2140. In April 1976, S-21 moved to the location at the Ponhea Yat High School in Phnom Penh.<sup>7161</sup> Duch, as newly appointed chairman of S-21, proposed the use of the high school for security reasons and this proposal was approved by SON Sen.<sup>7162</sup> At this location there were two layers of fences: one surrounding the prison compound, which was a wall mounted by barbed wire; and a zinc outer fence.<sup>7163</sup> The zinc outer fence extended approximately 50 metres from the school and there was a gate at the current location of the fire department which had previously been the Beehive radio station. There was a gate which was only opened to allow vehicles to access S-21.<sup>7164</sup> The fence was designed to prevent prisoners from escaping but also to stop unauthorised persons from entering the S-21 compound.<sup>7165</sup>

2141. Within the S-21 school compound there were four main buildings (A, B, C and D).<sup>7166</sup> Building A was the southernmost building in the school compound, Buildings B and C were situated on the west side of the inner compound, while Building D was the northernmost building.<sup>7167</sup> A smaller building known as Building E was located in the centre of the compound and was where the registrations of prisoners took place.<sup>7168</sup>

2142. The prisoners were held in these school buildings within the compound and the interrogations mainly took place in houses to the east and outside the perimeter of the school compound.<sup>7169</sup> The number of prisoners detained at S-21 on any given date could exceed 1,000.<sup>7170</sup> S-21 was at its highest capacity on 14 October 1977, with 1,729 prisoners held at one time.<sup>7171</sup>

2144. The NUON Chea Defence submits that little evidence exists regarding the period before S-21 was moved to the Tuol Sleng location in April or May 1976 and no evidence exists regarding the detention conditions prior to that date.<sup>7173</sup> The NUON Chea Defence thus concludes that any conviction deriving from the detention conditions at S-21 must be limited to the period from April/May 1976 to 7 January 1979.<sup>7174</sup> The Chamber finds that this is a matter of evidence and notes that the Closing Order does not limit the scope of the charges to the period after S-21 was relocated to the Ponhea Yat High School. The Chamber recalls the Closing Order's finding that S-21 was operational from October 1975.<sup>7175</sup> To the extent that the NUON Chea Defence suggests that the Chamber is precluded from considering such evidence, its submission is rejected. The evidence discussed above demonstrates the existence of S-21 prior to when the facility was moved to the Ponhea Yat High School. Whether it demonstrates the commission of crimes prior to April 1976 will be addressed in the factual and legal findings below.

2145. IN Lorn alias Nat, who was the commander of Division 703 (which previously was the 12th Division) was the first chairman of S-21.<sup>7176</sup> Nat had previously supervised Takhmau prison<sup>7177</sup> and was removed from S-21 and reassigned to the General Staff in mid-March 1976.<sup>7178</sup> While Nat was entitled to enter S-21 after this date in order to finish his remaining work, he finally stopped his S-21 activities by approximately June 1976.<sup>7179</sup>

2146. Duch was initially Nat's deputy at S-21.<sup>7180</sup> Duch was first introduced to the CPK on 25 December 1967 and became a full-rights member of the CPK on 20 July 1969.<sup>7181</sup> Duch was a long-standing member of the CPK and secretary of a regiment but was not a member of the Central Committee.<sup>7182</sup> When Duch was deputy at S-21 he was in charge of interrogations and training interrogators.<sup>7183</sup>

educated by anybody else so that he could train them psychologically and politically.<sup>7185</sup> While staff numbers fluctuated over time, the Chamber finds that there were approximately 300 people working under Duch at the S-21 Security Centre, with the youngest guards being about 15 years old.<sup>7186</sup> Further documentation from the General Staff provides figures concerning the number of people to be fed, including those in “Office S-21”. However, the number of people specified in these lists, in particular the figure concerning “Office S-21”, is unclear as to whether it includes staff and their families and which units were considered as part of the headcount.<sup>7187</sup> Due to this lack of clarity, the Chamber will not rely on these statistics to draw a conclusion. The Chamber instead finds that the information provided in document E3/8386, showing that the S-21 Security Centre in Phnom Penh had 327 staff members, is more reliable than the General Staff document because it is an internal S-21 document with a clear and detailed breakdown of the staff in each unit.<sup>7188</sup>

S-21B consisted of the Guard Unit, the kitchen, and the “Special Unit” – a term initially used for a unit in Division 703. The same term was carried over to refer to the same cadres once they were transferred to S-21.<sup>7211</sup> The guard unit watched over the inside of the compound at S-21.<sup>7212</sup> Each of the buildings at S-21 had three guard teams, with each team consisting of between seven to ten members, who rotated guard duty among themselves.<sup>7213</sup> The Special Unit was responsible for guarding the outside of S-21, preventing prisoners from escaping, and dealing with the special prison for important prisoners.<sup>7214</sup> The Special Unit received prisoners from the reception point outside of S-21 and brought them inside the premises, was responsible for internal and external defence of S-21 personnel, transporting prisoners to Choeung Ek, executing and burying them, and sometimes making arrests.<sup>7215</sup> There was a strict separation between the guard units and the Special Unit, with guards inside the compound having no contact with the Special Unit members within and outside the perimeter of S-21.<sup>7216</sup> There were

Hor was in charge of the Special Unit even before 17 April 1975 and this group of more than 30 people were in Duch’s words “the most important unit. They fought directly with the enemy.” The Special Unit was transferred from Division 703 to S-21 and were skilled at executions: Case 001 Transcript (KAING Guek Eav), E3/5801, 17 June 2009, pp. 69-71, ERN (En) 00342900-00342902.

<sup>7212</sup> T. 5 May 2016 (HIM Huy), E1/428.1, pp. 17, 22. The Chamber notes that the Special Unit tasked with guarding the outside of the compound was also often referred to as “guards”, even though they were not part of the smaller “guard unit”. See KAING Guek Eav Interview Record, E3/1570, 29 November 2007, pp. 10-11, ERN (En) 00154198-00154199; T. 27 April 2016 (PRAK Khorn), E1/423.1, p. 52 (“Phal was in charge of guards at the outside of the compound, but Peng was in charge of [...] guards [...] inside the compound”); T. 28 April 2016 (PRAK Khorn), E1/424.1, p. 24 (testifying that security guards on the outside of the compound were fully armed, but that security guards within the compound of S-21 were not armed); T. 2 May 2016 (PRAK Khorn), E1/425.1, p. 35 (noting that there were guards on the outside of the compound).

2153. The evidence is not entirely clear regarding what S-21C stood for, but the Chamber finds that it was a reference to the Takhmau prison. At times Duch stated that he was not aware of S-21C, and at others he indicated that he believed it was connected to Division 703 and Takhmau. SUOS Thy was unsure but speculated in his statement to the military tribunal that S-21C stood for Takhmau prison or the forces that guarded Takhmau. He further testified before the Chamber that there was someone at Takhmau who administered prisoner lists.<sup>7219</sup> One list before the Chamber refers to prisoners killed in March 1976 at “S-21C”, some of whom were former LON Nol soldiers or officers and their family members.<sup>7220</sup> When Duch was confronted with this list in court, he identified the prisoners as such and clarified that this list was prepared by Nat, who was involved in the Takhmau prison before the latter began his work at S-21.<sup>7221</sup> He later confirmed again that this list was “about [the] office at Takhmau”.<sup>7222</sup>

12.2.5.1. Structure from March 1976 until mid-1978

12.2.5.2. Structure from mid-1978 until January 1979

supervisor.<sup>7248</sup> The Chamber finds that the evidence discussed above shows that Duch was heavily involved in overseeing the entire S-21 operation. This included keeping track of prisoner numbers, monitoring interrogations, approving executions, reporting to the upper echelon and communicating instructions. Duch had the ultimate authority and oversight over the operation of S-21. The Chamber accordingly does not accept that it was Hor as opposed to Duch who had a central role in making decisions concerning the interrogation or execution of prisoners.

12.2.5.3. Political training and Party discipline

The Chamber notes that this is inconsistent with other credible evidence, particularly the evidence of Duch that SON Sen had been transferred to the battlefield in the second half of 1977, and that while SON Sen completed some of his S-21 related work, Duch did not see him in person again at S-21. The Chamber therefore does not rely on LACH Mean's

2163. When Duch taught S-21 staff at study sessions he passed on, among other things, the instruction from SON Sen that “to keep is no gain and to remove is no loss”.<sup>7257</sup> At political study sessions, all S-21 staff were taught to recognise and be “absolute” in their approach to the “enemy”, and to acknowledge that all people arrested by Angkar were enemies.<sup>7258</sup> This idea was further evidenced at S-21 throughout the internal purges, as discussed below, as traitors and enemies of the regime were first identified and labelled, then targeted, arrested and killed at S-21.<sup>7259</sup> In training sessions, interrogators were told to feel no pity for the “enemy” even if they were their parents. They were instructed by Duch to be pitiless with enemies, “absolute” in striking them down and loyal to the Party.<sup>7260</sup> S-21 staff performed their duties in fear that if they committed any wrongdoings or mistakes they themselves would be considered “enemies” who would be arrested, imprisoned and killed.<sup>7261</sup> Given that those arrested by the Party had been deemed “enemies”, S-21 functioned to ensure that prisoners acknowledged their “mistakes” and guilt.<sup>7262</sup>

which emphasised that the Party had suppressed the enemy and that all people had the task of “training themselves in the Party line [and to] [a]bsolutely defend the political line of the Party”.<sup>7270</sup> The central importance of the Party was also reflected in an instruction given at the same study session to “[a]bsolutely eliminate attacks on the Party and on our fellow comrades”.<sup>7271</sup> This training session also reiterated the need to make clear distinctions to identify who was a comrade and who was an enemy.<sup>7272</sup> There was discussion about internal enemies and the need to seek them out, especially in Phnom Penh, and identify what they were doing and where they were “intertwined”.<sup>7273</sup> At the same training session, an instruction was given to set up an additional unit with an absolute political and ideological stance to “examine, summarize, and analyze documents carefully”.<sup>7274</sup>

another notch” in order to attack the enemy in the front and “in the rear”.<sup>7286</sup> The summary encouraged interrogation of the enemy in order for them to speak about their contacts before 17 April 1975 and acknowledged that the detainees were beaten during interrogations.<sup>7287</sup>

2169. Further on in the notebook, notes from 21 January 1978 on the “matter of interrogating the enemy” record instructions to prevent the enemy from grasping the intention of the interrogation or from knowing that the interrogator wanted to find a particular person, and that “[w]hatever the organisation wants you to ask, ask that, and do not get in the way”.<sup>7288</sup> The MAM Nai Notebook shows that cadres were instructed to be on the offensive and to “[s]earch out all enemy connections”.<sup>7289</sup> This is in line with the instructions interrogators received in the early days of S-21’s operation, when they were instructed to not hesitate in interrogating enemies and to obtain confessions for the Party.<sup>7290</sup>

2170. The Combined S-21 Notebook is very similar to the MAM Nai Notebook. Both notebooks contain entries of the same dates and similar summary notes, although each notebook contains extraneous entries and information that the other does not.<sup>7291</sup> For example, both the MAM Nai Notebook and the S-21 Combined Notebook contain: an entry dated 12 April 1978 summarising POL Pot’s 17 April anniversary speech; a 20 April 1978 entry calling for the implementation of the socialist revolution; and an entry warning against enemy tricks of “buying favors”.<sup>7292</sup> The Chamber finds that these similarities serve to corroborate the information in each of these documents, bolster their reliability and likely indicate that they were recorded at the same event or study session, by different authors. Additionally, the fact that the content of speeches was relayed at political study sessions at S-21 demonstrates that the Party line was systematically disseminated from upper to lower levels.

2172. Other meeting notes show the importance given to political training sessions, as they made “comrades aware they are responsible directly to the Party” and stressed that it was also important to set aside time to study Party documents and to know the Party line.<sup>7296</sup> There were further references to training sessions where cadres were instructed to respect “the requirements of the Party, its directives, its line, all of its principles, meaning respect the people, through the Angkar”.<sup>7297</sup>

enemies”.<sup>7299</sup> POL Pot also stated that only one enemy per thousand remained, that the internal problem of traitors had been solved completely and that the purity of the Party had been defended.<sup>7300</sup> In a subsequent speech celebrating the third anniversary of the 17 April victory, KHIEU Samphan spoke about the importance of the victory of the revolution and the need to take over and ardently accomplish “the noble revolutionary tasks the Party has entrusted to each one of us”.<sup>7301</sup> Other notes in the Combined S-21 Notebook from later that year state that “[w]e have screened out internal enemies in detail and to the maximum” and instruct cadres to “have a hot and quick anger for the enemy”.<sup>7302</sup>

2174. In accordance with the CPK policy set out by Office 870, enemies were divided into three categories: (1) the dangerous or destructive category where it was imperative to have them purged; (2) the normal liberal category who had to be re-educated; and (3) those who had believed in enemy incitement and had to be “refashioned”.<sup>7303</sup> This division of enemies into different categories was part of the policy of Office 870 and had to be implemented at each level.<sup>7304</sup> CIA, KGB and “Yuon” agents were identified by the Party as “life and death enemies” of the CPK.<sup>7305</sup> Duch helped to implement the Party policy which was to “smash the enemies both within the military ranks and in the Party”, which involved eliminating people who were seen as affiliated with America or Vietnam and smashing anybody who committed a “wrongdoing”.<sup>7306</sup>

2175. On the 17 April and 30 September anniversaries, placards were displayed which stated “Long live the glorious and wonderful Communist Party of Kampuchea” and which spoke about “absolute opposition” to the CIA, KGB and “Yuon” agents.<sup>7307</sup>

2177. The Party promoted the dissolution of family ties, instructing that such “entanglements” hindered “the work of serving the nation”.<sup>7309</sup> NUON Chea was held out as an example of this principle. Duch stated that NUON Chea did not “claim anything or anyone to be his”, because NUON Chea’s two nieces, LACH Dara alias Than and LACH Vary alias Nan were both arrested and detained at S-21. LACH Dara and LACH Vary were both doctors, and their husbands were arrested and detained at S-21 as well.<sup>7310</sup> The arrest, detention and interrogation of NUON Chea’s family members is corroborated by S-21 confessions and S-21 prisoner lists which record their entry into S-21.<sup>7311</sup> The confessions of both LACH Dara and LACH Vary were sent to the upper echelon.<sup>7312</sup> LACH Vary and her husband were both “smashed” at S-21.<sup>7313</sup> LACH Dara, who was selected by Duch to be used as a medic, died while fleeing the Vietnamese forces in 1979.<sup>7314</sup>

2178. The general principle conveyed during the meetings, speeches and political sessions was that anyone arrested was an “enemy” who had to be “smashed” and the Party’s position had to be implemented and was not open to discussion.<sup>7315</sup> It was the policy of the Party to smash all who were arrested and sent to S-21 after their interrogations concluded. In describing this principle, SUOS Thy stated that “prisoners who came into S-21 were already considered dead”.<sup>7316</sup> The guards received instructions from the trainers, and in particular Duch, that anyone who was brought to S-21 would not have a chance of release and would be killed.<sup>7317</sup>

2179. Some prisoners begged Duch to ask the Party to pardon them. On 10 September 1976, HUOT Sambath wrote to KHIEU Samphan, the President of the State Presidium, and confessed his mistakes, expressed his regret and requested the “Organization to forgive me and spare my life” or if he could not be forgiven he asked that his wife and children be taken care of.<sup>7318</sup> There is no indication as to whether this letter was ever delivered or received by KHIEU Samphan. In the case of KANG Chap alias Sae, Secretary of the new North Zone, Duch passed KANG Chap’s request to NUON Chea, who laughed and said he would not allow that to happen.<sup>7319</sup> CHOU Chet, Secretary of the West Zone, was arrested on 26 March 1978, and Duch interrogated him personally. In his confession, CHOU Chet begged the CPK to forgive him for his mistakes and to spare his life. CHOU Chet was later killed.<sup>7320</sup>

2180. The Chamber finds that this evidence establishes the central role which the CPK had in disseminating policies and insisting on a common ideology to guide the work of cadres at S-21. Through study sessions and publications, the CPK entrenched a common understanding about the importance of taking an absolute stance toward the “enemy” and the imperative to identify internal enemies. Duch played a central role in communicating these instructions to S-21 cadres and insisting that CPK policy was absolutely followed through the work of S-21, which was tasked with interrogating those identified as enemies and obtaining confessions for the Party. The Chamber finds that this indoctrination and incitement of hate instilled absolute respect for the Party hierarchy and the principles to be followed at S-21, including the identification and killing of perceived enemies.

12.2.5.4. Internal reporting structure

2182. All communication from below passed through Hor on its way to Duch. Orders, reports and communication sometimes skipped intermediary supervisors and went directly to and from Hor. For example, while HIM Huy’s direct superior was Pang, HIM Huy at times also received orders from Hor.<sup>7324</sup>

12.2.5.5. External reporting structure

In this case, that is Son Sen before he was sent to the front battlefield, and, later on, it was Brother Nuon who had such authority. And, besides [sic], no one could make decisions on the arrest.”). As found above, the Chamber interprets Duch’s testimony in a manner consistent with his other statements regarding SON Sen ordering and instructing at S-21 while he was assigned to the General Staff, as opposed to the General Staff itself.

Defence cites to the Case 002/01 Appeal Judgement to support its submission that “NUON Chea was unrelated to the military”. Based on the foregoing, the Defence submits that NUON Chea cannot be criminally liable for alleged crimes at S-21.<sup>7332</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence submits that S-21, along with Au Kanseng and Phnom Kraol Security Centres, was predominantly administered by the military staff of Division of 703, which itself was supervised by the General Staff.<sup>7333</sup> To the contrary, the Co-Prosecutors submit that S-21 operated “directly under the supervision of, and reported to, the senior leaders of the CPK and members of the Standing Committee”.<sup>7334</sup> The Civil Party Lead Co-Lawyers make no direct submissions on this matter.

2186. The Chamber finds that S-21 was an independent regiment which fell under the military structure and was subordinate to the General Staff, which was responsible for providing food, fuel and other logistical supplies to S-21 and also gave invitations for study sessions.<sup>7335</sup> S-21 cadres including Duch were present at high-level military meetings.<sup>7336</sup> This finding is consistent with the NUON Chea Defence’s submission that S-21 was an independent military regiment which was subordinated to the General Staff.<sup>7337</sup> However, while formally under the military structure, S-21 did not receive security-related instructions from the zones or the General Staff, nor did S-21 send reports to the same. S-21 received instructions regarding security exclusively from the Standing Committee through individuals such as SON Sen, NUON Chea and Ta Mok.<sup>7338</sup>

2187. The NUON Chea Defence cites to one of Duch's WRIs in which he states that "S-21 followed the instructions of the General Staff accordingly with their respective responsibilities". However, Duch clarifies in the very next sentence that: "For example, regarding the logistics and weaponry affairs, [we] listened to SUN Ty alias Teanh".<sup>7339</sup> The Chamber finds that this is consistent with Duch's insistence on multiple occasions that S-21 took orders from the Standing Committee, with the exception of those regarding logistical and support issues as noted here. As found above, the General Staff was only responsible for ensuring that all necessary means for operation were provided to S-21 and its staff, including food, fuel and other logistical supplies. The General Staff also issued invitations for study sessions.<sup>7340</sup>

finds Duch's testimony to be reliable in this regard. The Defence additionally cites to a letter from Ren<sup>7345</sup> to Duch to bolster its submission that the General Staff controlled S-21. In this letter from 30 October 1977, Ren lists names and requests the "removal of bad elements", seeking that Duch "please be informed, and please comment on this".<sup>7346</sup> The Chamber notes that this letter seeks instruction rather than ordering Duch to take action, and is not satisfied that the evidence supports NUON Chea's submission that the General Staff office, not the Standing Committee, exercised control over S-21 regarding security matters. As such, the Chamber rejects the NUON Chea Defence's submission that S-21 was under the control of the General Staff. The Chamber previously found, as confirmed by the Supreme Court Chamber, that while NUON Chea was not a member of the military committee, he was substantially involved in military affairs.<sup>7347</sup> Thus, the NUON Chea Defence's claim that NUON Chea himself was "unrelated to the military" is rejected.

<sup>7350</sup> See e.g., S-21 confession – LI Phen, E3/3837, 12 June 1976, pp. 1-17, ERN (En) 00807161-00807177 (which attaches a record of interrogation conducted by the Ministry of Security of Sector 21 to the S-21 confession).

Everything went through SON Sen or, subsequently, NUON Chea [...] to avoid revealing their names. The letter was supposed to be addressed to me directly by SOU Meth, SON Sen had asked him to draft it this way. Yet SON Sen sent it to me and I had to pass on the confessions to SON Sen.<sup>7351</sup>

2190. Similarly, Duch stated during another interview that:

It was at that time that SON Sen showed me the letters and requests that SOU Meth had sent to me. Thanks to those six or seven letters SOU Meth was alleged to have ordered me to do things. But that was not correct. Actually, it was SON Sen who had ordered SOU Meth to write those letters to me.<sup>7352</sup>

2191. In sum, the Chamber finds that S-21 was an independent regiment that, while supported logistically by the General Staff, was linked directly to the Standing Committee and CPK leaders, usually through orders and reports from SON Sen and NUON Chea. All information and communication coming in and out of S-21 passed through Duch's supervisors.

12.2.6. Oversight of S-21 Security Centre

2192. According to the Closing Order, between 15 August 1975 and 15 August 1977, SON Sen was the direct superior of Duch,<sup>7353</sup> and after SON Sen's transfer to the front lines of the conflict with Vietnam in 1977, NUON Chea became Duch's direct supervisor.<sup>7354</sup>

2193. The Chamber finds that the evidence shows that indeed, SON Sen was Duch's direct superior until 15 August 1977, when NUON Chea took over as Duch's direct superior, due to SON Sen's imminent transfer to the battlefields against Vietnam in the second half of 1977. Duch's evidence regarding SON Sen's transfer is supported by other witnesses, interview records and contemporaneous evidence.<sup>7355</sup> Duch described

2194. The NUON Chea Defence submits that Duch is not credible in this regard and particularly challenges the date when NUON Chea became his direct superior.<sup>7358</sup> Duch was challenged about the date when he first met NUON Chea by reference to a prior interview with Nate THAYER which suggested that he was transferred to the supervision of NUON Chea in July 1978.<sup>7359</sup> The Chamber notes that Duch was

The Chamber notes that the NUON Chea Defence presented evidence which suggested that SON Sen was present in Phnom Penh to meet various overseas delegations after Duch testified that he had been transferred to the battlefields. See Party Leadership Turnout at POL Pot's Departure (in FBIS collection), E3/143, 28 September 1977, ERN (En) 00168769; Radio Continues Coverage of Ne Win Visit (in FBIS collection), E3/291, E3/291, 29 November 1977, ERN (En) 00168600; 29 November Departure (in FBIS collection), E3/291, 29 November 1977, ERN (En) 00168605. The Chamber is satisfied with the explanation provided by Duch that SON Sen could easily return to Phnom Penh when required by the DK leadership to do so. The Chamber does not consider that this undermines Duch's unequivocal evidence that he started to report to NUON Chea on 15 August 1977 and that SON Sen was transferred to the battlefield. See T. 20 June 2016 (KAING Guek Eav), E1/440.1, pp. 16-21, 55-56. confronted with this inconsistency and with the extract of this article in court.<sup>7360</sup> Duch explained that he remembered the date 15 August 1977 very clearly because other significant events in his life had occurred on 15 August in different years. In particular it was on 15 August 1975 that SON Sen asked him and Nat to establish S-21. Duch further testified that he could never forget that date given the significance of meeting NUON Chea.<sup>7361</sup> Duch also explained that he had not been given a copy of Nate THAYER's "book",<sup>7362</sup> that he had not been interviewed by THAYER personally, and that some of the dates may have been misquoted – but maintained that he was never mistaken about 15 August 1977.<sup>7363</sup> The Chamber also notes that Duch has been consistent over time in providing 15 August 1977 as the date of the transition of supervision from SON Sen to NUON Chea.<sup>7364</sup> The Chamber is satisfied with the veracity of Duch's consistent testimony that he accurately recalled that he was transferred to the authority of NUON Chea on 15 August 1977 and therefore finds Duch's evidence to be credible in this regard.

2195. The Chamber also accepts Duch's clarification that SON Sen still signed some documents until 25 November 1977 in order to finish his work following his transfer, and that he also had some radio contact with SON Sen after his departure on non-S-21-related matters.<sup>7365</sup> The Chamber finds that while SON Sen left for the battlefield some time in the second half of 1977, he still worked on some remaining documents at S-21 and worked together with NUON Chea.<sup>7366</sup> For example, in October and November 1977, SON Sen instructed that copies of certain confessions from S-21 be given to NUON Chea.<sup>7367</sup> The extent of SON Sen's continued involvement is demonstrated in a note he sent to Duch on 5 October 1977 in which he gave instructions on ensuring that confessions were "thorough and responsible" and that for important prisoners the confessions had to be written by the prisoner or taped and transcribed.<sup>7368</sup> When challenged about the date of this letter, Duch testified that SON Sen was responding to a letter which Duch had sent while he was still under his supervision, but SON Sen only replied much later.<sup>7369</sup> The Chamber finds Duch's testimony in this regard to be consistent and supports the conclusion that SON Sen left for the battlefield some time during the second half of 1977 and continued to have some contact and involvement with S-21 from the time he left until at least November 1977.

12.2.6.1. Oversight of S-21 under SON Sen

2196. The NUON Chea Defence asserts that S-21 was "under the ultimate command of SON Sen from its establishment until the very end of the DK regime" and that Nat "most likely kept playing an important role after he had left S-21".<sup>7370</sup> Regarding Nat, the NUON Chea Defence cites a handwritten report of Duch dated 16 November 1976, <sup>7369</sup> T. 4 April 2012 (KAING Guek Eav), E1/59.1, pp. 88-91. In a previous interview Duch had stated that he had written to SON Sen at the end of 1977. See KAING Guek Eav Interview Record, E3/449, 21 January 2008, p. 7, ERN (En) 00159558. The Chamber does not consider that this potential inconsistency casts doubt on the otherwise consistent live testimony of Duch on this issue.

detailing a stolen weapon, and mentioning Nat as a “leader”, submitting that this shows his continued involvement in S-21.<sup>7371</sup>

2197. Duch consistently testified that when he was under SON Sen’s supervision, he received instructions from SON Sen to report all S-21 documents to him personally, as SON Sen represented “Angkar”.<sup>7372</sup> Duch further clarified that SON Sen told him that it was NUON Chea who instructed SON Sen on what had to be done.<sup>7373</sup> On another occasion, SON Sen informed Duch of NUON Chea’s order that he personally interrogate specific prisoners.<sup>7374</sup> SON Sen sometimes asked Duch whether a certain prisoner had been sent out, and if not, instructed him to have the prisoner sent out and “smashed”.<sup>7375</sup> SON Sen also relayed NUON Chea’s order to exhume and photograph the bodies of certain prisoners who had been smashed.<sup>7376</sup>

2198. When SON Sen was his superior, Duch would send documents through messengers to SON Sen with the annotation “To Brother 62”, which was SON Sen’s code when he worked with S-21.<sup>7377</sup> SON Sen had several aliases. In the army SON Sen was referred to as “Brother 89” and was also known generally by the alias “Khieu”. SON Sen signed travel passes with the name “Khim”,<sup>7378</sup> and also signed telegrams with the number 47, which was his secret code.<sup>7379</sup> SON Sen used two messengers for S-21 – Comrade Phan and Comrade Noeun.<sup>7380</sup>

2199. SON Sen and Duch spoke almost every evening for at least one hour by telephone.<sup>7381</sup> During these conversations SON Sen asked about the confessions of prisoners he was interested in and gave Duch instructions which Duch, in turn, relayed to his subordinates.<sup>7382</sup> Duch also met SON Sen at his office once every three to four days for a brief meeting during which he provided information concerning confessions, reported on the situation at S-21 and received instructions in return.<sup>7383</sup> SON Sen also visited S-21 in person on a few occasions.<sup>7384</sup>

2200. On one occasion, Duch and Nat met with SON Sen, who asked why they could not find any CIA agents at S-21 given that agents had been found in other sectors. SON Sen instructed Duch and Nat to work harder to find CIA agents and to obtain their confessions.<sup>7385</sup>

2201. Duch discussed with SON Sen the types of physical and mental abuse used at S-21, which Duch characterised as “torture”.<sup>7386</sup> The methods of physical violence discussed included beating detainees with sticks, the use of electroshocks, suffocation of detainees with a plastic bag, and covering detainees’ mouths and noses with a towel while pouring cold water from a kettle on them.<sup>7387</sup> SON Sen agreed to these methods.<sup>7388</sup> One time when Duch reported to SON Sen about interrogators using physical violence, SON Sen replied and instructed Duch that the interrogators “should not inflict too severe physical torture” and “should not rely too much on physical torture”.<sup>7389</sup>

2202. Duch made annotations on confessions in accordance with the instructions he received from SON Sen over the phone.<sup>7390</sup> On one occasion, SON Sen informed Duch that the brothers in the upper echelon were about to meet and asked him to tally all the confessions, after which Duch prepared folders containing these confessions.<sup>7391</sup> SON Sen told Duch that POL Pot had asked him to read an S-21 document and asked how certain Duch was that SUOS Neou alias Chhouk, the Secretary of Sector 24 of the East Zone, was an enemy.<sup>7392</sup> On another occasion, POL Pot called Duch to ask whether or not Mon, who was a high ranking cadre in the East Zone, had been sent to S-21.<sup>7393</sup>

2203. Duch and other S-21 cadres also attended formal meetings with important military leaders in Phnom Penh, which were convened by the General Staff. For example, Duch and other S-21 staff attended meetings with division leaders and SON Sen in September 1976 at which it was determined that the associates of CHAN Chakrei, the former Secretary of Division 170, should be rounded up with others in Division 170.<sup>7394</sup> At another such meeting there was a discussion about the distribution of counter-revolutionary leaflets. Duch reported that they had arrested and questioned three individuals and that one of them confirmed that the leaflets had come from Division 170.<sup>7395</sup> At the 16 September 1976 meeting, SON Sen asked Duch to provide a list of those who had been implicated in confessions.<sup>7396</sup> SON Sen requested that Pang contact various ministries and instructed that those from Division 170 should be rounded up.<sup>7397</sup>

2204. At one such meeting SON Sen (identified as Brother 89) observed that: “After his arrest, Chakrey implicated a number of people of Sector 24 [...] Now we have arrested Chhouk, the Secretary of Sector 24 and his cronies.<sup>7398</sup> SON Sen then proceeded to order an examination of Sector 24 links in Division 290 and listed the names of individuals that had to be obtained from this process.<sup>7399</sup> The notes from this meeting indicate Duch's proposal of an additional 29 names to be obtained, which was approved.<sup>7400</sup> There was a further decision to "take out" two more women including CHAN Chakrei's wife and niece.<sup>7401</sup> The level of cooperation is evident from Duch's observation that S-21 and Division 290 had already met and decided on the proposed names and that 11 of the names had already been agreed upon at an even earlier meeting.<sup>7402</sup> At the conclusion of this meeting, Division 290 and Division 170 were instructed to cooperate with S-21 in order to facilitate the arrest of those individuals identified and to keep their removal a secret to prevent any disruption in their units.<sup>7403</sup>

2205. HUY Sre, the head of Prey Sar and a member of the S-21 committee, was present at a meeting in August 1976 attended by Secretaries and Deputy Secretaries of Divisions and Regiments at which there was discussion of "fending off the enemy that is boring from within" and purging "no good elements completely from the Party".<sup>7404</sup>

CHHAOM Se, the head of Au Kanseng Security Centre, received confessions from Phnom Penh sent to him by SAO Saroeun of Division 801 which included the names of individuals who had been implicated.<sup>7408</sup> For further discussion of the way in which this information was used, the Chamber refers to its factual findings in Section 12.4: Au Kanseng Security Centre.<sup>7409</sup>

2207. SON Sen conducted study sessions attended by S-21 staff during which there was discussion about building the country, agricultural production, military strategies and the importance of the Revolutionary Flag magazine.<sup>7410</sup> SON Sen warned that staff had to be vigilant and careful of infiltrated enemies.<sup>7411</sup>

2208. As stated above, the Chamber has found that Nat was removed from S-21 and reassigned to the General Staff in mid-March 1976, and that he continued to participate in S-21 activities until approximately June 1976, not November, as the NUON Chea Defence asserts. The Chamber's finding is supported by Duch's live testimony, SUOS Thy's evidence and a Standing Committee decision.<sup>7412</sup> The Chamber finds that the sole source put forth by NUON Chea to the contrary, Duch's handwritten note from November 1976 which labels Nat as a "leader", neither clearly supports NUON Chea's contention nor constitutes convincing evidence in the face of the contradictory documentation.

2209. As for SON Sen's supervision, in this section and those that follow, the Chamber discusses the manner in which operations at S-21 were only initially supervised by SON Sen and later by NUON Chea. Furthermore, even when SON Sen initially supervised S-21, he was still subject to NUON Chea's authority.<sup>7413</sup> The Chamber finds that there is sufficient evidence to show that NUON Chea acquired direct responsibility of S-21 on 15 August 1977 due to SON Sen's impending transfer to the East Zone battlefield.<sup>7414</sup> The Chamber thus rejects the NUON Chea Defence's submissions regarding Nat and SON Sen.

12.2.6.2. Oversight of S-21 under NUON Chea

2211. While SON Sen generally communicated with Duch by telephone, NUON Chea preferred to communicate through short notes, letters or in person.<sup>7420</sup> NUON Chea's messengers collected documents from Duch and delivered them to NUON Chea.<sup>7421</sup>

NUON Chea's messengers were SAUT Toeung and Sot alias Chiv, who were later both replaced by Lin. Lin also took over Pang's role as spokesperson for POL Pot.<sup>7422</sup> This evidence is corroborated by SAUT Toeung, who testified that he collected thick envelopes from Duch's house and delivered them to NUON Chea, and also delivered letters from NUON Chea to Duch.<sup>7423</sup>

was unavailable Pang would take the documents). See also, T. 19 April 2012 (SAUT Toeung), E1/64.1, pp. 14-19 (confirming that documents were delivered directly from Duch to NUON Chea).

Duch was presented with his prior statement wherein he stated that SON Sen still considered himself to be his superior and continued to deal with security issues, and that a document in April 1978 was drafted following the orders of SON Sen. However, Duch clarified that SON Sen had given instructions to prepare this report and work plan before he left for the battlefield, and that it was drafted over several months. Duch also refuted the testimony of LACH Mean, who suggested that SON Sen was seen three or four times when he was at S-21 in 1978. See T. 20 June 2016 (KAING Guek Eav), E1/440.1, pp. 23-26, 29-30; KAING Guek Eav Interview Record, E3/1579, 21 October 2009, p. 3, ERN (En) 00398206. Having regard to the detailed and credible evidence of Duch on this issue, the Chamber does not consider that this draws into question Duch's evidence on the date when NUON Chea replaced SON Sen as his direct supervisor. For the Chamber's analysis of SON Sen's continued contact with Duch after he was sent to the battlefield, see above, para. 2195.

seek clarification.<sup>7429</sup> Pang also brought messages from POL Pot to Duch.<sup>7430</sup> Pang sought the opinion of the upper echelon with respect to certain questions asked by Duch.<sup>7431</sup> When NUON Chea was out of the country, Pang collected documents from S-21 and gave instructions as spokesperson for POL Pot.<sup>7432</sup> Pang also brought people to S-21 to be arrested by Duch.<sup>7433</sup> After Pang's arrest around April 1978, his role at S-21 was taken over by Lin,<sup>7434</sup> and at that time NUON Chea sent VORN Vet to Duch bearing letter indicating that Duch should now work with VORN Vet as well.<sup>7435</sup>

2214. Comrade Ky, the Chairman of the messenger office K-7,<sup>7436</sup> also came to S-21 with letters directly from POL Pot.<sup>7437</sup> Duch, however, did not have the authority to send anyone to obtain letters from Angkar directly.<sup>7438</sup>

2215. The Chamber notes that in a prior interview, NUON Chea acknowledged that S-21 was “established to search for the enemy of the country” but claimed that the name “Tuol Sleng” was created by the “Yuon” to “blame us for killing our own people”.<sup>7439</sup> He also acknowledged that S-21 found enemies, but claimed that “S-21 comrades went too far” and sometimes did not follow the plan.<sup>7440</sup> While the Chamber notes that there are clear attempts in this interview by NUON Chea to downplay his involvement and distance himself from any mistreatment at S-21, it is satisfied that it can rely on the interview as corroboration that NUON Chea was indeed aware of both the existence and purpose of S-21. In another interview, NUON Chea described the revolution in Cambodia as a just one “because it smashed and eliminated enemies, [and] maintained an independent Kampuchea [...]”.<sup>7441</sup> The Chamber finds that NUON Chea’s post facto statements do not accord with the weight of evidence which the Chamber has discussed in this Judgement.<sup>7442</sup> This evidence demonstrates not only that NUON Chea was aware of the killings, but that he specifically ordered the execution of individuals or groups of individuals. Furthermore, the confessions forwarded to NUON Chea demonstrate that he was aware of those arrested, detained and interrogated at S-21 – from low level to high level cadres – and that he at no time ordered the release of those considered “not guilty”. The Chamber will weigh the totality of the evidence in the legal findings on responsibility with respect to S-21.

12.2.6.3. Circulation of S-21 confessions and documentation

2216. According to the Closing Order, S-21 confessions reached the CPK Party Centre and were redistributed to POL Pot, NUON Chea and SON Sen.<sup>7443</sup> NUON Chea decided on the arrests of certain individuals, including S-21 personnel, and also possessed the discretion to decide what should or should not appear in confessions.<sup>7444</sup>

2217. S-21 operated with high secrecy and Duch was not allowed to send reports on its work to the Committee of the General Staff.<sup>7445</sup> The principle of secrecy at S-21 was absolute and only Duch had the authority to report confessions to his immediate supervisors: SON Sen and subsequently NUON Chea.<sup>7446</sup> While S-21 confessions implicating others for arrest were not sent directly to any ministries, the confessions were passed through the Standing Committee to zones, divisions and ministries in the DK in order to facilitate further arrests.<sup>7447</sup> For example, it is clear that a copy of a confession was sent to NUON Chea in order that he then send the confession on to the Central Zone. The confession contains an annotation dated 11 November 1977 which reads: “Send Brother Nuon 1 copy for [...] Sending to Central Zone”.<sup>7448</sup>

2218. The Chamber has before it a document dated April 1978 which shows that confessions were passed from the zone level to the 870 Committee in order to help search “for the string of traitors who burrow from within”.<sup>7449</sup> The letter contains the annotation: “Follow a trail”, which Duch testified was written by NUON Chea.<sup>7450</sup> However, the Chamber notes that Duch’s evidence on how he recognised this handwriting is somewhat equivocal and appears to be based on information he gathered and documents he studied after the events. Duch himself testified that he had not seen

NUON Chea's handwriting often prior to 7 January 1979.<sup>7451</sup> As such, Chamber has doubts about Duch's deductions that certain annotations had to have been made by NUON Chea and therefore does not rely on his opinion in this regard.

2220. Many confessions of high-profile prisoners contain annotations which support the conclusion that the content of the confessions had been "reported". For example, these annotations appear on the confessions of UK Savann alias So,<sup>7455</sup> who was the Secretary of Sector 23; MOUL Sambath alias RUOS Nhim,<sup>7456</sup> who was the Secretary of the Northwest Zone; NEY Sarann alias MEN San alias Ya,<sup>7457</sup> who was the Secretary of the Northeast Zone; and BAUN Na alias Yi, who was the Secretary of Sector 505.<sup>7458</sup> These annotations corroborate the testimony of witnesses that the interrogation of important prisoners was closely monitored by Duch and that he forwarded reports of these confessions to his superiors.<sup>7459</sup>

Annotations also reveal that at times SON Sen, after reviewing confessions, sent them to Nat, instructing him to review the documents. See Case 001 Transcript (KAING Guek Eav), E3/2983, 27 May 2009, pp. 2-3, ERN (En) 00334500-00334501. See also, KAING Guek Eav Interview Record, E3/450, 2 April 2008, p. 3, ERN (En) 00178060.

2221. Duch read, summarised and briefed his superiors on the confessions he annotated.<sup>7460</sup> Duch forwarded S-21 documents, including confessions, to the upper echelon.<sup>7461</sup> These annotated confessions were not returned to Duch.<sup>7462</sup> Generally, his superiors were provided with the full original confessions, but on a few occasions when many people had been arrested and sent to S-21, Duch was asked to summarise the documents.<sup>7463</sup> While Duch sent NUON Chea information about confessions with short annotations, he did not send prisoner lists to NUON Chea.<sup>7464</sup> NUON Chea once asked Duch why he allowed prisoners to speak at length about their backgrounds, to which Duch replied that this was the method he used.<sup>7465</sup> NUON Chea preferred to read rather than listen to recordings of confessions.<sup>7466</sup> Duch denied that NUON Chea ever instructed him to release prisoners after he had read their confessions.<sup>7467</sup>

2222. Once Duch had reviewed the content of a confession he highlighted it and identified confessions which would be of significant interest to his superiors.<sup>7468</sup> Sometimes in response to a confession, SON Sen requested that a prisoner be re-interrogated, whereas NUON Chea instead sought clarification about a word or phrase in the confession.<sup>7469</sup> Duch received reports on the internal functioning of S-21 from Hor, who summarised the information that he received from his subordinates.<sup>7470</sup>

2223. In April 1977, under instruction from SON Sen, SOU Met, the Commander of Division 502 and member of the General Staff, wrote Duch to inform him that four individuals were being transferred to S-21 on the basis of confessions. SOU Met indicated that he would “request Angkar’s advice on the remainder in order to take further action”.<sup>7471</sup> In a further letter to Duch from May 1977, SOU Met, on behalf of the Military Committee of Division 502, identified groups of “traitors” to be sent to S-21.<sup>7472</sup> In this letter, SOU Met said that “if Angkar allows, I would like to have [the confession of Mao] in order to search for more enemies”.<sup>7473</sup> In another letter dated August 1977, SOU Met asked Duch to provide through Angkar the confession of a specific prisoner who had been sent to S-21.<sup>7474</sup> A further letter from SOU Met dated 2 September 1977 asked Duch to receive an individual who worked in a mining unit who was “causing political problems”.<sup>7475</sup> The Chamber finds that these are exemplary of the manner in which confessions were made, distributed, analysed and used in order to identify perceived enemies who were subsequently arrested.

2224. The annotations on confessions further support the Chamber’s conclusion that S-21 confessions were passed from the upper echelon on to zones, divisions and ministries in DK.<sup>7476</sup> For example, there are extensive annotations on confessions relating to East Zone cadre which demonstrate the manner in which confessions were passed on to the zone level for further action. The documents regarding PEN Chhe alias CHHAM Sarat (or Savat), the Secretary of Chhloung District of Sector 21, contain a note indicating that his confession taken on 16 July 1977 was “no different from that of MAI Phau, who has been arrested by Brother Phuong and who talked about Brother Phuong constantly”.<sup>7477</sup> In the confession of BIN Ban alias Bo (or Bau), the Secretary of Peam Chilaing District in Sector 21, a note dated 7 September 1977 records persons implicated and questions whether matters could be sent to “Brother Phim” secretly.<sup>7478</sup> An additional note records that some names were removed from the list before it was sent to “Bang Phim” (i.e. SAO Phim), after which “Khieu” (i.e. SON Sen) queries whether the whole document should be sent to “Bang Phim” and “[kept] silent”.<sup>7479</sup> Another note within confession materials states that “Brother Phim has requested clarification” on the content of the confession of Bin.<sup>7480</sup> In relation to TUY Pheng alias Phe, the Secretary of Kaoh Sautin, a cover page dated 12 November 1977 states that his confession was submitted to the East Zone via MEAS Senghong alias Chan, Sector 21 Secretary and Deputy Secretary of the East Zone.<sup>7481</sup> spoke to NUON Chea and raised concerns about sending “entire, non-annotated confessions to the base”, but NUON Chea instructed Duch that the base knew how to work.<sup>7483</sup>

arrested in May 1978 during the East Zone purges and subsequently detained at S-21.<sup>7490</sup>

2227. Duch sought advice from the upper echelon when an important person was implicated and removed the name of any person that his superiors did not want included.<sup>7491</sup> For example, in one of CHAN Chakrei's confessions that implicated KEV Samnang, there are several annotations which make it clear that some portions of his confession were to be used in full or extracted, while other portions were not to be used at all.<sup>7492</sup>

2228. When IENG Sary's son-in-law Poeun was implicated in a confession, Duch reported this to NUON Chea, who told Duch to instruct the interrogators to ignore or delete any responses which implicated Poeun.<sup>7493</sup> Similarly, when KHIEU Samphan was implicated in a confession, Duch spoke to NUON Chea. NUON Chea scolded Duch and told him to carry out his work properly and to remove KHIEU Samphan's name from any confessions.<sup>7494</sup> When SON Sen was implicated in a confession, Duch likewise sought the opinion of NUON Chea, who told him to write it down for him to look at.<sup>7495</sup>

2229. If a high-ranking person was implicated in a confession, there needed to be an instruction from the upper echelon as to whether or not to heed the accusations contained therein.<sup>7496</sup> Moreover, the Party was careful to time the arrests of high-ranking individuals such as "Phim and Nhim" so as to avoid an adverse reaction from the public.<sup>7497</sup> Important individuals such as SAO Phim were placed under lengthy

NUON Chea followed the confessions of high-ranking individuals more closely, he was also informed about the confessions of lower-level cadres.

2231. While Duch sent reports to NUON Chea that described the use of what Duch characterised as “torture”, Duch stated that he never received any instruction from NUON Chea chastising him or requiring him to stop the practice described.<sup>7513</sup> For example, in one summary of a confession which was sent to NUON Chea, the interrogator noted that the prisoner “did not confess to being a traitor until he had been tortured [...] he did not provide clear information; thus he was tortured. After being tortured, he provided clear information about his systematic networks and activities.”<sup>7514</sup>

2232. In a note from Pon to Duch concerning the interrogation of another prisoner, Pon reports that they had received the “instruction from Angkar to torture” and that he subsequently “tortured” the prisoner with 20 to 30 rattan lashes, followed by 20 to 30 wire lashes. The confession documents contain a letter from Duch to Pon stating that “I informed Angkar about the case of Ya [...] Angkar has decided that if this fool Ya continues to beat around the bush [...] he can be killed”.<sup>7515</sup> Another interrogation report contained the annotation: “Sent to Brother Nuon 2 copies”, and later reported that the prisoner did not initially confess but when they started “torturing” him, he agreed to “confess” about his connections, activities and the “plan in the network from the beginning until his arrest by Angkar”.<sup>7516</sup>

2233. Once an S-21 document was submitted, the Standing Committee contacted the unit or department whose staff member was implicated and had to be arrested.<sup>7517</sup> When confessions were received by Office 870, the office identified where individuals who had been implicated were located and gave instructions to conduct the arrests.<sup>7518</sup> For example, after receiving the confession of ENG Mean Heng alias Chhon, who worked in the Ministry of Energy, SON Sen wrote an annotation proposing that “the ministry review this document urgently in order to remove all of them and take control of the Ministry of Commerce”.<sup>7519</sup>

12.2.7. Arrests, Arrival, Registration and Prisoner Photographs at S-21

2236. The main function of S-21 was to detain prisoners who were Party members and revolutionary combatants suspected of being enemies. The focus on this purpose intensified with time, as evidenced by increasing numbers of CPK and RAK cadres among the incoming prisoner population.<sup>7523</sup> Prisoners who were brought to S-21 were already considered to be traitors.<sup>7524</sup> All those arrested and brought to S-21 were labelled “enemies” and had to be interrogated and “smashed”.<sup>7525</sup>

2238. Duch's superiors informed him when a group of prisoners was to be sent to S-21, and he would pass this information to Hor, who, in turn assigned HIM Huy to receive the prisoners.<sup>7532</sup> When prisoners were brought to S-21 they were not provided with any information on their rights, what they were accused of or provided with counsel; they were often instructed not to speak and were transported in a state of fear.<sup>7533</sup> Some detainees were transferred to S-21 under the false pretence that they

2242. If S-21 staff, as opposed to the relevant local units, were tasked with arresting people, Duch provided the names of those to be arrested to Hor, who forwarded this list to HIM Huy. HIM Huy, in turn, was responsible for collecting those individuals.<sup>7556</sup> While the decision on arrests had already been made by the Party Centre in principle, cadres including Hor had the ability to decide on arrests at the S-21 level, including those who had been sent to Prey Sar. However, Hor still reported to the upper echelon before any such arrests were made.<sup>7557</sup> prisoners to ensure that there was enough space for the new detainees.<sup>7559</sup> Further, during a wave of East Zone purges in 1978, NUON Chea ordered Duch to have large groups of East Zone prisoners arriving at S-21 sent out for execution that very same day, without interrogation.<sup>7560</sup>

2245. Detainees usually arrived at S-21 in trucks with their hands tied and eyes blindfolded, and were received by HIM Huy and his unit at the entrance of the compound.<sup>7565</sup> If detainees had not already been handcuffed, they were handcuffed and blindfolded by armed guards before being taken to a cell and forced to strip to their underwear. 2249. SUOS Thy made a report on the list of incoming and outgoing prisoners to Meng, who drew up the master list.<sup>7581</sup> On occasion, Duch monitored the incoming prisoners and asked to be brought daily lists which allowed him to calculate the total number of prisoners on a given day or to focus on prisoners of interest.<sup>7582</sup> The practice of preparing prisoner lists was initiated by Hor to ensure that the work of S-21 was precise and to facilitate reporting to superiors.<sup>7583</sup>

2250. With regard to the photographs taken upon arrival, some were taken in front of the building where prisoners were registered by SUOS Thy, while some photographs were taken where women and children were detained.<sup>7584</sup> Other photographs were taken which showed the front and side of a prisoner's head, using an instrument to hold the head steady.<sup>7585</sup> If prisoners were brought to S-21 at night, they were photographed the next morning in their cells where they were shackled by their legs.<sup>7586</sup> Most prisoners were blindfolded before their photograph was taken, while some prisoners were handcuffed.<sup>7587</sup> Elderly prisoners were also detained and photographed at S-21.<sup>7588</sup>

no explicit instructions as to which cell a prisoner should be kept in, and this was decided by the guards depending on the available space.<sup>7605</sup> Most prisoners were detained in three buildings within the S-21 compound: Buildings B, C and D.<sup>7606</sup>

12.2.8. Prominent Prisoners and Internal Purges

Special Prison was initially located outside the main compound, but was later moved inside the main compound of S-21 to Building A.<sup>7615</sup> Other guards and interrogators at S-21 were not allowed to approach the Special Prison, and as a general rule only the Special Unit dealt with important prisoners.<sup>7616</sup> Duch notes that about five to six months after he became Chairman of S-21 in mid to late 1976, SON Sen ordered Hor removed from all assignments relating to the interrogation of important prisoners due to his disclosure of confidential information relating to a confession. After this, Pon was assigned to interrogate important prisoners.<sup>7617</sup>

2258. Before the arrival of important prisoners, Duch was notified by his superior. For example, SON Sen briefed Duch prior to the arrival of KOY Thuon.<sup>7625</sup> While Duch asserted that those detained in the Special Prison had better living conditions than the other detainees and were treated when sick,<sup>7626</sup> the Chamber notes that there is no evidence that clearly corroborates this assertion. Even if prisoners detained in the Special Prison experienced conditions less difficult than other S-21 detainees, the Chamber is satisfied that those who were detained there Special Prison were set apart and considered extremely important. The purpose of the location of the Special Prison was to maintain secrecy regarding the presence of special detainees at S-21, to strictly monitor them in order to prevent them from committing suicide and to house them in conditions only sufficient to keep them alive long enough to provide exhaustive confessions before their unavoidable execution.<sup>7627</sup> Sry’s group was responsible for guarding these important prisoners, and Duch and Hor also had the authority to enter the Special Prison.<sup>7628</sup>

2260. Duch assigned Pon or Tuy to interrogate important prisoners in whom the upper level expressed an interest and from whom they wanted a statement.<sup>7632</sup> Pon interrogated only the most important prisoners.<sup>7633</sup> Duch also entered the Special Prison to interrogate some of the important detainees.<sup>7634</sup> Pon had been trained by Duch at M-13 with respect to interrogation techniques and he never beat a detainee to the point where a confession ended prematurely.<sup>7635</sup> By contrast, there was a danger that Tuy would resort to torturing the important prisoners more severely than instructions from the Party Centre allowed.<sup>7636</sup>

Foreign Affairs.<sup>7638</sup> Many staff members at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs were arrested and detained at S-21.<sup>7639</sup>

2263. The Chamber will now separately analyse the detention and treatment of several prominent or important prisoners by way of example. The Chamber has not identified each prominent prisoner detained at S-21, but has focused on individuals whose detention was discussed in live evidence and/or was the subject of submissions by the Parties.

12.2.8.1. 1976 – First wave of East Zone purges and the start of the North Zone purges

12.2.8.1.1. KEO Meas alias KAEV Meah

2265. KEO Meas was a former member of the Central Committee of the Workers' Party of Kampuchea who had travelled with POL Pot. However, he fell out of favour and was placed under house arrest after April 1975, in part due to his perceived traitorous connections with Vietnam.<sup>7642</sup> KEO Meas was later arrested and detained at

12.2.8.1.2. YIM Sambath

2266. Duch stated on several occasions that the internal purge of the first network started with YIM Sambath, a Platoon Deputy of a 50-man Unit of Division 170. YIM Sambath was arrested on 4 April 1976 and detained at S-21 on 8 April 1976.<sup>7645</sup> Pang arrested him and brought him to S-21 because Division 170, headed by CHAN Chakrei, was in charge of a location behind the Royal Palace where a grenade had been thrown.<sup>7646</sup> Annotations on YIM Sambath’s confession establish that Duch followed and monitored the content of his confession.<sup>7647</sup>

2267. Large-scale internal purges followed this incident, including that of SON Sary alias Prev, a suspected traitor who “gave answers” on 13 May 1976 and was smashed outside the S-21 premises. SON Sary was killed prematurely by Hor, who was reprimanded by SON Sen personally after committing the act. Hor was instructed that from that point forward, Duch had to grant him permission to take detainees outside the prison. Duch noted that Hor “did not understand the case well” and that Hor could have been executed for his actions.<sup>7648</sup>

2270. YIM Sambath was executed on 29 July 1976.<sup>7655</sup> Others who had links to Division 170 and who were mentioned in confessions were gradually arrested – including CHAN Chakrei alias Comrade Mean and Chhouk, both discussed below – who were implicated by two other military officers arrested for throwing the grenade behind the Royal Palace in April 1976.<sup>7656</sup> The decision to arrest YIM Sambath and CHAN Chakrei came from the upper echelon.<sup>7657</sup> S-21 prisoner lists and confessions confirm the arrest, detention and execution of several other members of Division 170 in mid-1976.<sup>7658</sup>

12.2.8.1.3. CHAN Chakrei alias Mean

2272. The NUON Chea Defence submits that given that CHAN Chakrei remained in a senior position for “six months” after the 9 October 1975 Standing Committee meeting where his loyalty was discussed, this indicates the Standing Committee showed “considerable restraint in the face of possible treason” and a “desire to act on the basis of concrete evidence rather than rumour, intrigue, and paranoia”.<sup>7661</sup> The Chamber finds that the evidence demonstrates that CHAN Chakrei was under observation for some time prior to his arrest and the question of his loyalty was discussed by the Standing Committee. The Chamber deems this consistent with its findings that with respect to some high-level individuals: the CPK leadership did indeed act with caution before ordering their arrest and often waited for a high-level person to be implicated in numerous confessions. However, contrary to the NUON Chea Defence’s submissions, this does not indicate that individuals such as CHAN Chakrei or his associates were arrested on the basis of concrete evidence, particularly given that the confessions which formed the basis for these arrests were often tainted by torture. The Chamber will address the lawfulness of these arrests and detention in the legal findings on the crimes below.<sup>7662</sup>

2273. Following the arrest of CHAN Chakrei, Duch attended a meeting with SON Sen in September 1976 where it was decided that associates of CHAN Chakrei should be rounded up with other “strings” in Division 170.<sup>7663</sup> In one of CHAN Chakrei’s confessions, Duch addressed an annotation to “Respected Brother” and observed that in his opinion CHAN Chakrei had fabricated responses during the interrogation to implicate several people.<sup>7664</sup> There is a further annotation that “Brother 21 [Duch] reported to Angkar on 2 October 1976”.<sup>7665</sup>

12.2.8.1.4. SUOS Neou alias Chhouk

2274. SUOS Neou alias Chhouk, the Secretary of Sector 24 of the East Zone, was arrested in August 1976 and subsequently interrogated through September 1976.<sup>7666</sup> Chhouk was implicated in the confessions of two Division 170 soldiers and by CHAN Chakrei, all of whom claimed that they acted under Chhouk's orders in connection with the grenade incident at the Royal Palace.<sup>7667</sup> Other S-21 documentation concluded that Chhouk was the chief of networks in Sector 24 and was also the author of the anti-CPK leaflets disseminated in the area.<sup>7668</sup> Chhouk's confession included annotations that indicated that his confessions were reported to Angkar, in full or in part.<sup>7669</sup> He was referenced in a Revolutionary Flag issue as "despicable Chhouk" and referred to with other individuals who had associations with the CIA and the "Yuon".<sup>7670</sup>

2275. Further annotations indicated that the confession had been reported to Brother 62 (i.e. SON Sen).<sup>7671</sup> Duch penned an annotation on Chhouk's confession which indicated that it was "not yet detailed and specific", and that while the confession was partially correct, it was "not yet deep, not yet complete", and proposed further clarification.<sup>7672</sup> Duch also wrote an annotation that a decision had been made to temporarily halt reporting because Chhouk "keeps on indirectly pointing at Brother Pho [SAO Phim]".<sup>7673</sup> Duch further wrote a series of letters to Chhouk in which he asked

2277. At some time around June or July 1976 after Chhouk was arrested, LY Phen, the chief of the East Zone armed forces, was arrested and sent to S-21.<sup>7681</sup> LY Phen was suspected of colluding with CHAN Chakrei, Chhouk and Ya in the Division 170 plot to attack Phnom Penh and planning to send the 3rd and 4th Divisions to attack Prey Veng and Svay Rieng provinces.<sup>7682</sup> LY Phen had been labelled as an enemy by POL Pot at a study session in 1976 and was implicated in the confessions of YIM Sambath, Chhouk and CHAN Chakrei.<sup>7683</sup> LY Phen's confession seems to indicate that at one point five deputy interrogators, a head interrogator, two guards and a note-taker were present.<sup>7684</sup> In one instance, LY Phen lost consciousness and vomited during an interrogation, and in another he was hit in the head with a lock until he bled.<sup>7685</sup> LY Phen was interrogated over a period of months, and was executed in 1976. The Combined S-21 Notebook refers to LY Phen, noting that he was "broken" in 1976.<sup>7686</sup> One of LY Phen's subordinates, BUN Sani, the Director of the East Zone rubber plantations at that time, was presumed responsible for the traitorous network within the plantations and was arrested on 10 July 1976.<sup>7687</sup> He was executed several weeks later on 29 July 1976.<sup>7688</sup>

12.2.8.1.6. NEY Sarann alias MEN San alias Ya

2279. NEY Sarann alias MEN San alias Ya was former Secretary of the Northeast Zone and, before that, SON Sen’s deputy in the General Staff. Ya had also been a member of the Central Committee.<sup>7691</sup> Ya was denounced as a Vietnamese collaborator, arrested and detained in S-21.<sup>7692</sup> The precise date of Ya’s arrest is unknown, but Duch explained that he was briefed by his superior SON Sen, and “when Ya arrived [SON Sen] followed up this [sic] closely”. SON Sen asked Duch whether “tortures” were used, if they could be postponed and to be “very careful with Ya”.<sup>7693</sup> Ya was arrested after a number of cadres from the East Zone implicated him and were purged, such as YIM Sambath in April 1976, CHAN Chakrei in May 1976, Chhouk in July 1976 and LY Phen in June or July 1976. Ya was interrogated over the course of weeks and many methods were used to pressure him to confess in a way that fit the Party’s expectations.<sup>7694</sup> This included the “cold and the hot methods”, which ranged from

This report shows that Duch instructed Pon to threaten Ya with regard to “the medicines for which he has personal need” and regarding “the welfare of his wife and children”. In particular, Pon had to ask him whether he knew “that his wife and children have been detained, now that he’s here? Does he know what’s become of his wife?” The report adds: “[W]e put pressure on him: ‘Your face is going black with terror, just as if you were marking yourself clearly for the Organization to see.’ The threat was made there’s no avoiding torture if you don’t confess. In the afternoon: we proposed to Brother Duch that he give permission for us to use both hot and cold techniques; after having received authorization, towards the early evening we went to intimidate him, telling him to prepare himself at eight or nine p.m. for the torture to be continued. At about almost ten p.m. we went in to get ready to carry out torture with our bare hands; IX started to confess by asking us to clarify what all he was to report; we clarified as follows: ‘Please write a systematic account of your treasonous activities from beginning to end.’”). See also, T. 27 March 2012 (KAING Guek Eav), E1/54.1, p. 36. 2280. Ya's confession contains a note from him indicating that his responses "were made after I was severely and strongly tortured".<sup>7696</sup> This part of his note was struck through and Duch wrote a note stating: "Do not write the sentences struck through in red. You have no right to report that matter to Angkar. I have the right. I have reported it already. I have reported clearly. Do not play tricks, wanting to deny. You cannot".<sup>7697</sup>

2281. In a further note, Duch wrote to Pon that he had informed Angkar about Ya and that "Angkar has decided that if this fool Ya continues to beat around the bush aiming to hide his traitorous links and activities, Angkar has decided that he can be killed. Do not let him play games with us anymore".<sup>7698</sup> Duch then proceeded to instruct Pon that he could "use hot methods [against Ya] strongly and for a long time; even if you make a misstep and he dies, you will have done nothing wrong in terms of organizational discipline".<sup>7699</sup> Duch subsequently wrote to Pon indicating that he had examined "Brother Ya's reporting" and had decided not to send it to Angkar, noting that "from experience, only hot methods will work with this Ya. We cannot play friendly with him. Impose them on him."<sup>7700</sup> Ya was one of the several members of the General Staff,

12.2.8.2.1. KOY Thuon

2285. The Closing Order found that following the confession of KOY Thuon, there was a sharp increase in the number of those arrested and sent to S-21 from the North Zone.<sup>7717</sup> KOY Thuon had been a full member of the Central Committee, the ninth person in the hierarchy of the CPK and Secretary of the (old) North Zone until he was transferred to Phnom Penh to become Minister of Commerce following April 1975.<sup>7718</sup> KOY Thuon was arrested on apparent allegations that he had killed the husband of a woman, but he had no opportunity to defend himself against the charges.<sup>7719</sup>

2286. When KOY Thuon was first placed under house arrest, he was replaced by SUA Vasi alias Doeun as Minister of Commerce.<sup>7720</sup> KOY Thuon was under house arrest for about eight months when, after he was implicated in more confessions, he was arrested by S-21 staff at Duch's house and brought to S-21 in January 1977.<sup>7721</sup> Six or seven cadres from the guard unit were involved in his arrest, including HIM Huy and Hor.<sup>7722</sup> KOY Thuon was one of the detainees held in the Special Prison and was personally interrogated by Duch following strict instructions from the upper echelon.<sup>7723</sup>

2287. TIT Son alias Nhem was one of the early individuals arrested from the Commerce Ministry whose S-21 confession implicated KOY Thuon in December 1976.<sup>7724</sup> TIT Son's confession was reviewed by Duch and forwarded to "Angkar".<sup>7725</sup> The confession of TIT Son alias Nhem contained a note from the interrogator which indicated that "Nhem was tortured on 12 and 13 December 1976. We then began to both persuade and threaten him, but there was no torture. We pushed him by annotating the reasons on the text that he had written, and then had him write again.”<sup>7726</sup> Duch wrote an annotation on Nhem’s confession with a proposal that three copies be made including “one copy to Angkar”.<sup>7727</sup> SON Sen told Duch that the decision to arrest KOY Thuon had been made by POL Pot and instructed Duch to be very careful during the interrogation as Duch had previously been under KOY Thuon’s supervision.<sup>7728</sup> Upon KOY Thuon’s arrest, Duch did not give him any information and only told KOY Thuon that he no longer had the right to meet Angkar and could only report to Angkar through him.<sup>7729</sup> SON Sen intervened directly by telephone and instructed Duch to personally conduct the interrogation.<sup>7730</sup> Following the instruction of the upper echelon, KOY Thuon was interrogated several times. His confessions are hundreds of pages long.<sup>7731</sup>

2288. After SON Sen received KOY Thuon’s confessions, he called Duch and told him that only the third confession reflected the truth and that the fourth confession “implicated people all over the place”.<sup>7732</sup> After having spoken to SON Sen, Duch told KOY Thuon that his confession would not be accepted because he had implicated revolutionary forces and that it must be re-written.<sup>7733</sup> SON Sen instructed Duch to record audio of KOY Thuon’s confession and when Duch asked KOY Thuon to write his confession, KOY Thuon tore the paper and broke the pen.<sup>7734</sup> Duch then told KOY Thuon that he would not be beaten to death before he provided a complete answer and promised to personally send his confession to Angkar.<sup>7735</sup>

which would prevent them from securing a full confession.<sup>7736</sup> Duch also had orders to not “torture” KOY Thuon and Duch in turn instructed the guards to refrain from the same.<sup>7737</sup> Duch applied psychological pressure on KOY Thuon during his interrogation.<sup>7738</sup> In his confessions of March 1977, KOY Thuon provided a list of several members of the leading committee of a “new party” that was to carry out the resistance against the CPK.<sup>7739</sup> The list included individuals who had already been arrested and some who were not.<sup>7740</sup> Of those listed, HU Nim and TIV Ol were arrested and detained at S-21 shortly thereafter.<sup>7741</sup> After his fourth confession, Duch received orders to keep KOY Thuon and delay his execution until Office 870 decided that he should be killed.<sup>7742</sup> Following KOY Thuon’s confessions, hundreds of people were arrested, detained and killed from the North Zone in early 1977,<sup>7743</sup> including those from former North Zone Divisions 310, 174, 450, and the North Zone generally.<sup>7744</sup> S-

See S-21 Confession – KOY Thuon, E3/1604, multiple dates, p. 2, ERN (En) 00769831. Duch identified this as the handwriting of SON Sen and suggested that this meant they had removed any part of his confession that implicated his own forces. See T. 14 June 2016 (KAING Guek Eav), E1/437.1, pp. 60-62. The Chamber is not satisfied that Duch’s interpretation of this annotation is accurate. Nevertheless, the Chamber notes that KOY Thuon was handcuffed for between 10 to 15 days because it was alleged he had fabricated stories with respect to the Party’s forces. See S-21 Confession – KOY Thuon, E3/1604, 6 March 1977, p. 1, ERN (En) 00773088. Duch maintained that he only applied political means and the cold method to interrogate KOY Thuon and not “torture”. See T. 4 April 2012 (KAING Guek Eav), E1/59.1, pp. 59-62, 66. However, in a previous statement Duch submitted that hot methods were used to torture KOY Thuon because the latter had reacted. #### 12.2.8.2.2. SUA Vasi alias Doeun

2291. Prior to considering the situation of SUA Vasi alias Doeun, the Chamber notes that CHOR Chhan alias Sreng, Deputy Secretary of the Central (old North) Zone, was arrested and sent to S-21 in mid-February 1977.<sup>7747</sup> His confession materials, stretching from February 1977 to at least March 1977, contain annotations indicating that he was “tortured”. CHOR Chhan speaks about Ya’s arrest and implicates many others, including Doeun.<sup>7748</sup>

2292. SUA Vasi alias Doeun was the Chairman of the Political Office of 870.<sup>7749</sup> As discussed above, Doeun replaced KOY Thuon as Minister of Commerce in April 1976 when KOY Thuon was placed under house arrest.<sup>7750</sup> After rumours of misconduct and after KOY Thuon implicated Doeun in his confession, Doeun was arrested and brought to S-21 in late January or February 1977, at around the same time as CHOR Chhan.<sup>7751</sup> Duch wrote an annotation to Doeun in the confession, telling him to stop hiding, to review his confessions and to tell the truth.<sup>7752</sup> Pon, who interrogated Doeun, wrote to

All kinds of punishment and torture were inflicted against me [...] During each incident of torture, I would ask myself why a genuine revolutionary like me has been exposed to this torture.<sup>7756</sup>

2294. Doeun begged the CPK and Duch to pardon and release him from “detention and torture”.<sup>7757</sup> Although there is no direct evidence about what happened to Doeun, the Chamber considers that the only reasonable inference to be drawn under the circumstances is that he died at S-21.

2295. SBAUV Him alias Oeun was the Secretary of Division 310 in the North Zone<sup>7758</sup> and was accused of heading a plot to overthrow POL Pot. He was arrested on 19 February 1977 and sent to S-21. After Oeun's arrest, Southwest Zone cadres took over all leadership positions in Division 310 while hundreds of members of Division 310 were arrested and killed between March and August 1977.<sup>7759</sup>

2296. In April 1977, S-21 shifted large groups of prisoners from various locations out of S-21 for execution. For example, on 5 April 1977, 124 prisoners from Division 310 were "subtracted" from S-21, approximately one week later 46 more from Division 310 were "subtracted", and on 28 April 1977, 60 prisoners from Division 310 and 54 prisoners from Division 450 were "subtracted".<sup>7760</sup>

12.2.8.3. April to late 1977 – Purges continue within Ministries and the East, North and Northwest Zones

2297. The first week of April shows a large purge of prisoners from the Ministry of Public Works; over 155 prisoners were arrested from the Ministry one month prior in March, and in the first week of April, 120 of them were "subtracted".<sup>7761</sup> Other prisoner lists corroborate similar figures from the Ministry of Public Works at this time.<sup>7762</sup> Shortly after, the months of May and June at S-21 show an increased removal and execution of prisoners from the State Ministry of Commerce.<sup>7763</sup>

2298. Further, Division 920 was purged from April 1977 at the hands of Division 801 cadres previously stationed in Ratanakiri. When Ta San arrived in Sector 105 that same month, he reported to SON Sen that "more than 90%" of Division 920 cadre were traitors. The purges in this region stretched on, and S-21 logs demonstrate that from

February 1977 to December 1978, over 420 Division 920 prisoners were detained and/or executed at S-21.<sup>7764</sup>

SEAT Chhae was a reserve candidate of the Central Committee and was known as “Brother 81”, often mentioned as such in meeting minutes and copied on telegrams.<sup>7780</sup> SEAT Chhae was arrested from the East Zone on or around 30 April 1977 and detained at S-21 prior to his execution in December 1977.<sup>7781</sup> SEAT Chhae’s arrest preceded the “second wave” of the East Zone purges that reached a crescendo in early to mid-1978. This increase in purges was implemented by over 10,000 soldiers sent to the East Zone by SON Sen, including soldiers from the Southwest Zone, the Central (old North) Zone and from Centre Division 703.<sup>7782</sup>

2304. SEAT Chhae’s S-21 confession indicates that he was interrogated at S-21 in August and September 1977.<sup>7783</sup> He was first interrogated by Pon, who was given instructions by SON Sen about the strategy for interrogation.<sup>7784</sup> However, when Pon could not produce the desired answer, Duch assigned Tuy to use the “hot” method to interrogate SEAT Chhae.<sup>7785</sup> SEAT Chea’s wife, PRUM Sothea alias Thea, was also arrested in the Southwest Zone and detained at S-21 from 1 February 1978 until her execution on 10 May 1978.<sup>7786</sup>

2305. Duch wrote a series of letters to SEAT Chhae alias Tum.<sup>7787</sup> In one of these letters Duch noted that “Angkar has defined this period of time as a life view period” and requested SEAT Chhae to report his overt and covert contacts with Regiment 152,

12.2.8.4.2. CHOU Chet alias Sy

2314. CHOU Chet alias Sy was the Secretary of the West Zone and was arrested in April 1978.<sup>7817</sup> At that time, most of his subordinates had already been arrested.<sup>7818</sup> Duch annotated CHOU Chet's confession, mentioning that it had been reported on 14 April 1978. CHOU Chet was referred to as "despicable Sy" and in the Party's view was grouped with other individuals who had associations with the CIA and the "Yuon".<sup>7819</sup> CHOU Chet's wife was also sent to S-21.<sup>7820</sup>

12.2.8.4.3. CHHIM Sam Aok alias Pang

2315. As discussed above, CHHIM Sam Aok alias Pang was a member of the Central Committee and was the spokesperson for POL Pot who was assigned by NUON Chea to work with and receive reports from Duch at S-21.<sup>7821</sup> He was also the Chief of Office S-71.<sup>7822</sup> Pang was arrested around April 1978, detained, interrogated and tortured at S-21.<sup>7823</sup> Prior to Pang's arrest, SON Sen had asked Duch why Pang had not been implicated in a confession of a specific prisoner who was detained at S-21.<sup>7824</sup> SON Sen wanted to listen to a confession that implicated Pang.<sup>7825</sup>

2316. Prior to his arrest, Pang continued to work and issue instructions at S-21. Staff were not permitted to inform Pang about the upper echelon's suspicion against him.<sup>7826</sup> After his arrest, Pang's confessions were confusing and NUON Chea gave Duch a series of questions to ask Pang in order to clarify the meaning of parts of his confessions.<sup>7827</sup> According to Duch, it took a long time to obtain Pang's confession, and he was subjected to extended interrogation including the hot method.<sup>7828</sup> Duch

2318. CHAU Seng, formerly with the Ministry of Education and internationally recognised Cambodian politician was arrested and detained at S-21 in November 1977 under the name CHEN Suon.<sup>7833</sup> CHAU Seng was born in Kampuchea Krom and held various high-level ministry positions during the 1960s. After spending time in exile in France due to his criticism of LON Nol, he returned to Cambodia in 1975 to "rebuild the country".<sup>7834</sup> CHAU Seng and KHIEU Samphan were close friends who studied together in France and had both worked with the Ministry of Commerce. CHAU Seng was also close to HU Nim.<sup>7835</sup> CHAU Seng was later sent to K-16 at Boeng Trabaek under the supervision of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, where he was eventually arrested.<sup>7836</sup> Duch had been informed in 1977 by SON Sen that the Party had decided to arrest CHAU Seng and that an alias, Suo, should be used.<sup>7837</sup> Duch instructed MAM Nai to interrogate CHAU Seng and his confession was hundreds of pages long.<sup>7838</sup>

KANG Chap was also appointed Chairman of the Judicial Committee of the People’s Representative Assembly in April 1976. See Section 10.1: Tram Kak Cooperatives, para. 906. Since April 1975, the Party Centre had taken over direct control of Autonomous Sector 106 (comprising Siem Reap and Oddar Meanchey) and Autonomous Sector 103 (encompassing Preah Vihear). In February 1977, KANG Chap replaced PA Phal alias Sot, the secretary of Sector 106, who had been arrested that same month. From the time KANG Chap arrived in February 1977 until mid-1977, KE Pauk was responsible for the old North Zone as well as Sector 106. 1978, which NUON Chea, KHIEU Samphan and other CPK leaders attended.<sup>7847</sup> The arrest was conducted by Lin, following the orders of Ta Mok.<sup>7848</sup>

2322. Duch assigned Pon to conduct the interrogation of VORN Vet.<sup>7849</sup> During the interrogation VORN Vet was sprayed with cold water and had a fan turned on him, which made him shiver.<sup>7850</sup> In VORN Vet's lengthy confession, he reported on his "traitorous activities serving the CIA and Yuon", implicated his wife and children as having joined the CIA and named hundreds of individuals who were in his "network".<sup>7851</sup>

2323. Duch made regular reports to NUON Chea on the progress of VORN Vet's interrogation and provided NUON Chea with his full confession when it was completed.<sup>7852</sup> NUON Chea ultimately decided that VORN Vet should be executed,<sup>7853</sup> and he was accordingly "smashed" along with his family.<sup>7854</sup>

12.2.8.5.3. IN Lorn alias Nat

S-21.<sup>7856</sup> Before his arrest, Nat was first transferred from his post at S-21 to work at the General Staff Office.<sup>7857</sup> Shortly before late 1978, Nat was again reassigned from General Staff to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in order to isolate him because he was no longer trusted by the Party.<sup>7858</sup> Duch sent Nat's confession to NUON Chea, but Nat was not detained long enough to obtain a "sufficient confession".<sup>7859</sup>

2325. The case of Nat is an example of the practice of CPK leaders of assigning cadres who were no longer trusted to work at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs before they were purged. Another example is the case of KE Kim Huot alias Ta Sot, who had known Duch for a long time and was his mentor. KE Kim Huot was the Secretary of Sector 7 in the Northwest Zone. KE Kim Huot was detained for several months,<sup>7860</sup> was subjected to severe beatings and was forced to eat his own excrement.<sup>7861</sup> Prior to his purge at S-21, he was assigned to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and, according to SUONG Sikoeun, KE Kim Huot was to be appointed Ambassador of DK in Yugoslavia.<sup>7862</sup> CHHAY Kim Hor alias Hok, the former Minister of Energy,<sup>7863</sup> SON

2328. The Chamber is satisfied that it was S-21 policy to subject detainees to physical and mental pressure as a tool during interrogations.<sup>7889</sup> This is supported by, among other things, evidence that also proves specific examples of when physical and mental abuse was inflicted on prisoners at S-21. The Chamber finds that CHUM Mey,<sup>7890</sup> TIT Son alias Nhem,<sup>7891</sup> YIM Sambath,<sup>7892</sup> SEAT Chhae alias Tum,<sup>7893</sup> CHHIM Sam Aok alias Pang,<sup>7894</sup> HU Nim,<sup>7895</sup> NEY Sarann alias Ya,<sup>7896</sup> LY Phen,<sup>7897</sup> and VORN Vet<sup>7898</sup> are a few specific examples of the multitude of prisoners that the evidence proves were subjected to physical and psychological pressure or mistreatment to secure confessions about their supposed traitorous networks.<sup>7899</sup>

12.2.9. Detention of Family Members and Children

2329. Duch instructed S-21 staff that “if you dig the grass, you have to dig the root as well”, which meant that if someone was arrested, those connected to their “network” had to be arrested as well due to their connection to the suspected traitor. This included all family members such as husbands, wives, children and parents.<sup>7900</sup>

2330. Some prisoners were brought to S-21 along with their spouses and children.<sup>7901</sup> If a person was arrested, his or her spouse and children were arrested and “smashed” if

<sup>7900</sup> The Chamber notes that Duch testified that this slogan was known by the public as the method of purging by the CPK, but the Party did not use this slogan and only required them to be absolute in their stance and distinguish between enemies and people. See T. 13 June 2016 (KAING Guek Eav), E1/436.1, p. 33. However, in light of the evidence to the contrary, the Chamber views this as an attempt to shift his responsibility and does not rely on Duch’s testimony in this regard. See e.g., T. 2 March 2016 (UCH Sunlay), E1/395.1, p. 7 (“I know it clearly [...] It was known by the Khmer Rouge. And the saying and policy of the Khmer Rouge was fully known by the grassroots that, ‘To dig up grass, one must dig up the roots’”); T. 4 May 2016 (HIM Huy), E1/427.1, pp. 6-9 (“Yes, I heard about that. And it was Duch who gave us that instruction that if you dig the grass, you have to dig the root as well.”); BBC Cambodia Report, E3/536R, 2 June 2008, ERN V00172527, 00:27:05-00:27:22. they were not needed for interrogation.<sup>7902</sup> In principle, important prisoners were interrogated first and a decision was later made about whether their wives and children would be questioned.<sup>7903</sup> Most of the spouses were not interrogated and were executed.<sup>7904</sup> The main reason why children were “smashed” was due to the Party’s fear that the children would take revenge.<sup>7905</sup>

2331. SON Sen directed Duch to take a clear stance regarding the enemy and friends, and this extended to children of “enemies”.<sup>7906</sup> The general policy was that when the head of the family was considered a traitor, the spouse and the children were also killed.<sup>7907</sup> For example, the direct relatives of SIN Dara alias Sok and MAI Lun (who was suspected of having a “tendency” towards the “Khmer Serei”), were arrested and brought to S-21. Duch personally made an annotation that four members of the family were to be interrogated and the rest had to be “smashed”.<sup>7908</sup> As discussed earlier, the wife and child of HUY Sre were also arrested and executed at S-21, as well as the wife of HU Nim.<sup>7909</sup>

2332. Following the orders of NUON Chea, Duch arrested PRUM Phal alias Vin, the wife of VORN Vet, and YANG Kan alias Phoas, the wife of CHENG An at the Suramarit Buddhist School and brought them to S-21. Given that there was not much

The Chamber notes that Duch clarified that he was unable to know exactly what happened in other security centres. The Chamber therefore does not rely on his evidence that this same principle of arresting the spouses and children of prisoners was applied in other security centres. See T. 22 June 2016 (KAING Guek Eav), E1/442.1, pp. 73-75.

2333. The NUON Chea Defence submits that there was no policy regarding the arrest of family members and that family relationships were simply recorded “as additional information to facilitate the identification of detainees”.<sup>7914</sup> The NUON Chea Defence points to examples of prisoners at S-21 whose spouses were not arrested and concludes that when wives were arrested this was because of their own subversive activities rather than because of the behaviour of their husbands.<sup>7915</sup> The Chamber is satisfied that it can rely on Duch’s testimony to the contrary, which is corroborated by documentary evidence,<sup>7916</sup> and accordingly rejects the NUON Chea Defence’s submission.

children or of young detainees on their own.<sup>7919</sup> The Chamber observes from these photographs that some of those detained were clearly very young. Children between the ages of one and six were detained at S-21 along with their mothers in a large cell.<sup>7920</sup> NORNG Chanphal was detained at S-21 along with his brother when he was approximately eight years old. He recalled seeing two jeeps arriving before he was arrested along with his brother, mother and two other females carrying babies in their arms. Upon his arrival at S-21, he watched his mother have her photo taken. NORNG Chanphal, his brother, mother and the other women and children with them were taken to a common room. The next morning, he and his brother were separated from their mother and taken to a workshop, where they slept and ate with other children. They were fed gruel that was sometimes rotten and NORNG Chanphal did not recall ever having taken a bath at S-21.<sup>7921</sup> NORNG Chanphal was at S-21 when the Vietnamese entered the premises in January 1979. At that point, the children were very weak and NORNG Chanphal saw the body of a fellow child prisoner who had died with ants crawling on his or her face.<sup>7922</sup>

2335. The NUON Chea Defence submits that the majority of the children registered at S-21 were young cadres, that it was uncertain whether they were actually arrested and that, even if they were arrested, this was likely due “to their suspected participation in unlawful activities”, including children who worked at S-21.<sup>7923</sup> The NUON Chea Defence seems to acknowledge that some children entered S-21 but suggests that they “might have been accompanying their parents” and that these children were not considered detainees.<sup>7924</sup> The Chamber finds that these submissions are largely based on speculation and do not materially affect the Chamber’s assessment of whether or not their detention was arbitrary and thus unlawful. The lawfulness of the detention will be addressed in Section 12.2.24: Legal Findings. The Chamber also finds that the evidence cited by the NUON Chea Defence does not support the proposition that hardly any children were detained at S-21 and that they were instead sent to Prey Sar.<sup>7925</sup> Further, the evidence clearly establishes, and the Chamber is accordingly satisfied, that women and children were detained at S-21.

2336. According to the Closing Order, Prey Sar (S-24) was a labour camp located outside of Phnom Penh that operated as a prison and work site.<sup>7926</sup> The facts pertaining to Prey Sar were excluded from the scope of Case 002/02 and accordingly the Chamber does not make any factual findings with respect to crimes alleged to have been committed at this location.<sup>7927</sup> The KHIEU Samphan Defence challenges the hearing of witnesses who testified with respect to possible crimes committed in Prey Sar.<sup>7928</sup> Consistently with its prior ruling, the Chamber only has regard to evidence pertaining to the Prey Sar to the extent that this evidence was related to: (a) the creation and functioning of S-21 and also (b) to the killings of detainees at Choeung Ek, as a number of individuals were sent directly there from Prey Sar in order to be executed.<sup>7929</sup> The Chamber has also had regard to this evidence for the purpose of addressing the NUON

Chea Defence's submissions that a large number of people registered at S-21 were in fact sent to Prey Sar.

2337. Prey Sar, also known as S-24, S-21D or S-21 Khor (or Kho),<sup>7930</sup> was a re-education centre located to the southwest of Phnom Penh in the Dangkao district, Kandal province (present-day Phnom Penh municipality).<sup>7931</sup> It extended roughly 380 hectares from Choeng Ek execution site and Bakou village to the west of Prey Sar Prison.<sup>7932</sup> According to Duch, those sent to Prey Sar were not formally called “enemies”, but were labelled as combatants.<sup>7933</sup> The main role of Prey Sar was to re-educate people,<sup>7934</sup> and some individuals were sent to S-21 after being sent to work at Prey Sar.<sup>7935</sup> Similarly, some S-21 staff members were also removed and reassigned to work at Prey Sar, and were later sent back to S-21 to be killed.<sup>7936</sup> Evidence indicates that many prisoners were sent directly from Prey Sar to Choeng Ek to be killed.<sup>7937</sup>

2339. All incoming prisoners sent to both the S-21 Security Centre and Prey Sar were received at the common reception point near S-21 located on Street 360, which was subsequently referred to as the Beehive Radio Station.<sup>7939</sup> Incoming detainees were stopped at the main road, and HIM Huy was asked to send those designated for re-education to Prey Sar to work in the fields. The decision of who would be sent to Prey Sar was made by the Party Centre.<sup>7940</sup> Those sent to Prey Sar to be refashioned were not considered to have committed the most serious offences and thus did not enter S-21.<sup>7941</sup>

2340. Intake procedures for incoming prisoners at the S-21 reception point varied in practice. HIM Huy testified that prisoners whom Hor instructed him to drive to Prey Sar were not registered or photographed at the reception point before their departure.<sup>7942</sup> In contrast, Duch testified that, in principle, people sent to Prey Sar had their photographs taken, though it is not clear from his testimony where this occurred.<sup>7943</sup> Duch clarified in one instance that he believed incoming prisoners bound for Prey Sar were registered on a separate list, and their photographs were not taken in the same place as those bound for S-21.<sup>7944</sup> SUOS Thy, who managed the daily list of incoming S-21 prisoners, indicated that he did not record prisoners bound for Prey Sar, stating: “I was not involved because there was each document worker for each respective unit”.<sup>7945</sup> SUOS Thy’s office (where he received prisoners for photographs and registration) was close to the entrance of the S-21 detention facility, and prisoners bound for Prey Sar were sent away from the previous reception point before ever reaching his office.<sup>7946</sup>

2341. Head photographer NOEM Oem testified that photographs were “sometimes” taken of the people sent to Prey Sar. He was sent to Prey Sar two to three times per year to take photographs of detainees if S-21 negatives were damaged, which indicates that perhaps photographs of some Prey Sar prisoners were first taken at the reception point.<sup>7947</sup>

2342. Similarly, LACH Mean testified to having been sent to Prey Sar to take photographs for biographies.<sup>7948</sup> At least four people attest to having their photograph and at times their biography taken at Prey Sar.<sup>7949</sup> Other former Prey Sar detainees claim that while they made their biography at Prey Sar, they did not have their photo taken there.<sup>7950</sup>

2343. While the intake process at the S-21 reception point varied, it remains clear that arrested persons bound for Prey Sar were not registered by SUOS Thy and detained in the inner premises of S-21 before being sent to Prey Sar also known as S-24.

2344. The NUON Chea Defence's submission regarding large-scale releases or transfers from S-21 hinges on whether detainees bound for Prey Sar were first registered as entering S-21 and detained therein; i.e., whether their numbers populated SUOS Thy's incoming and daily controlling lists. However, the evidence discussed above shows that those who were sent to Prey Sar from the S-21 reception point passed through separate channels; they were never registered by SUOS Thy and never entered the inner S-21 compound. There were in fact separate lists and a separate documentation process for the detainees headed to Prey Sar existed. As discussed above, their intake procedure varied or was at times non-existent.<sup>7951</sup>

12.2.11. NUON Chea Defence's "Release" Submission

2345. The NUON Chea Defence relies on several lists to support its submission that prisoners were released from S-21 en masse.<sup>7952</sup> The Chamber will examine each list in turn.

2346. In its Closing Brief, the NUON Chea Defence cites to a list of 100 people from Division 920 labelled as "released" on 26 November 1977 to show that large groups of prisoners were released from detention at S-21.<sup>7953</sup> However, as Duch clarified, NUON Chea told him that these members of Division 920 were sent to him to be smashed. Hor prepared the list and titled it "Prisoners who were to be released", but Duch corrected
