Pre-Trial Chamber I (the “Chamber”) of the International Criminal Court (the “Court”) issues the following decision on the Prosecutor’s and Defence requests for leave to appeal the Chamber’s decision adjourning the hearing on the confirmation of charges.

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

1. The confirmation of charges hearing pursuant to article 61(7) of the Rome Statute (the “Statute”) was held from 19 until 28 February 2013.<sup>1</sup> The parties and participants were granted the opportunity to submit thereafter final written submissions. On the last day of the hearing it was clarified that the decision of the Chamber would be issued within 60 days after the final written submissions of the Defence.<sup>2</sup>
2. On 3 June 2013, the Chamber, issued, by majority, the “Decision adjourning the hearing on the confirmation of charges pursuant to article 61(7)(c)(i) of the Rome Statute” (the “Adjournment Decision”).<sup>3</sup>

On 10 June 2013, the Chamber extended, upon request of the Defence,<sup>4</sup> the time limit for the Defence to present any request for leave to appeal or response to the respective request by the Prosecutor as of the day of notification of the official translation of the Adjournment Decision into French.<sup>5</sup>

5. On 25 June 2013, the Defence requested leave to appeal the Adjournment Decision<sup>9</sup> on two grounds to which the Prosecutor<sup>10</sup> and the OPCV<sup>11</sup> duly responded.

II. THE APPLICABLE LAW

6. The Chamber notes article 82(1)(d) of the Statute, rule 155 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence and regulation 65 of the Regulations of the Court. Article 82(1)(d) of the Statute reads, in relevant part:

9. Concerning the requirements set out in (a) and (b) above, the Chamber recalls that they are cumulative. Failure in demonstrating that one of the requirements in (a) or (b) is fulfilled is fatal to an application for leave to appeal and makes it unnecessary for the Chamber to address the remaining requirements under article 82(1)(d) of the Statute.

III. ANALYSIS

1. The Application by the Prosecutor

10. The Prosecutor seeks the Chamber's leave to appeal the Adjournment Decision on three issues. They are presented, together with the responses by the OPCV and the Defence, in what follows.

a) The First Issue

11. The Prosecutor requests leave to appeal the Adjournment Decision on the following issue: "Whether the [Adjournment] Decision correctly interpreted and applied the evidentiary standard under Article 61(7) ("First Issue")".<sup>18</sup>

Arguments by the Prosecutor

12. The Prosecutor avers that while the Chamber's Majority correctly "spells out" the relevant evidentiary threshold consistent with prior case law, it modifies the interpretation of the standard of proof and adopts a "more stringent" approach in its application to the facts of the present case, thus departing from the Court's jurisprudence.<sup>19</sup> She purports that certain findings in the Adjournment Decision, requiring her at the confirmation stage to “largely complete her investigation”, “present all her evidence”, “present [...] her strongest possible case” and the Majority’s general disposition towards certain categories of evidence, have a “direct impact” on the evidentiary standard to be applied and cannot be reconciled with the lower evidentiary threshold applicable at this stage, the limited scope and purpose of the confirmation proceedings, the Pre-Trial Chamber’s limited powers and the Prosecutor’s authority to rely on documentary or summary evidence pursuant to article 61(5) of the Statute.<sup>20</sup>

13. The issue purportedly affects the fairness of the proceedings vis-à-vis the Prosecutor as the Majority will apply the same standard to any new evidence when deciding on whether to confirm the charges. It is alleged that a finding of the Appeals Chamber is required to provide fairness to the Prosecutor on the correct legal criteria for assessing evidence.<sup>21</sup> Further, fairness is allegedly affected by the issue, as it interferes with the Prosecutor’s ability to present her case. Should the Majority’s application of the evidentiary threshold prove to be too high, then it would be unfair “to force the Prosecut[or]” to complete her investigation, offer her best evidence and provide evidence for each of the forty-one incidents.<sup>22</sup> The Prosecutor also raises the issue of fairness vis-à-vis the victims and witnesses: in asking the Prosecutor to present all her best evidence, she would “be forced” to call many live witnesses at the confirmation hearing, also in relation to the forty-one incidents, which will increase the risk to their safety and that of their families. At the same time, the Prosecutor predicts that “an incorrect application of the evidence that leads to the denial of confirmation also unfairly denies witnesses and victims a full hearing of the evidence”, a finding under article 74 and the right to seek reparations.<sup>23</sup>

14. The Prosecutor also contends that the Adjournment Decision on this issue affects the expeditiousness of the proceedings. She alleges that by requiring her to present all her best evidence at the confirmation stage after having completed the investigation, together with the Majority’s general disposition towards certain types of evidence, the Adjournment Decision effectively “forces” her to call many witnesses to testify viva voce. This delay in the closure of the pre-trial phase or the risk that the charges will not be confirmed allegedly has a significant impact on the expeditious conduct of the continuation of the hearing in this case.<sup>24</sup> Moreover, the Prosecutor sees the expeditiousness affected as she can make a new request for confirmation under article 61(8) of the Statute, should the charges not be confirmed on the basis of an incorrect evaluation of the evidence. She indicates that “[b]earing in mind the importance of this case, [she] will take this option into consideration”.<sup>25</sup>

15. Lastly, in the view of the Prosecutor an immediate decision by the Appeals Chamber would materially advance the proceedings as it will “ensure correct assessment by the Chamber of evidence” that has or may be presented.<sup>26</sup> In relation to the ruling of the Appeals Chamber regarding the completeness of investigations at the pre-trial stage, the Prosecutor advances that this ruling has been interpreted differently by two judges at the Court and seeks therefore an “authoritative definition” of the Appeals Chamber so as to ensure that these and other proceedings “continue on a solid basis” and with clarity and legal certainty.<sup>27</sup>

Arguments by the OPCV

16. On behalf of the victims, the OPCV requests the Chamber to grant leave to appeal the Adjournment Decision in relation to the First Issue.<sup>28</sup> It endorses the relevant arguments of the Prosecutor and proposes the following reformulation in two inter-related sub-issues: (i) “whether the Majority erred in law in finding that for the purpose of the confirmation of charges the Prosecutor must ‘present all her evidence’ and ‘her strongest possible case based on a largely complete[d] investigation’”;<sup>29</sup> and (ii) “whether the Majority erred in law in requesting the Prosecut[or] to present, for the limited purpose of the confirmation of charges, specific types of evidence in addition to the ones explicitly referred to in article 61(5) of the [Statute]”.<sup>30</sup>

17. Essentially, the OPCV argues that the Adjournment Decision “places on the Prosecut[or] a burden of proof which goes beyond the very limited scope of the confirmation of charges hearing” and affects the fairness of the proceedings vis-à-vis the Prosecutor.<sup>31</sup> Further, it is alleged that requiring the Prosecutor to present evidence beyond the threshold required will “inevitably have a significant impact on the expeditiousness of the proceedings and may endanger the safety and well-being of witnesses or other persons”.<sup>32</sup>

Arguments by the Defence

18. The Defence requests the Chamber to reject the Prosecutor’s Application in relation to the First Issue as she failed to identify with clarity an appealable issue.<sup>33</sup> In particular in relation to the First Issue, the Defence avers that the Prosecutor does not explain in detail on which legal or factual error the Chamber based its erroneous interpretation of the evidentiary threshold.<sup>34</sup> Rather, it is suggested, the Prosecutor is simply in disagreement with the Chamber.<sup>35</sup>

Conclusions by the Chamber

19. For the reasons set out below, the Chamber finds that the First Issue presented by the Prosecutor is not formulated with sufficient clarity and does not arise from the Adjournment Decision as currently framed.

20. The Chamber's understanding of the applicable evidentiary threshold at the confirmation stage is set out in paragraphs 17 and 18 of the Adjournment Decision, under the heading 'Evidentiary Threshold', which reads:

17. It is recalled that the drafters of the Statute established progressively higher evidentiary thresholds applicable in the course of the different stages of the proceedings. The evidentiary threshold of "substantial grounds to believe" required for the confirmation of charges is higher than the threshold required for the issuance of a warrant of arrest ("reasonable grounds to believe") but lower than the threshold required for the conviction of an accused ("beyond reasonable doubt"). With a view to giving concrete meaning to the term "substantial grounds", Pre-Trial Chamber I emphasized that "[a]fter an exacting scrutiny of all the evidence, the Chamber will determine whether it is thoroughly satisfied that the [Prosecutor's] allegations are sufficiently strong to commit [the person] to trial" (emphasis added). Pre-Trial Chamber II understood the term "substantial" to mean "significant", "solid", "material", "well built", "real" rather than "imaginary". Pre-Trial Chambers have consistently held that to meet the evidentiary burden of "substantial grounds to believe", the Prosecutor must "offer concrete and tangible proof demonstrating a clear line of reasoning underpinning [the] specific allegations".

18. The higher evidentiary threshold at this juncture of the proceedings accords with the gatekeeper function of the Pre-Trial Chamber according to which (i) only those cases proceed to trial for which the Prosecutor has presented sufficiently compelling evidence going beyond mere theory or suspicion; (ii) the suspect is protected against wrongful prosecution; (iii) and judicial economy is ensured by distinguishing between cases that should go to trial and those that should not.<sup>36</sup>

21. The Prosecutor does not explain which part of the above reasoning she challenges. No argument is put forward as to how the Adjournment Decision is supposed to have modified the interpretation of the evidentiary threshold or how the application of the evidentiary threshold is allegedly “more stringent”. As the Prosecutor herself acknowledges, the Chamber has “correctly spelled out the relevant evidentiary threshold”<sup>37</sup> and no factual or legal error has been identified by the Prosecutor in this regard, either in the definition of the First Issue or in the accompanying paragraphs.

22. Instead, the Prosecutor selectively picks elements from the Chamber’s reasoning in other sections of the Adjournment Decision, which do not deal with the evidentiary standard. In particular, the Prosecutor appears to argue that the Adjournment Decision misapplied the evidentiary standard by (a) requiring the Prosecutor to have largely completed her investigation, (b) requiring the Prosecutor to present all her evidence and (c) forcing the Prosecutor to call many live witnesses in order to present her “best evidence”. However, the Prosecutor does not explain how these issues are related to the evidentiary standard. In fact, the points raised by the Prosecutor all seem to stem from a misreading of the Adjournment Decision and a failure to distinguish the question of how to define the standard of proof from the question of how the Prosecutor can be expected to meet this standard.

23. Moreover, none of these issues arise from the Adjournment Decision.

24. First, the Majority stated quite clearly in paragraph 25 of the Adjournment Decision that “the Chamber must assume that the Prosecutor has presented her strongest possible case based on a largely completed investigation.”<sup>38</sup> The Majority thereby merely indicated that, if it considered that the evidence presented at confirmation did not meet the evidentiary standard of article 61(7) of the Statute, it would not be able to confirm the charges on the basis of assumptions that the Prosecutor might have additional/better evidence in her possession or might be able to collect such evidence post-confirmation. In other words, the Adjournment Decision does not make it a legal requirement for the Prosecutor to have completed her investigation or to present all her evidence at confirmation. However, the Prosecutor cannot invoke the fact that she has not completed her investigation and the possibility that further evidence may be found post-confirmation to justify presenting insufficient evidence at the confirmation hearing.

25. Second, the Prosecutor completely misstates the Adjournment Decision when she argues that it forces her to present all her best evidence and that she must therefore call many live witnesses. As the Prosecutor did not even explain how she comes to this conclusion, the Chamber will not address it any further.

26. As this Chamber previously held: "If an appealable issue is not clearly identified, the Chamber will simply be unable to carry out an assessment under article 82(1)(d) of the Statute as to whether the issue, if wrongly decided, may have implications on the fairness and expeditiousness of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial."<sup>39</sup> It was incumbent on the Prosecutor to clearly identify the First Issue. Shortcomings such as those identified above by the Chamber in the presentation of the issue cannot be remedied by the Chamber. In the present circumstances, the Chamber is therefore unable to proceed with the assessment under article 82(1)(d) of the Statute and thus unable to grant leave to appeal with respect to the First issue.

b) The Second Issue

27. The Prosecutor requests leave to appeal the Adjournment Decision on the following issue: "Whether in this case each 'incident underlying the contextual elements' must be established to the standard of proof enshrined in article 61(7) ("Second Issue").<sup>40</sup>

Arguments by the Prosecutor

28. The Prosecutor takes issue with the Majority's ruling requesting her to "consider providing, to the extent possible, further evidence or conducting further investigation 'for each of the incidents allegedly constituting the attack against the 'pro-Ouattara civilian population'".<sup>41</sup> More specifically, she contends that the forty-one incidents referred to in the Document Containing the Charges (the "DCC") are only "subsidiary facts" establishing the existence of an "attack" within the meaning of article 7 of the Statute but do not form part of the "charges" as set out in sections H and I of the DCC. She also suggests that these incidents are "evidence" offered for the existence of the attack and are not "material facts for the purpose of the charges".<sup>42</sup> As a corollary, she contests that those incidents must be established to the requisite threshold applicable at this stage and argues instead for a cumulative assessment of the evidence related to the incidents "without the need to enter findings on whether each of them has been established".<sup>43</sup> Finally, the Prosecutor also raises the question whether the term "incident" can be equated with the term "acts" within the meaning of article 7(2)(a) of the Statute and "whether this has an impact on the applicable standard of proof to those incidents".<sup>44</sup>

29. With regard to whether the Second Issue significantly affects the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings and an immediate resolution of the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings reference is made to paragraphs 13 to 15 above in which the Prosecutor's arguments are summarized.

Arguments by the OPCV

30. On behalf of the victims, the OPCV requests the Chamber to grant leave to appeal the Adjournment Decision in relation to the Second Issue.<sup>45</sup> It endorses the relevant arguments of the Prosecutor and proposes the following reformulation in three inter-related sub-issues: (i) “whether the Majority erred in law in interpreting the term ‘attack’ under article 7(2)(a) of the [Statute] as encompassing a certain number of ‘incidents’, rather than a course of conduct involving a multiple commission of acts”;<sup>46</sup> (ii) “whether the Majority erred in law in specifically requesting the Prosecutor to present additional evidence to establish that each separate ‘incident’ occurred pursuant to or in furtherance of the ‘policy’ under article 7(2)(a) of the [Statute]”;<sup>47</sup> and (iii) “whether the Majority erred in fact and in law in finding that ‘the individual incidents alleged by the Prosecutor in support of her allegation that there was an [attack] are part of the facts and circumstances for the purpose of article 74(2) of the Statute and therefore must be proved to the requisite threshold of ‘substantial grounds to believe’”<sup>48</sup>.

31. In relation to the first sub-issue, the OPCV essentially argues that the “attack” within the meaning of article 7(2)(a) of the Statute is a course of conduct and does not necessitate the examination of separate acts/incidents.<sup>49</sup> With regard to the second sub-issue the OPCV purports that requiring the Prosecutor to present additional evidence to establish that each separate ‘incident’ occurred would be “burdensome, not relevant and simply unnecessary”.<sup>50</sup> In support of the third sub-issue, the OPCV agrees with the Prosecutor that the forty-one incidents are “subsidiary facts and do not relate to ‘facts and circumstances’ forming the charges set out in sections H and I of the DCC”.<sup>51</sup> The OPCV reiterates that requiring the Prosecutor to present evidence on the incidents will “increase the risk” to the safety and well-being of witnesses “thereby affecting the fairness of the proceedings”.<sup>52</sup>

Arguments by the Defence

32. The Defence requests the Chamber to reject the Prosecutor’s Application in relation to the Second Issue as she failed to identify with clarity an appealable issue.<sup>53</sup> In particular, it maintains that the Prosecutor does not explain in detail on which factual or legal error the Chamber based its legal argumentation.<sup>54</sup> In relation to the distinction made between “material” and “subsidiary” facts, the Defence contends that such a distinction is not made in the French version of the DCC.<sup>55</sup> It argues that the Chamber was not satisfied with the manner in which the charges had been presented and that the Prosecutor is simply in disagreement with the Majority’s position.<sup>56</sup>

Conclusions by the Chamber

33. For the reasons set out below, the Chamber finds that the Second Issue is an appealable issue which satisfies the criteria of article 82(1)(d) of the Statute, subject to the modifications as set out hereunder.

34. In the Adjournment Decision the Chamber sets out its approach with regard to the examination of the contextual elements of crimes against humanity, in particular the existence of an “attack” within the meaning of article 7(2)(a) of the Statute. This approach has been adopted in response to the Prosecutor’s allegation that a series of incidents constitute the attack. These incidents were part of the DCC and mentioned one by one during the confirmation hearing. The relevant part in the Adjournment Decision reads:

21. For example, the individual incidents alleged by the Prosecutor in support of her allegation that there was an “attack directed against any civilian population” are part of the facts and circumstances for the purposes of article 74(2) of the Statute and therefore must be proved to the requisite threshold of “substantial grounds to believe”. This is especially so in this case in which the Prosecutor identifies particular incidents that constitute the attack against the civilian population. In other words, the incidents are “facts” which “support the [contextual] legal elements of the crime charged”.

22. Taking into consideration that contextual elements form part of the substantive merits of the case, the Chamber sees no reason to apply a more lenient standard in relation to the incidents purportedly constituting the contextual element of an “attack” for the purposes of establishing the existence of crimes against humanity than the standard applied in relation to other alleged facts and circumstances in the case. Accordingly, each incident underlying the contextual elements must be proved to the same threshold that is applicable to all other facts. This is not to say that there is no difference between crimes that underlie a suspect's individual criminal responsibility and crimes being committed as part of incidents which only establish the relevant context. The crimes which are alleged to prove the suspect's individual criminal responsibility must be linked to the suspect personally, whereas incidents proving the contextual circumstances do not require such an individualised link. As such, the former set of crimes will inevitably need to be proven in greater detail than the latter. Indeed, in order to be considered relevant as proof of the contextual elements, the information needed may be less specific than what is needed for the crimes charged but is still required to be sufficiently probative and specific so as to support the existence of an “attack” against a civilian population. The information needed must include, for example, details such as the identity of the perpetrators, or at least information as to the group they belonged to, as well as the identity of the victims, or at least information as to their real or perceived political, ethnic, religious or national allegiance(s).

23. When alleging the existence of an “attack directed against any civilian population” by way of describing a series of incidents, the Prosecutor must establish to the requisite threshold that a sufficient number of incidents relevant to the establishment of the alleged “attack” took place. This is all the more so in case none of the incidents, taken on their own, could establish the existence of such an “attack”.<sup>57</sup>

35. The Prosecutor challenges the Chamber’s finding that the incidents are part of the “facts and circumstances” of the case and contests that the incidents must be established to the requisite threshold applicable at this stage. Rather, in the view of the Prosecutor, those incidents are “evidence offered to establish the existence of the attack and not material facts for the purpose of the charges”.<sup>58</sup> To the extent that the Prosecutor argues that the Majority erred in holding that only incidents that have been proved with sufficient evidence can be taken into consideration in the Chamber’s determination whether the overall attack has been established, the Chamber agrees that this issue stems from the Adjournment Decision.

36. However, the way in which the Prosecutor has framed the issue misstates the Adjournment Decision, as the decision does not state that each of the 41 alleged incidents must be proved to the requisite standard but only that a sufficient number of those incidents must be so proved.<sup>59</sup> Therefore, with a view to receiving meaningful guidance by the Appeals Chamber, the Chamber is of the view that it must be reformulated as follows:

Whether the Pre-Trial Chamber erred in holding that, when the Prosecutor alleges that an “attack against any civilian population” consists of multiple smaller incidents, none of which alone rises to the level of the minimum requirements of article 7 of the Statute and which allegedly took place at different times and places, a sufficient number of these incidents must be proved to the requisite standard, meaning that each of these incidents must be supported with sufficient evidence before the Chamber can take them into consideration to determine whether those incidents, taken together, indicate that there are substantial grounds to believe that an ‘attack’ took place.

37. The Chamber notes, in this regard, that the answer to this question does not depend on whether the incidents are considered as being part of the ‘facts and circumstances’ of the charges or whether they are categorised as ‘subsidiary facts’. The real question is whether the Chamber can expect the Prosecutor to back up her allegations with sufficient evidence, or whether it is permissible for her to make factual allegations without sufficient evidence and still propose them as a basis for drawing inferences about the charges.

38. The Chamber finds that this issue has the potential to significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings as well as the outcome of the trial. The manner in which the contextual elements are assessed in this particular case constitutes an issue which affects “in a material way”<sup>60</sup> the Prosecutor’s ability to prove her allegations and may have an impact on how she conducts her investigations. The issue may therefore affect the expeditious conduct of the proceedings as the length of the pre-confirmation investigation may be influenced by it. The issue has also obvious implications for the outcome of the trial, as it requires the Prosecutor to prove certain allegations, which, if she fails to do so, may be fatal to the charges.

39. In the opinion of the Chamber an immediate resolution of the Appeals Chamber will materially advance the proceedings. Authoritative and substantial guidance by the Appeals Chamber on the manner in which the contextual elements of crimes against humanity are to be assessed in this particular case will “map a course of action along the right lines”<sup>61</sup> and will assist the Chamber in its future article 61(7) decision, thereby safeguarding the integrity of the proceedings. If incorrect, the Second Issue contained in the Adjournment Decision, unless soon remedied by the Appeals Chamber, will be a “setback to the proceedings”<sup>62</sup> which have commenced already since 5 December 2011 with the suspect’s initial appearance. Mindful of the time schedule of this case, the Chamber is of the view that “a prompt reference of the issue to the court of appeal” is necessary.<sup>63</sup>

c) The Third Issue

40. The last issue for which the Prosecutor requests leave to appeal the Adjournment Decision is formulated as follows: “Whether the Pre-Trial Chamber has the power to order the Prosecut[or] to amend the [DCC] by including additional facts (“Third Issue”).<sup>64</sup>

Arguments by the Prosecutor

41. In relation to this issue, the Prosecutor essentially maintains that the Majority instructed the Prosecutor to amend the DCC by including additional facts “which are not currently part of the case”.<sup>65</sup> She questions whether the Chamber is authorized to “shape the factual allegations of the charges or to request the Prosecutor to reframe the charges in order to adapt them to the Chamber’s understanding of the case”.<sup>66</sup>

42. It is further alleged that this issue significantly affects the fairness of the proceedings. The issue purportedly relates to the distribution of powers between the Prosecutor and the Pre-Trial Chamber and their respective independence. Disrespecting this distribution, proceedings would be unfair “first and foremost in relation to the Prosecutor”, who is “affected in the exercise of [her] statutory powers” and her “ability to investigate and present what she believes is the case that can be properly established before the Chambers of the Court”.<sup>67</sup> More specifically, the Prosecutor contends that if the Chamber “involves itself in shaping the facts of the charges, this will unavoidably impact” on the Prosecutor’s case development, investigation and protection plans, litigation strategy, logistical and financial planning.<sup>68</sup>

43. In the opinion of the Prosecutor, this issue also affects the expeditious conduct of the proceedings. Expanding the factual scope of the charges allegedly has direct consequences for the parties’ presentation of evidence, investigation, protection of witnesses and may result in additional litigation. In particular, the Defence may feel prejudiced by the inclusion of additional facts included “at the initiative of the Chamber”.<sup>69</sup> Moreover, the issue also affects the length of the trial in which those additional facts, if confirmed, would need to be proven beyond reasonable doubt.<sup>70</sup> Further, the Prosecutor purports that undoubtedly this aspect of the judgment pursuant to article 74 of the Statute would be appealed.<sup>71</sup>

44. The Prosecutor also advances that the issue affects the outcome of the trial as this aspect of the Adjournment Decision forces her “to bring before the Trial Chamber a significantly extended case”.<sup>72</sup> Lastly, she maintains that an immediate resolution of the Appeals Chamber will materially advance the proceedings as the “authoritative determination of the Appeals Chamber” will help the proceedings “move forward” “along the right lines”.<sup>73</sup>

Arguments by the OPCV

45. The OPCV requests the Chamber to grant leave to appeal the Adjournment Decision in relation to the Third Issue.<sup>74</sup> It endorses the relevant arguments of the Prosecutor and proposes the following reformulation in two inter-related sub-issues: (i) “whether the Majority exceeded the mandate vested with a Pre-Trial Chamber in shaping the factual allegations of the charges and in requesting the Prosecutor to reframe the charges in order to adapt them to its understanding of the case”;<sup>75</sup> and (ii) “whether the Majority erred in law in requesting the Prosecutor to submit a new ‘Amended DCC setting out in detail and with precision the facts of the case, including all incidents forming the contextual elements of crimes against humanity”<sup>76</sup>.

46. In relation to the first sub-issue, the OPCV’s main argument is that it is for the Prosecutor to select the facts of the charges and not the Chamber.<sup>77</sup> As regards the second sub-issue, the OPCV alleges that requesting the Prosecutor to present a new amended DCC, setting out in detail the factual allegations, “would be burdensome, and not relevant and/or ultra vires”.<sup>78</sup>

Arguments by the Defence

47. The Defence requests the Chamber to reject the Prosecutor’s Application in relation to the Third Issue as she failed to identify with clarity an appealable issue.<sup>79</sup> In particular, the Defence maintains that the Third Issue is formulated even vaguer than the abovementioned two issues.<sup>80</sup> First, it argues that the issue is a result of a misinterpretation of the Majority’s decision. Contrary to what the Prosecutor alleges, the Chamber did not request that the charges be reformulated but rather that indispensable facts be furnished so as to support the case as presented by the Prosecutor herself.<sup>81</sup> Consequently, the issue as formulated by the Prosecutor does not arise from the Adjournment Decision and must therefore be rejected.<sup>82</sup> Secondly, the Defence argues that the Prosecutor does not explain why the Chamber’s request to modify the DCC or provide further supplementary information would be contrary to the statutory documents.<sup>83</sup>

Conclusions by the Chamber

48. For the reasons set out below, the Chamber finds that the Third Issue presented by the Prosecutor does not arise from the Adjournment Decision but rests on a misinterpretation of the Chamber's ruling.

49. After having set out its reasons for invoking article 61(7)(c)(i) of the Statute and having considered the impact on the rights of the Defence, the Chamber presented the roadmap for the procedure to come. The Adjournment Decision reads in the relevant part:

44. For these reasons, the Chamber, by majority, decides to adjourn this hearing pursuant to article 61(7)(c)(i) of the Statute. Accordingly, the Chamber requests the Prosecutor to consider providing, to the extent possible, further evidence or conducting further investigation with respect to the following issues:

45. With a view to informing the Defence in detail of the content of the charges, the Chamber considers it appropriate that the Prosecutor submit a new Amended DCC setting out in detail and with precision the facts of the case, including all incidents forming the contextual elements of crimes against humanity. Together with the Amended DCC, the Prosecutor is instructed to submit a new list of evidence setting out the entirety of the evidence on which she intends to rely for the purposes of the confirmation of charges and an updated consolidated Elements Based Chart covering the entirety of the charges. In this context, the Chamber makes reference to its "Decision establishing a disclosure system and a calendar for disclosure" which specifies the details of the system of disclosure, the procedure related to the requests for redactions and protective measures, and the registration procedure. With a view to expediting the proceedings, the Chamber wishes to add that the evidence must be made available to the Chamber the moment it is disclosed between the parties. In this context, the Chamber puts special emphasis on the necessity that the Prosecutor comply with her disclosure obligations without waiting for the deadlines to expire.

46. The Defence will have the right to object to the charges, challenge the new evidence presented by the Prosecutor and present new evidence in response to the further evidence submitted by the Prosecutor.<sup>84</sup>

50. It is clear from these paragraphs, when read in the context of the rest of the Adjournment Decision, that the Chamber did not order the Prosecutor to amend the DCC by including additional facts. First, the Chamber requested the Prosecutor "to consider providing further evidence or conducting further investigation with respect to all charges”.<sup>85</sup> Whether or not she makes use of this option remains thus fully within the Prosecutor’s discretion. In fact, the Prosecutor may request at any time that the hearing be resumed in case she decides to not conduct further investigations and/or she is ready to present the evidence she deems sufficient to support the charges. The Prosecutor is also free to decline the Chamber’s invitation to consider presenting further evidence. This is clear from the discretionary wording of article 61(7)(c)(i) of the Statute and the relevant parts of the Adjournment Decision.

51. The submission of a new amended DCC prior to the hearing is ordered in order to ensure that the Defence is informed fully and in detail of the content of the charges. To avoid any ambiguity in this regard, the Chamber has instructed the Prosecutor to set out her charges “in detail and with precision”.<sup>86</sup> This instruction relates to the form of the charges and not to their content. Therefore, in contrast to what the Prosecutor alleges, the Chamber does not interfere with the Prosecutor’s selection of facts to be included in the DCC. The Chamber’s instructions regarding specificity are merely intended to ensure the rights of the Defence in this regard. The Chamber therefore does not interfere with the Prosecutor’s independence in her selection “of which facts to charge”, much less order her to include “additional facts”.<sup>87</sup> All the Adjournment Decision requires is that, if the Prosecutor decides to continue relying on all or some of the 45 incidents which allegedly constitute the ‘attack’, the new Amended DCC must provide sufficient detail and precision about each of them.

52. As the Third Issue does not arise from the Adjournment Decision, the Chamber is unable to proceed with the assessment under article 82(1)(d) of the Statute. The Chamber is thus unable to grant leave to appeal the Third Issue.

2. The Application by the Defence

53. The Defence seeks the Chamber's leave to appeal the Adjournment Decision and puts forth the following question: "l'utilisation en l'espèce de l'article 61(7)(c)(i) par la Chambre préliminaire conduit-elle à une violation des droits de la défense ?". ("the Issue")<sup>88</sup>

Arguments by the Defence

54. The Defence maintains that the Adjournment Decision goes beyond a simple adjournment, because the Chamber asked the Prosecutor to recommence her investigations and to present her case structured in a different manner.<sup>89</sup> The Defence also argues that the calendar set by the Chamber does not conform to the right of the suspect to be tried without undue delay. It recalls that Laurent Gbagbo ("Mr Gbagbo") was arrested on 11 April 2011 and that his detention will be prolonged for an additional year on account of the Prosecutor's failure to conduct a genuine investigation.<sup>90</sup> The Defence contends that, mindful of, inter alia, the rights of the Defence, the Chamber should have rejected the charges and released Mr Gbagbo from detention.<sup>91</sup>

55. More specifically, the Defence defines two errors allegedly committed by the Chamber when invoking article 61(7)(c)(i) of the Statute<sup>92</sup> which are summarized below.

56. In the first place, the Defence maintains that the Chamber erred both in terms of law and fact "dans l'évaluation du comportement du Procureur".<sup>93</sup> The Defence takes issue with the Chamber's statement that the past jurisprudence of the Court may have appeared more forgiving. In particular, the Defence maintains that the Adjournment Decision actually rests upon two factors, namely the absence of genuine investigation and the lack of probative evidence in support of the case.<sup>94</sup> In light of this, it is alleged that the Chamber erred twice; first by incorrectly allowing the Prosecutor to recommence the investigation at the expense of the rights of Mr Gbagbo,<sup>95</sup> which, according to the Defence, constitutes an error of law.<sup>96</sup> Second, by committing an error of fact in assuming that the Prosecutor could not anticipate from past jurisprudence the Chamber's disposition towards evidence which was not of sufficient probative value.<sup>97</sup> To the contrary, it is argued that the Prosecutor was aware of the Court's decisions concerning evidentiary issues, such as reports of non-governmental organizations containing statements of anonymous witnesses, hearsay evidence and press articles.<sup>98</sup>

57. In the second place, the Defence maintains that the Chamber erred both in terms of law and fact "dans la détermination des critères pertinents à l'évaluation d'un 'délai raisonnable' qui ne porterait pas atteinte aux droits de la défense".<sup>99</sup> It is alleged that in considering the gravity of the crimes, the Chamber did not duly take into account the right of the suspect to be tried without undue delay.<sup>100</sup> In particular, the Chamber allegedly failed to define "gravity" in the particular circumstances of the case, as all crimes subject to the jurisdiction of the Court must be considered as grave.<sup>101</sup> This interpretation implies, in the opinion of the Defence, that no extension of the proceedings could ever constitute an infringement of the rights of the Defence.<sup>102</sup> The Defence also alleges the Chamber should have clarified the criteria applied when differentiating between this case and other cases in which the charges were rejected without asking the Prosecutor for more information.<sup>103</sup>

58. Further, the Defence alleges that the Chamber erroneously took into account (i) the issue of Mr Gbagbo's fitness to take part in the proceedings while not considering the failures of the Prosecutor;<sup>104</sup> and (ii) the complexity of the case without providing any further specification,<sup>105</sup> an argument which had been purportedly rejected by the Prosecutor earlier on a different issue.<sup>106</sup>

59. The Defence also considers the Adjournment Decision to be in contradiction to the stated purpose of the confirmation proceedings, which is to protect suspects against unfounded allegations.<sup>107</sup> The Defence emphasises that the pre-trial phase should be more limited, in terms of time, than other phases of the proceedings.<sup>108</sup>

60. The Defence stresses that the invocation of article 61(7)(c)(i) of the Statute must not infringe the right of the suspect to be tried without undue delay.<sup>109</sup> While accepting that, exceptionally, clarifications may be requested from the Prosecutor on specific issues, it is of the view that the Chamber should have rejected the charges in the present circumstances as the Chamber's request concerns the entirety of evidence.<sup>110</sup>

61. According to the Defence the Issue significantly affects both the fairness of the proceedings, as the right of the suspect to be tried without undue delay is a constitutive element of fair trial<sup>111</sup>, as well as the outcome of the trial.<sup>112</sup> In addition, the Defence argues that an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber will materially advance the proceedings,<sup>113</sup> also for reasons of judicial economy.<sup>114</sup> Lastly, the Defence contends to be prejudiced by the Adjournment Decision at this stage, the legality of which it will not be able to appeal in the context of the confirmation of charges decision.<sup>115</sup>

Arguments by the Prosecutor

62. In response, the Prosecutor contends that the Defence “has failed to identify a ‘concrete or specific issue’” and that the Issue, as presented by the Defence, does not arise from the Adjournment Decision.<sup>116</sup> More specifically, the Prosecutor argues that the Defence only makes generic reference to the defence rights and does not identify which aspect of the use of article 61(7)(c)(i) of the Statute it takes issue with.<sup>117</sup> In fact, the Defence attempts to “re-litigat[e] the entire [Adjournment] Decision before the Appeals Chamber”.<sup>118</sup>

63. In relation to certain Defence arguments raised under the first sub-issue, namely the Prosecutor’s alleged investigative failures and lack of knowledge of the law, the Prosecutor avers that those errors are not linked to the Issue and presented without any reference to the specific Defence right infringed.<sup>119</sup> As regards the purported findings by the Chamber relating to the Prosecutor’s failures, she contends that no such finding was made by the Chamber.<sup>120</sup> In relation to certain Defence arguments raised under the second sub-issue, namely the alleged infringement of the Defence right to be tried without undue delay, the Prosecutor argues that this is merely a disagreement by the Defence with the findings of the Chamber which “does not create an appealable issue”.<sup>121</sup> In this context, it is also argued that the Adjournment Decision did not contain any finding as regards the continued detention of Mr Gbagbo.<sup>122</sup> Finally, the Prosecutor alleges that appellate review of the issues presented by the Defence “would be premature” at this stage.<sup>123</sup>

64. In the view of the Prosecutor, the Issue does not satisfy the requirements of article 81(2)(d) of the Statute.<sup>124</sup> In particular, the Defence argument that the Adjournment Decision caused undue delay, which consequently affects the fairness of the proceedings, in the view of the Prosecutor cannot be sustained as any article 61(7)(c)(i) decision will “by definition, feature a period of delay for the purposes of presenting or locating more evidence”.<sup>125</sup> In addition, the Prosecutor avers that the Defence has not demonstrated that the Issue significantly affects the fair conduct of the proceedings.<sup>126</sup> Lastly, the Prosecutor recalls that some of the delay “occasioned by the [Adjournment] Decision” is to ensure that the Defence can exercise its rights under article 61(6) of the Statute.<sup>127</sup>

65. The Prosecutor also asserts that the Issue does not significantly affect the outcome of the trial as the arguments advanced by the Defence in this respect are “entirely speculative”. Rather, it is suggested that the “matter can be litigated with greater clarity (...) once a decision on the confirmation of charges is made”.<sup>128</sup> Essentially, the same line of reasoning is advanced in relation to the Defence allegation that an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber would materially advance the proceedings.<sup>129</sup>

Arguments by the OPCV

66. The OPCV alleges, in essence, that the Defence presents disparate arguments in relation to points of law but presents no issue that arises from the Adjournment Decision. Rather, it is suggested that the Defence merely disagrees with the Chamber's choice to resort to a decision under article 61(7)(c)(i) of the Statute rather than rejecting the charges.<sup>130</sup> Further, the Issue as presented by the Defence does not significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings and the Defence has not demonstrated that an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber would materially advance the proceedings.<sup>131</sup> The OPCV also comments on the Defence's past conduct during the proceedings and maintains that it cannot allege any infringement of the suspect to be tried without undue delay as its past conduct has affected the fairness, integrity and expeditiousness of the proceedings.<sup>132</sup>

Conclusions by the Chamber

67. The Defence has framed the Issue as a single question of principle. However, the Issue is formulated in an exceedingly broad manner (i.e. "whether the application of article 61(7)(c)(i) by the Pre-Trial Chamber leads to a violation of the rights of the Defence"), making it seem more like a general disagreement with the way in which the Chamber exercised its discretion under article 61(7) than a proper appealable issue. The Chamber notes, in this regard that, although the Defence advances a number of points of criticism of the Adjournment Decision, it does not allege that the Chamber abused its discretion as a result of these purported errors.

In the absence of a clear allegation to that effect, the Chamber is unable to certify the Issue as one of alleged abuse of discretion. Under these circumstances, the Issue must indeed be considered as a mere disagreement with the Adjournment Decision, for which no leave to appeal can be granted as per the jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber.<sup>133</sup>

68. Moreover, the Issue and the underlying criticisms are to a large extent based on the erroneous premise that the Majority made a finding that the Prosecutor has totally and completely failed in her investigation and the presentation of her case.<sup>134</sup> In fact, the Chamber has not yet expressed itself in this regard. To the extent that the Issue is based upon this mistaken interpretation, it therefore does not arise from the Adjournment Decision.

69. With regard to the Defence's arguments concerning the alleged infringement by the Adjournment Decision of the suspect's right to be tried without undue delay, the Chamber considers that they amount to little more than criticisms of the Chamber's reasoning, without however clearly identifying any specific factual or legal errors that could be certified for appeal. Again, the Defence seems to have taken issue with the way in which the Chamber exercised its discretion, which it indisputably has under article 61(7) of the Statute, without clearly explaining how the Majority is alleged to have abused this discretion.

70. The Chamber reiterates, in this regard, that it is incumbent on the parties to identify the issue(s) they wish to appeal clearly and unambiguously.<sup>135</sup> It is not the Chamber's duty to decompose broadly formulated issues in order to identify potential issues for certification.

Dissenting opinion of Judge Silvia Fernández de Gurmendi

1. I am unable to join the Majority in its “Decision on the Prosecutor’s and Defence requests for leave to appeal the decision adjourning the hearing on the confirmation of charges” (the “Decision”).

2. My colleagues have decided to grant the Prosecutor’s application only in relation to one of the issues, as reformulated by them, and to reject the remainder of the Prosecutor’s Application as well as the entire Defence Application, on the basis that the parties have not identified appealable issues arising out of the Adjournment Decision.<sup>1</sup>

3. I disagree with the reasons provided by the Majority, the reformulation of the Second Issue presented by the Prosecutor, as well as with the rejection of the remaining parts of the Applications. I believe the Decision is not based on an objective application of article 82(1)(d) of the Statute but rather on a selective reading and misrepresentation of the submissions of the parties and participants, as well as of the impugned “Decision adjourning the hearing on the confirmation of charges pursuant to article 61(7)(c)(i) of the Rome Statute” (the “Adjournment Decision” or the “impugned Decision”).<sup>2</sup> For the reasons developed below and contrary to the Majority, I believe that both parties have indeed identified “issues” which arise from the Adjournment Decision and meet the other requirements of article 82(1)(d) of the Statute.

I. Interlocutory appeals under article 82(1)(d) of the Statute

4. In accordance with article 82(1)(d) of the Statute, a party may appeal “a decision that involves an issue that would significantly affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings or the outcome of the trial, and for which, in the opinion of the Pre-Trial or Trial Chamber, an immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber may materially advance the proceedings.” As recalled by the Majority, an “issue” is an identifiable subject or topic the resolution of which is essential for the determination of matters arising in the judicial cause under examination.<sup>3</sup> The issue must emanate from the relevant decision itself and cannot represent a hypothetical concern or an abstract legal question.<sup>4</sup> The Majority also recalled that the requirements of this statutory provision are cumulative, such that a failure to demonstrate the fulfilment of one of the requirements relieves the Chamber from analysing the others.<sup>5</sup> Except for the Second Issue raised by the Prosecutor, the Majority considers that no other issues arising from the Adjournment Decision have been properly identified by the parties and, as a result, does not proceed to analyse the other conditions set forth in article 82(1)(d) of the Statute.

5. At the outset, I wish to emphasise that the provisions of article 82(1)(d) of the Statute define the requirements to which not only the parties but also the Chambers must adhere. In light of the nature of these requirements, it can be said that the Chambers are accorded a large margin of appreciation, but they have not been entrusted with an unfettered discretion to decide whether or not to grant an appeal. A decision under article 82(1)(d) of the Statute is not a policy decision but a legal one that needs to be taken on the basis of an impartial and objective assessment of whether the issues raised meet the requirements of the Statute.

6. Therefore, and taking into account that the Chamber concerned will be dealing with a challenge to its own product, it is essential that it makes, and is seen to be making, an impartial and objective assessment of whether the issues proposed for appeal by the parties meet the criteria set forth in the Statute. In particular, the determination of an “issue” within the meaning of article 82(1)(d) of the Statute appears to require a rather simple and straightforward assessment by the Chamber of whether the question identified by the party arises from what is actually said in the impugned decision, and not from what the judges explain afterwards that they intended to say. Indeed, the certification of an appeal is merely procedural and should not be used by the Chamber to restate its position, clarify the impugned decision or supplement the legal reasoning contained therein. Unfortunately, in my view, this is precisely what has been done by my colleagues in the Decision at hand.

7. In particular, the Majority repeatedly argues that the impugned Decision is misstated or misunderstood and reaches conclusions on the basis of its own alternative interpretation, even when that interpretation goes against a plain reading of the text and contradicts the divergent interpretations of the parties and participants. It might well be that nobody understood the Adjournment Decision, except for the Judges that issued it. However, if that is the case, it is questionable whether such a decision can provide useful guidance in the proceedings to come. The uncertainty generated by the divergent interpretations of the text can only be resolved at this stage by an authoritative and immediate resolution by the Appeals Chamber of the issues identified by the parties in their Applications. The efforts of my colleagues to clarify what they themselves meant in the Adjournment Decision fail to dispel the concerns expressed by the parties, and serve only to compound the uncertainty over what is expected of them in these proceedings.

8. Clarifications provided by a Chamber ex post are not a valid legal substitute for what has already been decided by the Chamber. The Appeals Chamber has disapproved of the issuance of clarifications by a Trial Chamber and has stated generally that clarifications subsequently issued by Chambers to previous decisions are “of questionable legality and are undesirable, because they affect the finality of judicial decisions”.<sup>6</sup> What was considered reprehensible at the trial phase is certainly also inappropriate at the pre-trial phase.

II. Prosecutor’s Application

A. First Issue: “Whether the Decision correctly interpreted and applied the evidentiary standard under Article 61(7)”

9. I cannot accept the arguments put forward by the Majority and its conclusion that the First Issue presented by the Prosecutor is not formulated with sufficient clarity and does not arise from the Adjournment Decision.<sup>7</sup>

10. The Majority argues that the relevant paragraphs for the determination of the applicable evidentiary threshold are only paragraphs 17 and 18 of the Adjournment Decision, to be found under the heading “Evidentiary threshold”.<sup>8</sup> The Majority observes that these two paragraphs are not challenged by the Prosecutor, who does not identify any factual or legal error in them and focuses instead on other sections of the Decision, “which do not deal with the evidentiary standard” but with matters pertaining to the question of “how the Prosecutor can be expected to meet this standard”.<sup>9</sup> According to the Majority, these are two separate questions, which the Prosecutor fails to distinguish. Furthermore, my colleagues state that the Prosecutor does not explain how the matters she raises are related to the evidentiary standard.<sup>10</sup> Finally, the Majority claims that “[i]n fact, the points raised by the Prosecutor all seem to stem from a misreading of the Adjournment Decision”.<sup>11</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Appeals Chamber, “Judgment on the appeals of Mr Lubanga Dyilo and the Prosecutor against the Decision of Trial Chamber I of 14 July 2009 entitled ‘Decision giving notice to the parties and participants that the legal characterisation of the facts may be subject to change in accordance with Regulation 55(2) of the Regulations of the Court’”, 8 December 2009, ICC-01/04-01-06-2205, para. 92.

11. I regret to say that I am puzzled by the first line of reasoning by which my colleagues separate the law from its application, and then conclude that their interpretation of the law is correct because the relevant paragraphs contained in a particular section of the Adjournment Decision have not been challenged. Since judges are required precisely to interpret the law and apply it to the facts under consideration, it is rather odd that my colleagues fail to see the link between the theoretical enunciation of the evidentiary standard and the quantum and quality of evidence they have indicated they expect to receive from the Prosecutor in order to apply that standard. There is an obvious and inextricable link between the two, since the evidentiary standard set forth by the Statute should constitute the terms of reference that inform what is expected from the Prosecutor. The issue at hand is not whether the Majority has correctly spelled out the terms of reference in some section of the Adjournment Decision but whether what it has indicated it expects to receive is compatible with such terms of reference. That is the issue put to the Chamber, and it does, in my view, arise from the Adjournment Decision.

12. Indeed, in her Application, the Prosecutor recognises that the Adjournment Decision “correctly spells out the relevant evidentiary threshold”<sup>12</sup> – but then goes on to argue that the Adjournment Decision “departs from [prior] jurisprudence when interpreting the law on the standard of proof and applying it to the facts of the case”.<sup>13</sup> This assertion of the Prosecutor is not made in abstract or hypothetical terms but on the basis of specific arguments, which are mostly ignored by the Majority. My colleagues’ findings that “[n]o argument is put forward as to how the Adjournment Decision is supposed to have modified the interpretation of the evidentiary threshold” and that “no factual or legal error has been identified by the Prosecutor”<sup>14</sup> are in my view inaccurate. The Prosecutor’s submissions at paragraphs 5 and 6 of

her Application are sufficiently clear and precise for the purpose of an application for leave to appeal.

13. The Prosecutor is indeed clear as to what she sees as a departure from the evidentiary standard in accordance with existing jurisprudence:

In particular, the Decision requires that at the confirmation of charges stage the Prosecutor: (i) “largely complete her investigation”; (ii) “present all her evidence”; and (iii) “present[...] her strongest possible case”. In addition, the Decision provides a detailed explanation of the Majority’s “general disposition towards certain types of evidence.”<sup>15</sup>

14. The Prosecutor explains further that the First Issue essentially relates to the question of whether the specific findings made in the Adjournment Decision (and rehearsed at paragraphs 4 and 5 of her Application) “can be reconciled with the following established principles: (i) that the evidentiary threshold is different and lower than that for conviction; (ii) that confirmation proceedings have a limited scope and purpose and in particular are not a trial before the trial or a ‘mini trial’: (iii) that the Pre-Trial Chamber’s powers are limited – it exercises a ‘gatekeeper function’, but does not rule on the guilt or innocence of an accused; and (iv) that under Article 61(5), the Prosecution is allowed to rely on documentary or summary evidence and need not call the witnesses expected to testify at trial”.<sup>16</sup>

15. My colleagues do not properly address these submissions. As already indicated, they fail to recognise the link between the description of the law and its purported application by the Chamber and limit themselves to stating that the Prosecutor does not explain how the findings challenged by the Prosecutor are related to the evidentiary standard.<sup>17</sup>

16. In a second line of reasoning, the Majority also states that all points raised by the Prosecutor stem from a misreading of the Adjournment Decision, which the Majority then proceeds to “clarify”.

17. As already indicated, such clarifications are not a permissible substitute for what is indeed said in a decision. Furthermore, the clarification offered by my colleagues cannot be sustained in light of the plain text of the Adjournment Decision. According to the Majority, when it stated at paragraph 25 of the Adjournment Decision that “the Chamber must assume that the Prosecutor has presented her strongest possible case based on a largely completed investigation”,<sup>18</sup> it “merely indicated that, if it considered that the evidence presented at confirmation did not meet the evidentiary standard of article 61(7) of the Statute, it would not be able to confirm the charges on the basis of assumptions that the Prosecutor might have additional/better evidence in her possession or might be able to collect such evidence post-confirmation”.<sup>19</sup> The Majority concludes that, “[i]n other words, the Adjournment Decision does not make it a legal requirement for the Prosecutor to have completed her investigation or to present all her evidence at confirmation”.<sup>20</sup>

18. I welcome the fact that my colleagues now appear to join me in recognising that the completion of the investigation prior to confirmation of charges is not a legal requirement under the Statute.<sup>21</sup> This represents a significant departure from positions previously held by them not only in the Adjournment Decision, but also in other cases before this Court.<sup>22</sup>

<sup>22</sup> This previous position is held by Judge Van Den Wyngaert in the Kenyatta case in Trial Chamber V, The Prosecutor v. Uhuru Muigai Kenyatta, “Decision on defence application pursuant to Article 64(4) and related requests”, ICC-01/09-02/11-728, 26 April 2013, paras 117-128 (See also the “Concurring Separate Opinion by Judge Eboe Osuji” attached to the same decision). In the same vein, Judge Kaul has previously adopted a similar position and expressly held that “it is not only desirable, but necessary that the investigation is complete, if at all possible, at the time of the [confirmation] [h]earing, unless the Prosecutor justifies further investigations after confirmation with compelling reasons” (Dissenting Opinion by Judge Hans-Peter Kaul to Pre-Trial Chamber II, The Prosecutor v. Francis Kirimi Muthaura, Uhuru Muigai Kenyatta and Mohammed Hussein Ali, “Decision on the Confirmation of Charges Pursuant to Article 61(7)(a) and (b) of the Rome Statute”, 23 January 2012, ICC-01/09-02/11-382-Red, para. 57).

19. Unfortunately, no matter how sound this new position might be, the explanation that is now provided cannot be reconciled with a straightforward reading of the Adjournment Decision. In fact, on the basis of such an explanation, several assertions in the Adjournment Decision would become meaningless, including the entirety of paragraph 25, which would serve no other apparent purpose than to reiterate that the Prosecutor needs to present sufficient evidence to meet the relevant standard, something that could have been more efficiently done by simply referring to the Statute.

20. In fact, with the clarification, that paragraph is open to additional questions. If the Chamber does not believe that there is a legal requirement for the Prosecutor to complete her investigation or present all her evidence, what is then the legal basis for it to consider that “[e]ven though article 61(5) of the Statute only requires the Prosecutor to support each charge with “sufficient” evidence at the confirmation hearing, the Chamber must assume that the Prosecutor has presented her strongest possible case based on a largely completed investigation”<sup>23</sup> If there is no obligation on the Prosecutor in this regard, I do not see how the Chamber must or can assume that the Prosecutor has proceeded in such a manner. From article 61(5) of the Statute, the Chamber could actually draw the contrary assumption; that the Prosecutor has not presented all or her strongest evidence since she is explicitly allowed to present only what is sufficient to meet the pre-trial evidentiary standard and to rely on documentary or summary evidence and need not call the witnesses expected to testify at the trial. This assumption would also be consistent with the past practice of Pre-Trial Chambers, including our practice in the present case,<sup>24</sup> which has been to discourage the Prosecutor from presenting live evidence, no matter how strong that evidence might be.

21. Most importantly, with this explanation by the Majority, one of the main justifications for the adjournment of the confirmation of charges hearing disappears, since the adjournment was largely premised on the recognition that the Prosecutor may have proceeded on the basis of previous less stringent jurisprudence. This is clearly stated at paragraph 37 of the Adjournment Decision where “the Chamber notes that past jurisprudence, which predates [two] decisions of the Appeals Chamber may have appeared more forgiving in this regard” and that “[t]herefore, the Prosecutor, in this case, may not have deemed it necessary to present all her evidence or largely complete her investigation”. The Majority was “therefore, out of fairness, prepared to give her a limited amount of additional time to do so.”<sup>25</sup> As the Prosecutor puts it, the decision to adjourn the hearing, far from being frivolous on this point, stems from “the Majority’s belief that recent jurisprudence by the Appeals Chamber has modified the interpretation of the standard of proof under Article 61(7) and requires a more stringent or at least a ‘less forgiving’ approach in its application”.<sup>26</sup> As developed below, the Defence appears to share the understanding that the Majority decided to adjourn the hearing rather than to decline to confirm the charges based on such belief.<sup>27</sup>

22. In light of the above, I cannot accept the clarification offered by my colleagues. The clarification is per se inadmissible in the context of the procedure under article 82(1)(d) of the Statute. In addition, it cannot be sustained by a plain, straightforward reading of the Adjournment Decision.

23. In addition, I do not believe that the explanation provided, even if it were to be accepted, solves all the problems identified in the context of the First Issue.

24. This is in particular the case with the Majority's approach to evidence, which is developed at length in the Adjournment Decision.<sup>28</sup> Without any reasoning, the Majority completely ignores the Prosecutor's submissions in relation to the "detailed explanation of the Majority's 'general disposition towards certain types of evidence'".<sup>29</sup> These are specific matters of concern which are unrelated to the interpretation of the "assumptions" made in the Adjournment Decision and should have been considered by the Majority. The Prosecutor specifically argues that the expression of the "general disposition" of the Chamber towards particular kinds of evidence has a bearing on the application of the evidentiary standard at the confirmation of charges stage. In particular, the Prosecutor contends that the Majority's general indication that some categories of evidence are preferred over others raises the question of how this finding can be reconciled with article 61(5) of the Statute, under which the Prosecutor is allowed, at the confirmation of charges hearing, to rely on documentary or summary evidence and need not call the witnesses expected to testify at trial.<sup>30</sup> Whether or not these elements can be reconciled is an issue that clearly arises from the Decision, and which meets the criteria of article 82(1)(d) of the Statute.

25. I note that in relation to its contested approach to evidence, the Majority only refers to a different part of the Prosecutor's Application to claim that "the Prosecutor completely misstates the Adjournment Decision when she argues that it forces her to present all her best evidence and that she must therefore call many live witnesses".<sup>31</sup> However, it appears that it is the Majority who misrepresents the submission of the Prosecutor and rebuts it prematurely. Indeed, the Prosecutor does not argue that forcing her to call live witnesses is in itself an "issue" arising out of the Adjournment

Decision but advances this argument in support of her allegations that the First and Second Issue affect the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings.<sup>32</sup>

26. In sum, I disagree with the Majority because I would have found that the First Issue arises out of the Adjournment Decision. In addition, I hold the view that the other requirements of article 82(1)(d) of the Statute are met.

27. In my view, the correct interpretation and application of the evidentiary standard in the present case has a crucial impact on both the fairness and expeditiousness of the proceedings as it clearly impacts on the amount and quality of the evidence to be provided and the length of the proceedings that will be needed for its disclosure, consideration and assessment.

28. Finally, I am of the view that an immediate resolution of the First Issue would materially advance the proceedings as the settling of the matter by the Appeals Chamber would rid the proceedings in the case of possible mistakes.<sup>33</sup> This would prevent any encroachment on the rights of the parties or unnecessary delays in the proceedings, and would ensure that future proceedings in the case follow the right course.

29. Accordingly, I would have granted the Prosecutor leave to appeal with respect to the First Issue.

B. Second Issue: "Whether in this case each 'incident underlying the contextual elements' must be established to the standard of proof enshrined in Article 61(7)"

30. The Second Issue presented by the Prosecutor primarily relates to paragraphs 19 to 23 of the Adjournment Decision on the "Evidentiary threshold applicable to all 'facts and circumstances'". In the Adjournment Decision, the Majority stated that

“the individual incidents alleged by the Prosecutor to support her allegation that there was an ‘attack directed against any civilian population’ are part of the facts and circumstances for the purposes of article 74(2) and therefore must be proved to the requisite threshold of ‘substantial grounds to believe’”.<sup>34</sup> The Majority further stated that “each incident underlying the contextual element must be proved to the same threshold that is applicable to all other facts”.<sup>35</sup> Against this backdrop, the Majority requested the Prosecutor to consider providing further evidence or conducting further investigation on a series of matters “[f]or each of the incidents allegedly constituting the attack against the ‘pro-Ouattara civilian population’”.<sup>36</sup>

31. Under the Second Issue, the Prosecutor challenges precisely these findings, alleging that, contrary to the Majority’s view, the “incidents” are “evidence offered to establish the existence of an attack and not material facts for the purpose of the charges”.<sup>37</sup> In the Prosecutor’s submission, the Second Issue, which “revolves around the definition of the scope of ‘facts and circumstances described in the charges’ that must be established to the requisite evidentiary threshold, and in particular the proper distinction between ‘facts’ and ‘evidence’”,<sup>38</sup> ultimately requires consideration of the following questions: (i) “[w]hether each of the incidents must be established to the threshold of ‘substantial grounds to believe’”;<sup>39</sup> (ii) “whether the standard of proof under Article 61(7) exclusively applies to establishing the elements of the crimes (including the contextual elements and the mode of liability), and therefore to findings of facts that are indispensable to confirm the charges, and if so whether the 41 incidents can be properly included among these indispensable facts”;<sup>40</sup> and (iii) “whether the term ‘incident’ can be equated with the statutory notion of ‘act’ referred to in Articles 7(1) and 7(2), and whether this has an impact on the applicable standard of proof of those incidents”.<sup>41</sup>

32. The Prosecutor submits that on appeal she will argue that “the facts pertaining to the 41 incidents are not material facts for the purposes of the charges” and will “demonstrate that all the evidence related to these incidents must be viewed cumulatively and in the context of the entire record in order to determine whether there are substantial grounds to believe that there was an attack, as alleged by the Prosecution, without the need to enter findings on whether each of them has been established”.<sup>42</sup>

33. In my view, the Second Issue is satisfactorily identified, accurately reflects the position expressed in the Adjournment Decision and constitutes “a subject the resolution of which is essential for the determination of matters arising in the judicial cause under examination”.<sup>43</sup> I am therefore of the view that the Second Issue arises out of the Adjournment Decision.

34. In the current Decision, the Majority cites the relevant part of the Adjournment Decision and recognises that “[t]he Prosecutor challenges the Chamber’s finding that the incidents are part of the ‘facts and circumstances’ of the case and that the incidents must be established to the requisite threshold applicable at this stage”.<sup>44</sup> However, instead of proceeding to the natural conclusion that the Second Issue as formulated arises from the Adjournment Decision, my colleagues, “with a view to receiving meaningful guidance by the Appeals Chamber”,<sup>45</sup> decide to reformulate the issue as follows:

Whether the Pre-Trial Chamber erred in holding that, when the Prosecutor alleges that an “attack against any civilian population” consists of multiple smaller incidents, none of which alone rises to the level of the minimum requirements of article 7 of the Statute and which allegedly took place at different times and places, a sufficient number of these incidents must be proved to the requisite standard, meaning that each of these incidents must be supported with sufficient evidence before the Chamber can take them into consideration to determine whether those incidents, taken together, indicate that there are substantial grounds to believe that an ‘attack’ took place.<sup>46</sup>

35. I cannot agree to such reformulation, which departs from what is requested in the submissions of the Prosecutor without proper reasoning or justification. Once again, the Majority considers that its Adjournment Decision has not been understood. In this regard, it states that “the way in which the Prosecutor has framed the issue misstates the Adjournment Decision, as the decision does not state that each of the 41 alleged incidents must be proved to the requisite standard but only that a sufficient number of those incidents must be so proved”.<sup>47</sup>

36. However, it stems from the above-cited passages of the Adjournment Decision,<sup>48</sup> that it is indeed the Majority’s view that the incidents must be individually proved to the substantial grounds to believe threshold. It bears no relation to this specific point that the Adjournment Decision further explained that in order to prove the existence of an “attack”, the subsequent step is to determine whether a “sufficient number of incidents” has been established to the requisite threshold.<sup>49</sup> This is not the crux of the Second Issue, which does not refer to the “number” of incidents that need to be proved in order to establish an attack, but to whether those incidents need to be individually proved to the threshold of substantial grounds to believe before being taken into account for the determination of whether the attack has been satisfactorily established. These are two different aspects, and the Prosecutor’s submissions in relation to the Second Issue are not mistaken in this regard.

37. In any event, the concern of the Majority could have been easily addressed by a slight amendment to the Second Issue to make it clear that in this context, “each” meant individual incidents and not all incidents. However, the Majority chooses instead to reject the Prosecutor’s Second Issue in its entirety and to replace it with a reformulation of its own, which misrepresents the issue arising from the Adjournment Decision, as presented by the Prosecutor and elaborated in her Application. Although this was certainly not the intention, the reformulation gives, in fact, the impression that it is aimed not at the resolution of a problem but at obtaining the endorsement of a position.

38. Indeed, it is taken for granted that the attack consists of “incidents”, since the first sentence of the reformulation reads as follows: “Whether the Pre-Trial Chamber erred in holding that, when the Prosecutor alleges that an ‘attack against any civilian population’ consists of multiple smaller incidents, none of which alone rises to the level of the minimum requirements of article 7 of the Statute and which allegedly took place at different times and places [...]”.<sup>50</sup>

39. A core aspect of the issue – whether the “incidents” are constitutive parts of the attack – is thus transformed into an accepted starting premise. Moreover, in the same sentence, an interpretation of the Majority is transformed into an allegation by the Prosecutor, contrary to her own submission. The Prosecutor does not allege “that an ‘attack against any civilian population’ consists of multiple smaller incidents”, but argues precisely the opposite by saying that “the facts pertaining to the 41 incidents were evidence offered to establish the existence of an attack and not material facts for the purposes of the charges”.<sup>51</sup>

40. It is to be noted that the Majority made contrary assertions both in the Adjournment Decision and the current Decision. In the Adjournment Decision, it stated that “in this case [...] the Prosecutor identifies particular incidents that constitute the attack against the civilian population”.<sup>52</sup> This is repeated at paragraph 34 of the current Decision, where the Majority indicates that its approach with regard to the examination of the contextual elements of crimes against humanity “has been adopted in response to the Prosecutor’s allegation that a series of incidents constitute the attack”.<sup>53</sup> However, no reference to specific written or oral submissions of the Prosecutor is provided in support of these assertions that the attack in this case is alleged to be constituted by an aggregation or series of individual incidents. The Prosecutor has indeed referred to incidents but, as stated above, she has not advanced that they constitute the attack or that they are “facts and circumstances described in the charges”. These are not the Prosecutor’s allegations but the Majority’s interpretation thereof. At paragraph 34 of the current Decision, the Majority argues in support of its reformulation that “[t]hese incidents were part of the DCC and mentioned one by one during the confirmation hearing”.<sup>54</sup> As further elaboration of its position, the Majority refers back to paragraphs 21 and 22 of the Adjournment Decision, which are inserted in full in the same paragraph.

41. It is thus clear that the initial premise of the reformulation in fact reflects the interpretation by the Majority of how the incidents referred to by the Prosecutor relate to the attack and to the facts and circumstances of the charges for the purpose of article 74(2) of the Statute. This interpretation is precisely what is being contested under the Second Issue presented by the Prosecutor. Whether or not the attack in this case “consists” of discrete “multiple smaller incidents” is not a settled issue. On the contrary, it is one of the central questions of the Second Issue, which meets the requirements under 82(1)(d) of the Statute, and that needs to be answered by the Appeals Chamber, not by the same Chamber that issued the impugned Decision.

42. The remainder of the reformulation by the Majority is equally unacceptable to me as it blurs the matters that need to be addressed by the Appeals Chamber. After transforming the core of the Second Issue into its premise, the Majority's reformulation goes on to ask "whether [...] each of these incidents must be supported with sufficient evidence before the Chamber can take them into consideration to determine whether those incidents, taken altogether, indicate that there are substantial grounds to believe that an 'attack' took place".<sup>55</sup>

43. The Majority simply ignores the questions that in the Prosecutor's submission constitute the actual subjects of the Second Issue,<sup>56</sup> and her arguments in this regard are not even addressed. The Majority takes no position on whether or not leave to appeal may be granted with respect to the issue proposed by the Prosecutor as encompassing those key questions. Rather, in the explanatory paragraph of the issue as reformulated, the Majority merely states that "the answer to this question does not depend on whether the incidents are considered as being part of the 'facts and circumstances of the charges' or whether they are categorised as 'subsidiary facts'"<sup>57</sup> and that "[t]he real question is whether the Chamber can expect the Prosecutor to back up her allegations with sufficient evidence, or whether it is permissible for her to make factual allegations without sufficient evidence and still propose them as a basis for drawing inferences about the charges".<sup>58</sup>

44. With due respect to my colleagues, that is not the "real" question under the Prosecutor's Second Issue that arises from the Adjournment Decision. No explanation is provided by the Majority as to why the "real" question under the Second Issue should not relate to the relevance of the "incidents" within the context of the charges brought against Mr Gbagbo. The Second Issue presented by the Prosecutor concerns precisely the categorisation of the "incidents" as part of the "facts and circumstances of the charges". This is the issue that arises from what the

Majority expressly stated in the Adjournment Decision,<sup>59</sup> and it is precisely the object of the Second Issue in the submission of the Prosecutor.<sup>60</sup> The specific question is indeed whether, in the present case, the “incidents” are or are not “facts and circumstances of the charges” which, as such, must be proved to the standard of substantial grounds to believe. Therefore, contrary to the view of the Majority, I believe that the resolution of the Second Issue depends exactly on whether the “incidents” are considered to be part of the facts and circumstances of the charges or should be categorised as subsidiary facts. What is “sufficient” evidence for one category might not be enough for the other. In fact, such a distinction must be made in order for the question to hold any tangible meaning, since it is a generally accepted principle that alleged facts must be substantiated. As a result, the guidance required from the Appeals Chamber necessarily relates to how and to what extent different categories of facts need to be proved.

45. It is regrettable that although my colleagues intended “to receiv[e] meaningful guidance by the Appeals Chamber”,<sup>61</sup> they have in fact put forward an unjustified reformulation that blurs the Second Issue and questions that, in the Prosecutor’s submission, revolve around this issue.<sup>62</sup> These questions are still discernible and it remains possible to address them on appeal, but the task of the Appeals Chamber could have been facilitated by accepting a neutral, simple and straightforward formulation of the Second Issue, as proposed by the Prosecutor.

<sup>59</sup> Adjournment Decision, para. 21 (“the individual incidents alleged by the Prosecutor in support of her allegation that there was an ‘attack directed against any civilian population’ are part of the facts and circumstances of the charges for the purposes of article 74(2) of the Statute and therefore must be proved to the requisite threshold of ‘substantial grounds to believe’”).

<sup>60</sup> Prosecutor’s Application, para. 9 (“[t]he Second Issue [...] revolves around the definition of the scope of the ‘facts and circumstances described in the charges’ that must be established to the requisite evidentiary threshold, and in particular the proper distinction between ‘facts and evidence’”) and para. 10 (“[w]ith a view to establishing the existence of th[e] attack, the Prosecution then referred in a different section of the DCC to ‘subsidiary facts’ and evidence relating to ‘41 incidents’. Whether each of these incidents must be established to the threshold of ‘substantial grounds to believe’ is the subject of the Second Issue”).

46. I am also persuaded that the Second Issue, as presented by the Prosecutor, significantly affects the fairness of the proceedings. Indeed, the determination of the legal criteria for assessing the evidence presented in order to establish the contextual elements of the crimes charged significantly impacts on the scope of the Prosecutor's further investigation in the present case, and, more generally, on what is required of the Prosecutor in terms of evidence in order to support her allegations. This is particularly so considering that the Second Issue is not limited to a matter of interpretation and application of the evidentiary threshold, but, more fundamentally, involves the very question of what is to be proved by the Prosecutor in order to obtain confirmation of charges. Indeed, as submitted by the Prosecutor,<sup>63</sup> the significant and concrete impact of whether the "incidents" must be individually proved to the standard of substantial grounds to believe is further evidenced by the list of the matters (in relation to "each incident"), identified at paragraph 44 of the Adjournment Decision, for which the Prosecutor is requested to consider providing further evidence or conducting further investigation.<sup>64</sup>

47. By the same token, the Second Issue, which ultimately concerns the status and the relevance of the "incidents" within the scope of the facts of the case, equally affects the fairness vis-à-vis the Defence, given that its strategy may also depend on whether or not the "incidents" are to be considered as "facts and circumstances of the charges". In my view, the Second Issue therefore affects the fair conduct and the integrity of the present proceedings.

48. I further believe that the Second Issue affects the expeditious conduct of the proceedings, given that the manner in which the contextual elements of the crimes must be assessed in the present case directly impacts on the amount and type of evidence that the Prosecutor will need to collect, as well as on the length of time that will be required for the disclosure, discussion and assessment of such evidence.

49. Finally, it is my opinion that an immediate resolution of the Second Issue by the Appeals Chamber will materially advance the proceedings, as it will assist in the determination of the legal criteria for establishing the contextual elements of the crimes charged, the elucidation of which will be of benefit both to the parties and to the Chamber for the determination of its final decision under article 61(7) of the Statute. An immediate intervention of the Appeals Chamber on the matter will thus permit the proceedings to advance and will cure at this stage any possible error made by the Chamber in the Adjournment Decision in relation to the Second Issue.

50. Accordingly, I would have granted leave to appeal with respect to the Second Issue as presented by the Prosecutor.

C. Third Issue: "Whether the Pre-Trial Chamber has the power to order the Prosecution to amend the Document Containing the Charges (...) by including additional facts"

51. I also disagree with my colleagues on their disposal of the Prosecutor's Third Issue. Once again, the Majority rejects leave to appeal, relying on the argument that the issue "does not arise from the Adjournment Decision but rests on a misinterpretation of the Chamber's ruling".<sup>65</sup> I am unable to accept the clarification that is provided and the conclusion that is reached. I very much regret that my colleagues refuse to seek the guidance of the Appeals Chamber on an important constitutional matter, which arises from the Adjournment Decision and meets the requirements of article 82(1)(d) of the Statute.

52. The Majority claims that "the Chamber did not order the Prosecutor to amend the DCC by including additional facts" but merely "requested the Prosecutor to consider providing further evidence or conducting further investigations with respect to all charges".<sup>66</sup> Emphasising the non-binding nature of such requests, the Majority recalls that the Prosecutor is free to make use of this option or not, as she is free to decide not to conduct further investigation or “decline the Chamber’s invitation to consider presenting further evidence.”<sup>67</sup> The Majority explains further that “[t]he submission of a new amended DCC prior to the hearing is ordered in order to ensure that the Defence is informed fully and in detail of the content of the charges” and that “[t]his instruction relates to the form of the charges and not to their content.”<sup>68</sup> In light of the above, my colleagues appear to suggest that they have not ordered a substantive amendment but rather a clearer and more detailed document containing the charges.

53. I believe these arguments fail to appreciate the essence of the Third Issue. This issue does not relate to the powers of the Chamber to request the Prosecutor to consider providing further evidence or conducting further investigation but to the specific content of the order that is issued to the Prosecutor. Contrary to the explanations of the Majority, the DCC that has been ordered cannot be considered to be a mere formal corollary of the request of the Chamber to consider providing further evidence or conducting further investigation, in accordance with article 61(7)(c)(i) of the Statute. Indeed, even if the Prosecutor chooses not to rely on any additional evidence, she is still bound by the terms of the Adjournment Decision to present a new amended DCC “setting out in detail and with precision the facts of the case, including all incidents forming the contextual elements of crimes against humanity”<sup>69</sup>. The Amended DCC was not ordered on the basis of evidentiary lacunas that might be solved with further evidence, but, in the words of the Majority, “[w]ith a view to informing the Defence in detail of the content of the charges”,<sup>70</sup> regardless of whether these charges will be substantiated by further evidence.

54. In this respect it must be recalled that the instruction given by the Chamber with regard to the Amended DCC is not an option for the Prosecutor but has been issued in clear binding terms in accordance with paragraph 45 and operative subsection (c)(ix) of the Adjournment Decision, as is acknowledged by the Majority.<sup>71</sup> As stated above, and contrary to the explanation of the Majority, the Third Issue relates to the content of this order, and not to the powers to request further investigation and evidence. The content of such an order involves the issue of the competence of the Chamber to shape the factual allegations of the case and reframe the charges. The Prosecutor states in this regard that “the Third Issue concerns the question of whether a Pre-Trial Chamber has the power under the Statute to shape the factual allegations of the charges or to request the Prosecutor to reframe the charges in order to adapt them to the Chamber’s understanding of the case.”<sup>72</sup> The Majority’s explanation that its instruction only “relates to the form of the charges and not to their content” cannot be sustained.<sup>73</sup> Both the text and context of the instruction make it clear that the order to submit a new DCC is a corollary of the finding of the Chamber that the “incidents forming the contextual elements of the crimes against humanity” are part of the facts and circumstances of the charges.<sup>74</sup>

55. My colleagues have made abundantly clear that they consider that the “incidents” referred to by the Prosecutor are constitutive parts of the attack and form part of “the facts of circumstances described in the charges” for the purpose of article 74(2) of the Statute. They are, of course, entitled to this interpretation. However, they need to recognise that whether or not these incidents are “facts and circumstances described in the charges” is a major point of contention arising from the Decision and underlying the Second Issue.

56. The Third Issue is intimately and inextricably linked to that point of contention. As already indicated above,<sup>75</sup> it is the Majority's interpretation and not the Prosecutor's allegation that the incidents constitute the attack and form part of the facts and circumstances of the charges. When the Majority orders the Prosecutor to include all these incidents as facts of the case in the DCC, this order cannot be understood in any reasonable way other than as an order to include them among the material facts that will need to be pleaded and proved to the threshold of substantial grounds to believe. This amounts to an order to the Prosecutor to endorse in the DCC the understanding of the Chamber on how the facts of the case need to be framed and presented. In other words, it is indeed an order that the "form" of the DCC adapts to what the Majority considers to be the appropriate "content" of the charges.

57. Whether such an order is or is not permissible is an issue that arises from the Adjournment Decision, which cannot be answered by the same Chamber that has issued it but needs to be placed before the Appeals Chamber since also the other requirements under article 82(1)(d) of the Statute are met with respect to the Third Issue.

58. I consider that the Third Issue affects the fairness of the proceedings, because it concerns the distribution of powers between the Prosecutor and the Chamber. In my view it affects not only the independence of the Prosecutor, and therefore aspects of fairness vis-à-vis the Prosecutor, but also the procedural interests of the Defence, and potentially the interests of other participants in the proceedings.

59. In relation to the remaining requirement of article 82(1)(d) of the Statute, I am of the view that reference of the matter to the Appeals Chamber would ensure that the future proceedings in the case are not tainted by improper interference by the Pre-Trial Chamber in the area of exclusive competence of the Prosecutor. Thus, an immediate resolution of the Third Issue by the Appeals Chamber would materially advance the proceedings.

60. In sum, I am satisfied that all the necessary requirements under article 82(1)(d) of the Statute are met with respect to the Third Issue and would have therefore granted leave to appeal.

III. Defence Application: “[L]’utilisation faite par la Chambre préliminaire dans sa décision du 3 juin 2013 de l’article 61 (7) (c) (i) conduit-elle à une violation des droits de la défense ?”

61. The Majority states that “the Issue is formulated in an exceedingly broad manner,<sup>76</sup> and it constitutes a mere disagreement with, or is based upon a “mistaken interpretation” of, the Adjournment Decision.<sup>77</sup>

62. I agree with the Majority that the Issue is formulated too broadly. However, I do not agree that the Defence Application needs to be entirely rejected for that reason. A careful review of the concerns underlying the Application reveals that the submissions of the Defence relate in fact to two specific aspects of the Adjournment Decision, namely: (i) the alleged errors of the Chamber in its evaluation of the conduct of the Prosecutor; and (ii) the alleged errors in the determination of whether “undue delay” is caused by the Adjournment Decision.

63. Therefore, I consider that the Defence Application should not be rejected for lack of proper identification of an appealable issue, but should be considered further in light of the substance of the arguments that are advanced therein.

64. The Majority considers that the Defence does not raise an appealable issue, given that the Defence fails to allege that the Chamber abused its discretion under article 61(7) of the Statute and that “[i]n the absence of a clear allegation to that effect, the Chamber is unable to certify the Issue as one of alleged abuse of discretion”.<sup>78</sup> However, a plain reading of the Defence Application makes clear that the proposed issue is not “one of alleged abuse of discretion” and the Majority provides no reason for why it considers that only an issue relating to abuse of discretion would allow it to certify this issue as appealable. In my view, this consideration is unfounded. In focusing on a matter that the Defence has not raised, and moreover was not required to raise, the Majority ignores the real submissions of the Defence.

65. In my opinion, the two aspects of the Adjournment Decision identified by the Defence involve an explicit or implicit balancing of the rights of the Defence against other legitimate interests. Whether the Adjournment Decision violates the rights of the Defence is therefore an issue arising out of the decision.

66. The Defence arguments concerning the “évaluation du comportement du Procureur” relate to paragraph 37 of the Adjournment Decision, which states that “past jurisprudence [...] may have appeared more forgiving [and] the Prosecutor in this case may not have deemed it necessary to present all her evidence or largely complete her investigation”. The Majority goes on to state that it “does not exclude that the Prosecutor might be able to present or collect further evidence and is therefore, out of fairness, prepared to give her a limited amount of additional time to do so.”<sup>79</sup>

67. The Defence submits that this line of reasoning involves an issue concerning the respect of its rights. I agree. The Majority makes explicit reference to “fairness” as a reason to adjourn the hearing rather than to decline to confirm the charges. In my view, any determination of fairness in this context must give proper consideration to the rights of all parties and participants with legitimate interests. Whether the Majority properly balanced the interests involved or, in the words of the Defence, excused the Prosecutor at the cost of the Defence, is therefore an issue arising out of the Adjournment Decision.

68. The issue of according due respect to Defence rights arises even more clearly from the Chamber's determination that the Adjournment Decision will not unduly infringe the rights of the Defence.<sup>80</sup> The Majority now considers that the Defence arguments concerning the alleged infringement of the suspect's right to be tried without undue delay "amount to little more than criticisms of the Chamber's reasoning, without however clearly identifying any specific factual or legal errors that could be certified for appeal".<sup>81</sup> I disagree with this conclusion of the Majority, which fails to address all relevant submissions of the Defence.

69. Indeed, the Defence provides detailed insight into the contours of the proposed appeal and alleges errors in the relevant part of the Adjournment Decision. In particular, the Defence alleges that the following were improperly relied upon by the Majority as reasons justifying the lengthy adjournment against the right of Mr Gbagbo to be tried without undue delay: (i) the "seriousness of the charges presented against Mr Gbagbo"; (ii) the fact that the Chamber "was requested by the Defence to examine the question of Mr Gbagbo's fitness to take part in the proceedings"; and (iii) the "complexity of the case".<sup>82</sup> All of these are in my view properly identified aspects of the Adjournment Decision which demonstrate that the issue proposed for appeal by the Defence does arise therefrom, and in respect of which the criteria of article 82(1)(d) of the Statute can be assessed.

70. Accordingly, I would have determined that the issue proposed by the Defence arises out of the Adjournment Decision. However, I would have limited the definition of the issue in light of the substantive submissions of the Defence as follows:

<sup>82</sup> Defence Application, paras 35-39; see also Adjournment Decision, paras 40-41.

Whether the Chamber's use of article 61(7)(c)(i) of the Statute violated the rights of the Defence:

(a) in holding that, out of fairness, it was prepared to give the Prosecutor a limited amount of additional time to present or collect further evidence; and/or

(b) in determining that allowing the Prosecutor to provide more evidence or conduct further investigation for a limited period of time will not unduly infringe the right of the Defence to be tried without undue delay.

71. Considering that fairness of proceedings is at the core of the issue proposed for appeal by the Defence, it is in my view self-evident that the issue affects the fair conduct of the proceedings. Finally, I consider that immediate resolution of the issue would materially advance the proceedings. Indeed, if the Appeals Chamber was to determine that the Adjournment Decision violated the rights of the Defence, it would be able to remedy the situation and ensure that future proceedings in the case follow the right course.

72. Accordingly, I would have granted leave to appeal with respect to the issue proposed by the Defence, as specified above.
