

UNITED STATES – MEASURES RELATING TO SHRIMP FROM THAILAND

Report of the Panel

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
I. INTRODUCTION	1
A. COMPLAINT OF THAILAND	1
II. FACTUAL ASPECTS	2
A. THE ANTI-DUMPING MEASURE	2
B. THE ENHANCED CONTINUOUS BOND REQUIREMENT (THE "EBR")	3
C. IMPOSITION OF CONTINUOUS BONDS AND OTHER SECURITY REQUIREMENTS IN THE CONTEXT OF THE US RETROSPECTIVE ANTI-DUMPING AND COUNTERVAILING DUTY ASSESSMENT SYSTEM	4
1. Overview of anti-dumping and countervailing duty procedures.....	4
2. Timeline for anti-dumping and countervailing duty procedures	5
D. IMPLEMENTATION OF THE AMENDED CONTINUOUS BOND DIRECTIVE (THE "AMENDED CBD").....	6
E. THE IMPACT OF THE ENHANCED CONTINUOUS BOND REQUIREMENT (THE "EBR") ON SUBJECT SHRIMP IMPORTERS.....	9
III. PARTIES' REQUESTS FOR FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS.....	10
IV. ARGUMENTS OF THE PARTIES	11
V. ARGUMENTS OF THE THIRD PARTIES	11
VI. INTERIM REVIEW	11
A. THAILAND'S COMMENTS ON THE INTERIM REPORT.....	12
1. The impact of the EBR on subject importers	12
2. Findings by the USCIT in NFI v. U.S......	13
3. Parallel panel proceedings	13
4. "Specific action" in response to dumping	13
5. Specific action "against" dumping.....	14
6. Application of the Ad Note.....	14
7. Ordinary meaning of the text of the Ad Note	16
8. Administrative reviews and exporter-specific assessment rate assignments.....	17
9. Cash deposits	17
10. Negotiating history of the Ad Note	17
11. Likelihood of increase of dumping margin for future imports as a best proxy	18
12. The phrase "error or fraud on the part of import specialists".....	18
13. Documentation on likelihood of anti-dumping rate increases	18
14. The United States defence under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994.....	20
15. Factual findings on risk of default.....	21

B.	THE UNITED STATES' COMMENTS ON THE INTERIM REPORT	21
1.	Typographical errors	21
2.	Factual aspects to the dispute	21
3.	Treatment of amendments as part of the measure at issue	22
4.	The EBR formula	22
5.	The relationship between Article 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and retrospective duty assessment	22
6.	Characterisation of the "enhanced" bond requirement	22
7.	The legal standard for determining whether or not the application of the EBR resulted in "reasonable" security requirements	23
VII.	FINDINGS	26
A.	PRELIMINARY ISSUES	26
1.	Parallel panel proceedings in DS343 and DS345	26
2.	Overview of the Panel's approach to consideration of Thailand's claims	27
3.	Order of analysis	27
B.	THAILAND'S CLAIM AGAINST THE USE OF ZEROING IN THE ORIGINAL INVESTIGATION	28
1.	Main arguments of the parties	28
2.	Evaluation by the Panel	29
(a)	The role of the Panel under Article 11 of the DSU	29
(b)	Burden of proof.....	30
(c)	Has Thailand established that the USDOC "zeroed" in the measure at issue?	31
(d)	Has Thailand established that the methodology used by USDOC is the same in all legally relevant respects as the methodology reviewed by the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber V ?	31
(e)	Has Thailand established that the methodology applied by USDOC is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement ?	32
C.	THAILAND'S CLAIM AGAINST THE APPLICATION OF THE EBR TO SUBJECT SHRIMP FROM THAILAND	35
1.	Scope of the measure concerned	35
2.	Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and the Ad Note	37
3.	Does the application of the EBR constitute "specific action against dumping"?	38
(a)	Main arguments of Thailand.....	38
(i)	"Specific action" in response to dumping	38
(ii)	Specific action "against" dumping	38
(b)	Main arguments of the United States.....	39
(i)	"Specific action" in response to dumping	39
(ii)	Specific action "against" dumping	40

(c)	Evaluation by the Panel	41
(i)	Whether or not the application of the EBR is "specific" to dumping	42
(ii)	Whether or not the application of the EBR acts "against" dumping	43
(iii)	Conclusion	45
4.	Was the EBR applied "in accordance with" the provisions of the GATT 1994, as interpreted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement	46
(a)	Main arguments of Thailand.....	46
(b)	Main arguments of the United States.....	47
(c)	Evaluation by the Panel	48
(i)	The relationship between the Ad Note and the Anti-Dumping Agreement	48
(ii)	The temporal scope of the Ad Note	51
	Ordinary meaning of the text of the Ad Note.....	51
	Contextual considerations regarding Articles 5.1 and 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement	53
	Contextual considerations regarding the WTO-conformity of cash deposits.....	55
	Negotiating history	58
(iii)	The combined use of bonds and cash deposits	60
(iv)	Whether the application of the EBR resulted in "reasonable" security requirements	62
(d)	Summary	65
(i)	Finding on whether or not the application of the EBR was "in accordance with" the Ad Note	65
5.	Conclusion in respect of Thailand's Article 18.1 claim	65
6.	Other claims by Thailand	65
(a)	Articles 7 and 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement , Article VI:2 of the GATT 1994 , and the Ad Note	65
(b)	Articles I:1, II:1(a), II:1(b), X:3(a) and XI:1 of the GATT 1994	66
7.	United States' defence under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994	68
(a)	Main arguments of the United States.....	68
(b)	Main arguments of Thailand.....	69
(c)	Evaluation by the Panel	69
(i)	Whether the EBR is necessary to secure compliance with US laws and regulations as provided in Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994	70
	First element: Whether the EBR has been "designed" to secure compliance with US laws and regulations that are not in themselves WTO-inconsistent	70
	Second element: Whether the EBR is "necessary to secure compliance with" 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(b)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673, 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1), and 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1)	73
(ii)	Conclusion	76
VIII.	CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS	76

ANNEX A

EXECUTIVE SUMMARIES OF THE FIRST WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF THE PARTIES

CONTENTS		PAGE
Annex A - 1	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of the United States	A-2
Annex A - 2	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of Thailand	A-9

ANNEX B

EXECUTIVE SUMMARIES OF THE SECOND WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF THE PARTIES

CONTENTS		PAGE
Annex B - 1	Executive Summary of the Second Written Submission of the United States	B-2
Annex B - 2	Executive Summary of the Second Written Submission of Thailand	B-10

ANNEX C

EXECUTIVE SUMMARIES OF THE FIRST WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF THE THIRD PARTIES

CONTENTS		PAGE
Annex C - 1	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of Brazil	C-2
Annex C - 2	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of Chile	C-7
Annex C - 3	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of the EC	C-10
Annex C - 4	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of India	C-15
Annex C - 5	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of Japan	C-21
Annex C - 6	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of Korea	C-24
Annex C - 7	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of Mexico	C-27

TABLE OF CASES CITED IN THIS REPORT

Short Title	Full Case Title and Citation
Australia – Salmon	Appellate Body Report, Australia – Measures Affecting Importation of Salmon , WT/DS18/AB/R, adopted 6 November 1998, DSR 1998:VIII, 3327
Argentina – Footwear (EC)	Panel Report, Argentina – Safeguard Measures on Imports of Footwear , WT/DS121/R, adopted 12 January 2000, as modified by Appellate Body Report, WT/DS121/AB/R, DSR 2000:II, 575
Brazil – Desiccated Coconut	Appellate Body Report, Brazil – Measures Affecting Desiccated Coconut , WT/DS22/AB/R, adopted 20 March 1997, DSR 1997:I, 167
Brazil – Desiccated Coconut	Panel Report, Brazil – Measures Affecting Desiccated Coconut , WT/DS22/R, adopted 20 March 1997, upheld by Appellate Body Report, WT/DS22/AB/R, DSR 1997:I, 189
Chile – Price Band System	Appellate Body Report, Chile – Price Band System and Safeguard Measures Relating to Certain Agricultural Products , WT/DS207/AB/R, adopted 23 October 2002, DSR 2002:VIII, 3045
EC – Bananas III	Appellate Body Report, European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas , WT/DS27/AB/R, adopted 25 September 1997, DSR 1997:II, 591
EC – Bed Linen	Appellate Body Report, European Communities – Anti-Dumping Duties on Imports of Cotton-Type Bed Linen from India , WT/DS141/AB/R, adopted 12 March 2001, DSR 2001:V, 2049
EC – Sardines	Panel Report, European Communities – Trade Description of Sardines , WT/DS231/R and Corr.1, adopted 23 October 2002, as modified by Appellate Body Report, WT/DS231/AB/R, DSR 2002:VIII, 3451
India – Patents (US)	Appellate Body Report, India – Patent Protection for Pharmaceutical and Agricultural Chemical Products , WT/DS50/AB/R, adopted 16 January 1998, DSR 1998:I, 9
Indonesia – Autos	Panel Report, Indonesia – Certain Measures Affecting the Automobile Industry , WT/DS54/R, WT/DS55/R, WT/DS59/R, WT/DS64/R and Corr.1, 2, 3 and 4, adopted 23 July 1998, DSR 1998:VI, 2201
Japan – Alcoholic Beverages II	Appellate Body Report, Japan – Taxes on Alcoholic Beverages , WT/DS8/AB/R, WT/DS10/AB/R, WT/DS11/AB/R, adopted 1 November 1996, DSR 1996:I, 97
Korea – Various Measures on Beef	Appellate Body Report, Korea – Measures Affecting Imports of Fresh, Chilled and Frozen Beef , WT/DS161/AB/R, WT/DS169/AB/R, adopted 10 January 2001, DSR 2001:I, 5
Mexico – Anti-Dumping Measures on Rice	Appellate Body Report, Mexico – Definitive Anti-Dumping Measures on Beef and Rice, Complaint with Respect to Rice , WT/DS295/AB/R, adopted 20 December 2005
Mexico – Anti-Dumping Measures on Rice	Panel Report, Mexico – Definitive Anti-Dumping Measures on Beef and Rice, Complaint with Respect to Rice , WT/DS295/R, adopted 20 December 2005, as modified by Appellate Body Report, WT/DS295/AB/R
Mexico – Corn Syrup (Article 21.5 – US)	Appellate Body Report, Mexico – Anti-Dumping Investigation of High Fructose Corn Syrup (HFCS) from the United States – Recourse to Article 21.5 of the DSU by the United States , WT/DS132/AB/RW, adopted 21 November 2001, DSR 2001:XIII, 6675

Short Title	Full Case Title and Citation
US – 1916 Act	Appellate Body Report, United States – Anti-Dumping Act of 1916 , WT/DS136/AB/R, WT/DS162/AB/R, adopted 26 September 2000, DSR 2000:X, 4793
US – 1916 Act (EC)	Panel Report, United States – Anti-Dumping Act of 1916, Complaint by the European Communities , WT/DS136/R and Corr.1, adopted 26 September 2000, upheld by Appellate Body Report, WT/DS136/AB/R, WT/DS162/AB/R, DSR 2000:X, 4593
US – 1916 Act (Japan)	Panel Report, United States – Anti-Dumping Act of 1916, Complaint by Japan , WT/DS162/R and Add.1, adopted 26 September 2000, upheld by Appellate Body Report, WT/DS136/AB/R, WT/DS162/AB/R, DSR 2000:X, 4831
US – Carbon Steel	Appellate Body Report, United States – Countervailing Duties on Certain Corrosion-Resistant Carbon Steel Flat Products from Germany , WT/DS213/AB/R and Corr.1, adopted 19 December 2002, DSR 2002:IX, 3779
US – Certain EC Products	Appellate Body Report, United States – Import Measures on Certain Products from the European Communities , WT/DS165/AB/R, adopted 10 January 2001, DSR 2001:I, 373
US – Corrosion-Resistant Steel Sunset Review	Appellate Body Report, United States – Sunset Review of Anti-Dumping Duties on Corrosion-Resistant Carbon Steel Flat Products from Japan , WT/DS244/AB/R, adopted 9 January 2004, DSR 2004:I, 3
US – DRAMS	Panel Report, United States – Anti-Dumping Duty on Dynamic Random Access Memory Semiconductors (DRAMS) of One Megabit or Above from Korea , WT/DS99/R, adopted 19 March 1999, DSR 1999:II, 521
US – FSC (Article 21.5 – EC II)	Appellate Body Report, United States – Tax Treatment for "Foreign Sales Corporations" – Second Recourse to Article 21.5 of the DSU by the European Communities , WT/DS108/AB/RW2, adopted 14 March 2006
US – Gasoline	Appellate Body Report, United States – Standards for Reformulated and Conventional Gasoline , WT/DS2/AB/R, adopted 20 May 1996, DSR 1996:I, 3
US – Softwood Lumber IV	Appellate Body Report, United States – Final Countervailing Duty Determination with Respect to Certain Softwood Lumber from Canada , WT/DS257/AB/R, adopted 17 February 2004, DSR 2004:II, 571
US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment)	Appellate Body Report, United States – Continued Dumping and Subsidy Offset Act of 2000 , WT/DS217/AB/R, WT/DS234/AB/R, adopted 27 January 2003, DSR 2003:I, 375
US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment)	Panel Report, United States – Continued Dumping and Subsidy Offset Act of 2000 , WT/DS217/R, WT/DS234/R, adopted 27 January 2003, as modified by Appellate Body Report, WT/DS217/AB/R, WT/DS234/AB/R, DSR 2003:II, 489
US – Oil Country Tubular Goods Sunset Reviews	Appellate Body Report, United States – Sunset Reviews of Anti-Dumping Measures on Oil Country Tubular Goods from Argentina , WT/DS268/AB/R, adopted 17 December 2004, DSR 2004:VII, 3257
US – Shrimp (Article 21.5 – Malaysia)	Appellate Body Report, United States – Import Prohibition of Certain Shrimp and Shrimp Products – Recourse to Article 21.5 of the DSU by Malaysia , WT/DS58/AB/RW, adopted 21 November 2001, DSR 2001:XIII, 6481
US – Shrimp (Ecuador)	Panel Report, United States – Anti-Dumping Measure on Shrimp from Ecuador , WT/DS335/R, adopted on 20 February 2007

Short Title	Full Case Title and Citation
US – Softwood Lumber V	Appellate Body Report, United States – Final Dumping Determination on Softwood Lumber from Canada , WT/DS264/AB/R, adopted 31 August 2004, DSR 2004:V, 1875
US – Softwood Lumber V	Panel Report, United States – Final Dumping Determination on Softwood Lumber from Canada , WT/DS264/R, adopted 31 August 2004, as modified by Appellate Body Report, WT/DS264/AB/R, DSR 2004:V, 1937
US – Stainless Steel	Panel Report, United States – Anti-Dumping Measures on Stainless Steel Plate in Coils and Stainless Steel Sheet and Strip from Korea , WT/DS179/R, adopted 1 February 2001, DSR 2001:IV, 1295
US – Steel Safeguards	Appellate Body Report, United States – Definitive Safeguard Measures on Imports of Certain Steel Products , WT/DS248/AB/R, WT/DS249/AB/R, WT/DS251/AB/R, WT/DS252/AB/R, WT/DS253/AB/R, WT/DS254/AB/R, WT/DS258/AB/R, WT/DS259/AB/R, adopted 10 December 2003, DSR 2003:VII, 3117
US – Steel Safeguards	Panel Reports, United States – Definitive Safeguard Measures on Imports of Certain Steel Products , WT/DS248/R, WT/DS249/R, WT/DS251/R, WT/DS252/R, WT/DS253/R, WT/DS254/R, WT/DS258/R, WT/DS259/R, and Corr.1, adopted 10 December 2003, as modified by Appellate Body Report, WT/DS248/AB/R, WT/DS249/AB/R, WT/DS251/AB/R, WT/DS252/AB/R, WT/DS253/AB/R, WT/DS254/AB/R, WT/DS258/AB/R, WT/DS259/AB/R, DSR 2003:VIII, 3273
US – Upland Cotton	Appellate Body Report, United States – Subsidies on Upland Cotton , WT/DS267/AB/R, adopted 21 March 2005
US – Wool Shirts and Blouses	Appellate Body Report, United States – Measure Affecting Imports of Woven Wool Shirts and Blouses from India , WT/DS33/AB/R and Corr.1, adopted 23 May 1997, DSR 1997:I, 323
US – Zeroing (EC)	Appellate Body Report, United States – Laws, Regulations and Methodology for Calculating Dumping Margins ("Zeroing") , WT/DS294/AB/R, adopted 9 May 2006
US – Zeroing (EC)	Panel Report, United States – Laws, Regulations and Methodology for Calculating Dumping Margins ("Zeroing") , WT/DS294/R, adopted 9 May 2006, as modified by Appellate Body Report, WT/DS294/AB/R
US – Zeroing (Japan)	Appellate Body Report, United States – Measures Relating to Zeroing and Sunset Reviews , WT/DS322/AB/R, adopted 23 January 2007
US – Zeroing (Japan)	Panel Report, United States – Measures Relating to Zeroing and Sunset Reviews , WT/DS322/R, adopted 23 January 2007, as modified by Appellate Body Report, WT/DS322/AB/R

I. INTRODUCTION

A. COMPLAINT OF THAILAND

1.1 On 24 April 2006, Thailand requested consultations with the United States pursuant to Article 4 of the Understanding on Rules and Procedures Governing the Settlement of Disputes (the "DSU"), Article XXII:1 of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 (the "GATT 1994") and Articles 17.2, 17.3 and 17.4 of the Agreement on Implementation of Article VI of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 (the "Anti-Dumping Agreement") with respect to certain issues relating to measures imposed by the United States on imports of certain frozen warmwater shrimp from Thailand.¹ Thailand and the United States held consultations, but failed to resolve the dispute.

1.2 On 15 September 2006, Thailand requested the establishment of a panel pursuant to Article XXIII of the GATT 1994, Articles 4 and 6 of the DSU, and Article 17 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.²

1.3 At its meeting on 26 October 2006, the Dispute Settlement Body (DSB) established a Panel pursuant to the request of Thailand in document WT/DS343/7, in accordance with Article 6 of the DSU.

1.4 The Panel's terms of reference are the following:

"To examine, in the light of the relevant provisions of the covered agreements cited by Thailand in document WT/DS343/7, the matter referred to the DSB by Thailand in that document, and to make such findings as will assist the DSB in making the recommendations or in giving the rulings provided for in those agreements."³

1.5 At its meeting on 21 November 2006, the DSB also established a Panel pursuant to the request of India in document WT/DS345/6, which dealt substantially with the same matter.

1.6 On 19 January 2007, Thailand requested the Director-General to determine the composition of the Panel, pursuant to Article 8.7 of the DSU. This paragraph provides:

"If there is no agreement on the panelists within 20 days after the date of the establishment of a panel, at the request of either party, the Director-General, in consultation with the Chairman of the DSB and the Chairman of the relevant Council or Committee, shall determine the composition of the panel by appointing the panelists whom the Director-General considers most appropriate in accordance with any relevant special or additional rules or procedures of the covered agreement or covered agreements which are at issue in the dispute, after consulting with the parties to the dispute. The Chairman of the DSB shall inform the Members of the composition of the panel thus formed no later than 10 days after the date the Chairman receives such a request."

1.7 Thailand also requested the Director General to select the same persons to serve as panelists for both DS343 and DS345, in accordance with Article 9.3 of the DSU, which provides:

"If more than one panel is established to examine the complaints related to the same matter, to the greatest extent possible the same persons shall serve as panelists on each of the separate panels and the timetable for the panel process in such disputes shall be harmonized."

¹ WT/DS343/1.

² WT/DS343/7.

³ WT/DS343/8.

1.8 On 26 January 2007, the Director-General composed the Panel as follows:

Chairperson: Mr. Michael Cartland

Members: Mrs. Enie Neri de Ross
Mr. Graham Sampson

1.9 Brazil, Chile, China, the European Communities, India, Japan, Korea, Mexico and Viet Nam⁴ reserved their rights to participate in the Panel proceedings as third parties.⁵

1.10 The Panel held the first substantive meeting with the parties on 6 and 7 June 2007. The session with the third parties took place on 7 June 2007. The Panel's second substantive meeting with the parties was held on 24 and 25 July 2007.

1.11 On 4 September 2007, the Panel issued the Descriptive Part of its Panel Report. The Interim Report was issued to the parties on 9 October 2007 and the Final Report was issued to the parties on 13 November 2007.

II. FACTUAL ASPECTS

2.1 This dispute concerns the use of "zeroing" and the application of the enhanced continuous bond requirement (hereafter the "EBR")⁶ by the United States on certain frozen warmwater shrimp imported from Thailand.

A. THE ANTI-DUMPING MEASURE

2.2 The first measure at issue concerns the imposition of anti-dumping duties on imports of shrimp from Thailand. On 27 January 2004, the United States initiated an anti-dumping investigation of certain frozen and canned warmwater shrimp imported from Thailand, Brazil, China, Ecuador, India, and Viet Nam.⁷ On 28 July 2004, the US Department of Commerce (hereafter "USDOC") preliminarily determined that certain frozen and canned warmwater shrimp from Thailand were being sold at less than fair value to the United States (the "Preliminary Determination").⁸ On 1 February 2005, USDOC published an amended final determination of sales at less than fair value and an anti-dumping duty order imposing definitive anti-dumping duties only on imports of certain frozen warmwater shrimp from Thailand.⁹

⁴ In a letter directed to the DSB, dated 8 February 2007, Viet Nam reserved its third party rights. The parties did not oppose this request.

⁵ WT/DS343/8/Rev.1.

⁶ In its Request for Establishment of the Panel, Thailand uses the term "Continuous Bond Requirement", instead of EBR to refer to the measure at issue.

⁷ Initiation of Antidumping Duty Investigations: Certain Frozen and Canned Warmwater Shrimp from Brazil, Ecuador, India, Thailand, the People's Republic of China and the Socialist Republic of Vietnam, 69 Fed. Reg. 3876 (27 January 2004).

⁸ Notice of Preliminary Determination of Sales at Less Than Fair Value, Postponement of Final Determination, and Negative Critical Circumstances Determination: Certain Frozen and Canned Warmwater Shrimp from Thailand, 69 Fed. Reg. 47100 (4 August 2004).

⁹ Notice of Amended Final Determination of Sales at Less Than Fair Value and Antidumping Duty Order: Certain Frozen Warmwater Shrimp from Thailand, 70 Fed. Reg. 5145 (1 February 2005), Exhibit THA-14. On 23 December 2004, USDOC published a final determination that frozen and canned warmwater

2.3 In the anti-dumping order, the USDOC established margins of dumping for eleven individually-investigated Thai exporters ranging from 5.7% to 6.8%, and an "all others" margin of dumping of 6.0%.

2.4 The United States does not accept nor dispute that the "zeroing" used to calculate the anti-dumping duties at issue in these proceedings is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, and does not contest Thailand's zeroing claim for purposes of this dispute.¹⁰

B. THE ENHANCED CONTINUOUS BOND REQUIREMENT (THE "EBR")

2.5 The second measure at issue concerns the imposition of the EBR on importers of shrimp from Thailand subject to an anti-dumping order. On 9 July 2004, US Customs and Border Protection (hereafter "US Customs") amended its existing bond requirements to include new guidelines specific for "covered cases" within "special categories" of merchandise. The EBR has been imposed pursuant to the Customs Bond Directive 99-3510-004 on Monetary Guidelines for Setting Bond Amounts issued on 23 July 1991 (the "1991 Customs Bond Directive")¹¹, as amended by the Amendment to Bond Directive 99-3510-004 for Certain Merchandise Subject to Antidumping/Countervailing Cases (hereafter the "July 2004 Amendment")¹², the document entitled "Clarification to July 9 2004 Amended Monetary Guidelines for Setting Bond Amounts for Special Categories of Merchandise Subject to Antidumping and/or Countervailing Duty Cases" (hereafter the "August 2005 Clarification")¹³, the document entitled "Current Bond Formulas" posted by US Customs on its website on 24 January 2005 (hereafter "Current Bond Formulas")¹⁴, and the Notice published in the United States Federal Register entitled Monetary Guidelines for Setting Bond Amounts for Importations Subject to Enhanced Bonding Requirements (hereafter the "October 2006 Notice").¹⁵ The July 2004 Amendment, the August 2005 Clarification, the document Current Bond Formulas and the October 2006 Notice is referred to collectively as the "Amended CBD". US Customs has identified as a primary objective of the directive, "continued vigilance ... to ensure collection of all appropriate anti-dumping and countervailing duties."¹⁶ On 1 February 2005, US Customs implemented the EBR with respect to all imports of certain frozen warmwater shrimp subject to anti-dumping duties (hereafter "subject shrimp").¹⁷ Prior to 1 February 2005, the United States had also sent notices to 33 importers beginning on 6 August 2004, of which 12 importers furnished shrimp from Thailand was being sold at less than fair value in the United States. See Notice of Final Determination of Sales at Less Than Fair Value and Negative Final Determination of Critical Circumstances: Certain Frozen and Canned Warmwater Shrimp from Thailand, 69 Fed. Reg. 76918 (23 December 2004), Exhibit THA-15. Thereafter, on 21 January 2005, the US International Trade Commission (hereafter "USITC") determined that imports of frozen warmwater shrimp from Thailand were causing material injury to the US domestic industry but concluded that imports of canned warmwater shrimp were not causing injury or threat thereof and should thus be excluded from the Order. See Certain Frozen or Canned Warmwater Shrimp and Prawns from Brazil, China, Ecuador, India, Thailand, and Vietnam: Investigations Nos. 1063-1068 (Final), 70 Fed. Reg. 3943 (27 January 2005) and USITC Publication 3748, Certain Frozen or Canned Warmwater Shrimp and Prawns from Brazil, China, Ecuador, India, Thailand, and Vietnam: [Investigations Nos. 1063-1068 (Final)] (January 2005).

¹⁰ United States' responses to First Set of Panel Questions, para. 1.

¹¹ Exhibit THA-1.

¹² Exhibit THA-2.

¹³ Exhibit THA-4.

¹⁴ Exhibit THA-3.

¹⁵ Monetary Guidelines for Setting Bond Amounts for Importations Subject to Enhanced Bonding Requirements, 71 Fed. Reg. 62276 (24 October 2006), Exhibit THA-5.

¹⁶ Exhibit THA-2.

¹⁷ US Customs applied the EBR to all importers of subject shrimp under an anti-dumping order from Brazil, China, Ecuador, India, Thailand, and Viet Nam. See Notice of Amended Final Determination of Sales at Less Than Fair Value and antidumping duty order: Certain Frozen Warmwater Shrimp from India, 70 Fed. Reg. 5147 (1 February 2005).

enhanced bonds. To date, "agriculture/aquaculture merchandise" is the only merchandise designated as a "special category" and "shrimp covered by anti-dumping or countervailing duty cases" is currently the only "covered case" designated within the agriculture/aquaculture category.

C. IMPOSITION OF CONTINUOUS BONDS AND OTHER SECURITY REQUIREMENTS IN THE CONTEXT OF THE US RETROSPECTIVE ANTI-DUMPING AND COUNTERVAILING DUTY ASSESSMENT SYSTEM

2.6 According to the United States, the EBR in combination with cash deposits is imposed to ensure payment of anti-dumping or countervailing duties under its retrospective duty assessment system. Unlike the systems employed in many other countries, the US retrospective system determines final liability for anti-dumping and countervailing duties after merchandise is imported into the country at the end of assessment or "administrative" reviews which are conducted 12 months following the anniversary month of the relevant anti-dumping order.¹⁸ Certain of the following aspects of the US system discussed below, may prove relevant to an objective assessment of Thailand's claim.

1. Overview of anti-dumping and countervailing duty procedures

2.7 Under the US retrospective duty assessment system, the United States determines, through an investigation, whether margins of dumping or countervailable subsidisation exist, and whether dumped imports or countervailable subsidisation cause or threaten to cause material injury to a domestic industry. During the preliminary phase of the investigation, the US International Trade Commission (hereafter "USITC") determines whether a reasonable indication exists that an industry in the United States is materially injured, whether a reasonable indication exists that an industry in the United States is threatened with material injury, or whether the establishment of an industry in the United States is materially retarded by reason of subject merchandise investigated. USDOC also preliminarily determines whether a reasonable basis exists to believe that dumping or countervailable subsidisation is occurring. If USDOC makes an affirmative determination, it will issue a preliminary determination, which permits the imposition of provisional measures, historically in the form of a cash deposit, bond, or other security requirement, to ensure collection if anti-dumping or countervailing duties are ultimately imposed. The preliminary determination sets forth ad valorem cash deposit rates for producers/exporters individually investigated, as well as an "all-others" rate applicable to all other producers/exporters. Subsequently, USDOC makes a final determination as to whether dumping or countervailable subsidisation is occurring. If this determination is affirmative and USITC also issues a final determination that imports of subject merchandise in the investigation were causing material injury to the US domestic industry or threatening with material injury, or that the establishment of an industry in the United States is materially retarded by reason of subject merchandise in the investigation, thereafter USDOC issues a public notice, denominated under US law as an anti-dumping or countervailing duty order. In the anti-dumping or countervailing duty order, USDOC sets forth ad valorem cash deposit rates for producers/exporters individually investigated, as well as an "all-others" rate applicable to all other producers/exporters. Pursuant to the order, importers must post a cash deposit of estimated anti-dumping or countervailing duties for each import transaction. This cash deposit is based on the overall margin of dumping or countervailable subsidisation found for the exporter or producer during the investigation phase.

2.8 During the anniversary month following a final determination in the investigations phase, importers, exporters, producers, and domestic interested parties may request that USDOC conduct an assessment review often referred to as an "administrative review" of the import transactions that occurred in the prior year. During this review, USDOC analyses all of the import transactions for the period of review (i.e. , the prior 12 months) to determine the final amount of the anti-dumping or countervailing duty payable on imports from each producer or exporter for which USDOC received a request for review.

¹⁸ See generally Title VII of the Tariff Act of 1930, 19 U.S.C. § 1671 et seq.; see also 19 C.F.R. § 351.101 et seq.

2.9 Upon USDOC's completion of an administrative review, US Customs applies the assessment rate provided by USDOC to the customs value of each entry to determine the amount of final liability. If the amount of the cash deposit is greater than the amount of final liability, US Customs refunds the amount collected in excess of the final liability, together with interest on the excess amount. Alternatively, if the amount of final liability exceeds the amount of the cash deposit, US Customs issues a bill to the importer for payment of the difference in the amounts together with interest on the difference in the amounts. During the administrative review, USDOC may establish a new cash deposit rate for each producer or exporter, on the basis of that producer or exporter's transactions over the period of review. This new ad valorem cash deposit rate will be applied to future imports from the producer or exporter. USDOC analyses the import transactions of each producer or exporter subject to the review to calculate a new cash deposit rate going forward. For those entries not covered by a request for an administrative review, USDOC instructs US Customs to assess anti-dumping or countervailing duties at the cash deposit rate required upon entry.

2.10 Due to the design of the US retrospective system, the dumping or subsidisation calculations in the administrative review are based on different transactions than those evaluated during the investigation. The investigation evaluates the pricing behaviour of producers and exporters based on transactions completed during a period of time prior to the initiation of the anti-dumping or countervailing duty investigation. In contrast, an administrative review evaluates pricing behaviour during later time periods.¹⁹ As a result of this, the dumping or subsidisation margins calculated in the administrative review may be either higher or lower than the margins calculated in the investigation. According to the United States, the EBR attempts to ensure full collection of anti-dumping or countervailing duties by securing against the possibility that the margin will increase from the time of the investigation until calculation of the final duty liability during the administrative review, and that importers will default on payment of increased duties.²⁰

2. Timeline for anti-dumping and countervailing duty procedures

2.11 Under US law, USDOC has a finite period to complete its anti-dumping or countervailing duty investigation and issue an anti-dumping or countervailing duty order, if any. USDOC may extend the deadlines for the preliminary and final determinations, but cannot extend the investigation beyond 407 days. US law provides that USDOC ordinarily must complete an administrative review within 365 days. USDOC may extend the deadlines for issuing preliminary and final results of the assessment review, but the review may not exceed 545 days. Specifically, the following is an overview of applicable time limits:

- In the petition phase of an anti-dumping or countervailing duty investigation, USDOC has 20 days (which may be extended to 40 days, only in the case of an anti-dumping investigation) to determine whether to initiate an investigation after it receives a petition to investigate dumping or countervailable subsidisation.
- In the preliminary phase of an anti-dumping or countervailing duty investigation, after USDOC initiates the investigation, USITC has 45 days (which may be extended to 65 days) from the date the petition is filed to make a preliminary injury determination. If USITC makes a preliminary affirmative injury determination, then USDOC has 140 days (which may be extended to 190 days) in the case of a dumping investigation, or 65 days (which may be extended to 130 days) in the case of a countervailable subsidisation investigation, from the date it initiated the investigation to make its preliminary determination of the existence of dumping or countervailable subsidisation.

¹⁹ The first administrative review evaluates transactions occurring from the date of imposition of provisional measures (if any) in the preliminary determination through the end of the twelve-month period following imposition of the anti-dumping duty order, generally a period of 18 months. All subsequent administrative reviews generally evaluate transactions occurring during the preceding 12 months.

²⁰ United States' responses to First Set of Panel Questions, para. 64.

- In the final phase of an anti-dumping or countervailing duty investigation, USDOC has 75 days (which may be extended to 135 days, only in the case of an anti-dumping investigation) from its preliminary determination to make a final determination of the dumping or subsidisation margins of investigated producers and exporters. If USDOC makes an affirmative final determination, USITC has until 45 days (which may be extended to 75 days) after USDOC's final determination to make its final injury determination. If the USITC makes an affirmative final injury determination, USDOC issues an anti-dumping or countervailing duty order.
- One year after the date the anti-dumping or countervailing duty order is issued, and during the anniversary month of the order every year thereafter, interested parties may request that USDOC conduct an administrative review of individual producers or exporters. After initiating this review, USDOC is required to issue preliminary results of the actual margin of dumping or subsidisation for the entries of the reviewed producer or exporter during the period of review within 245 days (which may be extended to 365 days) after the last day of the anniversary month. USDOC then must issue the final results within 120 days (which may be extended to 180 days) after the preliminary results are published.

D. IMPLEMENTATION OF THE AMENDED CONTINUOUS BOND DIRECTIVE (THE "AMENDED CBD")

2.12 Following issuance of the anti-dumping duty order on imports of certain frozen warmwater shrimp on 1 February 2005, US Customs began requiring subject shrimp importers to maintain enhanced bond coverage additional to the cash security required on each entry, in compliance with the Amended CBD.²¹

2.13 Generally, to satisfy US Customs bond requirements, any importer of goods subject to an anti-dumping or countervailing duty order may obtain either a single entry bond, covering a single entry, or a continuous bond, which provides security for all entries filed by the bond principal during the period of time covered by the bond, typically one year. US Customs may also require additional security if US Customs believes that acceptance of an entry secured by a continuous bond would impair US Treasury revenue collection.²² Previously, under the 1991 Customs Bond Directive, importers subject to an anti-dumping or countervailing duty order that selected the continuous bond option only needed to post a customs bond equal to the greater of $50,000 or 10 per cent of the duties, taxes, and fees paid during the preceding year, rounded to the nearest multiple of $10,000. After publication of the Amended CBD, however, US Customs implemented the EBR and required select importers of merchandise designated as "covered cases" to provide continuous customs bonds in excess of amounts established under 1991 guidelines and in addition to cash deposits of estimated anti-dumping duties per entry. Thus, under the Amended CBD, in addition to a minimum of $50,000 or 10 per cent of the duties, taxes, and fees paid during the preceding year, US Customs requires importers subject to the EBR to secure a bond for an amount equal to the USDOC cash deposit rate in effect on the date of entry of the merchandise multiplied by the importer's value of imports from the previous year, as well as pay cash deposits equal to the amount of anti-dumping duties per entry. The Amended CBD does not apply to single entry bonds.

²¹ As indicated in paragraph 2.5 above, the United States sent notices to 33 importers prior to publication of the Anti-dumping Order on 1 February 2005 beginning on 6 August 2004, of which 12 importers furnished enhanced bonds prior to 1 February 2005.

²² See 19 C.F.R. § 113.13(d). US Customs administers the powers under section 113.13(d) in accordance with the 1991 Customs Bond Directive, which provides that "a bond may be demanded with a limit of liability amount greater than that computed using this formula, provided sufficient evidence of high risk is on hand to support the higher amount": See Exhibit THA-1, p. 3.

2.14 As noted, subject shrimp is currently the only category of merchandise subject to the EBR.

2.15 The following hypothetical example illustrates the combined total security obligations imposed on Thai shrimp importers subject to the EBR, including bond and cash deposit requirements:

- (a) An importer of Certain Frozen Warmwater Shrimp from Thailand subject to the "all-others" anti-dumping duty rate imports US$1 million of subject shrimp during the previous 12 months.
- (b) The value of subject shrimp entered in the present transaction amounts to US$10,000.
- (c) The Bound rate under Harmonized Tariff Schedule (HTS) headings 0303.13.00 and 1605.20.10 is 0 per cent.
- (d) The USDOC anti-dumping duty "all-others" rate (pursuant to anti-dumping order) is 6.0 per cent.
- (e) US Customs applies the Amended EBR formula to the existing importer without making adjustments based on an individualized determination.

	Obligation	Description	Amount
1.	Normal Duties:	As per a 0 per cent bound rate under HTS headings	$0
2.	Cash Deposit for Anti-dumping Duties:	Upon issuance of an anti-dumping order but prior to an administrative review, US Customs orders the posting of a cash deposit based on the "all-others" rate. ²³	$600
3.	Continuous Bond Amount:²⁴	Basic Bond + EBR (see 3(a) + (b) below), rounded up by increments of $10,000 up to $100,000, and then by increments of $100,000.	$200,000

²³ See 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(a). If no administrative review is requested, anti-dumping duties will be assessed at the cash deposit rate for estimated anti-dumping duties as established in the anti-dumping Order and required on that merchandise at the time of entry. (See 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(c)).

²⁴ A continuous bond amount secures multiple transactions during its validity. In place of a continuous bond, an importer may elect to post a single-transaction bond, which is equal to the assessed anti-dumping duty rate plus all applicable duties, taxes, and fees.

	Obligation	Description	Amount
	3(a). Basic Bond Amount:	The greater of either $50,000 or 10 per cent of the duties, taxes, and fees paid during the preceding year, rounded. ²⁵	$50,000
	3(b). EBR Amount:	100 per cent of Anti-dumping duty rate established in final Order or most recent Administrative Review * value of imports in previous 12 months.	$60,000
4.	Total Obligations:	= 1. + 2. + 3.	$200,000 continuous bond (covering all shipments in one year period) + $600 cash deposit per shipment of $10,000

2.16 The Amended CBD authorizes US Customs to use the standard formula or instead make individualised bond determinations for subject Thai shrimp importers to determine bond amounts. The Amended CBD (specifically the August 2005 Clarification and the October 2006 Notice) provides that US Customs may reconsider bond amounts for individual importers on a case-by-case basis to ensure that duties are collected. However, in order to receive a reduction in the overall bond coverage via an individualized bond determination, an importer must so request, and may submit information on its financial condition related to the risk of non-collection for that importer. US Customs will then determine bond amounts based on the financial information supplied by the importer, US Customs records on compliance history of the importer, the importer's or principal's ability to pay, and other relevant information available to US Customs. Thus, the October 2006 Notice provides that, "[a]bsent exceptional circumstances, the above formulas will determine the bond amounts where a submission has not been made by the principal".²⁶ To date, the United States has indicated that it received 27 requests for individualized bond determinations, of which it has reviewed 22 requests, has granted no reductions to three importers, reductions of 25 per cent to eleven importers, 45 per cent to one importer, 75 per cent to two importers, 80 per cent to one importer and 85 per cent to two importers.²⁷

2.17 The Enhanced continuous bonds provided pursuant to the Amended CBD are released when final liability for anti-dumping duties on goods covered by the bond is assessed, and upon liquidation of the import entries made in account of the goods.²⁸ As explained in Section II.C.2 above, if an administrative review is requested, final liability for anti-dumping or countervailing duties will be determined through such a review. If an administrative review is not requested, final liability will equal the margin of dumping or subsidy published in the final determination; however, this liability will not be assessed until the conclusion of the time period for requesting an administrative review.

²⁵ See 1991 Customs Bond Directive, Exhibit THA-1, which fixed a minimum continuous bond amount of $50,000 and establishes the following formula: (1) In the case of 0 to $1 million duties/taxes, the bond limit of liability is fixed in multiples of $10,000 nearest to 10 per cent of duties, taxes and fees paid during the preceding calendar year; or (2) in the case of duties/taxes over $1 million, the bond liability is fixed in multiples of $100,000 nearest to 10 per cent of duties, taxes and fees paid during the preceding year.

²⁶ Exhibit THA-5.

²⁷ See United States' Responses to First Set of Panel Questions, para. 44; Exhibit US-12. The GAO Report, Exhibit THA-10, p. 42, indicates that the number of shrimp importers totalled 550 through June 2006. Exhibit US-17 refers to 530 shrimp importers in 2004.

²⁸ Under 19 USC § 1675(b), once the administering authority orders liquidation of entries pursuant to a review, goods are liquidated within 90 days after the instructions to Customs are issued, in most cases.

E. THE IMPACT OF THE ENHANCED CONTINUOUS BOND REQUIREMENT (THE "EBR") ON SUBJECT SHRIMP IMPORTERS

2.18 Following the application of the EBR, subject shrimp importers have faced significantly higher security obligations than previously to enter merchandise. Specifically, as explained above, subject shrimp importers must satisfy both the Basic Bond and EBR as well as provide cash deposits equal to the anti-dumping duty rate established in the final determination. Additionally, Thailand explains that sureties have also "typically" required subject shrimp importers/exporters to post collateral equal to 100 per cent of the EBR to secure the increased bond amounts.²⁹ The United States contends that evidence presented to this Panel does not support the conclusion that a majority of companies eligible to act as sureties on bonds securing obligations to US Customs has required certain importers of subject shrimp to post collateral equal to 100 per cent of the EBR.³⁰ Thailand further explains that subject shrimp importers/exporters have also been required to pay associated fees to secure the increased bond amounts.^{31 32} Due to the fact that enhanced bonds are deemed valid for 12-month periods of liability, but are not released until final liability has been assessed for anti-dumping duties on the goods covered by the bond, shrimp importers/exporters subject to the EBR have also had to furnish concurrent enhanced bonds and concurrent rounds of collateral for bonds covering distinct 12-month periods of liability.³³ In the context of the additional security, collateral and fee obligations, the Government Accountability Office (hereafter "USGAO") in a report (the "USGAO Report")³⁴ concluded that subject importers/exporters have likely had to forgo other commercial opportunities, although the effects could not be fully isolated from other changes occurring at the same time.³⁵ The USGAO Report also observed that some importers have required exporters to export on a Delivery Duty Paid ("DDP") basis, thereby making the exporter, as the importer of record, responsible for customs bond requirements.³⁶ The parties disagree on the impact of the increased security

²⁹ In its first written submission, paragraph 125, Thailand refers to the following statement by the US Court of International Trade (hereafter "USCIT") in NFI v. US (Exhibit THA-9, p. 38.): "[T]he testimony of witnesses for two plaintiffs relating to the requirements imposed on plaintiffs seeking new term bonds corroborates the finding that sureties typically require 100 percent collateral in the situations occasioned by the new bonding requirements." In paragraph 125 of its first written submission, Thailand also refers to communications between customs brokers and subject exporters (Exhibit THA-13) that discuss 100 per cent collateral requirements.

³⁰ See United States' Request for Review of the Interim Report, para. 4. See also Exhibit US-13, which lists companies to act as sureties on bonds securing obligations to US Customs.

³¹ Thailand presents as evidence invoices (Exhibit THA-18) indicating that surety companies have charged Thai exporters 10 per cent of the amount of the enhanced bond as a fee for providing the bonds. The United States has emphasized that, as a third party beneficiary to the contract between the surety and the bond principal, it is not itself a party to the contract, and thus does not set market-based fees charged by sureties or receive payments: see United States' first written submission, paras. 7 and 10.

³² See e.g. Exhibit THA-9, p. 38 ("the testimony of witnesses for two plaintiffs relating to the requirements imposed on plaintiffs seeking new term bonds corroborates the finding that sureties typically require 100 percent collateral in the situations occasioned by the new bonding requirements.").

³³ See e.g. Exhibit THA-18, wherein US Customs in separate communications to a Thai importer/producer, specified that the importer/producer must post separate enhanced bonds, each of which is deemed sufficient for one year.

³⁴ Government Accountability Office, Customs' Revised Bonding Policy Reduces Risk of Uncollected Duties, but Concerns about uneven Implementation and Effects Remain, GAO-07-50 (Washington D.C.: October 2006), Exhibit THA-10.

³⁵ See USGAO Report, pp. 6, 24 and 35, Exhibit THA-10; see also NFI v. US, Exhibit THA-9, p. 31.

³⁶ See USGAO Report, p. 6, Exhibit THA-10. See also United States' second written submission (WT/DS343), para. 30, wherein the United States contends that the use of a DDP basis rather than Cost, Insurance and Freight (CIF) one does not affect the costs borne by the importer of record.

requirements and related collateral requirements and fees on the year-on-year volume of shrimp imports into the United States.³⁷

2.19 In October 2006, the USGAO concluded that the Amended CBD criteria were not transparent or consistently applied.³⁸ On 13 November 2006, the US Court of International Trade (hereafter "USCIT") ruled that US Customs appeared to have discretion under US law to consider potential anti-dumping or countervailing duty in setting continuous bond amounts³⁹; however, it concluded that the administrative record supported the conclusion that the plaintiffs are likely to demonstrate that US Customs arbitrarily and capriciously selected the anti-dumping orders on shrimp as the only "covered case" of merchandise⁴⁰, and that the application of the Amended CBD to the eight complaining importers was arbitrary and capricious.⁴¹ For this reason, the USCIT issued a preliminary injunction status quo in favour of eight of the 20 complaining importers, prohibiting the enforcement of any side agreements that limited importation⁴², and ordered US Customs to review the sufficiency of certain EBR bonds amounts in excess of $1,500,000 posted by the eight complaining importers in the case.⁴³ The USCIT's final decision on the merits of the complainants' legal claims is pending. After the GAO Report was issued but prior to publication of the USCIT's ruling, US Customs published the Amended CBD criteria in the October 2006 Notice, which further described the process for obtaining individualized bond amounts.

III. PARTIES' REQUESTS FOR FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

3.1 Thailand requests the Panel;⁴⁴

- (a) to find that, regarding the application of the EBR to subject shrimp from Thailand, the United States acted inconsistently with:
 - (i) Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement by taking specific action against dumping that is not in accordance with the provisions of Article VI of the GATT 1994 as interpreted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement;
 - (ii) subsidiarily, Articles 7 and 9⁴⁵ of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, Article VI:2 of the GATT 1994, and the Ad Note to Article VI:2 and 3 of the GATT 1994 (the "Ad Note").
 - (iii) Article XI:1 of the GATT 1994 by imposing an impermissible restriction on imports of shrimp from Thailand; or, alternatively, that the United States acted inconsistently with Article II:1(a) and the first and second sentences of Article II:1(b) of the GATT 1994 by imposing impermissible duties or charges on imports of shrimp from Thailand.

³⁷ See e.g. Thailand's first written submission, paras. 144-145; United States' first written submission, para. 41.

³⁸ See generally, USGAO Report, Exhibit THA-10.

³⁹ See Exhibit THA-9, p. 42.

⁴⁰ See Exhibit THA-9, p. 54.

⁴¹ See Exhibit THA-9, p. 58.

⁴² See Exhibit THA-9, p. 73.

⁴³ See Exhibit THA-9, p. 72.

⁴⁴ Thailand's first written submission, paras. 288-290.

⁴⁵ In its Request for Establishment of the Panel, para. 2 (vi), Thailand also claimed a violation of Articles 9.1, 9.2 and 9.3 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. In response to Question 42 from the Panel, Thailand stated that it did not pursue further a violation under Article 9.1.

- (iv) Article X:3(a) of the GATT 1994 by failing to administer its customs laws and regulations relating to bonds in a uniform, impartial and reasonable manner.
 - (v) Article I of the GATT 1994 by failing to extend to imports of subject shrimp advantages that are provided to imports of shrimp from other countries.
- (b) to find that, regarding the Anti-Dumping Measure, the United States acted inconsistently with:
- (i) Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement by using the zeroing methodology to calculate margins of dumping.⁴⁶
- (c) to proceed to address Thailand's claims regarding the consistency of the EBR with Articles XI, II, X:3(a), and I of the GATT 1994, even if the Panel were to agree with Thailand on the claim that the application of the Enhanced Bond Requirement constitutes specific action against dumping within the meaning of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.
- (d) to recommend, in accordance with Article 19.1 of the DSU, that the DSB request the United States to bring the measures at issue into conformity with the Anti-Dumping Agreement and the GATT 1994 within a reasonable period of time.
- (e) to suggest, pursuant to its authority under Article 19.1, that the United States bring its measure into conformity by immediately releasing any bonds held by US Customs for imports of subject shrimp from Thailand pursuant to the EBR, so that those imports, like all other US imports subject to anti-dumping duties would be secured by the Basic Bond Requirement.

3.2 The United States requests that the Panel reject Thailand's claims for the reasons provided in its first written submission.⁴⁷

IV. ARGUMENTS OF THE PARTIES

4.1 The arguments of the parties as set forth in their executive summaries submitted to the Panel, are attached to this Report as Annexes (see List of Annexes, page v).

V. ARGUMENTS OF THE THIRD PARTIES

5.1 The arguments of the third parties as set forth in their executive summaries submitted to the Panel, i.e. Brazil, Chile, China, the European Communities, India, Korea, Japan and Mexico, are attached to this Report as Annexes (see List of Annexes, page v).⁴⁸

VI. INTERIM REVIEW

6.1 On 9 October 2007, the Panel issued its Interim Report to the parties. On 23 October 2007, both parties submitted written requests for the review of precise aspects of the Interim Report. The ⁴⁶ In its Request for Establishment of the Panel, paras. 2 (a) (ii), (iii) and (iv), Thailand also claimed a violation of Articles 2.1, 2.4 and 9.3 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. In Thailand's Answers to First Set of Panel Questions, question 2, Thailand stated that it did not pursue further a violation under these articles.

⁴⁷ United States' first written submission, para. 81.

⁴⁸ China and Viet Nam informed the Panel that they would not be providing written submissions.

parties also submitted written comments on the other party's comments on 2 November 2007. Neither party requested an interim review meeting.

6.2 In accordance with Article 15.4 of the DSU, this section of the Panel's Report sets out the Panel's response to the arguments made at the interim review stage, wherever the Panel felt that explanation was necessary. The Panel has also modified certain aspects of its Report in light of the parties' comments wherever the Panel considered it necessary. Due to the factual similarities in the disputes DS343 and DS345, the Panel wherever possible has modified the respective reports of these two disputes in parallel. The Panel has also made a limited number of editorial corrections to the Interim Report for the purposes of clarity and accuracy. References to sections, paragraph numbers and footnotes in this Section VI relate to the Interim Report. Where appropriate, references to paragraphs and footnotes to the Final Report are included.

A. THAILAND'S COMMENTS ON THE INTERIM REPORT

1. The impact of the EBR on subject importers

6.3 Regarding paragraph 2.18 and collateral requirements, Thailand requests the Panel to modify its statement that at least one or more sureties has required subject importers to provide 100 per cent collateral, based on statements made by the USCIT that sureties "typically" require 100 per cent collateral (see NFI v. U.S., Exhibit THA-9, at 38). Thailand submits that the dictionary definition of "typically" is "representatively, characteristically." (see New Shorter Oxford dictionary, vol. 2 (1993), Brown, L. Ed. (Clarendon Press: Oxford) p. 3442). Further, Thailand requests the Panel to refer to evidence disclosed in email communications between customs brokers and exporters discussing collateral requirements (see Exhibit THA-13). The United States requests the Panel to decline Thailand's suggestions due to the fact that the proceedings in NFI v. US are ongoing, contain a different factual record and involve questions of US law. In particular, the United States notes that the findings in NFI v. US pertain to 8 importers and should not be extrapolated. The United States further notes that evidence on record, such as Exhibit THA-13, does not support the conclusion that all or a majority of sureties require collateral. However, the United States does request the Panel to include evidence submitted by Thailand and the United States on the issue of collateral requirements into the relevant footnotes. Taking both parties' comments into consideration, the Panel has modified paragraph 2.18 in order to reflect both parties' views with respect to the overall effect of the EBR on all subject shrimp importers/exporters from Thailand.

6.4 Regarding paragraphs 2.18, 6.59 and 6.75, footnote 103 and fees and the stacking effect, Thailand requests the Panel to refer to Exhibit THA-18 as evidence to support a finding that sureties have charged associated fees to secure increased bond amounts. Thailand further requests the Panel to refer to Exhibit THA-18 as discussed in paragraphs 132-134 of Thailand's first written submission, or NFI v. US, Exhibit THA-9 as discussed in paragraphs 59-62 and 113 of Thailand's first written submission to support its explanation of the stacking effect of bonds on imports. The United States does not object to inclusion of citation to Exhibit THA-18, but requests the Panel to retain the existing text in the main body. If the Panel refers to Thailand's arguments regarding stacking, the United States requests the Panel to also refer to US arguments presented in paragraphs 7, 10-11, and 40-44 of its first written submission. In relation to fees, the Panel has added citation to invoices provided in Exhibit THA-18 and the United States' first written submission, in footnotes to paragraph 2.18 of the Interim Report. The Panel has also cited to Exhibits THA-18 and THA-13 in paragraph 2.18 when discussing the stacking of enhanced bonds and its effect on collateral requirements.

6.5 Regarding paragraph 2.18, Thailand also requests the Panel to modify the phrase "certain importers may have required exporters to export on a DDP basis" to reflect a statement by the USGAO that importers "now require" exporters to export on a DDP basis (see USGAO Report, Exhibit THA-10, p. 6). Thailand also asks the Panel to consider a Thai shrimp industry survey (see Exhibit THA-12) in support of the finding that exporters are required to ship on a DDP basis. The United States requests the Panel to modify the Interim Report to reflect the US position that the use of a DDP basis rather than a Cost, Insurance, and Freight (CIF) basis does not affect the costs faced by the importer of record. The Panel has modified the phrasing of its descriptive section in paragraph 2.18 to reflect statements by the USGAO regarding whether importers of subject shrimp have required exporters to export on a DDP basis, and has included citation to the United States arguments on the impact of a shift to a DDP basis.

2. Findings by the USCIT in NFI v. U.S.

6.6 Regarding paragraph 2.19, Thailand requests the Panel to additionally refer to findings by the USCIT from section 2(b) of NFI v. U.S. (see Exhibit THA-9, p. 54). Thailand submits that, as pertains to the decision on whether to issue a preliminary injunction, the USCIT concluded that the administrative record supported the conclusion that the plaintiffs are likely to demonstrate that US Customs arbitrarily and capriciously selected the anti-dumping orders on shrimp as the only "covered case" of merchandise. The United States construes the current language in the report as accurately describing the USCIT's decision with respect to the eight complaining importers. The Panel has retained the original language discussing the USCIT holding while also seeking to clarify its description of the US court's holding through the addition of language in paragraph 2.19. The paragraph now reflects the USCIT's findings that plaintiffs are likely to demonstrate that US Customs both arbitrarily and capriciously selected the anti-dumping order as the only covered case, and arbitrarily and capriciously applied the Amended CBD to the eight complaining importers.

3. Parallel panel proceedings

6.7 Regarding paragraph 6.1, Thailand requests the Panel to consider substituting the word "should" for "would" in the final sentence so that it does not appear that the decision to appoint the same panellists in DS343 and DS345 and to harmonise the timetable for the two cases was made by the representative of the United States. The United States notes that the US representative stated on record that "the same panellists could consider on the same timetable the matters in the two requests". (see WT/DSB/M/222, emphasis added). The Panel has amended paragraph 6.1 (7.1 of the Final Report) to reflect the statement made by the US representative.

4. "Specific action" in response to dumping

6.8 Regarding paragraphs 6.55 and 6.61, Thailand requests the Panel to refer to additional arguments and evidence provided by Thailand in paragraphs 162 – 176 of its first written submission. Thailand submits that the Panel has only referred selectively to its argumentation regarding whether the application of the EBR constitutes "specific action" in response to dumping. In particular, Thailand submits that paragraph 6.61 contains no reference to Thailand's responses to the United States' arguments, including those presented in paragraphs 19 – 27 of Thailand's first oral statement, and paragraphs 8 – 15 of Thailand's second oral statement. The United States considers the Panel to have adequately represented Thailand's arguments in paragraphs 162 – 176 of the Interim Report, as well as Thailand's responses to US arguments, and doesn't believe further changes are necessary. In the case that the Panel were to refer to argumentation offered by Thailand in subsequent submissions, the United States requests the Panel to refer to US arguments in response to these additions.

6.9 In making its findings, the Panel has set out the main arguments of the parties. The Panel does not consider that it is required to provide an exhaustive description of all of the parties' arguments, sub-arguments and supporting evidence when making its findings, particularly since the parties' own summaries of their arguments are annexed to the Report. Thailand's main argument regarding the specificity of the relevant action is that the EBR may only be applied to goods subject to US anti-dumping orders. This argument is repeated on numerous occasions in the extracts identified by Thailand in its interim comments, and is properly reflected in para. 6.55 of the Interim Report (7.55 of the Final Report).

5. Specific action "against" dumping

6.10 Regarding paragraph 6.59, Thailand requests the Panel to refer to additional arguments and evidence provided by Thailand in paragraphs 182 – 190 of its first written submission. Thailand submits that the Panel has only referred selectively to its argumentation regarding whether the application of the EBR constitutes specific action "against dumping". In particular, Thailand submits that paragraphs 6.64, and 6.75 – 6.77 contain no reference to Thailand's submissions or evidence, such as Thailand's argumentation as to why the effects of the collateral requirements and fees charged by sureties are relevant considerations when determining that the measure is "against" dumping (as found by the Panel in footnote 103 of the Interim Report), and argumentation that the EBR does not simply facilitate the collection of anti-dumping duties (as found by the Panel in paragraph 6.76). The United States considers the Panel to have adequately represented Thailand's submissions and evidence in the Interim Report, including arguments regarding collateral and fees in paragraph 6.75 of the Interim Report, and Thailand's argument that the EBR does not solely facilitate the collection of anti-dumping duties. In the case that the Panel were to refer to argumentation offered by Thailand in subsequent submissions, the United States requests the Panel to refer to US arguments in response to these additions.

6.11 The Panel considers that it has appropriately summarized the main arguments of Thailand regarding the impact of the application of the EBR. The Panel does not consider that it is required to provide an exhaustive description of all of the parties' arguments, sub-arguments and supporting evidence when making its findings, particularly since the parties' own summaries of their arguments are annexed to the Report.

6. Application of the Ad Note

6.12 Regarding paragraphs 6.81 – 6.87, Thailand submits that the Panel's discussion of Thailand's arguments regarding the application of the Ad Note is incomplete. In particular, Thailand submits that the Panel only discusses arguments regarding the relationship between the Ad Note and the Anti-Dumping Agreement, but not other arguments related to other issues discussed in Section VI.C.4, such as the proper interpretation of the Ad Note (see e.g. Thailand's first oral statement, paras. 9 – 16).

6.13 Thailand requests the Panel to address the following arguments: (a) Thailand's argument regarding the ordinary meaning of the term "suspected dumping", based on its ordinary meaning and the context of the authority to impose anti-dumping duties in Article VI:2 (see Thailand's responses to the Panel's first set of questions, paras. 47 – 49; Thailand's second written submission, paras. 27, 30 – 31); (b) Thailand's argument that Article VI and the Anti-Dumping Agreement require a simultaneous finding of the existence of dumping and injury (see Thailand's first oral statement, paras. 13 – 14, Thailand's second written submission, paras. 26, 31); (c) Thailand's argument that the term "cash deposit" as used in the Anti-Dumping Agreement refers only to provisional measures (see Thailand's second oral statement, paras. 38 – 42); and (d) Thailand's argument that the purpose of cash deposits of estimated anti-dumping duties collected after the imposition of an anti-dumping order is to protect domestic industries rather than to secure the payment of potential increases in liability (see Thailand's second oral statement, para. 54).

6.14 In addition, Thailand submits that the Panel has not discussed Thailand's responses to the United States' arguments, such as in paragraph 6.87 of the Interim Report, regarding the United States' contention that Thailand's arguments would mean that security pending final assessment of anti-dumping duties was nowhere permitted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement or the GATT 1994 (see e.g. Thailand's first oral statement, paras. 5 – 7; Thailand's second written submission, paras. 8 – 12; Thailand's response to the Panel's second set of questions, paras. 23 – 25; Thailand's second oral statement, para. 7).

6.15 The United States considers the Panel to have adequately represented Thailand's arguments regarding the ordinary meaning of "suspected dumping", Article VI, the meaning of "cash deposit" and the alleged "purpose" of cash deposits in the Interim Report. The United States considers unwarranted Thailand's request to respond to arguments regarding what Thailand claims would not prevent the United States from administering its retrospective duty assessment system. The United States, contends that this argument is premised on a claim that "cash deposits" are "duties", which the Panel has discussed and rejected in paragraphs 6.110 – 6.121 of the Interim Report.

6.16 Thailand's main argument regarding the ordinary meaning of the term "suspected dumping" is that "[t]he ordinary meaning of 'suspected' is 'that one suspects to exist or to be such' " (footnote omitted). Given that an investigation under Article 5.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement is to determine the "existence" of dumping, dumping can no longer be said to be merely "suspected" once a final determination in such an investigation has been made.⁴⁹ This argument is premised on the view that the existence of dumping is established once the anti-dumping order is imposed. The Panel addresses this issue – and therefore the premise of Thailand's argument - at para. 6.102 of the Interim Report. The Panel addresses this issue further – with specific reference to Thailand's argument regarding Article 5.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement – in paras 6.107 – 6.109 of the Interim Report.

6.17 Thailand's argument that Article VI and the Anti-Dumping Agreement require a simultaneous finding of the existence of dumping and injury is necessarily addressed in our view, expressed at para. 6.108 of the Interim Report, that the conditions for imposing anti-dumping measures (including therefore the existence of injury and causation) are established in respect of the "current situation" prevailing at the time of imposition. Our point remains, though, that a finding of dumping (and injury and causation) at the time of imposition does not mean that there will necessarily be dumping in respect of future import entries.

6.18 Thailand's argument that the term "cash deposit", as used in the Anti-Dumping Agreement, refers only to provisional measures is necessarily addressed by our consideration of the negotiating history of the Ad Note, which makes it clear that the Ad Note is not limited to provisional measures taken prior to the final determination of dumping. This argument is further addressed by our review of the relationship between the Ad Note and the Anti-Dumping Agreement, for it is premised on an assumption that the terms of Article 7.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement somehow trump those of the Ad Note.

6.19 We have included footnote 170 at paragraph 7.122 of our Final Report to address Thailand's argument in respect of the purpose of cash deposits collected after the imposition of an anti-dumping order.

6.20 To the extent that Thailand's comment in respect of paragraph 6.87 of the Interim Report would suggest that the United States is entitled to continue its current practice of collecting cash deposits, we note Thailand's argument that "the United States is authorised under Article 9 of the Anti-dumping Agreement to maintain its current practice of collecting cash deposits of estimated anti-dumping duties following the imposition of definitive anti-dumping duties."⁵⁰ This argument is necessarily addressed – and rejected - through our findings on the possible treatment of cash deposits as anti-dumping duties. To the extent that Thailand's comment refers to its argument that the United ⁴⁹ See para. 47 of Thailand's Responses to the First Set of Panel Questions.

⁵⁰ See Thailand's second written submission, para. 9.

States could collect security under the Basic Bond Requirement,⁵¹ we note that these proceedings concern the WTO-consistency of the specific facts surrounding the application of the EBR. Whether or not the United States might legitimately take action under some other provision of its domestic law does not affect our analysis of the application of the EBR in light of the relevant provisions of the covered agreements, including Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and the Ad Note. While we examined other forms of security that might potentially be applied under the Ad Note, we did so in order to shed light on the interpretation of that provision. Thailand's arguments regarding possible security under the Basic Bond Requirement would not serve this function, for Thailand has made it clear that the Basic Bond Requirement would not apply under the Ad Note, which it considers to be superseded by the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

7. Ordinary meaning of the text of the Ad Note

6.21 Regarding paragraphs 6.100 – 6.106, Thailand submits that the Panel has not discussed the ordinary meaning of the term "suspected dumping" in the Ad Note as interpreted in accordance with Article 31 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. Thailand contends that the Panel has instead interpreted the term "suspected dumping" solely by reference to the processes of the United States' investigating authority. Thailand therefore requests the Panel to verify that the interpretation of the ordinary meaning of the text of the Ad Note is based on the ordinary meaning of the text, in accordance with Article 31 of the Vienna Convention, and not strictly on US administrative practice. Thailand also requests the Panel to provide reference to the records in paragraphs 6.101 – 6.102 regarding discussion of US administrative processes. The United States disagrees with Thailand's request to modify the discussion of "suspected dumping". The United States does not consider the Panel to suggest that "suspected" dumping should not be interpreted based on its ordinary meaning, nor that the Panel adopted a meaning of "suspected" that is inconsistent with its ordinary meaning. The United States also considers that the Panel's evaluation of the US duty assessment system in this context appears intended not to interpret the term "suspected", but to assess how that term applies to the particular facts of this dispute. Nevertheless, if the Panel chooses to include reference and citations to the record describing duty assessment, the United States suggests the Panel refer to the description of the US retrospective duty assessment system set forth in paragraphs 2.7 – 2.10 of the Interim Report.

6.22 The Panel had not understood there to be any disagreement between the parties regarding the ordinary meaning of the term "suspected dumping". Rather, the disagreement concerned the question of whether or not there could still be "suspected dumping" after the imposition of an anti-dumping order. Since in this case the relevant anti-dumping order was imposed by the United States, the Panel considered this issue in the context of the US system. The Panel did not refer to the context of the US system to interpret the terms "suspected dumping" per se. We have included paragraph 7.101 in the Final Report to clarify our interpretation of the phrase "suspected dumping".

6.23 Regarding Thailand's suggestion that we include references for our description of the US administrative processes, we note that this description is based on descriptions of the relevant processes provided by the parties (both orally and in writing) during the course of these proceedings.

⁵¹ See, for example, para. 7 of Thailand's oral statement at the first substantive meeting. We understand that this argument does not include the US practice of collecting cash deposits, for Thailand's argument presupposes that action under the Basic Bond Requirement will not constitute "specific action against dumping" (see para. 17 of Thailand's comments on the Interim Report), whereas cash deposits are necessarily "specific action against dumping".

8. Administrative reviews and exporter-specific assessment rate assignments

6.24 Regarding paragraph 6.109 and footnote 136, Thailand requests the Panel to clarify through references to the record the finding that the United States in its administrative reviews initially assesses whether the export price for particular exports was below normal value. Thailand submits that evidence before the Panel, including the preliminary determination in the first administrative review of shrimp from Thailand, indicates that the United States' actual determination in assessment reviews is based on an overall calculation of a single dumping margin for each exporter, based on all of the exporters' transactions within the review period (see Exhibits US-5, US-6). The United States considers the discussion of how the United States calculates the anti-dumping margin to be accurate in its current form. Regardless, the United States highlights the Panel's finding that the existence of dumping is established after imports are made.

6.25 Thailand also requests the Panel to explain the statement that the calculation of an exporter-specific assessment rate in an administrative review is done "for the sake of administrative convenience." Specifically, Thailand requests the Panel to explain the meaning of "administrative convenience" and how this concept differs from a published determination of a margin of dumping within the meaning of the Anti-Dumping Agreement for each exporter. The United States does not consider it necessary for the Panel to elaborate on the meaning of the term "administrative convenience".

6.26 The Panel has made a number of changes to footnote 155 to its Final Report in order to address the concerns raised by Thailand.

9. Cash deposits

6.27 Regarding paragraph 6.113, Thailand also requests the Panel to explain the statement that "a cash deposit is not cash and is not a payment to yield public revenue at the time it is provided", and in what sense cash deposits of estimated duties paid on entry of goods subject to US anti-dumping orders are not "cash". Thailand submits that the parties did not dispute that cash deposits of estimated duties are, in fact, "cash" paid to the general fund of the US treasury at the time of importation. Thailand requests the Panel to clarify its position through reference to US law and the record and to clarify what is the process where a cash deposit "is converted from a deposit or security, into a form of payment". The United States disputes Thailand's reading of the Panel's finding, contending the Panel to have meant that cash deposits are not liquidated revenue without the same attributes as cash. However, if the Panel were to include citation to the record on the transformation of cash deposits into a form of payment, the United States suggests referring to the description of the assessment review process in paragraphs 6.110 – 6.121 and 2.8 – 2.9 of the Interim Report.

6.28 The Panel has made a number of changes to paragraph 6.113 (now 7.114 of its Final Report) and inserted footnote 170 in its Final Report order to address the concerns raised by Thailand.

10. Negotiating history of the Ad Note

6.29 Regarding paragraph 6.124, Thailand submits that, in its submissions, it referred to the 1959 Report of the Group of Experts as well as the 1948 Report of the Working Party that adopted the Ad Note, when discussing the negotiating history of the Ad Note (see Thailand's first oral statement, para. 15, Thailand's response to the first set of Panel questions, para. 10, and Thailand's response to the second set of Panel questions, para. 42). Accordingly, Thailand requests the Panel to revise paragraphs 6.124 – 6.125 to reflect both of these references to the negotiating history. The United States does not consider changes to this section necessary because it views the Panel's analysis as more than adequate. The United States also notes the Panel's statement that it is not referring to the negotiating history because it does not consider it determinative of the issue before it. The United States considers that Thailand's reference to the 1948 Working Party Report does not detract from the Panel's conclusions concerning the negotiating history, but is instead fully consistent with the Panel's interpretation, under which dumping is suspected until anti-dumping duties are finally assessed and collected.

6.30 The Panel has inserted paragraphs 7.127 and 7.128 in its Final Report addressing this issue.

11. Likelihood of increase of dumping margin for future imports as a best proxy

6.31 Regarding paragraphs 6.137 – 6.138, Thailand submits that if a Member may also make a separate prospective determination of the likely dumping margin for future imports, and if the Member properly determines that the rates of dumping found in the final determination of dumping are likely to increase, then the rate of dumping found in the final determination is no longer the "best and only available proxy for duties that ultimately may be assessed". In light of this, Thailand requests the Panel to revise these paragraphs to clarify that, if a Member determines that the rates of dumping provided in the anti-dumping order are likely to decrease, then that determination also constitutes "the best estimate of suspected dumping for which security may be required pursuant to the Ad Note". Thailand submits, in this sense, that a Member could collect security only in this lower amount as "reasonable" under the Ad Note.

6.32 The United States disagrees with Thailand's assertions but nonetheless requests the Panel to make clarifications to this section. The United States disagrees with the assertion that a Member must also make a separate prospective determination of the likely dumping margin for future imports in addition to determining the margin of dumping for the period of investigation. The United States contends that the Panel did not conclude that the only evidence that a Member may offer to support the establishment of a "reasonable" security would be through a prospective determination of the likely dumping margin. According to the United States, this conclusion is without basis in the Ad Note and would not accord with the Panel's observation in paragraph 6.111 that Members are entitled to operate retrospective duty assessment systems. The United States contends that, in accord with the Panel's conclusion that dumping is suspected until final assessment under the US retrospective assessment system, likelihood needs to be evaluated based on information available to the customs authority at the time the security is imposed, which may or may not include the type identified by Thailand.

6.33 The Panel declines Thailand's request, since this case does not concern a situation in which a Member determined that the rates of dumping provided in the anti-dumping order are likely to decrease.

12. The phrase "error or fraud on the part of import specialists"

6.34 Regarding paragraph 6.141, the Panel refers to "error or fraud on the part of import specialists." Thailand submits that the term "import specialists" is generally used to describe US Customs officers responsible for issues relating to specific products, but that Thailand made no allegations of fraud by US Customs officers. Thus, Thailand requests the Panel remove the phrase "on the part of import specialists" to avoid inference of such an allegation. The United States does not object to this change.

6.35 The Panel has amended its text to address the concern raised by Thailand.

13. Documentation on likelihood of anti-dumping rate increases

6.36 Regarding paragraphs 6.141 et seq., Thailand contends that the Panel is incorrect in asserting that the United States did not submit any documentary evidence that anti-dumping rates increased 33 per cent of the time. Thailand submits that in response to question 24 from the Panel following the first substantive meeting with the parties, the United States addressed this via Exhibit US-10 (see US response to the second set of Panel questions, para. 38). According to Thailand, Exhibit US-10 consists of the following: (i) 1 page that contains a chart plotting "Number of Cases" against "Percentage Change" with figures ranging from 0% to 2500% (but the X axis does not extend from -1% to -100%) without: (1) a further definition of the term "cases", (2) details of the anti-dumping duty orders, and period of time covered by these "cases", (3) details on each individual "case", including figures for the extent of increase/decrease in the "case", the order concerned, date of entry and value of trade, or, (4) figures for aggregate number of "cases" where margins increased, decreased or remained the same; (ii) 1 page that provides figures for uncollected duties on crawfish for fiscal year 2003 with deposit and final rates; (iii) 5 pages of undefined figures ("FirstOfTotalAmt", "ADZCaseNbr", "Sum", "Rate Increase") that relate only to particular exporters of crawfish from China; and (iv) 3 pages that set out the amount of uncollected duties for fiscal year 2003 on all anti-dumping and countervailing duty orders. Thailand further notes that the United States described Exhibit US-10 as a US Customs analysis of "historical rate fluctuations in individual cases" (see US response to the first set of Panel questions, para. 26). Thailand also asserts that the United States referred to Exhibit US-10 (at para. 38 of its responses to the Panel's Second Set of Questions) in support of its assertion that rates increased approximately 33 per cent of the time. Therefore, Thailand requests the Panel to revise paragraph 6.141 to indicate that the United States submitted documentary evidence in support of the assertion that anti-dumping rates increased 33 per cent of the time, but such evidence is unclear and unreliable.

6.37 In Thailand's view, however, the analysis in Exhibit US-10 does not have a precise scope and methodology and does not clearly concern 13 anti-dumping cases involving 340 exporters, as claimed by the United States in its responses to the second set of Panel questions, footnote 46. According to Thailand the analysis is also problematic because it appears to be limited to a subset of agriculture/aquaculture cases, does not contain weighting by trade value or volume, and includes cases involving new shipper reviews. Thailand submits that, given that the cash deposit rate was zero in new shipper reviews, all affirmative dumping determinations would have been considered as cases of "increases" in dumping rates, resulting in an exaggerated estimate that cannot be extrapolated to ordinary assessment reviews or a situation where the new shippers bonding privilege has been removed. Accordingly, Thailand requests the Panel to specifically cite portions of Thailand's submissions that set out objections to Exhibit US-10. In light of these changes, nevertheless, even if there were clear and reliable documentary evidence to support the United States' analysis, Thailand submits that this analysis should not change the Panel's conclusion in paragraphs 6.142 – 6.146.

6.38 Thailand further submits that, in footnote 167 to paragraph 6.141 of the Interim Report, the Panel's statement that the "United States' evidence in respect of rate increases extends beyond the crawfish case and covers each agriculture/aquaculture order" is inaccurate as it is unsupported by evidence on record. Thailand notes that the Panel has based this statement on footnote 45 of the United States' responses to the second set of Panel questions. According to Thailand, however, the United States provided no evidence to support the assertion that all agriculture/aquaculture orders are covered in its analysis. Thailand submits that the United States did not provide a list of the agriculture/aquaculture orders examined by the CBP in Exhibit US-10. Moreover, Thailand submits that the United States instead provided Exhibit US-19 which, according to the United States, updated Exhibit US-10. Thailand asserts, however, that Exhibit US-19 does not cover "each agriculture/aquaculture order" as it excludes, at a minimum, 2 anti-dumping orders on pasta and 1 anti-dumping order on frozen raspberries (see Thailand's responses to the first set of Panel questions, footnote 55). Moreover, Thailand contends that the United States' assertion that the CBP examined 13 anti-dumping orders (see United States' responses to the second set of Panel questions, footnote 46), suggests that US Customs' analysis was incomplete, as there appear to be more than 13 anti-dumping orders in effect on agriculture/aquaculture merchandise (see Thailand's responses to the first set of Panel questions, footnote 55 (listing "at least" 22 orders); Exhibit US-19 (listing 17 orders); and Exhibit US-21 (listing 21 orders)). Accordingly, Thailand requests the Panel to also revise this statement in footnote 167.

6.39 The United States notes that it has not cited Exhibit US-10 in support of the argument that rates increased 33 per cent of the time. According to the United States, Exhibit US-10 addresses the question of the amount by which rates increase in cases where an increase occurs, leaving this Exhibit irrelevant to the Panel's analysis of the likelihood of a rate increase. The United States asserts that Exhibit US-19 is relevant to the question of the likelihood of increase. The United States contends that this Exhibit examines each assessment for each agriculture/aquaculture order and compares it to the cash deposit rate at the time to determine the likelihood that rates would increase (38 per cent, in that study). However, due to the Exhibit's inclusion in footnote 167, the United States considers the Panel to have only concluded that the United States did not provide documentary evidence in support of its argument that rates increased 33 per cent of the time, not more generally to arguments regarding rate increases.

6.40 The Panel declines to find that the United States submitted Exhibit US-10 in support of its argument that rates of dumping had increased in 33 per cent of cases. Regarding Thailand's reference to para. 38 of the US Responses to the Panel's Second Set of Questions, we note that the United States merely cited Exhibit US-10 in support of its assertion that "[w]hen rates increased, they increased by, on average, 285%". Since this was not an issue that we were required to examine, we had no need to examine the parties' arguments in respect of the contents of Exhibit US-10. While the United States submitted evidence of rate increases in Exhibit US-19, the United States made no argument that such evidence demonstrated that rates increased in 33 per cent of cases.

6.41 We have amended footnote 187 of the Final Report in light of the concerns raised by Thailand.

14. The United States defence under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994

6.42 Regarding Section VI.6(b), Thailand submits that, to the extent that the Anti-Dumping Agreement constitutes lex specialis with respect to the measure at issue, the panel should only consider defences available within the Anti-Dumping Agreement and not the United States' defence under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994. Thailand submits that consideration of the United States' Article XX(d) defence is inconsistent with the finding that Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, read in conjunction with the Ad Note, authorises the taking of reasonable security based on future increases in dumping margins. Accordingly, Thailand requests the Panel to either not exercise judicial economy with respect to Thailand's other claims under the GATT 1994 or to also exercise judicial economy with respect to the United States' defence under Article XX(d). Otherwise, Thailand requests the Panel to explain why it has considered the United States' Article XX(d) defence while exercising judicial economy with respect to Thailand's GATT 1994 claims.

6.43 The United States considers Thailand's request without basis since, it contends, the Panel found that the application of the EBR to subject Thai shrimp importers breached the Ad Note to Article VI of the GATT 1994. Because Article XX(d) applied to claims under the GATT 1994 and the Ad Note is a provision of the GATT 1994, the United States considers it appropriate to reach the United States' Article XX(d) defence. Furthermore, the United States disagrees with Thailand's assertion that the Panel should not consider Article XX(d) in view of its findings regarding lex specialis. The United States notes that the Panel found that "Article VI of the GATT 1994 and the Ad Note" constitute lex specialis, and not the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

6.44 The Panel is of the view that a respondent in a WTO dispute may simultaneously respond to claims presented by the claimant while also raising an affirmative defence under a relevant provision in Article XX of the GATT 1994. The Panel notes that the text of the chapeau to Article XX of the GATT 1994 reads: " ... nothing in this Agreement shall be construed to prevent the adoption or enforcement by any contracting party of measures ... " (emphasis added). This text does not on its face limit a panel from considering an affirmative defence under Article XX where it has found a violation under a provision of the GATT, including Article VI and/or the Ad Note. In this regard, the Panel recalls its findings that the application of the EBR constitutes specific action against dumping which is not in accordance with the provisions of the GATT 1994 since it is inconsistent with the Ad Note. The Panel also considers it proper to analyse the United States' defence under Article XX notwithstanding the finding presented in paragraph 6.159 that Article VI of the GATT 1994 and the Ad Note to Article VI constitute lex specialis. In the findings, the Panel refers to Article VI and its Ad Note as lex specialis with respect to the other more general provisions of the GATT 1994 cited by Thailand. The Panel's findings with respect to the applicability of the principle of lex specialis do not refer to a defence under Article XX(d) in order to justify a potential violation of Article VI and its Ad Note. Accordingly, the Panel considers additional analysis of the United States' Article XX(d) defence unnecessary and rejects Thailand's request for review of our findings on this issue.

15. Factual findings on risk of default

6.45 Regarding the Panel's analysis of the meaning of "reasonable" in the Ad Note and "necessary" under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994, Thailand submits that these concepts should involve consideration of both the likelihood that anti-dumping duties will increase and the risk of default by importers of subject merchandise due to increased duty liability. With respect to its analysis of the Ad Note, Thailand notes that the Panel commented that "there is no additional obligation under the Ad Note to assess the risk of default of individual importers", and made no factual findings regarding the risk of default on increased duty liability. With respect to its analysis of Article XX(d), Thailand notes that the Panel also did not consider the risk of default. Thailand requests the Panel to make factual findings on the relevance of the risk of default, and whether the United States properly determined an increased default risk. The United States does not consider it necessary for the Panel to evaluate evidence regarding risk of default. However, the United States contends that the Panel should clarify its findings by inserting a statement confirming that the Panel is not suggesting that a Member is precluded from requiring security as in "other cases of customs administration", such as when an importer has a significant risk of default.

6.46 In view of the analytical approach adopted by the Panel in this case, we do not consider that it is appropriate for us to address the parties' evidence regarding the risk of default. In particular, the analytical approach of the Panel does not provide any standard against which to assess that evidence.

B. THE UNITED STATES' COMMENTS ON THE INTERIM REPORT

1. Typographical errors

6.47 Regarding paragraph 1.10, the United States requests replacing the phrase "24 and 25 July 200" with "24 and 25 July 2007". The Panel has corrected this typographical error.

6.48 Regarding paragraph 1.11, the United States requests replacing the phrase "9 September 2007" with "9 October 2007". The Panel has corrected this typographical error.

2. Factual aspects to the dispute

6.49 Regarding paragraph 2.10, the United States requests replacing the phrase "prior to initiation of the anti-dumping or countervailing duty order" with the phrase "prior to initiation of the anti-dumping or countervailing duty investigation." The Panel has corrected this error.

6.50 Regarding paragraph 2.13, the United States submits that US Customs designates importers of certain merchandise, not importers, as "covered cases", and thus requests the Panel to modify the text to read: "US Customs implemented the EBR and required select importers of merchandise designated as 'covered cases' ...". The Panel has corrected this error.

3. Treatment of amendments as part of the measure at issue

6.51 Regarding paragraph 6.48, the United States construes the Panel's analysis as suggesting that the inclusion of certain language in a panel request concerning amendments to measures, or the need to secure a positive resolution to a dispute could be the basis for treating a measure as part of the measure at issue and within the panel's terms of reference. The United States requests the Panel to remove the third and final sentences from the paragraph and base the analysis on the nature of the measure in question. Thailand disagrees with the United States' suggestion to delete the third and final sentences of paragraph 6.48. Thailand notes that the finding by the Appellate Body in Chile Price Band System considered both the extent to which the new measure amended the existing measure, and the fact that the request for the establishment included language to encompass amendments. Thailand contends it would be misleading to include the October 2006 Notice within the Panel's terms of reference without basing the decision in part on the statement in Thailand's request for establishment that the measure at issue included any amendments. The Panel has made minor modifications to the text in paragraph 6.48 (7.48 of the Final Report) in order to reflect the rationale presented in Chile – Price Band System that an amendment should not change the essence of the original measure into something different than what was in force before its issuance.

4. The EBR formula

6.52 Regarding paragraph 6.72 (7.72 of the Final Report), the United States requests the Panel to replace the phrase "the formula would be invalid" in the final sentence of this paragraph with "the formula would not apply" to more accurately characterise the status of the EBR formula in relation to the directive.

6.53 The Panel has made the change requested by the United States.

5. The relationship between Article 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and retrospective duty assessment

6.54 Regarding paragraphs 6.108 (7.109 of the Final Report) and 6.111 (7.112 of the Final Report), the United States requests the Panel to modify language to more accurately reflect the relationship between Article 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and retrospective duty assessment. First, the United States suggests that the Panel replace the parenthetical that the system is "(specifically authorised by Article 9.3.1)" with "(which is specifically contemplated in Article 9.3.1)". Second, the United States suggests replacing the parenthetical "(which Members are entitled to apply by virtue of Article 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement)" with "(which is specifically contemplated by Article 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement)".

6.55 The Panel has made the changes requested by the United States.

6. Characterisation of the "enhanced" bond requirement

6.56 Regarding paragraph 6.128 (7.131 of the Final Report), the United States suggests replacing the term "extended" with "enhanced" to describe the bonds required under the Amended CBD.

6.57 The Panel has made the change proposed by the United States.

7. The legal standard for determining whether or not the application of the EBR resulted in "reasonable" security requirements

6.58 Regarding paragraphs 6.136 – 6.146, the United States proposes a number of changes to language that, in its view, could be construed as inconsistent with the Panel's positions elsewhere in its Report. First, the United States proposes a number of changes to prevent the Panel from incorrectly paraphrasing the reasonableness standard set forth in the Ad Note. In general, the United States proposes to use the formulation "the likelihood of rates increasing", as the United States considers that the term "likely", or "likely amount" (as used by the Panel in the Interim Report), suggests that a Member must demonstrate substantial certainty.

6.59 Thailand disagrees that the standard applied by the Panel requires a showing of substantial certainty. Thailand also disagrees with the US proposal to use the term "likelihood", for Thailand is concerned that reference to "a likelihood" might mean that so long as one possible outcome is that the amount of final liability may increase over the rate of dumping established in the investigation, there would be "a" likelihood that rates may increase.

6.60 Second, the United States considers that the Panel's use of the term "likely" in the Interim Report's discussion of increases in margins could be read to contradict its point elsewhere in the report that the information on which security requirements must be evaluated is that available "at the time that the [requirement]" is imposed, and not ex post rationalization.⁵² The United States recalls the Panel's statement in paragraph 6.102 of its Interim Report that, due to the operation of the U.S. retrospective duty assessment system, "there is no certainty that imports entering the United States following imposition of an anti-dumping order are in fact dumped" and that until assessment "it is not possible to state with certainty whether or not those imports are dumped." Since likelihood would need to be evaluated based on information available to the customs authority at the time the security requirement is imposed, the United States has suggested, for example, changing "determine the amount" to "estimate the amount" in paragraph 6.138.

6.61 Thailand submits that the textual changes requested by the United States would reduce the objective standard articulated in the Interim Report to a question of what "roughly approximates" potential margins.⁵³ As the Appellate Body has made clear in the context of sunset reviews, the mere fact that a determination requires a prospective analysis does not justify a departure from the standard of an objective, impartial and reasoned determination of probability. Thailand asserts that the Panel should not make any revisions to the Interim Report that would suggest that "reasonable security" can be based on a possibility of rates increasing, rather than the "best estimate" by an "objective and impartial investigating authority" that rates "were likely to increase" and a proper determination of "the likely amount of such increase."

6.62 Third, the United States asserts that as in "ordinary cases of customs administration", there may be cases in which an importer has a history of defaulting on its obligations such that additional security may be the only means available to the United States to ensure that duties are paid, short of prohibiting that importer from entering goods entirely. The United States claims that the Panel failed to address US arguments regarding risks of default. The United States requests that the Panel consider clarifying its findings to confirm that it is not finding that a Member is precluded from requiring additional security in cases in which principles of ordinary customs administration would so require, such as cases in which importers have a demonstrated history of non-payment of liability owed.

⁵² Interim Report, para. 6.144.

⁵³ US Request for interim Review, para. 13.

6.63 Thailand asserts that none of the parties has argued that a risk of default constitutes a basis separate from the amount of liability on which to determine the amount of security. Instead, Thailand considers that any security must be capped at the amount of potential liability and then may be adjusted below the total potential liability based on the default risk of the individual importer. Thailand also asserts that the United States is not correct to state that the Panel does not directly address the United States' arguments regarding risk of default. Thailand asserts that the Panel considered whether it was necessary to consider risk of default and concluded that it was not.⁵⁴ Furthermore, Thailand notes that the Panel found that security measures such as the EBR constitute specific action against dumping. As specific action against dumping, such measures may be imposed only in response to situations covered by Article VI and the Anti-Dumping Agreement, i.e., injurious dumping. Thailand asserts that the United States' proposal to impose security requirements above the amount of potential liability for dumping duties, however, would impose additional burdens on importers based on their financial wellbeing. Thailand asserts that this is not permitted under the Ad Note, which permits only action against dumping. Accordingly, to permit additional security above the potential liability for dumping duties, or security solely on the basis of a risk of default, would expand the scope of Article VI of the GATT 1994 and the Anti-Dumping Agreement beyond dumping and include within their scope matters such as the financial structure and strength of importers that they were not intended to address or regulate. Thailand submits that any question of additional security relating to the risk of default could arise only under provisions of the GATT unrelated to "specific action against dumping."⁵⁵

6.64 The United States also asks the Panel to refer to estimates of the "amount" of final dumping liability rather than estimates of the amount of the final "rate" of dumping. The United States asserts that since security for antidumping duties (whether cash deposit or bond) is a quantity based on the total dumping liability, which depends both on the ad valorem rate and the customs value of imports entered at a given time, using the term "dumping liability" rather than the "rate of dumping" in discussing the amount of security that may be required is more appropriate.

6.65 Thailand asserts that the United States has failed to clearly articulate any good reason for the Panel to make the suggested changes. Furthermore, Thailand notes the US argument that liability for anti-dumping duties arises on importation following a finding that dumping is occurring and the publication of an anti-dumping order. Since the Panel finds that the order gives rise to a suspicion of dumping, Thailand is concerned that the changes proposed by the United States would imply that liability for anti-dumping duties may be established on the basis of merely a suspicion of dumping.

6.66 Regarding para. 6.142 of the Interim Report, the United States asks the Panel to delete certain language describing an argument made by the United States early in the proceedings. Thailand did not comment on the change requested by the United States.

6.67 The Panel has made only a limited number of the changes requested by the United States regarding this first issue. In particular, the Panel has declined the US suggestion to replace its own language with references to "the likelihood of rates increasing", for the United States has failed to properly explain the advantages of its formulation over that of the Panel. Generally, the Panel is concerned that the changes proposed by the United States might weaken the standard that the Panel applied, consistent with the Ad Note, in the present case. In particular, the Panel is not persuaded that it is inappropriate to expect an investigating authority to make determinations of what is likely to happen in the future. The Panel is not persuaded by the US suggestion that the standard articulated in the Interim Report would require ex post rationalization. The Panel considers that an investigating authority is required to comply with the applicable standard by making a prospective determination of the likelihood of rates of dumping increasing on the basis of the information available to it at the relevant time.

⁵⁴ Interim Report, para. 6.139, footnote 164.

⁵⁵ While the Panel failed to address this argument in the Interim Report, Thailand has persistently argued in these proceedings that the Ad Note permits only provisional security measures now further regulated under Article 7 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. The authority for any additional security for duties imposed as definitive dumping measures is regulated by the GATT, including Article XX(d) thereof, rather than the Ad Note or the Anti-Dumping Agreement. See Thailand's Request, para. 17 and accompanying citations at note 20; Thailand's Second Oral Statement, para. 61. Thailand again requests the Panel to address this argument in its final report.

6.68 The Panel declines to make any changes in respect of the US comments on the need to consider the risk of default as in "ordinary cases of customs administration". The Panel considers that it already addressed the principal argument of the United States regarding risk of default in note 164 of the Interim Report. The Panel declines to further confirm that it is not finding that a Member is precluded from requiring additional security in cases in which principles of ordinary customs administration would so require. The Panel's findings are based on its interpretation of the Ad Note. The Panel does not have a mandate to consider whether or not additional security may be imposed under principles of ordinary customs administration. Although the Ad Note contains the phrase "[a]s in many other cases in customs administration", the Panel considers that such phrase is used for introductory purposes only. If such phrase had been intended to dictate the substantive circumstances under which "reasonable security" could be imposed under the Ad Note, details of such other cases of customs administration would have been spelled out in the Ad Note in detail.

6.69 The Panel accepts the US request to refer to use the term "dumping liability" rather than the "rate of dumping". This is because the amount of security is not merely a function of the rate of dumping in the anti-dumping order, but also of the customs value of the relevant imports. The Panel is not persuaded by Thailand's concerns regarding any suggestion that liability for anti-dumping duties arises pursuant to imposition of an anti-dumping order following a determination of dumping, injury and causation. As noted at paragraph 6.108 of the Interim Report, this is in fact the basis for collecting anti-dumping duties under prospective assessment systems. Regardless of when liability is actually deemed to arise, Article 9.3 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement stipulates that, under both the prospective and retrospective assessment systems, "[t]he amount of the anti-dumping duty shall not exceed the margin" of dumping. The Panel has modified paragraphs 7.140 and 7.141 of the Final Report accordingly. The Panel has not modified the reference to "the likely amount of such increase" in paragraph 7.141 of the Final Report in order to maintain consistency with the identical phrase in para. 7.140 of the Final Report (in respect of which the United States did not ask the Panel to include references to duty liability).

6.70 Regarding paragraph 6.188, the United States requests the Panel to modify the fourth and sixth sentences to incorporate modifications suggested for paragraphs 6.136 – 6.146. Specifically, the United States requests that the Panel replace the phrase "that rates of dumping provided for in the anti-dumping order were likely to increase" with the phrase "that there was a likelihood that rates of dumping provided for in the anti-dumping order would increase"; and the phrase "without adequately establishing that anti-dumping duties are likely to increase" with the phrase "without adequately establishing that there was a likelihood that anti-dumping duties would increase". For the same reasons discussed above, Thailand requests the Panel to reject this change. Thailand does not consider the United States to have explained why this change is appropriate in the context of a review of the standard of "necessary" under Article XX(d). For the reasons set forth above in respect of paragraphs 6.136 – 6.146, the Panel declines to make the changes requested by the United States.

6.71 In the absence of any objection from Thailand, the Panel sees no reason not to make the deletion requested by the United States in respect of paragraph 6.142 of the Interim Report (7.144 of the Final Report).

VII. FINDINGS

A. PRELIMINARY ISSUES

1. Parallel panel proceedings in DS343 and DS345

7.1 On 21 November 2006, a month after the establishment of the present Panel, the DSB established a separate Panel in (DS345) US – Customs Bond Directive the terms of reference of which also included the application of the EBR to imports of subject shrimp. At that meeting of the DSB, Thailand stated that it had expected the establishment of a single Panel for both proceedings in accordance with Article 9.1 of the DSU. In the absence of that single Panel, Thailand indicated that, pursuant to Article 9.3 of the DSU, it expected that the same persons would be appointed as panelists in the two disputes and that the timetables would be harmonized. The representative of the United States responded that, although the Panel in DS343 had already been established, the same persons could be appointed to serve as panelists in the two proceedings and the timetables of the separate Panels could be harmonized.

7.2 The meetings to appoint the same members for this Panel and DS345 were held jointly between the two separate complainants, Thailand and India, and the common defendant, the United States. Since the Parties were unable to agree on panellists to serve for these proceedings, on 19 January 2007, Thailand and India requested, in separate letters, that the Director-General determine the composition of the Panel pursuant to Article 8.7 of the DSU, and select the same persons to serve as panelists for both proceedings, pursuant to Article 9.3 of the DSU. On 26 January 2007, the Director-General composed the two separate Panels consisting of the same members.

7.3 On 9 February 2007, Thailand and India sent separate letters to the Chairman of the two Panels requesting enhanced third party rights in each other's proceedings. On 15 February 2007, the Chairman met with the parties in a joint organisational meeting to hear comments on the proposed Timetable and Panel Working Procedures. At that meeting, as well as in a letter dated 16 February 2007, the United States argued that granting enhanced third party rights to Thailand and India was not necessary in the instant cases.

7.4 After having heard the parties' views, the Panel decided not to grant enhanced third party rights to India and Thailand but instead, opted for a practical approach aimed at ensuring that the parties to both disputes enjoyed adequate opportunity to participate in the proceedings where appropriate. Thus, on 23 February 2007, the Panel sent to the parties a joint Timetable as well as separate, albeit similarly worded, Working Procedures. In this joint communication, the Panel informed the parties that it had decided the following:

"[The Panel] intends to conduct both proceedings so as to ensure that the parties who are also third parties in each other's proceedings, have adequate opportunity and ability to participate to the fullest extent in a manner which is compatible with the provisions of the DSU. To this end, after having heard the parties' views, the Panel intends to take the following steps:

- (i) holding consolidated substantive meetings with the parties (Thailand, India and US);
- (ii) allowing the complainants during the joint meetings to comment on each others' argumentation, provided they limit themselves to those claims they have in common;

(iii) holding separate Third-Party Sessions, starting with DS343 and asking the Members which are not third-parties to DS345 (i.e., Chile, Mexico, Korea and Viet Nam) to leave the meeting room once the Third-Party Session for DS343 is over. Note that since Thailand and India are third parties to each other's cases, and parties in their own, they would be in the room during the entirety of the joint meetings, including third party sessions;

(iv) not allowing submissions in one case to be deemed to be submitted in the other case. The parties could however attach to their third party submissions, their submissions made as parties in the case in which they are complaining party;

(v) issuing separate reports;

(vi) allowing all parties to respond to all questions posed by the Panel in writing."

2. Overview of the Panel's approach to consideration of Thailand's claims

7.5 Thailand has challenged two measures applied by the United States that affect the import of subject shrimp from Thailand. Thailand has first challenged the United States' use of zeroing to calculate the margin of dumping for importers of Thai shrimp subject to definitive anti-dumping duties. Thailand claims that the United States' use of zeroing in this instance is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.⁵⁶

7.6 Thailand has also challenged the application of the EBR to subject shrimp from Thailand. Specifically, Thailand challenges the consistency of the application of the EBR, which it claims imposes an impermissible restriction on imports of subject shrimp from Thailand, with the provisions of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Subsidiarily and alternatively, Thailand claims that the EBR is also inconsistent with the provisions of Articles 7.1, 7.2, 7.4 and 7.5 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement; Article VI:2 of the GATT 1994 and the Ad Note, which it claims govern the application of provisional anti-dumping measures; and Articles 9.1, 9.2 and 9.3 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and Article VI:2 of the GATT 1994, which it claims govern the imposition and collection of anti-dumping duties.

7.7 In addition, Thailand claims that the EBR is inconsistent with XI:1 of the GATT 1994 by imposing an impermissible restriction on imports of subject shrimp from Thailand; or, alternatively, with Article II:1(a) and the first and second sentences of Article II:1(b) of the GATT 1994 by imposing impermissible duties or charges on imports of subject shrimp from Thailand. Thailand further claims that the United States acted inconsistently with X:3(a) of the GATT 1994 by failing to administer its customs laws and regulations relating to bonds in a uniform, impartial and reasonable manner and with Article I of the GATT 1994 by failing to extend to imports of subject shrimp from Thailand advantages that are provided to imports of shrimp from other countries.

3. Order of analysis

7.8 The Panel will first address Thailand's claim related to zeroing, and will then proceed to address Thailand's claims challenging the application of the EBR.

⁵⁶ As indicated in footnote 46 above, Thailand informed the Panel that it had abandoned its original claims under Articles 2.1, 2.4 and 9.3 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement in respect to its zeroing claim. The Panel will therefore not address these claims in this Report.

B. THAILAND'S CLAIM AGAINST THE USE OF ZEROING IN THE ORIGINAL INVESTIGATION

7.9 Thailand submits that the United States used zeroing when calculating the dumping margins for Thai exporters on the basis of weighted average-to-weighted average comparisons in the Final Determination that served as a basis for the Anti-dumping order on subject shrimp from Thailand.⁵⁷ According to Thailand, the "zeroing" in which USDOC engaged in this investigation is the same as the "zeroing" in which USDOC engaged in US – Softwood Lumber V and US – Shrimp (Ecuador). Thailand submits that the use of such zeroing is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

7.10 In response to a Question from the Panel, the United States asserted that it "is not contesting Thailand's zeroing claim for purposes of this dispute".⁵⁸

1. Main arguments of the parties

7.11 Thailand asserts that WTO panels and the Appellate Body have repeatedly found that the use of zeroing when calculating dumping margins on the basis of weighted average-to-weighted average comparisons is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.⁵⁹ Thailand notes in this regard that the Appellate Body stated in US – Softwood Lumber V that:

"Zeroing means, in effect, that at least in the case of some export transactions, the export prices are treated as if they were less than what they actually are. Zeroing, therefore, does not take into account the entirety of the prices of some export transactions, namely, the prices of export transactions in those sub-groups in which the weighted average normal value is less than the weighted average export price. Zeroing thus inflates the margin of dumping for the product as a whole."⁶⁰

7.12 Thailand further notes that the panel in US – Shrimp (Ecuador) recently stated that:

"There is now a consistent line of Appellate Body Reports, from EC – Bed Linen to US – Zeroing (EC) that holds that "zeroing" in the context of the weighted average-to-weighted average methodology in original investigations (first methodology in the first sentence of Article 2.4.2) is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2. We have, as is our duty, carefully considered the Appellate Body's reasoning in US – Softwood Lumber V and taken into consideration the consistent line of Appellate Body Reports as mentioned in the previous paragraph. We find the Appellate Body's reasoning persuasive and adopt it as our own."⁶¹

7.13 Thailand asserts that even the USDOC itself has admitted that it used zeroing in calculating the dumping margins of Thai shrimp exporters on the basis of average-to-average comparisons in the Final Determination and the Anti-Dumping Measure. According to Thailand, the USDOC Decision Memorandum rejected arguments from the Thai exporters and the Government of Thailand urging it not to use zeroing and explained its use of zeroing in the following terms:

"(i) We disagree with the respondents and the Government of Thailand that we should discontinue our practice of not offsetting dumped sales with non-dumped sales in the ⁵⁷ See Exhibit THA-14.

⁵⁸ See United States' Responses to First Set of Panel Questions, para. 1.

⁵⁹ See e.g. Panel Report, US – Zeroing (Japan), para. 7.86; Appellate Body Report, US – Softwood Lumber V, para. 117; Panel Report, US – Softwood Lumber V, paras. 7.224 and 8.1(a)(i); Panel Report, US – Zeroing (EC), paras. 7.31-32; Appellate Body Report, EC – Bed Linen, paras. 46-66.

⁶⁰ Appellate Body Report, US – Softwood Lumber V, para. 101.

⁶¹ Panel Report, US – Shrimp (Ecuador), paras. 7.40 et seq.

calculation of the overall weighted-average dumping margin, and thus we have not changed our calculation of the weighted-average dumping margins for the final determination. Specifically, we made model-specific comparisons of weighted-average export prices with weighted-average normal values of comparable merchandise. See section 773(a) of the Act; see also section 777A(d)(1)(A)(i) of the Act. We then combined the dumping margins found based upon these comparisons, without permitting non-dumped comparisons to reduce the dumping margins found on distinct models of subject merchandise, in order to calculate the weighted-average dumping margin. See section 771(35)(A) and (B) of the Act."⁶²

7.14 Thailand submits that there can therefore be no dispute that this is exactly the same methodology as was found to be inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 in US – Softwood Lumber V. Thailand also asserts that this is exactly the same methodology as was found to be inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 by the US – Shrimp (Ecuador) panel.

7.15 Thailand submits that, for the same reasons as articulated by the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber V and the recent panel in US – Shrimp (Ecuador), the use of this zeroing methodology by the USDOC in calculating the dumping margins of Thai shrimp exporters was inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Accordingly, Thailand requests that the Panel find that the United States acted inconsistently with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement in determining the dumping margins of the Thai exporters in the Final Determination and the Anti-Dumping Measure.

7.16 As noted above, the United States is not contesting Thailand's Article 2.4.2 claim. Furthermore, the United States acknowledges that the same type of "zeroing" occurred in the investigation of shrimp from Thailand as in the relevant investigation US – Shrimp (Ecuador). The United States further recognizes that a measure using a similar calculation was the subject of the US – Softwood Lumber V report, and the DSB ruled that the measure was inconsistent with Article 2.4.2, first sentence, because of that calculation.

2. Evaluation by the Panel

7.17 As is evident from the arguments of the parties, the issue we are confronted with in respect of Thailand's Article 2.4.2 claim is very similar to the issue addressed by the panel in US – Shrimp (Ecuador). Since we agree with the approach adopted by that panel, our findings regarding Thailand's claim closely resemble, and refer extensively to, the findings of that panel. Given that the United States does not contest Thailand's claim, we first consider our role under Article 11 of the DSU, and the burden of proof to be discharged by Thailand if it is to succeed in its claim. We then consider the more substantive issues of whether Thailand has established that the USDOC "zeroed" in the measure at issue, and whether Thailand has established that the methodology used by USDOC is the same in all legally relevant respects as the methodology reviewed by the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber V. Thereafter, we consider whether Thailand has established that the methodology applied by USDOC is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

(a) The role of the Panel under Article 11 of the DSU

7.18 Article 11 of the DSU provides:

"The function of panels is to assist the DSB in discharging its responsibilities under this Understanding and the covered agreements. Accordingly, a panel should make an objective assessment of the matter before it, including an objective assessment of the *facts of the case and the applicability of and conformity with the relevant covered agreements, and make such other findings as will assist the DSB in making the recommendations or in giving the rulings provided for in the covered agreements. Panels should consult regularly with the parties to the dispute and give them adequate opportunity to develop a mutually satisfactory solution."*⁶³ (emphasis added)

⁶² Decision Memorandum, Exhibit THA-16, p. 8.

7.19 Notwithstanding the US decision not to contest Thailand's claim, we are still bound by Article 11 of the DSU to make an "objective assessment of the facts of the case and the applicability of and conformity with the relevant covered agreements, and make such other findings as will assist the DSB in making the recommendations or in giving the rulings provided for in the covered agreements".

(b) Burden of proof

7.20 The panel in US – Shrimp (Ecuador) made the following findings in respect of burden of proof:

"Because of its singularity, this dispute raises in a particularly acute fashion the issue of the burden of proof.

The burden of proof lies, in WTO dispute settlement proceedings, with the party that asserts the affirmative of a particular claim or defence. Ecuador, as the complaining party, must therefore make a prima facie case of violation of the relevant provisions of the relevant WTO agreements. The burden would then shift to the responding party (here the United States), to adduce evidence to rebut the presumption that Ecuador's assertions are true. In this context, we recall that 'a prima facie case is one which, in the absence of effective refutation by the defending party, requires a panel, as a matter of law, to rule in favour of the complaining party presenting the prima facie case.'

In our view, the issue of the burden of proof is of particular importance in this case. This is because Ecuador has made factual and legal claims before the Panel which the United States does not contest. Yet, the fact that the United States does not contest Ecuador's claims is not a sufficient basis for us to summarily conclude that Ecuador's ⁶³ Article 11 of the DSU. We note that Article 17.6 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement – setting forth the special standard of review applicable to disputes under the Anti-Dumping Agreement – also applies to this dispute. Article 17.6 provides that:

"17.6 In examining the matter referred to in paragraph 5:

(i) in its assessment of the facts of the matter, the panel shall determine whether the authorities' establishment of the facts was proper and whether their evaluation of those facts was unbiased and objective. If the establishment of the facts was proper and the evaluation was unbiased and objective, even though the panel might have reached a different conclusion, the evaluation shall not be overturned;

(ii) the panel shall interpret the relevant provisions of the Agreement in accordance with customary rules of interpretation of public international law. Where the panel finds that a relevant provision of the Agreement admits of more than one permissible interpretation, the panel shall find the authorities' measure to be in conformity with the Agreement if it rests upon one of those permissible interpretations."

Given that the United States does not contest Thailand's claims, it is not necessary for us to consider in detail the implications of the standard of review in this dispute.

claims are well-founded. Rather, we can only rule in favour of Ecuador if we are satisfied that Ecuador has made a prima facie case.

(...)

Thus, notwithstanding the fact that the United States is not seeking to refute Ecuador's claims, we must satisfy ourselves that Ecuador has established a prima facie case of violation, and notably that it has presented 'evidence and argument... sufficient to identify the challenged measure and its basic import, identify the relevant WTO provision and obligation contained therein, and explain the basis for the claimed inconsistency of the measure with that provision.'⁶⁴ (footnotes omitted)

7.21 In support, the panel relied on Appellate Body rulings in EC – Hormones and US – Gambling stressing the importance of the obligation on complaining parties to establish a prima facie case. We agree with this reasoning of the panel in US – Shrimp (Ecuador), and adopt it as our own. Accordingly, notwithstanding the fact that the United States is not seeking to refute Thailand's claims, we must satisfy ourselves that Thailand has established a prima facie case of violation of Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

(c) Has Thailand established that the USDOC "zeroed" in the measure at issue?

7.22 We now consider whether Thailand has established that USDOC "zeroed" in the measure at issue.

7.23 Thailand has referred to USDOC's Decision Memorandum in support of its factual assertion that USDOC "zeroed" in the measure at issue. Furthermore, the United States acknowledges that USDOC did zero as alleged by Thailand. In these circumstances, we are satisfied that Thailand has provided sufficient evidence that USDOC zeroed in the measure at issue.

(d) Has Thailand established that the methodology used by USDOC is the same in all legally relevant respects as the methodology reviewed by the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber V?

7.24 We now determine whether the "zeroing" methodology used by the USDOC to calculate the dumping margins at issue here was, as alleged by Thailand, the same in all legally relevant respects as the one the Appellate Body, in US – Softwood Lumber V, found to be inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

7.25 The Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber V, described "zeroing" as applied by the USDOC in that investigation as follows:

"First, USDOC divided the product under investigation (that is, softwood lumber from Canada) into sub-groups of identical, or broadly similar, product types. Within each sub-group, USDOC made certain adjustments to ensure price comparability of the transactions and, thereafter, calculated a weighted average normal value and a weighted average export price per unit of the product type. When the weighted average normal value per unit exceeded the weighted average export price per unit for a sub-group, the difference was regarded as the 'dumping margin' for that comparison. When the weighted average normal value per unit was equal to or less than the weighted average export price per unit for a sub-group, USDOC took the view that there was no "dumping margin" for that comparison. USDOC aggregated the results of those sub-group comparisons in which the weighted average normal value exceeded the weighted average export price—those where the USDOC considered there was a "dumping margin"—after multiplying the difference per unit by the volume of export transactions in that sub-group. The results for the sub-groups in which the weighted average normal value was equal to or less than the weighted average export price were treated as zero for purposes of this aggregation, because there was, according to USDOC, no "dumping margin" for those sub-groups. Finally, USDOC divided the result of this aggregation by the value of all export transactions of the product under investigation (including the value of export transactions in the sub-groups that were not included in the aggregation). In this way, USDOC obtained an "overall margin of dumping", for each exporter or producer, for the product under investigation (that is, softwood lumber from Canada)."(emphasis original)⁶⁵

⁶⁴ Panel Report, US – Shrimp (Ecuador), paras. 7.7 – 7.11.

7.26 The Appellate Body also added that:

"Thus, as we understand it, by zeroing, the investigating authority treats as zero the difference between the weighted average normal value and the weighted average export price in the case of those sub-groups where the weighted average normal value is less than the weighted average export price. Zeroing occurs only at the stage of aggregation of the results of the sub-groups in order to establish an overall margin of dumping for the product under investigation as a whole."⁶⁶

7.27 In order to demonstrate that USDOC engaged in similar weighted average-to-weighted average zeroing in the investigation at issue, Thailand relies on the abovementioned USDOC Decision Memorandum. That document establishes that USDOC "made model-specific comparisons of weighted-average export prices with weighted-average normal values of comparable merchandise (...) [and] then combined the dumping margins found based upon these comparisons, without permitting non-dumped comparisons to reduce the dumping margins found on distinct models of subject merchandise, in order to calculate the weighted-average dumping margin."⁶⁷

7.28 Furthermore, we note that the United States acknowledges that the same type of "zeroing" occurred in the investigation of shrimp from Thailand as in the relevant investigation US – Shrimp (Ecuador), and that that panel found that the zeroing methodology at issue in US – Shrimp (Ecuador) was the same methodology as at issue in US – Softwood Lumber V.⁶⁸

7.29 Having examined the description of the methodology employed by the USDOC in its Decision Memorandum, we are satisfied that Thailand has demonstrated that the methodology applied by the USDOC in calculating the margins of dumping for subject merchandise from Thailand was the same in all legally relevant respects as the methodology which was found by the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber V to be inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. In our view, the abovementioned acknowledgement by the United States lends support to our conclusion that Thailand has met its burden to make a prima facie case.

(e) Has Thailand established that the methodology applied by USDOC is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement?

7.30 We now turn to the legal analysis of Thailand's claim, i.e. whether the measure it challenges is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Article 2.4.2 provides as follows:

⁶⁵ Appellate Body Report, US – Softwood Lumber V, para. 64 (footnote omitted).

⁶⁶ Appellate Body Report, US – Softwood Lumber V, para. 65.

⁶⁷ Decision Memorandum, Exhibit THA-16, p. 8.

⁶⁸ See US – Shrimp (Ecuador), para. 7.34.

"Article 2

Determination of Dumping

...

2.4.2 Subject to the provisions governing fair comparison in paragraph 4, the existence of margins of dumping during the investigation phase shall normally be established on the basis of a comparison of a weighted average normal value with a weighted average of prices of all comparable export transactions or by a comparison of normal value and export prices on a transaction-to-transaction basis. A normal value established on a weighted average basis may be compared to prices of individual export transactions if the authorities find a pattern of export prices which differ significantly among different purchasers, regions or time periods, and if an explanation is provided as to why such differences cannot be taken into account appropriately by the use of a weighted average-to-weighted average or transaction-to-transaction comparison."

7.31 Thailand has relied on the Appellate Body Report in US – Softwood Lumber V and the panel report in US – Shrimp (Ecuador) in support of its claim of inconsistency with Article 2.4.2 and, in particular, on the Appellate Body's finding that margins of dumping may only be calculated for a product as a whole under the weighted average-to-weighted average methodology provided for in the first sentence of Article 2.4.2.

7.32 While we are not bound by the reasoning in prior Appellate Body and/or panel reports, adopted Reports create legitimate expectations among WTO Members,⁶⁹ and "following the Appellate Body's conclusions in earlier disputes is not only appropriate, but is what would be expected from panels, especially where the issues are the same".⁷⁰

7.33 The panel in US – Shrimp (Ecuador) explained its understanding of the Appellate Body's reasoning in US – Softwood Lumber V as follows:

"The Appellate Body began its analysis with the text of Article 2.4.2 and noted that the question before it was the proper interpretation of the terms 'all comparable export transactions' and 'margins of dumping' in Article 2.4.2. In examining the arguments of the parties with respect to these phrases, the Appellate Body concluded that the parties' disagreement centered on whether a Member could take into account 'all' comparable export transactions only at the sub-group level, or whether such transactions also had to be taken into account when the results of the sub-group comparisons are aggregated. To examine that issue, the Appellate Body noted the definition of dumping in Article 2.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. The Appellate Body found that 'it [was] clear from the texts of [Article VI:1 of the GATT 1994 and Article 2.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement] that dumping is defined in relation to a product as a whole as defined by the investigating authority'. The Appellate Body further considered that the definition of 'dumping' contained in Article 2.1 applies to the entire Agreement, including Article 2.4.2, and that "[d]umping', within the meaning of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, can therefore be found to exist only for the product under investigation as a whole, and cannot be found to exist only for a type, model, or category of that product."⁷¹ Next, the Appellate Body relied on its Report in EC – Bed Linen, in which it stated that '[w]hatever the method used to calculate the margins of dumping ... these margins must be, and can only be, established for the product under investigation as a whole.' Thus, the Appellate Body noted that "[a]s with dumping, 'margins of dumping' can be found only for the product under investigation as a whole, and cannot be found to exist for a product type, model, or category of that product." The Appellate Body therefore rejected the United States' arguments in that case that Article 2.4.2 does not apply to the aggregation of the results of multiple comparisons at the sub-group level; for the Appellate Body, while an investigating authority may undertake multiple averaging to establish margins of dumping for a product under investigation, the results of the multiple comparisons at the sub-group levels are not margins of dumping within the meaning of Article 2.4.2; they merely reflect intermediate calculations made by an investigating authority in the context of establishing margins of dumping for the product under investigation. It is only on the basis of aggregating all such intermediate values that an investigating authority can establish margins of dumping for the product under investigation as a whole. On this basis, the Appellate Body held that zeroing, as applied by the USDOC in US – Softwood Lumber V:

⁶⁹ See Appellate Body Report, Japan Alcoholic Beverages II, p. 14; Appellate Body Report, US – Shrimp (Article 21.5 – Malaysia), paras. 108-109; Appellate Body Report, US – Softwood Lumber V, paras. 109-112.

⁷⁰ Appellate Body Report, US – Oil Country Tubular Goods Sunset Reviews, para. 188.

mean[t], in effect, that at least in the case of some export transactions, the export prices are treated as if they were less than what they actually are. Zeroing, therefore, does not take into account the entirety of the prices of some export transactions, namely, the prices of export transactions in those sub-groups in which the weighted average normal value is less than the weighted average export price. Zeroing thus inflates the margin of dumping for the product as a whole.

The Appellate Body on this basis concluded that the treatment of comparisons for which the weighted average normal value is less than the weighted average export price as "non-dumped" comparisons was not in accordance with the requirements of Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. As a result, the Appellate Body upheld the Panel's finding that the United States had acted inconsistently with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement in determining the existence of margins of dumping on the basis of a methodology incorporating the practice of zeroing."⁷²

7.34 The panel in US – Shrimp (Ecuador) further found that "there is now a consistent line of Appellate Body Reports, from EC – Bed Linen to US – Zeroing (EC) that holds that 'zeroing' in the context of the weighted average-to-weighted average methodology in original investigations (first methodology in the first sentence of Article 2.4.2) is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2."⁷³

7.35 We have carefully considered the Appellate Body's reasoning in US – Softwood Lumber V and taken into consideration the finding of the panel in US – Shrimp (Ecuador) that there is a consistent line of Appellate Body Reports condemning "zeroing" in the context of the weighted average-to-weighted average methodology in original investigations. Given that the issues raised by Thailand's claim are identical in all material respects to those addressed by the Appellate Body in Softwood Lumber V, we are satisfied that Thailand has established a prima facie case that the use of zeroing by the USDOC in the calculation of the margins of dumping in respect of the measure at issue is inconsistent with the United States' obligations under Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement because the USDOC did not calculate these dumping margins on the basis of the "product as a whole" in that it failed to take into account all comparable export transactions in calculating the margins of dumping.

⁷¹ Appellate Body Report, US – Oil Country Tubular Goods Sunset Reviews, para. 188.

⁷² Panel Report, US – Shrimp (Ecuador), paras. 7.38 and 7.39 (footnotes omitted).

⁷³ Panel Report, US – Shrimp (Ecuador), para. 7.40.

7.36 In light of our finding that Thailand has made a prima facie case of violation in respect of the measure at issue, and in the absence of arguments from the United States to the contrary, we rule in favour of Thailand. We therefore conclude that the USDOC, by using "zeroing" in the manner described above, has acted inconsistently with the United States' obligations under Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

C. THAILAND'S CLAIM AGAINST THE APPLICATION OF THE EBR TO SUBJECT SHRIMP FROM THAILAND

1. Scope of the measure concerned

7.37 Thailand's claims concern the application of the Amended CBD, i.e. the EBR, to imports of subject shrimp from Thailand. Therefore, before entering into an analysis of each of Thailand's claims, the Panel first must identify which are the legal instruments that comprise the Amended CBD.

7.38 We recall that our terms of reference that govern the present dispute are the following:

"To examine, in the light of the relevant provisions of the covered agreements cited by Thailand in document WT/DS343/7, the matter referred to the DSB by Thailand in that document, and to make such findings as will assist the DSB in making the recommendations or in giving the rulings provided for in those agreements." ⁷⁴

7.39 In its Request for Establishment, Thailand specified that the measure at issue consists of the following legislative/legal instruments:

- (a) the July 2004 Amendment;⁷⁵
- (b) the August 2005 Clarification;⁷⁶
- (c) the document Current Bond Formulas;⁷⁷ and
- (d) "any amendments or extensions to the [EBR], and any related or implementing measures."⁷⁸

7.40 In its first written submission, Thailand additionally identified the October 2006 Notice⁷⁹, which was published on 24 October 2006 following the submission of Thailand's Request for Establishment, as one of the four instruments that amends and clarifies the United States' policy related to continuous customs bonds and the operation and application of the EBR.⁸⁰ The United States has not contested the inclusion of the October 2006 Notice within this Panel's terms of reference.

⁷⁴ WT/DS343/8.

⁷⁵ Exhibit THA-2.

⁷⁶ Exhibit THA-4.

⁷⁷ Exhibit THA-3.

⁷⁸ WT/DS343/7, p. 3.

⁷⁹ Exhibit THA-5.

⁸⁰ Thailand's first written submission, para. 51.

7.41 We recall that the Appellate Body has ruled that panels have a duty to examine issues of a "fundamental nature", issues that go to the root of their jurisdiction, on their own motion if the parties to the dispute remain silent on those issues.⁸¹ Whether a measure falls within our terms of reference is clearly an issue that goes to the root of our jurisdiction. Therefore, even though the United States does not contest the inclusion of the October 2006 Notice, we must determine whether this Notice is within our terms of reference.

7.42 Article 7 of the DSU, governing the Panel's terms of reference, Article 4 of the DSU, governing a complainant's request for consultations, and Article 6 of the DSU, governing a complainant's request for establishment of a panel are relevant to this issue. Article 7.1 of the DSU provides:

"Panels shall have the following terms of reference unless the parties to the dispute agree otherwise within 20 days from the establishment of the panel:

To examine, in the light of the relevant provisions in (name of the covered agreement(s) cited by the parties to the dispute), the matter referred to the DSB by (name of party) in document ... and to make such findings as will assist the DSB in making the recommendations or in giving the rulings provided for in that/those agreement(s)."

7.43 Article 4.4 of the DSU provides:

"All such requests for consultations shall be notified to the DSB and the relevant Councils and Committees by the Member which requests consultations. Any request for consultations shall be submitted in writing and shall give the reasons for the request, including identification of the measures at issue and an indication of the legal basis for the complaint." (emphasis added)

7.44 Article 6.2 of the DSU provides:

"The request for the establishment of a panel shall be made in writing. It shall indicate whether consultations were held, identify the specific measures at issue and provide a brief summary of the legal basis of the complaint sufficient to present the problem clearly. In case the applicant requests the establishment of a panel with other than standard terms of reference, the written request shall include the proposed text of special terms of reference." (emphasis added)

7.45 The Appellate Body affirmed in US – Upland Cotton that, "pursuant to Article 7 of the DSU, a panel's terms of reference are governed by the request for establishment of a panel".⁸² As evident from the text of Articles 4 and 6 of the DSU, the complainant must identify the measure at issue in both the request for consultations and request for panel establishment.

7.46 The Appellate Body previously considered in Chile – Price Band System whether an amendment to a measure that was enacted after the Panel had been established should nevertheless be considered as within the Panel's terms of reference.⁸³ In that case, the Appellate Body determined that the amendment at issue should be considered as part of the measure at issue since the amendment served the purpose of clarifying the legislation that established the measure at issue and did not change the original measure into something different than what was in force before the amendment.⁸⁴ This determination was considered consistent with earlier jurisprudence⁸⁵ and was also found to be consistent with the object and purpose of the WTO dispute settlement system, as set forth in Article 3.7 of the DSU, to "secure a positive solution to a dispute". The Appellate Body explained:

⁸¹ Appellate Body Report, Mexico – Corn Syrup (Article 21.5 – US), para. 36; see also Appellate Body Report, US – Carbon Steel, para. 123.

⁸² See e.g. Appellate Body Report, US – Upland Cotton, para. 284, citing to Appellate Body Report, US – Carbon Steel, para. 124.

⁸³ Appellate Body Report, Chile – Price Band System, para. 137.

"If the terms of reference in a dispute are broad enough to include amendments to a measure—as they are in this case—and if it is necessary to consider an amendment in order to secure a positive solution to the dispute—as it is here—then it is appropriate to consider the measure as amended in coming to a decision in a dispute."⁸⁶

7.47 In the case before us, we note that the October 2006 Notice further describes the process to determine enhanced continuous bond amounts for importations involving what the United States describes as elevated collection risks, and seeks public comment concerning that process. We also note that the United States describes the 2006 Notice as the "comprehensive and exclusive statement of the policy and processes expressed in the July 2004 Amendment to the Bond Guidelines, the Bond Formulas posted on CBP's Web site, and the August 2005 Clarification".⁸⁷

7.48 We agree with and adopt as our own the Appellate Body's rationale as provided in Chile – Price Band System. In the dispute before us, the United States published the October 2006 Notice after this Panel had been established. Moreover, in our view, Thailand's inclusion of the language "any amendments or extensions to the [EBR], and any related or implementing measures" in its Request for Establishment of a Panel⁸⁸ is broad enough to allow for the inclusion of the 2006 Notice. The October 2006 Notice seeks to clarify the legislation that established the measure at issue and does not change the essence of the original measure into something different than what was in force before its issuance (in this regard, we recall that the October 2006 Notice includes in its text the statement that it is the "comprehensive and exclusive statement of the policy and processes expressed in the July 2004 Amendment to the Bond Guidelines, the Bond Formulas posted on [US Customs'] Web site, and the August 2005 Clarification"). In our view, the inclusion of October 2006 Notice allows the Panel to achieve a positive resolution to the dispute, and additionally, accords with the interests of both parties.

7.49 The Panel therefore finds that the October 2006 Notice is properly part of the measure at issue and within the Panel's terms of reference.

2. Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and the Ad Note

7.50 Thailand submits that the application of the EBR to subject shrimp from Thailand is inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Article 18.1 provides that:

⁸⁴ Appellate Body Report, Chile – Price Band System, para. 137.

⁸⁵ The Appellate Body in Chile – Price Band System cited to a passage from the Panel's finding in Argentina – Footwear (EC) which concluded that modifications made to the measure at issue during the panel proceedings did:

"... not constitute entirely new safeguard measures in the sense that they were based on a different safeguard investigation, but are instead modifications of the legal form of the original definitive measure, which remains in force in substance and which is the subject of the complaint." (See Appellate Body Report, Chile – Price Band System, para. 138.)

⁸⁶ Appellate Body Report, Chile – Price Band System, para. 144.

⁸⁷ See Exhibit THA-5, p. 62277.

⁸⁸ WT/DS343/7, p. 3.

"No specific action against dumping of exports from another Member can be taken except in accordance with the provisions of GATT 1994, as interpreted by this Agreement."

7.51 Thailand submits that the application of the EBR to subject shrimp from Thailand constitutes specific action against dumping in a form other than a permitted response to dumping under the provisions of GATT 1994 as interpreted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement. The United States rejects Thailand's claim.

7.52 We begin our evaluation of Thailand's claim by considering whether or not the application of the EBR constitutes "specific action against dumping". Thereafter, we turn to the issue of whether or not the EBR is applied "in accordance with the provisions of the GATT 1994, as interpreted by" the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

3. Does the application of the EBR constitute "specific action against dumping"?

(a) Main arguments of Thailand

7.53 Thailand asserts that the application of the EBR constitutes "specific action against dumping" because it is (i) "specific action" in response to dumping that (ii) also acts "against" dumping.

(i) "Specific action" in response to dumping

7.54 Thailand notes that in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), the Appellate Body stated that:

"[A] measure that may be taken only when the constituent elements of dumping ... are present, is a 'specific action' in response to dumping within the meaning of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement ... [i]n other words, the measure must be inextricably linked to, or have a strong correlation with, the constituent elements of dumping ..."⁸⁹

7.55 According to Thailand, the key consideration for the Appellate Body was the "strength of the link between the measure and the elements of dumping" and the "degree of correlation between the scope of application of the measure and the constituent elements of dumping".⁹⁰ For this reason, the Appellate Body stated that the test "is met not only when the constituent elements of dumping are 'explicitly built into' the action at issue, but also where ... they are implicit in the express conditions for taking such action".⁹¹ Thailand submits that the constituent elements of dumping are implicit in the express conditions for the application of the EBR since it may be applied only to goods subject to a US anti-dumping duty order.

(ii) Specific action "against" dumping

7.56 According to Thailand, the Appellate Body in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment) interpreted the term "against" in Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement as relating to "an idea of opposition, hostility or adverse effect".⁹² Thailand asserts that the Appellate Body held that for a measure to be "against" dumping:

"[I]t is necessary to assess whether the design and structure of a measure is such that the measure is "opposed to", has an adverse bearing on, or, more specifically, has the ⁸⁹ US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 239.

⁹⁰ US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 244.

⁹¹ US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), citing with approval Thailand's Appellee Submission, para. 14.

⁹² US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 250.

effect of dissuading the practice of dumping or the practice of subsidization, or creates an incentive to terminate such practices."⁹³

7.57 Thailand further asserts that the Appellate Body clarified that action "against" dumping does not require direct contact between the measure and the dumped product or entities responsible for the product. The Appellate Body stated that:

"[T]here is no requirement that the measure must come into direct contact with the imported product, or entities connected to, or responsible for, the imported good such as the importer, exporter, or foreign producer."⁹⁴

7.58 Thailand argues that the Appellate Body and panel agreed that "the test should focus on dumping ... as practices".⁹⁵

7.59 Thailand submits that the application of the EBR to subject shrimp from Thailand has an adverse bearing on, and the effect of dissuading, the practice of dumping. Furthermore, the EBR comes into direct contact with the imported product and entities connected to its import such as the importer, exporter or foreign producer. First, Thailand asserts that the application of the EBR dissuades the practice of dumping by dissuading imports into the United States of subject shrimp. Second, Thailand asserts that the EBR has an adverse bearing on both the practice of dumping and the entities responsible for the dumped goods as it results in enhanced bonds significantly greater than those required of other goods solely because those goods are subject to anti-dumping measures. Thailand asserts that the adverse bearing of the EBR is compounded by the demands of sureties for 100 per cent collateral to secure the enhanced bonds.⁹⁶ According to Thailand, the adverse bearing of the EBR is further compounded by the "stacking" of bonds, and accompanying collateral, year after year.⁹⁷ Thailand argues that the adverse effects of the EBR include the tying up of assets and cash that forces companies to forego business opportunities, and the fees charged by surety companies.

(b) Main arguments of the United States

7.60 The United States denies that the application of the EBR is either "specific action" in response to dumping, or specific action "against" dumping.

(i) "Specific action" in response to dumping

7.61 Regarding Thailand's argument that the EBR is specific to dumping because it may be and has been applied only to importers of goods subject to a US anti-dumping order⁹⁸ and the formula it contains uses the anti-dumping rate as one variable in determining the amount of additional security that may be prescribed,⁹⁹ the United States asserts that these features merely reflect the fact that the directive is, like various measures referred to by the Appellate Body in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), "related to" dumping or subsidies insofar as the unsecured liability it is designed to secure is anti-dumping and countervailing duty liability.¹⁰⁰ The United States asserts that, according

⁹³ US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 254.

⁹⁴ US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 253.

⁹⁵ US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 253.

⁹⁶ See paragraph 2.18 above discussing collateral requirements to secure enhanced bonds.

⁹⁷ See paragraph 2.18 above discussing collateral requirements to secure enhanced bonds.

⁹⁸ Thailand's first written submission, paras. 162-4 and 169.

⁹⁹ Thailand's first written submission, paras. 165-67.

¹⁰⁰ With regard to the decision of the USCIT that Thailand cites in support of its position that the directive as applied to importers of shrimp from Thailand is "specific" to dumping (Thailand's first written submission, para. 167), the United States notes that the litigation relates to certain claims under US law (rather than the WTO Agreements) and is ongoing. Moreover, the October 2006 Notice was issued just prior to the

to the Appellate Body, "an action that is not 'specific' within the meaning of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and of Article 32.1 of the SCM Agreement, but is nevertheless related to dumping or subsidization, is not prohibited by Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement or Article 32.1 of the SCM Agreement."¹⁰¹ The United States asserts that the directive is applied in response to noncollection risk – the mere fact that the particular noncollection risk at issue relates to anti-dumping duties is not a sufficient basis to conclude that the directive itself is "taken in response to the constituent elements of dumping or a subsidy." The United States submits that "the constituent elements of 'dumping'" are not "built into the essential elements" of the additional bond directive,¹⁰² since US Customs does not determine anti-dumping or countervailing duty margins, and the directive does not purport to establish margins of dumping or subsidization. The United States also asserts that the additional bond directive does not apply to all entries subject to anti-dumping or countervailing duties – rather it only applies to those for which a specific noncollection risk has been identified. The United States submits that the sole reason the directive is designed to secure anti-dumping liability is because the vast majority of unsecured liability that has resulted in noncollection happens to be anti-dumping duty liability.

7.62 The United States rejects Thailand's argument that the directive is "not specifically related to matters other than dumping."¹⁰³ According to the United States, the fact that the additional bond directive is based on noncollection risk, rather than the constituent elements of dumping or subsidization, is evident in the text of the directive itself and associated materials. The United States asserts that none of the information US Customs uses to determine that merchandise should be identified as "special category" merchandise subject to the amended directive – previous collection problems, payment history, indications that the liquidated duty rates may exceed existing security – has any relation to the constituent elements of dumping or subsidization.¹⁰⁴ Likewise, none of the information US Customs requests for purposes of establishing individual bond amounts – prior history of paying import duties, the value of the merchandise to be secured, the degree of supervision US Customs exercises over the transaction, the prior record of the importer in honoring bond commitments, and evidence of the importer's ability to pay duties assessed – has any bearing on the constituent elements of dumping or subsidization.¹⁰⁵ The United States submits that all of these factors are, however, relevant to establishing noncollection risk.

7.63 The United States acknowledges that the formulas for determining bond amounts incorporate the anti-dumping rate, but only because from the standpoint of US Customs it is the best and only available baseline proxy of duties that ultimately may be assessed. According to the United States, the inclusion of the anti-dumping rate in the formulas thus does not support the conclusion that the directive itself relies on the constituent elements of dumping or subsidization.

(ii) Specific action "against" dumping

7.64 The United States further submits that a review of Thailand's assertions demonstrates that the additional bond directive does not meet the second prong of the test set forth by the Appellate Body under Article 18.1: it is not an action taken "against" dumping or subsidization. The United States rejects Thailand's argument that the bond directive is an action "against" dumping because "it results in enhanced bonds significantly greater than those required of other goods solely because those goods release of the decision referenced by Thailand, and the court did not squarely address the Notice in its findings. See Exhibit THA-9.

¹⁰¹ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 262.

¹⁰² Appellate Body Report, US – 1916 Act, para. 130.

¹⁰³ Thailand's first written submission, para. 175.

¹⁰⁴ Exhibit THA-5, p. 62,277.

¹⁰⁵ Exhibit THA-5, p. 62,277.

are subject to anti-dumping measures."¹⁰⁶ The United States asserts that the higher bond is not required "solely because those goods are subject to anti-dumping measures."¹⁰⁷ Rather, the directive is applied to importers of certain goods because US Customs has determined that those importers pose a higher risk of default. The United States argues that the fact that this potential liability and risk of default happen to be attributable to certain anti-dumping and countervailing duties does not permit the conclusion that the directive is an action "against" dumping and subsidization.

7.65 The United States asserts that actions by sureties and other private parties, including sureties' fees and collateral requirements associated with these imports, do not constitute evidence that the directive itself is an action "against" dumping or subsidization. The United States submits that US Customs does not set surety fees, nor does it require importers to post collateral in support of bonds. The United States asserts that US Customs is a third party beneficiary to bond contracts, which are private contracts negotiated between the surety and the importer.

7.66 Furthermore, the United States asserts that the Appellate Body noted in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment) that "a measure cannot be against dumping or a subsidy simply because it facilitates or induces the exercise of rights that are WTO-consistent."¹⁰⁸ According to the United States, the GATT 1994 and the Anti-Dumping Agreement do not prohibit the United States from collecting the anti-dumping duties in question, and the bond requirement facilitates its ability to do so.

(c) Evaluation by the Panel

7.67 In considering the text of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, we note that the relevant language was considered in detail by the Appellate Body in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment). In that case, the Appellate Body found:

"Looking to the ordinary meaning of the words used in these provisions, we read them as establishing two conditions precedent that must be met in order for a measure to be governed by them. The first is that a measure must be "specific" to dumping or subsidisation. The second is that a measure must be "against" dumping or subsidisation. These two conditions operate together and complement each other. If they are not met, the measure will not be governed by Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement or by Article 32.1 of the SCM Agreement. If, however, it is established that a measure meets these two conditions, and thus falls within the scope of the prohibitions in those provisions, it would then be necessary to move to a further step in the analysis and to determine whether the measure has been "taken in accordance with the provisions of GATT 1994", as interpreted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement or the SCM Agreement. If it is determined that this is not the case, the measure would be inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement or Article 32.1 of the SCM Agreement."¹⁰⁹

¹⁰⁶ Thailand's first written submission, para. 186.

¹⁰⁷ Thailand's first written submission, para. 186.

¹⁰⁸ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 258. The fact that the Appellate Body was analysing a measure affecting private parties' ability to file petitions does not provide a basis to distinguish the instant facts from those before the Appellate Body in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment). Contrary to Thailand's assertion, the "WTO-consistent" right in question was not the right of a private party to file a petition, as actions by private parties are not themselves subject to a finding of WTO-consistency. Rather, as here, the Appellate Body was evaluating a measure that facilitated the exercise of "WTO-consistent rights" by the government (in that case, accepting applications, conducting investigations, and imposing orders; here, collecting duties owed). US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 258.

¹⁰⁹ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 236.

7.68 We agree with this analysis by the Appellate Body, and adopt it as our own. Accordingly, in order to establish whether the application of the EBR constitutes "specific action against dumping", we shall first examine whether or not the application of the EBR is "specific" to dumping. If so, we shall then consider whether or not the application of the EBR acts "against dumping".

(i) Whether or not the application of the EBR is "specific" to dumping

7.69 The degree of specificity needed for action to fall within the scope of Article 18.1 was addressed by the Appellate Body in US – 1916 Act and US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment). In its report in US – 1916 Act, the Appellate Body found that:

"[T]he ordinary meaning of the phrase 'specific action against dumping' of exports within the meaning of Article 18.1 is action that is taken in response to situations presenting the constituent elements of 'dumping'. 'Specific action against dumping' of exports must, at a minimum, encompass action that may be taken only when the constituent elements of 'dumping' are present."¹¹⁰

7.70 In US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), the Appellate Body explained further that:

"[T]he criterion we set out in US – 1916 Act for specific action in response to dumping is not whether the constituent elements of dumping or of a subsidy are explicitly referred to in the measure at issue, nor whether dumping or subsidization triggers the application of the action, nor whether the constituent elements of dumping or of a subsidy form part of the essential components of the measure at issue. Our analysis in US – 1916 Act focused on the strength of the link between the measure and the elements of dumping or a subsidy. In other words, we focused on the degree of correlation between the scope of application of the measure and the constituent elements of dumping or of a subsidy. In noting that the 'wording of the 1916 Act also makes clear that these actions can be taken only with respect to conduct which presents the constituent elements of 'dumping', we did not require that the language of the measure include the constituent elements of dumping or of a subsidy. This is clear from our use of the word "also", which suggests that this aspect of the 1916 Act was a supplementary reason for our finding, and not the basis for it. Indeed, we required that the constituent elements of dumping (or of a subsidy) be "present", which in our view can include cases where the constituent elements of dumping and of a subsidy are implicit in the measure."¹¹¹

7.71 We agree with the Appellate Body's interpretation of the phrase "specific action", and adopt it as our own. Accordingly, we shall determine whether or not the application of the EBR is "specific" to dumping by examining whether or not the application of the EBR is inextricably linked to, or has a strong correlation with, the constituent elements of dumping.

7.72 In our view, the constituent elements of dumping are implicit in the express conditions for the application of the EBR, since the EBR may be applied only to goods subject to a US anti-dumping (or countervailing) duty order.¹¹² If there were no finding that the constituent elements of dumping were

¹¹⁰ Appellate Body Report, US – 1916 Act, para. 122 (footnote omitted, original emphasis). Although the Appellate Body's finding refers to the phrase "specific action against dumping" in its entirety, the Appellate Body confirmed in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment) (para. 245) that its finding concerned the phrase "specific action", rather than the word "against".

¹¹¹ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 244 (footnotes omitted).

¹¹² The United States has not disputed the factual accuracy of Thailand's argument (see Thailand's first written submission, para. 163) that the 9 July 2004 Amendment limits the application of the EBR to merchandise upon which USDOC has issued an anti-dumping order, setting out that "[a]ny increase in bond present, there would be no anti-dumping order against subject shrimp, and therefore no basis for applying the EBR in respect of subject shrimp imports. For this reason, the existence of the constituent elements of dumping is a legal pre-requisite for the application of the EBR. This is further confirmed by the fact that the formula in the Amended CBD for calculating the EBR includes direct reference to the anti-dumping duty rate, and therefore the constituent elements of dumping. If the constituent elements of dumping were not present, the US would not have found cause to determine an anti-dumping rate, and the formula would not apply.

7.73 We note the US argument that although the application of the EBR may be related to dumping, the application of the EBR is not "specific" to dumping because it is "based on non-collection risk rather than the constituent elements of dumping",¹¹³ in the sense that the EBR does not "apply to all entries subject to antidumping or countervailing duties – but only to those for which a specific non-collection risk has been identified".¹¹⁴ We recall, though, that the Appellate Body has already determined¹¹⁵ that a measure need not be triggered by the constituent elements of dumping in order for that measure to constitute "specific action" in respect of dumping. Nor does the existence of "additional requirements" transform a "specific action against dumping" into something else.¹¹⁶ Even though the application of the EBR might ultimately be triggered by a risk of non-collection, the fact remains that the EBR is only applied in respect of imports subject to anti-dumping (or countervailing duty) orders. There remains, therefore, a significant degree of correlation between the application of the EBR and the constituent elements of dumping. In our view, such a degree of correlation demonstrates that the application of the EBR is "specific", rather than merely related, to dumping.

(ii) Whether or not the application of the EBR acts "against" dumping

7.74 In our view, a measure will only act "against" dumping if it has some form of adverse bearing on dumping. This is consistent with the approach of the Appellate Body in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), where it found that:

"[T]o determine whether a measure is "against" dumping or a subsidy, [] it is necessary to assess whether the design and structure of a measure is such that the measure is "opposed to", has an adverse bearing on, or, more specifically, has the effect of dissuading the practice of dumping or the practice of subsidization, or creates an incentive to terminate such practices."¹¹⁷

7.75 In light of the ordinary meaning of the term "against", we consider it appropriate to adopt a similar approach in determining whether or not the application of the EBR acts "against" dumping. In doing so, we note that the Appellate Body concluded that the measure at issue in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment) had an adverse bearing on the foreign producers/exporters because it "created an incentive" for those foreign producers/exporters "not to engage in the practice of exporting dumped or liability will become effective when the Department of Commerce (DOC) issues its Order on the case", and that the 10 August 2005 Clarification characterises the 9 July 2004 Amendment as containing "specific guidelines for bonds covering certain merchandise subject to antidumping/countervailing duty cases".

¹¹³ United States' first written submission, para. 35.

¹¹⁴ United States' first written submission, para. 39.

¹¹⁵ In US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), the Appellate Body found that the relevant measure constituted "specific action against dumping" notwithstanding the US argument that the relevant measure was not triggered by the constituent elements of dumping, but rather by an applicant's qualification as an "affected domestic producer" which has incurred qualifying expenditures. Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 243.

¹¹⁶ In US – 1916 Act, the Appellate Body held that "an additional requirement" for the taking of action (in that case, a finding of intent) did "not transform the 1916 Act into a statute that does not provide for 'specific action against dumping'". (see Appellate Body Report, US – 1916 Act, para. 132).

¹¹⁷ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 254.

subsidized products or to terminate such practices".¹¹⁸ In our view, a similar incentive arises as a result of the application of the EBR on imports of subject shrimp. Ordinarily, the application of the EBR results in additional costs¹¹⁹ that, although initially borne by importers, ultimately impact on foreign producers/exporters of the subject merchandise, just as anti-dumping duties do.¹²⁰ As a result of the formulas used to calculate the amount of the EBR, the amount of the EBR, like the amount of anti-dumping duty, is directly linked to a given foreign producer's/exporter's margin of dumping.¹²¹ The higher the margin of dumping, the higher the amount of the EBR, and the higher the cost of the EBR.¹²² In order to maintain its level of sales and/or profitability, despite the increased costs for importers as a result of the application of the EBR, foreign producers/exporters have an incentive to reduce, or even eliminate, their margin of dumping (just as they have an incentive to reduce their margin of dumping in order to reduce the amount of anti-dumping duties levied on their goods).¹²³ Furthermore, shrimp importers have an incentive to avoid the costs associated with the application of the EBR by importing shrimp from foreign producers/exporters whose produce has not been found to have been dumped, and is therefore not subject to the shrimp anti-dumping order. As a result of such incentives, which affect the relevant entities in much the same way as anti-dumping duties do, we find that the application of the EBR constitutes specific action "against" dumping.

¹¹⁸ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 256.

¹¹⁹ The financial costs of obtaining enhanced bonds include the fees and collateral requirements imposed by surety companies for providing such bonds. (See paragraph 2.18 above discussing fee and collateral requirements to secure enhanced bonds). Although the United States does not itself determine the terms and conditions under which surety companies provide bonds, the United States must have been aware that importers would necessarily incur costs in procuring the bonds that it required them to provide.

¹²⁰ Although the parties have made arguments regarding the actual impact of the EBR on the volume and market share of imports from Thailand, we do not consider these to be relevant to the issue before us. In our view, Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement is concerned with the effect of actions on the practice of dumping, rather than trade flows in the relevant imports. We note that the Appellate Body has confirmed that "the test should focus on dumping [or subsidization] as practices" (see Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 253), and that the appropriate "analysis does not mandate an economic assessment of the implications of the measure on the conditions of competition under which domestic product and dumped/subsidized imports compete" (see Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 257).

¹²¹ Thailand also argues that the EBR acts "against" dumping by inflating the margin of dumping for a given shipment. Thailand asserts that the export price on which the determination of dumping is based is a net price from which all shipping costs, including duties, charges, and other costs of importation, including the cost of the EBR, are deducted. Thailand argues that when the cost of the EBR is deducted from the invoiced export price to arrive at the net export price used to determine dumping margins, the result is a lower export price and, therefore, higher dumping margins. The United States submits that Thailand's argument is founded on an incorrect citation to a provision in US law, and a fundamentally incorrect understanding how the USDOC interprets and applies the relevant legal provisions. We recall that we are presently examining Thailand's claim against the EBR as applied against imports of shrimp. Since Thailand has provided no evidence that, in applying the EBR against imports of shrimp, the United States treated the costs of obtaining enhanced bonds as shipping costs to be deducted from the export price, there is no basis for us to conclude that any such application of the EBR acted "against" dumping.

¹²² In this regard, the adverse bearing of the application of the EBR is similar to that of the measure at issue in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment) (where the adverse bearing resulted from the collected anti-dumping duties being transferred to domestic producers), in the sense that the adverse bearing is directly linked to the margin of dumping of the foreign producer/exporter. Indeed, the adverse bearing of the EBR is similar to that of an anti-dumping duty, in the sense that both result in increased costs that the relevant entities have an incentive to avoid or mitigate.

¹²³ In response to Question 6 from the Panel after the first substantive meeting, the United States asserted that "[i]f the cash deposit rate in the most recently completed administrative review is determined to be zero, any new continuous bond obtained after completion of the administrative review would reflect an enhanced bond amount of $0."

7.76 The United States argues that, rather than being specific action "against" dumping, the application of the EBR merely facilitates the collection of anti-dumping duties. In assessing this argument, we note that in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment) the Appellate Body disagreed with the panel's finding that the Continued Dumping and Subsidy Offset Act (hereafter the "CDSOA") is a measure against dumping because the CDSOA provides a financial incentive for domestic producers to file or support applications for the initiation of anti-dumping and countervailing duty investigations, and that such an incentive would likely result in a greater number of applications, investigations and orders. In particular, we note that the Appellate Body found that "a measure cannot be against dumping or a subsidy simply because it facilitates or induces the exercise of rights that are WTO-consistent."¹²⁴ Upon careful reflection, we do not consider that the Appellate Body's reasoning should preclude our finding that the application of the EBR constitutes specific action "against" dumping. Instead, the Appellate Body's reasoning means that we would be precluded from concluding that the application of the EBR constitutes specific action "against" dumping simply because it may also facilitate the collection of WTO-consistent anti-dumping duties. However, this does not preclude us from concluding, as the Appellate Body and panel did in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), that the application of the measure at issue constitutes specific action "against" dumping on the basis of other considerations, notwithstanding the fact that the application of that measure might also facilitate the collection of WTO-consistent anti-dumping duties.

7.77 Our finding that the application of the EBR constitutes "specific action against dumping" is supported by the US view that provisional measures taken in the form of bonds constitute "specific action against dumping".¹²⁵ If a bond applied as a provisional measure should be treated as a "specific action against dumping", it would appear reasonable to conclude that a bond applied as a definitive measure should be similarly categorized: in both cases, the adverse bearing of the bond on foreign producers/exporters and importers (and the correlation with the constituent elements of dumping) is the same. The United States asserts, though, that unlike a bond required as a provisional measure, the EBR provides for security after the existence of dumping has been established, pending determination of the facts with respect to payment of duties. The United States submits that the application of the EBR "facilitates the exercise of WTO-consistent rights"¹²⁶ – i.e., the collection of duties owed following the imposition of an order. The United States asserts that, by contrast, certain bonds required before an antidumping duty order has been imposed may not be viewed as "facilitating" the exercise of WTO-consistent rights, insofar as, before the order is imposed, it has not been established that a Member is entitled to collect duties. We are not persuaded by the United States' argument, however, since we have already concluded that the fact that the application of the EBR may facilitate the exercise of WTO-consistent rights is not determinative of whether or not the application of the EBR constitutes "specific action against dumping" (in the sense that this fact does not preclude a finding that a measure constitutes "specific action against dumping" on the basis of other considerations).

(iii) Conclusion

7.78 In light of the above, we conclude that the application of the EBR constitutes "specific action against dumping" in the meaning of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

7.79 Accordingly, we must now consider the remaining elements of Article 18.1, regarding the question of whether or not the EBR was applied "in accordance with the provisions of GATT 1994", as interpreted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

¹²⁴ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 258.

¹²⁵ See United States' Responses to Second Set of Panel Questions, para. 5, in which the United States asserts that "a bond requirement prior to imposition of an order may be considered an action 'against' dumping".

¹²⁶ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 258.

4. Was the EBR applied "in accordance with" the provisions of the GATT 1994, as interpreted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement

7.80 The United States submits that the EBR was applied "in accordance with the provisions of GATT 1994", as interpreted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement, because the application of the EBR is authorised by the Ad Note. Thailand rejects the US reliance on the Ad Note.

(a) Main arguments of Thailand

7.81 Thailand submits that the Ad Note cannot be read independently of the provisions of the Anti-Dumping Agreement to create a fourth permissible response to dumping not provided for in the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Thailand further asserts that, in any event, the text of the Ad Note expressly limits its application to provisional measures taken while dumping is "suspected", that is, prior to a final determination of dumping.

7.82 Thailand asserts that Article VI of the GATT 1994, which includes as an "integral part" the Ad Note, cannot be read independently of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Thailand notes that Article 1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement provides that the provisions of the Anti-Dumping Agreement "govern the application of Article VI of GATT 1994 in so far as action is taken under anti-dumping legislation or regulations." Thailand argues that the Appellate Body found in US – 1916 Act that "Article 1 states that 'an anti-dumping measure' must be consistent with Article VI of the GATT 1994 and the provisions of the Anti-Dumping Agreement."¹²⁷ Thailand also states that, similarly, in Brazil – Desiccated Coconut, the Appellate Body emphasised that "Article VI of the GATT 1994" cannot "be applied independently of the SCM Agreement in the context of the WTO" as "[t]he authors of the new WTO regime intended to put an end to the fragmentation that had characterized the previous system".¹²⁸ According to Thailand, the Appellate Body identified a clear distinction between the previous GATT system, in which Article VI could be invoked separately from the Tokyo Round SCM Code, and the WTO system, in which Article VI cannot be so invoked.¹²⁹ Thailand asserts that this distinction applies equally to the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

7.83 Thailand submits that, when read in conjunction with the Anti-Dumping Agreement, Article VI and the Ad Note permit only three responses to dumping. According to Thailand, the Appellate Body has consistently found that "Article VI, and, in particular, Article VI:2, read in conjunction with the Anti-Dumping Agreement, limit the permissible responses to dumping to definitive anti-dumping duties, provisional measures and price undertakings".¹³⁰ Thailand asserts that these responses are governed by Articles 7, 8, and 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Thailand further asserts that the United States has also argued this position in recent panel proceedings.¹³¹

7.84 Thailand understands the United States to argue that the Ad Note permits the imposition of cash deposit and bond amounts in excess of the amount of the margin of dumping currently in effect during the period following the imposition of definitive anti-dumping duties. For Thailand, therefore, the United States argues that Article 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, governing the imposition and collection of anti-dumping duties, does not limit the amounts of cash deposits and bonds that may be imposed. Thailand asserts that, in these circumstances, there is a conflict between the provisions of Article 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, which expressly limits the measures that may be taken ¹²⁷ Appellate Body Report, US – 1916 Act, para. 119.

¹²⁸ Appellate Body Report, Brazil – Desiccated Coconut, p. 18.

¹²⁹ Appellate Body Report, Brazil – Desiccated Coconut, p. 18.

¹³⁰ Appellate Body Report, US – 1916 Act, para. 137; Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 265.

¹³¹ Thailand refers in this regard to United States' first written submission to the Panel, Mexico – Anti-Dumping Measures on Rice, (WT/DS294) 22 March 2004, para. 274.

following the imposition of definitive anti-dumping duties, and the United States' reading of the Ad Note. Thailand notes that, in cases of conflict between a provision of a multilateral trade agreement, such as the Anti-Dumping Agreement, and the GATT 1994, the General Interpretative Note to Annex 1A of the Marrakesh Agreement Establishing the WTO provides that the provisions of the multilateral trade agreement shall prevail.¹³² Thailand submits that for this reason also, the Ad Note cannot be read to confer rights to take action against dumping following the imposition of definitive dumping duties that are not found in Article 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

7.85 Thailand also asserts that the Ad Note limits the permissible measures to a single security in the form of a "cash deposit or bond", rather than a combination of both cash deposits and bonds.

(b) Main arguments of the United States

7.86 The United States submits that Thailand offers an interpretation of the Ad Note in relation to the Anti-Dumping Agreement that is inconsistent with the terms of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and fails to give the Ad Note any meaning or legal effect, contrary to the relationship between the GATT 1994 and other WTO Agreements contemplated by the WTO Agreement. The United States asserts that the GATT 1994, including the Ad Note, is an "integral part" of the WTO Agreement.¹³³ The United States argues that past panels and the Appellate Body have noted that Article VI is "part of the same treaty" as the Anti-Dumping Agreement, and "should not be interpreted in a way that would deprive it or the Antidumping Agreement of meaning."¹³⁴ The United States argues that panels "should give meaning and legal effect to all the relevant provisions," including the Ad Note. According to the United States, the Ad Note permits Members to require "reasonable security (cash deposit or bond)" for the payment of antidumping and countervailing duties. For the United States, no other provision of the Anti-Dumping Agreement or the GATT 1994 specifically addresses security for the payment of duties after the final determination in an investigation, including the collection of cash deposits, and, moreover, no provision prohibits a Member from requiring this security.

7.87 The United States submits that, instead of "reading Article VI in conjunction with the Antidumping Agreement," as the Appellate Body in US – 1916 Act suggested,¹³⁵ Thailand, through a misreading of Articles 7 and 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, attempts to read Article VI and the Ad Note out of the covered agreements entirely, depriving both provisions of any meaning. The United States asserts that, if accepted, Thailand's various theories would mean that security pending final assessment of anti-dumping and countervailing duties is nowhere permitted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement, SCM Agreement, or the GATT 1994. The United States asserts that, if Thailand's arguments were accepted, Members would not be permitted to maintain security requirements pending final determination of liability. The United States argues that to preclude a Member with a retrospective system from requiring the posting of security prior to the determination of final liability would create a disparity between retrospective and prospective systems. The United States argues that such a conclusion would compromise Members' ability to maintain retrospective duty assessment systems, despite the fact that these systems are specifically contemplated by the text of the Agreement.

¹³² The General Interpretative Note states that: "In the event of a conflict between a provision of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and a provision of another agreement in Annex 1A to the Agreement Establishing the World Trade Organization (referred to in the agreements in Annex 1A as the "WTO Agreement"), the provision of the other agreement shall prevail to the extent of the conflict."

¹³³ Article II:2 of the WTO Agreement.

¹³⁴ Panel Report, US – 1916 Act (EC), para. 6.97.

¹³⁵ Cf. Thailand's Responses to First Set of Panel Questions, paras. 34-37.

(c) Evaluation by the Panel

7.88 At this juncture, we are examining the issue of whether or not the EBR was applied "in accordance with the provisions of GATT 1994", as interpreted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement. The parties agree that the relevant provision of the GATT 1994 in this regard is Article VI, and specifically the Ad Note thereto.¹³⁶ This is also consistent with the view expressed by the Appellate Body in US – 1916 Act.¹³⁷ The Ad Note provides that:

"As in many other cases in customs administration, a contracting party may require reasonable security (bond or cash deposit) for the payment of anti-dumping or countervailing duty pending final determination of the facts in any case of suspected dumping or subsidization."

7.89 We first consider the relationship between the Ad Note and the Anti-Dumping Agreement, and the question of whether or not the Ad Note may authorize the imposition of security requirements that are not expressly envisaged by the Anti-Dumping Agreement. If we find that the Ad Note may authorize such security requirements, we consider the temporal scope of the security requirements that Members may impose pursuant to the Ad Note. Thereafter, we consider the question of whether or not Members may require security combining both cash deposits and bonds. Finally, we examine whether the application of the EBR constitutes "reasonable" security.

(i) The relationship between the Ad Note and the Anti-Dumping Agreement

7.90 Thailand's basic argument is that Article VI of the GATT 1994, including the Ad Note, may not be applied "independently" of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, in the sense that it may not provide an independent basis for taking specific action against dumping outside of the provisions of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. In this regard, Thailand asserts that the Appellate Body found in Brazil – Desiccated Coconut that "Article VI of the GATT 1994" cannot "be applied independently of the SCM Agreement in the context of the WTO" as "[t]he authors of the new WTO regime intended to put an end to the fragmentation that had characterized the previous system".¹³⁸ In other words, Thailand argues that if Article VI of the GATT 1994 were found to provide an independent basis for taking specific action against dumping, such finding would result in fragmented anti-dumping regimes.

7.91 In considering Thailand's argument, we note that the Appellate Body findings relied on by Thailand were prefaced by the following observations:

"The relationship between the GATT 1994 and the other goods agreements in Annex 1A is complex and must be examined on a case-by-case basis. Although the provisions of the GATT 1947 were incorporated into, and became a part of the GATT 1994, they are not the sum total of the rights and obligations of WTO Members

¹³⁶ We note that the GATT 1994 consists inter alia of the GATT 1947. Article XXXIV of the GATT 1947 provides that the annexes to the GATT 1947 are "an integral part" thereof. The Ad Note, which is contained in Annex I to the GATT 1947, is therefore "an integral part" of the GATT 1947. As such, the Ad Note is necessarily part of the GATT 1994. We conclude from the fact that the Ad Note is included under the heading "Ad Article VI" that the Ad Note is part of Article VI of the GATT 1994. Both parties agree with this approach (See e.g. Thailand's second written submission, para. 3, and United States' second written submission, para. 14).

¹³⁷ In particular, the Appellate Body clarified "Since the only provisions of the GATT 1994 "interpreted" by the Anti-Dumping Agreement are those provisions of Article VI concerning dumping, Article 18.1 should be read as requiring that any "specific action against dumping" of exports from another Member be in accordance with the relevant provisions of Article VI of the GATT 1994, as interpreted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement". Appellate Body Report, US – 1916 Act, para. 124. See also Panel Report, US – 1916 Act (Japan), paras. 6.214-218 and 6.264; and Panel Report, US – 1916 Act (EC), paras. 6.197-6.199.

¹³⁸ Appellate Body Report, Brazil – Desiccated Coconut, p. 18.

concerning a particular matter. For example, with respect to subsidies on agricultural products, Articles II, VI and XVI of the GATT 1994 alone do not represent the total rights and obligations of WTO Members. The Agreement on Agriculture and the SCM Agreement reflect the latest statement of WTO Members as to their rights and obligations concerning agricultural subsidies. The general interpretative note to Annex 1A was added to reflect that the other goods agreements in Annex 1A, in many ways, represent a substantial elaboration of the provisions of the GATT 1994, and to the extent that the provisions of the other goods agreements conflict with the provisions of the GATT 1994, the provisions of the other goods agreements prevail. This does not mean, however, that the other goods agreements in Annex 1A, such as the SCM Agreement, supersede the GATT 1994. As the Panel has said:

... the question for consideration is not whether the SCM Agreement supersedes Article VI of GATT 1994. Rather, it is whether Article VI creates rules which are separate and distinct from those of the SCM Agreement, and which can be applied without reference to that Agreement, or whether Article VI of GATT 1994 and the SCM Agreement represent an inseparable package of rights and disciplines that must be considered in conjunction."¹³⁹

7.92 It is important to note that, despite the complexity of the issue under consideration, the Appellate Body was abundantly clear in stating that Article VI of the GATT 1994 was not superseded by the SCM Agreement. The findings of the panel, which were upheld by the Appellate Body without modification, similarly excluded the possibility that the SCM Agreement might be superseded by Article VI of the GATT 1994. Thus, neither the panel nor Appellate Body findings in Brazil – Desiccated Coconut provide any basis for concluding that Article VI of the GATT 1994 is superseded by the SCM Agreement.¹⁴⁰ We emphasise this point because, in our view, Thailand's position regarding the relationship between the Ad Note and the Anti-Dumping Agreement suggests that the latter supersedes the former.

7.93 Thailand correctly notes that the panel and Appellate Body in Brazil – Desiccated Coconut found that Article VI could not be applied "without reference" to, or independently of, the SCM Agreement. This finding cannot mean, though, that the Ad Note may not authorise action that is not envisaged by the SCM Agreement or Anti-Dumping Agreement.¹⁴¹

7.94 In our view, the findings in Brazil – Desiccated Coconut that Article VI may not be applied independent of, or without reference to, the Anti-Dumping Agreement simply mean (consistent with the conflict mechanism set forth in the general interpretative note to Annex 1A) that Article VI may not be interpreted to justify action that is prohibited by the Anti-Dumping Agreement. It is in this sense that Article VI must be applied with reference to the Anti-Dumping Agreement. If the Ad Note authorises conduct, and reference to the Anti-Dumping Agreement confirms that such conduct is not prohibited by the Anti-Dumping Agreement, we see no basis in the Anti-Dumping Agreement, the GATT 1994, or the abovementioned findings of the panel and Appellate Body, to prohibit such ¹³⁹ Appellate Body Report, Brazil – Desiccated Coconut, p. 14 (emphasis added, footnote omitted).

¹⁴⁰ Although the findings of the panel and Appellate Body in Brazil – Desiccated Coconut were concerned with the relationship between Article VI of the GATT 1994 and the SCM Agreement, we see no reason why (and the parties have not argued that) those findings should not guide us in assessing the relationship between Article VI and the Anti-Dumping Agreement, especially since the Appellate Body's findings concerned the broader "relationship between the GATT 1994 and the other goods agreement in Annex 1A" to the WTO Agreement.

¹⁴¹ Such result would conflict with the Appellate Body's conclusion that the SCM Agreement does not supersede Article VI of the GATT 1994.

conduct.¹⁴² Any other approach would deprive the Ad Note of meaning and legal effect, and would effectively mean that it has been superseded by the Anti-Dumping Agreement.¹⁴³

7.95 In our view, such an approach to the relationship between the Ad Note and the Anti-Dumping Agreement is entirely consistent with the interpretation set forth by the Appellate Body in Brazil – Desiccated Coconut. Contrary to Thailand's argument, we do not consider that our approach reintroduces "the fragmentation that had characterized the previous system".¹⁴⁴ The fragmentation with which the Appellate Body was concerned in Brazil – Desiccated Coconut resulted from the fact that, under the GATT regime, Contracting Parties could take anti-dumping action under Article VI even if they had not signed – and were therefore not bound by – the Tokyo Round Anti-Dumping Code. Non-signatories of the Code could therefore act (under Article VI) "independently" of, or "without reference" to the Code. Such fragmentation, which is precluded under the "single undertaking" in the WTO regime, would not be re-introduced by our interpretation of the relationship between Article VI and the Anti-Dumping Agreement, since our interpretation is premised on the notion that Article VI may not be applied "independently" of, or "without reference" to, the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

7.96 Thailand has not identified any provision of the Anti-Dumping Agreement that would prohibit the security requirements resulting from the application of the EBR.¹⁴⁵ Nor are we able to identify any. As a matter of law, therefore, such security requirements would be authorized by the Ad Note, provided they are in conformity with the substantive provisions thereof. This is the issue we will turn to shortly.

¹⁴² In this regard, we note that Thailand argued in its reply to Question 16 of the First Set of Panel Questions (at para. 38) that "the provisions of Article VI cannot be read to expand on or undermine the specific rules contained in the Anti-Dumping and SCM Agreements". This statement is not inconsistent with our interpretation of the relationship between Article VI and the Anti-Dumping Agreement: provided there are no "specific rules" contained in the Anti-Dumping Agreement regarding security for definitive anti-dumping duties, there is no risk that security action authorized by Article VI would "expand on or undermine" those specific rules. We also note Thailand's reliance on Article 1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, which provides in relevant part that the provisions of the Anti-Dumping Agreement "govern the application of Article VI of GATT 1994". Consistent with our reasoning above, we consider that the Anti-Dumping Agreement can only govern the application of Article VI to the extent that it expressly addresses issues covered by Article VI. In our view, the Anti-Dumping Agreement cannot govern the application of Article VI in respect of security for definitive anti-dumping duties if the Anti-Dumping Agreement contains no provisions expressly dealing with such security.

¹⁴³ Any other approach would also render other parts of Article VI, such as paragraph 6(b) thereof, inutile. As noted by the panel in Brazil – Desiccated Coconut (note 60), the Anti-Dumping Agreement "does not replicate or elaborate on Article VI:5 of GATT 1994, which proscribes the imposition of both an anti-dumping and a countervailing duty to compensate for the same situation of dumping and export subsidization, nor does it address the issue of countervailing action on behalf of a third country as provided for in Article VI:6(b) and (c) of GATT 1994. If the [Anti-Dumping] Agreement were considered to supersede Article VI of GATT 1994 altogether with respect to countervailing measures, these provisions would lose all force and effect. Such a result could not have been intended."

¹⁴⁴ Appellate Body Report, Brazil – Desiccated Coconut, p. 18.

¹⁴⁵ Thailand has not advanced any primary claim that the imposition of reasonable security requirements is inconsistent with any provisions of the Anti-Dumping Agreement other than Article 18.1. Since we are examining the applicability of the Ad Note precisely in order to resolve Thailand's Article 18.1 claim, that provision provides no basis – at this stage – for concluding that the application of the EBR is prohibited by the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Thailand has argued, by way of "subsidiary and alternative" claims, that the EBR is inconsistent with the provisions of Articles 7.1, 7.2, 7.4, and 7.5, and Articles 9.1, 9.2 and 9.3 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement (see note 266 to Thailand's first written submission). Article 7 contains disciplines regarding the imposition of provisional measures. Since we are presently assessing the application of EBR after the imposition of the anti-dumping order, i.e., as a definitive anti-dumping measure, Article 7 is not applicable. Furthermore, Article 9 is concerned with the imposition and collection of anti-dumping duties (see paragraph 7.113). Since the EBR is not an anti-dumping duty, the EBR is not governed – let alone prohibited – by that provision.

7.97 Before concluding on the relationship between the Ad Note and the Anti-Dumping Agreement, though, we must consider Thailand's assertion that the Appellate Body has found that "Article VI, and, in particular, Article VI:2, read in conjunction with the Anti-Dumping Agreement, limit the permissible responses to dumping to 'definitive anti-dumping duties, provisional measures and price undertakings'".¹⁴⁶ While we acknowledge that such statements were made by the Appellate Body in US – 1916 Act and US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), we note that the Appellate Body was not considering the WTO-consistency of security imposed pursuant to the Ad Note in those cases. By contrast, we have conducted a careful examination of the relationship between the Ad Note and the Anti-Dumping Agreement, and find that the Ad Note may permit responses to dumping in the form of particular security requirements. In doing so, we note that Appellate Body jurisprudence clearly indicates that the Ad Note has not been superseded by the Anti-Dumping Agreement. In such circumstances, we are not prepared to find that the Ad Note has been rendered superfluous by dicta in an Appellate Body Report that does not even refer to the provisions of the Ad Note. Instead, we shall base ourselves on the clear-cut guidance that has been provided by the Appellate Body in Brazil – Desiccated Coconut.

7.98 For all the above reasons, we find that the relationship between the Ad Note and the Anti-Dumping Agreement is not such as to preclude the Ad Note authorizing certain types of security that are not expressly envisaged by the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

(ii) The temporal scope of the Ad Note

7.99 We recall that the EBR was applied on imports entering the United States after the shrimp anti-dumping order was imposed. The first substantive issue we must consider is whether the temporal scope of the Ad Note covers the period of application of the anti-dumping order (as alleged by the United States), or whether it is limited to provisional measures taken prior to the imposition of the anti-dumping order (as alleged by Thailand).

Ordinary meaning of the text of the Ad Note

7.100 By its express terms, the Ad Note is applicable "pending final determination of the facts in any case of suspected dumping or subsidization". The United States argues that the temporal scope of the Ad Note covers the period of application of the anti-dumping order since, in a retrospective system such as the US system, there remains a "case of suspected dumping" pending completion of the assessment review. Thailand argues that the application of the Ad Note is expressly limited to provisional measures taken while dumping is "suspected", that is, prior to a final determination of dumping. Thailand asserts that the existence of dumping is confirmed once a final determination of dumping is made by the USDOC, such that there can no longer be "any case of suspected dumping" as of the imposition of the anti-dumping order.

7.101 The Ad Note refers to "suspected dumping." We interpret "dumping" in light of Article 2.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Regarding the term "suspected", the United States asserts that this refers to dumping that is "imagined to be possible or likely."¹⁴⁷ Thailand asserts that the ordinary meaning of "suspected" is "that one suspects to exist or to be such".¹⁴⁸ Despite the apparent differences between the definitions advanced by the parties, in fact the parties have merely proposed different elements of one of the definitions set forth in The New Shorter Oxford English Dictionary (which defines the word "suspected" in relevant part as "that one suspects to exist or to be such; imagined to be possible or likely"). There is, therefore, no disagreement between the parties in this regard. We understand the term "suspected" to refer to dumping that is suspected to exist, in the sense that its existence may be imagined to be likely.¹⁴⁹

¹⁴⁶ Appellate Body Report, US – 1916 Act, para. 137; Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 265.

¹⁴⁷ The New Shorter Oxford English Dictionary (Clarendon Press, 4th Ed. 1993), p. 3162.

¹⁴⁸ The New Shorter Oxford English Dictionary (Clarendon Press, 4th Ed. 1993), p. 3162.

7.102 In order to determine whether or not there remains "a case of suspected dumping" after imposition of a US anti-dumping order, we must carefully consider the analyses of dumping undertaken in the US retrospective system. In order to impose an anti-dumping order, the United States first determines, through an analysis of import entries during a given period of investigation, whether margins of dumping exist, and whether dumped imports cause or threaten to cause material injury to a domestic industry. If a determination of injurious dumping is made, the United States issues an anti-dumping duty order. In its anti-dumping duty order, the United States sets forth ad valorem cash deposit rates for producers/exporters individually investigated, as well as an "all-others" rate applicable to all other subject producers/exporters. Pursuant to the anti-dumping duty order, importers must post a cash deposit of estimated anti-dumping duties for each import transaction. This cash deposit is based on the overall margin of dumping found for the exporter or producer during the investigation phase. Thereafter, the US retrospective duty assessment system provides that, every twelve months, during the anniversary month of the antidumping duty order, importers, exporters, producers, and domestic interested parties have the opportunity to request that USDOC conduct an assessment review of the import entries that occurred in the prior year (but following imposition of the anti-dumping order). During any such review, the United States analyses all of the import entries for the relevant period of review (i.e., the prior 12 months) to determine the final amount of the antidumping duty payable on imports from the relevant producer or exporter. For those entries not covered by a request for an assessment review, USDOC instructs US Customs to assess anti-dumping duties at the cash deposit rate required upon entry.

7.103 In our view, there is no certainty that imports entering the United States following imposition of an anti-dumping order are in fact dumped. The determination of dumping made during the initial investigation underlying the anti-dumping order does not apply to these imports, since that determination was made on the basis of imports occurring during an earlier period of investigation. Rather, the final determination (of the existence and amount) of dumping is only made in respect of imports entering the United States following imposition of the anti-dumping order when an assessment review is undertaken. Until that time, it is not possible to state with certainty whether or not those imports are dumped. Indeed, the assessment review may demonstrate that those import entries were not dumped, such that no anti-dumping duties may be collected.

7.104 While there is no certainty that import entries subject to an anti-dumping order are dumped, there is a reasonable basis for suspecting that they might be. Such suspicion of dumping results from the finding of dumping made in respect of import entries of subject merchandise during the initial period of investigation, i.e., the finding of dumping that gave rise to the anti-dumping order. In our view, that suspicion of dumping may last until a final determination of dumping is made in the assessment review, whereupon both the existence and amount of dumping may be determined with precision.¹⁵⁰

7.105 Thailand asserts that there is no longer any suspicion of dumping once there is a determination of dumping giving rise to the imposition of an anti-dumping order. That determination, however, relates to imports during the period of investigation underlying the initial investigation. It does not relate to imports entering the United States after the anti-dumping order is imposed.¹⁵¹ Accordingly, the initial determination does not remove the suspicion of dumping in respect of those later imports. In fact, as noted above, that initial determination is actually the basis for the suspicion of dumping in respect of those later imports.

¹⁴⁹ As noted below at note 184, we do not consider that the mere possibility of dumping would be sufficient to justify reasonable security under the Ad Note.

¹⁵⁰ A new determination of dumping in an assessment review would, of course, give rise to a further suspicion of dumping. Even if the results of the first assessment review indicate that there was no dumping during the period under review, we consider it reasonable to continue to suspect – on the basis of the initial investigation underlying the anti-dumping order – that future imports may be dumped. This interpretation is consistent with, and indeed supported by, note 22 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

7.106 We note Thailand's argument that the above analysis fails to take into account that in many cases no assessment review is conducted.¹⁵² In those cases, Thailand asserts that, by automatic operation of law, the entries are liquidated at the margin of dumping in effect at the time of importation, i.e., the amount of the cash deposit of estimated duties. The United States asserts that Thailand's emphasis on "automatic assessment" in its response is misleading. The United States argues that in no case is assessment – whether at the cash deposit rate or otherwise – conducted at the time of entry, and in all cases the cash deposit collected at the time of entry is a baseline proxy of the amount that may ultimately be assessed, and is never itself the final liability. The United States assert that while, in some cases, the amount of the cash deposit happens to equal the amount of the final liability, it cannot be known at the time of entry whether this will be the case (since it cannot be known whether an interested party intends to request a review).

7.107 Irrespective of whether or not the final assessment in cases where no interested party requests a review may be deemed to be "automatic", there remains no means of knowing whether or not an assessment review will be conducted at the time that the import entry is made. This will only be known once either the assessment review is requested, or the deadline for requesting such review has passed without any such request having been made. Thus, even though imports may ultimately be liquidated at the cash deposit rate in the anti-dumping order, there remains the possibility that an assessment review may be requested, and that such review may indicate that those imports are not dumped (i.e., that no anti-dumping duties are to be assessed). At the time of entry, therefore, such imports may only be suspected of being dumped.

Contextual considerations regarding Articles 5.1 and 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement

7.108 Turning to broader contextual considerations regarding Articles 5.1 and 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, Thailand asserts that there is a fundamental difference between the determination in an original investigation of whether dumping exists – and thus is not merely "suspected" – and the determination in a retrospective assessment review of the amount of duties to be collected on particular entries. According to Thailand, this difference is reflected in the text of the ¹⁵¹ In support of its argument, Thailand refers to a number of provisions of US law. Thus, Thailand asserts that the US anti-dumping law uses the word "suspect" to refer to the period between a preliminary and final determination of dumping. According to Thailand, section 733(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides for a preliminary determination of "whether there is a reasonable basis to believe or suspect that the merchandise is being sold, or is likely to be sold, at less than fair value." Thailand asserts that, in contrast, section 735(a)(1) of the Tariff Act provides for a "final determination of whether the subject merchandise is being, or is likely to be, sold in the United States at less than fair value." Thailand argues that the USDOC's regulations similarly characterise the final determination of dumping investigation as one that "constitutes a final decision by the Secretary [of Commerce] as to whether dumping or countervailable subsidization is occurring." Thailand submits that under US law, therefore, dumping is only "suspected" during the period between the preliminary and final determinations of dumping. This dispute is governed by the covered agreements, not US law. Accordingly, our findings are based on the text of Article VI of the GATT 1994 (including the Ad Note), and the Anti-Dumping Agreement. This is consistent with the finding by the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV that "[t]he manner in which the municipal law of a WTO Member classifies an item cannot, in itself, be determinative of the interpretation of provisions of the WTO covered agreements." (Appellate Body Report, US – Softwood Lumber IV, paras. 56, 65; see also Appellate Body Report, US – Corrosion-Resistant Steel Sunset Review, para. 87 and note 87.) Since our findings are not based on the provisions of US law, we shall disregard Thailand's arguments in respect thereof.

¹⁵² See e.g. Thailand's Responses to Second Set of Panel Questions, paras. 34-39.

Anti-Dumping Agreement, with Article 5.1 referring to an investigation to determine the "existence ... of dumping", and Article 9.3.1 referring only to the "determination of the final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties." Thailand argues that the reference in Article 9.3.1 to the determination of final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties necessarily implies that there has previously been a determination that dumping (and injury) exist and that the imposition of anti-dumping duties is merited. Thailand argues that if dumping is merely "suspected" after the conclusion of the original investigation and until the final liability for duties on particular imports is determined, all US anti-dumping orders are inconsistent with the basic requirement of Article VI of the GATT 1994 and the Anti-Dumping Agreement that anti-dumping measures may only be imposed when imports are found to be dumped and to be causing, or threatening to cause, material injury to the domestic industry.

7.109 We note that the Appellate Body found in Mexico – Anti-Dumping Measures on Rice that "the conditions to impose [an anti-dumping duty] are to be assessed with respect to the current situation."¹⁵³ We understand this to mean that, according to the Appellate Body, the conditions for imposing anti-dumping duties, including the existence of dumping, must be established in respect of the "current situation" (at the time of imposition). There is no obligation on Members, at the time of imposition, to establish the existence of dumping prospectively, by reference to any future situation. Indeed, any such obligation would be impossible to fulfil. While Members applying a prospective system of anti-dumping duty collection may use their findings in respect of the period of investigation as a proxy for the period following imposition of a definitive anti-dumping measure, there is no obligation on Members to do so.¹⁵⁴ Indeed, Members applying a retrospective system of anti-dumping duty assessment (which is specifically contemplated in Article 9.3.1) choose not to do so. Accordingly, we see no basis to conclude that the United States, which applies a retrospective system, already determines the existence of dumping in respect of future import entries at the time that it imposes an anti-dumping order. The fact that Article 5.1 requires the United States to establish the existence of dumping at the time it imposes such order, does not mean that the United States is at the same time establishing the existence of dumping in respect of future import entries covered by that order.

7.110 Regarding Article 9.3.1, we note that this provision refers to "the determination of the final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties". In a retrospective system, this determination necessarily takes place after the relevant import entries have been made. In our view, part of the process of determining "final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties" is to determine whether or not those entries were dumped.¹⁵⁵ If they were not dumped, there is no "final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties". Conversely, if they were dumped, there is "final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties" (commensurate with the amount of dumping found to exist). Accordingly, we do not accept Thailand's argument that the reference in Article 9.3.1 to the determination of final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties necessarily implies that there has previously been a determination that dumping exists in respect of subsequent imports, and that the levying of anti-dumping duties is merited. Rather, it simply means that there is a case of suspected dumping, and that the levying of anti-dumping duties may be merited.

¹⁵³ Appellate Body Report, Mexico – Anti-Dumping Measures on Rice, para. 165. Although an investigating authority generally assesses the current situation on the basis of historical data pertaining to a past period of investigation, the panel found that such historical data "is being used to draw conclusions about the current situation" (Panel Report, Mexico – Anti-Dumping Measures on Rice, para. 7.58).

¹⁵⁴ Besides, the refund mechanism provided for in Article 9.3.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement is designed to ensure that Members applying a prospective duty assessment system do not collect anti-dumping duties in excess of the actual amount of dumping.

¹⁵⁵ Thailand asserts that, in an assessment review, the United States does not assess whether the export price for particular imports was below normal value to determine the amount of liability under Article 9.3.1. Instead, Thailand asserts that the United States makes overall determinations of assessment rates for importers/exporters based on all imports during the period covered by an administrative review, and establishes a single assessment rate for each importer/exporter. We need not examine the factual accuracy of this argument, since in any event it would not change the fact that the existence of dumping – whether for import entries individually, or for import entries overall – is established after those import entries are made. Until such time, the United States may reasonably (on the basis of the anti-dumping order) view those import entries as a "case of suspected dumping".

Contextual considerations regarding the WTO-conformity of cash deposits

7.111 A further contextual consideration arises from the United States' assertion that Thailand's arguments would mean that no security is permissible pending final assessment, including cash deposits. Thailand rejects this argument, asserting instead that the cash deposits required by the United States following the imposition of an anti-dumping order are definitive anti-dumping duties permissible under Article 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.¹⁵⁶ Thailand asserts that this is consistent with the view of the Appellate Body in US – Zeroing (Japan), where it held that "[a]t the time of importation, an administering authority may collect duties, in the form of a cash deposit, on all export sales ...".¹⁵⁷ The United States maintains that cash deposits are not duties within the meaning prescribed under Article 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, but instead are a "form of security" or "estimate of the amount of duties that will ultimately be owed on a given entry."¹⁵⁸ The United States also calls attention to the fact that Article 7.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement distinguishes cash deposits from duties by stating that "provisional measures may take the form of a provisional duty or, preferably, a security – by cash deposit or bond ...".¹⁵⁹

7.112 We consider that the US argument raises an extremely important consideration, for the ability to require security is an essential element of a retrospective assessment system (which is specifically contemplated by Article 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement). If security, including even cash deposits, may not be required pursuant to the Ad Note, we consider it important to establish what provision of the GATT 1994 or Anti-Dumping Agreement it may be required under. If security, including even cash deposits, may not be imposed under such other provisions, we consider that an interpretation of the Ad Note permitting such security would be further justified. Thus, even though we are not required to rule on whether or not cash deposits may be imposed pursuant to the Ad Note in order to resolve the dispute before us, this issue is an important contextual consideration to which we should have regard when interpreting the Ad Note.

7.113 As to the question of whether or not cash deposits may be justified under other provisions of the GATT 1994 or Anti-Dumping Agreement, Thailand argues that cash deposits are anti-dumping duties that may be imposed pursuant to Article 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. We are not persuaded by this argument, though, for the definition of the term "duty" is not broad enough to encompass cash deposits. In this regard, Thailand has relied on Black's Law Dictionary to define "duty" as "4. A tax imposed on a commodity or transaction, esp. on imports" (Black's Law Dictionary, 7th ed., B.A. Garner (ed.) (West Group, 1999), p. 523)(Black's).¹⁶⁰ Thailand has further asserted that the definition of the term "tax" is "A monetary charge imposed by the government on persons, entities, or property to yield public revenue" (Ibid., p.1469), and that the relevant definition of "charge" is "7. price, cost or expense" (Ibid., p.227).¹⁶¹ Thailand also distinguished duties from bonds in the following terms:

"A 'duty' involves a monetary expense to yield public revenue. A duty has an intrinsic value in itself and can yield public revenue without further transformation. In ¹⁵⁶ See Thailand's Responses to First Set of Panel Questions, paras. 29-30.

¹⁵⁷ Appellate Body Report, US – Zeroing (Japan), para. 156.

¹⁵⁸ United States' Responses to First Set of Panel Questions, para. 25.

¹⁵⁹ United States' second written submission, para. 16.

¹⁶⁰ See Thailand's first written submission, note 270.

¹⁶¹ Thailand's first written submission, note 218.

contrast, a 'bond' is a 'security' instrument reflecting a written promise to pay money if certain circumstances occur. Its value is not intrinsic to itself, but rather depends on the transformation of that bond into something of value through, for example, payment of the duties by the surety. Thus:

Securities differ from most other commodities in which people deal. They have no intrinsic value in themselves – they represent rights in something else. The value of a bond, note or other promise to pay depends on the financial condition of the promisor."¹⁶²

7.114 Thailand therefore distinguishes duties from bonds on the basis of whether or not those instruments have intrinsic value in and of themselves. In our view, the notion of intrinsic value provides an equally valid basis for distinguishing duties from cash deposits. Just as security in the form of a bond is without intrinsic value, so too is security in the form of a cash deposit. Although cash may have intrinsic value, a cash deposit, on the other hand, is not liquidated revenue and is not a payment to yield public revenue at the time it is provided, but rather, is provided as a form of security like a bond. Based on the distinctions drawn above, a cash deposit will not yield public revenue until some point in the future. In the context of the US retrospective assessment system, that point comes when – and only when – either duties are assessed pursuant to an assessment review, or the cash deposits are liquidated once the deadline for requesting an assessment review has expired (without any assessment review having been requested).¹⁶³ Until that point, a cash deposit has no intrinsic value in and of itself.

7.115 Furthermore, we note that Article 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement refers to circumstances "[w]hen the amount of the anti-dumping duty is assessed on a retrospective basis". If the cash deposit applied in a retrospective system were a duty, it would make no sense to talk of the amount of the duty being assessed on a retrospective basis, as the amount of the cash deposit, which Thailand refers to as a "duty", is fixed prospectively.

7.116 In addition, we observe that Article 9.3 provides that the amount of the anti-dumping duty "shall not exceed the margin of dumping as established under Article 2". The Appellate Body has confirmed that the margin of dumping established in an assessment review is a margin of dumping "as established under Article 2".¹⁶⁴ This is also consistent with note 22 to the Anti-Dumping Agreement, which applies "when the amount of the anti-dumping duty is assessed on a retrospective basis", and which envisages definitive duties being levied pursuant to "assessment proceeding[s]". Since note 22 accepts that amounts of anti-dumping duties, which (according to Article 9.3) must not exceed the margin of dumping established under Article 2, may be assessed pursuant to assessment proceedings, necessarily note 22 also accepts that the margins of dumping established in assessment proceedings are margins of dumping "established under Article 2". Accordingly, and consistent with Article 9.3, the margin of dumping in the assessment review operates as a ceiling for the amount of anti-dumping duty. If the cash deposit were an anti-dumping duty, and the cash deposit were in excess of the margin of dumping established subsequently in the assessment review, the imposition of that cash deposit would violate Article 9.3. This cannot be a correct interpretation, though, for under this interpretation it would be impossible for a Member requiring cash deposits to know, at the time of application, whether or not it was acting in conformity with Article 9.3.

¹⁶² Thailand's first written submission, para. 204. (emphasis added)

¹⁶³ Thailand asserts that the United States' anti-dumping regulations expressly recognize that cash deposits are estimated duties that differ from a security in that "upon the issuance of an order [i.e. following a final determination of dumping], importers no longer may post bonds as security for antidumping or countervailing duties, but instead must make a cash deposit of estimated duties" (19 CFR § 351.211(a)). Thailand also notes that the US Tariff Act provides that following final determinations of dumping and injury, the USDOC must publish an anti-dumping order that "requires the deposit of estimated anti-dumping duties pending liquidation of entries of merchandise at the same time as estimated normal customs duties on that merchandise are deposited" (Section 736(a)(3) of the Tariff Act, 19 USC § 1673e(a)(3)). According to Thailand, cash deposits of estimated anti-dumping duties are themselves duties. We have already indicated that we shall resolve this dispute on the basis of the provisions of the covered agreements, rather than the provisions of US law. That being said, by definition a security for estimated duties is not a duty per se. A security for estimated duties is merely a security for duties that may possibly be collectible in the future. There is no duty in the absence of any such future collection.

¹⁶⁴ In US – Zeroing (EC) (para. 130) the Appellate Body stated that "the margin of dumping established for an exporter or foreign producer operates as a ceiling for the total amount of anti-dumping duties that can be levied on the entries of the subject product (from that exporter) covered by the duty assessment proceeding." In the context of that case (starting with the Appellate Body's reference to the need to establish a margin of dumping (under Article 2) for the product as a whole, and for each exporter or foreign producer (see paras 127-129)) it is clear to us that the Appellate Body was referring to the margin of dumping established in an assessment review as a margin of dumping "established under Article 2".

7.117 We recall Thailand's reliance on the statement by the Appellate Body in US – Zeroing (Japan) that "[a]t the time of importation, an administering authority may collect duties, in the form of a cash deposit, on all export sales..."¹⁶⁵ However, in that case the Appellate Body was not addressing, and did not need to address, the issue of whether or not cash deposits constitute duties. The Appellate Body's statement therefore constitutes obiter dictum in the discussion of a different issue, which we do not feel compelled to treat as authoritative guidance on the issue before us here. Furthermore, in its earlier Report on US – Zeroing (EC), the Appellate Body included dicta to the effect that, under the US retrospective duty assessment system, "the United States collects security in the form of a cash deposit at the time a product enters the United States, and determines the amount of duty due on the entry at a later date."¹⁶⁶ This suggests that in that earlier case the Appellate Body treated cash deposits as a form of security for duties to be collected later, rather than as duties per se. Thus, even if we were required to follow Appellate Body dicta, it is unclear exactly how this dicta should be interpreted.

7.118 In addition, we observe that Article 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement refers to "refund[s]" to be made in the context of retrospective assessment systems. Article 9.3.1 does not stipulate what precisely must be refunded. Article 9.3.2, by contrast, which applies in the context of prospective assessment systems, refers to "refund[s] ... of any ... duty paid". Unlike Article 9.3.2, therefore, Article 9.3.1 does not characterize what is being refunded as a "duty", even though (as acknowledged by Thailand¹⁶⁷) Article 9.3.1 is the mechanism by which cash deposits are refunded. If cash deposits were duties, there would have been no need to use different language in Articles 9.3.1 and 9.3.2.

7.119 As further contextual support for our view that cash deposits required following imposition of an anti-dumping order are not anti-dumping duties, we note that Article 7.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, regarding provisional measures, draws a clear distinction between a (provisional) "duty" and a "cash deposit". Thailand's argument that cash deposits are duties is therefore at odds with the plain language of Article 7.2.

7.120 Thailand submits that a failure to treat the application of cash deposits as the levying of anti-dumping duties would restrict the right of Members to bring dispute settlement proceedings under Article 17.4 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, which provides that a Member may refer a matter to the Dispute Settlement Body only "if final action has been taken by the administering authorities of the importing Member to levy definitive anti-dumping duties or to accept price undertakings ..." ¹⁶⁸

¹⁶⁵ Appellate Body Report, US – Zeroing (Japan), para. 156.

¹⁶⁶ Appellate Body Report, US – Zeroing (EC), para. 109.

¹⁶⁷ See e.g. Thailand's second written submission, para. 39.

¹⁶⁸ Article 17.4 also provides that "a provisional measure" can be referred to the DSB when considered to be taken contrary to Article 7.1.

Thailand suggests that if definitive anti-dumping duties are only levied pursuant to a final assessment of duties in an administrative review, a US anti-dumping order could not be challenged in WTO dispute settlement proceedings until after that final assessment has taken place (rather than when cash deposits are applied pursuant to the anti-dumping order).

7.121 We do not share Thailand's concerns, though, since Article 17.4 refers to "final action ... by the administering authorities ... to levy definitive anti-dumping duties". Thus, Article 17.4 does not state that definitive anti-dumping duties must have been levied. Rather, Article 17.4 merely requires that final action to levy definitive anti-dumping duties must have been taken. In this context, the word "to" should in our view be interpreted adverbially, to express purpose.¹⁶⁹ Accordingly, the imposition of an anti-dumping order by the United States constitutes "final action ... to levy of definitive anti-dumping duties" (emphasis added), in the sense that the order puts in place a mechanism providing for the levying of definitive anti-dumping duties (even though the amount of those duties – if any – is not calculated until some time in the future). If the drafters of Article 17.4 had meant that Members should wait until definitive anti-dumping duties were actually levied before initiating dispute settlement proceedings, the relevant phrase in Article 17.4 would have read "if definitive anti-dumping duties have been levied, or price undertakings accepted".

7.122 Accordingly, we are not persuaded by Thailand's argument that cash deposits may be imposed pursuant to Article 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement (as anti-dumping duties).¹⁷⁰ Nor has Thailand advanced any other basis for Members to require security in the form of cash deposits. We recall, though, that we consider that the ability of Members to require security such as cash deposits pending final assessment is an essential requirement for the operation of a retrospective assessment system. Such contextual considerations support our interpretation of the ordinary meaning of the Ad Note as permitting such security.

Negotiating history

7.123 Thailand also submits that the negotiating history of the Ad Note and Article VI makes clear that the reference in the Ad Note to "suspected dumping" referred to the period "before anti-dumping duties are actually brought into operation."¹⁷¹ Thailand refers in this regard to the 1959 Report of the Group of Experts on Anti-dumping and Countervailing Duties, wherein "[t]he Group agreed that it was desirable that such provisional measures should not be of retroactive application and that they should preferably take the form of bond or cash deposits as mentioned in Interpretative Note 1 to paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article VI."¹⁷² According to Thailand, the Ad Note was, in effect, superseded by the adoption of Article 10 of the 1967 Agreement on Implementation of Article VI, the forerunner of Article 7 of the current Anti-Dumping Agreement, which provided a more comprehensive regulation of the use of provisional measures.

¹⁶⁹ The New Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, L. Brown (ed.) (Clarendon Press, 1993), Vol II, provides that, when used with an infinitive in adverbial relation, the word "to" "indicat[es] a specified purpose, use, function, or intention".

¹⁷⁰ Thailand also asserts that, when it established the current retrospective system, the United States Congress expressly described the function of cash deposits of estimated duties not as to secure potential increases in liability, but rather as to reduce the damage which delayed assessment may cause a domestic industry. According to Thailand, therefore, the Congress considered these payments of estimated duties to fill the same function as anti-dumping measures of remedying injury to a domestic industry. Thailand asserts that cash deposits should, therefore, be governed by Article 9. Consistent with our mandate, our findings are based on a thorough consideration of the relevant covered agreements. We decline to depart from those findings on the basis of statements allegedly made by the United States Congress.

¹⁷¹ See UN Conference on Trade and Employment, Third Committee: Commercial Policy, Report of the Working Party to Sub-Committee C, 22 January 1948, E/CONF.2/C.3/C/18, paras. 3(vii); 9 and 10.

¹⁷² Thailand refers in this regard to the 1959 Report of the Group of Experts on Anti-dumping and Countervailing Duties, L/978, para. 19 (BISD 8S 151).

7.124 The United States rejects Thailand's reliance on negotiating history, arguing that neither Article 7 nor the concept of "provisional measures" existed at the time the Ad Note was negotiated. The United States asserts that the Group of Experts relied on by Thailand stated explicitly that "Article VI made no mention of them [provisional measures]".

7.125 Thailand's argument regarding negotiating history refers to a single paragraph in the 1959 Report of the Group of Experts on Anti-Dumping and Countervailing Duties entitled "Provisional anti-dumping measures". That paragraph provides:

"19. The Group discussed the question of provisional anti-dumping measures. It was recognized that in certain circumstances the use of such measures might be justified in order to limit the material injury to a domestic industry, even though it was noted that Article VI made no mention of them. On the other hand, it was generally felt that provisional measures should be used sparingly and for the shortest possible time in order to interfere as little as possible with normal trade and in order that they should not assume a protectionist character. For this reason, any such measures should preferably be introduced after the responsible administration of the importing country had carried out an initial confidential investigation that revealed that there was a serious case to consider further. Moreover, where possible, the provisional measures should not lead to a situation in which either the exporter or the importer of the product under investigation would suffer if the eventual decision were not to impose an anti-dumping duty. The Group agreed that it was desirable that such provisional measures should not be of retroactive application and that they should preferably take the form of bond or cash deposits as mentioned in Interpretative Note 1 to paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article VI. Furthermore, they should be based on provisions which would, as far as possible, permit the importer to determine the maximum duty which could be assessed."

7.126 In the second sentence of the above extract from their Report, therefore, the Group of Experts "noted that Article VI made no mention of [provisional measures]". Since the Ad Note was introduced into the GATT 1947 in 1948,¹⁷³ and was therefore an integral part of Article VI of the GATT 1947 at the time that the Group of Experts issued its Report, this statement by the Group of Experts is therefore fundamentally at odds with Thailand's argument that the Ad Note is expressly limited to provisional measures taken prior to a final determination of dumping.

7.127 Regarding Thailand's argument that the 1948 Report of the Working Party that actually adopted the Ad Note understood the term "suspected dumping" to refer to the period "before anti-dumping duties are actually brought into operation", we note that the language cited by Thailand actually arises in paragraph 10 of that Report, which concerns a proposal (item (viii)) from the Netherlands regarding the inclusion of a consultation mechanism. The language is not used in respect of Brazil's proposal (item (vii)) regarding the inclusion of the Ad Note. In particular, the Report reads:

"10. Item (viii)

In connection with the new paragraph proposed by him in the paper submitted to the Sub-Committee on 9 January the representative of the Netherlands pointed out that the proposal was intended to:

¹⁷³ The Ad Note to Article VI was included in Article 34 of the Havana Charter and was incorporated into the GATT in conjunction with the rest of Article 34 in 1948 (see Report of Working Party No. 3 on Modifications to the General Agreement, GATT/CP.2/22/Rev.1 (30 Aug. 1948)).

(a) provide facilities for consultation between Members in cases of suspected dumping before anti-dumping duties are actually brought into operation."

7.128 Since the language of the Report relied on by Thailand did not relate to the Ad Note, its relevance in the present dispute is questionable. In addition, it is by no means clear that the phrase "before anti-dumping duties are actually brought into action" necessarily refers to the period prior to the imposition of an anti-dumping order, since it might equally refer to the period prior to assessment of the anti-dumping duties. Furthermore, that language is in any event not sufficient to contradict the very clear statement of the abovementioned Group of Experts.

7.129 We are considering the relevant negotiating history because Thailand referred to it in support of its claim under Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. We are not referring to the negotiating history pursuant to Article 32 of the Vienna Convention, i.e., because we find that our interpretation of the relevant provisions "leaves the meaning ambiguous or obscure; or leads to a result which is manifestly absurd or unreasonable." Nor are we referring to the negotiating history because we find it determinative of the issues before us. However, if the Ad Note was not introduced to provide for reasonable security in the form of provisional measures, one might legitimately ask what it introduced for. Since the United States appears to have been applying a form of retrospective assessment system at the time the Ad Note was introduced,¹⁷⁴ one might reasonably speculate that the Ad Note may have been intended to provide for reasonable security for definitive anti-dumping duties, pending final assessment.

7.130 In light of the above, we find that the application of the EBR falls within the temporal scope of the Ad Note, in the sense that the Ad Note authorizes the imposition of security requirements during the period following the imposition of a US anti-dumping order.

(iii) The combined use of bonds and cash deposits

7.131 We recall that the EBR was applied in conjunction with cash deposits, in the sense that importers had to provide both enhanced bonds and cash deposits covering the same subject import entries. We next consider whether the Ad Note allows the imposition of security requirements combining both cash deposits and bonds, or whether the Ad Note requires Members to choose between either (i) cash deposits or (ii) bonds.

7.132 Thailand asserts that the word "or" in the phrase "cash deposit or bond" in the Ad Note can only be read in the exclusive sense rather than the inclusive sense, so that only a single security in the form of either (i) a cash deposit or (ii) a bond may be applied. Thailand further argues that the question of whether a measure is "reasonable" within the meaning of the Ad Note cannot be resolved simply by reference to the amount of the security. According to Thailand, the manner in which any security is imposed must also be "reasonable". Thailand submits that by mandating that security required specifically for the collection of anti-dumping duties should take the form of either a bond or a cash deposit, the drafters of the Ad Note sought to limit the burdens placed on importers by ensuring that importers would not be required to provide specific anti-dumping security in two different forms at the same time.

¹⁷⁴ The parties disagree on whether or not the United States was applying a retrospective assessment system at the time the Ad Note was introduced into the GATT 1947. The United States claims that it was, whereas Thailand claims that it was not. Since this issue is not central to our findings, there is little to be gained in seeking to resolve this issue definitively. We note, though, that even Thailand acknowledges that there may have been cases (outside of the "normal" situation) in which the United States was required to assess anti-dumping after the time of entry of goods (see Thailand's comments on the United States' reply to Question 15 from the Panel at the second substantive meeting, para. 12). The United States must necessarily have applied some form of retrospective assessment in respect of such cases.

7.133 The United States submits that nothing in the text or context supports this reading of the term. According to the United States, the phrase "bond or cash deposit" is a parenthetical that appears after the term "reasonable security" and that term provides relevant context for interpretation. The United States asserts that Thailand fails to explain how requiring two types of security instead of one is relevant to determining what constitutes "reasonable security". The United States also argues that Thailand fails to explain why the Agreement should be read to proscribe Customs from, for example, replacing a portion of the existing cash deposit requirement with a bond requirement. The United States argues that the Appellate Body has interpreted other uses of "or" in the WTO Agreements as covering one or the other item, as well as both items, in a phrase. The United States notes that, in its report in US – FSC (Article 21.5 – EC II), the Appellate Body interpreted Article 21.5 of the DSU in this manner. Article 21.5 states:

"Where there is disagreement as to the existence or consistency with a covered agreement of measures taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings such dispute shall be decided through recourse to these dispute settlement procedures, including wherever possible resort to the original panel."¹⁷⁵

7.134 The United States argues that the Appellate Body interpreted this provision to mean that "an Article 21.5 panel may be called upon to examine either the 'existence' of 'measures taken to comply' with DSB recommendations and rulings, or, when such measures exist, the 'consistency' of those measures with the covered agreements, or a combination of both, in situations where the measures taken to comply, through omissions or otherwise, may achieve only partial compliance."¹⁷⁶ The United States submits that, like the language interpreted by the Appellate Body in US – FSC (Article 21.5 – EC II), based on the text and context, the "or" in the Ad Note encompasses a cash deposit, a bond, or a combination of both.

7.135 We agree with Thailand's argument that the reasonableness of the security is to be assessed by reference to both the form and the amount thereof. In terms of form, the purpose of the phrase "(cash deposit or bond)" in the Ad Note is to clarify that both cash deposits and bonds constitute reasonable forms of security. Since that is the case, we see nothing in the text of the Ad Note to suggest that the combination of both (otherwise reasonable) forms of security necessarily results in a measure that is unreasonable. In particular, the text of the Ad Note does not provide that the form of security will only be reasonable if either (i) cash deposits or (ii) bonds are required.

7.136 We consider that an interpretation of the word "or" to permit the combined use of bonds and cash deposits is consistent with the Appellate Body's interpretation of the word "or" in US – FSC (Article 21.5 – EC II). In that case, the Appellate Body found¹⁷⁷ that the word "or" in respect of the phrase "existence or consistency" in Article 21.5 of the DSU should be interpreted to permit Article 21.5 proceedings addressing both the "existence" and the "consistency" of implementation measures, not only one or the other. Since the Appellate Body was interpreting a similar use of the word "or" in US – FSC (Article 21.5 – EC II), the Appellate Body's findings regarding that matter offer useful guidance that we consider it appropriate to follow in these proceedings.

7.137 In light of the above, we find that the application of the EBR is consistent with the temporal scope of the Ad Note, and that the United States is entitled to impose security requirements combining both cash deposits and bonds. The final substantive issue for us to examine is whether or not the security requirements established by the EBR in this case were "reasonable" in the meaning of the Ad Note.

¹⁷⁵ Article 21.5 of the DSU (emphasis added).

¹⁷⁶ Appellate Body Report, US – FSC (Article 21.5 – EC II), para. 60 (emphasis added).

¹⁷⁷ Appellate Body Report, US – FSC (Article 21.5 – EC II), para. 60.

(iv) Whether the application of the EBR resulted in "reasonable" security requirements

7.138 The Ad Note only permits the imposition of "reasonable" security requirements. Thus, the application of the EBR may only be found to be in accordance with the Ad Note to the extent that it provides for "reasonable" security. The United States asserts that the application of the EBR provided for reasonable security, whereas Thailand contends that the resultant security requirements were not reasonable. As noted in the preceding section, the reasonableness of the security is to be assessed by reference to both the form and the amount thereof. Having already dealt with Thailand's claim regarding the form of the security required by the United States, in this section we consider the reasonableness of the amount thereof.

7.139 The United States submits that the ordinary meaning of the term "reasonable" is "in accordance with reason; not irrational or absurd."¹⁷⁸ The United States further asserts that, with respect to amounts, "reasonable" is additionally defined as "[w]ithin the limits of reason; not greatly less or more than might be thought likely or appropriate."¹⁷⁹ We consider it appropriate to consider the meaning of the term "reasonable" in light of this definition.¹⁸⁰ We believe it equally important, though, to consider the context in which the term "reasonable" is used. In particular, since the Ad Note only permits security in a given "case of suspected dumping", the reasonableness of that security should be assessed in light of the circumstances of that case of suspected dumping.

7.140 In this regard, we recall that the EBR is applied in conjunction with cash deposits. While the cash deposits are designed to secure the duty liability established as a result of the anti-dumping order (or most recent assessment review), the EBR is applied to secure against liability resulting from increases in the rate of dumping over and above that established in the order (or most recent assessment review).¹⁸¹ Since the amount of cash deposits is limited to the rate of dumping established in the anti-dumping order (or most recent assessment review), such security corresponds to the given case of suspected dumping, and is therefore in principle "reasonable" within the meaning of the Ad Note. The same reasoning does not cover the application of the EBR, however, since the application of the EBR increases the level of security beyond the dumping liability established as a result of the anti-dumping order. By virtue of the reasonableness requirement in the Ad Note, such increased security would only be permitted if there were some other basis which renders it reasonable in a particular case.

7.141 In light of the abovementioned dictionary definition (whereby reasonableness may be defined as "not irrational or absurd" and, with respect to amounts, as "not greatly less or more than might be thought likely or appropriate"), we consider that there would only be an appropriate basis for such increased security if a Member properly determined that the rates of dumping provided for in the anti-dumping order were likely to increase (such that the cash deposits provided for in the anti-dumping order would not provide sufficient security for the relevant case of suspected dumping).¹⁸² The

¹⁷⁸ The United States refers to the New Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, p. 2496.

¹⁷⁹ The United States refers to the New Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, p. 2496.

¹⁸⁰ We note that Thailand has not challenged the definition proposed by the United States.

¹⁸¹ Thailand has not argued that the United States would not be entitled to collect duties in respect of any amount by which the rate of dumping established in an assessment review exceeds the cash deposits made in respect of the relevant import entries.

¹⁸² Both parties argue that the reasonableness of the application of the EBR should be assessed in light of the likelihood of increases in the rates of dumping. See e.g. United States' Responses to First Set of Panel Questions, para. 51, and para. 68 of Thailand's second written submission. We acknowledge that rates of dumping may increase, and that the United States would be entitled to collect anti-dumping duties commensurate with the full amount of dumping. In our view, though, it would not be reasonable to require additional security simply because of the possibility of rates of dumping increasing. (Otherwise, since rates may also possibly decrease, one could argue that a reduction in security would be equally reasonable.) The possibility of rates increasing beyond a reasonable level of security, and importers defaulting on that excess, is a Member would also need to determine the likely amount of such increase, in order to ensure that the amount of the additional security requirement is not greatly more than the amount by which the final dumping liability would likely exceed the dumping liability established as a result of the anti-dumping order. Only then could that Member demonstrate that the additional security properly and reasonably relates to an established case of suspected dumping, consistent with the requirements of the Ad Note. Without this type of analysis, the rate in the anti-dumping order remains "the best and only available baseline proxy of duties that ultimately may be assessed",¹⁸³ and therefore the best estimate of suspected dumping for which security may be required pursuant to the Ad Note. Security exceeding this estimate would not be "reasonable" in the meaning of the Ad Note.

7.142 We shall therefore examine whether the United States properly determined that the rate of dumping envisaged in the anti-dumping order would likely increase. If we find that it did, we shall then examine whether the United States properly established the likely amount of such increase.¹⁸⁴

7.143 The United States asserts that "[t]o analyse the likelihood of potential increases, US Customs used historical data on increases in the antidumping rate".¹⁸⁵ In this regard, the United States refers to note 28 to para. 26 of its first written submission, where it is stated that "CBP's analysis at the time indicated that with respect to agriculture/aquaculture cases, rates increased 33 per cent of the time, did not change 11 per cent of the time, and decreased 56 per cent of the time".

7.144 We note that the United States has not submitted any documentary evidence in support of its assertion that anti-dumping rates increased 33 per cent of the time. It is, therefore, impossible to assess the rigour of the United States' analysis. In particular, it is impossible to verify how the United States treated cases where the rate may have increased as a result of error on the part of Customs, or error or fraud on the part of other parties.^{186 187} In our view, apparent rate increases resulting from error or fraud should not be confused with genuine increases in exporters' actual rates of dumping.

risk inherent in the retrospective system. The Ad Note does not allow Members to seek to eliminate that risk through the application of unreasonably excessive security requirements.

¹⁸³ See United States' first written submission, para. 37.

¹⁸⁴ The United States also argues that the application of the EBR is reasonable because, in addition to the likelihood of anti-dumping rates increasing, it also reflects the amount of potential liability in the event of default and the likelihood of default (see para. United States' second written submission, para. 24). Both parties submitted argumentation regarding the US assessment of the risk of shrimp importers defaulting on anti-dumping duties in excess of the cash deposits. If the United States had properly established the likelihood of rates increasing, and the amount of likely increase, we consider that the United States would have been able to introduce additional security requirements up to that amount. In the context of the application of the EBR, there is no additional obligation under the Ad Note to assess the risk of default of individual importers. By virtue of the Ad Note, security may be imposed once a case of suspected dumping is established, such that anti-dumping duties may be payable. There is nothing in the Ad Note to suggest that security may only be required if it is further established that importers would not otherwise pay the relevant anti-dumping duties. It is the case of suspected dumping that triggers the right to impose security requirements under the Ad Note, not the risk of default of individual importers. (If this were not the case, the United States would be required to assess the risk of individual importers defaulting before imposing cash deposits.) Although the risk of default does not provide a basis for requiring security under the Ad Note, we see no reason why a member could not choose to only impose security requirements otherwise authorized under the Ad Note in respect of importers with a greater risk of default.

¹⁸⁵ See United States' Responses to First Set of Panel Questions, para. 36.

¹⁸⁶ See e.g. Exhibit THA-6, bottom of page 10.

¹⁸⁷ Thailand argues extensively that the major proportion of uncollected anti-dumping duties concerned imports covered by the anti-dumping order on crawfish, and that such uncollected anti-dumping duties resulted from the special circumstances of that case. We do not consider it necessary to review those arguments, though, since at this juncture we are addressing US evidence regarding cases in which the rates of dumping increased, rather than cases resulting in uncollected anti-dumping duties more generally. As illustrated at page 8 of Exhibit

7.145 Leaving aside the lack of supporting documentary evidence, we are in any event not persuaded that an objective and impartial investigating authority could properly conclude that rates of dumping for subject shrimp were likely to increase on the basis of a finding that, historically, rates only increased in one third of agriculture/aquaculture cases generally.¹⁸⁸ Furthermore, the United States has provided no explanation as to how any alleged historical trend in respect of dumping rates for agriculture/aquaculture cases generally might justify conclusions regarding the likelihood of dumping rates for subject shrimp specifically. In addition, we recall that the EBR is applied on all imports of subject shrimp. A finding that, historically, rates have increased 33 per cent of the time in respect of agriculture/aquaculture cases generally is not sufficient, in our view, to demonstrate that all rates for subject shrimp (in respect of all imports, from all sources) are likely to increase.

7.146 The United States seeks to support its conclusion that rates of dumping would likely increase by asserting that "USDOC's preliminary results from the first administrative review of the antidumping order with respect to shrimp indicate that several Thai companies that had been making cash deposits at the 6% rate established in the investigation may be subject to an assessment rate in excess of 57%."¹⁸⁹ Thailand retorts that USDOC's preliminary results from the first administrative review of the anti-dumping order with respect to shrimp actually indicate that "[f]or 17 out of the 18 exporters for whom actual margins (rather than punitive facts-available margins) were determined, the assessment rates were actually lower than the cash deposit rates. In other words, for 94 per cent of exporters for whom actual margins were calculated, the "unsecured liability" that the United States refers to did not even arise."¹⁹⁰ Thailand also asserts that, even including exporters for whom actual margins were not determined, assessment rates increased for only eight exporters. According to Thailand, Thai "export statistics indicate that exporters whose assessment rates increased accounted for only 1.92 per cent of the value of trade for the period covered by the administrative review."¹⁹¹ Thai asserts that rates of dumping have therefore declined or remained the same for approximately 98 per cent of the value of entries of Thai shrimp.¹⁹²

7.147 In principle, we do not consider that the preliminary results of the first administrative review of the shrimp anti-dumping order are relevant to a determination of whether or not an objective and impartial investigating authority could properly have found, at the time that the EBR was imposed on shrimp, that rates of dumping by shrimp exporters were likely to increase. We therefore decline to base our findings on such ex post rationalization. Even if such analysis were relevant, though, it would not favour the position of the United States, for Thailand has demonstrated – and the United

THA-6, not all uncollected anti-dumping duties in the crawfish case resulted from increased rates of dumping. Scenario 1, e.g. which concerns the majority of the unpaid crawfish duties, concerned the problem of importers from new shippers being allowed to post single entry bonds, rather than cash deposits, and then defaulting on those bonds (with CBP not able to collect from the surety because the latter had gone bankrupt). Furthermore, Exhibit US – 10 suggests that the United States had evidence of rate increases extending beyond the crawfish case (the United States claims that it had evidence of rate increases in respect of 13 antidumping cases involving 340 exporter/producers; see United States' Responses to Second Set of Panel Questions, note 46; see also the Amendment, which although it refers explicitly to the crawfish case, also states that "[r]ecent antidumping cases for agriculture/aquaculture merchandise have also resulted in considerable rate increases"). Given the broad nature of this evidence, there is no basis to query such evidence by reference to the allegedly special circumstances of a single case.

¹⁸⁸ See United States' first written submission, para. 26.

¹⁸⁹ See United States' first written submission, para. 26.

¹⁹⁰ See Thailand's oral statement at the first substantive meeting, para. 66.

¹⁹¹ See Thailand's Responses to First Set of Panel Questions, para. 112. In response to Question 50 from the Panel, Thailand also suggested (at para. 119) that "the CBP may have improperly limited its analysis to cases in which administrative reviews were conducted" (emphasis added). Since Thailand did not confirm the factual basis for this argument in its subsequent submissions to the Panel, we shall not consider this argument further.

¹⁹² See Thailand's second written submission, para. 69.

States has not disputed – that rates only increased for a very small proportion of shrimp imports from Thailand.

7.148 For these reasons, we do not consider that an objective and impartial investigating authority could properly have found, on the basis of the evidence relied on by the United States at the relevant time, that the rates of dumping established in the shrimp order were likely to increase.

7.149 In light of our conclusion in the preceding sub-section, we see no need to consider whether or not the United States properly determined the amount by which rates of dumping were likely to increase.

(d) Summary

7.150 As a result of our finding that the United States failed to properly establish that the rates of dumping provided for in the anti-dumping order were likely to increase, we find that the United States failed to demonstrate that the additional security required through the application of the EBR reasonably correlated to any case of suspected dumping in excess of the margin of dumping provided for in the anti-dumping order. Accordingly, we conclude that the additional security requirements resulting from the application of the EBR were not "reasonable" within the meaning of the Ad Note.

(i) Finding on whether or not the application of the EBR was "in accordance with" the Ad Note

7.151 In light of our finding that the application of the EBR was not "reasonable" within the meaning of the Ad Note, we further find that the application of the EBR was not "in accordance with the provisions of the GATT 1994, as interpreted by" the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

5. Conclusion in respect of Thailand's Article 18.1 claim

7.152 Since we have found that the application of the EBR constitutes "specific action against dumping" that is not "in accordance with the provisions of the GATT 1994, as interpreted by" the Anti-Dumping Agreement, we conclude that the application of the EBR is inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

6. Other claims by Thailand

(a) Articles 7 and 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, Article VI:2 of the GATT 1994, and the Ad Note

7.153 Thailand has made separate claims that the EBR is inconsistent with the provisions of Articles 7.1, 7.2, 7.4 and 7.5 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement; Articles 9.1, 9.2 and 9.3 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement; Article VI:2 of the GATT 1994; and the Ad Note. In note 266 to its first written submission, Thailand has explained that "these claims are subsidiary and alternative to Thailand's Article 18.1 claim and, to the extent that the Panel finds in Thailand's favour on the Article 18.1 claim, the Panel need not further address Thailand's separate claims" under the abovementioned provisions.

7.154 In light of Thailand's characterisation of these additional claims as "subsidiary and alternative" to its claim under Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, and in view of our finding in respect of Thailand's Article 18.1 claim, we do not consider it necessary to address Thailand's claims under Articles 7 and 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, Article VI:2 of the GATT 1994, and the Ad Note.

(b) Articles I:1, II:1(a), II:1(b), X:3(a) and XI:1 of the GATT 1994.

7.155 Thailand has made additional claims under Articles XI:1 and, alternatively, Article II:1(a) and the first and second sentences of Article II:1(b), of the GATT 1994; and Articles X:3(a) and I of the GATT 1994. However, unlike its alternative claims under Articles 7 and 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, and Article VI of the GATT 1994 and its Ad Note, Thailand has requested that the Panel address its claims regarding the consistency of the EBR with Articles XI, II, X:3(a), and I of the GATT 1994 even if it were to find a violation of its main claim under Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. In Thailand's view, the Panel should make findings "to assist the DSB in making recommendations or rulings aimed at achieving a satisfactory settlement of the matter and to ensure that on appeal the Appellate Body can, if necessary, fully address those claims or, at a minimum, complete any necessary analysis to rule on those claims".¹⁹³

7.156 The Panel, after careful consideration, on the basis of judicial economy, refrains from ruling on Thailand's claims under Articles XI, II, X:3(a), and I of the GATT 1994. The Panel recalls that the principle of judicial economy is recognized in WTO law. The Appellate Body has consistently ruled that panels are not required to address all the claims made by a complaining party. In fact, a panel has discretion to determine which claims it must address in order to resolve the dispute between the parties, provided that those claims are within its terms of reference.¹⁹⁴ The Appellate Body has relied on the explicit aim of the dispute settlement mechanism, which is to secure a positive solution to a dispute, as provided in Article 3.7 of the DSU or a satisfactory settlement of the matter as per Article 3.4 of the DSU. The Appellate Body has stressed that the basic aim of dispute settlement in the WTO is to settle disputes and not to "make law" by clarifying existing provisions of the WTO Agreement that fall outside the context of resolving a particular dispute:

"[G]iven the explicit aim of dispute settlement that permeates the DSU, we do not consider that Article 3.2 of the DSU is meant to encourage either panels or the Appellate Body to 'make law' by clarifying existing provisions of the WTO Agreement outside the context of resolving a particular dispute. A panel need only address those claims which must be addressed in order to resolve the matter in issue in the dispute."^{195,196}

7.157 We bear in mind that, in Australia – Salmon, the Appellate Body cautioned panels against false judicial economy arguing that the right to exercise judicial economy could not be exercised where only a partial resolution of a dispute would result:

"The principle of judicial economy has to be applied keeping in mind the aim of the dispute settlement system. This aim is to resolve the matter at issue and 'to secure a positive solution to a dispute'. To provide only a partial resolution of the matter at issue would be false judicial economy. A panel has to address those claims on which a finding is necessary in order to enable the DSB to make sufficiently precise recommendations and rulings so as to allow for prompt compliance by a Member with those recommendations and rulings 'in order to ensure effective resolution of disputes to the benefit of all Members.'"¹⁹⁷

¹⁹³ Thailand's first written submission, para. 289.

¹⁹⁴ Appellate Body Report, India – Patents (US), para. 87.

¹⁹⁵ (footnote original) The "matter in issue" is the "matter referred to the DSB" pursuant to Article 7 of the DSU.

¹⁹⁶ Appellate Body Report, US – Wool Shirts and Blouses, DSR 1997:I, 323 at 340. See also Panel Report, US – Steel Safeguards, para. 10.701.

¹⁹⁷ Appellate Body Report, Australia – Salmon, para. 223. See also Panel Report, EC – Sardines, paras. 7.148-7.152; Panel Report, US – Steel Safeguards, para. 10.703.

7.158 The Panel believes that this is not the case in the current proceedings. In making findings under Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and the Ad Note, the Panel believes that it has effectively resolved this aspect of the dispute. The Panel finds support for its exercise of judicial economy in the practice of panels and the Appellate Body in previous dispute settlement proceedings. For example, as regards Thailand's claim under Article XI:1 of the GATT 1994, the Panel in US – 1916 Act (Japan), after finding a violation of Article VI, held that in the case before it, Article VI addressed the "basic feature" of the measure at issue more directly than Article XI, although this did not mean that Article VI applied to the exclusion of Article XI:1. On that occasion, the Panel found that it was entitled to exercise judicial economy and decided not to review the claims of Japan under Article XI.¹⁹⁸ Precedent also exists as regards Thailand's claim under Article X:3(a) of the GATT 1994. In previous disputes, after having found violations of, inter alia, Article I of the *GATT 1994*¹⁹⁹, Article 11.2 of the *Anti-Dumping Agreement*²⁰⁰ and Article 2.4.1 of the *Anti-Dumping Agreement*²⁰¹, the respective Panels did not consider it necessary to examine the Article X:3(a) claims.

7.159 Even if the Panel would have found that the application of the EBR is not inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, the Panel is of the view that it would not be appropriate to proceed and rule on Thailand's additional GATT 1994 claims. We note that the text of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement provides that "[n]o specific action against dumping of exports from another Member can be taken except in accordance with the provisions of the GATT 1994, as interpreted by this Agreement." We recall that this reference to the provisions of the GATT 1994 has been interpreted by the Appellate Body as referring to Article VI of the GATT 1994. We further recall that the Ad Note is an integral part of Article VI of the GATT 1994. We therefore interpret these provisions to mean that the WTO Agreements allow for the imposition of measures which are considered to be specific action against dumping provided they are in accordance with Article VI of the GATT 1994, including its Ad Note.²⁰² Accordingly, we are unable to accept that a measure which constitutes specific action against dumping in accordance with the provisions of the Ad Note, can nevertheless be found inconsistent with other provisions of the GATT 1994. For example, if we were to find that the Amended CBD violates the MFN provision of Article I of the GATT 1994, such a finding would, as a consequence, render inutile the provision in Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, and by reference, Article VI of the GATT 1994 and the Ad Note.

7.160 We find additional support for our conclusion in the General Interpretative Note to Annex IA of the WTO Agreement, which provides that in the event of conflict between a provision of the GATT 1994 and another Agreement of Annex 1A, the provision of the other Agreement prevails. We have found that the Amended CBD constitutes specific action against dumping in accordance with Article VI of the GATT 1994, as interpreted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement, and thus, is consistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Therefore, our findings under the Anti-Dumping Agreement must prevail over any potential finding of violation under Articles XI, II, X:3(a), and I of the GATT 1994.

7.161 Finally, we consider the Panel's discussion in US – 1916 Act (Japan) further relevant to this issue. After finding a violation of Article VI of the GATT 1994, the Panel considered whether it must also analyse a claim under Article III:4 of the GATT 1994. It held that, in the case before it, ¹⁹⁸ Panel Report, US – 1916 Act (Japan), para. 6.281.

¹⁹⁹ Panel Report, Indonesia – Autos, para. 14.152.

²⁰⁰ Panel Report, US – DRAMS, para. 6.92.

²⁰¹ Panel Report, US – Stainless Steel, para. 6.55.

²⁰² This finding is, of course, without prejudice to the operation and application of note 24 to Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. In this regard, we note and agree with the Appellate Body's finding in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment) (para. 262) that "an action that is not 'specific' within the meaning of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and of Article 32.1 of the SCM Agreement, but is nevertheless related to dumping or subsidisation, is not prohibited by Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement or Article 32.1 of the SCM Agreement." Such action would be governed by other provisions of the GATT 1994.

Article VI addressed the "basic feature" of the measure at issue more directly than Article III:4. In doing so, the Panel referred to the international law principle lex specialis derogat legi generali in support of its reasoning.²⁰³ The Panel did so by virtue of the Appellate Body's finding in EC – Bananas III that:

"Although Article X:3(a) of the GATT 1994 and Article 1.3 of the Licensing Agreement both apply, the Panel, in our view, should have applied the Licensing Agreement first, since this agreement deals specifically, and in detail, with the administration of import licensing procedures. If the Panel had done so, then there would have been no need for it to address the alleged inconsistency with Article X:3(a) of the GATT 1994."²⁰⁴

7.162 We agree that the principle of lex specialis should apply in such circumstances. Since Article VI of the GATT 1994, including the Ad Note, "deals specifically, and in detail", with the issue of security for definitive anti-dumping duties, those provisions address the "basic feature" of the measure at issue more directly than the other GATT 1994 provisions cited by Thailand. Article VI and the Ad Note therefore constitute lex specialis that should prevail over the more general GATT 1994 provisions cited by Thailand.

7.163 For the above reasons, we conclude that it would not be appropriate for us to proceed and rule on Thailand's claims under Articles I, II:1(a), the first and second sentences of Article II:1(b), X:3(a), and XI:1 of the GATT 1994, and we decline to do so.

7. United States' defence under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994

7.164 Having found that the EBR constitutes "specific action against dumping" and that it is not a "reasonable security" under the Ad Note, and thus it is not "in accordance with the provisions of the GATT 1994, as interpreted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement", the Panel will proceed to examine the United States' defence under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994.

(a) Main arguments of the United States

7.165 The United States argues that the Amended CBD is justified under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994 as a measure necessary to secure compliance with United States anti-dumping and countervailing duty assessment laws. According to the United States, the Amended CBD is necessary to secure compliance with 19 U.S.C. 1673e(1), which governs the assessment of anti-dumping duties, as well as general customs regulations related to the payment of duties. Specifically, according to the United States' argument, the Amended CBD is necessary to secure compliance with US laws governing revenue collection because it secures unsecured liability arising from additional anti-dumping or countervailing duties owed in excess of cash deposits. The United States has stated that it considers that problems of "significant potential unsecured liability" and "significant risk of default" exist with respect to subject shrimp entries.²⁰⁵ The United States submits that 19 U.S.C. 1673e(1) and the other relevant laws and regulations that authorise the Amended CBD are not themselves WTO-inconsistent. The United States also argues that no reasonable alternative is available to ensure revenue collection.²⁰⁶

7.166 The United States further argues that the Amended CBD is consistent with the chapeau to Article XX. In this regard, the United States submits that the Amended CBD does not constitute a

²⁰³ Panel Report, US – 1916 Act (Japan), para. 6.269.

²⁰⁴ Appellate Body Report, EC – Bananas III, para. 204.

²⁰⁵ United States' first written submission, para. 68.

²⁰⁶ United States' first written submission, paras. 69-70.

disguised restriction on international trade or a means of arbitrary or unjustifiable discrimination between countries where the same conditions prevail. In support of this position, the United States submits that the measure applies to designated merchandise subject to anti-dumping or countervailing duties regardless of origin, and applies to all countries subject to the anti-dumping order on subject shrimp. In addition, the United States submits that bond amounts may be determined based on individualised risk assessments which are available to all importers/principals. Finally, the United States emphasizes that the Amended CBD was published on US Customs' web site when initially introduced. The October 2006 Notice, which was later published in the Federal Register, is described by the United States as a complete statement of the measure's contents and how it would be applied, which allows importers to comment formally on the EBR and its administration, and presents the directive's objective as addressing revenue collection problems.

(b) Main arguments of Thailand

7.167 Thailand argues that the United States has not met its burden under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994 to demonstrate that the application of the EBR is necessary to secure compliance with US laws and regulations imposing anti-dumping duties. Thailand notes in general that the United States has relied exclusively on the Basic Bond Requirement as sufficient to secure compliance with its laws and regulations imposing anti-dumping duties in the overwhelming majority of antidumping duty cases (specifically, in 242 out of 248 cases, representing 98 per cent of anti-dumping orders according to Thailand).²⁰⁷ Thailand also argues, based on the facts on record, that the United States cannot demonstrate that assessment rates for subject shrimp are likely to significantly exceed the cash deposit rate established in the final determination of the original dumping investigation. Thailand also disputes the United States' assumption that subject Thai importers are more likely to default on payment of anti-dumping duties than other products subject to anti-dumping duties. Accordingly, Thailand argues that the Basic Bond Requirement in conjunction with cash deposit system and civil recovery proceedings constitutes both a sufficient and less restrictive alternative measure, thereby rendering ineffective the United States' argument that EBR is necessary to secure compliance.

7.168 Thailand also argues that the EBR does not meet the conditions set out in the chapeau to Article XX(d) because its application constitutes "arbitrary" or "unjustifiable" discrimination and a "disguised restriction on trade". Thailand argues that the actual objective of the EBR is to burden the shrimp import industry in order to restrict the import of foreign shrimp products into the United States. Thailand seeks support for its position by the fact that the EBR has only been applied to subject shrimp imports, and that the United States has not demonstrated that subject shrimp importers from Thailand present a comparatively greater risk of default or non-payment than importers from other countries. Thailand also argues that the lack of any nexus between the objective of collection of United States revenue and the manner in which it was applied constitutes a disguised restriction on international trade in subject shrimp. In this regard, Thailand reiterates that the EBR has not been applied to entries of other products with established histories of revenue collection problems.

(c) Evaluation by the Panel

7.169 Before examining whether the EBR is justified by Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994, we recall that it is the United States who has the burden to prove to the Panel that this is the case.²⁰⁸

7.170 We will now look at the text of Article XX(d) and the chapeau of Article XX which provide:

²⁰⁷ Thailand's first written submission, para. 272.

²⁰⁸ In US – Wool Shirts and Blouses, the Appellate Body held that " the burden of proof rests upon the party, whether complaining or defending, who asserts the affirmative of a particular claim or defence." Appellate Body Report, US – Wool Shirts and Blouses, p. 14.

"Subject to the requirement that such measures are not applied in a manner which would constitute a means of arbitrary or unjustifiable discrimination between countries where the same conditions prevail, or a disguised restriction on international trade, nothing in this Agreement shall be construed to prevent the adoption or enforcement by any contracting party of measures:

(d) necessary to secure compliance with laws or regulations which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Agreement, including those relating to customs enforcement of monopolies operated under paragraph 4 of Article II and Article XVII, the protection of patents, trade marks and copyrights, and the prevention of deceptive practices[.]"

7.171 We note that, in US – Gasoline, the Appellate Body concluded that the analysis of a measure under one of the paragraphs of Article XX is a "two-tiered" approach:

"In order that the justifying protection of Article XX may be extended to it, the measure at issue must not only come under one or another of the particular exceptions -- paragraphs (a) to (j) – listed under Article XX; it must also satisfy the requirements imposed by the opening clauses of Article XX. The analysis is, in other words, two-tiered: first, provisional justification by reason of characterisation of the measure under [in that case] XX(g); second, further appraisal of the same measure under the introductory clauses of Article XX ..."²⁰⁹

7.172 We agree and adopt as our own the Appellate Body's reasoning. Therefore, the Panel shall first look at whether the EBR is necessary to secure compliance with the relevant provisions of US law that direct US Customs to assess and collect anti-dumping duties. We will only proceed to analyse whether the EBR meets the requirements of the chapeau to Article XX, i.e whether the EBR allows for "arbitrary or unjustifiable discrimination between countries where the same conditions prevail", or constitutes a "disguised restriction on international trade", if we have first determined that the EBR has met the requirements under paragraph (d).

(i) Whether the EBR is necessary to secure compliance with US laws and regulations as provided in Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994

7.173 The Appellate Body has indicated that two elements should be satisfied in order for a measure to be provisionally justified under paragraph (d) of Article XX:

"For a measure ... to be justified provisionally under paragraph (d) of Article XX, two elements must be shown. First, the measure must be one designed to 'secure compliance' with laws or regulations that are not themselves inconsistent with some provision of the GATT 1994. Second, the measure must be 'necessary' to secure such compliance. A Member who invokes Article XX(d) as a justification has the burden of demonstrating that these two requirements are met."²¹⁰

First element: Whether the EBR has been "designed" to secure compliance with US laws and regulations that are not in themselves WTO-inconsistent

7.174 We shall therefore commence our analysis by examining whether the EBR has been "designed" to secure compliance with US laws and regulations that are not themselves inconsistent with the GATT 1994. A necessary step in this analysis is thus to identify which are those US laws or regulations the compliance with which the EBR is aimed at securing, whether they are not themselves WTO-inconsistent, and whether the EBR is itself designed to secure compliance with the aim expressed in the relevant US laws or regulations.

²⁰⁹ Appellate Body Report, US – Gasoline, p. 22.

²¹⁰ Appellate Body Report, Korea – Various Measures on Beef, para. 157.

7.175 The United States claims that the Amended CBD secures compliance with 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1), which governs assessment of anti-dumping duties and reads as follows:

"Within 7 days after being notified by the Commission of an affirmative determination under section 1673d (b) of this title, the administering authority shall publish an antidumping duty order which—

(1) directs customs officers to assess an antidumping duty equal to the amount by which the normal value of the merchandise exceeds the export price (or the constructed export price) of the merchandise, within 6 months after the date on which the administering authority receives satisfactory information upon which the assessment may be based, but in no event later than—

(A) 12 months after the end of the annual accounting period of the manufacturer or exporter within which the merchandise is entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption, or

(B) in the case of merchandise not sold prior to its importation into the United States, 12 months after the end of the annual accounting period of the manufacturer or exporter within which it is sold in the United States to a person who is not the exporter of that merchandise."

7.176 The United States further submits that the Amended CBD is necessary to ensure compliance with 19 C.F.R. § 113.13(c), which requires port directors to obtain bonds "adequate to protect the revenue and insure compliance with the law and regulations."²¹¹

7.177 Thailand submits that 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1) exclusively does not require importers to pay duties, but in combination with 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(3) instead directs US Customs to assess anti-dumping duties. 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1) "... directs US Customs to assess anti-dumping duties ... ", and 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(3) "... requires the deposit of estimated anti-dumping duties pending liquidation ... ". Thailand considers that 19 U.S.C. § 1673 titled "Imposition of Antidumping Duties", more accurately refers to the United States' obligation to collect anti-dumping duties. This provision states that USDOC shall "impose[] upon such merchandise an antidumping duty, in addition to any other duty imposed in an amount equal to the amount by which the normal value exceeds the export price (or the constructed export price) for the merchandise." Thailand considers the obligation to collect anti-dumping duties is additionally reflected in USDOC implementing obligations. 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1) requires that "the Secretary will instruct the Customs Service to assess antidumping duties by applying the assessment rate to the entered value of the merchandise". Alternatively, 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1) provides that the cash deposit rate will be assessed as the rate of final liability if an administrative review is not requested.

7.178 Taking the parties' views into consideration, in our view, 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1) in combination with 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(b)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673, 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1), and 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1) encompass the United States' obligation to collect anti-dumping duties.

²¹¹ United States' Responses to Second Set of Panel Questions, para. 58.

Whereas 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1) directs customs officers to "assess" an antidumping duty, the obligations under 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(b)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673, 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1), and 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1) require that entries of merchandise subject to an anti-dumping order be subject to the imposition of antidumping duties. As we mentioned, 19 U.S.C. § 1673 requires that USDOC "impose[] upon such merchandise an antidumping duty, in addition to any other duty imposed in an amount equal to the amount by which the normal value exceeds the export price (or the constructed export price) for the merchandise" 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1) requires that "the Secretary will instruct the Customs Service to assess antidumping duties by applying the assessment rate to the entered value of the merchandise". Alternatively, 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1) provides that the cash deposit rate will be assessed as the rate of final liability if an administrative review is not requested. We note that 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(3) requires the deposit of " ... estimated anti-dumping duties pending liquidation ... ".

7.179 Accordingly, the Panel provisionally concludes for the purpose of considering the United States' defence under Article XX(d), the law or regulation at issue is 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1) read together with 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(b)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673, 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1), and 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1), all of which together govern the final collection of anti-dumping or countervailing duties. We do not consider it necessary to expand our discussion to include analysis of 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(3), governing the deposit of estimated antidumping duties pending liquidation, or 19 U.S.C. § 1673f, governing treatment of difference between deposit of estimated antidumping duty and final assessed duty under antidumping duty order.

7.180 The Panel must next consider for the purpose of examining the United States' arguments under Article XX(d) whether 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1) read together with 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(b)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673, 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1), and 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1) are in themselves not inconsistent with any provision of the GATT 1994. When considering the relevant provisions of the GATT 1994 governing anti-dumping duties, the Panel recognizes that Article VI:2 expressly recognizes Members' ability to levy anti-dumping duties where lawfully owed. As we have established in Section VII.C.4, the Ad Note permits Members to require reasonable security in a case of suspected dumping until a final determination of dumping is made in the assessment review. The Panel further notes that Thailand has not expressly challenged any of these laws as inconsistent with any provision of the GATT 1994. Moreover, regardless of Thailand's expansion of what constitutes the relevant law enforced by the Amended CBD, the Panel does not interpret Thailand's commentary as a challenge to the right of the United States to collect anti-dumping or countervailing duties. Accordingly, the Panel concludes that, for the purpose of its analysis of the US defence under Article XX(d) of GATT 1994, 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1) read together with 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(b)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673, 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1), and 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1) are not in themselves inconsistent with any provision of the GATT 1994.

7.181 As a final preliminary matter, the Panel will next consider whether the Amended CBD, which authorises application of the EBR, has indeed been designed to secure compliance with 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(b)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673, 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1), and 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1). We note that the August 2004 Amendment indicates that one of the goals of amending the bond directive is "ensuring [US Customs'] ability to collect the antidumping and countervailing duties at liquidation and ensuring that the revenue is protected".²¹² The August 2005 Clarification states that the continuous bond guidelines were modified as "necessary in order to ensure the revenue is adequately protected".²¹³ The October 2006 Notice explains:

"Congress has provided [US Customs] authority to require security in order to ensure the payment of all duties determined to be due to the United States, including revenue collection gaps between estimated duty deposits and final assessed duties that the importer fails to satisfy.²¹⁴

²¹² Exhibit THA-2, p. 2.

²¹³ Exhibit THA-4, p. 1.

7.182 We note that the stated goal of collecting "antidumping and countervailing duties at liquidation" or "final assessed duties" potentially includes both the collection of the amount of duties established during the final determination in the original investigation as well as any increases in anti-dumping duties that may arise in the period following a final determination but prior to assessment of final liability.

7.183 In our view, the text of the instruments comprising the Amended CBD clearly indicates that the stated goals of the measure at issue align with the objectives that 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(b)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673, 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1), and 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1) are designed to secure the final collection of anti-dumping or countervailing duties equal to the amount by which normal value of subject merchandise exceeds to export price of that merchandise. Thus, for the purpose of examining the United States' arguments under Article XX(d), it is sufficient for the Panel to conclude that the Amended CBD which authorises the imposition of the EBR has indeed been designed to secure compliance with 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(b)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673, 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1), and 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1).

Second element: Whether the EBR is "necessary to secure compliance with" 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(b)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673, 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1), and 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1)

7.184 Once we have established that the EBR has been designed to secure compliance with 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(b)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673, 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1), and 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1), the WTO-compatibility of which is not being contested, we will next examine whether the EBR is "necessary" to ensure such a compliance.

7.185 In this regard, the United States argues that the Amended CBD, which authorises the imposition of the EBR, is necessary to secure compliance with US laws governing revenue collection because it secures unsecured liability arising from additional anti-dumping or countervailing duties owed in excess of cash deposits. In particular, the United States argues that the application of the measure to subject shrimp importers was and remains necessary to secure against "significant potential unsecured liability" and "significant risk of default" associated with merchandise entries.²¹⁵ According to the United States, the Amended CBD was issued in a year following defaults of more than $225 million on payment of anti-dumping duties, which reached $629 million as of end of fiscal year 2006.²¹⁶ The United States has estimated that the value of subject shrimp imports exceeds $2.5 billion²¹⁷ and thus poses a significant additional risk for uncollected revenue in the event that importer/principals were to default. The United States claims that the likelihood of default by subject shrimp importers, and importers/principals of agriculture/aquaculture merchandise more broadly, is significant due to the fact that such entities tend to be undercapitalised and discontinue operations before payment of final anti-dumping duty liability.²¹⁸ With respect to agriculture/aquaculture anti-dumping cases not including subject shrimp, US Customs concluded that anti-dumping duties increased 33 per cent of the time, did not change 11 per cent of the time, and declined 56 per cent of

²¹⁴ Exhibit THA-5, p. 62278.

²¹⁵ United States' first written submission, para. 68.

²¹⁶ United States' first written submission, para. 12.

²¹⁷ United States' first written submission, para. 2.

²¹⁸ United States' first written submission, para. 14.

the time.²¹⁹ In cases where anti-dumping duties increased, the United States claims that final liability for anti-dumping duties often exceeded the amount secured by cash deposit and ordinary basic bond.

7.186 Thailand disputes the US' determination that subject shrimp importers' dumping margins are likely to increase and that subject shrimp importers present a heightened risk of default in comparison to importers of other products subject to anti-dumping orders. Thailand submits that evidence does not support a finding that substantial increases in the assessment rate were more likely to occur for subject shrimp than other products. Thailand argues that the problems of the United States with collecting anti-dumping duties correlate almost exclusively to non-market economy cases, (in particular crawfish and garlic cases) as a result of how dumping margins are calculated in non-market economies, surety bankruptcies, and exemptions from cash deposit requirements for new shippers of products subject to anti-dumping duties.²²⁰ According to Thailand, these factors were determinative in the finding that assessment rates would increase in excess of cash deposit rates and that a higher incidence of default in payments would occur for agriculture/aquaculture products. In support of its position, Thailand cites to findings by the USCIT in NFI v. US that the United States did not offer sufficient evidence to establish that cash deposits would be insufficient to cover final rates of liquidation,²²¹ or that significant numbers of subject shrimp importers are defaulting or have defaulted on any obligation to pay anti-dumping duties on their imports of shrimp.²²² Thailand also cites to evidence on record which it claims demonstrates that non-Chinese agriculture/aquaculture cases accounted for only 4 per cent of total uncollected duties while Chinese agriculture/aquaculture cases accounted for 69 per cent of total uncollected duties.²²³ Finally, Thailand claims that no basis for comparison exists that shrimp and other agriculture/aquaculture merchandise share similar characteristics related to capitalization rates, history of customs duties payments, reliance on asset-based financing, and levels of cash flow that would indicate a high risk of going out of business and/or being unable to pay final anti-dumping duty liability. Thailand submits that United States has only cited to one page in the Agency Record to support its conclusion that agriculture/aquaculture importers which defaulted "were not heavily capitalized", and this statement applies to crawfish and not subject shrimp²²⁴

7.187 We first look at the ordinary meaning of the word "necessary":

"[t]hat which is indispensable; an essential ...; ...[that] which is required for a given situation; ...[t]hat cannot be dispensed with or done without; requisite, essential, needful ...; [d]etermined by predestination or natural processes, and not by free will; ... resulting inevitably from the nature of things or of the mind itself ...; [i]nvariably determined or produced by a previous state of things ...".²²⁵

7.188 The Appellate Body has already examined the concept of "necessary" in the context of Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994 in Korea – Various Measures on Beef. In this case, the Appellate Body concluded that, in order to be considered "necessary" to secure compliance, a measure does not need to be "indispensable", but should constitute something more than strictly "making a contribution to":

²¹⁹ United States' first written submission, footnote 28.

²²⁰ Thailand's first written submission, para. 281.

²²¹ Thailand's first written submission, para. 277, citing to NFI v. US, p. 55, Exhibit THA-9.

²²² Thailand's first written submission, para. 278, citing to NFI v. US, p. 54, Exhibit THA-9.

²²³ Thailand's responses to Second Set of Panel Questions, para. 77 and footnote 59, citing to Exhibit THA-6, p. 17.

²²⁴ Thailand's responses to Second Set of Panel Questions, para. 74.

²²⁵ The New Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, L. Brown (ed.) (Clarendon Press, 1993), Vol. II, p. 3118.

"We believe that, as used in the context of Article XX(d), the reach of the word 'necessary' is not limited to that which is 'indispensable' or of absolute necessity or inevitable to secure compliance certainly fulfil the requirements of Article XX(d). But other measures, too, may fall within the ambit of this exception. as used in Article XX(d), the term 'necessary' refers, in our view to a range of degrees of necessity. At one end of this continuum lies 'necessary' understood as 'indispensable'; at the other end, is 'necessary' taken to mean as 'making a contribution to'. We consider that a 'necessary' measure is, in this continuum, located significantly closer to the pole of 'indispensable' than to the opposite pole of simply 'making a contribution to'."²²⁶

7.189 The Appellate Body weighed additional factors in evaluating the necessity of a measure, such as: (i) the relative importance of the common interests or values that the law or regulation to be enforced is intended to protect; (ii) the extent to which the measure contributes to the realization of the end pursued, the securing of compliance with the law or regulation at issue; and, (iii) the restrictive impact of the measure on imported goods. In Korea – Various Measures on Beef the Appellate Body stated:

"It seems to us that a treaty interpreter assessing a measure claimed to be necessary to secure compliance of a WTO-consistent law or regulation may, in appropriate cases, take into account the relative importance of the common interests or values that the law or regulation to be enforced is intended to protect. The more vital or important those common interests or values are, the easier it would be to accept as 'necessary' a measure designed as an enforcement instrument ... There are other aspects of the enforcement measure to be considered in evaluating that measure as 'necessary'. One is the extent to which the measure contributes to the realization of the end pursued, the securing of compliance with the law or regulation at issue. The greater the contribution, the more easily a measure might be considered to be 'necessary'. Another aspect is the extent to which the compliance measure produces restrictive effects on international commerce,[footnote omitted] that is, in respect of a measure inconsistent with Article III:4, restrictive effects on imported goods. A measure with a relatively slight impact upon imported products might more easily be considered as 'necessary' than a measure with intense or broader restrictive effects ..."²²⁷

7.190 As pertains to this importance of the interest which the EBR allegedly intends to protect, we consider that the assessment and collection of anti-dumping or countervailing duties carries significant importance, specifically in the context of US efforts to enforce trade remedies permissible under the WTO agreements, and generally, for the purpose of securing collection of US Treasury revenue within the context of its retrospective duty assessment system. It is in this regard that Article VI:1 of the GATT 1994 expressly recognizes WTO Members' ability to collect anti-dumping duties where lawfully owed. It also stands to reason that taking security logically serves the purpose of collecting the full amount of anti-dumping or countervailing duties owed. The United States argues that the Amended CBD which allows for the imposition of the EBR, secures an otherwise unsecured liability – any additional anti-dumping duties owed upon assessment that exceed cash deposits.²²⁸ We agree that this would logically aid in the collection of revenue. Thailand does not seem to dispute that this is the case.²²⁹

²²⁶ Appellate Body Report, Korea – Various Measures on Beef, para. 161.

²²⁷ Appellate Body Report, Korea – Various Measures on Beef, paras. 162-163.

²²⁸ United States' first written submission, para. 68.

²²⁹ See Exhibit THA-6, Exhibit 5, p. 6.

7.191 As the EBR makes clear on its face, however, we are not dealing with a measure that is designed to secure the collection of anti-dumping duties generally. Instead, we are considering a measure designed to protect against the likelihood of anti-dumping duties exceeding cash deposit rates. We have explained earlier that there could only be an appropriate basis for taking such increased security under the Ad Note if a WTO Member properly determined that the rates of dumping provided for in the anti-dumping order were likely to increase (such that the cash deposits provided for in the anti-dumping order would not provide sufficient security for the relevant case of suspected dumping). Notwithstanding that, we found that the United States had failed to properly establish that rates of dumping provided for in the anti-dumping order were likely to increase and therefore concluded that the United States had failed to demonstrate that the additional security required through the application of the EBR reasonably correlated to any case of suspected dumping in excess of the case of dumping provided for in the anti-dumping order. Accordingly, we found that the additional security requirements resulting from the application of the EBR were not "reasonable" within the meaning of the Ad Note. In our view, without adequately establishing that anti-dumping duties are likely to increase above the cash deposit rates, it does not logically follow that a security is necessary within the meaning of Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994. Given that the likelihood of increased anti-dumping duties has not been properly established by the United States, we do not see the need to impose the EBR to secure against such an outcome.

(ii) Conclusion

7.192 Therefore, in light of our findings that that the United States failed to demonstrate that the additional security required through the application of the EBR reasonably correlated to any case of suspected dumping in excess of the margin of dumping provided for in the anti-dumping order, we cannot determine that the EBR as applied to shrimp is in fact necessary within the meaning of Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994. Accordingly, we consider that the United States has failed to establish that the EBR as applied to shrimp is justified as being necessary to secure compliance with 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(a)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673e(b)(1), 19 U.S.C. § 1673, 19 C.F.R. § 351.212(b)(1), and 19 C.F.R. § 351.211(c)(1) or any other relevant laws.

VIII. CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

8.1 In light of the above findings, we uphold Thailand's claims that the application of the EBR to subject shrimp from Thailand is inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, and the Ad Note. We reject the United States' argument that the application of the EBR is justified under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994.

8.2 We further uphold Thailand's claim that the United States acted inconsistently with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement by using zeroing to calculate margins of dumping in respect of the Anti-Dumping Measure.

8.3 In light of the above findings, we decline to rule separately on Thailand's claims that the application of the EBR to subject shrimp from Thailand is inconsistent with Articles I, II:1(a), the first and second sentences of Article II:1(b), X:3(a), and XI:1 of the GATT 1994.

8.4 Under Article 3.8 of the DSU, in cases where there is infringement of the obligations assumed under a covered agreement, the action is considered prima facie to constitute a case of nullification or impairment of benefits under that agreement. Accordingly, we conclude that to the extent the United States has acted inconsistently with the provisions of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and the GATT 1994, it has nullified or impaired benefits accruing to Thailand thereunder.

8.5 Article 19.1 of the DSU is explicit concerning the recommendation a panel is to make in the event it determines that a measure is inconsistent with a covered agreement:

"[i]t shall recommend that the Member concerned bring the measure into conformity with that agreement." (footnotes omitted)

8.6 We therefore recommend that the United States bring its measures into conformity with its obligations under the Anti-Dumping Agreement and the GATT 1994.

ANNEX A

EXECUTIVE SUMMARIES OF THE FIRST WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF THE PARTIES

CONTENTS		PAGE
Annex A-1	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of the United States	A-2
Annex A-2	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of Thailand	A-9

ANNEX A-1

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF THE FIRST WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF THE UNITED STATES

(11 May 2007)

1. Introduction

1. This dispute centers on certain action taken by US Customs and Border Protection (CBP) to address a serious and growing revenue collection problem. In 2003 and 2004, CBP determined that importers were defaulting on hundreds of millions of dollars of antidumping and countervailing duties lawfully owed to the United States. The duties in question were unsecured by cash deposits, sufficient bonds, or other guarantees: thus, when an importer defaulted, CBP could not recover the duties owed from the sureties that ordinarily protect CBP from default risk. To address the problem, CBP began to develop a new directive for increasing security requirements on merchandise with higher risk of default. Its own analysis indicated that importers of agriculture/aquaculture merchandise in particular were the source of the bulk of the defaults.

2. During the same period, the US Department of Commerce (USDOC) and the US International Trade Commission (USITC) were considering a petition to impose antidumping duties on another agriculture/aquaculture product: certain shrimp from China, Thailand, India, Vietnam, Brazil, and Ecuador. Imports of the merchandise subject to the petition were in 2003 valued at in excess of $2.5 billion – itself an unprecedented figure for agriculture/aquaculture merchandise subject to an antidumping order.

3. If the defaults it experienced with respect to other agriculture/aquaculture importers occurred for shrimp, CBP realized that its revenue collection problem could rapidly grow into a crisis. Therefore, after considerable analysis and consideration, it decided to apply the new directive to shrimp. The directive provides for an importer-specific risk assessment as the basis for additional bond amounts. Importantly, this means that CBP has tailored the process to ensure that, if a company subject to the directive does not itself pose a collection risk, it need not provide additional bond amounts. Even with this mechanism in place, Thailand asserts that the directive is impermissible under various provisions of the WTO Agreements. In effect, Thailand ask this Panel to find that the United States may not collect duties lawfully owed to it.

4. Thailand's complaint focuses on the question of what the WTO Agreements permit a revenue collection authority to do when faced with a collection problem involving antidumping duties. As discussed below, in its effort to apply the disciplines contained in the Agreement on Implementation of Article VI of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 (Anti-Dumping Agreement) to the action in question, Thailand mischaracterizes both the obligations that Agreement contains and key facts about the directive, its content and how it operates. If accepted, Thailand's arguments would suggest that ordinary revenue collection strategies may not be applied to importers subject to antidumping duties, and in so doing would seriously compromise the ability of Members' customs authorities to collect duties lawfully owed the Member. These arguments do not accord with the text of the Agreement, which expressly permits authorities to require "reasonable security" to collect antidumping duties.

2. Factual Background

5. CBP is the US agency responsible for collection of customs duties. Under the US system, goods are permitted to enter the customs territory of the United States without having paid duties or other liabilities imposed by law. In this manner, the United States expedites the entry of goods and does not make the importer wait on the final determination of duties owed or other liabilities under the law. However, since the goods will have been long since released from CBP's custody and are not available for return to satisfy any obligations of the importer when they are legally determined to be due, it is necessary for CBP to have some security against payment of amounts lawfully owed. Consequently, CBP requires single transaction bonds or continuous bonds for entries of merchandise as a matter of course. As a rule, all entries must be accompanied by evidence that a bond is posted with CBP to cover any potential duties, taxes, and charges that may accrue. Pursuant to CBP's regulatory authority, a port director may require additional bond amounts or other additional security in order to ensure that the acceptance of an entry will be adequately protected against any duties or other liabilities imposed by law.

6. CBP establishes the minimum amount of the bond that the importer must obtain from a surety. The United States is the third party beneficiary to the contract between the surety and the bond principal, but is not itself a party to the contract. CBP does not set the fees charged by the sureties for the bonds they provide.

7. It is not uncommon for Members to require security in this manner, pending final assessment of customs liability. Under India's customs law, for example, when final duty liability cannot be determined upon entry, customs officers may assess provisional duties if the importer "furnishes such security as the proper officer deems fit for the payment of the deficiency, if any, between the duty finally assessed and the duty provisionally assessed." Security requirements such as these ensure that customs authorities are able to collect duties lawfully owed upon final assessment.

8. Surety systems are contemplated by, among other provisions, Article 13 of the Agreement on Implementation of Article VII of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 (Customs Valuation Agreement), which provides that Members shall allow importers to withdraw goods from customs pending final determination of customs value if the importer "provides sufficient guarantee in the form of a surety, a deposit or some other appropriate instrument, covering the ultimate payment of customs duties for which the goods may be liable." In addition to Article 13 of the Customs Valuation Agreement, surety systems are explicitly provided for in the Kyoto Convention on the Simplification and Harmonization of Customs Procedures. The Convention, like the Customs Valuation Agreement, encourages the early release of merchandise, and permits the adoption of surety systems to ensure compliance with regulatory undertakings, as well as to ensure collection of any additional import duties and taxes that might become chargeable. Thus, the Convention explicitly contemplates that, as a necessary consequence of the early release of merchandise, it might become necessary to impose bond requirements to ensure the collection of assessed duties beyond the estimated duties for which an importer might be liable based on information at the time of entry.

9. The bond requirements imposed by the United States do not entail any payments to the United States Government. Rather, importers must provide evidence that they have obtained either single transaction bonds or continuous entry bonds (or cash or an authorized obligation of the United States in lieu of surety on a bond) for the entry or entries in question. These bonds are obtained from private surety companies, which charge the importers based on the risk involved with the transaction.

10. With respect to merchandise subject to an antidumping or countervailing duty order, the Anti-Dumping Agreement provides Members with the flexibility to adopt a variety of systems to deal with the assessment of antidumping duties. The United States has adopted a retrospective system of duty assessment. In the US system, an antidumping duty liability attaches at the time of entry, but duties are not actually assessed at that time. Once a year (during the anniversary month of the order) interested parties may request a review to determine the amount of duties owed on each entry made during the previous year. Between the time that the good is entered and the time that duties are finally assessed following this review, importers of merchandise subject to antidumping or countervailing duties are required to provide (1) a cash deposit in the amount of the antidumping or countervailing duty rate determined in the investigation; and (2) like importers of all goods, a bond to secure against duties, taxes or charges that may accrue. Under its 1991 Bond Guidelines, CBP provides that the amount of this bond should be equal to 10 per cent of the duties, taxes, and fees paid by the importer in the previous 12 months, or a minimum of $50,000. In general, an importer may obtain either a bond covering a single entry (a single entry bond) or a continuous bond (a bond that provide security for all entries filed by the bond principal during the period of time covered by the bond, usually one year) to satisfy this requirement.

11. In 2003, CBP undertook a review of its overall duty collection program to identify areas in which it was experiencing collection difficulties, so as to address significant problems. As part of that process, CBP determined that, over the past few years, defaults on antidumping duty supplemental bills had increased substantially from previous years. While historically, annual uncollected duties from importers had been relatively low (rarely exceeding $10 million a year), outstanding antidumping liability for 2004 alone reached an unprecedented $225 million. As of the end of fiscal year 2006, total uncollected antidumping duties amounted to $629 million.

12. Facing a serious and growing noncollection problem, CBP reconsidered its general continuous bond formula, which provides that the minimum continuous bond may be in an amount equal to the greater of $50,000 or ten per cent of the amount of the previous year's duties, taxes and fees. On 9 July 2004, CBP published on its website a Memorandum announcing an enhanced customs bond amount for those continuous bonds that secure the promise to pay all duties finally determined to be due on certain merchandise subject to antidumping or countervailing duties (July 2004 Amendment). The formula set forth in the July 2004 Amendment is the USDOC rate in the antidumping or countervailing duty order, or the cash deposit rate at the time of entry, multiplied by the value of subject merchandise that the importer entered during the previous year. The formula in effect ensured that, should the antidumping duty rate actually assessed for an importer increase from that determined during the investigation, CBP would be at least partially secured for the difference. The additional bond directive does not apply to single entry bonds.

13. CBP also determined that the principal entities responsible for uncollected duties were importers of agriculture/aquaculture merchandise subject to antidumping duties, and in particular importers using continuous entry bonds. Based on CBP's analysis, the noncollection problem with respect to this merchandise appeared to be attributable to the fact that importers of agriculture/aquaculture merchandise tended to be undercapitalized, and that by the time final liability was assessed (typically one or more years after the goods had entered), the companies were no longer in operation. This was coupled with the fact that antidumping duties finally assessed on the merchandise often significantly exceeded both the cash deposit rate and the ordinary bond amount typically required for all merchandise under the 1991 Bond Guidelines. CBP was thus unable to collect the unsecured portion of the duties assessed, resulting in a shortfall in CBP collections amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars.

14. On 1 February 2005, following a determination that certain shrimp from Thailand, India, and four other countries were being dumped in the United States, and a finding by the USITC that the US domestic industry was materially injured by imports of frozen warmwater shrimp, USDOC issued its final determination imposing definitive duties on frozen warmwater shrimp. The shrimp order was the first order imposed on agriculture/aquaculture merchandise after issuance of the July 2004 Amendment. Significantly, compared to previous agriculture/aquaculture cases, the overall value of shrimp imports subject to the order was enormous – in calendar year 2003, imports of subject shrimp reached $2.5 billion. Given the volumes involved, even a modest increase in the antidumping rate upon assessment could result in substantial revenue losses if unsecured. Thus, viewing the shrimp order as an appropriate case for application of the additional bond directive, CBP began applying the directive to shrimp importers.

15. On 10 August 2005, CBP published a clarification to the July 2004 Amendment (the "Clarification"), in an effort to improve both importers' and customs officers' understanding of how the additional bond directive would be applied and to improve transparency in the process by which CBP identified covered cases and special categories of merchandise.

16. In a further effort to minimize burdens on importers resulting from the additional bond amount, on 24 October 2006, CBP published a Notice in the Federal Register amending its procedure for determining bond amounts for covered categories of merchandise. The October 2006 Notice "represents the comprehensive and exclusive statement of the policy and processes expressed in" the July 2004 Amendment, the 2005 Bond Formulas, and the August 2005 Clarification. As described in the October 2006 Notice, importers are offered the opportunity to submit information on their financial condition related to the risk of non-collection for that importer and CBP determines bond amounts based on that information, the importer's compliance history and other relevant information available to CBP. CBP will evaluate this information promptly and provide an importer-specific bond sufficiency assessment for the importer concerned. In the absence of this information, CBP calculates the bond amount using the formulas. This procedure allows importers to obtain an individualized determination, rather than a determination based upon the formulas.

17. Since CBP issued the October 2006 Notice, by using the process outlined therein, several importers currently subject to the additional bond formulas have requested and received individualized bond amounts substantially lower than those CBP initially required under the additional bond formulas.

3. The Bond Directive Constitutes "Reasonable Security" Permitted by the Ad Note to GATT Article VI:2 and 3

18. Under the Ad Note, a Member may require that an importer provide "reasonable security" for the payment of antidumping or countervailing duties. As is evident from the clause that precedes it, the "final determination of the facts" in the Ad Note refers to the determination of the facts with respect to the "payment of anti-dumping or countervailing duty." In the context of a retrospective duty assessment system, the "determination of the facts" referenced in the Ad Note is the determination that in Article 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement is referred to as the "determination of the final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties."

19. Importantly, the Ad Note does not specify a particular amount of security that a Member may require pending determination of the final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties, but rather provides that the amount required must be "reasonable." Under Thailand's line of reasoning, no amount of bond that exceeds the margin of dumping established in the investigation phase of a proceeding can be "reasonable" security. This interpretation of the term "reasonable" lacks a basis in the text, which, as noted, does not specify a particular ceiling for the bond amount other than the requirement that it be "reasonable".

20. This interpretation also does not accord with ordinary customs practice, which provides context through the Ad Note's prefatory reference to "many other cases in customs administration." A bond is security against the prospect of a future liability. The additional bond amount is intended to secure against additional liability that may accrue upon assessment. As with any insurance policy, to establish the amount of security required, one must consider both the amount of potential liability in the event of default and the likelihood of default. With respect to the amount of potential liability, in excess of $2.5 billion worth of shrimp imports had entered the United States from countries subject to the antidumping order during calendar year 2003. With respect to the risk of default, after facing hundreds of millions of dollars in uncollected antidumping and countervailing duties, CBP determined that importers of agriculture/aquaculture merchandise subject to antidumping or countervailing duty liability faced an elevated risk of default, due in part to low capitalization and high turnover rates in the industry as a whole. Since issuing the directive, CBP published additional mechanisms so that any additional bond amount required is tailored to individual importers' risk of default

21. Thailand appears to conflate the requirement of reasonable security contained in the Ad Note with Article 7 of the Antidumping Agreement regarding provisional measures (i.e., measures taken prior to a final determination of dumping or subsidization). The bond directive, however, is a security requirement imposed after the final determination of dumping or subsidization, pending "determination of the final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties." It is not a "provisional measure" within the meaning of Article 7.

4. Additional Bond Directive Is Not a "Specific Action Against Dumping"

22. As explained above, the additional bond directive serves to secure an otherwise unsecured debt owed to the US government in the form of assessed antidumping duties that exceed cash deposits. It was issued after CBP identified a serious noncollection problem with respect to these duties. As it would in any case in which there exists an unsecured liability that presents a risk to the revenue, CBP issued the additional directive to provide for an increase in the amount of security on certain transactions and thereby address the noncollection concern. The sole reason the directive is designed to secure antidumping liability is because the vast majority of unsecured liability that has resulted in noncollection happens to be antidumping duty liability. Of the $589 million in uncollected duties outstanding since fiscal year 2003, $513 million (87 per cent) have been antidumping duties. The fact that the additional bond directive is based on noncollection risk, rather than the constituent elements of dumping or subsidization, is evident in the text of the directive itself and associated materials.

23. Thailand cites four aspects of the directive that it claims "dissuade the practice of dumping" and therefore support the conclusion that, as applied to importers of shrimp from Thailand, it is action "against" dumping. However, a review of Thailand's assertions demonstrates that the additional bond directive does not meet the second prong of the test set forth by the Appellate Body under Article 18.1: it is not an action taken "against" dumping or subsidization. First, Thailand claims that the directive reduced shipments from countries subject to it. However, the record simply does not support this assertion. According to a study prepared by the Government Accountability Office (GAO), after the petition was filed in late 2003, but before the bond directive was announced, the share of imports from Thailand decreased from 30 per cent of total US shrimp imports to 15 per cent. After the bond directive was announced in July 2004, Thailand's share of shrimp imports actually increased significantly, returning to approximately 30 percent. Based on GAO's analysis, there is no evidence that the bond directive in fact adversely affected imports of merchandise subject to the antidumping order.

24. In order for Thailand to prevail on its claim that the directive is "action against dumping", it also must demonstrate that the directive is not "in accordance with the provisions of GATT 1994." It has failed to do so. As explained above, the additional bond amounts required under the directive constitute "reasonable security" within the meaning of the Ad Note to GATT Article VI and therefore the directive is "in accordance with the provisions of GATT 1994."

5. The Additional Bond Directive Is Not Inconsistent with GATT Article X:3(a)

25. Thailand has failed to establish a breach of Article X. Even under Thailand's theory that GATT Article X applies, the evidence demonstrates that CBP administers the bond directive in a "uniform, impartial and reasonable" manner. The directive contains various criteria for identifying importers of merchandise with elevated default risk, and CBP applies these criteria uniformly. "Impartial" means "[n]ot partial; not favouring one party or side more than another; unprejudiced, unbiased; fair." Treatment in an unbiased and fair manner is distinguishable from identical treatment. Using the criteria described above, CBP determined that importers of shrimp were particularly risky – the potential losses were significant, as was the likelihood of default. Insofar as CBP treated shrimp importers differently from others, it did so based on neutral, "impartial" criteria. "Reasonable" means "[i]n accordance with reason; not irrational or absurd." Here, CBP's reason for applying the additional bond directive to shrimp subject to the February 2005 orders is clear: it faced $2 billion in imports of shrimp newly subject to an antidumping order, had experienced $225 million in defaults on similar merchandise when antidumping orders were imposed in the past, and believed that, due to low capitalization rates in the industry and other factors, these imports posed a serious risk to the revenue. Thus, Thailand fails to demonstrate that the additional bond directive represents unreasonable, partial, or nonuniform administration of US customs laws, within the meaning of GATT Article X.

6. The Additional Bond Directive Does not Breach GATT Article XI

26. With respect to GATT Article XI, as was the case with the bond measure at issue in Dominican Republic – Cigarettes, the bond directive does not prevent importers from importing shrimp into the United States. The directive does not mandate an increased bond amount – as noted previously, importers can obtain individual bond determinations and, depending on their ability to pay and history of compliance with US customs laws and regulations, may not be required to obtain a higher bond. Furthermore, even those importers that have not demonstrated an ability to pay or have not complied with US customs laws in the past are able to import even without participating in the process outlined in the directive or providing additional bond amounts.

7. The Directive Is Not Inconsistent with GATT Article I or II

27. The additional bond directive itself does not constitute a "duty" (antidumping or otherwise). Likewise, the additional bond directive does not constitute an "other charge." First, CBP does not charge for the bonds, nor does it even require that security take the form of the additional bond. Second, Thailand's argument that such bonds are "other charges" would mean that Members may not maintain bonds as a means to secure importers' obligations unless the bonds are specifically included in a Member's schedule. However, as noted above, customs bonds are specifically contemplated in various WTO provisions, including the Ad Note to Article VI and Article 13 of the Customs Valuation Agreement. This context supports the conclusion that bonds are a tool that is generally available to the Members, and not simply to those Members which have scheduled them. For this reason as well, bonding requirements are not an "other charge".

28. Thailand claims that the application of the bond directive to importers of shrimp subject to antidumping duties is inconsistent with Article I because it allegedly discriminates between products originating in Thailand and products originating in other countries. Thailand claims that even the imposition of additional "evidentiary burdens" constitutes discrimination under Article I. This assertion is incorrect, because the US action of increasing bond amounts merely addressed the particular risks associated with these entries, risks not present with respect to entries of other products from other countries. The particular risks associated with these entries arose in connection with imposition of the antidumping duty order on shrimp, which as explained previously gave rise to significant unsecured liability on the entries at issue. Importers of shrimp from other countries not subject to the antidumping order are not required to pay antidumping duties, and therefore no additional security is necessary with respect to their entries. In the absence of higher bond amounts, CBP faced the risk that existing bonds would not provide sufficient recourse if importers refused to pay the difference between estimated duties and the higher duties which might ultimately be assessed. Thus, in imposing different bond requirements on these entries, the United States did no more than respond to the special risks associated with these entries.

8. The Additional Bond Directive Is Justified by GATT Article XX(d)

29. As the United States has demonstrated, the additional bond directive is not inconsistent with US WTO obligations. Article XX of the GATT 1994 makes this even clearer.

30. The additional bond directive is "necessary to secure compliance" with US antidumping and countervailing duty assessment laws, in particular 19 USC. 1673e(a)(1) governing the assessment of antidumping duties and general customs and regulations requiring the payment of duties owed to the US Treasury. The fact that the directive and its application to shrimp secures compliance with this obligation and general customs laws and regulations requiring payment of duties owed to the US Treasury is evident on its face. The directive is "necessary" to secure compliance with US laws and regulations. Revenue collection is among the most fundamental responsibilities of governments. As explained above, the directive secures an otherwise unsecured liability in the form of additional antidumping duties owed upon assessment that exceed cash deposits, and thus permits collection of revenue that in the past has been subject to unprecedented default.

31. The additional bond directive also meets the requirements of the chapeau to Article XX, as it has not been applied in a manner that would constitute a "disguised restriction on international trade" or "a means of arbitrary or unjustifiable discrimination between countries where the same conditions prevail."

9. Zeroing

32. According to Thailand, the "zeroing" in which USDOC engaged in this investigation is the same as the "zeroing" in which USDOC engaged in Ecuador Shrimp. The United States did not disagree with Ecuador's description of the "zeroing" in that dispute. Further, the same type of "zeroing" occurred in the investigation of shrimp from Thailand. The United States recognizes that a measure using a similar calculation was the subject of the Softwood Lumber report, and the DSB ruled that the measure was inconsistent with Article 2.4.2, first sentence, because of that calculation.

ANNEX A-2

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF THE FIRST WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF THAILAND

(30 March 2007)

1. Measures at Issue

1. This complaint concerns two measures applied by the United States that affect imports of certain frozen warmwater shrimp from Thailand. First, in February 2005, the United States imposed definitive anti-dumping duties on imports of certain frozen warmwater shrimp from Thailand (the "Anti-Dumping Measure") and five other countries¹. Second, in conjunction with the imposition of these anti-dumping duties, the United States changed its normal practices regarding the provision of security for the payment of duties and began to apply significantly enhanced bonding requirements to imports of subject shrimp. The main measure at issue in this dispute is the application of this Enhanced Bond Requirement² to imports of subject shrimp from Thailand.

2. Legal Argument

(a) The USDOC's use of zeroing was contrary to Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement

2. The US Department of Commerce ("USDOC") has admitted that it used zeroing in calculating the dumping margins of Thai shrimp exporters on the basis of average-to-average comparisons in the final determination³ of dumping and the Anti-Dumping Measure.

3. This methodology was found to be inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement by the Appellate Body in *US – Softwood Lumber V*⁴ and by the recent panel in US – Shrimp (Ecuador).⁵ For the same reasons as articulated by the Appellate Body and the panel in those cases, therefore, the use of this same zeroing methodology by the USDOC in this case was inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Agreement on the Implementation of Article VI of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 (the "Anti-Dumping Agreement").

¹ Notice of Amended Final Determination of Sales at Less Than Fair Value and Antidumping Duty Order: Certain Frozen Warmwater Shrimp from Thailand, 70 Fed. Reg. 5145 (February 1, 2005), Exhibit THA-14. At the same time, the United States also imposed anti-dumping measures on imports of shrimp from Brazil, China, Ecuador, India and Vietnam. Frozen warmwater shrimp from Thailand and these other countries subject to anti-dumping duties is referred to in this Executive Summary as "subject shrimp".

² The "Enhanced Bond Requirement" refers to the application by the United States Bureau of Customs and Border Protection ("CBP") to subject shrimp from Thailand of the following amendments and clarifications to Customs Directive 99-3510-004 of 23 July 1991: the "Amendment to Bond Directive 99-3510-004 for Certain Merchandise Subject to Antidumping/Countervailing Cases" dated 9 July 2004 (the "9 July 2004 Amendment"); the CBP document titled "Current Bond Formulas" dated 25 January 2005 (the "25 January 2005 Amendment"); the CBP document titled "Clarification to July 9, 2004 Amended Monetary Guidelines for Setting Bond Amounts for Special Categories of Merchandise Subject to Antidumping and/or Countervailing Duty Cases" dated 10 August 2005 (the "10 August 2005 Clarification"); and the CBP Federal Register notice USCBP-2006-0119 titled "Monetary Guidelines for Setting Bond Amounts for Importations Subject to Enhanced Bonding Requirements" dated 24 October 2006 (the "24 October 2006 Notice"). It also includes any amendments, extensions, and related or implementing measures.

³ Issues and Decision Memorandum for the Antidumping Duty Investigation of Certain Frozen and Canned Warmwater Shrimp From Thailand To James J. Jochum From Barbara E. Tillman, 23 December 2004, Exhibit THA- 16. Also Notice of Final Determination of Sales at Less Than Fair Value, Postponement of Final Determination, and Negative Final Determination of Critical Circumstances: Certain Frozen and Canned Warmwater Shrimp from Thailand, 69 Fed. Reg. 76918 (December 23, 2004), Exhibit THA-15.

⁴ Appellate Body Report, US – Softwood Lumber V, para. 101.

⁵ Panel Report, US – Shrimp (Ecuador), para. 7.41.

(b) The application of the Enhanced Bond Requirement to subject shrimp from Thailand is inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement

4. The application of the Enhanced Bond Requirement to subject shrimp from Thailand is inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement because it (1) constitutes "specific action against dumping" and (2) is not otherwise permitted under the Anti-Dumping Agreement or Article VI of the GATT 1994.

(ii) The Enhanced Bond Requirement is specific action against dumping

The Enhanced Bond Requirement is "specific action" against dumping

5. The Enhanced Bond Requirement is "specific action" against dumping within the meaning of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement because it is inextricably linked to a determination of dumping as defined in Article VI:1 of the GATT 1994 and the Anti-Dumping Agreement.⁶

6. The Enhanced Bond Requirement is "action that may be taken only when the constituent elements of 'dumping' are present".⁷ This is because the application of the Enhanced Bond Requirement is limited to merchandise upon which USDOC has issued an anti-dumping order. The CBP has stated that "[a]ny increase in bond liability will become effective when the Department of Commerce (DOC) issues its Order on the case".⁸ The Enhanced Bond Requirement is based on "specific guidelines for bonds covering certain merchandise subject to antidumping/countervailing duty cases",⁹ and applies only to "covered cases" within "special categories" of merchandise. The 24 October 2006 Notice confirms that relevant "Special Category merchandise ... is merchandise subject to AD/CVD".¹⁰ In fact, the formulae for calculating the amount of the Enhanced Bond Requirement all require the use of a USDOC-determined anti-dumping duty rate as the multiplier.¹¹

7. A recent decision of the US Court of International Trade ("USCIT") that enjoined the application of the Enhanced Bond Requirement found that "the administrative record indicates that the plaintiffs are likely to succeed in showing that the bond formulas were applied to these plaintiffs for the sole reason that these plaintiffs were importers of shrimp subject to antidumping duty orders",¹² and that "Customs did not consider each individual importer's financial condition or ability to pay prospective antidumping duties, but rather appeared to base the application of the formulas on one critical factor – that the importer engages in the importation of subject shrimp."¹³

8. That the Enhanced Bond Requirement has been applied only to imports of subject shrimp further illustrates that it constitutes "specific action" against dumping.¹⁴ This is confirmed by the CBP's stated

⁶ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 242.

⁷ Appellate Body Report, US – 1916 Act, para. 122.

⁸ 9 July 2004 Amendment. Exhibit THA-2.

⁹ 10 August 2005 Clarification. Exhibit THA-4, p. 2.

¹⁰ 24 October 2006 Notice, Exhibit THA-5, p. 62276.

¹¹ Either the final determination dumping rate, the most recent administrative review dumping rate, the preliminary determination dumping rate, or the applicable deposit rate.

¹² National Fisheries Institute, Inc., et al., v. United States Bureau of Customs and Border Protection, Court No. 05-00683, Slip Op. 06-166, 13 November 2006, (Stanceu J.) ("NFI v. U.S."). Exhibit THA-9, p. 58.

¹³ Ibid., p. 60. See also Government Accountability Office, Customs' Revised Bonding Policy Reduces Risk of Uncollected Duties, but Concerns about uneven Implementation and Effects Remain, GAO-07-50 (Washington D.C.: October 2006), (the "GAO Report"), Exhibit THA-10, p. 5.

¹⁴ 10 August 2005 Clarification, Exhibit THA-4, p. 3.

policy that it would alter the enhanced bond amount if importers stopped or limited imports of subject shrimp.¹⁵

9. In addition, the CBP's stated policy reasons for introducing the Enhanced Bond Requirement confirm the clear connection to dumping. These include "[d]ifficulties in collecting the antidumping duties" and "the impact of these collections on the amount of disbursements pursuant to the Continued Dumping and Subsidy Offset Act",¹⁶ (i.e. disbursements previously found to be inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement).¹⁷

10. Finally, the Enhanced Bond Requirement constitutes "specific action" against dumping because it does not address circumstances other than dumping such as: (i) problems of default (because it has not been applied in situations where there is a history of default, such as crawfish); (ii) problems of surety bankruptcies; or (iii) problems that arise in new shipper situations (which have been addressed separately through legislative action).

The Enhanced Bond Requirement is specific action "against" dumping

11. The application of the Enhanced Bond Requirement to subject shrimp acts "against dumping" as it has an adverse bearing on, and has the effect of dissuading, the practice of dumping.

12. First, the Enhanced Bond Requirement dissuades imports into the United States of subject shrimp. Thus, the 10 August 2005 Clarification lists as a factor that may result in altering the amount of the enhanced bond "whether the importer can show that it has switched to a new source of imports or a shift in the pattern of imports".¹⁸ The USCIT found that "only those eight importers who promised not to import subject shrimp, or to limit such imports, were able to negotiate a lower minimum bond amount than the bond formulas required".¹⁹

13. The GAO Report found that the Enhanced Bond Requirement would tend to "cause importers to change business practices" and to "reduce imports from countries subject to AD/CV duties".²⁰ The CBP itself confirmed that "NFI importers have increased their sourcing from countries not affected by the antidumping order, from 21 per cent to 32 per cent".²¹

14. The adverse bearing of the Enhanced Bond Requirement is also demonstrated by the significant shift in trading patterns of Thai shrimp exports: while 100 per cent of exports were made on a CIF basis in 2003, over 50 per cent of exports were made on a DDP basis in 2006.²² This shift to DDP exports "makes the foreign-based supplier the U.S. importer of record and shifts the burdens of the higher bonds to them".²³

15. Second, the Enhanced Bond Requirement results in enhanced bonds significantly greater than those required of other goods solely because those goods are subject to anti-dumping measures.

16. The adverse effects of the Enhanced Bond Requirement include costs associated with the enhanced bonds, such as the fees charged by sureties of 10 per cent of the value of the bonds.²⁴ These

¹⁵ See below, para. 12.

¹⁶ 9 July 2004 Amendment, Exhibit THA-2, p. 1.

¹⁷ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 318.

¹⁸ 10 August 2005 Clarification, Exhibit THA-4, para 3(g), p. 6.

¹⁹ NFI v. U.S., Exhibit THA-9, pp. 52-53.

²⁰ GAO Report, Exhibit THA-10, p. 32.

²¹ Declaration of Bruce W. Ingalls to the USCIT in NFI v. U.S., Exhibit THA-7, para. 17.

²² Thai Shrimp Industry Survey, Department of Foreign Trade, Exhibit THA-12.

²³ GAO Report, Exhibit THA-10, p. 6.

²⁴ Exhibit THA-18.

effects are compounded by the demands of sureties for 100 per cent collateral to secure the enhanced bonds²⁵ and the "stacking" of bonds due to regular three to five year delays before final liquidation, which results in the tying up of assets and cash that forces companies to forego business opportunities.²⁶

17. For all these reasons, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is "specific action" that acts "against" dumping within the scope of application of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

(iii) The Enhanced Bond Requirement is not a permissible response to dumping

18. Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement prohibits any "specific action against dumping" not taken "in accordance with the provisions of GATT 1994, as interpreted by this Agreement". The Appellate Body found that "the permissible responses to dumping" are limited to "provisional measures, price undertakings, and definitive anti-dumping duties".²⁷ Thailand submits that the Enhanced Bond Requirement is not a permissible provisional measure, price undertaking, or definitive anti-dumping duty within the meaning of Articles 7, 8, and 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, Article VI of the GATT 1994 and Note 1 to paragraphs 2 and 3, Ad Article VI of the GATT 1994.²⁸

The Enhanced Bond Requirement is not a provisional measure

19. The application of the Enhanced Bond Requirement to subject shrimp from Thailand does not take the form of a permitted provisional measure within the meaning of Note 1 to paragraphs 2 and 3, Ad Article VI of GATT 1994 or Article 7.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement as it is applied after the definitive determination of dumping. It is also not a provisional measure taken in accordance with Articles 7.2 and 7.5 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement or Note 1, Paragraphs 2 and 3 to Ad Article VI of the GATT 1994, because it exceeds the amount of the provisional measures contemplated by those provisions. Furthermore, it is not taken in accordance with Article 7.4 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement as its application has not been limited to "as short a period as possible".

The Enhanced Bond Requirement is not a price undertaking

20. The Enhanced Bond Requirement is evidently not a voluntary price undertaking in accordance with Article 8 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

The Enhanced Bond Requirement is not an anti-dumping duty

21. As the Enhanced Bond Requirement is a "bond" that operates as a security for the payment of duties, it is of a fundamentally different character to an anti-dumping "duty" taken in accordance with Article VI:2 of the GATT 1994 and Article 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Even if it were considered to be an anti-dumping "duty", the measure is not applied in accordance with Articles 9.2, 9.3 and 2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, as it would impose an obligation to provide duties additional to the amount permitted in those provisions.

²⁵ GAO Report, Exhibit THA-10, p. 6. NFI v. U.S., Exhibit THA-9, at p. 38.

²⁶ GAO Report, Exhibit THA-10, pp. 6 and 35. NFI v. U.S., Exhibit THA-9, p. 31.

²⁷ Appellate Body Report, US – 1916 Act, para. 137; Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 265.

²⁸ Thailand has made separate claims that the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with the provisions of Articles 7.1, 7.2, 7.4, and 7.5 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, Article VI:2 of the GATT 1994, and Note 1 to paragraphs 2 and 3, Ad Article VI of GATT 1994, governing the application of provisional anti-dumping measures, and Articles 9.1, 9.2 and 9.3 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and Article VI:2 of the GATT 1994, governing the imposition and collection of anti-dumping duties. The arguments supporting those claims are essentially those used in the context of Thailand's Article 18.1 claim. Thailand notes, however, that these claims are subsidiary and alternative to Thailand's Article 18.1 claim.

(c) The Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article XI:1 of the GATT 1994

22. The Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article XI:1 in that (1) it imposes a restriction on the importation of subject shrimp from Thailand and (2) this restriction cannot be classified as a duty, tax or other charge.

23. First, the Enhanced Bond Requirement constitutes a clear restriction on the importation of subject shrimp from Thailand. By imposing considerable additional financial costs and procedural burdens on importers, the Enhanced Bond Requirement makes the importation of subject shrimp from Thailand more burdensome than the importation of goods not subject to anti-dumping duties and the importation of goods subject to other U.S. anti-dumping measures. It is also clear that the Enhanced Bond Requirement has a limiting effect on shrimp imports from Thailand, confirmed by the evidence that importers have reduced the share of imports of shrimp subject to anti-dumping duties and have increased the share of shrimp sourced from countries exempted from the Enhanced Bond Requirement. Moreover, the Enhanced Bond Requirement has forced Thai exporters to considerably change their terms and channels of sale. For these reasons, the Enhanced Bond Requirement imposes a "restriction" within the meaning of Article XI:1 of the GATT 1994.

24. The Enhanced Bond Requirement clearly imposes a restriction on importation as it is applied at the border and imposed solely on importers of subject shrimp.

25. Second, the obligation to provide a bond in an amount determined pursuant to the Enhanced Bond Requirement cannot be characterised as a requirement to pay a duty, tax or charge, as it does not involve a monetary imposition that yields public revenue.

(d) Alternatively, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Articles II:1(a) and II:1(b) of the GATT 1994

26. Thailand also claims, in the alternative, that if the Enhanced Bond Requirement is considered to constitute a duty or charge imposed on or in connection with importation, it is inconsistent with Articles II:1(a) and (b) of the GATT 1994. If considered a "duty", it would be in excess of the bound rates set forth in the United States' Schedule and cannot be characterised as anti-dumping duties that would otherwise be permitted under Article II:2(b) of the GATT 1994 and is therefore cannot be reconciled with Article II:1(b). If the charges, costs, and fees incurred in connection with the Enhanced Bond Requirement are considered other "charge[s]", they are inconsistent with the second sentence of Article II:1(b) of the GATT 1994, read in conjunction with the Understanding on the Interpretation of Article II:1(b) of the GATT 1994. By applying the measure to subject shrimp, the U.S. fails to accord to those imports treatment no less favourable than provided in its Schedule contrary to Article II:1(a).

(e) The selective application of the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article X:3(A) of the GATT 1994

27. In applying the Enhanced Bond Requirement only to importers of subject shrimp, the United States has failed to administer its laws and regulations relating to import bonds in a uniform, impartial and reasonable manner and therefore acts inconsistently with Article X:3(a) of the GATT 1994.

(ii) The United States fails to administer its customs laws and regulations relating to bonds in a "uniform" manner

28. In its administration of customs laws and regulations requiring importers to provide a bond in a sufficient amount in order to secure possible liabilities, the United States differentiates between importers solely on the basis of whether they import subject shrimp.

29. Importers of subject shrimp are being treated differently from other importers. They are (1) subject to unique evidentiary burdens from which importers of all other goods subject to anti-dumping duties are exempt and (2) must post continuous bonds in higher amounts than importers of all other goods subject to anti-dumping duties. Thus, the United States fails to treat the narrow category of importers of goods subject to anti-dumping duties equally. This special and adverse treatment is inconsistent with the "more demanding requirement of uniformity" identified by the panel in EC – Selected Customs Matters and constitutes a failure by the United States to administer these laws in a uniform manner within the meaning of Article X:3(a) of the GATT 1994.

(iii) The United States fails to administer its customs laws and regulations relating to bonds in a "reasonable" manner

30. The CBP should ensure that its bond amount assessments are reasonably related to the actual risk represented by imports of subject shrimp from Thailand. The fact that an importer imports subject shrimp does not, by itself, provide any reliable indication of any elevated risk of non-payment. The problems the United States has experienced in collecting anti-dumping duties have been concentrated almost exclusively in non-market economy cases and, in particular, anti-dumping duties on imports of crawfish and to a lesser extent garlic. They also arise from new shipper reviews and isolated surety bankruptcies. Circumstances that have not arisen or do not apply in the context of imports of subject shrimp from Thailand.

31. Moreover, the CBP should have taken further steps to ensure that its bond amount assessments are reasonably related to the actual risk represented by individual importers. It is unreasonable for the CBP to impose the Enhanced Bond Requirement selectively on imports of one product without conducting an individual analysis of a variety of relevant factors such as the importers' individual compliance records and their capitalisation, using exactly the same standards as the CBP would apply to other industries, such as the steel or chemicals industries. Indeed, Section 113.13 of the Customs Regulation²⁹ requires the CBP to consider the individual compliance record of the importer in determining whether the amount of a continuous bond is sufficient. These standards cannot reasonably be abandoned simply because an importer imports subject shrimp. Thus, the United States fails to administer its customs laws and regulations relating to bonds in a "reasonable" manner because it fails to consider the individual circumstances of importers of subject shrimp in its analysis of bond amounts.

(iv) The United States fails to administer its customs laws and regulations relating to bonds in an "impartial" manner

32. The evidence establishes (1) that the CBP has used the Enhanced Bond Requirement to try to limit imports of shrimp subject to anti-dumping duties, (2) that in applying the Enhanced Bond Requirement to subject shrimp the CBP "was motivated, at least in part, by domestic political pressure to take action directed against the shrimp importing industry"³⁰ and (3) that the CBP applied the Enhanced Bond Requirement only to the measures against subject shrimp even though there was no history of marked defaults or other problems with respect to these imports and in face of considerable problems with respect to other products and other anti-dumping orders. This evidence cannot be reconciled with the requirement of impartiality contained in Article X:3(a).

(f) The Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article I:1 of the GATT 1994

33. While the United States applies the Enhanced Bond Requirement to imports of certain shrimp products from Thailand and the five other countries, it exempts like products from countries other than Thailand and the five other countries (referred to as the "preferred countries") from this requirement.

²⁹ "Customs Regulation" refers to Chapter 1 of Title 19 of the Code of Federal Regulations.

³⁰ NFI v. U.S., p.57.

Importers of shrimp products from the preferred countries need only provide a bond in an amount that is approximately equal to 10 per cent of the duties and charges paid by the importer in the previous year (the "Basic Bond Requirement"). Importers of subject shrimp, on the other hand, provide a bond calculated in accordance with the Enhanced Bond Requirement, which is far higher than 10 per cent of the duties and charges paid by the importer in the previous year.

34. Imports of subject shrimp from Thailand are "like" shrimp products originating in the preferred countries. The factors commonly used in GATT/WTO practice to determine likeness, such as customs classification, end-use, and the physical properties of the product, all support a finding that shrimp products from these various sources should be treated as like products. However, the United States does not grant the advantage of allowing importation in accordance with the Basic Bond Requirement immediately and unconditionally to imports of subject shrimp from Thailand even though this advantage is granted to imports of shrimp products from the preferred countries. This failure to treat like products equally cannot be reconciled with the United States' obligations under Article I:1 of the GATT 1994.

(g) The Enhanced Bond Requirement cannot be justified under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994

35. Thailand presents a few comments on Article XX of the GATT 1994 without prejudice to its right to develop further argumentation that responds more directly to any defences of the United States.

(i) The Enhanced Bond Requirement is not "necessary to secure compliance" within the meaning of Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994

36. Under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994, the United States bears the burden of proving that the Enhanced Bond Requirement is "necessary" to secure compliance with its laws and regulations. The United States must establish that the less trade-restrictive and less WTO-inconsistent alternative measure of the Basic Bond Requirement would fail to achieve compliance with its laws and regulations imposing anti-dumping duties on imports of subject shrimp and that therefore the Enhanced Bond Requirement is "necessary".

37. The fact that the United States applies the Basic Bond Requirement to 98 per cent of anti-dumping orders currently in place suggests that the United States cannot discharge this burden. The United States must establish that importers of subject shrimp from Thailand have special features that force the United States to resort to more stringent measures.

38. There is no basis to assume that future assessment rates of anti-dumping duties are likely to be higher than cash deposit rates in cases involving imports of subject shrimp from Thailand. As the USCIT ruled, "[t]he record does not identify evidence that the initial cash deposit of plaintiffs will be insufficient to cover the final rates of liquidation".³¹

39. Equally, there is no basis to assume that importers of Thai subject shrimp are far more likely to default when presented with supplemental bills than importers of other products subject to anti-dumping duties. The USCIT ruled that "[c]ustoms ... did not articulate in the Amendment or the Clarification a reason why antidumping duties on shrimp imports are especially susceptible to under-collection, as opposed to duties on imports of other agricultural or aquacultural products subject to antidumping duty orders, or as opposed to all products subject to such orders".³² It also ruled that "no record exists demonstrating that significant numbers of shrimp exporters are defaulting or have defaulted on any obligation to pay antidumping duties on their imports of shrimp".³³ It remains unclear why it is "necessary" to impose more stringent bonding requirements on a class of importers who are not susceptible to and have no marked history of default.

³¹ NFI v. US, Exhibit THA-9, p. 55.

³² Ibid., p. 54.

³³ Ibid., p. 54.

40. U.S. problems with collecting anti-dumping duties arise almost exclusively in non-market economy cases such as those involving crawfish and garlic. The difficulties arise from the unique manner in which the United States determines dumping margins in non-market economy cases as well as isolated surety bankruptcies and exemptions (now removed) from cash deposit requirements for new shippers of products subject to anti-dumping duties. None of these circumstances applies to Thailand. The USCIT ruled that the record does not "identify evidence that importers of shrimp are particularly susceptible to bankruptcy, likely to go out of business, or operating as "sham" or "alter ego companies".³⁴ For all these reasons, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is not "necessary" to secure compliance with the United States' laws and regulations.

(ii) The Enhanced Bond Requirement does not meet the conditions set out in the chapeau to Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994.

41. The Enhanced Bond Requirement also does not conform to the requirements of the chapeau to Article XX because the manner in which it is applied constitutes "arbitrary" or "unjustifiable" discrimination and a "disguised restriction on international trade". The lack of any nexus between the purported objective of the Enhanced Bond Requirement (to protect United States' revenue) and the manner in which it is actually applied (solely to subject shrimp) indicates that it constitutes a "disguised restriction on international trade" of shrimp products. Furthermore, the application of the Enhanced Bond Requirement to importers of shrimp from six WTO Members while exempting importers of products from other countries that present equivalent or even greater risks to United States revenue clearly constitutes "arbitrary" and "unjustifiable" discrimination.

42. For these reasons, Thailand does not consider that the application of the Enhanced Bond Requirement to shrimp from Thailand can be justified under GATT Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994. Thailand will expand on this discussion in subsequent submissions in the event that the United States does, indeed, seek to justify its measure under Article XX(d).

3. Summary of Request for Findings, rulings and recommendations

43. Thailand considers that both measures at issue in these proceedings are inconsistent with WTO law. Thailand notes that had the United States not used zeroing to inflate artificially the margin of dumping, it may not have been able to impose dumping duties on Thai shrimp. Then, in turn, the United States would not have imposed the Enhanced Bond Requirement on Thai shrimp exports. Therefore, the concurrent application of these inconsistent measures on imports of subject shrimp from Thailand has, and continues to, adversely and unfairly affect trade in this important export commodity for Thailand.

44. Thailand requests the Panel to find that:

- (a) The application of the Enhanced Bond Requirement to subject shrimp from Thailand is inconsistent with:
 - (i) Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement; or, subsidiarily, Articles 7 and 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, Article VI:2 of the GATT 1994, and Note 1 to paragraphs 2 and 3, Ad Article VI of GATT 1994.
 - (ii) Article XI:1 of the GATT 1994; or, alternatively, Article II:1(a) and the first and second sentences of Article II:1(b) of the GATT 1994.

³⁴ Ibid., p. 55.

- (iii) Article X:3(a) of the GATT 1994.
- (iv) Article I of the GATT 1994.
- (b) The Anti-Dumping Measure is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

45. If the Panel agrees with the claims under Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, Thailand requests the Panel to nevertheless also address its claims under Articles XI, II, X:3(a), and I of the GATT 1994. Doing so would ensure that the Appellate Body can, if necessary, fully address those claims or, at a minimum, complete any necessary analysis to rule on those claims.

46. Thailand also requests that, pursuant to its authority under Article 19.1, the Panel suggest that the United States bring its measure into conformity by immediately releasing any bonds held by the CBP for imports of subject shrimp from Thailand pursuant to the Enhanced Bond Requirement, so that those imports, like all other US imports subject to anti-dumping duties would be secured by the Basic Bond Requirement.

ANNEX B

EXECUTIVE SUMMARIES OF THE SECOND WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF THE PARTIES

CONTENTS		PAGE
Annex B-1	Executive Summary of the Second Written Submission of the United States	B-2
Annex B-2	Executive Summary of the Second Written Submission of Thailand	B-10

ANNEX B - 1

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF THE SECOND WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF
THE UNITED STATES

(9 July 2007)

1. The Additional Bond Amount Constitutes "Reasonable Security" Within the Meaning of the Ad Note to GATT 1994 Articles VI:2 and VI:3.

1. A central question before this Panel is whether any provisions of the Agreement on Implementation of Article VI of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 ("AD Agreement") or the GATT 1994 govern a security requirement for the payment of an anti-dumping duty assessed after an order has been imposed, such as that contemplated by the enhanced bond directive. As the United States has demonstrated in its previous submissions, the Ad Note to Article VI is the sole provision that specifically limits security requirements of this type.

2. As the United States has explained in previous submissions, the "final determination of the facts" in the Ad Note refers to the determination of the facts with respect to the "payment of anti-dumping or countervailing duty." In the context of a retrospective duty assessment system, the "determination of the final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties", referenced in Article 9.3.1, must be made in order for the facts with respect to payment to be determined. Thus, the "final determination of the facts" in the Ad Note follows an assessment review as described in Article 9.3.1.

3. This interpretation is consistent with the immediate context in which the phrase appears. The Ad Note refers to "security for payment" and "other cases in customs administration" – in other cases in customs administration, security for payment of duties is required upon entry when the actual amount of liability is not known, and this security is required until the duties are finally assessed and paid. It is also consistent with GATT 1994 Article VI:2 and 3, the provisions to which the Ad Note is appended, and the AD Agreement. GATT 1994 Article VI:2 and 3 address "levy[ing]" anti-dumping and countervailing duties. In the AD Agreement, the term "levy" refers to "the definitive or final legal assessment or collection of a duty or tax." The "final determination" referenced in the Ad Note thus pertains to security pending final legal assessment of duties – an event that in a retrospective duty assessment system does not normally occur until after the completion of the assessment review.

4. The context provided by the AD Agreement also supports this interpretation of the Ad Note. AD Agreement Article 9.2 allows Members to collect anti-dumping duties "in the appropriate amounts in each case." Article 9.3 states that "[t]he amount of the anti-dumping duty shall not exceed the margin of dumping as established under Article 2." The "margin of dumping" established following the assessment review described in Article 9.3.1 is a margin of dumping "as established under Article 2" – meaning, a margin of dumping calculated in accordance with the general requirements of Article 2. Thailand is thus incorrect in asserting that this means a "margin of dumping" from the investigation proceeding. The cash deposit and bond secure payment of this amount of duty and ensure that the United States is able to collect duties in that amount, in accordance with Article 9.2. Article 9.3.1 additionally makes clear that "final" liability for payment of anti-dumping duties occurs at the end of an assessment period – the terminology used therein coincides with the reference to the "final" determination of the facts with respect to "payment" in the Ad Note, further supporting the view that the Ad Note addresses security pending completion of assessment.

5. Finally, it should be noted that, as the United States explained in its Responses to Panel Questions, this interpretation is consistent with the manner in which the United States administered its anti-dumping law at the time the Ad Note was negotiated. The Anti-Dumping Act, 1921, established a retrospective duty assessment system, whereby assessment or appraisal of anti-dumping duties was withheld pending the determination of whether and to what extent dumping had occurred on individual transactions subject to an anti-dumping "finding." The Anti-Dumping Act, 1921, also included provisions for security pending final assessment, which prior to enactment of the Trade Agreements Act of 1979 was usually required in the form of "a bond equal to the estimated value of the merchandise."

6. In an effort to demonstrate that a provision other than the Ad Note, and a standard other than "reasonable security", applies for purposes of determining whether the additional bond amounts required pursuant to the enhanced bond directive are inconsistent with US WTO obligations, Thailand offers a reading of both the Ad Note and the AD Agreement that is at odds with their plain language and irreconcilable with the context in which the relevant language appears.

7. First, with respect to the Ad Note, Thailand argues that dumping cannot be "suspected" after an anti-dumping duty order is imposed following the completion of the investigation, and thus no case of suspected dumping can exist at that time. This interpretation does not, however, conform to the ordinary meaning of the term "suspected" or the context in which the term appears. In the Ad Note, "suspected" dumping refers to dumping that is "imagined to be possible or likely." The immediate context provides that security in such a case may be required for "payment" "pending final determination of the facts." In a retrospective system of duty assessment, whether and in what amount duties are owed on a given entry is not known until completion of assessment, and thus dumping – in the context of payment – is "suspected" during the intervening time. As Thailand acknowledges, "in a situation where the exporter's overall assessment rate is zero, no anti-dumping duties may be assessed on individual shipments" Dumping (if any) with respect to a given set of entries is not "known" until assessment of those entries is completed.

8. Thailand attempts to rely on the phrase "existence of dumping," which is nowhere used in the Ad Note, to support its assertion that the Ad Note does not govern security after issuance of an anti-dumping duty order in an investigation. Thailand, for example, incorrectly reads US anti-dumping laws at the time the Ad Note was negotiated, and asserts that the "'final determination of the facts' refers to the question of whether dumping and injury exist." However, as the United States has explained, while the "existence of dumping" is confirmed at the conclusion of the investigation, whether a given entry has been dumped, and thus whether duties are owed, is not determined until completion of the assessment review. The "final determination of the facts" is used in the Ad Note in connection with the "payment of anti-dumping or countervailing duty," which in a retrospective system is not established at the conclusion of the investigation.

9. To read the Ad Note and the AD Agreement as Thailand suggests would lead to an absurd result: it would mean that "security for payment of anti-dumping and countervailing duty" must be released after completion of an investigation (the moment when it has been established that it is likely that some duties will be owed) – and before the amount of duties owed is finally established and those duties have in fact been paid. The United States is not aware of any customs authority that administers security requirements in this manner.

10. Furthermore, Thailand offers an interpretation of the Ad Note in relation to the AD Agreement that is inconsistent with the terms of the AD Agreement and fails to give the Ad Note any meaning or legal effect, contrary to the relationship between the GATT 1994 and other WTO agreements contemplated by the Marrakesh Agreement Establishing the World Trade Organization ("WTO Agreement"). As a threshold matter, the GATT 1994, including the Ad Note to Article VI, is an "integral part" of the WTO Agreement. As past panels and the Appellate Body have noted, Article VI is "part of the same treaty" as the AD Agreement, and "should not be interpreted in a way that would deprive it or the Anti-Dumping Agreement of meaning." A panel "should give meaning and legal effect to all the relevant provisions," including the Ad Note to Article VI. Instead of "reading Article VI in conjunction with the Anti-Dumping Agreement," as the Appellate Body in US – 1916

Act suggested, Thailand, through a misreading of Articles 7 and 9 of the AD Agreement, attempts to read Article VI and the Ad Note out of the covered agreements entirely, depriving both provisions of any meaning.

11. Thailand's analysis of AD Agreement Article 9 in connection with the US cash deposit requirement illustrates the basic flaws in its approach. First, to argue that Article 9, and not the Ad Note, is the relevant provision applicable to cash deposit requirements, it asserts that the term "cash deposit" is the same as the term "duty" – a position that cannot be reconciled with the text of the AD Agreement or the Ad Note, or the ordinary meaning of either of the terms in question.

12. A "cash deposit" is security for a duty owed, but is not itself a duty. In both the GATT 1994 and the AD Agreement, the term "cash deposit" is used throughout to refer to a form of "security", not a "duty". The Ad Note, for example, provides for "reasonable security (cash deposit or bond)" – it does not characterize cash deposits as "duties". Article 7.2 of the AD Agreement likewise distinguishes a "cash deposit" as a form of "security" from "duties" in stating that "provisional measures may take the form of a provisional duty or, preferably, a security – by cash deposit or bond ... ." Indeed, insofar as it indicates a preference for requiring payment of cash deposits rather than duties, Article 7.2 suggests that there is in fact a substantive difference between a cash deposit requirement and a duty.

13. The sole support Thailand offers for its reading of the GATT 1994 and the AD Agreement in this regard is a single reference by the Appellate Body in US – Zeroing (Japan) to cash deposits in its description of an administering authority's right to "collect duties, in the form of a cash deposit." This statement was not made in the context of any finding with respect to cash deposit requirements – and indeed, the Appellate Body report contains no analysis of the question of whether cash deposits are in fact duties. A single clause in one sentence in an Appellate Body report, in a different context and unsupported by any relevant analysis, cannot justify a conclusion that plainly contradicts the text of the GATT 1994 and the AD Agreement.

14. Moreover, in an attempt to support its assertion that, rather than permitting "reasonable" security, the GATT 1994 and AD Agreement prohibit any security in excess of the margin of dumping determined in the investigation or most recent administrative review, Thailand misinterprets the term "margin of dumping" in Article 9.3 to refer, alternately, to the margin of dumping established in the investigation or to the margin established for a previous set of entries in a prior administrative review. This reading of Article 9.3, however, is both illogical and inconsistent with the text of that provision and previous reports of the Appellate Body examining that text. Inexplicably, Thailand ignores the one margin of dumping that is based on actual analysis of the particular entries in question and which is used to establish the "final liability" for payment of anti-dumping duties, referenced in Article 9.3.1: the margin of dumping established in the assessment review. It is this margin (which, contrary to what Thailand asserts, is a margin "as established under Article 2") that is the "margin of dumping" referenced in Article 9.3, and it is payment of duties resulting from this margin that the cash deposit and bond are intended to secure.

15. The Appellate Body's findings in US – Zeroing (EC) are fully consistent with this reading of AD Agreement Article 9. The "margin of dumping established for an exporter or producer" referenced in that section of the Appellate Body's report is the margin of dumping established in an assessment proceeding, not the margin of dumping established in an investigation. Article 9.3 specifies the amount of "assessed" anti-dumping duties – an amount determined through the administrative review. The margin of dumping it describes is thus the margin of dumping established in that review. Article 9.3 does not prescribe the specific methodology by which duties should be assessed, nor the amount of security that a Member may require pending final assessment.

16. Finally, Thailand attempts to rely on Article 7 of the AD Agreement as a basis to read the Ad Note out of the GATT 1994 entirely, asserting that the Ad Note is confined to "provisional measures" and superseded by Article 7. However, nothing in the text of the Ad Note suggests that it is limited to "provisional measures" and nothing in the text of Article 7 supports the conclusion that it is intended to address security requirements after the imposition of an order. Neither Article 7 nor the concept of "provisional measures" existed at the time the Ad Note was negotiated. Article 7 contains rules with respect to provisional measures – measures (including security) taken prior to a final determination in an investigation. Article 7 does not, however, address security requirements imposed after a final determination has been made, and there is no basis to conclude that it places limitations on those requirements beyond the limitations established in the Ad Note. Indeed, Thailand's assertion that the Ad Note "authorizes cash deposits only as a 'provisional measure'," when read in conjunction with the AD Agreement, contradicts Thailand's own argument that cash deposits are permitted by Article 9 of the AD Agreement as a "duty". Moreover, Thailand's interpretation cannot be reconciled with the term "payment" used in the Ad Note, as payment does not occur until completion of the assessment review.

17. If Thailand's arguments were accepted, Members would not be permitted to maintain security requirements pending final determination of liability. To preclude a Member with a retrospective system from requiring the posting of security prior to the determination of final liability would create a disparity between retrospective and prospective systems. The nature of prospective systems is that the duties billed at importation are treated as final. Thus, no security need be required. If an importer refuses to pay the anti-dumping duties owed, the Member maintaining a prospective system may deny entry to the merchandise in question. Members with prospective systems therefore are not required to bear the risk of unsecured liability in the way that Members with retrospective systems would if Thailand's interpretation were accepted. Nothing in the GATT 1994 or AD Agreement suggests that one system is favored over another, and the Appellate Body has confirmed that this is the case. Members with retrospective systems should not be penalized for deferring determination of final liability to the end of the review period.

18. Finally, the evidence demonstrates that the additional bond amount satisfies the requirements of the Ad Note: it constitutes "reasonable security" for the payment of anti-dumping or countervailing duty. As a threshold matter, it is important to recall that the United States imposed the additional bond requirement after it identified a serious and growing problem: when the assessment rate resulting from the administrative review exceeded the cash deposit rate at the time of entry, many importers were not paying the duties lawfully owed. This liability was unsecured by cash deposit, bond, or other security. As a result, the United States has been unable to collect over $600 million in anti-dumping duties lawfully owed to it.

19. The additional security required by the United States pursuant to the directive is "reasonable": it reflects an assessment of the multiple factors typically considered in establishing security requirements, including the amount of potential liability in the event of default and the likelihood of default. For shrimp, the amount of potential additional liability was significant, as was the risk of default. In excess of $2.5 billion worth of shrimp imports had entered the United States from countries subject to anti-dumping duty orders during calendar year 2003. This quantity of shrimp far exceeded that of imports subject to previous anti-dumping duty orders that had resulted in significant unpaid duties. Because anti-dumping duties are assessed on an ad valorem basis, the sheer quantity of shrimp imports alone increased the likelihood that, all other things being equal, the potential unsecured liability for shrimp would be substantial. With respect to the likelihood that rates would increase, no party to this proceeding disputes the fact that rates do increase. The historical data analyzed by CBP suggests that they often do, and significantly. Even if the likelihood that rates for shrimp would increase was no greater than the historical norm, the fact that shrimp imports were so substantial in value supported CBP's decision to require greater security for shrimp, as it suggested significantly greater unsecured liability in the event of an increase.

20. As for the risk of default, CBP determined that importers of agriculture/aquaculture merchandise subject to anti-dumping or countervailing duty liability faced an elevated risk of default, due in part to low capitalization and high turnover rates in the industry as a whole. CBP provides importers subject to the enhanced bond directive with individualized risk assessments, if they so request. In that event, the bond amount reflects an individualized assessment of risk of default. Only if the importer has a history of noncompliance or does not request an individual bond determination will CBP use a bond amount prescribed by the formulas. Importers have requested and received individual bond amounts – often substantially lower than those prescribed by the formula – through this process. All of these factors support the conclusion that the bond amounts required of importers under CBP's additional bond directive constitute "reasonable" security.

21. Finally, as the United States explained in its Responses to Panel Questions, the Ad Note contains a limit on the amount of security that may be required ("reasonable security"), but does not limit a Member to one form of security. The text and context support the conclusion that, consistent with how the Appellate Body has construed the term "or" elsewhere in the Agreements, the "or" in "cash deposit or bond" is not, as Thailand asserts, exclusive. In response to the Panel's question, Thailand simply refers to another "or" in Article 7 of the AD Agreement, yet fails to explain both the basis for its conclusion that this "or" should be read in the exclusive sense or, were that the case, why that necessarily means the "or" in the Ad Note should be read in such a manner. Furthermore, Thailand elsewhere concedes that it is permissible to require an importer to obtain a bond in addition to providing cash deposits – its assertion that the drafters intended to prohibit this arrangement as "unduly complicated" is unsupported by the text and the logic of Thailand's own argument. Thailand's interpretation thus should be rejected.

2. The Additional Bond Directive Is Not Inconsistent with AD Agreement Article 18.1.

22. Thailand has failed to demonstrate that the additional bond directive is "specific action against dumping" – it is neither "specific" to dumping nor "against" dumping. Rather, as the United States explained in its submissions, the directive is a reasonable means of ensuring payment of duties ultimately assessed. Having identified a serious collection problem, CBP took action to secure unsecured liability, as it would in any case in which such liability exists that presents a risk to the revenue, whether or not the "constituent elements of dumping are present." Only because the vast majority of unpaid duty bills related to anti-dumping duties did the directive address those duties in particular. The design of the directive, including the criteria for applying it to particular orders and establishing a bond amount based on individual risk, all pertain to securing against risk of uncollected duties, not the "constituent elements of dumping". Thus, while the directive may be "related to" dumping – as the Appellate Body in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment) described various measures not inconsistent with Article 18.1 – it is not "specific" to it.

23. With regard to Thailand's claim that the directive is action "against" dumping, neither previous Appellate Body reports examining that term nor the evidence in this proceeding supports this conclusion. The bond is security for the final assessed duty, which itself may be an action against dumping, but the security as such simply allows the United States to obtain payment of duties lawfully owed to it. As the Appellate Body noted in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), "a measure cannot be against dumping or a subsidy simply because it facilitates or induces the exercise of rights that are WTO-consistent." The GATT 1994 and the AD Agreement do not prohibit the United States from obtaining payment for the anti-dumping duties in question, and the bond requirement facilitates its ability to do so.

24. As for Thailand's claim that the directive was "against" dumping because it adversely affected imports from countries subject to the anti-dumping order, the evidence demonstrates otherwise. Data on imports from the top fifteen countries that export shrimp to the United States reveals no appreciable difference in import trends for importers subject to the directive and other importers in the periods before and after the directive was issued. Aside from seasonal fluctuations, imports from most countries subject to the AD order appear to have remained steady or increased.

25. With regard to costs to importers and alleged "significant shifts in trading patterns", the mere fact that additional security is required and results in additional costs does not support the conclusion that the security requirement itself is designed to "counteract" dumping. Likewise, shifting from "cost, insurance, freight" (CIF) to "duty delivery paid" (DDP) does not alter the cost of importing or otherwise "counteract dumping" – regardless of whether a shipment is CIF or DDP, the costs of importing are the same for the importer of record. Furthermore, use of CIF or DDP is determined by the contract between the purchaser and the seller, not by CBP.

26. All security requirements, including cash deposits and other reasonable security for the payment of anti-dumping and countervailing duties, may result in some added cost. If accepted, Thailand's argument would mean that any measure that increases the cost of importing for importers subject to anti-dumping and countervailing duties is an action "against" dumping. This interpretation is not supported by the analysis of the Appellate Body in US – Offset Act. Increasing the cost of importing alone does not necessarily create, as the Appellate Body put it in US – Offset Act, an "incentive not to engage in the practice of exporting dumped or subsidized products or to terminate such practices" – indeed, import data for shrimp suggest that no such incentive exists.

27. Even if considered "specific" action "against" dumping, the security requirements in question are permitted by the Ad Note and thus are "in accordance with the provisions of GATT 1994, as interpreted by the Anti-dumping Agreement." Again without any textual support or analysis, Thailand refers to a single sentence in the Appellate Body report in US – 1916 Act to assert that security requirements contemplated by the Ad Note are "not permitted" responses to dumping. The statement quoted by Thailand does not, however, support the proposition for which it is cited. The Appellate Body report in question contains no analysis of the Ad Note, or security requirements generally, and to the extent it discusses Article VI and the AD Agreement, it is fully consistent with the US reading of Article 18.1. For example, the Appellate Body stated that "'the provisions of GATT 1994' referred to in Article 18.1 are in fact the provisions of Article VI of the GATT 1994 concerning dumping," and then proceeded to analyze whether the measure in question "falls within the scope of application of Article VI of the GATT 1994." The Ad Note to Article VI is a provision of Article VI "concerning dumping," and the security requirements at issue fall within its scope. As explained above, the AD Agreement does not contain additional limits on security requirements such as those contemplated by the Ad Note. Thus, if a security requirement is consistent with the Ad Note, it is "in accordance with the provisions of GATT 1994, as interpreted by" the AD Agreement.

28. To suggest, as Thailand does, that Article 18.1 means that measures permitted by Article VI are no longer permitted unless specifically provided for in the AD Agreement, is at odds with the text of Article 18.1 and, as noted previously, the relationship between the covered agreements set forth in the WTO Agreement. Were Thailand's reading correct, there would be no need for Article 18.1 to refer to the GATT 1994 at all – yet Article 18.1 does refer to the GATT 1994. This reading of the text is not consistent with its terms, and contradicts the principle contained in the WTO Agreement that each of the texts, including the GATT 1994, shall be integral to it. Moreover, Thailand's interpretation incorrectly presumes that, unless a measure is specifically permitted by the AD Agreement, it is prohibited. The AD Agreement, however, contains rules regarding certain aspects of anti-dumping and countervailing duty measures. As the Appellate Body has observed, the covered agreements are not exhaustive, and if an action is not expressly prohibited, taking that action does not breach the WTO agreement in question. To read Article 18.1 as broadly as Thailand suggests would impermissibly extend the disciplines of the AD Agreement beyond their terms.

3. The Additional Bond Directive Does not Breach GATT Article I, GATT Article II, or GATT Article XI.

29. GATT Article I. Contrary to Thailand's assertions, the additional bond directive does not improperly discriminate between products originating in Thailand and products originating in other countries. The directive has been applied to all importers of shrimp subject to the AD orders, and the US action of increasing bond amounts merely addressed the particular risks associated with these imports.

30. GATT Article II. As explained above, the additional bond directive does not constitute a "duty" (anti-dumping or otherwise) or an "other charge." CBP does not charge for the bonds, nor does it even require that security take the form of the additional bond. The implication of Thailand's argument that such bonds are "other charges" is that Members may not require bonds as a means to secure importers' obligations unless the bonds are specifically included in a Member's Schedule. Yet many Members do maintain such requirements, and several provisions of the WTO agreements contemplate the use of bonds, suggesting that they are intended to be a device generally available to Members to secure their obligations.

31. GATT Article XI. As was the case with the bond measure at issue in Dominican Republic – Cigarettes, the bond directive does not prevent importers from importing shrimp into the United States. Indeed, import data demonstrates that significant quantities of shrimp subject to the AD orders continue to be imported into the United States, and there is no evidence that the bond directive has had any appreciable impact on imports. Thailand's argument that any "restriction" results in a breach of Article XI proves too much: it would render any bond requirement inconsistent with Article XI, indeed any requirement that imposes additional "costs or burdens" on importers. The directive does not mandate an increased bond amount – as noted previously, importers can obtain individual bond determinations and, depending on their ability to pay and history of compliance with US customs laws and regulations, may not be required to obtain a higher bond. Virtually all importers that have made a request have received individualized bond amounts pursuant to this process that are lower than those contemplated by the formula. Furthermore, even importers that have not demonstrated an ability to pay or have not complied with US customs laws in the past are allowed to import even without participating in the process outlined in the directive or providing additional bond amounts. Importers have a range of mechanisms available to them to import into the United States without being subject to the additional bond directive, including single entry bonds, cash deposits or security other than a continuous entry bond.

4. The Additional Bond Directive Is Not Inconsistent with GATT 1994 Article X:3(a).

32. With regard to GATT 1994 Article X, Thailand has failed to establish a breach. As the United States explained in its previous submissions, Article X does not govern the substance of a measure, but instead is concerned with the "publication and administration" of the measure. Thailand continues to cite aspects of the measure's substance – including the formula used to establish bond amounts absent an individual risk analysis – in support of its claim that Article X was breached.

33. With respect to the application of the directive, CBP did not apply the directive in a nonuniform, partial, or unreasonable fashion. It required the bond of shrimp importers because, using the criteria in the directive, CBP determined that the risk of substantial unsecured liability was high in the case of shrimp. The fact that CBP opted to apply the directive to importers of covered merchandise subject to new orders, rather than pre-existing orders, does not render its application "nonuniform, partial or unreasonable," as Thailand claims. CBP considered that applying the new directive to a new order would facilitate its ability to monitor and administer the new bond requirement at its inception. Article X does not prohibit a Member from implementing a new measure in this fashion.

34. Even under Thailand's theory that Article X applies, the evidence demonstrates that CBP administers the bond directive in a "uniform, impartial and reasonable" manner. The directive contains various criteria for identifying importers of merchandise with elevated default risk, and CBP applies these criteria uniformly. CBP faced in excess of $2 billion in imports of shrimp newly subject to an anti-dumping order. It had experienced $225 million in defaults on importers in industries that, like shrimp, were characterized by low capitalization rates and relatively low barriers to entry and exit, had very little history of paying customs duties prior to imposition of the order, and were highly leveraged. All of these factors suggested that, as with other agriculture/aquaculture merchandise, there was a significant risk of default associated with importers of shrimp. As for Thailand's assertion that the directive does not contain consistent criteria for identifying merchandise subject to increased default risk, the facts simply do not support this claim. The sole applicable criteria are those identified in the October 2006 Notice. Finally, contrary to Thailand's suggestion, the October 2006 Notice makes the procedures for requesting an individual bond amount clear, and does not impose significant costs on importers to do so. The procedures for requesting an individual bond amount are set forth in the Notice, which itself was published in the Federal Register. The Notice simply requires that an importer respond to CBP's notice by requesting an individual bond amount.

5. The Additional Bond Directive Would Be Justified by GATT Article XX(d).

35. As the United States explained in its First Submission, the directive is "necessary to secure compliance" with US anti-dumping and countervailing duty assessment laws, in particular 19 U.S.C. 1673e(a)(1) governing the assessment of anti-dumping duties, and general customs laws and regulations requiring the payment of duties owed to the US Treasury. As evidenced by, among other things, the criteria the directive uses to determine bond amounts, the directive and its application to shrimp secures compliance with this obligation and general customs laws and regulations requiring payment of duties owed to the US Treasury. The directive secures an otherwise unsecured liability in the form of additional anti-dumping duties owed upon assessment that exceed cash deposits, and thus permits collection of revenue that in the past has been subject to unprecedented default.

36. Existing cash deposit requirements, civil recovery proceedings, and the basic bond amount do not secure the unsecured liability in question. Cash deposits do not secure liability resulting from an increase in duties upon assessment above the cash deposit rate, because they are limited to the cash deposit rate. Civil recovery proceedings are not a reasonable alternative to address the problem faced by CBP: like cash deposits, CBP has used civil recovery to try to recover duties when an importer defaults, yet notwithstanding these efforts, uncollected duties have continued to accrue. Civil recovery produces no remedy if the importer cannot be reached or has no attachable assets by the time the proceeding has concluded. Furthermore, with respect to the basic bond, it was because the basic bond requirement was not sufficient to secure the unsecured liability in question, and did not prevent hundreds of millions of dollars in unpaid duties from accruing, that CBP required the additional bond. Thus, these measures do not constitute reasonably available alternatives that "would preserve for" the United States "its right to achieve ... the objective pursued."

37. The additional bond directive meets the requirements of the chapeau to Article XX. It has not been applied in a manner that would constitute a "disguised restriction on international trade" or "a means of arbitrary or unjustifiable discrimination between countries where the same conditions prevail." It has been administered uniformly, and does not discriminate.

ANNEX B-2

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF THE SECOND WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF THAILAND

(29 June 2007)

1. The Enhanced Bond Requirement constitutes specific action against dumping that is inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement

1. As Thailand has explained, the Enhanced Bond Requirement constitutes specific action against dumping not otherwise in accordance with Article VI of the GATT 1994 read in conjunction with the Anti-Dumping Agreement and is, therefore, inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

(a) The Ad Note cannot be applied independently of the Anti-Dumping Agreement

2. As Thailand explained in its response to the Panel's question 16, however, Article VI of the GATT 1994, which includes as an "integral part" the Ad Note to Articles VI:2 and 3, cannot be read independently of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. The Appellate Body stated in US – 1916 Act that "Article 1 [of the Anti-Dumping Agreement] states that 'an anti-dumping measure' must be consistent with Article VI of the GATT 1994 and the provisions of the Anti-Dumping Agreement." Similarly, in Brazil – Desiccated Coconut, the Appellate Body emphasised that "Article VI of the GATT 1994" cannot "be applied independently of the SCM Agreement in the context of the WTO".

3. As the United States has argued in a previous dispute, and as WTO panels and the Appellate Body have consistently found, the Anti-Dumping Agreement provides for only three permissible responses to dumping. These are provisional measures, price undertakings, and definitive duties, as provided in Articles 7, 8, and 9 respectively. As Thailand has explained, the Enhanced Bond Requirement does not fall within any of these three permissible responses to dumping. To permit the Enhanced Bond Requirement as a fourth permissible response to dumping would undermine the relationship between the Anti-Dumping Agreement and the provisions of Article VI of the GATT 1994.

(b) In any event, the Ad Note covers only measures applied before a final determination of dumping

4. Even assuming, arguendo, that the Ad Note provided for a fourth independent permissible response to dumping, the Ad Note could not be invoked to justify the Enhanced Bond Requirement as it addresses only provisional measures applied before a final determination of dumping is made.

5. The Ad Note provides that a reasonable security can only be applied "pending final determination of the facts in any case of suspected dumping or subsidization". The United States argues that the "final determination of the facts" in the Ad Note is, in the context of a retrospective duty assessment system, the same as the "determination of the final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties" referred to in Article 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

6. The United States ignores the qualification in the Ad Note that it applies pending "final determination of the facts in any case of suspected dumping". The reference to "suspected" dumping places a strict temporal limitation on the scope of the Ad Note. Under the Anti-Dumping Agreement, "dumping" is determined and no longer suspected at the point of final determination of dumping in an investigation conducted Article 5.1 "to determine the existence, degree and effect of any alleged dumping".

7. Thailand notes that the United States, in its response to questions from the Panel, conceded that "the existence of dumping is finally established when USDOC issues a final determination in an investigation". It is hard to see how, following a final determination of the existence of dumping and the imposition of definitive duties, dumping continues to be "suspected". Thailand notes that that the US anti-dumping law uses the word "suspect" in precisely the same manner to refer to the period between a preliminary and final determination of dumping. Under US law, dumping is only "suspected" during the period between the preliminary and final determinations of dumping. In these circumstances, the reference in the Ad Note to cases of "suspected" dumping must be read to refer to cases where no final determination of dumping has yet been made.

8. The United States argues that its interpretation that "dumping ... is 'suspected' until final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties is determined" is "supported by" the use of the term "levy" in Article VI:2 of the GATT 1994 as well as footnote 12 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. The United States reads the footnote to define "levying" of duties to refer only to the final assessment of liability. However, because the footnote also defines "levy" to include the "collection" of a duty, the collection of estimated anti-dumping duties following the imposition of an order (as cash deposits) can also be said to be "levied". The United States' limited interpretation of the term "levy" is problematic when read in conjunction with Article 17.4 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, which provides that a Member may refer a matter to the Dispute Settlement Body only "if final action has been taken by the administering authorities of the importing Member to levy definitive anti-dumping duties or to accept price undertakings ...". Under the United States' interpretation of "levy", a US anti-dumping order could not be challenged in WTO dispute settlement proceedings until after a final assessment of duties in an administrative review. This would limit considerably the ability of Members to challenge measures under the Anti-Dumping Agreement in dispute settlement proceedings. In practice, this interpretation has not been followed, as Members have successfully challenged anti-dumping measures following the final determination of dumping, but prior to the completion of assessment reviews, under the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

9. Moreover, as Thailand explained in its answers to the Panel's questions 9 and 11, the existence of dumping is not called into question simply because the amount of final liability on particular shipments – or even all of an exporter's shipments in a given year – is zero. Thus, footnote 22 to the Anti-Dumping Agreement provides, with specific reference to retrospective systems, that "a finding in the most recent assessment proceeding under subparagraph 3.1 of Article 9 that no duty is to be levied shall not by itself require the authorities to terminate the definitive duty". In the same vein, the United States argued in US – DRAMS, in response to a question from the panel, that "a definitive anti-dumping duty (or 'order' in US parlance) is 'imposed' within the meaning of Art. 11 even when no duties are actually being 'assessed' (or collected)."

10. This difference between a finding that dumping exists and is not merely suspected and the much later determination of the final amount of duties to be paid is reflected in the text of Article VI and the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Thus, while the Ad Note refers to the "final determination of the facts in any case of suspected dumping", Article 9.3.1 refers only to the "determination of the final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties" in subsequent reviews. In its responses to the Panel's questions, the United States acknowledges that the determination under Article 9.3.1 addresses only to "the amount an importer must pay in duties for entries made in a particular year". In addition, the United States accepts that "[l]iability for the payment of antidumping duties is triggered upon importation of merchandise" and not at the time of the assessment review.

- (c) The Anti-Dumping Agreement and Article VI do not permit bonds or cash deposits greater than the margin of dumping
- (i) Cash deposits after a final determination of dumping are "duties" and permitted under Article 9

11. Contrary to the United States' arguments, cash deposits of estimated anti-dumping duties collected by the United States after the imposition of an anti-dumping order are duties. Thus, the Appellate Body has characterised the collection of cash deposits of estimated anti-dumping duties following a final determination of dumping as the payment of anti-dumping duties. The Appellate Body in US – Zeroing (Japan) confirmed that "[a]t the time of importation, an administering authority may collect duties, in the form of a cash deposit, on all export sales...".

12. The United States' anti-dumping regulations also expressly recognise that cash deposits are estimated duties and differ from a security in that "upon the issuance of an order [i.e. following a final determination of dumping], importers no longer may post bonds as security for antidumping or countervailing duties, but instead must make a cash deposit of estimated duties". The US Tariff Act provides that following final determinations of dumping and injury, the USDOC must publish an anti-dumping order that "requires the deposit of estimated anti-dumping duties pending liquidation of entries of merchandise at the same time as estimated normal customs duties on that merchandise are deposited".

- (ii) Article 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement does not permit cash deposits in excess of the margin of dumping

13. The United States contemplates the possibility of "cash deposits in excess of the margin of dumping established in the order". However, the United States' argument runs counter to the carefully-defined limits on amounts of cash deposits in Article VI:2 of the GATT and Article 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement that provide that they shall not "shall not exceed the margin of dumping established under Article 2".

14. Contrary to the interpretation put forward by the United States in these proceedings, US law does not permit cash deposits of estimated duties to exceed the margin of dumping currently in effect. As set out in 19 CFR § 351.209(b)(3) "for all entries subject to suspension of liquidation" the Secretary will "instruct the Customs Service to require for each entry of the merchandise suspended... a cash deposit at the rates determined in the affirmative final determination". Similarly, the "deposit of estimated anti-dumping duties pending liquidation of entries of merchandise" must take the form of a "cash deposit" based on the USDOC's determination of normal value and export price (i.e., the dumping margin).

- (iii) To read the Ad Note to permit cash deposits or security greater than the margin of dumping after a final determination would undermine Article 9

15. By arguing that it may impose bonding requirements or even cash deposits of estimated duties in excess of the margin of dumping following a final determination, the United States is, in effect, arguing that the disciplines of the Anti-Dumping Agreement do not apply to the measures it may take after it has imposed an anti-dumping order and before it completes the final assessment of liability for anti-dumping duties. In the meantime, the United States contends, it may impose any measures it chooses, even in excess of the margin of dumping, so long as it considers those measures to be "reasonable" in accordance with the Ad Note.

16. To accept this argument, the Panel would have to conclude that the negotiators of the Anti-Dumping Agreement negotiated detailed rules governing every aspect of permissible specific action against dumping except the measures that may be taken between the final determination of dumping and imposition of definitive anti-dumping duties and the subsequent payment of the amount of duties finally assessed. This cannot possibly be correct. To permit the imposition of additional action against dumping in this manner under the Ad Note would wholly undermine the carefully-negotiated disciplines of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and particularly Article 9. Members would be free to burden dumped imports with duties or bonding requirements greater than the margin of dumping. This is completely contrary to the purpose of Article 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, which is to limit the amount of any measures taken to counteract dumping. It is also contrary to the purpose of Article 18.1, which is to limit the type and range of measures that may be taken to counteract dumping.

- (d) Thailand's interpretation does not undermine the ability of Members to take ordinary enforcement measures to secure the payment of anti-dumping duties

17. The United States has attempted to distract the Panel by arguing that Thailand's claims, if accepted, would prevent the United States from collecting cash deposits of estimated anti-dumping duties under its retrospective duty assessment system and would prevent its "customs authorities from using ordinary principles of customs administration to establish security amounts for antidumping and countervailing duties."

18. This is inaccurate. First, the United States is authorised under Article 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement to maintain its current practice of collecting cash deposits of estimated anti-dumping duties following the imposition of definitive anti-dumping duties. Thailand has not challenged this aspect of the United States' anti-dumping regime. Nothing in Thailand's arguments would in any way affect this practice.

19. Second, Thailand has not challenged the right of the United States to use "ordinary principles of customs administration" to establish security amounts for any duty liability, including liability for anti-dumping duties. The United States may act under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994 to impose security measures "necessary to secure compliance with its [customs] laws and regulations." This right is protected by footnote 24 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, which reiterates that the prohibition in Article 18.1 of that Agreement on non-permissible specific action against dumping does not preclude other action under GATT Article XX(d) necessary to secure compliance with customs laws and regulations.

20. In summary, Thailand's claim is not that the United States cannot use "ordinary principles of customs administration" to establish security amounts for importers of subject shrimp. Instead, Thailand's claim is that in this case, the United States has abandoned those ordinary principles in favour of taking specific action against dumping not "in accordance with the provisions of GATT 1994, as interpreted by this Agreement" within the meaning of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

- (e) The possibility of importer-specific bond determinations pursuant to the October 2006 Notice does not make the Enhanced Bond Requirement consistent with WTO law

21. As Thailand has previously explained, "importer-specific bond sufficiency determinations" under the October 2006 Notice do not cure the WTO-inconsistencies of the Enhanced Bond Requirement, but rather exacerbates them.

22. The Enhanced Bond Requirement remains an impermissible "specific action against dumping". It was applied (and still applies) ab initio to all importers of subject shrimp, simply because they import that merchandise. The October 2006 Notice provides that "in the absence of a submission by the importer" the "CBP would calculate the bond amounts using the [default] formulas". Furthermore, Exhibit US-12 indicates that, to date, not a single importer of subject shrimp has been granted a 100 per cent reduction. Thus, all importers of subject shrimp are still required to post enhanced bonds in excess of the bonds required under the Basic Bond Requirement. And, as Thailand has previously noted, the importers that obtained individual bond amounts were required to participate in a new and burdensome administrative proceeding simply in order to obtain partial mitigation of their bond amounts.

23. Moreover, Exhibit US-12 indicates that only 21 out of an estimated 1'346 importers of subject shrimp have been granted reductions pursuant to the October 2006 Notice. Thailand notes that during the First Substantive Meeting, the United States explained that seven importers had Thai addresses. Of these importers, apparently six received a reduction in the enhanced bond of 25 per cent and one received a reduction of 45 per cent. In these circumstances, the October 2006 notice cannot be said to remedy the WTO-inconsistencies of the Enhanced Bond Requirement.

2. The Enhanced Bond Requirement is not a reasonable Security within the meaning of the Ad Note

(a) The amount of the security is not based on a reasonable estimate of anti-dumping duty liability

24. The term "reasonable" security in the Ad Note must be read in the context of the other provisions of Article VI and the Anti-Dumping Agreement that address the amount of security or duties that may be collected. If WTO Members are free to collect double the amount of the effective dumping margin in duties and securities simply because "increases in rates ... occur with some frequency", the constraint of reasonableness in the Ad Note is undermined and WTO Members would have carte blanche to set security amounts based on mere possibilities that dumping margins may increase. WTO Members would effectively be able to impose duties that go beyond the prevailing margin of dumping in the guise of "securities in the form of cash deposits" for the duration of an anti-dumping order.

25. Even assuming arguendo that the Ad Note permits an additional security above the amount of the margin of dumping, to be reasonable within the meaning of the Ad Note, the amount of any such security must be based on a clearly-identifiable and reasonable need to exceed the amount of the margin of dumping. Thus, one test of the reasonableness of the amount of security required from importers of subject shrimp is whether the CBP's estimate that dumping margins for all exporters of subject shrimp are likely to increase by 100 per cent in every successive review period is valid. Thailand submits that the CBP's estimate is arbitrary and wholly speculative. The assumption that dumping margins are likely to increase is unequivocally contradicted by (1) the evidence regarding changes in dumping margins for exporters of shrimp from Thailand (2) evidence regarding changes in dumping margins for shrimp exporters from other countries such as India and (3) the earlier CBP analysis of changes in dumping margins for agriculture/aquaculture merchandise, on which the United States relies. Thailand notes that there are several other methodological problems with the CBP analysis, which was submitted by the United States as Exhibit US-10. In these circumstances, as the USCIT has found, neither the CBP's assumption that dumping margins are likely to increase in every instance nor its choice of 100 per cent as an estimate of any increase can possibly be described as "reasonable."

(b) The Amount of Security is not based on a reasonable assessment of the Risk to Revenue

(i) Importers of subject shrimp are not characterised by an elevated risk of default

26. The assertion that importers of subject shrimp have a significant and elevated risk of default cannot be sustained. First, it is contradicted by the positive compliance history of importers of subject shrimp. Second, the United States' argument that importers of subject shrimp prevent an elevated risk of default is based on allegations regarding capitalisation and frequent entry/exit that are not supported by any evidence. Third, the US assertion that importers of "agriculture/aquaculture" merchandise are homogenous entities that share similar characteristics and consequently have similar elevated default risk is baseless. The United States itself concedes that certain importers of "agriculture/aquaculture" merchandise "do not have the same capital structure" as other importers. It appears that the United States also accepts that, even within the far narrower category of importers of subject shrimp, different companies can have differing default risks. Moreover, the evidence cited by the United States in its submissions does not support any generalisations about all importers of agriculture/aquaculture merchandise. As Thailand has explained, the CBP has said that historically, there is minimal experience of default on anti-dumping duties. The vast majority of defaults that have occurred refer to the particular situation of crawfish. There is simply no evidence that simply because there have been defaults on crawfish, the large and disparate group of importers of agriculture/aquaculture merchandise all share an elevated risk of default. Fourth, the United States has previously argued that the existence of the process for obtaining individual bond determinations under the 20 October 2006 Notice somehow supports the assertion that importers of subject shrimp have an elevated risk of default. The fact that the United States made a presumption that importers of subject shrimp have an elevated default risk and put in place a process to mitigate the impact of this presumption for certain importers does not constitute evidence to support the presumption.

(ii) The value of imports covered by specific anti-dumping duty orders is irrelevant

27. It is undisputed that the total value of imports covered by the six antidumping duty orders on shrimp provides no indication about the likelihood or probability that antidumping duties on shrimp will not be collected by US authorities. Thailand has explained elsewhere why this factor provides no reliable indication about the magnitude or extent of future write-offs of antidumping duties. Thailand further notes that in the absence of an elevated risk of default or an elevated risk that assessment rates will increase relative to cash deposit rates, this factor cannot, by itself, justify selective resort to the Enhanced Bonding Requirement. There are numerous combinations of United States anti-dumping orders that would cover a larger value of trade than the $2.2 billion covered by the six orders on shrimp.

28. For these reasons, the Enhanced Bond Requirement cannot be considered to be "reasonable" within the meaning of the Ad Note to Article VI of the GATT 1994.

3. The Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article XI:1 of the GATT 1994

29. Thailand has submitted extensive evidence about the costs associated with the Enhanced Bond Requirement. This undisputed evidence of increased costs suffices to establish that the Enhanced Bond Requirement has made the importation of subject shrimp "more burdensome" and therefore operates as a "restriction" within the meaning of Article XI:1. Contrary to the contentions of the United States, consistent GATT/WTO jurisprudence indicates that Thailand is not required to additionally establish that the Enhanced Bond Requirement has adversely affected the trade volumes of Thai shrimp.

30. Furthermore, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is not comparable to the measures in the Dominican Republic – Import and Sale of Cigarettes case because the importation of subject shrimp is contingent on compliance with the Enhanced Bond Requirement and this requirement is enforced in connection with importation and is applied solely to importers of those products.

4. Alternatively, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Articles II:1(a) and II:(b) of the GATT 1994

31. The United States argues that if Thailand's claim is upheld then WTO Members "may not maintain bonds as a means to secure importers' obligations unless the bonds are specifically included in a Member's schedule". To the contrary, even if Thailand prevails on its alternative claim, WTO Members will be permitted under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994 to require bonds from importers that are necessary to secure compliance with US customs laws and regulations. The United States also argues that because the CBP "does not charge for bonds" there is no violation of the second sentence of Article II:1(b) of the GATT 1994. Thailand notes that the United States made the same argument to the panel in the US – Certain EC Products, which rejected it. The present Panel should do likewise, and for the same reasons.

5. The selective application of the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article X:3(A) of the GATT 1994

32. In response to Thailand's claims under Article X:3(a) of the GATT 1994, the United States argues that Article X:3(a) does not apply to the present case because Thailand's claims relate to "the substantive content of the additional bond directive". However, recent Appellate Body jurisprudence has clarified that the "substantive content" of the instruments establishing the Enhanced Bond Requirement (which are instruments that apply and implement Sections 113.11 and 113.13 of the Customs Regulation) can be examined under Article X:3(a) of the GATT 1994. In any case, Thailand's claims also arise from the administration of the Enhanced Bond Requirement. Therefore, even if the substantive content of the instruments establishing the Enhanced Bond Requirement could not be reviewed under Article X:3(a), this would not provide a basis not to resolve Thailand's claims.

33. Thailand has submitted that, in its administration of the legal requirement that importers must provide a bond in a sufficient amount, the United States differentiates between importers of subject shrimp and all other importers. The United States has not disputed any of Thailand's factual assertions. Thailand also notes that the evidence supplied by the United States establishes that the differentiation between importers of subject shrimp and other importers consistently results in higher continuous bond amounts for importers of subject shrimp. The United States' substantive defence to Thailand's claims is entirely dependent on the assertion that importers of subject shrimp have a unique and elevated risk of default. The evidence before the Panel establishes that importers of subject shrimp present no different risk of default than any of the numerous other importers with which the CBP deals and accordingly the United States' defence must be rejected.

6. The Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article I:1 of the GATT 1994

34. In response to Thailand's claim under Article I:1 of the GATT the United States asserts that it "did no more than respond to the special risks associated with [entries of subject shrimp]". The United States fails to explain how the existence of "special risks associated with entries of subject shrimp" in any way detracts from Thailand's contentions that (1) shrimp from the preferred countries and shrimp from Thailand are "like products" and (2) shrimp from preferred countries are provided with an "advantage" that is not extended to "immediately and unconditionally" to shrimp from Thailand.

7. The Enhanced Bond Requirement is not "necessary to secure compliance" within the meaning of Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994

35. In its discussion under Article XX(d), the United States has completely failed to conduct the requisite comparative analysis to explain (1) precisely how the anti-dumping duty orders imposed on shrimp differ from all other anti-dumping orders currently in place and (2) how any such differences necessitate resort to the Enhanced Bond Requirement rather than the Basic Bond Requirement.

36. Thailand submits that the anti-dumping orders imposed on shrimp do not differ in any material respect from all the other anti-dumping duty orders currently in place. First, there is no reason to indicate that substantial increases over cash deposit rates are more likely to occur in administrative reviews involving shrimp products as opposed to all other products. Second, there is no reason to believe that when faced with supplemental bills for increased liability, importers of shrimp products have any higher default risk than importers of other products subject to anti-dumping duty orders. Third, there is no reason to believe that the value of trade covered by these six orders is unique because there are many other antidumping duty orders currently in place or combinations of antidumping duty orders that account for a comparable value of trade. In any case, Thailand maintains and the United States appears to concede that any differences in the total value of trade covered by an order or a combination of orders cannot independently justify resort to the Enhanced Bond Requirement.

37. In addition, the United States has not responded at all to Thailand's arguments that the "growing and serious non-collection problem associated with antidumping duties" on which the United States relies to justify its use of the Enhanced Bond Requirement can be attributed entirely to factors that are not present in the case of subject shrimp from Thailand. Thus, the United States has completely failed to respond to Thailand's contentions that these non-collection problems are attributable to the manner in which dumping margins are calculated in non-market economy cases, significant surety bankruptcies, and exemptions (now removed) from cash deposit requirements for new shippers of products subject to antidumping duties. Given that Thailand is not treated as a non-market economy and the new shipper bonding privilege has been removed, there is no reason to assume that the non-collection problems that occurred with crawfish will recur in respect of antidumping duties imposed on subject shrimp from Thailand.

38. Thailand also maintains that the United States has failed to discharge its burden of establishing that the Enhanced Bond Requirement meets the conditions set out in the chapeau to Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994.

8. The use of zeroing was inconsistent with article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement

39. In light of the United States' answers to the Panel's questions 1 and 3, it is clear that there is no dispute that the United States' use of zeroing in the anti-dumping investigation at issue in this case is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement in several previous disputes.

9. Conclusion

40. For these reasons, the Panel should reject the United States' arguments and find that both the use of zeroing and the Enhanced Bond Requirement are inconsistent with the relevant provisions of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and the GATT 1994. Had the United States not used zeroing to inflate artificially the margin of dumping, it may not have been able to impose dumping duties on Thai shrimp. Then, in turn, the United States would not have imposed the Enhanced Bond Requirement on Thai shrimp exports. In these circumstances, the concurrent application of these two inconsistent measures on imports of subject shrimp from Thailand doubly burdens exports of an industry that plays an important role in Thailand's rural development.

ANNEX C

EXECUTIVE SUMMARIES OF THE FIRST WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF THE THIRD PARTIES

CONTENTS		PAGE
Annex C - 1	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of Brazil	C-2
Annex C - 2	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of Chile	C-7
Annex C - 3	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of the European Communities	C-10
Annex C - 4	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of India	C-15
Annex C - 5	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of Japan	C-21
Annex C - 6	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of Korea	C-24
Annex C - 7	Executive Summary of the First Written Submission of Mexico	C-27

ANNEX C - 1

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF THE FIRST WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF BRAZIL

(18 May 2007)

1. Introduction

1. In this submission, Brazil sets out its views on the reasons why the special bonding requirement applied by the United States against imports of certain frozen warm-water shrimp subject to anti-dumping duties, originating in Brazil, China, Ecuador, India, Thailand and Vietnam ("Enhanced Bond Requirement" or "EBR")¹ violates Articles 18.1 and 1 of the Agreement on Implementation of Article VI of the GATT 1994 (the "AD Agreement") and Articles VI:2 and II:1(b) of the GATT 1994, or in the alternative Articles 9 and 1 of the AD Agreement. Further, the EBR is not "reasonable security" under Note 1 Ad Article VI:2-3 and cannot be justified pursuant to Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994.

2. The Measures At Issue

2. Responding to a report by US Customs and Border Protection ("CBP")² on fiscal year 2003 uncollected anti-dumping and countervailing duties, on 9 July 2004 CBP amended its existing Bond Directive governing Customs bonding requirements, and set new formulas for calculating minimum continuous bond amounts for importers of agriculture/aquaculture products subject to anti-dumping or countervailing duty (CVD) orders.³ This EBR requires a bond for 10 percent of duties, taxes and fees paid by the importer in the prior 12 months (i.e., the normal continuous bond amount), plus 100 per cent of the cash deposit rate established in the anti-dumping order (or most recent administrative review), multiplied by the value of the importer's entries of that product over the previous 12 months.⁴ Pursuant to a clarification issued by CBP on 10 August 2005, the EBR applies to "shrimp covered by anti-dumping or countervailing duty cases", the only designated "Covered Cases" within the only designated "Special Category", agriculture/aquaculture merchandise.

3. In October 2006, an in-depth examination of the EBR by the US Government Accountability Office ("GAO") concluded that this bonding requirement "represented a significant change from CBP's traditional method of setting bond amounts," and was "inconsistently implemented" as between shrimp importers, due to a lack of "clear and transparent guidance".⁵ Days before the US Court of International Trade ("USCIT") issued a stinging judgment against CBP in domestic litigation on the EBR,⁶ CBP issued a 24 October 2006 Federal Register notice further modifying the EBR by identifying the factors it would consider in determining, prospectively for individual importers, whether to reduce a bond amount.⁷

¹ Frozen warmwater shrimp from Brazil, Thailand, India and these other countries subject to anti-dumping duties is referred to herein as "subject shrimp."

² Continued Dumping and Subsidy Offset Act (CDSOA) annual report for fiscal year 2003, Exhibit THA-11 (WT/DS343).

³ Exhibit THA-2.

⁴ Exhibit THA-5. The EBR is specific to subject shrimp, but if any other goods were subject to the EBR but not to AD/CV duties, they would have no cash deposit rate, and the bond amount would be the same as under a normal continuous bond.

⁵ Exhibit THA-10 (WT/DS343) at 7.

⁶ Exhibit THA-9.

⁷ Exhibit THA-5.

3. The Enhanced Bond Requirement Is Inconsistent "As Such" With Articles 18.1 and 1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement

4. The EBR should be analyzed as a separate measure, and as constituting "specific action" imposed "against" dumping inconsistent with Articles 18.1 and 1 of the AD Agreement.

(b) The Enhanced Bond Requirement Is "Specific Action" and Is Imposed "Against Dumping"

5. As the Appellate Body stated in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), if a measure "may be taken only when the constituent elements of dumping . . . are present", it is a "specific action" within the meaning of Article 18.1.⁸ The CBP notices imposing or clarifying the EBR state that it applies only to goods subject to a US anti-dumping or CVD order. Since US law only permits such orders to be imposed where the US authorities have determined that the constituent elements of dumping or subsidization are present, the EBR is a "specific action against dumping."

6. The EBR corresponds to the fines on importers provided by Article 93V of Mexico's Foreign Trade Act, which the panel in Mexico – Anti-Dumping Measures on Rice condemned under Article 18.1. That panel also found that by threatening to impose fines on importers of a product subject to an anti-dumping or CVD investigation, Article 93V provided a "specific action" not permitted by the AD or SCM Agreements.⁹

7. The United States asserts that the EBR responds to "noncollection risk."¹⁰ Yet Customs is not acting against all importers whose circumstances indicate high noncollection risk—it is only acting against those who import subject shrimp.

8. The EBR is specific action "against" dumping because, in effect, it punishes importers for importing subject shrimp. The EBR indisputably meets the test explained by the Appellate Body in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment).¹¹ It imposes a much larger bond requirement, and thus a significantly greater financial burden¹², on certain importers simply because they import shrimp subject to anti-dumping measures. Furthermore, the 10 August 2005 notice makes it clear that the bond requirement may be altered if the importer can show that it has ceased importing subject shrimp, as also acknowledged by the USCIT.¹³

(c) The Enhanced Bond Requirement Is Not a Permissible Response to Dumping

9. The EBR is also not taken "in accordance with the provisions of GATT 1994, as interpreted by [the AD] Agreement". The only permissible responses to dumping are definitive anti-dumping duties, provisional measures and price undertakings—and the EBR is none of these. It is therefore inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the AD Agreement.

⁸ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 239.

⁹ Panel Report, Mexico – Anti-Dumping Measures on Rice, paras. 7.276, 7.278.

¹⁰ United States' first written submission, para. 35.

¹¹ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 250.

¹² The United States contends that the prohibitive cost of an enhanced bond, including the requirement of collateral, is a matter between the surety and the importer and not the responsibility of the United States. However, because surety companies must have sureties for customs bonds authorized and certified by the US Government in order to be permitted to write such bonds, and CBP may collect duties from the surety if the principal defaults, the United States has a direct interest in the amount of security required by sureties.

¹³ Thailand's first written submission, para. 183.

10. The EBR on subject shrimp is inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the AD Agreement "as such". It is a "rule or norm" attributable to a WTO Member, which mandates enhanced bonding requirements on subject shrimp and which has general and prospective application on imports of subject shrimp.¹⁴

4. The Enhanced Bond Requirement Does Not Constitute "Reasonable Security" Permitted by Note 1 Ad Article VI:2-3

11. The United States places the weight of its defence in this dispute on the assertion that the EBR is a "reasonable" surety system permitted under Note 1 Ad paragraphs 2 and 3 of GATT Article VI. However, the EBR falls outside the scope of the Ad Note. The text of the Note refers to security for payment of anti-dumping or countervailing duties "pending final determination of the facts in any case of suspected dumping or subsidization", i.e. the Note only applies during an anti-dumping investigation, and does not apply beyond the date of the final anti-dumping determination and order. The US argument that the "final determination of the facts" does not arrive until the final duty assessment¹⁵ is misplaced. The Note refers to security in cases of "suspected dumping," but dumping is only "suspected dumping" before the anti-dumping investigation has concluded. The US imposed the EBR on importers of subject shrimp only after final anti-dumping measures were imposed on 1 February 2005, and over two years later the EBR continues in effect.

12. Even assuming that the EBR falls within the scope of the Ad Note, the EBR does not constitute "reasonable security" under that provision. The use of "or" in "bond or cash deposit" in the Ad Note gives the importing Member a choice between either bond or cash deposit as a "reasonable security" – not both at once. Furthermore, the reasonableness of any "security for the payment of anti-dumping or countervailing duties" must relate to a risk-based standard for the need for security against non-payment. The decision to apply the EBR to shrimp was not based on any evidence of actual default; moreover, to date, CBP continues not to apply the EBR to imports with proven high default rates without providing any explanation, continues to apply the EBR to importers without any default history and refuses to reduce the amounts of enhanced bonds already provided. Remarkably, the USCIT itself has issued a preliminary injunction (although only for eight importers) on the basis that the EBR is likely to be found "arbitrary and capricious" – confirming that the EBR is unreasonable.¹⁶

5. The Enhanced Bonding Requirement is Also Inconsistent with Articles VI:2 and II:1(b) of the GATT and Article 1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement

13. The fees and interest costs associated with the duplicative requirements to pay a cash deposit and provide an enhanced bond also have the result that the total duty burden on the importer will exceed the amount of the dumping margin in violation of Article VI:2 of the GATT. Panels have recognized that the fees and interest costs associated with a bonding requirement are a real cost to importers.¹⁷ Because the EBR is applied other than under the circumstances provided for in Article VI, it constitutes a breach by the United States of its obligations under Article 1 of the AD Agreement and Article VI of the GATT. As a consequence, the EBR and the anti-dumping measures on subject shrimp are not an "anti-dumping or countervailing duty applied consistently with the provisions of Article VI," within the meaning of GATT Article II:2(b), and these measures therefore impose an "other duty or charge" in breach of US obligations under GATT Article II:1(b).

¹⁴ Appellate Body Report, US – Zeroing (EC), para. 198. See also Appellate Body Report, US – Zeroing (EC), para. 188, and Appellate Body Report, US – Corrosion-Resistant Steel Sunset Review, para. 82.

¹⁵ United States' first written submission, para. 22. Brazil also notes the striking difference between the texts of Ad Note 1 (final determination of facts) and Article 9.3.1 of the AD Agreement, cited by the United States in support of its argument (determination of the final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties).

¹⁶ Exhibit THA-9, p. 46-47, 53, 57-61.

¹⁷ See, e.g., EEC – Minimum Import Prices, para. 4.6 (accepting that interest charges and costs in connection with the lodging of a security associated with an import certificate were in excess of bound duties).

6. In the Alternative, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is Inconsistent as such with Articles 9 and 1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement

14. In the alternative, even if the EBR is to be analyzed together with the anti-dumping measures it enforces, it is inconsistent with Article 9 of the AD Agreement, because the United States is collecting duties in excess of the amounts permitted thereunder. The EBR is inconsistent with Article 9.1, because the charges imposed by the US are not the "full margin of dumping or less"; with Article 9.2, because the anti-dumping duty collected by the United States is not collected in the "appropriate amounts"; and Article 9.3, because the amount of the anti-dumping duty exceeds the margin of dumping.

15. In consequence, the US anti-dumping measures on subject shrimp are imposed inconsistently with the United States' obligations under Article 1 of the AD Agreement. As a further consequence, the EBR and the anti-dumping measures on subject shrimp fall outside GATT Article II:2(b) and are in breach of GATT Article II:1(b) for the reasons set forth in the preceding paragraph.

16. While the United States may have a right to collect cash deposits, it has no right to require both a cash deposit equivalent to the full amount of the dumping margin and a bonding requirement as an anti-dumping enforcement measure.

7. The Enhanced Bond Requirement Cannot be Justified under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994

17. The United States has invoked Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994 as an affirmative defence.¹⁸ The United States bears the burden of proof to demonstrate that all conditions of Article XX(d) are fulfilled. Brazil offers the following comments on Article XX(d) without prejudice to its right to submit further arguments at the oral hearing.¹⁹

(b) The Enhanced Bond Requirement Is Not "Necessary to Secure Compliance" Within the Meaning of Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994

18. The United States has not demonstrated that the EBR satisfies the requirements of Article XX(d).²⁰ The United States has done no more than make unsubstantiated assertions that agriculture/aquaculture products in general, or shrimp in particular, create per se a critical risk of default in AD/CV duty collection. General, abstract allegations such as these are insufficient to satisfy the burden of proof under Article XX.

19. Moreover, the GAO's finding that when the CBP examined AD and CVD cases to evaluate the risk of uncollected duties, 67 per cent of the time, duty rates decreased or stayed the same between the time of entry and final liquidation²¹, contradicts the United States' general assertion that there is a need to impose untargeted surety requirements to guarantee increased future duty payments.

¹⁸ United States' first written submission, paras. 61-77.

¹⁹ It is not entirely clear whether the references made by the United States to Article XX encompass claims advanced by the complainants under Article 18.1 of the AD Agreement. The United States simply argues that Article XX reinforces its allegations that the EBR is not inconsistent with "US WTO obligations" (emphasis added). Brazil proceeds, however, under the assumption that the US defense relates exclusively to claims under the GATT provisions.

²⁰ United States' first written submission, paras. 61-77.

²¹ Exhibit THA-10, at 16. Where no administrative review of an order is requested on the anniversary of the order or no administrative review is conducted, liquidation is set at the rates set by the final determination and order. It is only when an administrative review is conducted that a rate may change.

20. The United States suggests that its decision to designate the shrimp anti-dumping orders as "Covered Cases" is "due in part to low capitalization and high turnover rates in the industry as a whole"²², and a belief "that importers of agriculture/aquaculture merchandise tended to be undercapitalized."²³ Yet importers of agriculture and aquaculture products do not necessarily have low capitalization. Conversely, any consumer goods industry where the importer is a middleman rather than a user of the product imported is likely to be characterized as thinly capitalized and subject to high turnover rates. Thus, the US concerns do not apply to all agriculture and aquaculture importers, and can apply to importers in many other sectors.

21. Even assuming that the United States can demonstrate that particular features of aquaculture and agriculture imports warrant particular surety measures, the United States had at its disposal less trade restrictive measures that it could reasonably employ (e.g. more frequent investigations, raising the cash deposit rate immediately upon making a preliminary finding in an anti-dumping administrative review, etc.).²⁴

22. Finally, Brazil recalls that as the GAO Report states, adoption of the EBR – by transferring the burden of higher bonds to foreign-based suppliers – is already giving rise to results that defeat, rather than make a contribution to, the purpose allegedly pursued by the US Customs authorities.²⁵

(c) The Enhanced Bond Requirement Does Not Secure Compliance with Measures That Are "Not Inconsistent" With the WTO Agreement

23. Furthermore, the adoption of the EBR was directly related to enforcement of the *Byrd Amendment*²⁶ in defiance of the adopted Panel and Appellate Body reports condemning that illegal measure and in disagreement with the US's stated intentions to comply with the DSB's rulings and recommendations.²⁷ The explicit nexus traced by the US authorities between the EBR and the Byrd Amendment constitutes undeniable evidence of a bias that no legitimate reading of Article XX can support.

8. Conclusions

24. Brazil respectfully requests that the Panel find that the EBR is inconsistent as such with Articles 18.1 and 1 of the AD Agreement, and Articles VI:2 and II:1(b) of the GATT 1994, or in the alternative with Articles 9 and 1 of the AD Agreement. Brazil further requests that the Panel find that the EBR does not constitute "reasonable security" under Note 1 Ad Article VI:2-3 of the GATT 1994, and that the EBR cannot be justified under Article XX(d) of the GATT 1994. Brazil supports the request of Thailand that the Panel, pursuant to its authority under Article 19.1 of the DSU, suggest that the United States bring its measure into conformity with its WTO obligations, by immediately releasing any bonds held by the CBP for imports of any subject shrimp pursuant to the EBR, so that those imports would be secured by the normal basic bond requirements applying to all other US imports.

²² United States' first written submission, para. 27.

²³ United States' first written submission, para. 14.

²⁴ Thailand's first written submission, paras. 84-89.

²⁵ Exhibit THA-10, at p. 6. See also Thailand's first written submission at p. 35, 43-44.

²⁶ Thailand's first written submission, paras. 94-97.

²⁷ Dispute Settlement Body, Minutes of the Meeting of 27 January 2003 (WT/DSB/M/142, 6 March 2003), para. 60. At the time the "9 July 2004 Amendment" was adopted by the US Customs authorities, almost 18 months had passed from the date on which the United States announced its intention to implement the DSB's rulings and recommendations in the Byrd Amendment dispute.

ANNEX C - 2

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF THE FIRST WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF CHILE

(10 May 2007)

1. Introduction

1. This submission containing the grounds and legal argument in support of Chile's position is made under Articles 10.2 and 10.3 of the Dispute Settlement Understanding ("the DSU"). Chile makes this submission in light of its systemic interest in the correct application of the Agreement on Implementation of Article VI of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 (the "Anti-Dumping Agreement").

2. Thailand asserts that the United States used the "zeroing" methodology in the determination of margins of dumping and applied significantly enhanced bonding requirements with respect to imports of certain frozen warmwater shrimp from Thailand.

3. Chile submits, in accordance with the factual evidence provided by Thailand, that the measures concerned are inconsistent with the United States obligations under Articles 2.4.2. and 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and Articles XI:1, I, II:2 (b), first and second sentences, and X:3 of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 (the "GATT 1994").

(b) The USDOC's Use of Zeroing

4. Repeated reports by panels and the Appellate Body have declared that the use of "zeroing" methodology during the investigations to determine margins of dumping is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. As it is described by the panel in US – Zeroing (Japan):

Where an authority establishes the existence of margins of dumping during the investigation phase by making multiple, model-by-model comparisons between average export prices and average normal values and by aggregating the results of those comparisons into an overall margin of dumping, Article 2.4.2. of the AD Agreement requires that the results of those comparisons be fully taken into account in the numerator of the overall margin of dumping.

5. There is a consistent line of reasoning in the Appellate Body reports, from EC – Bed Linen to US Zeroing (EC), that holds that "zeroing" in the context of the weighted-average-to-weighted-average methodology in original investigations is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

6. As Chile has submitted in past disputes, involving "zeroing" methodology, it is urgent that the United States and in particular the United States Department of Commerce (USDOC) relinquishes for good the application of this methodology in original investigations and subsequent reviews in full implementation with the abovementioned reports.

(c) The Enhanced Bond Requirement

7. Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement is clear in stating that no specific action against dumping of exports from another member can be taken except in accordance with the provisions of GATT 1994, as interpreted by the Agreement.

8. United States in paragraph 31 of its First Submission states that the Additional Bond Directive does not constitute a specific action against dumping because it does not meet any of the criteria singled out in the same paragraph: (1) the action is taken only when the constituent elements of dumping are present (i.e. it is specific to dumping); (2) the action is taken "against dumping"; and (3) it is inconsistent with the provisions of GATT 1994. United States explained that the additional bond directive serves to secure an otherwise unsecured debt owed to the US government in the form of assessed antidumping duties that exceed cash deposits.

9. However, we consider that the elements provided by the parties indicate that we are in the presence of a measure within the terms of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. The panel in US – Offset Act, states that all types of specific actions against anti-dumping, which are not those permissible under GATT 1994 as interpreted by the Anti-Dumping Agreement (i.e. definitive anti-dumping duties, provisional measures and price undertakings) are not permitted. In addition, the Appellate Body in US – Offset Act, clarifies that the constituent elements of dumping are present when the measure is inextricably linked to, or have a strong correlation with, the constituent elements of dumping.¹

10. In accordance with the *Amendment to Bond Directive 99-3510-004 for Certain Merchandise Subject to Antidumping/Countervailing Duty Cases*² and the *Clarification to July 9, 2004 Amended Monetary Guidelines for Setting Bond Amounts for Special Categories of Merchandise Subject to Antidumping and/or Countervailing Duty Cases*³, it appears clearly that the application of the Enhanced Bond Requirement is limited to goods upon which USDOC has issued an anti-dumping order. With that, the inextricability relationship between the Enhanced Bond Requirement and the constituent elements of dumping is established, meeting the specificity dimension of the measure.

11. Regarding the requirement that the measure constitutes a specific action against dumping, the Appellate Body in US – Offset Act, held that the measure:

has an adverse bearing on, or, more specifically, has the effect of dissuading the practice of dumping or the practice of subsidization, or creates an incentive to terminate such practices.⁴

12. The evidence submitted by Thailand demonstrates that the Enhanced Bond Requirement is within the meaning stated by the Appellate Body. It has an adverse bearing and serves to dissuade the practice of dumping by increasing the costs to importers, exporters, or foreign producers of importing the merchandise in question to the United States.

13. Furthermore the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with GATT 1994. Specifically, Article XI:1 prohibits restrictions on importation that do not take the form of duties, taxes or other charges. We agree with the view of Thailand that the Enhance Bond Requirement imposes a restriction within the meaning of Article XI:1 and it does not constitute a duty, tax or other charge. The United States concedes that the bond provided takes the form of a security that does not involve a transfer of funds to the United States treasury.⁵

14. In accordance with the elements mentioned above, Chile considers that the Enhanced Bond Requirement constitutes a specific action against dumping, and therefore inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

¹ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act, para. 239.

² Exhibit THA – 2.

³ Exhibit THA – 4.

⁴ Appellate Body Report, US – Offset Act, para. 254.

⁵ United States' first written submission, para. 10.

2. Conclusion

15. Chile respectfully requests that the Panel does not divert from previous and conclusive rulings and recommendations of the DSB and confirms that "zeroing" is a methodology inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and that the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and Article XI:1 of GATT 1994.

ANNEX C - 3

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF THE FIRST WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

(16 May 2007)

1. Enhanced Bond Requirement

(a) Principal factual features of the EBR which affect the EC legal analysis

1. As explained by Thailand (and not disputed by the US) the Enhanced Bond Requirement ("EBR")¹ applies in addition to the cash deposit rate.² Hence, the EBR is not supposed to ensure the collection of dumping duties assessed at the rate initially determined by the US investigating authorities (as the collection of these duties is ensured by the cash deposit rate). The EBR is designed to ensure collection of final anti-dumping duties that would be due in case dumping would increase dramatically from one year to another.³ The EBR is therefore a measure designed to address a hypothetical problem in the collection of a hypothetical dumping duty reflecting a hypothetical dramatic increase in dumping (up to 100 per cent) from the level of dumping that has been initially determined by the investigating authorities.

(b) Measure designed to ensure collection of an anti-dumping duty cannot be more onerous than the anti-dumping duty itself

2. In the European Communities' view, one of the main reasons behind the existence of Article VI GATT and the Anti-Dumping Agreement was a desire to create a set of anti-dumping disciplines acceptable to all Members and capable of curbing the possibilities of a misuse – deliberate or not – of anti-dumping policies by Members. Yet, what would be the purpose of creating these rather detailed and carefully balanced rules, such as those on the calculation of dumping margin and the amount of anti-dumping duty, if the effect on trade of the duties determined pursuant those rules could be in practice much less important than the impact of measures ensuring the collection of those duties?

3. By definition, measures designed to ensure the collection of anti-dumping duties are merely ancillary to the duties themselves. If no dumping is determined which would give a rise to an anti-dumping duty, there cannot be an ancillary measure that is supposed to ensure the collection of such duty. Moreover, even if a margin of dumping is determined and a corresponding anti-dumping duty is assessed, the mechanism for securing the collection of that anti-dumping duty cannot impose a burden which would be greater than the duty itself – otherwise the Anti-Dumping Agreement would contain detailed rules only on the determination of a collection mechanism and not on the determination of dumping.

¹In its first written submission, Thailand refers to a number of US measures challenged in the present dispute as "Enhanced Bond Requirement". The US uses, in its first written submission, another set of abbreviations to refer to these measures, or some of those measures (as the reference does not seem to be always consistent). For ease of reference and to prevent confusion, the European Communities will refer in this submission to these measures, identified by Thailand, as the "Enhanced Bond Requirement" or "EBR".

²Thailand's first written submission, para 5, for instance, and Exhibit THA-2. US first written submission, paras 11-13.

³This also is confirmed by the statements made by the US authorities. See Thailand's first written submission, para 73, third bullet point.

4. The temporary nature of EBR (the fact that once the margin of dumping for the period covered by EBR is definitely determined and the anti-dumping duties finally collected, the remaining funds previously "frozen" in the enhanced bonds can be used for other purposes) does not affect this assessment. To the contrary, it actually underlines it. What sort of a temporary measure of an ancillary nature can be given such an effect which actually removes the very reason for the existence of and imposition the anti-dumping duties – namely the exports by dumping companies – by eliminating in practice these companies themselves (or their ability to export to the US)?⁴

(c) EBR is inconsistent with the provisions of Article 9 Anti-Dumping Agreement

5. The European Communities recalls the far-reaching nature of the EBR: the EBR is not merely a "collection-ensuring mechanism", it is a measure against potential future dumping which is put in place without any evidence and actual determination of dumping. This contradicts a number of distinct provisions of Article 9 Anti-Dumping Agreement. Article 9, as indicated in its title, sets forth – for the purposes of the Anti-Dumping Agreement – rules governing the imposition and collection of anti-dumping duties. The first three paragraphs of Article 9 set out rules governing this issue.

6. First, following on the preceding provisions of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, Article 9.1 makes clear that the determination of a margin of dumping is an inherent pre-condition for the imposition of any anti-dumping duty. At any stage, an anti-dumping duty has to be calculated and imposed on the basis of and in correspondence to positive evidence of dumping. The latter element – the existence of a corresponding relationship between the evidenced margin of dumping and the amount of duty – is also reflected in the second sentence of Article 9.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement: Members are encouraged to impose a lesser duty than the margin of dumping if such lesser duty would be adequate to remove the injury to domestic industry. However, Members certainly cannot, under this provision, impose a duty which would be more than the margin of dumping.

7. Article 9.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement confirms the above understanding. The reference to "appropriate amounts" in Article 9.2 follows on the principle set out in Article 9.1: an anti anti-dumping duty imposed (in accordance with Article 9.1) shall also be collected in appropriate amounts.

8. In other words, the rule resulting from Articles 9.1 and 9.2 is that the "appropriate amounts" have to correspond to the imposed duty and the duty itself has to correspond to the margin of dumping (or less than the margin of dumping, if deemed sufficient to remove injury). This principle is further elaborated in Article 9.3 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. This provision states, in its chapeau, the fundamental principle that "[t]he amount of the anti-dumping duty shall not exceed the margin of dumping established under Article 2." To ensure that this principle is respected, Articles 9.3.1 and 9.3.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement set forth refund rules for both the retrospective and prospective systems. The existence of these rules makes it clear that the collected anti-dumping duties may temporarily exceed the actual contemporaneous margin of dumping (as opposed to the margin of dumping calculated during the original investigation) – for example if dumping decreases. This is a natural implication of the technical mechanics of the dumping determination, nothing more. An attempt to read into these refund rules a new rule, namely one allowing a temporary increase of collected anti-dumping duty bearing no relation to the margin of dumping actually ascertained would not be based on the text of these provisions.⁵ Both the text and context make clear that the purpose of Article 9.3.1 and 9.3.2 is to set forth refund rules and not to provide a ground for a departure from the principles established in Articles 9.1 and 9.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

⁴ See, for instance, Thailand's first written submission, paras 121 et seq.

⁵ It seems that the US might actually be taking this position (cf. United States first submission, para 23).

9. To summarize: the EBR attempts to ensure the collection of an anti-dumping duty for which a margin of dumping has not at all been established. In that respect, the measure directly violates Articles 9.1, 9.2, 9.3 and 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

10. The European Communities also notes that Thailand argues that the EBR is not an anti dumping "duty".⁶ Irrespective of whether EBR is seen as a "part" of a provisional duty collected or as something else, the legally significant aspect is that the EBR distorts, in a very rampant way, the balance reached in the provisions of Article 9. The European Communities also does not take the view that the drafters chose to leave out the question of the adequateness of security for the collection of anti-dumping duty outside the scope of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. The applicable rules are embodied in the provisions of Article 9 discussed above.

(d) Ad Note to paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article VI GATT confirms that EBR violates Article VI:2 GATT and the Anti-Dumping Agreement

11. The European Communities is of the view that EBR is prohibited by Article VI:2 GATT for the same reasons as discussed above: the EBR requires a surety with respect to anti-dumping duties based on dumping which had not yet been determined and, in fact, had not occurred. The Ad Note to paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article VI GATT confirms this conclusion as it allows a Member to "require reasonable security (bond or cash deposit) for the payment of anti-dumping or countervailing duty pending final determination of the facts in any case of suspected dumping or subsidization."⁷ In many respects, this provision addresses the very matter at issue. The EBR is not a "security ... pending final determination of the facts". As the European Communities mentioned at the outset, the EBR is targeted at a potential future dramatic increase (up to 100 per cent) in dumping beyond the level of the dumping incurred in the past assessment period. Hence, in contrast to a cash deposit applied by the US, the EBR is not a security required pending the final determination of the facts in a case of suspected dumping. A "final determination" implies that there already has been a preliminary or initial determination of dumping which is then verified – and, if necessary, adapted – and becomes final. Yet, when EBR is applied, there is no preliminary or initial determination of the facts of dumping with respect to the dramatically increased dumping that is addressed by EBR.

(e) Article 7.2 Anti-Dumping Agreement confirms that security cannot exceed the margin of dumping

12. In the preceding section, the European Communities explained that EBR violates Article 9 as it attempts to ensure the collection of duties designed to offset dumping which has not yet occurred and has not been established. This view is further confirmed by Article 7.2 Anti-Dumping Agreement. While this provision relates to provisional measures, the principle holds equally well with respect to the issue at hand: if there is a margin of dumping determined, and if there is a duty assessed on the grounds of that margin, then a security can be requested that, however, has to correspond to the amount of that duty. In other words, the security cannot be determined in the absence of a margin of dumping and duty determination. If this rule were not applicable beyond the stage of preliminary measures, then one would end up with a rather absurd result: one would have to accept that the Anti-Dumping Agreement for some reason only protects the preliminary phase against a misuse and that the main and principle part of the anti-dumping regime, which can and does last for years, is fully open to all kinds of measures which can bypass the anti-dumping duty and be, as far as their effect is concerned, much more onerous.

⁶ Thailand's first written submission, paras 203 – 210.

⁷ Emphasis added.

(f) EBR violates Article 18.1 Anti-Dumping Agreement

13. Like Thailand, the European Communities is also of the view that EBR is a "specific action against dumping" which is not permitted by Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Instead of repeating the arguments made by Thailand, however, the European Communities would limit itself to pointing out a few factual and legal aspects of the EBR which it considers particularly relevant. First, in the European Communities' view, there can be no doubt that the EBR is a "specific" action against dumping. As the European Communities mentioned above, the EBR is a measure ancillary to the anti-dumping duties, not the other way round. Without an anti-dumping proceeding and an initial finding of dumping, the EBR would/could not be imposed and, in fact, would be without purpose. Second, there is no doubt that the EBR is a specific action "against" dumping. The European Communities recalls that under the Appellate Body case law, the legal test in this respect should focus on dumping (or subsidization) as "practices"⁸ and, particularly, on the assessment of "whether the design and structure of a measure is such that the measure ... has an adverse bearing on ... or, more specifically, has the effect of dissuading the practice of dumping ... or creates an incentive to terminate such practices".⁹ The effect of the measure in question on the competitive position of the domestic industry vis-à-vis their foreign competitors subject to anti-dumping duties is at least one of the elements in the above test.¹⁰ The harmful effects of EBR on the competitors of the US domestic industry have been well documented in the submission of Thailand.¹¹

(g) Other claims raised by Thailand and alternative measure ensuring collection of anti-dumping duties

14. The European Communities does not address other claims raised by Thailand in detail as it believes that a Panel finding made under the legal provisions discussed in the preceding sections of this submission (i.e., provisions which pertain specifically to dumping) would correspond to and address more pertinently the problem at issue. For the sake of completeness, the European Communities notes, however, that it disagrees with the US view that the EBR can be justified under Article XX(d) GATT.¹² In particular, contrary to what the US argues, the EBR is not "necessary to secure compliance" with US anti-dumping duty laws. Alternative measures, such as variable duties, are reasonably available¹³ and, if adopted, would lead to a considerably less onerous and restrictive impact upon trade.

2. The Anti-Dumping Measure

15. The European Communities notes that the US acknowledged that US DOC used in the case referred to by Thailand the same zeroing methodology as was used in the US – Zeroing (Ecuador) case and that it did not put forward any arguments justifying the use of this methodology. There is no question that the Panel should consider itself bound by what is now a well established case law on the issue and find that the US violated its obligations under Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

3. Conclusion

16. The European Communities is of the view that the EBR, as challenged by Thailand, is inconsistent with Articles 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 9.3.1 and 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and with Article VI:2 GATT including the Ad Note to Paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article VI GATT. The European ⁸ US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), Appellate Body Report, para 253.

⁹ US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), Appellate Body Report, para 254.

¹⁰ US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), Appellate Body Report, para 256.

¹¹ See, for instance, Thailand's first written submission, paras 121 et seq.

¹² United States' first written submission, paras 61 et seq.

¹³ United States' first written submission, para 70.

Communities is also of the view that the Anti-Dumping Measure is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

ANNEX C - 4

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF THE FIRST WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF INDIA

(20 May 2007)

1. Zeroing.

(a) "Zeroing" is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement

1. India has consistently opposed the use of zeroing methodology in calculating dumping margins beginning with the dispute that it initiated against the European Communities in EC - Bed Linen. The findings of the Appellate Body in that dispute have been confirmed and extended in subsequent panel and Appellate Body reports.

2. In its first written submission, Thailand notes that the zeroing methodology used by the United States in calculating dumping margins of Thai exporters of subject shrimp¹ is identical to that found to be inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement in US - Softwood Lumber V. Thailand relies on the repeated findings in panel and Appellate Body reports that zeroing is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Thailand also relies on a recent report in US - Shrimp (Ecuador) where the Panel found that the zeroing methodology used by United States to calculate dumping margins is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. In its first submission, the United States has conceded that the same type of zeroing as in US - Shrimp (Ecuador) has occurred in the investigation of subject shrimp from Thailand and that "... a measure using a similar calculation was the subject of the Softwood Lumber report and the DSB ruled that the measure was inconsistent with Article 2.4.2, first sentence, because of that calculation". India considers, therefore, that Thailand has discharged its burden of making a prima facie case establishing the inconsistency of the zeroing methodology used by the United States with its obligations under Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

2. The Enhanced Bond Requirement.

(a) The Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

3. The Enhanced Bond Requirement constitutes an impermissible "specific action" against dumping that is inconsistent with the obligations of the United States under Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. According to the Appellate Body ruling in US - Offset Act, a three-step analysis is necessary to determine whether a measure constitutes impermissible specific action against dumping. The two basic conditions precedent are that the measure must be (a) "specific" to dumping, and (b) "against" dumping. If these two conditions are met, it is necessary to determine whether the measure has been taken in accordance with the provisions of Article VI of the GATT 1994 as interpreted by the provisions of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

4. The Enhanced Bond Requirement is "specific" to dumping because it applies only to importers of designated merchandise that is subject to anti-dumping duties, i.e., when all the conditions for imposition of anti-dumping duties have been fulfilled. As the United States itself has admitted in US- Offset Act, a measure such as the Enhanced Bond Requirement that "... imposes ... liability on importers/producers/ exporters when dumping ... is found ..." will constitute "specific action" with respect to dumping. In addition, one important element of the formula for calculating the bond liability amount is the amount of anti-dumping duties owed based on the dumping margin. Moreover, one of the stated purposes of the Enhanced Bond Requirement is to ensure that anti-dumping duties are collected for payment to domestic industry under the Byrd Amendment, which the Appellate Body has found to be a "specific action" against dumping. Regulations or administrative procedures by CBP to implement the Byrd Amendment such as the Enhanced Bond Requirement also, therefore, constitute specific action against dumping or subsidization. Therefore, there is clearly an inextricable link between the Enhanced Bond Requirement and the constituent elements of dumping.

¹ Terms used but not defined in this Executive Summary of the third party submission of India have the meanings assigned to them in the first written submission of Thailand in this dispute.

5. Further, the Enhanced Bond Requirement also clearly acts "against" dumping. It has a serious, adverse impact on importers and, therefore, on dumping. The demand of 100 per cent collateral by sureties acceptable to CBP to issue enhanced bonds and high bond premiums and other charges impose a heavy burden on importers. The bonds initially posted inevitably get saturated before the first administrative review and liquidation are completed. As a result, importers are forced to post additional enhanced bonds, which results in further charges and further depletion of their capital and credit. Thus, as found by the USCIT, importers suffer serious losses in profits and business opportunities. This has a serious deterrent effect on exports subject to the Enhanced Bond Requirement as is evident from the sharp drop between 2005 and 2006 in the quantity and value of subject shrimp exported from India as well as in the total number of exporters from India.

6. The last step in the analysis is to determine whether the Enhanced Bond Requirement accords with the requirements of Article VI of the GATT 1994 as interpreted by the provisions of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. In US – 1916 Act, the Appellate Body found that the Anti-Dumping Agreement limits the permissible responses to dumping to (a) definitive anti-dumping duties, (b) provisional measures and (c) price undertakings. By definition, the Enhanced Bond Requirement does not involve the collection of a definitive anti-dumping duty or a price undertaking by exporters. It is also not a provisional measure to the extent that it is applied (a) in addition to, and on top of, the provisional measures contemplated by Article 7 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, and (b) even after the provisional measures contemplated by these provisions have run their course and the decision to impose definitive duties has been taken. Accordingly, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with the obligations of the United States under Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

7. Further, the United States cannot rely on footnote 24 to the Anti-Dumping Agreement to justify the Enhanced Bond Requirement under other provisions of the GATT 1994. Footnote 24 qualifies Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement by stating that it is not "...intended to preclude action under other relevant provisions of GATT 1994, as appropriate." In US – Offset Act, the Appellate Body clarified that these provisions only "... confirm what is implicit in Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement ..., namely, that an action that is not 'specific' within the meaning of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement..., but is nevertheless related to dumping ..., is not prohibited by Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement". Therefore, a measure that constitutes specific action against dumping cannot be justified under footnote 24. The Enhanced Bond Requirement clearly constitutes specific action against dumping. Accordingly, the United States cannot justify it under any other provision of the GATT 1994.

(b) The Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Articles 9.1, 9.2, 9.3 and 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

8. Under Article 9.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, the decision to impose definitive duties follows upon an affirmative finding of dumping and of consequent injury. Under Article 9.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, the only measure that may be taken as a result of the decision to impose definitive duties under Article 9.1 is that duties shall be collected in the "appropriate amounts". Further, under Article 9.3, the amount of the duty shall not exceed the "margin of dumping".

Therefore, it is clearly impermissible to demand an enhanced bond in addition to the duties collected in an amount equal to the dumping margin.

9. The United States cannot justify the Enhanced Bond Requirement on the basis that it follows the retrospective system of assessment referred to in Article 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Article 9.3.1 clarifies that the "final liability" for anti-dumping duties will be fixed at the stage of administrative review and that any refund must be made normally within a period of 90 days from the determination of the final liability. The terms "final liability" and "refund" in Article 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement have the following implications. First, there must be a prior liability that is not "final", which can only refer to the liability fixed at the time of the imposition decision in Article 9.1. Second, it is permissible under Article 9.3.1 for the United States to collect higher anti-dumping duties after the administrative review under Article 9.3.1 than were collected under Article 9.2 consequent upon the imposition decision taken under Article 9.1. Third, Article 9.3.1 could not have contemplated a refund unless some amounts have already been collected prior to the determination of the final liability. However, the duties may be collected only "in the appropriate amounts" consequent upon the imposition decision in Article 9.1. Lastly, the absence of any reference to a discharge of bonds in Article 9.3.1 (unlike in Articles 10.4 and 10.5 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement) confirms that no measure other than the collection of definitive anti-dumping duties in "appropriate amounts" is contemplated after the imposition decision in Article 9.1 and prior to the determination of final liability in Article 9.3.1. Even by implication, however, Article 9.3.1 does not confer any special right on Members that choose to follow the retrospective assessment system to take any measure after the imposition decision in Article 9.1 other than to collect anti-dumping duties.

10. The ordering of the paragraphs of Article 9 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement makes it clear that Articles 9.1 and 9.2 also govern the retrospective assessment system. That Article 9.3 and Article 9.3.1 follow after Article 9.2 does not mean that some additional right to take security exists in the case of retrospective assessment systems. In fact, the first sentence of Article 9.3 prohibiting collection of duties in excess of the dumping margin qualifies the "appropriate amounts" in which anti-dumping duties may be collected under Article 9.2.

11. Moreover, it is important to keep in mind the policy consequences of conceding any right to take enhanced bonds that is not governed by the strict disciplines contained in the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Members may well demand a continuous bond amounting to 200 per cent or 300 per cent of anti-dumping duties payable on imports for the immediately preceding one-year period. Therefore, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with the provisions of Articles 9.1, 9.2, 9.3 and 9.3.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

(c) The Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article 7 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

12. The Enhanced Bond Requirement cannot be justified under Article 7 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. Under Article 7.1(iii), it is necessary that "the authorities concerned judge such measures necessary to prevent injury being caused during the investigation". The stated reasons for introducing the Enhanced Bond Requirement do not mention injury being caused during the investigation and focus on ensuring that payments are made to domestic industry pursuant to the Byrd Amendment. Therefore, if the Enhanced Bond Requirement is a provisional measure, it is inconsistent with Article 7.1(iii) of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

13. The Enhanced Bond Requirement is also inconsistent with Article 7.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. A provisional measure may not be for an amount in excess of the "provisionally estimated margin of dumping". However, under the Enhanced Bond Requirement, importers are required to provide an enhanced bond for an amount equal to the anti-dumping duties payable on imports for the previous year rather than a single-entry bond for the amount of anti-dumping duty owed on each shipment.

14. Moreover, Article 7.4 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement provides for limiting a provisional measure to a maximum period of six months. To the extent that the Enhanced Bond Requirement on importers is introduced or remains in place on any date after six months from the date on which provisional measures are first imposed, the Enhanced Bond Requirement constitutes a clear inconsistency with the provisions of Article 7.4.

(d) The Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Note 1 to Paragraphs 2 and 3, Ad Article VI.

15. India considers that the United States cannot rely upon the Note 1 to Paragraphs 2 and 3, Ad Article VI to justify the Enhanced Bond Requirement independently of Article 7 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. In fact, it is clear that the "reasonable security (bond or cash deposit)" referred to in Note 1 to Paragraphs 2 and 3, Ad Article VI is the same as the provisional measures referred to in Article 7 and that this provision merely elaborates upon Note 1 to Paragraphs 2 and 3, Ad Article VI and imposes further disciplines in this regard. The final determination of the facts referred to in Note 1 to Paragraphs 2 and 3, Ad Article VI can only be at the stage of the decision to impose definitive anti-dumping duties under Article 9.1. Thus, Note 1 to Paragraphs 2 and 3, Ad Article VI does not constitute a "general exception" in Article VI of the GATT 1994 that operates independently of the disciplines in Articles 7 and 9.

16. Further, the requirement in Note 1 to Paragraphs 2 and 3, Ad Article VI that any security taken must be "reasonable" is clearly not satisfied in the case of the Enhanced Bond Requirement because the enhanced, continuous bond must be furnished in addition to making cash deposits at the duty rates specified in the Order. Therefore, the Enhanced Bond Requirement imposed by the United States is per se unreasonable. In addition, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is clearly not reasonable because it was motivated by political considerations. Further, the designation of products by CBP is also arbitrary and capricious. CBP does not cite a single reason as to why there is a likelihood of a higher rate of default in collection of anti-dumping duties on imports of subject shrimp as opposed to imports of other agricultural or aquacultural merchandise. As imports of subject shrimp were not liquidated, there was no evidence of default by importers of subject shrimp at the relevant time. Further, CBP at no time has offered any explanation of why importers of crawfish or garlic from China were not subject to the Enhanced Bond Requirement. It is clear also that CBP does not engage in any analysis of the likelihood of an increase in dumping margins which is the ostensible justification for applying the Enhanced Bond Requirement to merchandise subject to anti-dumping or countervailing duties.

17. Moreover, the extent of the security demanded under the Enhanced Bond Requirement is clearly excessive. As the USCIT found, the effects of imposition of the Enhanced Bond Requirement include (a) a serious depletion of the credit of importers, (b) dropping or scaling back on product lines imported into the United States, (c) preventing the addition of new product lines, (d) causing the loss of spot sales, (e) preventing participation in bids from major supermarket chains, (g) forcing imports of subject shrimp on a delivered, duty-paid basis, thus reducing profit margins, (h) adversely affecting customer and supplier relationships, and (i) inability to fulfil contractual orders. The extent of the harm suffered as a result of the Enhanced Bond Requirement is evidence of its unreasonableness.

18. In fact, until the publication of the 24 October 2006 Notice in the Federal Register, CBP did not take account of the financial soundness of individual importers at all, which presumably should have been its primary concern in imposing the Enhanced Bond Requirement. This is an obvious indicator of the extreme unreasonableness both in conception and in administration of the Enhanced Bond Requirement. Although CBP now claims that it will take into account the financial soundness of individual importers in fixing the amount of the enhanced bond, they have also clarified that they will not apply this analysis pending liquidation to importers of subject shrimp to reduce the value of enhanced, continuous bonds already furnished. Accordingly, India considers that the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with the provisions of Note 1 to Paragraphs 2 and 3, Ad Article VI.

(e) The Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article X:3(a) of the GATT 1994.

19. India submits that the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article X:3(a) as applied to subject shrimp because it has not been administered in a uniform, impartial and reasonable manner as discussed above. It has been applied only to importers of subject shrimp from the six countries subject to anti-dumping duties and not to other importers. Therefore, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is clearly inconsistent with the requirements of Article X:3(a) as applied to subject shrimp.

(f) The Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Articles I and II:1(a) and II:1(b) of the GATT 1994.

20. To the extent that the Enhanced Bond Requirement can be characterized legally as involving duties, taxes or other charges, India submits that it is inconsistent with the obligations of the United States under Articles I:1 and II:1(a) and II:1(b) of the GATT 1994. The Enhanced Bond Requirement certainly involves charges by US surety companies, is "a method of levying ... duties", and represents a "rule" and "formality" in connection with importation." Therefore, it is clearly subject to the most-favoured nation obligation in Article I:1 of the GATT 1994. To the extent that the Enhanced Bond Requirement is applied in a discriminatory manner, therefore, to only those Members that are subject to anti-dumping duties in respect of certain designated merchandise, it is clearly inconsistent with the obligations of the United States under Article I:1 of the GATT 1994.

21. Again, to the extent that the Enhanced Bond Requirement necessarily involves payment of (high) charges to US surety companies, it constitutes an inconsistency with the second sentence of Article II:1(b), which provides that the "... products [described in Part I of the Schedule] relating to any [Member] shall also be exempt from all other ... charges of any kind imposed on or in connection with the importation in excess of those imposed on the date of this Agreement or those directly and mandatorily required to be imposed thereafter by legislation in force in the importing territory on that date."

22. The duties associated with the Enhanced Bond Requirement are not anti-dumping duties authorized under the provisions of Article VI of the GATT 1994 or the Anti-Dumping Agreement. To the extent that the Enhanced Bond Requirement results in an increase in "contingent tariff liability" above bound levels for Members subject to anti-dumping or countervailing duties, therefore, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with the obligations of the United States under Article II:1(a) and the first sentence of Article II:1(b) of the GATT 1994. Moreover, the increase in contingent tariff liability is only in respect of certain Members whose merchandise is subject to the Enhanced Bond Requirement. Therefore, it is also inconsistent with the "most-favoured nation" treatment obligation of the United States under Article I:1 of the GATT 1994. It is important to note that the bound rate for shrimp falling under tariff headings 0306.13.00 and 1605.20.10 in the Schedule of Concessions of the United States is "0.0%". Therefore, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Articles I, II:1(a) and II:1(b) as applied to subject shrimp.

(g) In the alternative, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article XI of the GATT 1994.

23. Alternatively, to the extent that the Enhanced Bond Requirement may be legally characterized as an import restriction and not as a "duty, tax or other charge," it is clearly inconsistent with Article XI:1 of the GATT 1994 and is not saved by any of the exceptions contained therein. The Enhanced Bond Requirement operates in a manner that severely restricts imports into the United States of merchandise subject to anti-dumping or countervailing duties. Accordingly, to this extent, the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with Article XI:1 of the GATT 1994.

3. Conclusion

24. For the reasons stated above, India requests that the Panel find that (a) the zeroing methodology followed by the United States is inconsistent with its obligations under Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement; and (b) the Enhanced Bond Requirement is inconsistent with the provisions of Articles 7.1, 7.2, 7.4, 9.1, 9.2, 9.3, 9.3.1 and 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement, of Article X:3(a) of the GATT 1994 and of (i) Articles I:1 and II:1(a) and II:1(b) or (ii) alternatively, of XI:1 of the GATT 1994.

ANNEX C - 5

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF THE FIRST WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF JAPAN

(18 May 2007)

1. Introduction

1. This dispute brought by Thailand is about the Enhanced Bond Requirement (the "EBR") on certain products subject to antidumping or countervailing duties introduced by the United States. Thailand questions the WTO consistency of this measure on imports of certain frozen warmwater shrimp from Thailand in light of various provisions under the AD Agreement and the GATT 1994. In this submission, Japan, as a third party, would like to focus on the following two issues based on its systemic interest in the interpretation of these agreements ensuring fair and objective application of them:

- whether the EBR constitutes specific action against dumping that is inconsistent with Article 18.1 of the AD Agreement; and
- whether the EBR is inconsistent with the Ad Note 1 to paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article VI of the GATT 1994.

2. Arguments

(a) Consistency of the EBR with Article 18.1 of the AD Agreement prohibiting specific actions against dumping other than those permitted under the AD Agreement

2. Thailand submits that the EBR constitutes an impermissible specific action against dumping under Article 18.1 of the AD Agreement.

3. The Appellate Body stated that a Member's measure constitutes a specific action against dumping, where: (1) the measure is "specific" to dumping; (2) the action is taken "against" dumping, i.e., to counteract dumping; and (3) it is inconsistent with the provisions of GATT 1994, as interpreted by the AD Agreement.¹ An action is "specific" where it is "inextricably linked to, or have a strong correlation with, the constituent elements of dumping."² An action is taken "against" dumping if the action "has the effect of dissuading the practice of dumping."³

4. Regarding the "specific" requirement, Japan considers that the Panel should examine under what situations the EBR is imposed to see whether and how the measure is linked to the "constituent elements" of dumping. In Japan's view, to meet this requirement, it would be necessary that the EBR is imposed only where dumping is found to exist. In this connection, it appears that the bond requirement in question is required only where the United States found the existence of dumping, i.e., constituent elements of dumping. Any additional requirements, such as the risk of non-collection for individual importers, would not change such basic characteristics of the EBR.

5. Regarding the "against" requirement, the Panel should examine at least the purpose as well as the design and structure of the EBR, and its effect, that is, how the bond requirement would reduce shipments from subject countries. In particular, the United States admits that the EBR is to secure future duty collection in case that "the antidumping duty rate actually assessed increase from that determined during the investigation."⁴ By definition, the antidumping duty is a measure "against" dumping. As the bond requirement in question is a measure to complement the imposition of antidumping duty, it must be a measure "against" dumping.

¹ See Appellate Body Report, US –Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), WT/DS217/AB/R, WT/DS234/AB/R, adopted 27 January 2003, para. 236.

² Ibid., para.239.

³ Ibid., para.254.

6. The United States argues that the EBR is not an action "against" dumping, but "is designed to secure antidumping liability" only because "the vast majority of unsecured liability that has resulted in noncollection happens to be antidumping duty liability."⁵ The United States also argues that it is just a third party beneficiary and "is not itself a party to the contract" with a surety.⁶ There is no dispute, however, that the EBR is an action taken by the United States to collect antidumping duty only with respect to imports for which dumping was found. As discussed above, the bond requirement at issue must be a "specific action against dumping".

7. In such case, the Appellate Body clarifies that the permissible action under Article 18.1 of the AD Agreement is limited to the imposition of (i) definitive anti-dumping duties, (ii) provisional measures, or (iii) price undertakings.⁷ The EBR is not either one of these three measures, and therefore impermissible under Article 18.1 of the AD Agreement.

8. The United States argues that the EBR is merely "related to" dumping or subsidies⁸, and therefore permissible. The United States then relied on the statement of the Appellate Body that footnote 24 of the AD Agreement and footnote 54 of the SCM Agreement is to confirm that "an action that is not 'specific' within the meaning of Article 18.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement and of Article 32.1 of the SCM Agreement, but is nevertheless related to dumping or subsidization, is not prohibited" by those Articles.⁹ As the bond requirement in question is "specific" action against dumping or a subsidy as discussed above, the requirement would not be justified by any other provisions of GATT 1994.

(b) Permissibility of the Enhanced Bond Requirement under the Ad Note

9. The United States argues that the Ad Note 1 to paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article VI of the GATT 1994 justifies the EBR,¹⁰ arguing that the EBR is "security against the prospect of a future liability."¹¹ Thailand considers that the measure which the Ad Note contemplates is the provisional measure provided in Article 7 of the AD Agreement.¹² The United States rebuts that the bond requirement at issue is imposed pending determination of the final liability for payment of duties. According to the United States, in the context of its retrospective duty assessment system, the language "final determination of the facts" in the Ad Note means "determination of the final liability for payment of anti-dumping duties."¹³ Based on the following consideration, Japan is of the view that the "reasonable security" permitted under the Ad Note purports the provisional measures, which are articulated in Article 7 of the AD Agreement or Article 17 of the SCM Agreement.

10. First, the language "pending final determination of the facts" in the Ad Note must be read in the context of the subsequent language "in any case of suspected dumping or subsidization" (emphasis

⁴ United States' first written submission, para.13.

⁵ Ibid., para. 34.

⁶ Ibid., para. 7.

⁷ See Appellate Body Report, United States – Anti-Dumping Act of 1916, WT/DS136/AB/R, WT/DS162/AB/R, adopted 26 September 2000, para.137.

⁸ United States' first written submission, para.33.

⁹ US – CDSOA (AB), para.262. (emphasis in original)

¹⁰ United States' first written submission, paras.20-29.

¹¹ Ibid., para. 25.

¹² Thailand first written submission, paras.194-198

¹³ United States' first written submission, para.22 (emphasis added)

added). The word "suspected" suggests that the facts concerning "dumping" or "subsidization" are still at an unproven stage. Therefore, Japan understands that Ad Note contemplates a situation before the final determination of dumping or subsidization in the original investigation. The language of the Ad Note "determination of facts in any case of suspected dumping or subsidization" does not support the United States contention that this "determination" concerns with the final liability for payment of duties in a review. The review, however, does not concern with the determination of the fact, or the existence, of dumping or a subsidy. It merely reassesses the amount of dumping or subsidization. The determination in a review, thus, is not related to the "final determination of the facts of dumping or subsidization" as set forth in the Ad Note.

11. Japan considers that the "final determination" in the Ad Note means that of dumping or subsidization as a prerequisite of deciding to impose antidumping or countervailing duties. Therefore, the measure permitted under the Ad Note should be the provisional measures to be taken before the final determination of dumping or subsidization, as provided in Article 7 of the AD Agreement or Article 17 of the SCM Agreement.

12. Even in the retroactive system of duty assessment in the antidumping regime, the United States issues the antidumping order, which embodies the administrative decision to impose antidumping duties on certain products upon affirmative final determination on the facts of dumping. The determination of the assessment of the final duty liability may take place after the review process, if a request for a review is made. The measure purported in the Ad Note, however, is only related to the provisional measure to be taken before the issuance of this order, not after the affirmative final determination on dumping in the original investigation, and not even before the completion of the final liability assessment in a subsequent review. This interpretation equally applies to the imposition of countervailing duties.

13. The United States also quotes the reference to "many other cases in customs administration" to contend that the Ad Note permits the security requirement for the payment of antidumping or countervailing duties apart from provisional measures.¹⁴ However, the mere reference to customs administration does not give support for an interpretation that the Ad Note would broadly permit security requirement, including those imposed even after the final determination of dumping or subsidization.

14. For the above reasons, Japan submits that it considers that the Ad Note gives no legal basis for the imposition of the EBR.

3. Conclusion

15. Japan respectfully requests the Panel to examine carefully the facts presented by the parties to this dispute in light of Japan's arguments above to ensure fair and objective application of the AD Agreement and the GATT 1994.

¹⁴ United States' first written submission, para.25.

ANNEX C - 6

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF THE FIRST WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF KOREA

(10 May 2007)

1. Introduction

1. This third party submission is presented by the Government of the Republic of Korea ("Korea") with respect to certain aspects of the first written submissions by Thailand dated 20 March 2007 and the United States dated 1 May 2007, respectively, in United States – Measures Relating to Shrimp from Thailand (WT/DS343).

2. Korea has systemic interests in the interpretation and application of provisions of Article 2.4.2 of the Agreement on Implementation of Article VI of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 ("AD Agreement"), which lay out legal guidelines for investigating authorities of the Members in calculating dumping margins in an anti-dumping investigation. Therefore, Korea reserved its third party rights pursuant to Article 10.2 of the Understanding on Rules and Procedures Governing the Settlement of Dispute ("DSU"). Korea appreciates this opportunity to present its view to the Panel.

3. In February 2005, the United States Department of Commerce ("USDOC") imposed definitive anti-dumping duties on imports of certain frozen warmwater shrimp from Thailand.¹ In the course of the investigation, the USDOC utilized the practice known as "zeroing" in calculating the dumping margins for Thai exporters of subject product.² Korea believes that the anti-dumping investigation conducted by the USDOC against shrimp from Thailand constitutes a serious violation of Article 2.4.2 of the AD Agreement. In Korea's view, this dispute presents a vivid example of the distortive nature of the zeroing practice maintained by the United States for a long time: but for zeroing, the USDOC would have been unable to find a margin of dumping in the underlying investigation.³

4. Korea therefore generally supports the arguments raised by Thailand in its first written submission. Rather than covering all the arguments, however, Korea will address in this submission certain critical issues in Korea's view.

2. Legal Arguments

(a) The USDOC's continued utilization of "zeroing" in an original investigation on an average-to-average basis constitutes violation of Article 2.4.2 of the AD Agreement

5. First of all, Korea notes that in U.S.-Zeroing (Japan), the most recent decision relating to zeroing, in which the Appellate Body exercised a comprehensive review of all aspects of zeroing practice under the AD Agreement, the Appellate Body unequivocally held that zeroing in all respects violates relevant provisions of the AD Agreement.⁴ Furthermore, there is an ample body of precedents, where panels and the Appellate Body found that the zeroing practice used in average-to-

¹ See Notice of Amended Final Determination of Sales at Less Than Fair Value and Antidumping Duty Order: Certain Frozen Warmwater Shrimp from Thailand, 70 Fed. Reg. 5145 (1 February 2005). Not only Thailand but five other countries were also subject to the concurrent investigations.

² See USDOC, Decision Memorandum, Exhibit THA-16, p. 8.

³ See Thailand's first written submission in US—Measures Relating to Shrimp from Thailand (WT/DS343) (20 May 2007), at para. 4.

⁴ See United States – Measures Relating to Zeroing and Sunset Reviews, WT/DS322/AB/R (adopted 23 January 2007) ("U.S.-Zeroing (Japan)"), at paras. 137-138, 147, 166, 167-169, 177, 186-187.

average comparison in an original investigation (that is, the first methodology in the first sentence of Article 2.4.2 of the AD Agreement) violates Article 2.4.2 of the AD Agreement.⁵ In the underlying investigation of this dispute, the USDOC continued to utilize the zeroing practice in exactly the same manner which has been repeatedly found by the panels and Appellate Body to be in violation of Article 2.4.2 of the AD Agreement: it applied the zeroing practice in average-to-average comparison in an original investigation. In Korea's view, therefore, the Panel could easily reach its determination on this issue in this dispute.

6. This dispute provides a showcase example why and how zeroing distorts an anti-dumping investigation. It has allowed the investigating authority to find a dumping margin where there should have been none in the first place. Once an anti-dumping margin was erroneously found as a result of zeroing and duty imposed, another agency of the US government, the Customs and Border Protection ("CBP"), then imposed a further administrative penalty on Thai exporters in the name of an "Enhanced Bond Requirement."⁶

7. If there had not been a zeroing practice, there would not have been an anti-dumping order, hence, probably, no Enhanced Bond Requirement either. In other words, this whole dispute simply stemmed from the zeroing practice. As such, Korea requests the Panel to find that the zeroing practice of the USDOC in an original investigation in an average-to-average comparison methodology is prohibited by Article 2.4.2 of the AD Agreement.

8. Korea is aware that the United States has announced its intention to discontinue the use of zeroing when calculating dumping margins on the basis of average-to-average comparisons in original investigations.⁷ Korea hopes that the new calculation methodology of the USDOC faithfully implements the holdings of the panels and the Appellate Body in future anti-dumping investigations. However, (i) given the length of zeroing disputes over the years involving multiple cases, (ii) the history of continued resistance of the United States in implementing the panels' and Appellate Body's zeroing decisions, and (iii) the still seemingly existent leeway of the investigating authority in calculating the dumping margin under the new methodology, Korea believes it worthwhile for the Panel in this dispute to pursue this issue thoroughly and pronounce its confirmation in an unequivocal manner that the zeroing in an original investigation on a weighted-average-to-weighted-average basis violates Article 2.4.2 of the AD Agreement.

(b) Not only in average-to-average comparison in original investigations, but also in any context of dumping investigations and reviews zeroing produces inaccurate dumping margins and thus violates various provisions of the AD Agreement

9. In addition, Korea also requests the Panel, in the course of addressing this issue in the present dispute, to confirm the gist of the Appellate Body decision in U.S.-Zeroing (Japan): the Appellate Body's decision was clearly to the effect that zeroing constitutes a violation not only in the context of an average-to-average comparison in an original investigation as with the case here, but also in all aspects of an anti-dumping administration procedure, including administrative reviews, new shipper reviews, and sunset reviews, regardless of comparison methodologies utilized by investigating authorities. Korea views the decision of the Appellate Body in that decision as pronouncing a blanket prohibition of zeroing in any context of anti-dumping investigations and reviews.

⁵ See, e.g., Panel Report, US – Zeroing (Japan), para. 7.86; Appellate Body Report, US – Softwood Lumber V, para. 117; Panel Report, US – Softwood Lumber V, para. 7.224 and 8.1(a)(i); Panel Report, US – Zeroing (EC), paras. 7.31-32; Appellate Body Report, EC – Bed Linen, paras. 46-66.

⁶ Although Korea notes that the Enhanced Bond Requirement itself poses a significant violation of Article 18.1 of the AD Agreement, in the interest of brevity, it decides not to discuss this issue in this submission. Korea generally supports the argument presented by Thai in its first written submission regarding the "Enhanced Bond Requirement" issue.

⁷ See USDOC, Antidumping Proceedings: Calculation of the Weighted-Average Dumping Margin During an Antidumping Investigation; Final Modification, 71 Fed. Reg. 77722 (27 December 2006).

10. So, in reaching a decision in this particular dispute, Korea requests the Panel to discharge its obligation taking into account this broad finding of the Appellate Body that zeroing per se is simply prohibited in an AD Agreement. Korea is aware that only Article 2.4.2 is implicated in this dispute because zeroing challenged here is only the one used in an original investigation on an average-to-average basis. The broad finding of the Appellate Body in U.S.-Zeroing (Japan), however, is directly relevant in this dispute as well, because it provides the most recent, the most comprehensive and the most reasoned analysis on zeroing, basically wrapping up all the related issues and controversies in this particular area.

11. As the Appellate Body correctly noted in that dispute, the fundamental problem of zeroing is that it produces inaccurate dumping margins and this obvious inaccuracy distorts all aspects of anti-dumping investigations and reviews. Thus zeroing-produced determinations in original investigations and reviews (including periodic reviews, new shipper reviews and sunset reviews) regardless of specific comparison methodologies utilized (whether it is average-to-average basis, transaction-to-average basis or transaction-to-transaction basis) inevitably constitute violations of various provisions of the AD Agreement, such as Articles 2, 9 and 11. In reaching a decision in this dispute, therefore, Korea hopes that the Panel analyses the present case from this broad perspective.

12. Korea also notes that recent panels reviewing zeroing disputes have made efforts to provide consistent and uniform jurisprudence on this volatile issue, and respectfully requests that the current Panel does the same.⁸ Korea believes that the Panel's decision in this case will be important in that it will be able to prompt the United States to halt its continued use of zeroing in any context in future anti-dumping investigations and reviews.

3. Conclusion

13. For the foregoing reasons, Korea respectfully submits that the Panel finds that the USDOC's anti-dumping investigation against shrimp from Thailand constitutes a violation of Article 2.4.2 of the AD Agreement, and recommends that the United States bring the measure into conformity with its obligation under the AD Agreement. Korea appreciates this opportunity to present its view to the Panel.

⁸ See, for instance, Panel Report, US – Shrimp (Ecuador), paras. 7.39 et seq.

ANNEX C - 7

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF THE FIRST WRITTEN SUBMISSION OF MEXICO¹

(10 May 2007)

1. Introduction

1. The Government of Mexico is grateful for this opportunity to present its views as a third party to these proceedings. Mexico is participating in this dispute as a third party because its interests have been seriously undermined by the systematic application by the United States of WTO-inconsistent zeroing measures identical to those that are being challenged in this dispute. This practice expressly violates the United States' obligations under the WTO Anti-Dumping Agreement.² The present case offers an opportunity to reaffirm these obligations and to secure prompt compliance by the United States.

2. Mexico is not taking position on the imposition of more stringent bond conditions for US imports of the subject merchandise in the Warm Water Shrimp anti-dumping proceedings.

3. Mexico would like to share with the Panel a number of observations which it considers important to the Panel's decision.

(a) "consistent line" of Appellate Body Reports have found Zeroing in original investigations to be inconsistent with Article 2.4.2, first sentence

4. The legal conclusion to be drawn concerning the zeroing measures that are before the Panel is clear. As recognized by the United States³, the zeroing model at issue in Thailand's claim involves the same type of zeroing procedures that were before the Panel in United States – Anti-Dumping Measure on Shrimp from Ecuador.⁴ In that case, the United States did not contest the inconsistency of its measure with the Anti-Dumping Agreement, and the Panel found the zeroing measure to be inconsistent with the first sentence of Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

5. In its first written submission, the United States recognizes that "a measure using a similar calculation was the subject of the Softwood Lumber report, and the DSB ruled that the measure was inconsistent with Article 2.4.2".⁵ However, although this was not expressly acknowledged by the United States, the same legal conclusions were reaffirmed by the Appellate Body in a series of decisions issued since the report in US – Softwood Lumber V, for example in US – Zeroing (EC) and US – Zeroing (Japan). Both of these Appellate Body reports found the zeroing measure to be inconsistent "as such" with the obligations of the United States under Article 2.4.2 and Article 2.4 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement because it fails to determine a margin of dumping for the product under investigation taken as a whole. As recently explained by the Panel in US – Shrimp from Ecuador (WT/DS335/R):

[...] Thus, in our view, there is now a consistent line of Appellate Body Reports, from EC – Bed Linen to US – Zeroing (EC) that holds that "zeroing" in the context of the

¹ This text was originally submitted in Spanish by Mexico.

² Agreement on Implementation of Article VI of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994.

³ United States' first written submission (DS343) (20 March 2007), paragraph 80.

⁴ WT/DS335/R (30 January 2007).

⁵ United States' first written submission, paragraph 80.

weighted average-to-weighted average methodology in original investigations (first methodology in the first sentence of Article 2.4.2) is inconsistent with Article 2.4.2.

We have, as is our duty, carefully considered the Appellate Body's reasoning in US – Softwood Lumber V and taken into consideration the consistent line of Appellate Body Reports as mentioned in the previous paragraph. We find the Appellate Body's reasoning persuasive and adopt it as our own. Given that the issues raised by Ecuador's claims are identical in all material respects to those addressed by the Appellate Body in the Lumber V case, we are satisfied that Ecuador has made a prima facie case that the use of zeroing by the USDOC in the calculation of the margins of dumping for Exporklore and Promarisco, from which were calculated the "all others" margins in the three measures identified in its request for the establishment of a panel, is inconsistent with the United States' obligations under Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement because the USDOC did not calculate these dumping margins on the basis of the "product as a whole" as it failed to take into account all comparable export transactions in calculating the margins of dumping.⁶

6. The above considerations and reasoning are obviously directly related to Thailand's claim with respect to the zeroing measure at issue in these proceedings.

7. Mexico strongly endorses the legal reasoning applied in the uninterrupted string of Appellate Body decisions described above. In each case, the Appellate Body has rightly taken as a starting point the definitions of "dumping" and "margin of dumping" appearing in Articles VI:1 and VI:2 of the GATT 1994 and Article 2.1 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement. The Appellate Body has consistently determined that the margins of dumping must be calculated for each exporter or producer at issue with reference to that exporter or producer's sales of the product under investigation taken as a whole. These obligations are fundamental, and apply to the calculation of margins of dumping in all procedural contexts and in all possible comparison methodologies.⁷

(b) There are compelling systemic reasons for this Panel to follow the Appellate Body's ruling

8. Although the quality and persuasiveness of the Appellate Body's reasoning in themselves provide sufficient grounds for this Panel to abide by the Appellate Body's decisions, Mexico notes that there are also other considerations of considerable systemic importance that should prompt this Panel to adopt the reasoning applied in those earlier decisions.

9. Article 3.2 of the Dispute Settlement Understanding identifies the dispute settlement system as a "central element" in providing security and predictability to the multilateral trading system.

10. A panel in a previous dispute rightly pointed out that "[a]lthough previous Appellate Body decisions are not strictly speaking binding on panels, there clearly is an expectation that panels will follow such decisions in subsequent cases raising issues that the Appellate Body has expressly addressed."⁸ The Appellate Body supported this principle, inter alia, in US – Oil Country Tubular Goods Sunset Reviews, in which it stated that "following the Appellate Body's conclusions in earlier disputes is not only appropriate but is what would be expected from panels, especially where the issues are the same."⁹

⁶ Report of the Panel, US – Shrimp from Ecuador, paragraph 7.40 and 7.41.

⁷ See, for example, the report of the Appellate Body in US – Zeroing (Japan), paragraph 109.

⁸ Report of the Panel in US – Zeroing (EC), paragraph 7.30.

⁹ Report of the Appellate Body, US – Sunset Review of Anti-Dumping Measures on Oil Country Tubular Goods, paragraph 188.

- (c) The Panel should note that the United States has modified its WTO-inconsistent practice, but not with respect to initial investigations concluded before 22 February 2007

11. Mexico acknowledges that the United States has modified its WTO-inconsistent zeroing practice in one respect (original investigation using the average-to-average comparison methodology) by virtue of a notice published in the Federal Register in December 2006.¹⁰ However, this change of policy does not address the case at issue directly, since it applies only to investigations subject to determinations made on or after 22 February 2007. The determination in this case was made on 23 December 2004, which means that, if at all, the United States will change the results in this case only with respect to the domestic legal procedures under Section 129 of the Tariff Act of 1930 as amended.

12. It is regrettable that Thailand has found it necessary to resolve this matter through the WTO dispute settlement procedures in spite of the multiple Appellate Body reports that have found this practice to be WTO-inconsistent and in spite of the fact that the United States does not appear to dispute Thailand's claims with regard to zeroing. Mexico respectfully requests that the Panel bear these circumstances in mind when formulating its recommendations in the Report.

2. Conclusion

13. For the reasons stated above, Mexico asks the Panel to uphold Thailand's claim that by using the zeroing methodology with respect to the Warmwater Shrimp anti-dumping measure, the United States has acted inconsistently with Article 2.4.2 of the Anti-Dumping Agreement.

¹⁰ Antidumping Proceedings: Calculation of the Weighted-Average Dumping Margins in Antidumping Investigations, 71 Fed. Reg. 77722 (Department of Commerce) (27 December 2006).