I. INTRODUCTION

1. The Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens responsible for genocide and other such violations committed in the territory of neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994 ("the Appeals Chamber" and "the Tribunal" respectively) is seised of the "Prosecutor's Motion for Review or Reconsideration of the Appeals Chamber's Decision Rendered on 3 November 1999, in Jean-Bosco Barayagwiza v. the Prosecutor and Request for Stay of Execution" filed by the Prosecutor on 1 December 1999 ("the Motion for Review").
2. The decision sought to be reviewed was issued by the Appeals Chamber on 3 November 1999 ("the Decision"). In the Decision, the Appeals Chamber allowed the appeal of Jean-Bosco Barayagwiza ("the Appellant") against the decision of Trial Chamber II which had rejected his preliminary motion challenging the legality of his arrest and detention. In allowing the appeal, the Appeals Chamber dismissed the indictment against the Appellant with prejudice to the Prosecutor and directed the Appellant's immediate release. Furthermore, a majority of the Appeals Chamber (Judge Shahabuddeen dissenting) directed the Registrar to make the necessary arrangements for the delivery of the Appellant to the authorities of Cameroon, from whence he had been originally transferred to the Tribunal's Detention Centre.
3. The Decision was stayed by Order of the Appeals Chamber¹ in light of the Motion for Review. The Appellant is therefore still in the custody of the Tribunal.

¹ The Decision was first stayed for 7 days pending the filing of the Prosecutor's Motion by the Order of 25 November 1999. By Order of 8 December 1999 the stay was continued pending further order.

II. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

4. The Appellant himself was the first to file an application for review of the Decision. On 5 November 1999 he requested the Appeals Chamber to review item 4 of the disposition in the Decision, which directed the Registrar to make the necessary arrangements for his delivery to the Cameroonian authorities.² The Prosecutor responded to the application, asking to be heard on the same point³, and in response to this the Appellant withdrew his request.⁴

5. Following this series of pleadings, the Government of Rwanda filed a request for leave to appear as amicus curiae before the Chamber in order to be heard on the issue of the Appellant's delivery to the authorities of Cameroon.⁵ This request was made pursuant to Rule 74 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal ("the Rules").

6. On 19 November 1999 the Prosecutor filed a "Notice of Intention to File Request for Review of Decision of the Appeals Chamber of 3 November 1999" ("the Prosecutor's Notice of Intention")⁶, informing the Chamber of her intention to file her own request for review of the Decision pursuant to Article 25 of the Statute of the Tribunal, and in the alternative, a "motion for reconsideration". On 25 November, the Appeals Chamber issued an Order staying execution of the Decision for 7 days pending the filing of the Prosecutor's Motion for Review. The Appeals Chamber also ordered that that the direction in the Decision that the Appellant be immediately released was to be read subject to the direction to the Registrar to arrange his delivery to the authorities of Cameroon. On the same day, the Chamber received the Appellant's objections to the Prosecutor's Notice of Intention.⁷

7. The Prosecutor's Motion for Review was filed within the 7 day time limit, on 1 December 1999. Annexes to that Motion were filed the following day.⁸ On 8 December 1999 the Appeals Chamber issued an Order continuing the stay ordered on 25 November 1999 and setting a schedule for the filing of further submissions by the parties. The Prosecutor was given 7 days to file copies of any statements relating to new facts which she had not yet filed. This deadline was not complied with, but additional statements were filed on 16 February 2000, along with an application for the extension of the time-limit.⁹ The Appellant objected to this application.¹⁰

8. The Order of 8 December 1999 further provided that that the Chamber would hear oral argument on the Prosecutor's Motion for Review, and that the Government of Rwanda might appear at the hearing as amicus curiae with respect to the modalities of the release of the Appellant, if that question were reached. The Government of Rwanda filed a memorial on this point on 15 February 2000.¹¹

9. On 10 December 1999 the Appellant filed four motions: challenging the jurisdiction of the Appeals Chamber to entertain the review proceedings; opposing the request of the Government of Rwanda to appear as amicus curiae; asking for clarification of the Order of 8 December and requesting leave to make oral submissions during the hearing on the ⁸ A corrigendum to the motion was filed on 20 December 1999. Corrigenda to the annexes were filed on 13 January and 7 February 2000.

¹⁰ Extremely urgent appellant's argument in response to the Prosecutor's 16 February 2000 motion to submit new facts in support of motion for review or reconsideration of 3 November 1999 decision, filed on 28 February 2000. The Prosecutor's reply to the "extremely urgent appellant's argument in response to the Prosecutor's 16 February 2000 motion to submit new facts in support of motion for review or reconsideration of 3 November decision" was then filed on 7 March 2000.

Prosecutor's Motion for Review.¹² The Prosecutor filed her response to these motions on 3 February 2000.¹³

10. On 17 December 1999, the Appeals Chamber issued a Scheduling Order¹⁴ clarifying the time-limits set in its previous Order of 8 December 1999 and on 6 January 2000 the Appellant filed his response to the Prosecutor's Motion for Review.

11. Meanwhile, the Appellant had requested the withdrawal of his assigned counsel, Mr. J.P.L. Nyaberi, by letter of 16 December 1999. The Registrar denied his request on 5 January 2000, and this decision was confirmed by the President of the Tribunal on 19 January 2000.¹⁵ The Appellant then filed a motion before the Appeals Chamber insisting on the withdrawal of assigned counsel, and the assignment of new counsel and co-counsel to represent him with regard to the Prosecutor's Motion for Review.¹⁶ The Appeals Chamber granted his request by Order of 31 January 2000. In view of the change of counsel, the Appellant was given until 17 February 2000 to file a new response to the Prosecutor's Motion for Review, such response to replace the earlier response of 6 January 2000. The Prosecutor was given four further days to reply to any new response submitted. Both these documents were duly filed.¹⁷

12. The oral hearing on the Prosecutor's Motion for Review took place in Arusha on 22 February 2000.

III. APPLICABLE PROVISIONS

A. The Statute

Article 25: Review Proceedings

Where a new fact has been discovered which was not known at the time of the proceedings before the Trial Chambers or the Appeals Chamber and which could have been a decisive factor in reaching the decision, the convicted person or the Prosecutor may submit to the International Tribunal for Rwanda an application for review of the judgement.

B. The Rules

Rule 120: Request for Review

Where a new fact has been discovered which was not known to the moving party at the time of the proceedings before a Chamber, and could not have been discovered through the exercise of due diligence, the defence or, within one year after the final judgement has been pronounced, the Prosecutor, may make a motion to that Chamber, if it can be reconstituted or, failing that, to the appropriate Chamber of the Tribunal for review of the judgement.

Rule 121: Preliminary Examination

If the Chamber which ruled on the matter decides that the new fact, if it had been proven, could have been a decisive factor in reaching a decision, the Chamber shall review the judgement, and pronounce a further judgement after hearing the parties.

IV. SUBMISSIONS OF THE PARTIES

A. The Prosecution Case

13. The Prosecutor relies on Article 25 of the Statute and Rules 120 and 121 of the Rules as the legal basis for the Motion for Review¹⁸. The Prosecutor bases the Motion for Review primarily on its claimed discovery of new facts¹⁹. She states that by virtue of Article 25, there are two basic conditions for an Appeals Chamber to reopen and review its decision, namely the discovery of new facts which were unknown at the time of the original proceedings and which could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision²⁰. The Prosecutor states that the new facts she relies upon affect the totality of the Decision and open it up for review and reconsideration in its entirety.²¹

14. The Prosecutor opposes the submission by the Defence (paragraph 27 below), that Article 25 can only be invoked following a conviction. The Prosecutor submits that the wording "persons convicted... or from the Prosecutor" provides that both parties can bring a request for review under Article 25, and not that such a right only arises on conviction. The Prosecutor submits that there is no requirement that a motion for review can only be brought after final judgement.²²

15. The "new facts" which the Prosecutor seeks to introduce and rely on in the Motion for Review fall, according to her, into two categories: new facts which were not known or could not have been known to the Prosecutor at the time of the argument before the Appeals Chamber; and facts which although they "may have possibly been discovered by the Prosecutor" at the time, are, she submits, new, as they could not have been known to be part of the factual dispute or relevant to the issues subsequently determined by the Appeals

Chamber.²³ The Prosecutor in this submission relies on Rules 121, 107, 115, 117, and 5 of the Rules and Article 14 of the Statute. The Prosecutor submits that the determination of whether something is a new fact, is a mixed question of both fact and law that requires the Appeals Chamber to apply the law as it exists to the facts to determine whether the standard has been met. It does not mean that a fact which occurred prior to the trial cannot be a new fact, or a "fact not discoverable through due diligence."²⁴

16. The Prosecutor alleges that numerous factual issues were raised for the first time on appeal by the Appeals Chamber, proprio motu, without a full hearing or adjudication of the facts by the Trial Chamber,²⁵ and contends that the Prosecutor cannot be faulted for failing to comprehend the full nature of the facts required by the Appeals Chamber. Indeed, the Prosecutor alleges that the questions raised did not correspond in full to the subsequent factual determinations by the Appeals Chamber and that at no time was the Prosecutor asked to address the factual basis of the application of the abuse of process doctrine relied upon by the Appeals Chamber in the Decision²⁶. The Prosecutor further submits that application of this doctrine involved consideration of the public interest in proceeding to trial and therefore facts relevant to the interests of international justice are new facts on the review.²⁷ The Prosecutor alleges that she was not provided with the opportunity to present such facts before the Appeals Chamber.²⁸

17. In application of the doctrine of abuse of process, the Prosecutor submits that the remedy of dismissal with prejudice was unjustified, as the delay alleged was, contrary to the findings in the Decision, not fully attributable to the Prosecutor.²⁹ New facts relate to the application of this doctrine and the remedy, which was granted in the Decision.

18. The Prosecutor submits that the Appeals Chamber can also reconsider the Decision, pursuant to its inherent power as a judicial body, to vary or rescind its previous orders, maintaining that such a power is vital to the ability of a court to function properly.³⁰ She asserts that this inherent power has been acknowledged by both Tribunals and cites several decisions in support. The Prosecutor maintains that a judicial body can vary or rescind a previous order because of a change in circumstances and also because a reconsideration of the matter has led it to conclude that a different order would be appropriate.³¹ In the view of the Prosecutor, although the jurisprudence of the Tribunal indicates that a Chamber will not reconsider its decision if there are no new facts or if the facts adduced could have been relied on previously, where there are facts or arguments of which the Chamber was not aware at the time of the original decision and which the moving party was not in a position to inform the Chamber of at the time of the original decision, a Chamber has the inherent authority to entertain a motion for reconsideration.³² The Prosecutor asks the Appeals Chamber to exercise its inherent power where an extremely important judicial decision is made without the full benefit of legal argument on the relevant issues and on the basis of incomplete facts.³³

19. The Prosecutor submits that although a final judgement becomes res judicata and subject to the principle of non bis in idem, the Decision was not a final judgement on the merits of the case.³⁴

20. The Prosecutor submits that she could not have been reasonably expected to anticipate all the facts and arguments which turned out to be relevant and decisive to the Appeals Chamber's Decision.³⁵

21. The Prosecutor submits that the new facts offered could have been decisive factors in reaching the Decision, in that had they been available in the record on appeal, they may have altered the findings of the Appeals Chamber that: (a) the period of provisional detention was impermissibly lengthy; (b) there was a violation of Rule 40*bis* through failure to charge promptly; (c) there was a violation of Rule 62 and the right to an initial appearance without delay; and (d) there was failure by the Prosecutor in her obligations to prosecute the case with due diligence. In addition, they could have altered the findings in the Conclusion and could have been decisive factors in determination of the Appeals Chamber's remedies.³⁶

22. The Prosecutor submits that the extreme measure of dismissal of the indictment with prejudice to the Prosecutor is not proportionate to the alleged violations of the Appellant's rights and is contrary to the mandate of the Tribunal to promote national reconciliation in Rwanda by conducting public trial on the merits.³⁷ She states that the Tribunal must take into account rules of law, the rights of the accused and particularly the interests of justice required by the victims and the international community as a whole.³⁸

23. The Prosecutor alleges a violation of Rule 5, in that the Appeals Chamber exceeded its role and obtained facts which the Prosecutor alleges were outside the original trial record. The Prosecutor submits that in so doing the Appeals Chamber acted ultra vires the provisions of Rules 98, 115 and 117(A) with the result that the Prosecutor suffered material prejudice, the remedy for which is an order of the Appeals Chamber for review of the Decision, together with the accompanying Dispositive Orders.³⁹

24. The Prosecutor submits that her ability to continue with prosecutions and investigations depends on the government of Rwanda and that, unless the Appellant is tried, the Rwandan government will no longer be "involved in any manner".⁴⁰

25. Finally, the Prosecutor submits that review is justified on the basis of the new facts, which establish that the Prosecutor made significant efforts to transfer the Appellant, that the Prosecutor acted with due diligence and that any delays did not fundamentally compromise the rights of the Appellant and would not justify the dismissal of the indictment with prejudice to the Prosecutor.⁴¹

26. In terms of substantive relief, the Prosecutor requests that the Appeals Chamber either review the Decision or reconsider it in the exercise of its inherent powers, that it vacate the Decision and that it reinstate the Indictment. In the alternative, if these requests are not granted, the Prosecutor requests that the Decision dismissing the indictment is ordered to be without prejudice to the Prosecutor⁴².

B. The Defence Case

27. The Appellant submits that Article 25 is only available to the parties after an accused has become a "convicted person". The Appeals Chamber does not have jurisdiction to consider the Prosecutor's Motion as the Appellant has not become a "convicted person". The Appellant submits that Rules 120 and 121 should be interpreted in accordance with this principle and maintains that both rules apply to review after trial and are therefore consistent with Article 25 which also applies to the right of review of a "convicted person"⁴³.

28. The Appellant submits that the Appeals Chamber does not have "inherent power" to revise a final decision. He submits that the Prosecutor is effectively asking the Appeals Chamber to amend the Statute by asking it to use its inherent power only if it concludes that Article 25 and Rule 120 do not apply. The Appellant states that the Appeals Chamber cannot on its own create law.⁴⁴

29. The Appellant submits that the Decision was final and unappealable and that he should be released as there is no statutory authority to revise the Decision.⁴⁵

30. The Appellant maintains that the Prosecutor has ignored the legal requirements for the introduction of new facts and has adduced no new facts to justify a review of the Decision. Despite the attachments provided by the Prosecutor and held out to be new facts, the Appellant submits that the Prosecutor has failed to produce any evidence to support the two-fold requirement in the Rules that the new fact should not have been known to the moving party and could not have been discovered through the exercise of due diligence.⁴⁶

31. The Appellant submits that the Appeals Chamber should reject the request of the Prosecutor to classify the "old facts" as "new facts" as an attempt to invent a new definition limited to the facts of this case. The Appellant maintains that the Decision was correct in its findings and is fully supported by the Record.

32. The Appellant maintains that the Prosecutor's contention that the applicability of the abuse of process doctrine was not communicated to it before the Decision is groundless. The Appellant alleges that this issue was fully set out in his motion filed on 24 February 1998 and that when an issue has been properly raised by a party in criminal proceedings, the party who chooses to ignore the points raised by the other does so at its own peril.⁴⁷

33. In relation to the submissions by the Prosecutor that the Decision of the Appeals Chamber was wrong in light of UN Resolution 955's goal of achieving national reconciliation for Rwanda, the Appellant urges the Appeals Chamber "to forcefully reject the notion that the human rights of a person accused of a serious crime, under the rubric of achieving national reconciliation, should be less than those available to an accused charged with a less serious one".⁴⁸

V. THE MOTION BEFORE THE CHAMBER

34. Before proceeding to consider the Motion for Review, the Chamber notes that during the hearing on 22 February 2000 in Arusha, Prosecutor Ms Carla Del Ponte, made a statement regarding the reaction of the government of Rwanda to the Decision. She stated that: "The government of Rwanda reacted very seriously in a tough manner to the decision of 3 November 1999."⁴⁹ Later, the Attorney General of Rwanda appearing as representative of the Rwandan Government, in his submissions as 'amicus curiae' to the Appeals Chamber, openly threatened the non co-operation of the peoples of Rwanda with the Tribunal if faced with an unfavourable Decision by the Appeals Chamber on the Motion for Review.⁵⁰ The Appeals Chamber wishes to stress that the Tribunal is an independent body, whose decisions are based solely on justice and law. If its decision in any case should be followed by non-cooperation, that consequence would be a matter for the Security Council.⁵¹

35. The Chamber notes also that, during the hearing on her Motion for Review, the Prosecutor based her arguments on the alleged guilt of the Appellant, and stated she was prepared to demonstrate this before the Chamber. The forcefulness with which she expressed her position compels us to reaffirm that it is for the Trial Chamber to adjudicate on the guilt of an accused, in accordance with the fundamental principle of the presumption of innocence, as incorporated in Article 3 of the Statute of the Tribunal.

36. The Motion for Review provides the Chamber with two alternative courses. First, it seeks a review of the Decision pursuant to Article 25 of said Statute. Further, failing this, it seeks that the Chamber reconsider the Decision by virtue of the power vested in it as a judicial body. We shall begin with the sought review.

⁴⁹ Transcript, pages 26-28.

⁵⁰ Ibid., pages 290 and 291 : The Attorney General representing the government of Rwanda referred to the "terrible consequences which a decision to release the appellant without a prospect of prosecution by this Tribunal or some other jurisdiction will give rise to. Such a decision will encourage impunity and hamper the efforts of Rwanda to maintain peace and stability and promote unity and reconciliation. A decision of this nature will cost the Tribunal heavily in terms of the support and goodwill of the people of Rwanda."

A. REVIEW

1. General considerations

37. The mechanism provided in the Statute and Rules for application to a Chamber for review of a previous decision is not a novel concept invented specifically for the purposes of this Tribunal. In fact, it is a facility available both on an international level and indeed in many national jurisdictions, although often with differences in the criteria for a review to take place.

38. Article 61 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice is such a provision and provides the Court with the power to revise judgements on the discovery of a fact, of a decisive nature which was unknown to the court and party claiming revision when the judgement was given, provided this was not due to negligence⁵². Similarly Article 4 of Protocol No. 7 to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (1950) provides for the reopening of cases if there is inter alia, "evidence of new or newly discovered facts"⁵³. Finally, on this subject, the International Law Commission has stated that such a provision was a "necessary guarantee against the possibility of factual error relating to material not available to the accused and therefore not brought to the attention of the Court at the time of the initial trial or of any appeal."⁵⁴

39. In national jurisdictions, the facility for review exists in different forms, either specifically as a right to review a decision of a court, or by virtue of an alternative route which achieves the same result. Legislation providing a specific right to review is most prevalent in civil law jurisdictions, although again, the exact criteria to be fulfilled before a ⁵⁴ Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its 46th session, Official Records, 49th Session, Supplement number No.10 (A/49/10) at page 128. It should also be noted that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) (1966) also refers to the discovery of "new or newly discovered facts" in Article 14. However it relates primarily to the right to compensation in the event that these new facts (together with other criteria) mean that a conviction is reversed or an accused pardoned.

court will undertake a review can differ from that provided in the legislation for this Tribunal⁵⁵.

40. These provisions are pointed out simply as being illustrative of the fact that, although the precise terms may differ, review of decisions is not a unique idea and the mechanism which has brought this matter once more before the Appeals Chamber is, in its origins, drawn from a variety of sources.

41. Returning to the procedure in hand, it is clear from the Statute and the Rules⁵⁶ that, in order for a Chamber to carry out a review, it must be satisfied that four criteria have been met. There must be a new fact; this new fact must not have been known by the moving party at the time of the original proceedings; the lack of discovery of the new fact must not have been through the lack of due diligence on the part of the moving party; and it must be shown that the new fact could have been a decisive factor in reaching the original decision.

42. The Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia has highlighted the distinction, which should be made between genuinely new facts which may justify review and additional evidence of a fact⁵⁷. In considering the application of Rule 119 of the Rules of the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (which mirrors Rule 120 of the Rules), the Appeals Chamber held that:

Where an applicant seeks to present a new fact which becomes known only after trial, despite the exercise of due diligence during the trial in discovering it, Rule 119 is the governing provision. In such a case, the Appellant is not seeking to admit additional evidence of a fact that was considered at trial but rather a new fact...It is for the Trial Chamber to review the Judgement and determine whether the new fact, if proved, could have been a decisive factor in reaching a decision".⁵⁸

Further, the Appeals Chamber stated that-

⁵⁵ E.g. in Belgium Article 443 et seq. of the Code d'Instruction Criminelle provides for "Demandes en Révision"; In Sweden, Chapter 58 of Part 7 of the Swedish Code of Judicial Procedure (which came into force on 1 January 1948, provision cited as per amendments of the Code as of 1 January 1999) provides for the right of review; In France, Article 622 et seq. of the Code de Procédure Pénale (as amended by the law of 23 June 1989) provides for "Demandes en Révision"; In Germany, Section 359 et seq. of the German Code of Criminal Procedure 1987 (as amended) provides for "re-opening"; In Italy, Articles 629-647 of the Codice de Procedura Penale provides for review; and in Spain Article 954 of La Ley de Enjuiciamiento Criminal provides for "Revision".

⁵⁸ Ibid., at 30.

a distinction exists between a fact and evidence of that fact. The mere subsequent discovery of evidence of a fact which was known at trial is not itself a new fact within the meaning of Rule 119 of the Rules.⁵⁹

43. The Appeals Chamber would also point out at this stage, that although the substantive issue differed, in Prosecutor v. Dražen Erdemović,⁶⁰ the Appeals Chamber undertook to warn both parties that “[t]he appeal process of the International Tribunal is not designed for the purpose of allowing parties to remedy their own failings or oversights during trial or sentencing”. The Appeals Chamber confirms that it notes and adopts both this observation and the test established in Prosecutor v. Duško Tadić in consideration of the matter before it now.

44. The Appeals Chamber notes the submissions made by both parties on the criteria, and the differences which emerge. In particular it notes the fact that the Prosecutor places the new facts she submits into two categories (paragraph 15 above), the Appellant in turn asking the Appeals Chamber to reject this submission as an attempt by the Prosecutor to classify “old facts” as “new facts” (paragraph 31 above). In considering the “new facts” submitted by the Prosecutor, the Appeals Chamber applies the test outlined above and confirms that it considers, as was submitted by the Prosecutor, that a “new fact” cannot be considered as failing to satisfy the criteria simply because it occurred before the trial. What is crucial is satisfaction of the criteria which the Appeals Chamber has established will apply. If a “new” fact satisfies these criteria, and could have been a decisive factor in reaching the decision, the Appeals Chamber can review the Decision.

2. Admissibility

45. The Appellant pleads that the Prosecutor's Motion for Review is inadmissible, because by virtue of Article 25 of the Statute only the Prosecutor or a convicted person may seize the Tribunal with a motion for review of the sentence. In the Appellant's view, the reference to a convicted person means that this article applies only after a conviction has been delivered. According to the counsel of the Appellant:

Rule 120 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence is not intended for revision or review before conviction, but after ... a proper trial.⁶¹

⁵⁹ Ibid., at 32.

⁶⁰ Judgement, Case no IT-96-22-A, 7 October 1997 at § 15.

⁶¹ Transcript of the hearing of 22 February 2000 (“transcript”), p.134.

As there was no trial in this case, there is no basis for seeking a review.

46. The Prosecutor responds that the reference to "the convicted person or the Prosecutor" in the said article serves solely to spell out that either of the two parties may seek review, not that there must have been a conviction before the article could apply. If a decision could be reviewed only following a conviction, no injustice stemming from an unwarranted acquittal could ever be redressed. In support of her interpretation, the Prosecutor compares Article 25 with Article 24, which also refers to persons convicted and to the Prosecutor being entitled to lodge appeals. She argued that it was common ground that the Prosecutor could appeal against a decision of acquittal, which would not be the case if the interpretation submitted by the Appellant was accepted.

47. Both Article 24 (which relates to appellate proceedings) and Article 25 of the Statute, expressly refer to a convicted person. However, Rule 72D and consistent decisions of both Tribunals⁶² demonstrate that a right of appeal is also available in inter alia the case of dismissal of preliminary motions brought before a Trial Chamber, which raised an objection based on lack of jurisdiction.⁶³ Such appeals are on interlocutory matters and therefore by definition do not involve a remedy available only following conviction. Accordingly, it is the Appeals Chamber's view that the intention was not to interpret the Rules restrictively in the sense suggested by the Appellant, such that availability of the right to apply for review is only triggered on conviction of the accused; the Appeals Chamber will not accept the narrow interpretation of the Rules submitted by the Appellant. If the Appellant were correct that there could be no review unless there has been a conviction, it would follow that there could be no appeal from acquittal for the same reason. Appeals from acquittals have been allowed before the Appeals Chamber of the ICTY. The Appellant's logic is not therefore correct. Furthermore, in this case, the Appellant himself had recourse to the mechanism of interlocutory appeals which would not have been successful had the Chamber accepted the arguments he is now putting forward.

48. The Appeals Chamber accordingly subscribes to the Prosecutor's reasoning. Inclusion of the reference to the "Prosecutor" and the " convicted person" in the wording of the article indicates that each of the parties may seek review of a decision, not that the provision is to apply only after a conviction has been delivered.

⁶² i.e. the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR).

⁶³ Rule 72(D) of the Rules. See also the additional provisions for appeal provided in Rules 65(D), 77D and 91(C) of the Rules, and in Rules 72, 73, 77(J), 65(D), 91(C) of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the ICTY, as pointed out in the Reply at §§ 11.

49. The Chamber considers it important to note that only a final judgement may be reviewed pursuant to Article 25 of the Statute and to Rule 120⁶⁴. The parties submitted pleadings on the final or non-final nature of the Decision in connection with the request for reconsideration. The Chamber would point out that a final judgement in the sense of the above-mentioned articles is one which terminates the proceedings; only such a decision may be subject to review. Clearly, the Decision of 3 November 1999 belongs to that category, since it dismissed the indictment against the Appellant and terminated the proceedings.

50. The Appeals Chamber therefore has jurisdiction to review its Decision pursuant to Article 25 of the Statute and to Rule 120.

3. Merits

51. With respect to this Motion for Review, the Appeals Chamber begins by confirming its Decision of 3 November 1999 on the basis of the facts it was founded on. As a judgement by the Appeals Chamber, the Decision may be altered only if new facts are discovered which were not known at the time of the trial or appeal proceedings and which could have been a decisive factor in the decision. Pursuant to Article 25 of the Statute, in such an event the parties may submit to the Tribunal an application for review of the judgement, as in the instant case before the Chamber.

52. The Appeals Chamber confirms that in considering the facts submitted to it by the Prosecutor as "new facts", it applies the criteria drawn from the relevant provisions of the Statute and Rules as laid down above. The Chamber considers first whether the Prosecutor submitted new facts which were not known at the time of the proceedings before the Chamber, and which could have been a decisive factor in the decision, pursuant to Article 25 of the Statute. It then considers the condition introduced by Rule 120, that the new facts not be known to the party concerned or not be discoverable due diligence notwithstanding. If the Chamber is satisfied, it accordingly reviews its decision in the light of such new facts.

⁶⁴ In this respect, the Appeals Chamber does not agree with the Decision on the Alternative Request for Renewed Consideration of Delalić's Motion for an Adjournment until 22 June or Request for Issue of Subpoenas to Individuals and Requests for Assistance to the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina (IT-96-

53. In considering these issues, the Appellant's detention may be divided into three periods. The first, namely the period where the Appellant was subject to the extradition procedure, starts with his arrest by the Cameroonian authorities on 15 April 1996 and ends on 21 February 1997 with the decision of the Court of Appeal of the Centre of Cameroon rejecting the request for extradition from the Rwandan government. The second, the period relating to the transfer decision, runs from the Rule 40 request for the Appellant's provisional detention, through his transfer to the Tribunal's detention unit on 19 November 1997. The third period begins with the arrival of the Appellant at the detention unit on 19 November 1997 and ends with his initial appearance on 23 February 1998.

(a) First period (15.4.1996 – 21.2.1997)

54. The Appeals Chamber considers that several elements submitted by the Prosecutor in support of her Motion for Review are evidence rather than facts. The elements presented in relation to the first period consist of transcripts of proceedings before the Cameroonian courts: on 28 March 1996 ; 29 March 1996 ; 17 April 1996 and 3 May 1996.⁶⁵ It is manifest from the transcript of 3 May 1996 that the Tribunal's request was discussed⁶⁶ at that hearing. The Appellant addressed the court and opposed Rwanda's request for extradition, stating that, « c'est le tribunal international qui est compétent »⁶⁷. The Appeals Chamber considers that it may accordingly be presumed that the Appellant was informed of the nature of the crimes he was wanted for by the Prosecutor. This was a new fact for the Appeals Chamber. The Decision is based on the fact that:

l'Appelant a été détenu pendant une durée totale de 11 mois avant d'être informé de la nature générale des chefs d'accusation que le Procureur avait retenus contre lui.⁶⁸

The information now before the Chamber demonstrates that, on the contrary, the Appellant knew the general nature of the charges against him by 3 May 1996 at the latest. He thus spent at most 18 days in detention without being informed of the reasons therefor.

21-T, 22 June 1998), which suggests that interlocutory decisions can be subject to review. The Appeals Chamber confirms that the law is as stated above.

⁶⁵ Annexes 8, 9 and 11 to the Motion for Review.

⁶⁶ On page 3 of the transcript of 3 May, the Public Prosecutor explains that he is waiting for "the Tribunal to send us the relevant documentation (« que le Tribunal International nous procure les documents »).

55. The Appeals Chamber considers that such a time period violates the Appellant's right to be informed without delay of the charges against him. However, this violation is patently of a different order than the one identified in the Decision whereby the Appellant was without any information for 11 months.

(b) Second period (21.2.1997 – 19.11.1997)

56. With respect to the second period, the one relative to the transfer decision, several elements are submitted to the Chamber's scrutiny as new facts. They consist of Annexes 1 to 7, 10 and 12 to the Motion for Review. The Chamber considers the following to be material:

1. The report by Judge Mballe of the Supreme Court of Cameroon.⁶⁹ In his report, Justice Mballe explains that the request by the Prosecutor pursuant to Article 40 bis was transmitted immediately to the President of the Republic for him to sign a legislative decree authorising the accused's transfer. As he sees it, if the legislative decree could be signed only on 21 October 1997 that was due to the pressure exerted by the Rwandan authorities on Cameroon for the extradition of detainees to Kigali. He adds that in any event this semi-political semi-judicial extradition procedure was not the one that should have been followed.
2. A statement by David Scheffer, ambassador-at-large for war crimes issues, of the United States.⁷⁰ Mr. Scheffer described his involvement in the Appellant's case between September and November 1997. In his statement, Mr. Scheffer explains that the signing of the Presidential legislative decree was delayed owing to the elections scheduled for October 1997, and that Mr. Bernard Muna of the Prosecutor's Office asked Mr. Scheffer to intervene to speed up the transfer. He went on to say that, subsequent to that request, the United States Embassy made several representations to the Government of Cameroon in this regard between September and November 1997. Mr. Scheffer says he also wrote to the Government on 13 September 1997 and that around 24 October 1997 the Cameroonian authorities notified the United States Embassy of their willingness to effect the transfer.

57. In the Appeals Chamber's view a relevant new fact emerges from this information. In its Decision, the Chamber determined on the basis of the evidence adduced at the time that "Cameroon was willing to transfer the Appellant"⁷¹, as there was no proof to the contrary. The above information however goes to show that Cameroon had not been prepared to effect its transfer before 24 October 1997. This fact is new. The request pursuant to Article 40 bis had been wrongly subject to an extradition process, when under Article 28 of the Statute all States had an obligation to co-operate with the Tribunal. The President of Cameroon had elections forthcoming, which could not prompt him to accede to such a request. And it was the involvement of the United States, in the person of Mr. Scheffer, which in the end led to the transfer.

58. The new fact, that Cameroon was not prepared to transfer the Appellant prior to the date on which he was actually delivered to the Tribunal's detention unit, would have had a significant impact on the Decision had it been known at the time, given that, in the Decision, the Appeals Chamber drew its conclusions with regard to the Prosecutor's negligence in part from the fact that nothing prevented the transfer of the Appellant save the Prosecutor's failure to act:

It is also clear from the record that the Prosecutor made no efforts to have the Appellant transferred to the Tribunal's detention unit until after he filed the writ of habeas corpus. Similarly, the Prosecutor has made no showing that such efforts would have been futile. There is nothing in the record that indicates that Cameroon was not willing to transfer the Appellant. Rather it appears that the Appellant was simply forgotten about.⁷²

The Appeals Chamber considered that the human rights of the Appellant were violated by the Prosecutor during his detention in Cameroon. However, the new facts show that, during this second period, the violations were not attributable to the Prosecutor.

(c) Third period (19.11.1997 – 23.2.1998)

59. In her Motion for Review, the Prosecutor submitted few elements relating to the third period, that is the detention in Arusha. However, on 16 February 2000 she lodged ⁷¹ Decision, §59.

⁷² Decision, §96 (emphasis added).

additional material in this regard, along with a motion for deferring the time-limits imposed for her to submit new facts. Having examined the Prosecutor's request and the Registrar's memorandum relative thereto as well as the Appellant's written response lodged on 28 February 2000⁷³, the Appeals Chamber decides to accept this additional information.

60. The material submitted by the Prosecutor consists of a letter to the Registrar dated 11 February 2000, and annexes thereto. A relevant fact emerges from it. The letter and its annexes indicate that Mr. Nyaberi, counsel for the defence, entered into talks with the Registrar in order to set a date for the initial appearance. Several provisional dates were discussed. Problems arose with regard to the availability of judges and of defence counsel. Annex C to the Registrar's letter indicates that Mr. Nyaberi assented to the initial appearance taking place on 3 February 1997. This was not challenged by the defence at the hearing.

61. The assent of the defence counsel to deferring the initial appearance until 3 February 1997 is a new fact for the Appeals Chamber. During the proceedings before the Chamber, only the judicial recess was offered by way of explanation for the 96-day period which elapsed between the Appellant's transfer and his initial appearance, and this was rejected by the Chamber. There was no suggestion whatsoever that the Appellant had assented to any part of that schedule.

There is no evidence that the Appellant was afforded an opportunity to appear before an independent Judge during the period of the provisional detention and the Appellant contends that he was denied this opportunity.⁷⁴

62. The decision by the Appeals Chamber in respect of the period of detention in Arusha is based on a 96-day lapse between the Appellant's transfer and his initial appearance. The new fact relative hereto, the defence counsel's agreeing to a hearing being held on 3 February 1997, reduces that lapse to 20 days - from 3 to 23 February. The Chamber considers that this is still a substantial delay and that the Appellant's rights have still been violated. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that the period during which these violations took place is less extensive than it appeared at the time of the Decision.

⁷⁴ Decision, §69.

(d) Were the new facts known to the Prosecutor?

63. Rule 120 introduces a condition which is not stated in Article 25 of the Statute which addresses motions for review. According to Rule 120 a party may submit a motion for review to the Chamber only if the new fact "was not known to the moving party at the time of the proceedings before a Chamber, and could not have been discovered through the exercise of due diligence" (emphasis added).

64. The new facts identified in the first two periods were not known to the Chamber at the time of its Decision but they may have been known to the Prosecutor or at least they could have been discovered. With respect to the second period, the Prosecutor was not unaware that Cameroon was unwilling to transfer the Appellant, especially as it was her deputy, Mr. Muna, who sought Mr. Scheffer's intervention to facilitate the process. But evidently it was not known to the Chamber at the time of the Appeal proceedings. On the contrary, the elements before the Chamber led it to the opposite finding, which was an important factor in its conclusion that "the Prosecutor has failed with respect to her obligation to prosecute the case with due diligence."⁷⁵

65. In the wholly exceptional circumstances of this case, and in the face of a possible miscarriage of justice, the Chamber construes the condition laid down in Rule 120, that the fact be unknown to the moving party at the time of the proceedings before a Chamber, and not discoverable through the exercise of due diligence, as directory in nature. In adopting such a position, the Chamber has regard to the circumstance that the Statute itself does not speak to this issue.

66. There is precedent for taking such an approach. Other reviewing courts, presented with facts which would clearly have altered an earlier decision, have felt bound by the interests of justice to take these into account, even when the usual requirements of due diligence and unavailability were not strictly satisfied. While it is not in the interests of justice that parties be encouraged to proceed in a less than diligent manner, "courts cannot close their eyes to injustice on account of the facility of abuse"⁷⁶.

⁷⁵ Decision, §101.

⁷⁶ Berggren v Mutual Life Insurance Co., 231 Mass. at 177. The full passage reads:

"The mischief naturally flowing from retrials based upon the discovery of alleged new evidence leads to the establishment of a somewhat stringent practice against granting such motions unless upon a survey of the

67. The Court of Appeal of England and Wales had to consider a situation not unlike that currently before the Appeals Chamber in the matter of Hunt and Another v Atkin.⁷⁷ In that case, a punitive order was made against a firm of solicitors for having taken a certain course of action. It emerged that the solicitors were in possession of information that justified their actions to a certain extent, and which they had failed to produce on an earlier occasion, despite enquiries from the court. As in the current matter, the moving party (the solicitors) claimed that the court's enquiries had been unclear, and that they had not fully understood the nature of the evidence to be presented. The Judge approached the question as follows:

I hope I can be forgiven for taking a very simplistic view of this situation. What I think I have to ask myself is this: if these solicitors ... had produced a proper affidavit on the last occasion containing the information which is now given to me ... would I have made the order in relation to costs that I did make? It is a very simplistic approach, but I think it is probably necessary in this situation.

He concluded that he would not have made the same order, and so allowed the fresh evidence and ordered a retrial. The Court of Appeal upheld his decision.

68. Faced with a similar problem, the Supreme Court of Canada has held that the requirements of due diligence and unavailability are to be applied less strictly in criminal than in civil cases. In the leading case of McMartin v The Queen, the court held, per Ritchie J, that:

In all the circumstance, if the evidence is considered to be of sufficient strength that it might reasonably affect the verdict of the jury, I do not think it should be excluded on the ground that reasonable diligence was not exercised to obtain it at or before the trial.⁷⁸

69. The Appeals Chamber does not cite these examples as authority for its actions in the strict sense. The International Tribunal is a unique institution, governed by its own Statute and by the provisions of customary international law, where these can be discerned. However, the Chamber notes that the problems posed by the Request for Review have been considered by other jurisdictions, and that the approach adopted by the Appeals Chamber here is not unfamiliar to those separate and independent systems. To reject the facts whole case a miscarriage of justice is likely to result if a new trial is denied. This is the fundamental test, in aid of which most if not all the rules upon the matter from time to time alluded to have been formulated. Ease in obtaining new trials would offer temptations to the securing of fresh evidence to supply former deficiencies. But courts cannot close their eyes to injustice on account of facility of abuse'."

⁷⁷ Court of Appeal (Civil Division) 6 May 1964.

presented by the Prosecutor, in the light of their impact on the Decision, would indeed be to close ones eyes to reality.

70. With regard to the third period, the Appeals Chamber remarks that, although a set of the elements submitted by the Prosecutor on 16 February 2000 were available to her prior to that date, according to the Registrar's memorandum, Annex C was not one of them. It must be deduced that the fact that the defence counsel had given his consent was known to the Prosecutor at the time of the proceedings before the Appeals Chamber.

4. Conclusion

71. The Chamber notes that the remedy it ordered for the violations the Appellant was subject to is based on a cumulation of elements:

... the fundamental rights of the Appellant were repeatedly violated. What may be worse, it appears that the Prosecutor's failure to prosecute this case was tantamount to negligence. We find this conduct to be egregious and, in light of the numerous violations, conclude that the only remedy for such prosecutorial inaction and the resultant denial of his rights is to release the Appellant and dismiss the charges against him.⁷⁹

The new facts diminish the role played by the failings of the Prosecutor as well as the intensity of the violation of the rights of the Appellant. The cumulative effect of these elements being thus reduced, the reparation ordered by the Appeals Chamber now appears disproportionate in relation to the events. The new facts being therefore facts which could have been decisive in the Decision, in particular as regards the remedy it orders, that remedy must be modified.

72. The Prosecutor has submitted that it has suffered "material prejudice" from the non compliance by the Appeals Chamber with the Rules and that consequently it is entitled to relief as provided in Rule 5. As the Appeals Chamber believes that this issue is not relevant to the Motion for Review and as the Appeals Chamber has in any event decided to review its Decision, it will not consider this issue further.

⁷⁹ Decision, §106.

B. RECONSIDERATION

73. The essential basis on which the Prosecutor sought a reconsideration of the previous Decision, as distinguished from a review, was that she was not given a proper hearing on the issues passed on in that Decision. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in the contention and accordingly rejects the request for reconsideration.

VI. CONCLUSION

74. The Appeals Chamber reviews its Decision in the light of the new facts presented by the Prosecutor. It confirms that the Appellant's rights were violated, and that all violations demand a remedy. However, the violations suffered by the Appellant and the omissions of the Prosecutor are not the same as those which emerged from the facts on which the Decision is founded. Accordingly, the remedy ordered by the Chamber in the Decision, which consisted in the dismissal of the indictment and the release of the Appellant, must be altered.

VII. DISPOSITION

75. For these reasons, the APPEALS CHAMBER reviews its Decision of 3 November 1999 and replaces its Disposition with the following:

- 1) ALLOWS the Appeal having regard to the violation of the rights of the Appellant to the extent indicated above;
- 2) REJECTS the application by the Appellant to be released;
- 3) DECIDES that for the violation of his rights the Appellant is entitled to a remedy, to be fixed at the time of judgement at first instance, as follows:
 - a) If the Appellant is found not guilty, he shall receive financial compensation;
 - b) If the Appellant is found guilty, his sentence shall be reduced to take account of the violation of his rights.

DECLARATION OF JUDGE LAL CHAND VOHRAH

1. I would like to reiterate that I fully agree with the conclusions of the Appeals Chamber in the present decision and with the disposition that follows this Review. This agreement, however, calls for a few observations on my part. In the original decision the Appeals Chamber invoked the abuse of process doctrine. In the light of the facts which were then before it, the Chamber found that to proceed with the trial of the Appellant in the face of the egregious violations of his rights would be unjust to him and injurious to the integrity of the judicial process of the Tribunal. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber decided that the proceedings against the Appellant should be discontinued.

2. In its previous decision, the Appeals Chamber proceeded on the basis of, inter alia, its finding that the Prosecutor was responsible for the delays of which the Appellant complained. In this Review a different picture has been shown by the disclosure of new facts which now diminish substantially the blameworthiness attributed to the Prosecutor on the ground of lack of diligence, and the seriousness of the violations suffered by the Appellant. Had the Appeals Chamber been apprised of these facts on appeal, the original decision would have been different and the abuse of process doctrine would not have been called in aid and applied with all the vigour that was implicit in the "with prejudice" order that was made.

3. I must say that I have had the benefit of reading the Declaration in draft of my brother Judge Nieto-Navia and would like to state that I subscribe fully to the views he has expressed therein on the overriding principle relating to the independence of the judiciary (in the light of the considerations which the Prosecutor and the Representative of the Government of Rwanda as amicus curiae have, perhaps unwittingly, asked the Appeals Chamber to take into account), and on the principles of human rights.

4. In conclusion, I am satisfied that there are new facts which now require that the previous decision be modified in the way stated in the disposition of the present decision.

RECEIVED

DECLARATION OF JUDGE RAFAEL NIETO-NAVIA

2000 APR 10 A 10:23

1. It is necessary to consider the role of the Tribunal in the context of its mandate in Rwanda as dispenser of justice and the effect, if any, of politics on its work in prosecuting those responsible for genocide and other serious violations of international humanitarian law.

2. This issue was raised specifically during the oral hearing on this matter, in Arusha, on 22 February 2000 by the Chief Prosecutor. It is expedient to set out the relevant section:

"Let me just say a few words with respect to the government of Rwanda. The government of Rwanda reacted very seriously in a tough manner to the decision of 3 November 1999. It was a politically motivated decision, which is understandable. It can only be understood if one is cognisant with the situation, if one is aware of what happened in Rwanda in 1994. I also notice that, well, it was the Prosecutor that had no visa to travel to Rwanda. It was the Prosecutor who was unable to go to her office in Kigali. It was the Prosecutor who could not be received by the Rwandan authorities. In November, after your decision, there was no co-operation, no collaboration with the office of the Prosecutor. In other words, justice, as dispensed by this Tribunal was paralysed. It was the trial of Baglishima which had to be adjourned because the Rwandan government did not allow 16 witnesses to appear before this Court. In other words, they were not allowed to leave the territory of Rwanda. Fortunately, things have improved currently, and we again enjoy the support of the government. Why? Because we were able to show our good will, our willingness to continue with our work based on the mandate entrusted to us. However, your Honours, due account has to be taken of that fact. Whether we want it or not, we must come to terms with the fact that our ability to continue with our prosecution and investigations depend on the government of Rwanda. That is the reality that we face. What is the reality? Either Barayagwiza can be tried by this Tribunal, in the alternative; or the only other solution that you have is for Barayagwiza to be handed over to the state of Rwanda to his natural judge, judex naturalis. Otherwise I am afraid, as we say in Italian, possiamo chiudere la baracca. In other words we can as well put the key to that door, close the door and then open that of the prison. And in that case the Rwandan government will not be involved in any manner"¹

3. The Prosecutor maintained that after the Decision in the instant case was rendered by the Appeals Chamber on 3 November 1999 (hereinafter "the Decision"), justice before the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda was effectively suspended as a result of action taken by the Rwandan government, who reacted essentially to what they viewed as an adverse decision of the Appeals Chamber.

4. It would be naïve to assert that the Tribunal does not depend on the co-operation of States for it to fulfil its duties. Indeed the Appeals Chamber itself has held that

“The International Tribunal must turn to States if it is effectively to investigate crimes, collect evidence, summon witnesses and have indictees arrested and surrendered to the International Tribunal.”²

Without State co-operation, the work of the Tribunal would be rendered impossible.

5. In order to cater for this, and aware of the need to ensure effective and ongoing co-operation, Article 28 of the Statute compels States to co-operate with the Tribunal “in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of committing serious violations of international humanitarian law”³. This is a general obligation incumbent on all States but the Rwandan government is specially obliged, because the Tribunal was established “for the sole purpose of prosecuting persons responsible for genocide and other serious violations of International Humanitarian Law committed in the territory of Rwanda”⁴. In addition, being the territory in which most of the crimes alleged took place, the co-operation of the Rwandan government with the Tribunal in fulfilment of their obligations as prescribed by Article 28, is paramount.

6. This obligation of the Rwandan government is absolute. It is an obligation which cannot be overridden in particular circumstances by considerations of convenience or politics.

7. In my view, the Appeals Chamber, although mindful of this essential need for co-operation by the Rwandan government, is also mindful of the role the Tribunal plays in this process and therefore I refute most strenuously the suggestion that in reaching decisions, political considerations should play a persuasive or governing role, in order to assuage States and ensure co-operation to achieve the long-term goals of the Tribunal. On the contrary, in no circumstances would such considerations cause the Tribunal to compromise its judicial independence and integrity. This is a Tribunal whose decisions must be taken, solely with the intention of both implementing the law and guaranteeing justice to the case before it, not as a result of political pressure and threats to withhold co-operation being exerted by an angry government.

³ Article 28.1. Security Council Resolution 955 (1994) (S/RES/955) (1994) § 2, also states that “all states shall cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and its organs in accordance with the present resolution and the Statute of the International Tribunal and that consequently all States shall take any measures necessary under their domestic law to implement the provisions of the present resolution and the Statute, including the obligation of States to comply with requests for assistance or orders issued by a Trial Chamber under Article 28 of the Statute, and requests States to keep the Secretary-General informed of such measures.”

8. Faced with non co-operation by a State and having exhausted the facilities available to it to ensure co-operation, a clear mechanism has been provided in the Statute and Rules⁵ whereby the Tribunal may make a finding concerning the particular State's failure to observe the provisions of the Statute or the Rules and thereafter may report this finding to the Security Council.⁶ It then falls to the Security Council to determine appropriate action to take against the State in question.⁷ The involvement of the Tribunal will cease at the point of referral to the Security Council and indeed its position is safeguarded further by the stipulation, as has been held, that "the finding by the International Tribunal must not include any recommendations or suggestions as to the course of action the Security Council may wish to take as a consequence of that finding."⁸ This mechanism ensures that clear separation in roles is maintained and more importantly that the independence of the Tribunal cannot be called into question. Its mandate is the prosecution of those responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law⁹ and it must do so in an impartial and unbiased fashion. It must not qualify this independence under any circumstances.

9. The concept of "the separation of powers" plays a central role in national jurisdictions. This concept ensures that a clear division is maintained between the functions of the legislature, judiciary and executive and provides that "one branch is not permitted to encroach on the domain or exercise the powers of another branch."¹⁰ It ensures that the judiciary maintains a role apart from political considerations and safeguards its independence.

⁵ E.g., Rule 54 includes the power to issue orders, summonses, subpoenas, warrants and transfer orders. See Prosecutor v. Duško Tadić, Judgement, Case no. IT-94-1-A, 15 July 1999, § 52.

10. As a result, the judiciary holds a privileged position in national jurisdictions and is subjected to unceasing public scrutiny of its activities. This however is accepted as being a necessary component of its existence so that public confidence in the system can be maintained.

11. In consideration of this issue, I note the importance accorded to the principle by the United Nations, in appointing a Special Rapporteur on the Independence of Judges and Lawyers and by the General Assembly, in the promulgation of the 1985 UN Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary.¹¹ The Principles as a whole are of the utmost importance, but it serves now to highlight the following provisions:

“1. The independence of the judiciary shall be guaranteed by the State and enshrined in the Constitution or the laws of the country. It is the duty of all government and other institutions to respect and observe the independence of the judiciary;

2. The judiciary shall decide matters before it impartially, on the basis of facts and in accordance with the law, without any restrictions, improper influences, inducements, pressures, threats or interferences, direct or indirect, from any quarter or for any reason.¹²”

The principle of the independence of the judiciary is overriding and should at all times take precedence faced with any conflict, political pressures or interference. The proposition put forward by the Prosecutor that political considerations can play a role in the Appeals Chamber's decision making and actions is not acceptable.

12. Indeed it is important to note the remark made by Robert H. Jackson, Chief of Counsel for the United States at the International Military Tribunal, sitting at Nuremberg, in his opening speech before the Tribunal on 21 November 1945:

¹¹ Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, Milan, 26 August - 6 September 1985: Report prepared by the Secretariat Chap.IV, sect. B, as referred to in GA Resolution A/RES/40/146 of 13 December 1985 “Human Rights in the Administration of Justice”. The Resolution was also pointed out by the Appellant in the Oral Hearing on 22 February 2000 and recorded at page 213 of the Transcript.

¹² Ibid., § 1, 2. Note also, the UN 1990 Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers adopted by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, at its meeting in Havana, Cuba from 27 August to 7 September 1990. The General Assembly has welcomed these principles and invites governments to respect them and to take them into account within the framework of their national legislation and practice (A/RES/45/166 of 18 December 1990).

"The United States believed that the law has long afforded standards by which a juridical hearing could be conducted to make sure that we punish only the right men and for the right reasons"¹³

13. Political reasons are not the right reasons. The Tribunal is endowed with a Statute, which ensures that trials take place by means of a transparent process, wherein widely accepted international standards of criminal law are applied. Central to this process is the maintenance of human rights standards of the highest level, to ensure that the basic Rule of Law is upheld.

14. The basic human right of an accused to be tried before an independent and impartial tribunal is recognised also in the major human rights treaties and is one to which the Tribunal accords the utmost importance.¹⁴ Indeed the Appeals Chamber in a case before the ICTY, held in consideration of its function that:

"For a Tribunal such as this one to be established according to the rule of law, it must be established in accordance with the proper international standards; it must provide all the guarantees of fairness, justice and even-handedness, in full conformity with internationally recognised human rights instruments"¹⁵

15. It must not be forgotten that the Rwandan government itself has recognised the importance of impartial justice. In requesting the establishment of a Tribunal by the international community, the Rwandan government stated that it supported an international tribunal because of its desire to avoid "any suspicion of its wanting to organise speedy vengeful justice".¹⁶ Accordingly, this Tribunal's fundamental aim is to vindicate the highest standards of international criminal justice, in providing an impartial and equitable system of justice.

¹⁴ Article 14 (1) of the International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights, 1966 ("ICCPR") provides, inter alia, that "everyone shall be entitled to a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law". Similarly, Article 6(1) of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (1950) ("ECHR"), protects the right to a fair trial and requires, inter alia, that cases be heard by an "independent and impartial tribunal established by law," and Article 8(1) of the American Convention on Human Rights (1969) ("ACHR") provides that "[e]very person has the right to a hearing, with due guarantees and within a reasonable time, by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal, previously established by law."

16. But now the government of Rwanda has suggested that the Tribunal should convict all the indictees who come before it. It is wrong. The accused can be acquitted if the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that guilt has been proven beyond a reasonable doubt.¹⁷ Alternatively, the accused can be released on procedural grounds, as was the case in the Decision. In the application of impartial justice the role of the Tribunal is not simply to convict all those who appear before it, but to consider a case upholding the fundamental principles of human rights.

17. By virtue of Resolution 955 of 1994, the Security Council stated:

“Convinced that in the particular circumstances of Rwanda, the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law would enable this aim to be achieved and would contribute to the process of national reconciliation and to the restoration and maintenance of peace”,¹⁸

This was subsequently reiterated by Resolution 1165 of 1998, when the Security Council stated that it “remain[ed] convinced that in the particular circumstances of Rwanda, the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law will contribute to the process of national reconciliation and to the restoration and maintenance of peace in Rwanda and in the region”¹⁹. This aim can only be achieved by an independent Tribunal, mindful of the task entrusted to it by the international community.

18. Both Tribunals, ICTY and ICTR, find themselves in the midst of very emotive atmospheres and are charged with the duty to maintain their independence and transparency, as expected by the international community, preserving the norms of international human rights. The international community needs to be sure that justice is being served but that it is being served through the application of their Rules and Statutes, which are applied in a consistent and unbiased manner. I recall the words of the Zimbabwean Court in the Mlambo case, as cited in the Decision:

“The charges against the applicant are far from trivial and there can be no doubt that it would be in the best interests of society to proceed with the trial of those who are charged with the commission of serious crimes. Yet that trial can only be undertaken if the guarantee under.... the Constitution has not been infringed.”²⁰

Difficult as this may be for some to understand, these are the principles which govern proceedings before this Tribunal at all times, even if application of these principles on occasion renders results which for some, are hard to swallow.

19. I wish to draw attention to the matter of res judicata, which was referred to by both the Appellant and the Prosecutor in their written briefs²¹. I wish to briefly discuss the applicability of this principle to the case in hand, noting that the Appeals Chamber has now reviewed its Decision.

20. The principle of res judicata is well settled in international law as being one of those “general principles of law recognized by civilised nations”, referred to in Article 38 of the Statutes of the Permanent Court of International Justice (“PCIJ”) and the International Court of Justice (“ICJ”).²² As such, it is a principle which should be applied by the Tribunal. The principle can be enunciated as meaning that, once a case has been decided by a final and valid judgement rendered by a competent tribunal, the same issue may not be disputed again between the same parties before a court of law²³.

²³ Effect of Awards of Compensation made by the United Nations Administrative Tribunal, ICJ Reports 1954, p. 47.

21. The rationale behind the principle is that security is required in juridical relations. The determinative and obligatory character of a judgement prevents the parties from contemplating the possibility of not complying with the decision or alternatively from seeking the same or another court to decide in a different manner. At the same time it is understood that only final judgements are considered res judicata, as judgements of lower courts can generally take advantage of appellate proceedings.

22. The impact of the Appeals Chamber Decision is twofold. On the one hand the Appeals Chamber decided to allow an appeal²⁴ against a decision of Trial Chamber II²⁵ which dismissed a preliminary objection by the accused based on lack of personal jurisdiction, on the grounds inter alia, that the fundamental human rights of the accused to a fair and expeditious trial were violated as a result of his arrest and long detention in Cameroon before being transferred to the U.N. Detention Facilities in Arusha. On the other hand, the Decision "DISMISSE[D] THE INDICTMENT with prejudice to the Prosecutor."²⁶ This rendered the Decision final and definitive, as stated by the Appeals Chamber in its decision today.²⁷

23. The International Court of Justice has held:

"It is contended that the question of the Applicants' legal right or interest was settled by the [1962]²⁸ Judgement and cannot now be reopened. As regards the issue of preclusion, the Court finds it unnecessary to pronounce on various issues which have been raised in this connection, such as whether a decision on a preliminary objection constitutes a res judicata in the proper sense of that term, --whether it ranks as a "decision" for the purposes of Article 59 of the Court's Statute, or as "final" within the meaning of Article 60. The essential point is that a decision on a preliminary objection can never be preclusive of a matter appertaining to its merits, whether or not it has in fact been dealt with in connection with the preliminary objection".²⁹

24. In domestic jurisdictions a preliminary objection on lack of competence, raised by a party before a court does not prevent the matter being brought before the competent court. However, some decisions on preliminary points which are primarily within the competence of the court acquire the force of res judicata on the question decided and the court is bound by its own decisions.³⁰

25. In this Tribunal, Article 25 of the Statute opens up the possibility for review of “final” decisions, if certain criteria are satisfied. The Appeals Chamber has clearly explained this in its decision today. It is clear to me that if the Statute provides for a “final” decision to be reviewed, when a Chamber acts pursuant to this provision, the principle of res judicata does not apply.

26. Some common law systems consider that dismissal of an indictment with prejudice bars the right to bring an action again on the same issue and is, therefore, res judicata.³¹ The instant case has not been litigated on the merits. What seems to be “final” is the issue of the prejudice to the Prosecutor, because the Prosecutor was barred from bringing the case before the Tribunal again. As I understood it, the Decision considered the finding of “prejudice to the Prosecutor” as a form of punishment due to the violations of fundamental human rights committed by the Prosecutor against the Appellant.³²

27. If the new facts brought before the Appeals Chamber under Article 25 mean that the Prosecutor is responsible for less extensive violations (as accepted by the Appeals Chamber today),³³ she cannot be punished because of them, the dismissal cannot be with prejudice to her and hence the Decision must be amended. That is what we are deciding today.

28. Human rights treaties provide that when a state³⁴ violates fundamental human rights, it is obliged to ensure that appropriate domestic remedies are in place to put an end to such ³⁰ The distinction in the civil law systems between peremptory (which put an end to the procedure) and dilatory (which simply delay the procedure) preliminary objections is very useful.

³¹ This concept is unknown to civil law systems.

³² Supra note 20, § 76.

³⁴ In these treaties, the “subject-parties” are always States. See Article 2.1 ICCPR; Article 1 ECHR; Article 1.1 ACHR. The Inter-American Court of Human Rights held that “as far as concerns the human rights protected by the Convention, the jurisdiction of the organs established thereunder refer exclusively to the international responsibility of States and not to that of individuals” (International Responsibility for the Promulgation and Enforcement of Laws in Violation of the Convention (Articles 1 and 2 of the American Convention on Human Rights), Advisory Opinion OC-14/94 of December 9, 1994, Series A No. 14, § 56).

violations and in certain circumstances to provide for fair compensation to the injured party.³⁵

29. Although the Tribunal is not a State, it is following such a precedent to compensate the Appellant for the violation of his human rights. As it is impossible to turn back the clock, I think that the remedy decided by the Appeals Chamber fulfills the international requirements.

30. Finally, I wish to emphasise that the Appeals Chamber made its Decision, based on certain facts which were presented before it at that time. The new facts which are before the Appeals Chamber now, change its position. If these facts which the Appeals Chamber has concluded to be new facts and which are discussed in today's decision, had been before the Appeals Chamber when considering the Decision, it is my opinion that the Appeals Chamber would have reached a different decision at that time.

COURT REGISTRY
RECEIVED

SEPARATE OPINION OF JUDGE SHAHABUDDIN

1. This is an important case: it is not every day that a court overturns its previous decision to liberate an indicted person. This is what happens now. New facts justify and require that result. But possible implications for the working of the infant criminal justice system of the international community need to be borne in mind. Because of this, and also because I agreed with the previous decision, I believe that I should explain why I support the present decision to cancel out the principal effect of the former.

(i) The limits of the present hearing

2. Except on one point, I was not able to agree with the grounds on which the previous decision rested. However, the points on which I differed are not now open for discussion. This is because the present motion of the Prosecutor has to be dealt with by way of review and not by way of reconsideration. Under review, the motion has to be approached on the footing that the earlier findings of the Appeals Chamber stand, save to the extent to which it can be seen that those findings would themselves have been different had certain new facts been available to the Appeals Chamber when the original decision was made; under that procedure, it is not therefore possible to challenge the previous holdings of the Appeals Chamber as incorrect on the basis on which they were made. By contrast, under reconsideration, the appeal would have been reopened, with the result that that kind of challenge would have been possible, as I apprehend is desired by the prosecution. To cover all the requests made by the prosecution, it is thus necessary to say a word on its motion for reconsideration. I agree that the motion should not be granted. These are my reasons:

3. Decisions rendered within the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia ("ICTY") on the competence of a Chamber to reconsider a decided point vary from the exercise of a relatively free power of reconsideration to a denial of any such power based on the statement, made in Kordić, "that motions to reconsider are not provided for in the Rules and do not form part of the procedures of the International Tribunal”.¹ Where the decisions suggest a relatively free power of reconsideration, they concern something in the nature of an operationally passing position taken in the course of continuing proceedings; in such situations the Chamber remains seised of the matter and competent, not acting capriciously but observing due caution, to revise its position on the way to rendering the ultimate decision. In situations of more lasting consequence, it appears to me that the absence of rules does not conclude the issue as to how a judicial body should behave where complaint is made that its previous decision was fundamentally flawed, and more particularly where that body is a court of last resort, as is the Appeals Chamber. Not surprisingly, in elebići the Appeals Chamber of the ICTY introduced a qualification in stating that “in the absence of particular circumstances justifying a Trial Chamber or the Appeals Chamber to reconsider one of its decisions, motions for reconsideration do not form part of the procedure of the International Tribunal”.² The first branch of that statement is important, including its non-reproduction of the Kordić words “that motions to reconsider are not provided for in the Rules”: the implication of the omission seems to be that the fact that the Rules do not so provide is not by itself determinative of the issue whether or not the power of reconsideration exists in “particular circumstances”. Alternatively, the omitted words were not intended to deny the inherent jurisdiction of a judicial body to reconsider its decision in “particular circumstances”.

4. Circumscribed as they evidently are, it is hard, and perhaps not in the interest of the policy of the law, to attempt exhaustively to define “particular circumstances” which might justify reconsideration. It is clear, however, that such circumstances include a case in which the decision, though apparently res judicata, is void, and therefore non-existent in law, for the reason that a procedural irregularity has caused a failure of natural justice.³ An aspect of that position was put this way by the presiding member of the Appellate Committee of the British House of Lords:

In principle it must be that your Lordships, as the ultimate court of appeal, have power to correct any injustice caused by an earlier order of this House. There is no relevant statutory limitation on the jurisdiction of the House in this regard and therefore its inherent jurisdiction remains unfettered. In Cassell & Co Ltd v. Broome (No.2) [1972] 2 All ER 849, [1972] AC 1136 your Lordships varied an order for costs already made by the House in circumstances where the parties had not had a fair opportunity to address argument on the point.

However, it should be made clear that the House will not reopen any appeal save in circumstances where, through no fault of a party, he or she has been subjected to an unfair procedure. Where an order has been made by the House in a particular case there can be no question of that decision being varied or rescinded by a later order made in the same case just because it is thought that the first order is wrong.⁴

5. I understand this to mean that, certainly in the case of a court of last resort, there is inherent jurisdiction to reopen an appeal if a party had been “subjected to an unfair procedure”. I see no reason why the principle involved does not apply to criminal matters if a useful purpose can be served, particularly where, as here, the decision in question has not been acted upon.

6. I have referred to unfairness in procedure because it appears to me that this is the criterion which is attracted by the posture of the Prosecutor’s case. Was there such unfairness?

7. Whether a party was or was not “subjected to an unfair procedure” is a matter of substance, not technicality. If the party did not understand that an issue would be considered (which is the Prosecutor’s contention), that could found a claim that it was disadvantaged. But, provided that that was understood and that there was opportunity to respond, I do not see that the procedure was unfair merely because a Chamber considered an issue not raised by the parties. The interests involved are not merely those of the parties; certainly, they are not interests submitted by them to adjudication on a consensual jurisdictional basis; they include the interests of the international community and are intended to be considered by a court exercising compulsory jurisdiction. In *Erdemović*⁵ the Appeals Chamber raised, considered and decided issues not presented by the parties, observing that there was “nothing in the Statute or the Rules, nor in practices of international institutions or national judicial systems, which would confine its consideration of the appeal to the issues raised formally by the parties”.⁶

8. Further, a Chamber need not echo arguments addressed to it; its reasoning may be its own.⁷ When the present matter is examined, all that appears is that the Appeals Chamber in some cases used arguments other than those presented to it. The basic issue was one on which the parties had an opportunity to present their positions, namely, whether the rights of the appellant had been violated by undue delay so as to lead to lack of jurisdiction. For the reasons given below, I am satisfied that there is not any substance in the contention of the prosecution that it had no notice that certain questions would be determined. It is more to the point to say that the prosecution did not avail itself of opportunities to present its position on certain matters; in particular, it did not assist either the Trial Chamber or the Appeals Chamber with relevant material at the time when that assistance should have been given.

⁴ R v Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate and others, ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No 2), [1999] 1 All ER 577, HL, at pp. 585-586, per Lord Browne-Wilkinson.

⁵ IT-96-22-A, 7 October 1997, para. 16.

⁶ With respect, this can benefit from qualification in the case of the International Court of Justice. That court would be acting ultra petita if it decided issues (as distinguished from arguments concerning an issue) not presented by the parties, since the jurisdiction is consensual. See Sir Gerald Fitzmaurice, The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice, Vol. II (Cambridge, 1986), p. 531.

9. In short, there was no unfairness in procedure in this case. Accordingly, the previous decision of the Appeals Chamber cannot be set aside and the appeal reopened. It is thus not possible to accede to the Prosecutor's proposition, among others, that that decision was wrong when made and should for that reason be now changed.⁸

10. For the reasons given in today's judgment, the procedure of review is nevertheless available.⁹ As mentioned above, the possibility of revision which this opens up is however limited to consideration of the question whether the same decision would have been rendered if certain new facts had been at the disposal of the Appeals Chamber, and, if not, what is the decision which would then have been given.

(ii) The Prosecutor's complaint that she had no notice of the intention of the Appeals Chamber to deal with the question of the legality of the detention between transfer and initial appearance

11. Before moving on, I shall pause over the question, alluded to above, as to whether the prosecution availed itself of opportunities to present its position on certain points. The question may be considered illustratively in relation to the issue of detention between the appellant's transfer from Cameroon to the Tribunal's detention unit in Arusha and his initial appearance before a Trial Chamber, extending from 19 November 1997 to 23 February 1998. The prosecution takes the position, which it stresses, that it had no opportunity to address this issue because it did not know that the Appeals Chamber would be dealing with it. That, if correct, is a sufficiently weighty matter to justify reconsideration, as it would show that the prosecution was subjected to an unfair procedure in the Appeals Chamber. So it should be examined.

12. The prosecution submitted that the issue of delay between transfer and initial appearance was not argued by the appellant in the course of the oral proceedings in the Trial Chamber and was not included in his grounds of appeal. Although, as will be seen, the appellant did include a claim on the point in his motion, I had earlier made a similar observation, noting that, in the Trial Chamber, “no issue was presented as to delay between transfer and initial appearance”,¹⁰ that the “Trial Chamber was not given any reason to believe that there was such an issue”, and, in respect of the appeal proceedings, that it “does not appear that the Prosecutor thought that she was being called upon to meet an argument about delay between transfer and initial appearance”.¹¹ But it seems to me that, apart from the action of the appellant, account has to be taken of the action of the Appeals Chamber and that the position changed with the issuing by the latter of its scheduling order of 3 June 1999; that order, referred to below, clearly raised the matter. After the order was made, the appellant went back to the claim which he had originally raised; equally, the prosecution gave its reaction. Thus, in the event, the Appeals Chamber did not pass on the matter without affording an opportunity to the Prosecutor to address the point.

13. To fill out this brief picture, it is right to consider the factual basis of the proposition that the appellant did include a claim on the point in his motion. As I noted

¹⁰ Possibly, there was a misunderstanding as to the need for specific argument in the Trial Chamber, for the Presiding Judge said, as he properly could, “We have read the motion and the documents that have been attached to it so we have a general idea of what it is, so, counsel, if you may introduce your motion to highlight what you consider to be important issues that should get the Trial Chamber’s attention”. (See transcript, Trial Chamber, 11 September 1998, p. 4, Presiding Judge Sekule). Thus defence counsel was not expected to deal with each and every aspect of his written motion. He contended himself with speaking merely of “continued provisional detention” (ibid., pp. 12 and 14), and with referring to the “summary on the detention times” as set out in annexure DM2 to his motion and as explained below (ibid., p. 39).

¹¹ Separate opinion, 3 November 1999, p. 3, cited in part in the Brief in Support of the Prosecutor’s Motion for Review, 1 December 1999, p. 8, para. 51.

at page 1 of a separate opinion appended to the decision of the Appeals Chamber of 3 November 1999, in paragraphs 2 and 9 of the motion the appellant complained of "continued provisional detention". Viewing the time when that complaint was made (three months after the transfer), he was thus also complaining of the detention following on his transfer, inclusive of delay between transfer and initial appearance. In fact, as I also pointed out, annexure DM2 to his motion spoke of "98 days of detention after transfer and before initial appearance" (original emphasis, but actually 96 days). Further, in paragraph 11 of his brief in support of that motion he referred to Articles 7, 8, 9 and 10 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, relating inter alia to protection of the law and to freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention. More particularly, he also referred to Article 9 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights ("ICCPR"), stating that this required that "the accused should be brought before the court without delay". That was obviously a reference to paragraph 3 of Article 9 of the ICCPR which stipulates that "[a]nyone arrested or detained on a criminal charge shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorized by law to exercise judicial power and shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release". It follows that, in his motion, the appellant did make a complaint on the matter to the Trial Chamber.

14. Now, how did the prosecution react to the appellant's complaint? The complaint having been made in the motion, and the motion being heard seven months after it was brought, it seems to me that, by the time when the motion was heard, the prosecution should have been in possession of all material relevant to the issue whether there was undue delay between transfer and initial appearance; it also had an opportunity at that stage to present all of that material together with supporting arguments. The record shows that it did not do so.

15. In the Trial Chamber, the prosecution did not file a response to the appellant's motion in which the appellant complained of delay between transfer and initial appearance. Indeed, some part of the oral hearing before the Trial Chamber on 11 September 1998 was taken up with this very fact - that the prosecution had not submitted a reply, with the consequential difficulty, about which the appellant remonstrated, that he did not know exactly what issues the prosecution intended to challenge at the hearing before the Trial Chamber. In the words then used by his counsel, "... in an adversarial system we should not leave leeway for ambush".¹² In his reply, counsel for the prosecution simply said, "We didn't do it in this case and I have no explanation for that. ... we don't have an explanation for why we haven't followed our usual practice".¹³ In turn, the Presiding Judge, though not sanctioning the prosecution, noted that what was done was contrary to the established procedure.¹⁴ At the oral hearing before the Appeals Chamber on 22 February 2000, counsel for the prosecution took the position that there was no rule requiring the prosecution to file a response.¹⁵ Counsel for the prosecution before the Trial Chamber had earlier made the same point.¹⁶ They were both right. But that circumstance was not determinative. As the Presiding Judge of the Trial Chamber had made clear, it was the practice to file a response; and, as counsel for the prosecution later conceded at the oral hearing before the Appeals Chamber on 22 February 2000, the Presiding Judge "did draw the conclusion that [what was done] was contrary ... to the practice of the Tribunal".¹⁷ Indeed, at the hearing before the Trial Chamber on 11 September 1998, counsel for the prosecution accepted, as has been seen, that the failure of the prosecution to submit a written reply was contrary to the "usual practice" of the prosecution itself.

16. The failure of the prosecution to respond to the appellant's complaint of undue delay between transfer and initial appearance did not of course remove the complaint. The dismissal of the appellant's motion included dismissal of that complaint. The complaint and its dismissal formed part of the record before the Appeals Chamber. This being so, it appears to me that at this stage the question of substance is whether the Prosecutor knew that the Appeals Chamber intended to deal with the complaint, and, if so, whether the Prosecutor had an opportunity to address it. The answer to both questions is in the affirmative. This results from the Appeals Chamber's scheduling order of 3 June 1999, referred to above.

17. That order required the parties "to address the following questions and provide the Appeals Chamber with all relevant documentation:4). The reason for any delay between the transfer of the Appellant to the Tribunal and his initial appearance". The requisition was made on the stated basis that the Appeals Chamber needed "additional information to decide the appeal". At the oral hearing in the Appeals Chamber on 22 February 2000, a question from the bench to counsel for the Prosecutor was this: "Did the prosecution understand from that, that the Appeals Chamber was proposing to consider reasons for any delay between transfer of the Appellant and his initial appearance?".¹⁸ Counsel for the Prosecutor correctly answered in the affirmative. He also agreed that the prosecution did not object to the competence of the Appeals Chamber to consider the matter and did not ask for more time to respond to the request by the Appeals Chamber for additional information.¹⁹ In fact, in paragraphs 17-20 of its response of 21 June 1999, the prosecution sought to explain the delay in so far as it then said that it could, stating that it had no influence over the scheduling of the initial appearance of accused persons, that these matters lay with the Trial Chambers and the Registrar, that assignment of defence counsel was made only on 5 December 1997, and that there was a judicial holiday from 15 December 1997 to 15 January 1998. In stating these things (how adequate they were being a different matter), the prosecution fell to be understood as having accepted that the Appeals Chamber would be dealing one way or another with the question to which those things were a response.

¹⁷ Transcript, Appeals Chamber, 22 February 2000, p. 107.

18. Focusing on the issues as she saw them, the Prosecutor, as I understood her, submitted that the Appeals Chamber was confined to the issues presented by the parties. As indicated above, that is not entirely correct. The cases show that the leading principle is that the overriding task of the Tribunal is to discover the truth. Since this has to be done judicially, limits obviously exist as to permissible methods of search; and those limits have to be respected, for the Appeals Chamber is not an overseer. It cannot gratuitously intervene whenever it feels that something wrong was done: beyond the proper appellate boundaries, the decisions of the Trial Chamber are unquestionable. However, as is shown by Erdemović,²⁰ the Appeals Chamber can raise issues whether or not presented by a party, provided, I consider, that they lie within the prescribed grounds of appeal, that they arise from the record, and that the parties are afforded an opportunity to respond. I think that this was the position in this case.

19. As has been demonstrated above, the record before the Appeals Chamber included both a claim by the appellant that there was impermissible delay between transfer and initial appearance²¹ and dismissal by the Trial Chamber of the motion which included that claim. Where an issue lying within the prescribed grounds of appeal is raised on the record, the Appeals Chamber can properly require the parties to submit additional information on the point; there is not any basis for suggesting, as the Prosecutor has done, that in this case the Appeals Chamber went outside of the appropriate limits in search of evidence.

20. In conclusion, it appears to me that the substance of the matter is that the Prosecutor had notice of the intention of the Appeals Chamber to deal with the point, had an opportunity to address the point both before the Trial Chamber and the Appeals Chamber, and did address the point in her written response to the Appeals Chamber. In particular, the Prosecutor knew that the Appeals Chamber would be passing on the point and did not object to the competence of the Appeals Chamber to do so. Her approach fell to be understood as acquiescence in such competence. I accordingly return to my previous position that it is not possible to set aside the previous decision and to reopen the appeal, and that the only way of revisiting the matter is through the more limited method of review on the basis of discovery of new facts.

(iii) The Prosecutor's argument that the Appeals Chamber did not apply the proper test for determining whether there was a breach of the appellant's rights

21. In dealing with this argument by the Prosecutor, it would be useful to distinguish between the breach of a right and the remedy for a breach. The former will be dealt with in this section; the latter in the next.

22. An opinion which I appended to the decision given on 2 July 1998 by the Appeals Chamber of the ICTY in Prosecutor v. Kovačević included an observation to the effect that, because of the preparatory problems involved, the jurisprudence recognises that there is "need for judicial flexibility" in applying to the prosecution of war crimes the principle that criminal proceedings should be completed within a reasonable time. The prosecution correctly submits that, in determining whether there has been a breach of that principle, a court must weigh competing interests. As it was said in one case, the court "must balance the fundamental right of the individual to a fair trial within a reasonable time against the public interest in the attainment of justice in the context of the prevailing system of legal administration and the prevailing economic, social and cultural conditions to be found in" the territory concerned.²² To do this, the court "should assess such factors as the length of and reason for the delay, the defendant's assertion of his right, and prejudice to the defendant".²³ The reason for the delay could of course include the complexity of the case and the conduct of the prosecuting authorities as well as that of the court as a whole.

23. These criteria are correct; but I do not follow why it is thought that they were not applied by the Appeals Chamber. Their substance was considered in paragraphs 103-106 of the previous decision of the Appeals Chamber, footnote 268 whereof specifically referred to the leading cases of Barker v. Wingo and R. v. Smith, among others. Applying that jurisprudence in this case, it is difficult to see how the balance came out against the appellant. On the facts as they appeared to the Appeals Chamber, the delay was long; it was due to the Tribunal; no adequate reasons were given for it; the appellant repeatedly complained of it; and, there being nothing to rebut a reasonable presumption that it prejudiced his position, a fair inference could be drawn that it did.

24. The breach of the appellant's rights appears even more clearly when it is considered that the jurisprudence which produced principles about balancing competing interests developed largely, if not wholly, out of cases in which the accused was in fact brought before a judicial officer shortly after being charged, but in which, for one reason or another, the subsequent trial took a long time to approach completion. By contrast, the problem here is not that the proceedings had taken too long to complete, but that they had taken too long to begin. It is not suggested that those principles are irrelevant to the resolution of the present problem; what is suggested is that, in applying them to the present problem, the difference referred to has to be taken into account. To find a solution it is necessary to establish what is the proper judicial approach to detention in the early stages of a criminal case, and especially in the pre-arraignment phase.

²³ Barker v. Wingo, 407 US 514 (1972); and see R. v. Smith [1989] 2 Can. S.C.R. 1120, and Morin v. R. [1992] 1 S.C.R. 771.

25. The matter turns, it appears to me, on a distinction between the right of a person to a trial within a reasonable time and the right of a person to freedom from arbitrary interference with his liberty. The right to a trial within a reasonable time can be violated even if there has never been any arrest or detention; by contrast, a complaint of arbitrary interference with liberty can only be made where a person has been arrested or detained. I am not certain that the distinction was recognised by the prosecution.²⁴ In the view of its counsel, which he said was based on the decision of the Appeals Chamber and on other cases, the object of the Rule 62 requirement for the accused to be brought “without delay” before the Trial Chamber was to allow him “to know the formal charges against him” and to enable him “to mount a defence”.²⁵ The submission was that, in this case, both of these purposes had been served before the initial appearance, the indictment having been given to the appellant while he was still in Cameroon. But it seems to me that, as counsel later accepted,²⁶ there was yet another purpose, and that that purpose could only be served if there was an initial appearance. That purpose – a fundamentally important one – was to secure to the detained person a right to be placed “without delay” within the protection of the judicial power and consequently to ensure that there was no arbitrary curtailment of his right to liberty. That purpose is a major one in the work of an institution of this kind; it is worthy of being marked.

26. For present purposes, the law seems straightforward. It is not in dispute that the controlling instruments of the Tribunal reflect the internationally recognised requirement that a detained person shall be brought “without delay” to the judiciary as required by Rule 40*bis*(J) and Rule 62 of the Tribunal’s Rules of Procedure and Evidence, or “promptly” as it is said in Article 5(3) of the European Convention on Human Rights and Article 9(3) of the ICCPR, the latter being alluded to by the appellant in paragraph 11 of the brief in support of his motion of 19 February 1998, as mentioned above. It will be convenient to refer to one of these provisions, namely, Article 5(3) of the European Convention on Human Rights. This provides that “[e]veryone arrested or detained in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1.c of this article [relating to arrests for reasonable suspicion of having committed an offence] shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorised by law to exercise judicial power ...”.

²⁴ Transcript, Appeals Chamber, 22 February 2000, pp. 97-98.

²⁵ Ibid., pp. 72-73.

²⁶ Ibid., pp. 95-97.

27. So first, as to the purpose of these provisions. Apart from the general entitlement to a trial within a reasonable time, it is judicially recognised that the purpose is to guarantee to the arrested person a right to be brought promptly within the protection of the judiciary and to ensure that he is not arbitrarily deprived of his right to liberty.²⁷ The European Court of Human Rights, whose case law on the subject is persuasive, put the point by observing that the requirement of promptness “enshrines a fundamental human right, namely the protection of the individual against arbitrary interferences by the State with his right to liberty.... Judicial control of interferences by the executive with the individual’s right to liberty is an essential feature of the guarantee embodied in Article 5§3 [of the European Convention on Human Rights], which is intended to minimise the risk of arbitrariness. Judicial control is implied by the rule of law, ‘one of the fundamental principles of a democratic society ...’.”²⁸

28. Second, as to the tolerable period of delay, the decision of the Appeals Chamber of 3 November 1999 correctly recognised that this is short. The work of the United Nations Human Rights Committee shows that it is about four days. In Portorreal v. Dominican Republic, a period of 50 hours was held to be too short to constitute delay.²⁹

²⁷ Eur. Court H.R., Schiesser judgment of 4 December 1979, Series A no. 34, p. 13, para. 30.

But a period of 35 days was considered too much in Kelly v. Jamaica.³⁰ In *Jijón v. Ecuador*³¹ a five-day delay was judged to be violative of the rule.

29. The same tendency in the direction of brevity is evident in the case law of the European Court of Human Rights. In *McGoff*³², on his extradition from the Netherlands to Sweden, the applicant was kept in custody for 15 days before he was brought to the court. That was held to be in violation of the rule. *De Jong, Baljet and van den Brink*³³ concerned judicial proceedings in the army. “[E]ven taking due account of the exigencies of military life and military justice”, the European Court of Human Rights considered that a delay of seven days was too long.

30. In Koster,³⁴ which also concerned judicial proceedings in the army, a five-day delay was held to be in breach of the rule. The fact that the period included a weekend and two-yearly military manoeuvres, in which members of the court - a military court - had been participating was disregarded; in the view of the European Court of Human Rights, the rights of the accused took precedence over matters which were “foreseeable”.³⁵ The military manoeuvres “in no way prevented the military authorities from ensuring that the Military Court was able to sit soon enough to comply with the requirements of [Article 5(3) of the European Convention on Human Rights], if necessary on Saturday or Sunday”.³⁶

³⁶ Ibid., emphasis added.

31. No doubt, as it was said in de Jong, Baljet and van den Brink, “The issue of promptness must always be assessed in each case according to its special features”.³⁷ The same thing was said in Brogan.³⁸ But this does not markedly enlarge the normal period. Brogan was a case of terrorism; the European Court of Human Rights was not altogether unresponsive to the implications of that fact, to which the state concerned indeed appealed.³⁹ Yet the Court took the view that a period of six days and sixteen and a half hours was too long; indeed, it considered that even a shorter period of four days and six hours was outside the constraints of the relevant provision. The Court began its reasoning by saying:

No violation of Article 5§3 [of the European Convention on Human Rights] can arise if the arrested person is released ‘promptly’ before any judicial control of his detention would have been feasible ... If the arrested person is not released promptly, he is entitled to a prompt appearance before a judge or judicial officer.⁴⁰

32. Thus, in measuring permissible delay, the Court started out by having regard to the time within which it would have been “feasible” to establish judicial control of the detention in the circumstances of the case. The idea of feasibility obviously introduced a margin of flexibility in the otherwise strict requirement of promptness. But how to fix the limits of this flexibility? The Court looked at the “object and purpose of Article 5”, or, as it said, at the “aim and ... object” of the Convention”, and stated that – the degree of flexibility attaching to the notion of ‘promptness’ is limited, even if the attendant circumstances can never be ignored for the purposes of the assessment under paragraph 3. Whereas promptness is to be assessed in each case according to its special features ..., the significance to be attached to those features can never be taken to the point of impairing the very essence of the right guaranteed by Article 5§3 [of the European Convention on Human Rights], that is to the point of effectively

negating the State's obligation to ensure a prompt release or a prompt appearance before a judicial authority.⁴¹

33. In paragraph 62 of its judgment in Brogan, the European Court of Human Rights again mentioned that the "scope for flexibility in interpreting and applying the notion of 'promptness' is very limited". Thus, although the Court appreciated the special circumstances which terrorism represented, it said that "[t]he undoubted fact that the arrest and detention of the applicants were inspired by the legitimate aim of protecting the community as a whole from terrorism is not on its own sufficient to ensure compliance with the specific requirements of Article 5§3".⁴²

34. To refer again to McGoff, in that case the European Commission of Human Rights recalled that, in an earlier matter, it had expressed the view that a period of four days was acceptable; "it also accepted five days, but that was in exceptional circumstances".⁴³

35. In the case at bar, counting from the time of transfer to the Tribunal's detention unit in Arusha (19 November 1997) to the date of initial appearance before a Trial Chamber (23 February 1998), the period - the Arusha period - was 96 days, or nearly 20 times the maximum acceptable period of delay.

36. As a matter of juristic logic, any flexibility in applying the requirements concerning time to the case of war crimes has to find its justification not in the nature of the crimes themselves, but in the difficulties of investigating, preparing and presenting cases relating to them. Consequently, that flexibility is not licence for disregarding the requirements where they can be complied with. It is only "the austerity of tabulated legalism", an idea not much favoured where, as here, a generous interpretation is called for⁴⁴, which could lead to the view that, once a crime is categorised as a war crime, that suffices to justify the conclusion that the requirements concerning time may be safely put aside.

⁴¹ Ibid., para. 59.

⁴² Ibid., para. 62.

⁴³ Eur. Court H.R., McGoff judgment of 26 October 1984, Series A no. 83, Annex, Opinion of the Commission, p. 31, para. 28.

37. In this case, it is not easy to see what difficulty beset the authorities in bringing the appellant from the Tribunal's detention unit to the Trial Chamber. That scarcely inter-galactic passage involved no more than a fifteen minute drive by motor car on a macadamised road. To plead the character of the crimes in justification of the manifest breach of an applicable requirement which was both of overriding importance and capable of being respected with the same ease as in the ordinary case is to transform an important legal principle into a statement of affectionate aspiration.

38. On the facts as they earlier appeared to it, the Appeals Chamber could not come to any conclusion other than that the rights of the appellant in respect of the period between transfer and initial appearance had been breached, and very badly so. As today's decision finds, the new facts do not show that they were not breached. I agree, however, that the new facts show that the breach was not as serious as it at first appeared, it being now clear that defence counsel, although having opportunities, did not object and could be treated as having acquiesced in the passage of time during most of the relevant period.

(iv) Whether a breach could be remedied otherwise than by release

39. Now for the question of remedy, assuming the existence of a breach. In this respect, the prosecution argues that, if there was a breach of the appellant's rights, it was open to the Appeals Chamber to grant some form of compensatory relief short of release and that it should have done so. In support, notice may be taken of a view that, particularly though not exclusively in the case of war crimes, the remedy for a breach of the principle that a trial is to be held within a reasonable time may take the form of payment of monetary compensation or of adjustment of any sentence ultimately imposed, custody being meanwhile continued.⁴⁵

40. That view is useful, although not altogether free from difficulty;⁴⁶ it is certainly not an open-ended one. If the concern of the law with the liberty of the person, as demonstrated by the above-mentioned attitude of the courts, means anything, it is necessary to contemplate a point of time at which the accused indisputably becomes entitled to release and dismissal of the indictment. In this respect, it is to be observed that, according to the European Commission of Human Rights, contrary to an opinion of the German Federal Court, in 1983 a committee of three judges of the German Constitutional Court held that "unreasonable delays of criminal proceedings might under certain circumstances only be remedied by discontinuing such proceedings".⁴⁷ As is shown by the last paragraph of the report of Bell's case, supra, the only reason why a formal order prohibiting further proceedings was not made in that case by the Privy Council was because it was understood that the practice in Jamaica was that there would be no further proceedings. Paragraph 108 of the decision of the Appeals Chamber of 3 November 1999 cites cases from other territories in which further proceedings were in fact prohibited. I find no fault with the position taken in those cases; true, those cases concerned delay in holding and completing the trial, but I do not accept that the principle on which they rest is necessarily inapplicable to extended pre-arraignment delay.

41. More importantly, the view that relief short of release is possible is subject to any statutory obligation to effect a release. In this respect, in its previous decision the Appeals Chamber held that Rule 40bis of the Tribunal's Rules of Procedure and Evidence applied to the Cameroon period of detention. I respectfully disagreed with that view and still do, but it is the decision of the Appeals Chamber which matters; and so I proceed on the basis that the Rule applied. Now, Sub-Rule (H) of that Rule provided as follows:

The total period of provisional detention shall in no case exceed 90 days, at the end of which, in the event that the indictment has not been confirmed and an arrest warrant signed, the suspect shall be released ... (emphasis added).

42. Consistently with the judicial approach to detention in the early phases of a criminal case, the object of the cited provision is to control arbitrary interference with the liberty of the person by guaranteeing him a right to be released if he is not charged within the stated time. In keeping with that object, the Rule, which has the force of law, provides its own sanction. Where that sanction comes into operation through breach of the 90-day limit set by the Rule, release is both automatic and compulsory: a court order may be made but is not necessary. The detained person has to be mandatorily released in obedience to the command of the Rule: no consideration can be given to the possibility of keeping him in custody and granting him a remedy in the form of a reduction of sentence (if any) or of payment of compensation; any discretion as to alternative forms of remedy is excluded, however serious were the allegations.

43. In effect, the premise of the conclusion reached by the Appeals Chamber that the appellant had to be released was the Chamber's interpretation, on the facts then before it, that the Rule applied to the Cameroon period of detention. These being review proceedings and not appeal proceedings, the premise would continue to apply, and so would the conclusion, unless displaced by new facts.

(v) Whether there are new facts

44. So now for the question whether there are new facts. The temptation to use national decisions in this area may be rightly restrained by the usual warnings of the dangers involved in facile transposition of municipal law concepts to the plane of international law. Such borrowings were more frequent in the early or formative stages of the general subject; now that autonomy has been achieved, there is less reason for such recourse. It is possible to argue that the current state of criminal doctrine in international law approximates to that of the larger subject at an earlier phase and that accordingly a measure of liberality in using domestic law ideas is both natural and permissible in the field of criminal law. But it is not necessary to pursue the argument further. The reason is that, altogether apart from the question whether a particular line of municipal decisions is part of the law of the Tribunal, no statutory authority needs to be cited to enable a court to benefit from the scientific value of the thinking of other jurists, provided that the court remains master of its own house. Thus, nothing prevents a judge from consulting the reasoning of judges in other jurisdictions in order to work out his own solution to an issue before him; the navigation lights offered by the reflections of the former can be welcome without being obtrusive. This is how I propose to proceed.

45. The books are full of statements, and rightly so, concerning the caution which has to be observed, as a general matter, in admitting fresh evidence. Latham CJ noted that “[t]hese are general principles which should be applied to both civil and criminal trials”.⁴⁸ Accordingly, there is to be borne in mind the principle familiar in civil cases, somewhat quaintly expressed in one of them, that it is the “duty of [a party] to bring forward his whole case at once, and not to bring it forward piecemeal as he found out the objections in his way”.⁴⁹

46. The prosecution advanced a claim to several new facts. Agreeably to the caution referred to, the Appeals Chamber has not placed reliance on all of them. I shall deal with two which were accepted, beginning with the statement of Ambassador Scheffer as to United States intervention with the government of Cameroon. Five questions arise in respect of that statement.

47. The first question is whether the Ambassador’s statement concerns a “new fact” within the meaning of Article 25 of the Statute. It has to be recognised that there can be difficulty in drawing a clear line of separation between a new fact within the meaning of that Article of the Statute and additional evidence within the meaning of Rule 115 of the Tribunal’s Rules of Procedure and Evidence. A new fact is generically in the nature of additional evidence. The differentiating specificity is this: additional evidence, though not being merely cumulative, goes to the proof of facts which were in issue at the hearing; by contrast, evidence of a new fact is evidence of a distinctly new feature which was not in issue at the trial. In this case, there has not been an issue of fact in the previous proceedings as to whether the government of the United States had intervened. True, the intervention happened before the hearing, but that does not make the fact of the intervention any the less new. As is implicitly recognised by the wording of Article 25 of the Statute and Rule 120 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal, the circumstance that a fact was in existence at the time of trial does not automatically disqualify it from being regarded as new; the newness has to be in relation to the facts previously before the court. In my opinion, Ambassador Scheffer’s statement is evidence of a new fact.

48. The second question is whether the new fact “could not have been discovered [at the time of the proceedings before the original Chamber] through the exercise of due diligence” within the meaning of Rule 120 of the Rules. The position of the prosecution is that it did ask Ambassador Scheffer to intervene with the government of Cameroon. This being so, it is reasonable to hold that the prosecution knew that the requested intervention was needed to end a delay caused by Cameroon, and that it was also in a position to know that the intervention had in fact taken place and that it involved the activities in question. It is therefore difficult to find that the material in question could not have been discovered with due diligence. In this respect, I agree with the appellant.

49. But, for the reasons given in today’s judgment, that does not end the matter. Certainly the general rule is that “the interests of justice” will not suffice to authorise the admission of material which was available at trial, diligence being a factor in determining availability. The principle of finality supports that view. But, as has been recognised by the Appeals Chamber of the ICTY, “the principle [of finality] would not operate to prevent the admission of evidence that would assist in determining whether there could have been a miscarriage of justice”.⁵⁰ As was also observed by that Chamber,⁵¹ “the principle of finality must be balanced against the need to avoid a miscarriage of justice”. I see no reason why the necessity to make that balance does not apply to a review.

50. Thus, there has to be recognition of the possibility of there being a case in which, notwithstanding the absence of diligence, the material in question is so decisive in demonstrating mistake that the court in its discretion is obliged to admit it in the upper interests of justice. This was done in one case in which an appeal court observed, “All the evidence tendered to us could have been adduced at the trial: indeed, three of the witnesses, whom we have heard... did give evidence at the trial. Nevertheless we have ⁵⁰ Tadić, IT-94-1-A, 15 October 1998, para. 72. The context suggests that the word “not” in the expression “not available” in line 8 of para. 35 of that decision was inserted per incuriam.

⁵¹ Ibid., para. 35.

thought it necessary, exercising our discretion in the interests of justice, to receive” their evidence.⁵² It is not the detailed underlying legislation which is important, but the principle to be discerned.

51. The principle was more recently affirmed by the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of R v. Waring.⁵³ There the leading opinion recalled an earlier view that “the criterion of due diligence... is not applied strictly in criminal cases” and said: “It is desirable that due diligence remain only one factor and its absence, particularly in criminal cases, should be assessed in light of other circumstances. If the evidence is compelling and the interests of justice require that it be admitted then the failure to meet the test should yield to permit its admission”.⁵⁴ In the same opinion, it was later affirmed that “a failure to meet the due diligence requirement should not ‘override accomplishing a just result’”.⁵⁵

52. It may be thought that an analogous principle can be collected from Aleksovski, in which the Appeals Chamber of the ICTY held “that, in general, accused before this Tribunal have to raise all possible defences, where necessary in the alternative, during trial ...”,⁵⁶ but stated that it “will nevertheless consider” a new defence. Clearly, if the new defence was sound in law and convincing in fact, it would have been entertained in the higher interests of justice notwithstanding the general rule.

53. Thus, having regard to the superior demands of justice, I would read the reference in Rule 120 to a new fact which “could not have been discovered through the exercise of due diligence” as directory, and not mandatory or peremptory. In this respect, it is said that the “language of a statute, however mandatory in form, may be deemed directory whenever legislative purpose can best be carried out by [adopting a directory] construction".⁵⁷ Here, the overriding purpose of the provision is to achieve justice. Justice is denied by adopting a mandatory interpretation of the text; a directory approach achieves it. This approach, it is believed, is consonant with the broad view that, as it has been said, "the relation of rules of practice to the work of justice is intended to be that of handmaid rather than mistress, and the Court ought not to be so far bound and tied by rules, which are after all only intended as general rules of procedure, as to be compelled to do what will cause injustice in the particular case".⁵⁸ That remark was made about rules of civil procedure, but, with proper caution, the idea inspiring it applies generally to all rules of procedure to temper any tendency to rely too confidently, or too simplistically, on the maxim dura lex, sed lex.⁵⁹ I do not consider that this approach necessarily collides with the general principle regulating the interpretation of penal provisions and believe that it represents the view broadly taken in all jurisdictions.

54. The question then is whether, even if there was an absence of diligence, the material in this case so compellingly demonstrates mistake as to justify its admission. Ambassador Scheffer's statement makes it clear that the delay in Cameroon was due to the workings of the decision-making process in that country, that that process was expedited only after and as a result of his and his government's intervention with the highest authorities in Cameroon, that Cameroon was otherwise not ready to effect a transfer, and that accordingly the Tribunal was not to blame for any delay, as the Appeals Chamber thought it was. Has the Appeals Chamber to close its eyes to Ambassador Scheffer's statement, showing, as it does, the existence of palpable mistake bearing on the correctness of the previous conclusion? I think not.

⁵⁸ In re Coles and Ravenshear [1907] 1 K.B. 1, at 4.

55. The third question is which Chamber should process the significance of the new fact: Is it the Appeals Chamber? Or, is it the Trial Chamber? In the Tadić Rule 115 application, the ICTY Appeals Chamber took the position, in paragraph 30 of its Decision of 15 October 1998, that the “proper venue for a review application is the Chamber that rendered the final judgement”. Well, this is a review and it is being conducted by the Chamber which gave the final judgement - namely, the Appeals Chamber. So the case falls within the Tadić proposition.

56. I would, however, add this: On the basis of the statement in question, there could be argument that the Appeals Chamber cannot itself assess a new fact where the Appeals Chamber is sitting on appeal. However, it appears to me that the statement need not be construed as intended to neutralise the implication of Rule 123 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal that the Appeals Chamber may itself determine the effect of a new fact in an appeal pending before it. That Rule states: “If the judgement to be reviewed is under appeal at the time the motion for review is filed, the Appeals Chamber may return the case to the Trial Chamber for disposition of the motion”. The word “may” shows that the Appeals Chamber need not send the matter to the Trial Chamber but may deal with it itself. The admissibility of this course is supported by the known jurisprudence, which shows that matter in the nature of a new fact may be considered on appeal. Thus, in R. v. Ditch (1969) 53 Cr. App. R. 627, at p. 632, a post-trial confession by a co-accused was admitted on appeal as fresh or additional evidence, having been first heard de bene esse before being formally admitted.⁶⁰ Structures differ; it is the principle involved which matters. The jurisprudence referred to above in relation to mandatory and directory provisions also works to the same end. In my view, that end means this:

⁵⁹ Cited sometimes in legal discourse, as in Serbian Loans, P.C.I.J., Ser. A, No. 20-21, p. 56, dissenting opinion of Judge de Bustamante.

where the new fact is in its nature conclusive, it may be finally dealt with by the Appeals Chamber itself; a reference back to the Trial Chamber is required only where, without being conclusive, the new fact is of such strength that it might reasonably affect the verdict, whether the verdict would in fact be affected being left to the evaluation of the Trial Chamber.⁶¹

57. The fourth question is whether the new fact brought forward in Ambassador Scheffer's statement "could have been a decisive factor in reaching the decision", within the meaning of Article 25 of the Statute. The simple answer is "yes". As mentioned above, the decision of the Appeals Chamber proceeded on the basis that the Tribunal was responsible for the delay in Cameroon and that the latter was always ready to make a transfer. The Ambassador's statement shows that these things were not so.

58. The fifth and last question relates to a submission by the appellant that the Appeals Chamber should disregard Ambassador Scheffer's activities because he was merely prosecuting the foreign policy of his government and had no role to play in proceedings before the Tribunal. As has been noticed repeatedly, the Tribunal has no coercive machinery of its own. The Security Council sought to fill the gap by introducing a legal requirement for states to co-operate with the Tribunal. That obligation should not be construed so broadly as to constitute an unacceptable encroachment on the sovereignty of states; but it should certainly be interpreted in a manner which gives effect to the purposes of the Statute. I cannot think that anything in the purposes of the Statute prevents a state from using its good offices with another state to ensure that the needed cooperation of the latter with the Tribunal is forthcoming; on the contrary, those purposes would be consistent with that kind of démarche. Thus, accepting that Ambassador Scheffer was prosecuting the foreign policy of his government, I cannot see that he was acting contrary to the principles of the Statute. Even if he was, I do not see that there was anything so inadmissibly incorrect in his activities as to outweigh the obvious relevance for this case of what he in fact did.

59. The statement of Judge Mballe of Cameroon is equally admissible as a new fact. It corroborates the substance of Ambassador Scheffer's statement in that it shows that, whatever was the reason, the delay was attributable to the decision-making process of the government of Cameroon; it was not the responsibility of the Tribunal or of any arm of the Tribunal.

(vi) The effect of the new facts

60. The appellant, along with others, was detained by Cameroon on an extradition request from Rwanda from 15 April 1996 to 21 February 1997. During that period of detention, he was also held by Cameroon at the request of the Prosecutor of the Tribunal for one month, from 17 April 1996 to 16 May 1996. In the words of the Appeals Chamber, on the latter day "the Prosecutor informed Cameroon that she only intended to pursue prosecutions against four of the detainees, excluding the Appellant".⁶² Later, on "15 October 1996, responding to a letter from the Appellant complaining about his detention in Cameroon, the Prosecutor informed the Appellant that Cameroon was not holding him at her behest".⁶³ Today's judgment also shows that the appellant knew, at least by 3 May 1996, of the reasons for which he was held at the instance of the Prosecutor. These things being so, it appears to me that, from the point of view of proportionality, the Appeals Chamber focused on the subsequent period of detention at the request of the Tribunal, from 21 February 1997 to 19 November 1997, on which latter date the appellant was transferred from Cameroon to the Tribunal's detention unit in ⁶² Decision of the Appeals Chamber, 3 November 1999, para. 5, original emphasis.

⁶³ Ibid., para. 7.

Arusha. How would the Appeals Chamber have viewed the appellant's detention during this period had it had the benefit of the new facts now available?

61. Regard being had to the jurisprudence, considered above, on the general judicial attitude to delay in the early phases of a criminal case, it is reasonable to hold that Rule 40*bis* contemplated a speedy transfer. If the transfer was effected speedily, no occasion would arise for considering whether the provision applied to extended detention in the place from which the transfer was to be made. In this case, the transfer was not effected speedily and the Appeals Chamber thought that the Tribunal (through the Prosecutor) was responsible for the delay, for which it accordingly looked for a remedy. In searching for this remedy, it is clear, from its decision read as a whole, that the central reason why it was moved to hold that the protection of that provision applied was because of its view that there was that responsibility. In this respect, I note that the appellant states that it "is the Prosecutor's failure to comply with the mandates of Rule 40 and Rule 40*bis* that compelled the Appeals Chamber to order the Appellant's release".⁶⁴ I consider that this implies that the appellant himself recognises that the real reason for the decision to release him was the finding by the Appeals Chamber that the Prosecutor (and, through her, the Tribunal) was responsible for the delay in Cameroon. It follows that if, as is shown by the statements of Ambassador Scheffer and Judge Mballe, the Tribunal was not responsible, the Appeals Chamber would not have had occasion to consider whether the provisions applied and whether the appellant should be released in accordance with Rule 40*bis*(H).

62. Thus, without disturbing the previous holding, made on the facts then known to the Appeals Chamber, that Rule 40*bis* was applicable to the Cameroon period (with which I do not agree), the conclusion is reached that, on the facts now known, the Appeals Chamber would not have held that the Rule applied to that period, with the consequence that the Rule would not have been regarded as yielding the results which the Appeals Chamber thought it did.

63. Argument may be made on the basis of the previous holding (with which I disagreed) that Cameroon was the constructive agent of the Tribunal. On that basis, the contention could be raised that, even if the delay was caused by Cameroon and not by the Tribunal, the Tribunal was nonetheless responsible for the acts of Cameroon. However, assuming that there was constructive agency, such agency was for the limited purposes of custody pending speedy transfer. Cameroon could not be the Tribunal's constructive agent in respect of delay caused, as the new facts show, by Cameroon's acts over which the Tribunal had no control, which were not necessary for the purposes of the agency, and which in fact breached the purposes of the agency. Hence, even granted the argument of constructive agency, the new facts show that the Tribunal was not responsible for the delay as the Appeals Chamber thought it was on the basis of the facts earlier known to it.

64. There are other elements in the case, but that is the main one. Other new facts, mentioned in today's judgment, show that the violation of the appellant's rights in respect of delay between transfer and initial appearance was not as extensive as earlier thought; in any case, it did not involve the operation of a mandatory provision requiring release. The new facts also show that defence counsel acquiesced in the non-hearing of the habeas corpus motion on the ground that it had been overtaken by events. Moreover, as is also pointed out in the judgment, the matter has to be regulated by the approach taken by the Appeals Chamber in its decision of 3 November 1999. Paragraphs 106-109 of that decision made it clear that the conclusion reached was based not on a violation of any single right of the appellant but on an accumulation of violations of different rights. As has now been found, there are new facts which show that important rights which were thought to have been violated were not, and that accordingly there was not an accumulation of breaches. Consequently, the basis on which the Appeals Chamber ordered the appellant's release is displaced and the order for release vacated.

(vii) Conclusion

65. There are two closing reflections. One concerns the functions of the Prosecutor; the other concerns those of the Chambers.

66. As to her functions, the Prosecutor appeared to be of a mind that the independence of her office was invaded by a judicial decision that an indictment was dismissed and should not be brought back. She stated that she had "never seen" an instance of a prosecutor being prohibited by a court "from further prosecution ...".⁶⁵ In her submission, such a prohibition was at variance with her "completely independent" position and was "contrary to [her] duty as a prosecutor".⁶⁶ Different legal cultures are involved in the work of the Tribunal and it is right to try to understand those statements. It does appear to me, however, that the framework provided by the Statute of the Tribunal can be interpreted to accommodate the view of some legal systems that the independence of a prosecutor does not go so far as to preclude a court from determining that, in proper circumstances, an indicted person may be released and may not be prosecuted again for the same crime. The independence with which a function is to be exercised can be separated from the question whether the function is itself exercisable in a particular situation. A judicial determination as to whether the function may be exercised in a given situation is part of the relief that the court orders for a breach of the person's rights committed in the course of a previous exercise of those functions. This power of the courts has to be sparingly used; but it exists.

67. Also, the Prosecutor stated, in open court, that she had personally seen “5000 skulls” in Rwanda.⁶⁷ She said that the appellant was “responsible for the death of over ... 800,000 people in Rwanda, and the evidence is there. Irrefutable, incontrovertible, he is guilty. Give us the opportunity to bring him to justice.”⁶⁸ Objecting on the basis of the presumption of innocence,⁶⁹ counsel for the appellant submitted that the Prosecutor had expressed herself in “a more aggressive manner than she should ...” and had “talked as if she was a depository of justice before” the Appeals Chamber.⁷⁰ I do not have the impression that the latter remark was entirely correct, but the differing postures did appear to throw up a question concerning the role of a prosecutor in an international criminal tribunal founded on the adversarial model. What is that role?

68. The Prosecutor of the ICTR is not required to be neutral in a case; she is a party. But she is not of course a partisan. This is why, for example, the Rules of the Tribunal require the Prosecutor to disclose to the defence all exculpatory material. The implications of that requirement suggest that, while a prosecution must be conducted vigorously, there is room for the injunction that prosecuting counsel “ought to bear themselves rather in the character of ministers of justice assisting in the administration of justice”.⁷¹ The prosecution takes the position that it would not prosecute without itself believing in guilt. The point of importance is that an assertion by the prosecution of its belief in guilt is not relevant to the proof. Judicial traditions vary and the Tribunal must seek to benefit from all of them. Taking due account of that circumstance, I nevertheless consider that the system of the Statute under which the Tribunal is functioning will support a distinction between an affirmation of guilt and an affirmation of preparedness to prove guilt. In this case, I would interpret what was said as intended to convey the latter meaning, but the strength with which the statements were made comes so close to the former that I consider it right to say that the framework of the Statute is sufficiently balanced and sufficiently stable not to be upset by the spirit of the injunction referred to concerning the role of a prosecutor. I believe that it is that spirit which underlies the remarks now made by the Appeals Chamber on the point.

69. As to the functions of the Chambers, whichever way it went, the decision in this case would call to mind that, on the second occasion on which Pinochet's case went to the British House of Lords, the presiding member of the Appellate Committee of the House noted that -

[t]he hearing of this case ... produced an unprecedented degree of public interest not only in this country but worldwide. ... The conduct of Senator Pinochet and his regime have been highly contentious and emotive matters. ... This wide public interest was reflected in the very large number attending the hearings before the Appellate Committee including representatives of the world press. The Palace of Westminster was picketed throughout. The announcement of the final result gave rise to worldwide reactions.⁷²

Naturally, however, (and as in this case), "the members of the Appellate Committee were in no doubt as to their function ...".⁷³

70. Here too there has been interest worldwide, including a well-publicised suspension by Rwanda of cooperation between it and the Tribunal. On the one hand, the appellant has asked the Appeals Chamber to “disregard ... the sharp political and media reaction to the decision, particularly emanating from the Government of Rwanda”.⁷⁴ On the other hand, the Prosecutor has laid stress on the necessity for securing the cooperation of Rwanda, on the seriousness of the alleged crimes and on the interest of the international community in prosecuting them.

71. These positions have to be reconciled. How? This way: the sense of the international community has to be respectfully considered by an international court which does not dwell in the clouds; but that sense has to be collected in the whole. The interest of the international community in organising prosecutions is only half of its interest. The other half is this: such prosecutions are regarded by the international community as also designed to promote reconciliation and the restoration and maintenance of peace, but this is possible only if the proceedings are seen as transparently conforming to internationally recognised tenets of justice. The Tribunal is penal; it is not simply punitive.

72. It is believed that it was for this reason that the Security Council chose a judicial method in preference to other possible methods. The choice recalls the General Assembly’s support for the 1985 Milan Resolution on Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, paragraph 2 of which reads: “The judiciary shall decide matters before them impartially, on the basis of facts and in accordance with the law, without any restrictions, improper influences, inducements, pressures, threats or interferences, direct or indirect, from any quarter or for any reason”.⁷⁵ That text, to which counsel for the appellant appealed,⁷⁶ is a distant but clear echo of the claim that the law of Rome was “of a sort that cannot be bent by influence, or broken by power, or spoilt by money". The timeless constancy of that ancient remark, cited for its substance rather than for its details, has in turn to be carried forward by a system of international humanitarian justice which was designed to function in the midst of powerful cross-currents of world opinion. Nor need this be as daunting a task as it sounds: it is easy enough if one holds on to the view that what the international community intended to institute was a system by which justice would be dispensed, not dispensed with.

73. But this view works both ways. In this case, there are new facts. These new facts both enable and require me to agree that justice itself has to regard the effect of the previous decision as now displaced; to adhere blindly to the earlier position in the light of what is now known would not be correct.
