A. UNITED STATES.....	33
1. First written submission of the United States.....	33
(a) Introduction.....	33
(b) Procedural history	34
(i) Understanding on Bananas	35
(ii) GATT Article I waiver and arbitrations	35
(iii) Article XIII Waiver	36
(c) The European Communities' revised measures	37

(d)	Legal arguments.....	37
(i)	The European Communities' revised measures are inconsistent with Article I of the GATT 1994	38
	Termination of GATT Article I Waiver	38
(ii)	The European Communities' revised measures are inconsistent with Article XIII of the GATT 1994	39
	The European Communities' import regime for bananas is inconsistent with GATT Article XIII:1	40
	The European Communities' import regime for bananas is inconsistent with GATT Article XIII:2.....	40
(e)	Conclusion	41
2.	Second written submission of the United States	41
(a)	The European Communities' preliminary objections should be rejected.....	41
(i)	The United States was not required to request consultations with the EC	41
(ii)	The EC-US Understanding on Bananas does not preclude this proceeding	43
(iii)	The United States' complaint falls within the scope of Article 21.5	44
(b)	The European Communities' arguments about "standing" and nullification or impairment have been rejected before and should be rejected once again	45
(i)	The United States has standing to challenge the EC's banana regime	45
(ii)	The United States is not required to demonstrate nullification or impairment of benefits to advance claims of an EC breach of GATT Articles I and XIII	45
(c)	The European Communities' Article I waiver has expired, and it therefore maintains its banana measures in breach of GATT Article I	46
(d)	The European Communities maintains its exclusive tariff rate quota for ACP bananas in violation of GATT Article XIII	47
(i)	The European Communities' tariff rate quota is a quantitative restriction within the meaning of Article XIII	47
(ii)	Article XIII applies even where the entire EC banana market is not controlled by quotas	48
(iii)	The European Communities maintains its ACP tariff rate quota in breach of GATT Article XIII	49
(e)	Conclusion	50
3.	Oral statement of the United States	50
(a)	The European Communities' bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply	50
(b)	The European Communities' regime is in breach of GATT 1994 Articles XIII and I.....	53
(i)	The European Communities' regime is in breach of GATT 1994 Article XIII	53
(ii)	The European Communities' regime is in breach of Article I, and the Article I waiver has ceased to apply	54
(c)	The Panel should reject the European Communities' preliminary objections regarding the Understanding and nullification or impairment	55

(i)	The EC-US Understanding was not a "mutually agreed solution" and even if it were it would not preclude this proceeding	56
(ii)	The Panel must reject the European Communities' arguments regarding nullification or impairment	57
4.	Closing statement of the United States	58
B.	EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES	58

(a)	Preliminary objections	62
(i)	The United States did not request consultations	62
(ii)	The Understanding bars the United States from challenging the Cotonou Preference	62
(iii)	The United States' complaint falls outside the scope of Article 21.5 of the DSU	64
(b)	The Cotonou Preference does not violate the GATT.....	65
(i)	The Doha Waiver covers the Cotonou Preference until the end of 2007	65
(ii)	There is no violation of GATT Article XIII	66
(c)	Absence of "nullification or impairment"	67
3.	Oral statement of the European Communities	67
(a)	Preliminary issues	67
(b)	The United States' claims under Article I	69
(c)	The United States' claims under Article XIII.....	70
(d)	The United States does not suffer any "nullification or impairment"	71
4.	Closing statement of the European Communities	72
V.	ARGUMENTS OF THE THIRD PARTIES	74
A.	BELIZE, CAMEROON, CÔTE D'IVOIRE, DOMINICA, DOMINICAN REPUBLIC, JAMAICA, SAINT LUCIA, SAINT VINCENT AND THE GRENADINES, AND SURINAME	74
1.	Written submission of the ACP third parties	74
(a)	The United States cannot challenge the new EC banana import regime pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU	74
(b)	There is no violation of GATT Article I because the Doha Waiver still applies	75

(c)	There is no violation of GATT Article XIII	76
B.	BELIZE.....	77
1.	Oral statement of Belize	77
C.	CAMEROON	78
1.	Oral statement of Cameroon.....	78
(a)	This dispute is of primary importance for the ACP countries	78
(b)	United States trade is not affected by the Community's new regime for the importation of bananas.....	79
(c)	The United States is attacking a preference granted to developing countries even though it is not suffering any negative consequences from it and it had accepted the principle of the preference	79
(d)	The United States cannot question a preference which it accepted in the Memorandum of Understanding	79
(e)	The United States cannot challenge the Community import regime for bananas pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU	80
(f)	The United States completely ignores the way the market has developed	80
(g)	Conclusion	82
D.	CÔTE D'IVOIRE	82
1.	Oral statement of Côte d'Ivoire	82
E.	DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.....	85

1.	Oral statement of Saint Lucia	87
H.	SAINT VINCENT AND THE GRENADINES.....	91
1.	Oral statement of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines	91
I.	SURINAME	92
1.	Oral statement of Suriname	92
(a)	Preliminary issue: the United States failed to request consultations.....	92
(b)	The Bananas III dispute has been settled through the Understanding on Bananas	93
(c)	The new EC banana import regime is not a measure taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings in the original Banana III dispute	95
J.	BRAZIL	96
1.	Oral statement of Brazil	96
(a)	The Understanding.....	96
(b)	Whether the European Communities' 2006 import regime is a "measure taken to comply"	97

(c)	Final remarks	98
(d)	Conclusion	98
K.	COLOMBIA.....	98
1.	Written submission of Colombia	98
(a)	The preferential tariff treatment accorded to ACP bananas is not justified under the Article I Doha Waiver.....	98
(i)	The Article I Doha Waiver has ceased to apply to bananas as of 1 January 2006, and the EC was no longer entitled to "rectify the matter"	98
(ii)	Assuming, arguendo, that the EC had the opportunity to "rectify the matter", the tariff level of €176/tonne does not comply with the Tariff Level Standard.....	99
	The European Communities has not discharged its burden of showing compliance with the elements required under the Waiver Annex	99
	The European Communities' quantity- or volumes-based analysis is contrary to the Tariff Level Standard.....	99
	The applied tariff of €176/tonne does not result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers.....	100
(b)	The Preferential Tariff Rate Quota accorded to ACP bananas is inconsistent with Article XIII of the GATT 1994.....	101
(c)	Conclusion	101
2.	Oral statement of Colombia	101
L.	ECUADOR	104
1.	Oral statement of Ecuador	104
M.	JAPAN	106
1.	Written submission of Japan	106
(a)	The Understanding does not preclude the United States from challenging the European Communities' tariff only regime even if the Understanding is a "mutually agreed solution"	106
(b)	The complaint of the United States is considered to fall under the scope of Article 21.5 of the DSU	107
(c)	Issues relating to nullification or impairment of a benefit accruing to the United States	107
(i)	The United States has "standing" to challenge the European Communities' 2006 regime	107
(ii)	Whether there is any nullification or impairment of a benefit accruing to the United States.....	108
	The United States is not required to affirmatively demonstrate that there is a "nullification or impairment of a benefit" in advancing its claim on GATT Articles.....	108
	Whether there is no "nullification or impairment of a benefit" for the purpose of Article 3.8 when the "level of nullification or impairment of a benefit" for the purpose of Article 22 is "zero".....	108
	Whether this Panel should find in the course of its proceeding that the "level of nullification or impairment of a benefit" for the purpose of Article 22 is zero or not.....	109
2.	Oral statement of Japan	109

(a)	Does the EC-US Understanding bar the United States from challenging the Cotonu Preference?.....	109
(b)	Is the current EC banana regime the "measure taken to comply"?	110
(c)	Does any nullification or impairment of benefits exist for the United States in this dispute?	111
N.	MEXICO	112
1.	Oral statement of Mexico	112
(a)	Importance of the preliminary claims	112
(b)	Issues of systemic interest.....	113
(c)	Comments on the substantive claims	114
(d)	Conclusion	115
O.	NICARAGUA AND PANAMA	115
1.	Combined written submission of Nicaragua and Panama	115
(a)	Introduction.....	115
(b)	The European Communities' preliminary objections have no basis in law or fact	115
(c)	The European Communities' ACP tariff preference is inconsistent with GATT Article I:1 and is not covered by its Article I waiver.....	116
(d)	The European Communities' ACP tariff quota is inconsistent with GATT Article XIII:1 and XIII:2.....	117
(e)	The United States is not required to demonstrate nullification or impairment	117
(f)	Conclusion	118
2.	Combined oral statement by Nicaragua and Panama	118

I. INTRODUCTION

1.1 On 29 June 2007, the United States requested the establishment of a panel pursuant to Article 21.5 of the Understanding on Rules and Procedures Governing the Settlement of Disputes (DSU) concerning the alleged inconsistency with the WTO agreements of measures adopted by the European Communities to comply with the rulings and recommendations of the Dispute Settlement Body (DSB) in the dispute EC – Bananas III and subsequent related rulings.¹ The request made by the United States followed a request made by Ecuador, on 23 February 2007, for the establishment of a panel pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU also concerning the alleged inconsistency of measures adopted by the European Communities to comply with the rulings and recommendations of the DSB in the EC – Bananas III dispute and subsequent related rulings.²

1.2 On 6 July 2007, in a communication addressed to the compliance panel requested by Ecuador, the European Communities asked for a modification of the timetable in those proceedings, in order to take into account the timetable of the proceedings of the compliance panel that had been requested by the United States. The European Communities asked that the deadline for its first written submission to the compliance panel requested by Ecuador be postponed until after the United States had filed its own first written submission in the compliance panel proceedings initiated by the United States. The European Communities cited its concern that, were the United States to file its first written submission after the European Communities had filed its own, this would amount "to a de facto reversal of the order in which first written submissions should be submitted" and "create "very serious due process problems".³ When asked by the compliance panel requested by Ecuador to comment on the European Communities' request, in a communication dated 9 July 2007, Ecuador strongly objected to any delay in the proceedings. In Ecuador's view, the timetable in the proceedings was "already much more protracted than the 90 days called for in Article 21.5" and "Ecuador would be prejudiced by a further delay, which [would] only [favour] the interests of the EC as the defending Party".⁴ Ecuador additionally noted that the European Communities had only filed its request "after Ecuador had submitted its first submission" and more than a week after the European Communities had received copy of the United States' request for the establishment of a compliance panel.⁵ Also on 9 July 2007, the United States sent a communication to the compliance panel requested by Ecuador, providing comments for the Panel's consideration on the European Communities' request. The United States noted that the European Communities had received a copy of the United States' request for the establishment of a compliance panel on 29 June 2007. In the view of the United States, the European Communities did "not appear to have identified any 'very serious due process problems' that would arise if the current timetable were maintained in the present proceeding".⁶ On 10 July 2007, the compliance panel requested by Ecuador notified the parties in those proceedings that it did "not find it necessary, at this point, to amend the timetable ... fixed on 29 June". The compliance panel requested by Ecuador informed the parties in those proceedings that it would "follow closely developments relating to the US request for the establishment of an Article 21.5 panel regarding the EC's compliance in the EC – Bananas III case [and in] the eventuality of a DSB decision to establish such an Article 21.5 panel, [it would] promptly consult with the parties in order to decide whether the new developments should affect the timetable in the current proceedings."⁷

1.3 At its meeting on 12 July 2007, the DSB decided, in accordance with Article 21.5 of the DSU, to refer to the original Panel, if possible, the matter raised by the United States in document WT/DS27/83.⁸ The Panel's terms of reference were the following:

"To examine, in the light of the relevant provisions of the covered agreements cited by the United States in document WT/DS27/83, the matter referred to the DSB by the United States in that document, and to make such findings as will assist the DSB in making the recommendations or in giving the rulings provided for in those agreements."⁹

1.4 On 3 August 2007, the United States requested the Director-General to determine the composition of the Panel, pursuant to paragraph 7 of Article 8 of the DSU.¹⁰ On 13 August 2007, the Director-General composed the Panel as follows:

Chairperson: Mr Christian Häberli

Members: Mr Kym Anderson
Mr Yuqing Zhang¹¹

1.5 Belize, Brazil, Cameroon, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Dominica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Jamaica, Japan, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Suriname reserved their third-party rights to participate in the Panel's proceedings.¹² At the request of some third parties, the Panel decided that third parties would have, in addition to the rights provided for under the DSU, the following additional rights: (i) the right to be present during the entirety of the substantive meeting of the Panel with the parties and the third parties; (ii) the right to receive copies of the Parties' first written submissions and rebuttals, as well as copies of the questions posed by the Panel to the parties and to the other third parties and copies of parties' and third parties' responses to such questions; and, (iii) the right to ask oral questions to the parties during the course of the substantive meeting, although the parties would be under no obligation to respond to those questions.

1.6 On 15 August 2007, the Panel addressed a communication to the parties (the United States and the European Communities), submitting draft Working Procedures and the timetable that the Panel proposed to follow in these proceedings and inviting them to an organizational meeting in order to receive the views of the parties.¹³ On the same date, the compliance panel requested by Ecuador also invited the parties to those proceedings (Ecuador and the European Communities) to a separate meeting to discuss the possibility of harmonizing the timetable in those proceedings with that of the Panel requested by the United States. The compliance panel requested by Ecuador also consulted

Ecuador and the European Communities on the possibility of introducing adjustments to the Working Procedures that had been approved for those proceedings.¹⁴

1.7 The organizational meeting was held with the parties (the United States and the European Communities) on 20 August 2007. On the same date, the compliance panel requested by Ecuador held a separate meeting with the parties to those proceedings (Ecuador and the European Communities). On 22 August 2007, the Panel notified the parties (the United States and the European Communities) and the third parties of the adopted Working Procedures and timetable.¹⁵

1.8 On 23 August 2007, the compliance panel requested by Ecuador notified the parties to those proceedings (Ecuador and the European Communities) that, after consideration of the comments received from both parties, the timetable originally established remained unchanged. The compliance panel requested by Ecuador also notified the parties of the amendments incorporated into the Working Procedures, in order to allow for the possibility of holding panel meetings in joint sessions of both the proceedings requested by Ecuador and those requested by the United States and to allow the panels to copy their communications to the parties in both cases.¹⁶

1.9 In accordance with the timetable approved by the Panel, the United States filed its first written submission on 3 September 2007 and the European Communities on 14 September 2007. The United States filed its rebuttal on 27 September 2007 and the European Communities on 10 October 2007. The Panel received third party submissions from Colombia and Japan, a joint third party submission from Belize, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Dominica, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and Suriname and another joint third party submission from Nicaragua and Panama.

1.10 On occasion of the meeting of the compliance panel requested by Ecuador with the parties and third parties on 18 September 2007, the European Communities asked in its oral statement for a modification of the timetable of those proceedings. At the end of that meeting the compliance panel requested by Ecuador communicated to the parties that it had looked into the matter and decided that, notwithstanding that panel's initial intention to either harmonize the timetable of those proceedings with that of the Panel requested by the United States or totally separate both cases, it could not at that point in time find a better alternative for the timetable of proceedings. This despite the fact that the compliance panel requested by Ecuador was aware that the approved timetable implied a considerable burden of work, peaking at particular moments for the parties, as well as for the panel and the Secretariat.¹⁷

1.11 The Panel met with the parties and third parties on 6 and 7 November 2007. The meeting with the parties and third parties was held as an open hearing, allowing for the presence of interested public in the same room as the parties and third parties. This decision was adopted by the Panel in response to a request from both parties, and in light of the circumstances of the case. Noting that WTO Members have not reached definitive agreement regarding the possibility of opening WTO panel meetings to the public, the Panel emphasized that its decision in this case was not intended to set a precedent for future cases and proceedings. As two third parties expressed concern about the presence of the public during the meeting and their preference to make their statements in a closed session, the Panel allowed for such session to take place during the course of the meeting for the purpose of hearing the statements of these two third parties.

1.12 On 21 November 2007, parties and third parties submitted replies to questions posed by the Panel. On 26 November 2007, the United States and the European Communities submitted comments on the replies to questions.

1.13 The compliance panel requested by Ecuador submitted its interim report to the parties in those proceedings on 27 November 2007. Issuance of the interim report in that case had been originally scheduled for 23 November, but was delayed in order to ensure that replies to questions and comments on replies in the proceedings requested by the United States had been received by this Panel, before the interim report in the proceedings requested by Ecuador was issued. The compliance panel requested by Ecuador issued its final report to the parties in those proceedings on 10 December 2007. The final report was circulated to Members on ...¹⁸

1.14 The Panel issued the descriptive sections of the draft report to the parties to the compliance dispute initiated by the United States on 11 January 2008. On the same date, the Panel issued the relevant sections with their respective arguments to each of the third parties. On 16 January 2008, the Panel received comments from the United States regarding the descriptive sections of the draft report, as well as from Brazil and Japan regarding the relevant sections with their own respective arguments. On the same date, the European Communities and Mexico stated that they had no comments.

1.15 The Panel submitted its interim report to the parties on 6 February 2008. On 14 February 2008, the Panel received written requests for review of precise aspects of the interim report from the United States and the European Communities. The Panel held a meeting with both parties on 25 February 2008 to receive their arguments and comments regarding the requests of review of the interim report. On 26 February 2008, the parties submitted written versions of the statements they had made at the 25 February 2008 meeting with the Panel. The Panel issued its final report to the parties on 29 February 2008.

II. FACTUAL ASPECTS

A. BACKGROUND

1. Object of the current dispute

2.1 This dispute concerns measures adopted by the European Communities (EC) with the alleged purpose of complying with the rulings and recommendations of the Dispute Settlement Body (DSB) in the case European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas (EC – Bananas III) and with subsequent related rulings and recommendations. Parties disagree as to whether these measures are in conformity with the European Communities' obligations under the WTO covered agreements.

2. Basic chronology

2.2 At its meeting on 25 September 1997, the DSB adopted the Appellate Body Report on EC – Bananas III (WT/DS27/AB/R) and the four panel reports on the same case (WT/DS27/R/ECU, WT/DS27/R/GTM-WT/DS27/R/HND, WT/DS27/R/MEX and WT/DS27/R/USA), as modified by the Appellate Body's Report.¹⁹ Pursuant to these reports, the DSB requested the European Communities to bring its banana regime, as found to be inconsistent with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 (GATT 1994), the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS) and the Agreement on Import Licensing Procedures (Import Licensing Agreement), into conformity with its obligations under those Agreements.

¹⁸ See Panel Report on EC – Bananas III (Article 21.5 – Ecuador II), para. 1.19.

2.3 On 7 January 1998, the arbitral award requested by Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico and the United States (US), pursuant to Article 21.3(c) of the DSU, was circulated. The Arbitrator concluded that the "reasonable period of time" for the European Communities to implement the rulings and recommendations of the DSB adopted on 25 September 1997 in EC – Bananas III, would be the period from 25 September 1997 to 1 January 1999.²⁰

2.4 On 18 December 1998, Ecuador requested the DSB to re-establish the original panel in order to examine the consistency of the measures adopted by the European Communities to implement the rulings and recommendations adopted by the DSB in September 1997.²¹ On 12 January 1999, the DSB decided, in accordance with Article 21.5 of the DSU, to refer to the original panel the matter raised by Ecuador in document WT/DS27/41.²² The report issued by the compliance Panel requested by Ecuador was adopted by the DSB on 6 May 1999.

2.5 On 14 January 1999, the United States requested authorization from the DSB to suspend the application to the European Communities, and its member States, of tariff concessions and related obligations under the GATT 1994, covering trade in an amount of US$520 million.²³ On 29 January 1999, the European Communities objected to the level of suspension proposed by the United States and requested that the matter of whether the level of suspension proposed was equivalent to the level of nullification or impairment of benefits suffered by the United States be submitted to arbitration.²⁴ On 18 February 1999, the United States therefore requested authorization from the DSB to suspend concessions to the European Communities and its member States consistent with the decision to be issued by the arbitrators.²⁵ On 6 April 1999, the arbitrators determined that the level of nullification or impairment suffered by the United States in the EC – Bananas III dispute was US$191.4 million per year and decided that a suspension by the United States of the application to the European Communities and its member States of tariff concessions and related obligations under the GATT 1994 covering trade for that maximum amount per year would be consistent with Article 22.4 of the DSU.²⁶ On 9 April 1999, the United States requested that the DSB authorize it to suspend concessions to the European Communities and its member States in an amount up to $191.4 million per year.²⁷

2.6 On 23 June 2000, the European Communities and certain developing countries concluded a partnership agreement in Cotonou of Benin (the "Cotonou Agreement"). The Cotonou Agreement provided that the European Communities would allow the importation of products originating from beneficiary developing countries free of customs duties and charges having equivalent effect (or, at least, at preferential terms), until 31 December 2007. In the sector of bananas, this trade preference is applied in the form of an annual importation into the European Communities of up to 775,000 mt of bananas subject to zero duty.²⁸

2.7 Through a communication dated 22 June 2001, the European Communities notified the DSB that it had:

"[R]eached, with the United States of America and Ecuador, a mutually satisfactory solution within the meaning of Article 3.6 of the DSU regarding the implementation by the EC of the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the DSB in the dispute 'Regime for the importation, sale and distribution of bananas' (WT/DS27)."²⁹

2.8 Through a communication dated 26 June 2001 and addressed to the DSB, the United States referred to the Understanding reached with the European Communities on 11 April 2001.³⁰ In its communication, the United States stated that the Understanding:

"[I]dentifies the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved, but, as is obvious from its own text, it does not in itself constitute a mutually agreed solution pursuant to Article 3.6 of the DSU. In addition, in view of the steps yet to be taken by all parties, it would also be premature to take this item off the DSB agenda."³¹

2.9 Through a communication dated 3 July 2001 and addressed to the DSB, Ecuador referred to the Understanding reached with the European Communities on 30 April 2001.³² In its communication, Ecuador stated that the Understanding:

"[I]dentifies means by which a long-standing dispute can be resolved. However, the Understanding also comprises of the execution of two phases and requires the implementation of several key features, which demands the collective action of the WTO membership ... [T]he Understanding reached with the EC refers to the current banana import regime in force as of 1 July 2001 as one of a transitory nature since, beginning at the latest on 1 January 2006, a new and definitive Tariff Only regime will be in force ... Since the new EC banana import regime which is currently in force still requires that several steps be taken in the context of the DSB and other WTO bodies, it would be premature to take this item off the DSB agenda which considers this issue at every regular meeting pursuant to Article 21.6 of the DSU ... In light of the above and although Ecuador sees the Understanding as an agreed solution which can contribute to an overall, definite and universally accepted solution, it must be made clear that the provisions of Article 3.6 of the DSU are not applicable in this case."³³

2.10 On 14 November 2001, the WTO Ministerial Conference decided to waive Article I:1 of the GATT 1994:

"[U]ntil 31 December 2007, to the extent necessary to permit the [EC] to provide preferential tariff treatment for products originating in ACP States as required by

2.11 While in principle this waiver was to be valid until 31 December 2007³⁶, in regard to bananas this was subject to the terms and conditions set out in the text of the Decision, which include the additional provisions contained in the Annex to the Doha Waiver Decision (Bananas Annex).³⁷

2.12 Also on 14 November 2001, the WTO Ministerial Conference decided to waive Article XIII:1 and XIII:2 of the GATT 1994:

"With respect to the EC's imports of bananas, as of 1 January 2002, and until 31 December 2005 ... with respect to the EC's separate tariff quota of 750,000 tonnes for bananas of ACP origin."³⁸

2.13 On 21 January 2002, the European Communities addressed a communication to the DSB, concerning its progress in the implementation of the DSB's recommendations and rulings in the EC – Bananas III dispute. The European Communities informed the DSB that Regulation (EC) No. 2587/2001 had been adopted by the Council on 19 December 2001 and published in the Official Journal of the European Communities L 345 of 29 December 2001.³⁹ It stated that:

"By this Regulation, the EC has implemented Phase 2 of the Understandings with the United States and Ecuador (circulated as document WT/DS27/58 of 2 July 2001)."⁴⁰

2.14 In its session of 1 February 2002, the DSB considered a report submitted by the European Communities concerning its progress in the implementation of the DSB's recommendations regarding its bananas import regime. At the meeting, the European Communities expressed its view that "this matter should now be withdrawn from the DSB agenda".⁴¹ The European Communities stated that it had implemented on schedule the second phase of the Understandings on Bananas concluded with the United States and Ecuador in April 2001, and had complied with its international obligations. The European Communities added that the regime set out in Regulation (EC) No. 2587/2001, adopted on 19 December 2001, would be applicable until the time the European Communities' banana import regime would become a tariff-only regime. This would take place by 1 January 2006 at the latest, following the negotiations under Article XXVIII, which in principle would begin in 2004. In response, at the same meeting, Ecuador stated that "like other countries, [it] also considered that this item should no longer appear on the agenda of future DSB meetings". Ecuador added that the bilateral understanding signed with the European Communities on 30 April 2001:

"[C]onstituted a sound basis for the EC to implement a transitional banana import regime so that by 1 January 2006, at the latest, a WTO-compatible tariff-only regime would be put into place. The transitional regime contained various phases, stages and elements to be implemented. One element was to obtain waivers from Articles I and XIII of the GATT 1994. However, the decision to grant these waivers included new stages which would have to be carried out in order to ensure a proper transition to a tariff-only banana import regime, as from 1 January 2006. Accordingly, insofar as the EC continued to implement the DSB's recommendations by meeting its commitments, Ecuador wished to reserve its rights under Article 21 of the DSU. Therefore if there was any disagreement concerning the measures applied by the EC, the matter could be referred to the original Panel pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU."⁴²

2.15 At the same DSB meeting, the United States stated that it was:

"[P]leased to note that the EC had increased the quota for Latin American banana exporting countries by 100,000 tonnes effective from 1 January 2002. The United States had, therefore, terminated the suspension of concessions in effect since 1999. The United States would continue to work closely with the EC and other Members to address any issues that might arise as the EC moved to a tariff-based system for bananas and implemented the terms of the bilateral Understanding on Bananas."⁴³

2.16 On 19 January 2004, the European Communities, in view of the enlargement of the European Union, resulting from the accession of Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Malta, Poland, the Slovak Republic and Slovenia, notified, within the framework of procedures laid down in Article XXIV GATT 1994, and in particular Article XXIV:6, the withdrawal on 1 May 2004 of the commitments in Schedules CXL of the EC-15, and in the Schedules of Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Malta, Poland, the Slovak Republic and Slovenia. The European Communities added that it was ready to enter into Article XXIV and Article XXVIII GATT 1994 procedures, including tariff negotiations or consultations, to address compensatory adjustments provided for under Article XXIV:6 of the GATT 1994. The European Communities also stated that, pending the completion of the procedures under Article XXIV and Article XXVIII of the GATT 1994, and the creation of a new schedule valid for the EC-25, the commitments in Schedule CXL would be fully respected and that the new member States of the European Communities intended to align their Schedules with those of the European Communities on 1 May 2004.⁴⁴

2.17 On 15 July 2004, the European Communities announced, in a communication to WTO Members, that it intended to modify, in accordance with the provisions and procedures of Article XXVIII:5 of the GATT 1994, its concessions with respect to tariff item 0803 00 19 (bananas) included in the EC Schedule CXL.⁴⁵

2.18 On 31 January 2005, the European Communities notified the WTO Members that it intended to replace its concessions on tariff item 0803 00 19 (bananas) included in the EC Schedule CXL with a bound duty of €230/mt.⁴⁶ It also indicated that the communication constituted:

"[T]he announcement under the terms of the Annex to the Decision of the WTO Ministerial Conference of 14 November 2001 concerning the ACP-EC Partnership Agreement (WT/MIN(01)/15)."⁴⁷

2.19 On 30 March 2005, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras and Panama, followed by Venezuela and Nicaragua on 31 March 2005 and Brazil on 1 April 2005, notified the WTO that they were requesting arbitration pursuant to the procedures contained in the Annex to the Doha Waiver, in order to determine whether the envisaged rebinding on the European Communities' tariff on bananas (at €230/mt), announced under the Annex to the Waiver, fulfilled the requirements of the Waiver Decision.⁴⁸ The Arbitrator's award was circulated on 1 August 2005.⁴⁹ The Arbitrator concluded that:

"[T]he European Communities' envisaged rebinding on bananas would not result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers, taking into account all EC WTO market-access commitments relating to bananas."⁵⁰

2.20 On 13 September 2005, the European Communities notified the interested parties that it had revised its proposal to provide as from 1 January 2006 for an MFN tariff for bananas at €187/mt and a tariff quota for ACP countries of 775,000 mt per year at zero duty.⁵¹

2.21 In a communication dated 26 September 2005, the European Communities notified the Arbitrator that, after consultations with the interested parties, there was at that point no basis for even seeking a mutually satisfactory solution within a timeframe that would allow for implementation of the new European Communities' banana regime by 1 January 2006. The European Communities therefore requested that the matter be referred back to the same Arbitrator, in accordance with the Annex to the Doha Waiver.⁵² The Arbitrator's award was circulated on 27 October 2005.⁵³ The Arbitrator concluded that:

"[T]he European Communities' proposed rectification, consisting of a new MFN tariff rate on bananas of €187 per metric ton and a 775,000 mt tariff quota on imports of bananas of ACP origin, would not result 'in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers', taking into account 'all EC WTO market-access commitments relating to bananas'. Consequently... the European Communities has failed to rectify the matter, in accordance with the fifth tirt of the Annex to the Doha Waiver."⁵⁴

2.22 On 27 September 2006, the European Communities, noting the enlargement of the European Union, resulting from the accession of Bulgaria and Romania that would take place from 1 January 2007, notified, within the framework of procedures laid down in Article XXIV GATT 1994, and in particular Article XXIV:6, the modification of the EC Schedule, as well as the fact that the two new members of the European Union would be subject to the EC Schedules from 1 January 2007 and, consequently the commitments in the Schedules of Bulgaria and Romania would be withdrawn from that date.⁵⁵

2.23 On 28 March 2007, the United States Trade Representative (USTR) addressed a letter to the European Communities Commissioner for Trade. In this letter, the United States Trade Representative referred to discussions between both parties relating to the European Communities' new banana import regime. The USTR proposed that "our discussions to that point would fulfil any consultation requirement and the EU would not object to a US request for the establishment of a Panel at the first DSB meeting at which a US request is considered". In his reply to the USTR dated 4 April 2007, the European Communities Commissioner for Trade stated that the "EU would be ready not to object to a US request for the establishment of a panel in July".⁵⁶

B. PRODUCT DESCRIPTION

2.24 The European Communities classifies bananas under the following tariff lines⁵⁷: 0803 00 11 for Fresh- Plantains; 0803 00 19 for Fresh- Other (bananas); 0803 00 90 for Dried (bananas, including plantains).⁵⁸ The Panel notes, however that, in some documents, including in its WTO Schedules LXXX and CXL, the European Communities refers to fresh bananas under tariff item 0803 00 12.⁵⁹

2.25 Parties and a number of third parties have emphasized the importance of bananas production and trade for many WTO Members, especially developing and least developed country Members.⁶⁰

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) considers bananas to be the world's most exported fruit in terms of volume and second in terms of value. According to the FAO, bananas represent a substantial source of income and employment for several tropical countries.⁶¹ Figures relating to the European Communities' bananas market, including domestic bananas production, consumption and imports, as well as on the United States' domestic bananas production, are discussed below.⁶²

C. EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES' LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR BANANAS IMPORTS

1. European Communities' bananas import regime

2.26 The European Communities' Council Regulation (EEC) No. 404/93 of 13 February 1993⁶³ established the common organization of the banana market. This regulation established the free circulation of bananas within the common market, it regulated the domestic production of bananas, and established the regime for the importation of bananas into the European Communities. Council Regulation (EEC) No. 404/93 accorded different treatment to bananas depending on their origin. It divided the system into community bananas, which were the bananas produced within the European Communities; traditional ACP bananas, which were bananas originated in any of 12 ACP countries within the quantities established in the annex;⁶⁴ non-traditional ACP imports, which referred to the quantities of imported bananas in any of the ACP countries that exceeded the quantity established in the Annex; and bananas imported from non-ACP third countries.⁶⁵ Council Regulation (EEC) No. 404/93 established a quota of 854,000 mt for Community bananas⁶⁶ and of 857,700 mt for traditional ACP bananas as established in the annex. A tariff quota of two million mt was opened each year for imports of third country bananas and non-traditional ACP bananas.⁶⁷ Within this tariff quota, third country bananas were subject to an in-quota tariff of 100 ECU/mt, while imports from non-traditional ACP countries were subject to zero duty.⁶⁸ The out-of-quota tariff was 750 ECU/mt for non-traditional ACP-bananas and 850 ECU/mt for out-of-quota third country bananas.⁶⁹ Imports from both the non-ACP third country bananas and non-traditional ACP countries were subject to import licences granted in the following proportions: (a) 66.5 per cent to operators established in third country and non traditional ACP bananas; (b) 30 per cent to operators established in the European Communities or traditional ACP bananas; and, (c) 3.5 per cent to operators established in the European Communities that marketed bananas other than community and traditional ACP bananas from 1992.⁷⁰ The Regulation also provided that, no later than the end of the third year after the entry into force of this Regulation, the Commission had to submit a report to the European Parliament and the Council on the operation of the Regulation. The report had to contain among other things "an analysis of the development of Community, third-country and ACP banana marketing flows since the implementation of these arrangements." The same provision also established that the "Commission shall again report to the European Parliament and the Council by 31 December 2001 on the operation of this Regulation and make appropriate proposals concerning new arrangements to apply after 31 December 2002."⁷¹

2.27 Commission Regulation (EEC) No. 1442/93 of 10 June 1993⁷² complemented Council Regulation (EEC) No. 404/93 by laying down detailed rules for the application of the arrangements for importing bananas into the European Communities. Regulation 1442/93 established the licensing procedures for imports from traditional ACP and non traditional ACP and third country bananas. Applications for traditional ACP imports were required to be accompanied by a certificate of origin testifying the status as traditional ACP bananas.⁷³ Import licences for non traditional bananas and third country bananas were subject to several cumulatively procedures. These applicable procedures included: "(i) allocation of licences based on three operator categories; (ii) allocation of licences according to three activity functions; (iii) export certificate requirements for imports from Costa Rica, Colombia and Nicaragua; and (iv) a two-round quarterly procedure to administer licence applications."⁷⁴

2.28 Council Regulation (EC) No. 3290/94 of 22 December 1994 on the Adjustments and Transitional Arrangements Required in the Agricultural Sector in order to Implement the Agreements Concluded during the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations,⁷⁵ modified Council Regulation (EEC) No. 404/93 and incorporated into EC Law the European Communities' banana import commitments established in Schedule LXXX and the Bananas Framework Agreement. In this regard, a tariff quota of 2.2 million mt was opened to third country bananas and non traditional ACP bananas. Within the framework of this quota, imports of third country bananas were subject to a duty of 75 ECU/mt and imports of non-traditional ACP bananas were subject to a zero duty. Non-traditional ACP bananas imported outside this quota were subject to the custom duty specified in the European Communities' Common Customs Tariff, less 100 ECU/mt.

2.29 Commission Regulation (EC) No. 478/95 of 1 March 1995⁷⁶ established additional rules for the application of Regulation 404/93 as regards the tariff quotas arrangements for imports of bananas. Regulation 478/95 incorporated country-specific shares allocated to the countries mentioned in the Bananas Framework Agreement, as well as the other provisions established in this agreement. Therefore, tariff quotas for imports of bananas from third countries and non-traditional ACP bananas were subject to the following distribution: Costa Rica 23.4 per cent; Colombia 21 per cent;

Nicaragua 3 per cent; Venezuela 2 per cent; non-traditional ACP countries and other ACP countries and others were allocated up to 90,000 mt.

2.30 Council Regulation (EEC) No. 404/93 and its subsequent EC rules were reviewed in the EC – Bananas III case. The Panel and Appellate Body Report found that certain aspects of these regulations were inconsistent with Articles I:1, III:4, X:3 and XIII:1 of the GATT 1994, Article 1.2 of the Licensing Agreement and Articles II and XVII of the GATS.⁷⁷

2.31 Council Regulation (EC) No. 1637/98 of 20 July 1998 amended Council Regulation (EEC) No. 404/93.⁷⁸ Council Regulation (EC) No. 1637/98 maintained the tariff quota for imports of third countries and non-traditional ACP bananas at 2.2 million mt.⁷⁹ The in-quota tariff imports from third country bananas were subject to a duty of 75 ECU/mt, while imports from non-traditional ACP countries were free of duty.⁸⁰ As a result of the European Communities' enlargement in 1995, an additional tariff quota of 353,000 mt was opened for imports of third countries and non-traditional ACP bananas. Under this quota, imports of bananas from third countries were subject to 75 ECU/mt, while imports of non-traditional ACP bananas were free of duty.⁸¹ No import duty was charged on banana imports from traditional ACP origin.⁸² All bananas imports to the European Communities were subject to import licences.⁸³ Regulation 1637/98 also established that, if there was no reasonable possibility of securing the agreement of all WTO Members with a substantial interest in the supply of bananas, the European Communities' Commission could proceed to allocate the tariff quotas for traditional and non-traditional ACP bananas and for third country bananas.⁸⁴ The out-of-quota tariff for non-traditional ACP bananas was reduced by ECU200.⁸⁵ Council Regulation (EC) No. 1637/98 also abolished the operator categories.

2.32 Commission Regulation (EC) No. 2362/98 of 28 October 1998⁸⁶ repealed Commission Regulation (EEC) No. 1442/93 as amended by Regulation (EC) No. 702/95 and it laid down detailed rules for the implementation of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 404/93 regarding imports of bananas into the European Communities. According to Regulation 2362/98, the tariff quotas and the traditional ACP quantities were to be allocated taking into account traditional trade flows, in the following way: 92 per cent to traditional operators and 8 per cent to newcomers.⁸⁷ Annex I of Regulation 2362/98 established the distribution of the tariff quota for third country imports in the following way: Ecuador 26.17 per cent; Costa Rica 25.61 per cent; Colombia 23.03 per cent; Panama 15.76 per cent; and, "Other" 9.43 per cent. The quantity for traditional ACP bananas remained at 857,700 mt.

2.34 Council Regulation (EC) No. 216/2001 of 29 January 2001⁸⁹ further amended Regulation (EEC) No. 404/93 on the common organization of the European Communities' market in bananas. Regulation 216/2001 opened a third autonomous tariff quota of 850,000 mt for bananas of all origins (quota C) subject to a customs duty of €300/mt.⁹⁰ This quota was in addition to the first tariff quota of 2.2 million mt at a rate of €75/mt bound in the WTO (or quota A) and a second tariff quota of 353,000 mt due to the enlargement of the European Communities in 1995 (or quota B).⁹¹ All of these tariff quotas were opened for imports of products originating in all third countries. ACP bananas under and outside the tariff quotas were subject to a tariff preference of €300/mt.⁹² Regulation 216/2001 established that the Commission, on the basis of an agreement with the WTO Members with a substantial interest in the supply of bananas, would allocate tariff quotas A and B among supplier countries. According to Regulation 216/2001, imports under tariff quota A and B were subject to a custom duty of €75/mt, while imports under the tariff quota C were subject to a duty of €300/mt.⁹³ Regulation 216/2001 also established that the tariff quotas would be administered by taking into account the traditional trade flows ("traditionals"/"newcomers") or through other methods.⁹⁴

2.35 Council Regulation (EC) No. 2587/2001 of 19 December 2001⁹⁵ further amended Regulation (EEC) No. 404/93 on the common organization of the European Communities' market in bananas. Regulation 2587/2001 changed the quotas in the following way: Quota A of 2.2 million mt for imports from third countries subject to a customs duty of €75/mt; Quota B of 453,000 mt for imports from third countries subject to a tariff duty of €75/mt; Quota C of 750,000 mt open to imports from ACP countries subject to a zero duty.⁹⁶ A tariff preference of €300/mt was established for imports originating in ACP countries.⁹⁷

2. European Communities' current bananas import regime

2.36 For the purpose of this dispute, the current regime for imports of bananas to the European Communities is that established in Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 of 24 November 2005.⁹⁸ Regulation 1964/2005 entered into force on 1 January 2006 and established a tariff rate of €176/mt for bananas (tariff item 0803 00 19).⁹⁹ Regulation 1964/2005 also established a tariff quota for bananas originating in ACP countries pursuant to the European Communities' commitments under the ACP-EC Partnership Agreement, also known as the Cotonou Agreement.¹⁰⁰ The trade preferences granted to ACP countries by the European Communities under the Cotonou Agreement were scheduled to expire at the end of 2007.¹⁰¹

2.37 Under the Cotonou Agreement, the European Communities has engaged to allow the importation of products "originating from Cotonou beneficiary developing countries free of custom duties and charges having equivalent effect or, at least at preferential terms, until December 31, 2007."¹⁰² The European Communities has accorded that ACP origin bananas enter the European Communities' market at 775,000 tons per year. All bananas imported beyond this amount are subject to the €176/mt MFN tariff rate.¹⁰³ The European Communities has stated that the Cotonou Agreement is applied in a non-discriminatory way and its potential signatories are not limited to any geographic area.¹⁰⁴ According to information provided by the European Communities, the Cotonou Agreement in its Article 94, paragraph 1 states that any "independent State whose structural characteristics and economic and social situation are comparable" to those of the already participating developing countries can accede to the Cotonou Agreement.¹⁰⁵

2.38 In addition to the preferences under the Cotonou Agreement, bananas originating in least developed countries (LDCs) also enjoy duty-free access to the European Communities' market from a generalized tariff preferences scheme known as the Everything But Arms (EBA) arrangement, which is laid down in Council Regulation (EC) No. 980/2005 of 27 June 2005.¹⁰⁶

2.39 Implementing regulations have been adopted by the European Communities subsequent to Regulation 1964/2005. According to both parties¹⁰⁷, these regulations include: Commission Regulation (EC) No. 2014/2005 of 9 December 2005¹⁰⁸; Commission Regulation (EC) No. 2015/2005 of 9 December 2005¹⁰⁹; Commission Regulation (EC) No. 2149/2005 of 23 December 2005¹¹⁰; Commission Regulation (EC) No. 219/2006 of 8 February 2006¹¹¹; Commission Regulation (EC) No. 325/2006 of 23 February 2006¹¹²; Commission Regulation (EC) No. 566/2006 of 6 April

3. Impact of the different European Communities enlargements in its bananas import regime

2.42 During the period between 1993 to 2007, the membership of the European Communities has been enlarged three times. This has changed the market and regulatory conditions for the import of bananas to the European Communities.

2.43 In 1995, with the accession of Austria, Finland and Sweden to the European Communities, an autonomous tariff quota of 353,000 mt was opened to MFN bananas.¹²³

2.44 In 2004, with the accession of ten new member States to the European Communities, an autonomous tariff quota of 300,000 mt with an in-quota tariff of €75/mt was opened for the period 1 May 2004 until 31 December 2004.¹²⁴ For the year 2005, this autonomous tariff quota was ¹²³ United States' response to question 2.

¹²⁴ United States' and European Communities' responses to question 2.

increased to 460,000 mt. According to the United States, prior to the enlargement most of the ten acceding countries charged zero-duty with unlimited access to MFN bananas.¹²⁵

2.45 In 2007, Romania and Bulgaria became members of the European Communities. Before the accession, Romanian banana imports were subject to an ad valorem tariff of 16 per cent, while Bulgaria applied a tariff of 11.2 per cent. In 2005, Romania and Bulgaria imported 143,000 mt and 55,000 mt bananas respectively. After the accession, bananas exports to both countries are subject to the €176/mt MFN tariff.

2.46 As stated by the United States, the European Communities has not provided Article XXIV or XXVIII compensation to MFN suppliers for any of these accessions.¹²⁶

D. EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES' BANANAS MARKET

1. European Communities' bananas production

2.47 The European Communities' domestic banana production comes from Greece (Crete), Spain (Canary Islands), Cyprus, Portugal (continental Portugal, Madeira, and the Azores) and France (overseas territories of Martinique and Guadeloupe). In 2006, the European Communities' domestic banana production amounted to 641,754 mt.¹²⁷ According to information provided by the European Communities, domestic production for 2007 is expected to have been lower than the previous year, since banana plantations were damaged by the passage of Hurricane Dean through the territories of Martinique and Guadeloupe in August 2007.¹²⁸

2.48 There are no exports of bananas from the European Communities, as all production is destined for domestic consumption.¹²⁹

2. European Communities' bananas consumption

2.49 The European Communities does not have data on consumption volumes for each of its member States. Once bananas have legally been imported into the European Communities' common market, they may freely circulate within the territory of the European Communities. The data collected refers only to banana imports.¹³⁰ However, the following table shows the total domestic sales of bananas in the European Communities.

¹³⁰ Information provided by the United States shows that the consumption of bananas in the EC-25 for 2005 was of 4.3 millions mt. However, the European Communities considers that this information is not accurate since the data provided by the United States refers to imports made by each of the member States which does not mean that the bananas are consumed in that country. See Exhibit US-7 and European Communities' response to question 65, para. 94.

* For the amount of Ecuador's exports to the European Communities in 1999 there is a difference between the figures provided by the European Communities and those provided by Ecuador. Ecuador's response to question 115 shows that the amount of MFN bananas exported to the European Communities in 1999 was of 3,208,943 mt. This would represent an increase in the share of total for MFN countries of 74 per cent and an increase in the EU total amount of sales for 1999 to 4,330,952 mt.

3. European Communities' bananas imports

2.50 The European Communities is the world's biggest export market for bananas, followed by the United States. The majority of bananas exported to the European Communities are from MFN or so-called "Dollar Zone" origin and to a smaller amount from ACP origin. Throughout this report, the term MFN bananas is used to indicate bananas originating in WTO Members that are not signatories of the Cotonou Agreement. MFN banana suppliers are WTO those Members that are not signatories of the Cotonou Agreement.

2.51 In 2006, the total amount of MFN banana imports in the European Communities amounted to 3.2 million mt. The main exporting MFN countries in that year were: Ecuador, Colombia, Costa Rica, Panama, Brazil, Guatemala, Peru, Honduras, Venezuela, and Mexico.¹³¹ For that same year, the total amount of ACP banana imports to the European Communities was of 891.218 mt. These imports came from ACP countries such as: Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, the Dominican Republic, Belize, Suriname, Saint Lucia, Jamaica, Ghana, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Dominica.¹³²

2.52 With respect to imports under the European Communities' EBA preference scheme, the European Communities stated that the scheme does not have an impact on the imports of bananas from least-developed countries (LDCs) since all LDCs that are exporting bananas to the European Communities are also Cotonou beneficiary countries, with the exception of Yemen and Bangladesh, but they have no banana exports towards the EC.¹³³ The European Communities additionally stated that since 1999 only four LDCs (Rwanda, Uganda, Somalia and Cape Verde) have exported bananas to the European Communities and in very limited quantities.¹³⁴

4. European Communities' banana imports under Council Regulation 1964/2005

2.53 Since 1 January 2006, the European Communities has been applying, under Regulation 1964/2005, a tariff of €176/mt to all bananas of MFN origin and to ACP origin bananas in excess of the 775,000 mt duty free quota.¹³⁵

2.54 Regulation 1964/2005 increased the ACP duty free quota from 750,000 mt to 775,000 mt. According to the European Communities, this increase was based on average ACP exports to the EC-10 prior to the accession of new member States. However, the United States has responded that ACP imports into the ten acceding countries from 2001 to 2003 amounted only to 15,413 mt.¹³⁶

2.55 According to information provided by the European Communities, in 2006 the tariff of €176/mt was applied to 3,409,897 mt bananas. From this amount, 3,293,678 mt corresponded to Latin American origin bananas and 116,219 mt corresponded to out-of-quota ACP origin bananas.¹³⁷ In 2006, the share of total imports subject to the tariff of €176/mt was of 81.5 per cent of the total imports of bananas.¹³⁸ The remaining 18.5 per cent of the total import of bananas corresponded to zero duty ACP imports under the 775,000 mt quota.

2.56 In 2006, the European Communities' tariff revenue for the importation of bananas amounted to €600,141,907, from which €79,687,363 was levied on Latin American origin bananas, while €20,454,544 was levied on out-of-quota ACP origin bananas.¹³⁹

2.57 The United States argues that the €176/mt tariff imposed on bananas of MFN origin under Regulation 1964/2005, which would be equivalent to $4.33/box, or to 33 per cent ad valorem, is 135 per cent higher than the €75/mt tariff rate previously imposed on MFN bananas.¹⁴⁰ According to the European Communities, this statement ignores the cost for the acquisition of import licenses under the old system; the effect of the out-of-quota tariff of €80/mt; the significant increase of MFN imports to the European Communities; the increase in the prices paid by trading companies to MFN banana farmers; and the new market access allowed to MFN countries that had no, or very little, access to the European Communities market under the old system.¹⁴¹

2.58 The European Communities considers that, based on market data and statistics comparing the situation in the banana market before and after 1 January 2006, Regulation 1964/2005 has had a positive effect for the world trade of bananas.¹⁴² According to the European Communities, there has been a significant increase in the volume of bananas imported into the European Communities from European Communities' first written submission, para. 17. In response to a question from the Panel, Colombia states that the European Communities "analysis of trade flows reflect a flawed understanding of causality." Colombia adds that an increase in the total quantities of banana imports to the European Communities cannot be exclusively explained by the bananas import regime implemented through Council Regulation (EC) 1964/2005 and disregard any other supply and demand elements involved in this business. As an example, Colombia mentions the appreciation of the Euro with respect to the US dollar, which would have increased "the real disposable income of Europeans to purchase foreign products". Colombia's response to question 113.

all groups of developing exporting countries (both MFN and ACP). In 2006, the total volume of bananas imported into the European Communities from MFN countries was approximately 3.28 million mt, which was the highest volume of imports registered since 1999.¹⁴³ According to the European Communities, this represents an increase of 10.7 per cent from 2005 to 2006, which is above the total growth of the market of bananas in the European Communities (10.3 per cent from 2005 to 2006).¹⁴⁴

2.59 The European Communities also claims that developing countries like Guatemala and Peru, which had no or very little exports of bananas into the European Communities have now started to increase their exports to the Communities.¹⁴⁵ Moreover, countries such as Bolivia, Sri Lanka and Thailand have started to export bananas to the European Communities market.¹⁴⁶

2.60 The European Communities additionally argues that Regulation 1964/2005 has had a positive effect on the price paid to banana producers. According to data provided by the European Communities, FOB prices in US dollars paid to Ecuadorian and Colombian bananas in 2006 were higher than the price paid in 2004 and 2005.¹⁴⁷ The European Communities states that:

"[T]he average annual FOB prices in Ecuador (based on information published by the Central Bank of Ecuador) were US$217 per ton in 2004, US$224 per ton in 2005, US$239 per ton in 2006 and US$232 per ton for the first six months of 2007. Likewise, the average annual FOB prices in Colombia were US$285 per ton in 2005, US$306 per ton in 2006 and US$321 per ton for the first six months of 2007".¹⁴⁸

Ecuador and Colombia have both contested these figures. Ecuador states that the statistics presented by the European Communities "are not disaggregated by markets to assess the real scope of the EC's affirmations."¹⁴⁹ In turn, Colombia states that, according to Eurostat, the CIF prices for bananas of Colombian origin were on average €658/mt in 2005 and €611/mt in 2006.¹⁵⁰

5. United States' banana production

2.61 United States bananas are produced in Hawaii and Puerto Rico. Information provided by the United States shows that its domestic production in Hawaii in 2006 was 10,000 mt, while the bananas produced in Puerto Rico in 2006 amounted to 21,900 mt.¹⁵¹

2.62 Information provided by Côte d'Ivoire indicates that in 2005 there were 190 farms dedicated to the production of bananas in Hawaii that produced 9,500 mt bananas in that year.¹⁵² Côte d'Ivoire

¹⁴⁴ Ibid. Third parties, such as Ecuador, Nicaragua and Panama, disagree with these assertions. According to them, for the period between 1999 to 2006, the EC imports from ACP countries increased 30 per cent, while MFN imports remained generally the same. See Ecuador's response to question 115 and Nicaragua and Panama's response to question 108 and 115, Exhibit P/N-3.

However, Ecuador said in its response to question 155 that, while MFN exporters like Brazil and Peru recorded a significant increase in exports in 2006, in that same year other countries like Venezuela, Mexico and Honduras suffered a similarly important loss in their sales to the European Communities market. also states that during the past three years between 3 and 20 tonnes of bananas produced in Hawaii have been exported to the European Communities.¹⁵³

2.63 The United States is a net banana importer. The United States represents the second world's largest export market for bananas, after the European Communities. Most bananas exported to the United States are from Latin American origin.¹⁵⁴

E. PANEL AND APPELLATE BODY FINDINGS IN PREVIOUS PROCEEDINGS

1. Measures subject to the original proceedings

2.64 The original panel and Appellate Body proceedings concerned the European Communities' common market organization for bananas, as established through Council Regulation (EEC) No. 404/93 (Regulation 404/93), introduced on 1 July 1993, and implemented, supplemented and amended through subsequent European Communities' legislation, regulations and administrative measures.¹⁵⁵

2. Panel and Appellate Body main findings in the original proceedings

2.65 With regard to the challenged European Communities' measures, the original panel made the following main substantive findings:

- (a) The European Communities' allocation of tariff quota shares by agreement and by assignment to some Members not having a substantial interest in supplying bananas to the European Communities (including Nicaragua, Venezuela and certain ACP countries in respect of traditional and non-traditional exports) but not to other Members (such as Guatemala) and the tariff quota reallocation rules of the Bananas Framework Agreement, were inconsistent with the requirements of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994.¹⁵⁶
- (b) To the extent that the Panel had found that the European Communities had acted inconsistently with the requirements of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994, the Lomé waiver waived that inconsistency with Article XIII:1, to the extent necessary to permit the European Communities to allocate shares of its banana tariff quota to specific traditional ACP banana supplying countries in an amount not exceeding their pre-1991 best-ever exports to the European Communities.¹⁵⁷
- (c) Neither the negotiation of the Bananas Framework Agreement and its inclusion in the European Communities' Schedule, including the Bananas Framework Agreement tariff quota shares, nor the Agreement on Agriculture permitted the European

Communities to act inconsistently with the requirements of Article XIII of the GATT 1994.¹⁵⁸

- (d) To the extent that the European Communities' preferential tariff treatment of non-traditional ACP bananas was inconsistent with its obligations under Article I:1 of the GATT 1994, those obligations had been waived by the Lomé waiver.¹⁵⁹
- (e) The allocation to Category B operators of 30 per cent of the licences allowing the importation of third-country and non-traditional ACP bananas at in-quota tariff rates was inconsistent with the requirements of Article III:4 of the GATT 1994.¹⁶⁰
- (f) The application in general of operator category rules in respect of the importation of third-country and non-traditional ACP bananas at in-quota tariff rates, in the absence of the application of such rules to traditional ACP imports, and in particular the allocation to Category B operators of 30 per cent of the licences allowing the importation of third-country and non-traditional ACP bananas at in-quota tariff rates, were inconsistent with the requirements of Article I:1 of the GATT 1994.¹⁶¹
- (g) The Lomé waiver did not waive the European Communities' obligations under Article I:1 of the GATT 1994 in respect of licensing procedures applied to third-country and non-traditional ACP imports, including those related to operator category rules.¹⁶²
- (h) The application of operator category rules in respect of the importation of third-country and non-traditional ACP bananas at in-quota tariff rates, in the absence of the application of such rules to traditional ACP imports, was inconsistent with the requirements of Article X:3(a) of the GATT 1994.¹⁶³

- (r) The allocation to ripeners of 28 per cent of the Category A and B licences allowing the importation of third-country and non-traditional ACP bananas at in-quota tariff rates created less favourable conditions of competition for like service suppliers of Complainants' origin and was therefore inconsistent with the requirements of Article XVII of the GATS.¹⁷³

2.67 In turn, the Appellate Body decided to:

- (a) Uphold the Panel's conclusion that the Agreement on Agriculture did not permit the European Communities to act inconsistently with the requirements of Article XIII of the GATT 1994;¹⁷⁸
- (b) Uphold the Panel's finding that the allocation of tariff quota shares, whether by agreement or by assignment, to some, but not to other, Members not having a substantial interest in supplying bananas to the European Communities was inconsistent with Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994;¹⁷⁹
- (c) Uphold the Panel's finding that the tariff quota reallocation rules of the Bananas Framework Agreement were inconsistent with Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994, and to modify the Panel's finding by concluding that the Bananas Framework Agreement tariff quota reallocation rules were also inconsistent with the chapeau of Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994;¹⁸⁰
- (d) Reverse the Panel's finding that the Lomé Waiver waived any inconsistency with Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994 to the extent necessary to permit the European Communities to allocate tariff quota shares to traditional ACP States;¹⁸¹
- (e) Uphold the Panel's conclusions that the European Communities activity function rules and the Bananas Framework Agreement export certificate requirement were inconsistent with Article I:1 of the GATT 1994;¹⁸²

3. Panel findings in the first compliance proceedings

2.68 The compliance panel requested in December 1998 by Ecuador made the following main substantive findings:

- (a) Imports from different non-substantial supplier countries were not similarly restricted in the meaning of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994. Moreover, the allocation of a collective tariff quota for traditional ACP States did not approach as closely as possible the share which these countries might be expected to obtain in the absence of the restrictions as required by the chapeau to Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994. Therefore, the reservation of the quantity of 857,700 mt for traditional ACP imports under the revised regime is inconsistent with paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article XIII of the GATT 1994.¹⁸⁷
- (b) While Members have a degree of discretion in choosing a previous representative period, the period 1994-1996 was not a "representative period". Accordingly, the country-specific allocations assigned by the European Communities to Ecuador, as well as to the other substantial suppliers, were not consistent with the requirements of Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994.¹⁸⁸
- (c) On the basis of the data offered by the European Communities, it was not unreasonable for the European Communities to conclude that the level of 857,700 mt for duty-free traditional ACP exports could be considered to be required by the Lomé Convention because it appeared to be based on pre-1991 best-ever exports and not on allowances for investments.¹⁸⁹
- (d) It was not reasonable for the European Communities to conclude that Protocol 5 of the Lomé Convention required a collective allocation for traditional ACP suppliers. Therefore, duty-free treatment of imports in excess of an individual ACP State's pre-1991 best-ever export volumes was not required by Protocol 5 of the Lomé Convention. Absent any other applicable requirement of the Lomé Convention, those excess volumes were not covered by the Lomé waiver and the preferential tariff thereon was therefore inconsistent with Article I:1 of the GATT 1994.¹⁹⁰
- (e) It was not unreasonable for the European Communities to conclude that non-traditional ACP imports at zero tariff within the "other" category of the MFN tariff quota was required by Article 168 of the Lomé Convention. Therefore, the violation of Article I:1 of the GATT 1994, as alleged by Ecuador, was waived by the Lomé waiver.¹⁹¹
- (f) It was not unreasonable for the European Communities to conclude that including the tariff preference of 200 Euro per mt for out-of-quota imports of non-traditional ACP bananas was within the scope of what the European Communities was required to accord to non-traditional ACP supplies by virtue of the Lomé Convention. Therefore, the violation of Article I:1 of the GATT 1994, as alleged by Ecuador, was covered by the Lomé waiver.¹⁹²

- (g) Under the revised regime, Ecuador's suppliers of wholesale services were accorded de facto less favourable treatment than European Communities/ACP suppliers of those services in violation of Articles II and XVII of the GATS.¹⁹³
- (h) The criteria for acquiring "newcomer" status under the revised licensing procedures accorded de facto less favourable conditions of competition, in the meaning of Article XVII of the GATS, to Ecuador's service suppliers than to like European Communities service suppliers.¹⁹⁴

2.69 The compliance panel requested by Ecuador concluded that:

- (a) The reservation of the quantity of 857,700 mt for traditional ACP imports under the revised regime was inconsistent with paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article XIII of the GATT 1994. Additionally, the country-specific allocations to Ecuador, as well as to the other substantial suppliers, were not consistent with the requirements of Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994.¹⁹⁵
- (b) The level of 857,700 mt for duty-free traditional ACP imports could be considered to be required by the Lomé Convention because it appeared to be based on pre-1991 best-ever exports and not on allowances for investments. However, it was not reasonable for the European Communities to conclude that Protocol 5 of the Lomé Convention required a collective allocation for traditional ACP suppliers. Therefore, duty-free treatment of imports in excess of an individual ACP State's pre-1991 best-ever export volumes was not required by Protocol 5 of the Lomé Convention. Accordingly, absent any other applicable requirement of the Lomé Convention, those excess volumes were not covered by the Lomé waiver and the preferential tariff thereon was therefore inconsistent with Article I:1 of the GATT 1994.¹⁹⁶
- (c) In respect of preferences for non-traditional ACP imports, it was not unreasonable for the European Communities to conclude that (i) non-traditional ACP imports at zero tariff within the "other" category of the tariff quota and (ii) the tariff preference of 200 €/mt for out-of-quota imports, were required by Article 168 of the Lomé Convention. Therefore, the violations of Article I:1 of the GATT 1994, as alleged by Ecuador in respect of preferences for non-traditional ACP imports, were covered by the Lomé waiver.¹⁹⁷
- (d) Under the revised regime, Ecuador's suppliers of wholesale services were accorded de facto less favourable treatment in respect of licence allocation than European Communities/ACP suppliers of those services in violation of Articles II and XVII of the GATS.¹⁹⁸
- (e) The criteria for acquiring "newcomer" status under the revised licensing procedures accorded to Ecuador's service suppliers de facto less favourable conditions of competition than to like European Communities service suppliers in violation of Article XVII of the GATS.¹⁹⁹

2.70 In its report, pursuant to the request made by Ecuador, the compliance panel found appropriate to make suggestions on how the European Communities could bring its banana import regime into conformity with WTO rules. In the panel's view, the European Communities had at least the following options:

"First, the European Communities could choose to implement a tariff-only system for bananas, without a tariff quota. This could include a tariff preference (at zero or another preferential rate) for ACP bananas. If so, a waiver for the tariff preference may be necessary unless the need for a waiver is obviated, for example, by the creation of a free-trade area consistent with Article XXIV of GATT. This option would avoid the need to seek agreement on tariff quota shares.

Second, the European Communities could choose to implement a tariff-only system for bananas, with a tariff quota for ACP bananas covered by a suitable waiver.

Third, the European Communities could maintain its current bound and autonomous MFN tariff quotas, either without allocating any country-specific shares or allocating such shares by agreement with all substantial suppliers consistently with the requirements of the chapeau to Article XIII:2. The MFN tariff quota could be combined with the extension of duty-free treatment (or preferential duties) to ACP imports. In respect of such duty-free treatment, the European Communities could consider with the ACP States whether the Lomé Convention can be read to "require" such treatment within the meaning of the Lomé waiver. We recall that some important preferences found by the original panel and Appellate Body reports to be required by the Lomé Convention cannot be implemented consistently with WTO rules (the most important being the quantitative protections foreseen in Protocol 5). If such a view of the Lomé Convention is challenged, a waiver covering such duty-free treatment could be sought. The MFN tariff quota could also be combined with a tariff quota for ACP imports, whether traditional or not, provided an appropriate waiver of Article XIII is obtained. We note that waivers for duty-free treatment for developing country exports have been granted on several occasions by Members.²⁰⁰ In this context, some action may be required soon in respect of the Lomé waiver since it expires on 29 February 2000."²⁰¹

4. Award of the Arbitrators in the proceedings requested by the European Communities under Article 22.6 of the DSU

2.71 On 6 April 1999, in the proceedings requested by the European Communities under Article 22.6 of the DSU, the Arbitrators concluded that the level of nullification or impairment suffered by the United States in the EC – Bananas III matter was US$191.4 million per year. Accordingly, the Arbitrators decided that the suspension by the United States of the application to the European Communities and its member States of tariff concessions and related obligations under GATT 1994 covering trade in a maximum amount of US$191.4 million per year would be consistent with

Article 22.4 of the DSU.²⁰² In the same report, the Arbitrators determined that the reservation of a quantity of 857,700 mt for traditional ACP imports under the European Communities' revised bananas import regime was inconsistent with paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article XIII of the GATT 1994. The Arbitrators also found that, under the revised regime, service suppliers of the United States were being granted discriminatory treatment in violation of Articles II and XVII of the GATS. The Arbitrators therefore concluded that there was a continuation of nullification or impairment of benefits for the United States under the revised regime.²⁰³

5. Panel findings in the second compliance proceedings requested by Ecuador

2.72 The compliance panel requested in February 2007 by Ecuador made the main substantive findings that are found in Annex D of this report.

F. MEASURES CHALLENGED BY THE UNITED STATES IN THIS DISPUTE

2.73 The measure challenged by the United States through this recourse to Article 21.5 of the DSU is the European Communities' current banana import regime implemented through the European Communities' Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005, which establishes a zero-duty tariff rate quota available only to bananas originating in ACP countries in an amount up to 775,000 mt. Bananas of other origins have no access to this 775,000 ton tariff rate quota and instead are subject to a duty of €176/mt.²⁰⁴

2.74 These measures are contained in the European Communities' Council Regulation (EEC) No. 404/93 of 13 February 1993, as amended by Council Regulation (EC) No. 216/2001 of 29 January 2001; in Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 of 29 November 2005; and, in any amendments, implementing measures, and other related measures.²⁰⁵

III. PARTIES' REQUESTS FOR FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

3.1 The United States requests that the Panel find that the European Communities has failed to implement the rulings and recommendations of the DSB in the original dispute and continues to be in breach of its obligations as a WTO Member. More specifically, the United States requests that the Panel find that the EC measures are inconsistent with the following obligations contained in the WTO agreements:

- (a) Article I of the GATT 1994, because the European Communities applies a zero tariff rate to imports of bananas originating in ACP countries in a quantity up to 775,000 mt, but does not accord the same duty-free treatment to imports of bananas originating in all other WTO Members; and,
- (b) Article XIII of the GATT 1994, including Article XIII:1 and XIII:2, because the European Communities reserves the 775,000 mt zero-duty tariff quota for imports of bananas originating in ACP countries and provides no access to this preferential tariff quota to imports of bananas originating in non-ACP substantial or non-substantial supplying countries.

3.2 The European Communities raises three preliminary issues. First, the European Communities argues that the Panel must assess "whether the United States has 'standing' to commence these proceedings".²⁰⁶

3.3 As a second preliminary issue, the European Communities argues that the United States should not be allowed to challenge the European Communities' current import regime for bananas, including the preference for ACP countries. The European Communities contends that the Understanding on Bananas, signed by the United States and the European Communities in April 2001 (Bananas Understanding)²⁰⁷, is a mutually agreed solution to the banana dispute.²⁰⁸ The European Communities adds that, even if it was to be assumed that the Bananas Understanding is not a "mutually agreed solution" for purposes of the DSU, it would still constitute "an international agreement between the United States and the European Communities and, therefore, its terms must be taken into consideration in order to determine the rights and obligations of the parties towards each other under the GATT and the DSU".²⁰⁹ The European Communities further adds that

"[E]ven if it were to be assumed that the provisions of the [Bananas] Understanding itself cannot be taken into consideration in determining the rights and obligations of the parties to this dispute, the application of the principle of good faith on the facts of this case would bar the United States from challenging the Cotonou Preference."²¹⁰

3.4 As a third preliminary issue, the European Communities argues that the United States' complaints should be rejected, as they fall outside of the scope of Article 21.5 of the DSU. In the European Communities' view, its current bananas import regime is not "a measure taken to comply" with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB.²¹¹

3.5 In its first submission, the European Communities had raised an additional preliminary issue, that the United States' complaint should be rejected by the Panel "outright on the grounds that the United States did not submit a request for consultations before requesting the establishment of the Panel".²¹² This objection was later withdrawn by the European Communities.²¹³

3.6 The European Communities has not made any specific arguments to rebut the United States' claim that the preference granted to bananas of ACP origin would be inconsistent with Article I of the GATT 1994.²¹⁴ The European Communities argues, however, that this preference is covered by a waiver from Article I:1 of the GATT 1994, the Doha Waiver.²¹⁵ According to the European

Communities, the duration of that waiver is not linked to the number of arbitrations lost by the European Communities, but rather depends on whether the new import regime for bananas it introduced on 1 January 2006 at least maintains total market access for MFN suppliers.²¹⁶ The European Communities also argues that its current bananas import regime cannot be considered as the "new EC tariff regime" in the terms of the language contained in the Doha Waiver.²¹⁷

3.7 The European Communities asks the Panel to reject the United States' claim under Article XIII of the GATT 1994. The European Communities argues that "the conditions for the application of GATT Article XIII are not satisfied", because "banana imports from Latin American and other MFN suppliers are not subject to any quantitative restriction [but] simply subject to a tariff"²¹⁸ The European Communities also argues that the United States' claim falls outside of the scope of Article XIII of the GATT 1994, which "does not cover cases of tariff discrimination".²¹⁹

3.8 Finally, the European Communities argues that, if the Panel were to conclude "that the United States has standing and that the Cotonou Preference does not comply with the GATT"²²⁰, the Panel should nevertheless find that:

"[T]he existence of the Cotonou Preference between the end of 2005 and the end of 2007 does not cause any 'nullification or impairment' of any benefit accruing to the United States."²²¹

IV. ARGUMENTS OF THE PARTIES

4.1 The arguments presented by the parties in their written submissions and oral statements are reflected below.²²²

A. UNITED STATES

1. First written submission of the United States

(a) Introduction

4.2 The United States is before this Panel to address the continued inconsistency of the European Communities' (EC) import regime for bananas with its WTO obligations. Regrettably, this Panel proceeding is the tenth GATT/WTO proceeding since 1992. After almost ten years from the adoption by the DSB of its recommendations and rulings in European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas (EC – Bananas III), and many opportunities for reform afforded to the European Communities by the United States and other affected Members, the European Communities has yet to implement the DSB's recommendations and rulings with a WTO compliant import regime for bananas. Repeated efforts at negotiating a WTO-consistent and mutually acceptable solution with the European Communities have been unsuccessful. The United States has reluctantly concluded that recourse to WTO dispute settlement under Article 21.5 of the Understanding on Rules and Procedures Governing the Settlement of Disputes (DSU) is warranted. The United States hopes that this will be the last proceeding necessary to secure compliance by the European Communities with its WTO obligations in this dispute.

4.3 On 1 January 2006, the European Communities implemented a new regime for importation of bananas through Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 (Regulation 1964). This latest regime continues to discriminate in favour of imports of bananas originating in African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) countries and against imports of bananas from other countries. It establishes a duty-free tariff rate quota that is available exclusively to ACP bananas in amounts up to 775,000 mt. Bananas from all other countries – for example, from developing countries in Latin America heavily dependent on the banana trade – have no access to this duty-free tariff rate quota. Bananas from such countries are subject, instead, to a duty of €176/mt. Even this tariff level is uncertain, as the European Communities has failed to re-bind its banana tariff rate.

4.4 The United States considers that these tariff and tariff rate quota measures fail to bring the European Communities into compliance with the EC – Bananas III recommendations and rulings and its WTO obligations in the following respects:

- (a) The preferential duty-free tariff rate quota applicable to bananas of ACP origin is not being accorded immediately and unconditionally to bananas originating in all other WTO Members in breach of Article I:1 of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 (GATT 1994); and
- (b) The tariff rate quota reserved exclusively for bananas of ACP origin fails to restrict all banana imports in a similar manner in breach of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994 and does not aim at a distribution of trade in bananas approaching as closely as possible the shares that would have been achieved absent restrictions in breach of Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994.

(b) Procedural history

4.5 The original WTO panel proceeding in this dispute (EC – Bananas III) was initiated more than ten years ago – on 8 May 1996 – by Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, and the United States. The panel in that proceeding found over a dozen breaches of the GATT 1994 and the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS), which were overwhelmingly confirmed by the Appellate Body. On 25 September 1997, the DSB adopted the original panel and Appellate Body reports and recommended that the European Communities bring its banana import regime into conformity with its obligations under those agreements. Pursuant to arbitration under Article 21.3 of the DSU, the European Communities was given a "reasonable period of time" of more than 15 months (from 25 September 1997 to 1 January 1999) to implement the DSB's recommendations and rulings. The European Communities did not, however, implement the EC – Bananas III recommendations and rulings by the end of that "reasonable period of time".

4.6 Instead of bringing its banana import regime into compliance with its WTO obligations by 1 January 1999, the European Communities implemented two regulations – Regulation (EC) No. 1637/98 and Regulation (EC) No. 2362/98 – that were found, within a short time of their implementation, to perpetuate a discriminatory tariff rate quota and license-based system in breach of the GATT 1994 and the GATS. As the European Communities had failed to redress the nullification or impairment found by the WTO, the DSB authorized the suspension of concessions or other obligations equivalent to the level of the nullification or impairment. With respect to the United States, the DSB authorized the suspension of concessions in the amount of US$191.4 million per year.

4.7 In November 1999, the European Communities announced a second attempt to reform its banana regime, which was allegedly to comprise a "two-stage process, namely, after a transitional period during which a tariff quota system would be applied with preferential access for ACP countries, a flat tariff would be introduced." The transitional period was to end no later than 1 January 2006.

(i) Understanding on Bananas

4.8 In April 2001, after more than two years of non-compliance, the United States and the European Communities reached an "Understanding on Bananas", which established a phased series of steps to be taken by the European Communities over several years, in combination with certain waivers, for the purpose of bringing itself into compliance with its WTO obligations.

4.9 Under the terms of the EC-US Understanding, the European Communities was required to implement a "tariff only" regime by "no later than 1 January 2006". In the "interim", the European Communities would implement an import regime based on historical licensing which included a tariff rate quota system. Because certain aspects of the interim arrangement were not in conformity with the European Communities' WTO obligations, the EC-US Understanding required the United States to "lift its reserve concerning the waiver of Article I of the GATT 1994 that the European Communities has requested for preferential access to the European Communities of goods originating in ACP states signatory to the Cotonou Agreement; and will actively work towards promoting the acceptance of the EC request for a waiver of Article XIII of the GATT 1994" for the ACP tariff quota on bananas. That provision was intended to facilitate the subsequent negotiation and adoption of conditional waivers acceptable to the interested parties and the full WTO Membership.

(ii) GATT Article I waiver and arbitrations

4.10 Following the EC-US Understanding, the United States and other affected Members agreed to negotiate the waiver terms necessary to ensure an acceptable banana arrangement throughout the life of the Understanding. These terms were incorporated into the body of the Article I Waiver and its Annex, which contains additional provisions applicable to bananas. As a general matter, the waiver was set to expire on December 31, 2007 for products other than bananas.

4.11 With respect to bananas, the validity of the waiver was made subject to a special arbitration mechanism contained in the Annex. The European Communities, ACP countries and MFN suppliers of bananas to the European Union were to engage in negotiations under Article XXVIII of the GATT 1994 with respect to the terms of the tariff only regime to enter into force by 1 January 2006. The Annex required that within 60 days of an announcement by the European Communities of its intentions on rebinding of the tariff on bananas, any interested party could request arbitration. The mandate of the arbitrator was to determine "whether the envisaged rebinding of the EC tariff on bananas would result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers, taking into account" all of the "EC WTO market-access commitments relating to bananas". If a WTO arbitrator were to find that the proposed rebinding would not "result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers" the European Communities would have to "rectify the matter". Within 10 days of the notification of the arbitration award to the General Council, the European Communities would have to enter into consultations with the interested parties that requested the arbitration. If there was no mutually satisfactory solution, the same arbitrator would be asked to determine whether the European Communities had rectified the matter. If the European Communities had failed to rectify the matter, the waiver would "cease to apply to bananas upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime". That is, if there were two negative arbitrator determinations against the European Communities, the waiver would terminate.

4.12 On 27 October 2004, the European Communities announced its intention to implement an MFN tariff of €230/mt, a rate over three times higher than the €75/mt MFN rate applicable at the time. The Commission formally notified that rate to the WTO on 1 February 2005, pursuant to the Annex to the Article I Waiver.

4.13 Between 30 March and 1 April 2005, nine Latin American supplying countries initiated arbitration pursuant to the terms of the Annex, seeking a determination that the European Communities' €230/mt rate would not "result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers", taking into account "all EC WTO market access commitments", as required by the waiver.

4.14 The first Arbitration Award (AAI), issued on 1 August 2005, carefully defined the European Communities' market access commitment under the Annex to require that any "envisaged rebinding" must, at a minimum, preserve into the future "the totality of [MFN] opportunities afforded by the existing conditions of entry", both as between MFN and preferred suppliers, and MFN and domestic EC producers. The Arbitrator determined that because the European Communities' proposed €230/mt rate wrongly increased the ACP and Everything But Arms margin of preference, creating the opportunity for a positive ACP and EBA supply response, and overstated the level of price-gap protection for EC producers, the European Communities had not fulfilled its Annex commitments.

4.15 On 12 September 2005, the European Communities proposed a revised banana "tariff only" rate of €187/mt for MFN suppliers, coupled with an enlarged ACP tariff rate quota of 775,000 mt (reflecting a 25,000 mt increase in the then existing ACP tariff rate quota volume), at zero duty.

4.16 On 26 September 2005, pursuant to the procedures set out in the Annex, the European Communities requested a second arbitration to determine whether the new proposed tariff and ACP tariff rate quota "rectified the matter". The second Arbitration Award (AAII), issued on 27 October 2005, determined that the European Communities' latest proposal "failed to rectify the matter".

4.17 Having twice failed to meet the condition of the waiver that the new regime "result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers", taking into account "all EC WTO market access commitments", the Article I waiver for bananas expired upon entry into force of the 1 January 2006 regime by operation of the terms of the Annex.

(iii) Article XIII Waiver

4.18 On 21 May 2001, pursuant to its acknowledgment in the EC-US and EC-Ecuador Understandings that "[a] waiver of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 [is] needed for the management of quota C [the ACP quota]", the European Communities circulated among the MFN banana-supplying Members a draft XIII waiver request, which explained that:

"[A]n additional protection should be maintained for imports of bananas originating in the ACP countries, under the form of a limited tariff rate quota set aside for them, for the duration of the interim period. This requires a waiver from the obligations established under Article XIII GATT."

4.19 On 22 June 2001, the European Communities submitted to the WTO its request and draft decision to waive GATT Article XIII obligations until 31 December 2005, "with respect to the EC's separate quota of 750,000 tonnes for bananas of ACP origin". Because the European Communities asked that its GATT Article I and GATT Article XIII waiver requests proceed in parallel, the GATT Article XIII waiver request was approved without amendment on 14 November 2001, the same day the GATT Article I waiver was approved. In accordance with paragraph 1 of the Article XIII Waiver, the waiver was scheduled to terminate on 31 December 2005.

4.20 On 7 October 2005, as the termination date of the Article XIII Waiver approached, the European Communities requested an extension "until 31 December 2007 [for] the existing waiver from paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article XIII of the GATT 1994, for a quantity of 775,000 mt of imports of bananas originating in ACP countries". The European Communities' request for a waiver extension was made in conjunction with a 12 September 2005 proposal to replace its "interim" tariff-quota regime with a "tariff only" rate of €187/mt for MFN suppliers and an enlarged ACP tariff rate quota of 775,000 mt (reflecting a 25,000 mt increase over the then existing ACP tariff rate quota volume). WTO Members did not agree to the European Communities' proposed extension.

4.21 On 31 December 2005, the Article XIII Waiver expired in accordance with its terms.

4.22 Citing "divergences" of opinion on how to proceed with the waiver request and a preference for a "negotiated solution to the banana problem", the European Communities "suspended" its request for an Article XIII waiver at the meeting of the Council for Trade in Goods held on 19 March 2007.

(c) The European Communities' revised measures

4.23 On 29 November 2005, without consultations with the EC – Bananas III complainants and other MFN suppliers, the European Communities adopted Regulation 1964, which provides for the current regime for the importation of bananas into the EC market. Regulation 1964 entered into force on 1 January 2006.

4.24 Article 1 of Regulation 1964 establishes a duty-free tariff rate quota that is available exclusively to ACP bananas in amounts up to 775,000 mt. Bananas from all other countries have no access to this duty-free tariff-rate quota. Article 1 establishes that all other bananas are subject, instead, to a duty of €176/mt. Article 2 of Regulation 1964 provides the necessary authority to promulgate implementing rules. Numerous additional regulations governing the licensing features of the tariff and ACP tariff rate quota measures have been enacted.

4.25 In accordance with these provisions, bananas of MFN origin enter the EC-27 market at a rate of €176/mt (equating to US$4.33/box, or 33 per cent ad valorem), or 135 per cent higher than the €75/mt rate previously assessed on all MFN bananas entering the European Communities from 1 January 1995 to 31 December 2005. Under the €176/mt rate, bananas from the developing countries of Latin America contributed €580 million, or approximately US$790 million, to the European Communities' 2006 customs revenues.

4.26 ACP-origin bananas that are not otherwise covered by the European Communities' "Everything But Arms" initiative (EBA) enter the EC market duty-free for all volumes within the 775,000 mt ACP tariff rate quota (i.e., a margin of preference of €176/mt, or US$4.33/box). Imports of ACP-origin bananas into the EC market in excess of 775,000 mt are dutiable at €176/mt. MFN-origin bananas have no right to enter the zero-duty ACP tariff rate quota and receive no other market allocation.

(d) Legal arguments

4.27 The fact that this Panel has been established under Article 21.5 of the DSU carries with it certain consequences. Of most immediate relevance to the legal arguments of the parties is the consequence that, as the Appellate Body has made clear, an Article 21.5 panel "conduct[s] its work against the background of the original proceedings, and with full cognizance of the reasons provided by the original panel. The original determination and original panel proceedings, as well as the redetermination and the panel proceedings under Article 21.5, form part of a continuum of events." It is well established that adopted panel and Appellate Body reports "are treated as a final resolution to a dispute between the parties to that dispute".

4.28 As discussed in detail below, the European Communities' revised measures are in breach of GATT Article I and GATT Article XIII.

(i) The European Communities' revised measures are inconsistent with Article I of the GATT 1994

4.29 GATT Article I:1 provides, in relevant part, that:

"With respect to customs duties and charges of any kind imposed on or in connection with importation ... and with respect to all rules and formalities in connection with importation ... any advantage, favour, privilege or immunity granted by any contracting party to any product originating in or destined for any other country shall be accorded immediately and unconditionally to the like product originating in or destined for the territories of all other contracting parties."

4.30 To establish a violation of Article I:1, a Member must show: (i) an advantage, favour, privilege or immunity, (ii) of the type covered by Article I, (iii) that is not accorded immediately and unconditionally to all "like products" of all WTO Members. All three of these conditions are present in the European Communities' current tariff arrangement.

4.31 First, the European Communities is providing an "advantage, favour, privilege or immunity" to ACP Members by according ACP bananas duty-free access within the 775,000 mt tariff rate quota, while subjecting all MFN bananas to a €176/mt duty. The duty-free treatment, amounting to a tariff savings of US$4.33/box, is only available to bananas of ACP origin.

4.32 Second, the measure by which the European Communities is granting the "advantage, favour, privilege or immunity" to ACP Members is in relation to a "customs dut[y]" within the meaning of Article I:1. Bananas of ACP origin up to an amount of 775,000 mt receive a customs preference of €176/mt over all other bananas, by entering duty-free.

4.33 Third, the European Communities is failing to accord the ACP tariff advantage "immediately and unconditionally" to the "like product" of other WTO Members. Although MFN bananas and ACP origin bananas are "like product" imports, MFN bananas are being denied the same duty-free tariff rate quota treatment as bananas of ACP origin.

4.34 Therefore, Regulation 1964 is in violation of GATT Article I:1.

Termination of GATT Article I Waiver

4.35 The fifth "whereas" clause of Regulation 1964, asserts that in light of the two negative arbitration determinations under the Annex to the Article I Waiver, the Commission has "further modified its proposal in order to rectify the matter". Although at this stage in these proceedings the United States does not need to rebut the European Communities' legal arguments in its defence, an assertion that the Article I Waiver is still in effect can be expected.

4.36 Whether the European Communities "rectified the matter" the third time around is irrelevant with respect to the continued validity of the GATT Article I Waiver. Under the express terms of the Annex, the European Communities had two opportunities to propose a regime that met the conditions set out in the waiver. In 2005, pursuant to the Annex arbitration mechanism, two WTO arbitrators determined that the two proposals made by the European Communities did not "result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN suppliers". Therefore, as required by the fifth sentence in tiret 5 of the Annex to the Article I Waiver, the waiver "cease[d] to apply upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime". The "new EC tariff regime" is the measure that is the subject of these proceedings, Regulation 1964, which entered into force on 1 January 2006.

(ii) The European Communities' revised measures are inconsistent with Article XIII of the GATT 1994

4.37 GATT Article XIII provides, in relevant part, that:

"1. No prohibition or restriction shall be applied by any Member on the importation of any product of the territory of any other Member or on the exportation of any product destined for the territory of any other Member, unless the importation of the like product of all third countries or the exportation of the like product to all third countries is similarly prohibited or restricted.

2. In applying import restrictions to any product, Members shall aim at a distribution of trade in such product approaching as closely as possible the shares which the various Members might be expected to obtain in the absence of such restrictions and to this end shall observe the following provisions:

(d) In cases in which a quota is allocated among supplying countries the Member applying the restrictions may seek agreement with respect to the allocation of shares in the quota with all other Members having a substantial interest in supplying the product concerned. In cases in which this method is not reasonably practicable, the Member concerned shall allot to Members having a substantial interest in supplying the product shares based upon the proportions, supplied by such Members during a previous representative period, of the total quantity or value of imports of the product, due account being taken of any special factors which may have affected or may be affecting the trade in the product. No conditions or formalities shall be imposed which would prevent any Member from utilizing fully the share of any such total quantity or value which has been allotted to it, subject to importation being made within any prescribed period to which the quota may relate.

5. The provisions of this Article shall apply to any tariff quota instituted or maintained by any Member, and, in so far as applicable, the principles of this Article shall also extend to export restrictions."

4.38 Under the terms of the EC-US Understanding, the EC- Ecuador Understanding and the Article I Waiver, the European Communities was supposed to introduce a tariff only regime for bananas by 1 January 2006. Instead, the European Communities introduced a regime containing an exclusive tariff rate quota for bananas of ACP origin. The EC – Bananas III panel, Appellate Body and compliance panels found the European Communities' use of an exclusive ACP tariff rate quota for bananas inconsistent with GATT Article XIII:1 and XIII:2. While the current regime may be a simplified version of earlier ones, the nonconformity with GATT Article XIII remains.

4.39 There can be no doubt that Article XIII applies with respect to the current tariff rate quota regime, just as it did with respect to the European Communities' prior banana import regimes. In EC – Bananas III (Article 21.5 – Ecuador), the panel explained:

"Article XIII:5 provides that the provisions of Article XIII apply to 'tariff quotas'. The European Communities essentially argues that the amount of 857,700 tonnes for traditional imports from ACP States constitutes an upper limit on a tariff preference and is not a tariff quota subject to Article XIII. However, by definition, a tariff quota is a quantitative limit on the availability of a specific tariff rate. Thus, Article XIII applies to the 857,700 tonne limit."

4.40 Regulation 1964 establishes an exclusive duty-free tariff rate quota for ACP countries in the amount of 775,000 mt. Just as in EC – Bananas III (Article 21.5 – Ecuador), this is a quantitative limit on the availability of the duty-free rate to non-ACP bananas.

The European Communities' import regime for bananas is inconsistent with GATT Article XIII:1

4.41 GATT Article XIII:1 sets forth the basic GATT non-discrimination obligation governing the application of import restrictions. As explained by the Panel in EC – Bananas III:

"Article XIII:1 establishes the basic principle that no import restriction shall be applied to one Member's products unless the importation of like products from other Members is similarly restricted ... [A]s indicated by terms of Article XIII (and even its title, 'Non-discriminatory Administration of Quantitative Restrictions'), the non-discrimination obligation extends further. The imported products at issue must be 'similarly' restricted. A Member may not restrict imports from some Members using one means and restrict them from another Member using another means."

4.42 The Appellate Body added that the "essence" of GATT Article XIII, and therefore Article XIII:1, "is that like products should be treated equally, irrespective of origin". It further determined that "[a]s no participant disputes that all bananas are like products, the non-discrimination provisions apply to all imports of bananas..."

4.43 In disregard of GATT Article XIII:1 and the EC – Bananas III findings, the European Communities has chosen to maintain a tariff rate quota under which MFN-origin bananas are neither "treated equally" nor restricted "similarly" to "like" ACP-origin bananas. ACP bananas receive preferential, protected access under the European Communities' banana regime, entering the EC market duty-free up to a quantity of 775,000 mt. No MFN supplier receives any such tariff rate quota treatment. By using a tariff rate quota on ACP imports, and an entirely different means to restrict MFN imports, the European Communities is preventing "like" imports from being "treated equally, irrespective of origin" in violation of GATT Article XIII:1.

4.44 The chapeau to GATT Article XIII:2 requires, in relevant part, that:

"In applying import restrictions to any product, Members shall aim at a distribution of trade in such product approaching as closely as possible the shares which the various Members might be expected to obtain in the absence of such restrictions ..."

4.45 As the EC – Bananas III panel found, "[i]f quantitative restrictions are used ... they are to be used in the least trade-distorting manner possible". The panel emphasized that, as required by the chapeau, any tariff rate quota allocations must "minimize the impact of a quota or tariff quota regime on trade flows by attempting to approximate... the trade shares that would have occurred in the absence of the regime".

4.46 The EC – Bananas III panel further explained that Article XIII:2(d) provides for the possibility to allocate tariff rate quota shares to supplying countries and the treatment that must be given to Members with a "substantial interest" in supplying the product. The Member allocating shares of a tariff rate quota may seek agreement with all Members having a substantial interest in supplying the product, or, if that is not reasonably practicable, allot to Members having a substantial interest in supplying the product based on criteria specified in Article XIII:2(d), second sentence. The EC – Bananas III panel determined that if a Member allocates tariff rate quota shares to Members not having a substantial interest in supplying the product, then shares must be allocated to all suppliers. This is because "[o]therwise, imports from Members would not be similarly restricted as required by Article XIII:1".

4.47 The European Communities' exclusive 775,000 mt ACP tariff rate quota fails to distribute any share whatsoever to MFN suppliers, let alone a share they would have expected to obtain in the absence of restrictions. This is so even though many of the excluded MFN suppliers are principal or substantial suppliers of bananas to the European Communities, and leading exporters of bananas to the world market. Therefore, the ACP tariff rate quota established through Regulation 1964, like prior ACP tariff rate quotas, is inconsistent with Article XIII:2.

4.48 The European Communities has no Article XIII waiver currently in force – its last waiver having expired on its own terms on 31 December 2005.

4.49 For the reasons stated above, the ACP tariff rate quota is in violation of GATT Article XIII:1 and XIII:2.

(e) Conclusion

4.50 For the foregoing reasons, the United States respectfully requests that the Panel find that:

- (1) The European Communities' import regime for bananas implemented through Regulation 1964 is inconsistent with Article I of the GATT 1994 because it applies a zero tariff rate to imports of bananas originating in ACP countries in a quantity up to 775,000 mt but does not accord the same duty-free treatment to imports of bananas originating in all other WTO Members;
- (2) The European Communities' import regime for bananas implemented through Regulation 1964 is inconsistent with Article XIII of the GATT 1994 – including Article XIII:1 and XIII:2 – because it reserves the 775,000 mt zero-duty tariff rate quota for imports of bananas originating in ACP countries and provides no access to this preferential tariff rate quota to imports of bananas originating in non-ACP substantial or non-substantial supplying countries; and,
- (3) The European Communities has failed to comply with the recommendations and ruling of the DSB.

2. Second written submission of the United States

(a) The European Communities' preliminary objections should be rejected

(i) The United States was not required to request consultations with the EC

4.51 First, the United States was surprised that the European Communities raised lack of consultations as a procedural objection given that the United States and the European Communities had agreed, at the highest levels, that this objection would not be raised. The United States understands that this objection may have been lodged without an understanding of the commitment the European Communities had undertaken. Inasmuch as the European Communities has raised this objection, the United States responds as follows.

4.52 Formal consultations are not a prerequisite to the establishment of a panel under Article 21.5. The Appellate Body's analysis in Mexico – Corn Syrup (Article 21.5 – US) amply supports the United States' view. In Mexico – Corn Syrup (Article 21.5 – US), the Appellate Body observed that while, as a general matter, "consultations are a pre-requisite to panel proceedings", the requirement that parties engage in consultations "is subject to certain limitations". After reviewing the requirements of DSU Articles 4.3, 4.7 and 6.2, the Appellate Body concluded that "the lack of prior consultations is not a defect that, by its very nature, deprives a panel of its authority to deal with and dispose of a matter". While the Appellate Body did not decide whether this general rule was applicable to Article 21.5, it stated that "even if the general obligations in the DSU regarding prior consultations were applicable" to Article 21.5 proceedings, "non-compliance would not have the effect of depriving the panel of its authority to deal with and dispose of the matter".

4.53 The only prerequisite explicitly set forth in Article 21.5 is that there be a "disagreement" as to whether a Member has implemented the recommendations and rulings of the DSB. Such a disagreement clearly exists in this case.

4.54 The European Communities suggests that the phrase "through recourse to these dispute settlement procedures" in Article 21.5 could not refer to something "less than all" the procedures contained in the DSU, including consultations. There are several difficulties with the EC position. First, nothing in the phrase "these dispute settlement procedures" supports the proposition that that phrase extends to every aspect of the DSU. Second, the phrase is different from the broader phrase found in DSU Article 23: "the rules and procedures of this Understanding". This difference makes clear that the European Communities is wrong to suggest that Article 21.5 cannot refer to "less than all" of the DSU. Third, the phrase is part of the larger phrase "such dispute shall be decided through recourse to these dispute settlement procedures" (emphasis added). Consultations are not a means of "deciding" a dispute. It is the panel procedures that serve the function of "deciding" – and thus it is the panel procedures to which "these dispute settlement procedures" must refer.

4.55 To interpret Article 21.5 to require another round of consultations would only serve to delay the resolution of disputes, in contradiction to DSU Article 21.1 which provides that prompt compliance is "essential in order to ensure effective resolution of disputes to the benefit of all Members".

4.56 Fifth, the United States notes that in an earlier related proceeding, the European Communities requested the establishment of Article 21.5 panel to determine that measures taken by the European Communities were in conformity with its WTO obligations, without first seeking consultations with any of the original complaining parties.

4.57 Aside from the European Communities' flawed legal theory, the Panel should not sustain the European Communities' objection. First, as permitted by Article 4.3 of the DSU, the United States and the European Communities had an agreement that formal consultations would not be necessary. Second, the European Communities explicitly withdrew any procedural objection based on the lack of a formal consultation request in its DSB statement at the 12 July 2007 meeting. Finally, even if it were appropriate for the Panel to take the considerations raised by the European Communities into account, they should not lead to the conclusion that the European Communities seeks. The DSU does not guarantee a role for third parties in consultations. Throughout the long history of this dispute, the European Communities has had plenty of opportunities to negotiate a solution. This dispute has been the subject of countless discussions at the DSB, and third parties have been given every possible opportunity to participate, above and beyond what is provided for in the DSU. It is hard to imagine what formal consultations would have achieved that over ten years of litigation, discussions, and negotiations have not been able to achieve.

4.58 The United States request that the Panel reject the European Communities' request to dismiss for lack of consultations.

(ii) The EC-US Understanding on Bananas does not preclude this proceeding

4.59 The European Communities' objection that the EC-US Understanding bars this proceeding is equally groundless. The lynchpin of the European Communities' argumentation appears to be the assertion that the United States has "accepted... the principle that the Cotonou Preference would continue to exist until the end of 2007" and therefore "the United States is now barred from challenging" its existence.

4.60 Nothing in the EC-US Understanding says that the United States was agreeing to a reduction in its rights to challenge the WTO-consistency of any EC measure. The European Communities points to the paragraph in the EC-US Understanding providing that the United States would lift its reserve concerning the Article I waiver. This provision did not itself change the legal situation with respect to the European Communities' tariff preferences. The United States' willingness to lift its reserve regarding the waiver did not itself make the European Communities' tariff preferences WTO-consistent, nor did it insulate those tariff preferences from challenge under the DSU. Nothing in Articles IX:3 and IX:4 of the WTO Agreement suggests that a Member's willingness to support a waiver request has independent legal consequences. If the European Communities' position were adopted by this Panel, it is hard to see how any Member would ever agree to support an EC waiver request in the future, when the legal consequence of such a commitment would be that it – but not other Members who had not yet agreed to support the waiver – were barred from challenging the measure for which the waiver had been requested.

4.61 As contemplated by the EC-US Understanding, the United States did support the adoption of the waiver, and the waiver was ultimately approved at Doha. Article 3*bis* of the waiver states that "[w]ith respect to bananas, the additional provisions in the Annex shall apply." These additional provisions, set out conditions which the new EC regime on bananas would have to meet. The United States believes that the Article I waiver ceased to apply with respect to bananas on 1 January 2006.

4.62 Though not necessary, the United States wishes to make some additional comments. First, the United States disagrees with the European Communities' contention that the EC-US Understanding represented a "mutually agreed solution" as that term is used in the DSU. A fair reading of the EC-US Understanding can lead to only one conclusion: that it would have been impossible in June of 2001 to say that the dispute had been "solved". It is clear from its text that the EC-US Understanding was a document that identified the "means" to resolve the dispute, but that no solution acceptable to both parties had yet been put in place on the date of the EC-US Understanding and that the Understanding was not itself the end of the dispute. Indeed, the final step to consummate the "solution" would not be taken until almost five years after the date of the Understanding.

4.63 Second, in a communication to the DSB on 26 June 2001, after the unilateral notification of the EC-US Understanding as a "mutually agreed solution" by the European Communities, the United States corrected the record by explaining that the Understanding was not a mutually agreed solution notified pursuant to DSU Article 3.6. At the February 2002 DSB meeting, the United States again made clear that there were still compliance steps to be taken by the European Communities, namely the introduction of a WTO-consistent "tariff only" regime by 1 January 2006.

4.64 Third, the United States disagrees with the European Communities' assertion that, pursuant to Article 31(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (Vienna Convention), the EC-US

Understanding must be taken into consideration to determine the parties' rights and obligations under the GATT 1994 and the DSU. Nothing in Article 31(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention supports the European Communities' assertion that the EC-US Understanding acts as a procedural defence for the European Communities. Article 31(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention deals with interpretation of the covered agreements. The European Communities is not arguing that the EC-US Understanding indicates a particular interpretation of any term in any covered agreement; the European Communities appears to be arguing that the Understanding has altered the covered agreements. Article 31(3)(c) does not deal with this issue.

4.65 Article 31(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention provides for the taking into account, in the interpretation of a treaty, "any relevant rules of international law applicable in the relations between the parties". The EC – Approval and Marketing of Biotech Products panel found that "the rules of international law" that are to be "taken into account" in the interpretation of the WTO Agreements "are those which are applicable in the relations between the WTO Members", not those applicable only to the disputing parties. Since the EC-US Understanding is a bilateral agreement, it cannot be considered part of any "applicable rules of law" that could inform the panel's interpretation of the covered agreements.

4.66 Article 1.1 of the DSU provides that the DSU applies to the "covered agreements" listed in Appendix 1 to the DSU. The EC-US Understanding is not a "covered agreement". Accordingly, the DSU cannot be used to settle a dispute as to the meaning or effect of the EC-US Understanding, and the DSU cannot enforce the Understanding by blocking a party to the Understanding from recourse to the DSU.

(iii) The United States' complaint falls within the scope of Article 21.5

4.67 The European Communities' objection that the European Communities' 1 January 2006 banana measures are not "measures taken to comply" ignores the plain text of the EC-US Understanding, EC Regulation 1964, and the long history of this dispute, and should therefore be rejected.

4.68 The European Communities first argues that it took its "final 'measure taken to comply'" with the EC-US Understanding in January 2002, "when the EC introduced a new tariff-based quota regime with the characteristics agreed in Annex II of the Understanding" and the United States' "right to suspend concessions terminated" (emphasis added).

4.69 The EC-US Understanding contemplated a series of steps that would culminate with the introduction of a "tariff only" regime by 1 January 2006. As required by the terms of the Understanding, the United States terminated its increased duties upon the European Communities' implementation of the steps provided for in Annex II. This only means that the two interim phases contemplated in the paragraph C of the Understanding were completed. The final step was not scheduled to happen until four years later. To argue that the European Communities did not need to take that final step with respect to the EC-US Understanding would read paragraph B out of the Understanding.

4.70 The European Communities also argues that the United States never challenged the measures taken by the European Communities in 2002 that it considers to be the "measures taken to comply" with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB. As explained above, it was not until the introduction of the new EC regime for bananas on 1 January 2006 that the European Communities took the final, and unfortunately flawed, step required by the Understanding. Ever since, the issue of non-compliance has been the subject of discussions at the DSB, culminating with Ecuador's and the United States' requests under Article 21.5.

4.71 The fifth clause in the preamble to EC Regulation 1964 itself states that the measures are being taken in an effort to rectify the matter which the two Article I waiver Annex arbitrations found inconsistent with that Annex. The Article I waiver and Annex are inextricably linked to the Understandings, which are in turn inextricably linked to the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in EC – Bananas III.

4.72 The status of the European Communities' measures is further confirmed by numerous EC statements made from 1999 through 2006. In particular, EC statements made after 2002, when the European Communities argues, for purposes of this proceeding, that it implemented its "measure taken to comply", confirm that the European Communities itself did not believe it had taken a "measure taken to comply" at that time.

(b) The European Communities' arguments about "standing" and nullification or impairment have been rejected before and should be rejected once again

(i) The United States has standing to challenge the EC's banana regime

4.73 In EC – Bananas III, as here, the European Communities argued that, because the United States "ha[d] never exported a single banana to the European Community", it "could not possibly suffer any trade damage". According to the European Communities, this lack of trade effect or damage meant that the United States could not, as a threshold matter, challenge the European Communities' measures under the GATT. The Appellate Body upheld the panel's finding that the United States "had standing" to bring claims under the GATT 1994 against the European Communities' banana measures.

4.74 In reaching its conclusion, the Appellate Body made the general observations that "a Member has broad discretion in deciding whether to bring a case against another Member under the DSU" and that Members are "expected to be largely self-regulating in deciding whether any such action would be 'fruitful'" within the meaning of DSU Article 3.7. The Appellate Body also observed that: "the United States is a producer of bananas, and a potential export interest by the United States cannot be excluded"; and "[t]he internal market of the United States for bananas could be affected by the EC banana regime, in particular, by the effects of that regime on world supplies and world prices of bananas". Quoting from the panel report, the Appellate Body also stated that "with the increased interdependence of the global economy... Members have a greater stake in enforcing WTO rules than in the past since any deviation from the negotiated balance of rights and obligations is more likely to affect them, directly or indirectly".

4.75 In light of this guidance, the stake the United States holds in making sure that the European Communities complies with its WTO obligations, and the fact that the United States continues to be a producer of bananas, it is clear that the United States may challenge the European Communities' banana measures in this compliance proceeding.

(ii) The United States is not required to demonstrate nullification or impairment of benefits to advance claims of an EC breach of GATT Articles I and XIII

4.76 To prevail on its claims of an EC breach of GATT Articles I and XIII, the United States is not required to demonstrate that the European Communities' banana measures nullify or impair benefits accruing to it.

4.77 Article 3.7 of the DSU specifies three potential means by which a dispute can be resolved: a mutually agreed solution consistent with the covered agreements; withdrawal of WTO-inconsistent measures; or, as a "last resort", suspension of concessions. Neither of the first two requires calculation of the level of nullification or impairment suffered by the complaining Member. The second of these makes clear that withdrawal of a WTO inconsistency is a preferred outcome, without regard to the impact of the inconsistency on the complaining Member. It is only when a WTO challenge has reached arbitration under DSU Article 22 that the level of nullification or impairment suffered by the complaining party becomes relevant.

4.78 The European Communities made a similar argument to the original panel and Appellate Body, but its argument was rejected. In determining that the United States did in fact suffer nullification or impairment of benefits at the hands of the European Communities' banana measures, the Appellate Body made clear that a showing of trade effects is unnecessary for purposes of demonstrating that there has been a breach of a provision of the GATT, quoting from the GATT panel in US – Superfund. The US – Superfund GATT panel decided that it was unnecessary to examine the parties' submissions regarding trade effects in order to determine that benefits accruing to the complaining Member had been nullified or impaired, linking its decision to the breach of the legal provision, Article III:2, alone. The same reasoning should apply here. The Panel should dismiss the European Communities' arguments.

(c) The European Communities' Article I waiver has expired, and it therefore maintains its banana measures in breach of GATT Article I

4.79 The European Communities does not contest that its banana regime is in breach of GATT Article I, but argues that the Article I Waiver is still in effect. The European Communities' arguments ignore the plain text of the waiver and its Annex. Pursuant to the terms of the Annex, following two negative arbitration determinations, the waiver "cease[d] to apply to bananas upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime".

4.80 An analysis of the European Communities' Article I Waiver begins with the chapeau of the Annex, which states that, "[i]n the case of bananas, the waiver will also apply until 31 December 2007, subject to the following, which is without prejudice to the rights and obligations under Article XXVIII". The continuation of the waiver until 31 December 2007, is therefore entirely dependent on the European Communities' fulfilment of the several conditions laid out in the body of the Annex.

4.81 Tires one and two of the Annex define the steps to be taken by the European Communities prior to arbitration. These tires further require the European Communities, during that consultation period, to demonstrate that MFN "WTO market-access commitments relating to bananas" will be protected. Tires three through five establish a centrepiece of the Annex – the special arbitration controls under which the EC waiver automatically lapses in the event it implements a tariff regime after two negative arbitration reviews.

4.82 Tiret four sets forth the terms of the first arbitration proceeding, including a 90-day review timetable and a mandate to determine "whether the envisaged rebinding of the EC tariff on bananas would result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers, taking into account ... all EC WTO market-access commitments relating to bananas". Tiret four underscores the imperative of multilateral review and approval before implementation of an EC "tariff only" regime. Latin American banana suppliers initiated arbitration in 2005. The Arbitrator concluded that the European Communities' "envisaged rebinding" of €230/mt would not fulfil the European Communities' MFN market access commitment.

4.83 Tiret five describes how the European Communities must "rectify the matter" following a negative determination in the first arbitration. The ordinary meaning of the word "rectify" is "to put or set right" or "to remedy (a bad or faulty condition or state of things)". The term "matter" in this case refers to the European Communities' failure to satisfy the mandated standard of tiret four. The second and third sentences of tiret five lay out the first of two avenues by which the European Communities can set right, or remedy, its failed "envisaged rebinding". First, the European Communities must consult with the interested parties within 10 days to determine whether a "mutually satisfactory solution" can be found. Second, in the absence of a mutually agreed solution, within 30 days of a new arbitration request, the same arbitrator will be asked to determine if the European Communities has "rectified" the matter. The fifth sentence of tiret five specifies the automatic consequence of a second, negative arbitration determination against the EC: "[i]f the EC has failed to rectify the matter, this waiver shall cease to apply to bananas upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime". The mandatory consequence, the expiration of the waiver, takes effect "upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime", meaning that the waiver terminates automatically upon entry into force of the new EC regime, not at some later point in time.

4.84 The Annex clearly sets out a mechanism whereby once an arbitrator found twice that the European Communities had presented a tariff proposal that did not meet the conditions of the Annex, the waiver would automatically expire once the new EC tariff regime went into effect. The European Communities argues that "the new EC tariff regime" could only refer to the regime that was found to be inconsistent with the conditions of the Annex by the arbitrator and that as long as it introduced a different regime and that regime "did indeed" maintain the total market access of the MFN suppliers, the waiver would apply until the end of 2007. The text of the Annex does not support that interpretation.

4.85 Recital 11 to the Article I waiver provides context supporting the above reading of the Annex. Recital 11 states: "any re-binding of the EC tariff on bananas under the relevant GATT Article XXVIII procedures should result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers and their willingness to accept a multilateral control on the implementation of this commitment". The reference to "multilateral control" refers to the Annex arbitration procedures and argues against any EC interpretation that would allow the waiver to continue in effect in the face of the two negative arbitral determinations and a subsequent unilateral determination of "compliance" by the European Communities. The European Communities' interpretation, which would allow it, at the end of the day, to apply any regime it chose, cannot be reconciled with the intent of the drafters to impose multilateral controls over the banana regime.

4.86 While the text of the Annex is clear, supplementary means of interpretation, however, confirm that the waiver expired upon implementation of the European Communities' new banana measures. The waiver history demonstrate that the parties negotiated the special procedures embodied in the Annex with the purpose of preventing the European Communities from installing an unacceptable banana tariff as of 2006. The original EC draft of the Annex failed to state a consequence for EC choices after negative arbitration rulings. Members insisted that the language of the fifth and sixth sentences of tiret five be inserted into the Annex. Absent this, the waiver would not have been approved.

4.87 For all these reasons, the European Communities' Article I waiver expired on 1 January 2006, upon the implementation of the new EC banana measures. In the absence of this waiver, the European Communities' banana measures are maintained in violation of GATT Article I.

- (d) The European Communities maintains its exclusive tariff rate quota for ACP bananas in violation of GATT Article XIII
- (i) The European Communities' tariff rate quota is a quantitative restriction within the meaning of Article XIII

4.88 First, the European Communities argues that the measures contained in EC Regulation 1964 are not subject to the requirements of GATT Article XIII because the ACP tariff quota is not a "quantitative restriction", but rather a "cap" on a tariff preference. The European Communities goes so far as to declare that it "subjects all banana imports to a single tariff of 176 euro per ton. There are no other tariffs and there are no quantitative restrictions imposed on the importation of bananas".

4.89 The European Communities' description of its measure defies reality. In the sixth whereas clause EC Regulation 1964 states that "a tariff rate quota for bananas originating in ACP countries should also be opened". In addition, Article 1.2 states that "an autonomous tariff quota of 775,000 tonnes per net weight subject to a zero-duty rate shall be opened for imports of bananas ... originating in ACP countries".

4.90 There is nothing new in the European Communities' attempt to cast its discriminatory ACP tariff rate quota as a "cap" on a tariff preference. The Arbitrators in EC – Bananas III (US) (Article 22.6 – EC) rejected this exact same argument nearly eight years ago, concluding that "in our view, the 857,700 tonne limit on traditional ACP imports is a tariff quota and therefore Article XIII applies to it". The same conclusion applies here. The European Communities' 775,000 mt limit on duty-free access for ACP bananas is also a tariff quota within the meaning of Article XIII and subject to the non-discrimination requirements of Article XIII.

(ii) Article XIII applies even where the entire EC banana market is not controlled by quotas

4.91 The European Communities argues that Article XIII only applies to "different tariff quotas ... imposed to different groups of countries" but not where "MFN Members are not subject to any quantitative restriction". The European Communities offers no support for this proposition. That is because both the text of Article XIII as well as numerous panel or Appellate Body reports that have examined the application of Article XIII dictate the opposite result – that Article XIII does in fact apply to the European Communities' ACP-exclusive tariff rate quota.

4.92 The Arbitrator in EC – Bananas III (US) (Article 22.6 – EC) confirmed that the European Communities' exclusive ACP quota is by definition a tariff rate quota, since it "is a quantitative limit on the availability of a specific tariff rate". Because all tariff rate quotas are subject to the requirements of GATT Article XIII by virtue of Article XIII:5, the requirements of Article XIII apply to the European Communities' ACP duty-free tariff quota.

4.93 The EC – Bananas III Panel Report affirmed that Article XIII:1's non-discrimination principle requires that like products of all Members must be similarly restricted: "a Member may not limit the quantity of imports from some Members but not from others ... A Member may not restrict imports from some Members using one means and restrict them from another using another means".

4.94 Article XIII's non-discrimination requirements therefore govern any tariff quota or other quantitative restriction that is applied to imports entering a Member's territory. This is the case whether or not the entire EC market for bananas is regulated by tariff quotas.

4.95 To interpret Article XIII's application otherwise would ignore the guidance of the Appellate Body in EC – Bananas III, in which it concluded that "the essence of the non-discrimination obligations [of GATT Articles I and XIII] is that like products should be treated equally, irrespective of their origin". The Appellate Body stated that:

"If, by choosing a different legal basis for imposing import restrictions, or by applying different tariff rates, a Member could avoid the application of non-discrimination provisions to the imports of like products from different Members, the object and purpose of the non-discrimination provisions would be defeated. It would be very easy for a Member to circumvent the non-discrimination provisions of the GATT 1994 and the other Annex 1A agreements, if these provisions apply only within regulatory regimes established by that Member."

4.96 Thus, Article XIII prohibits the European Communities from establishing a duty-free tariff rate quota for some Members, but not others, and from denying equal treatment to banana imports of all origins. This interpretation of Article XIII prevents Members from circumventing their basic GATT non-discrimination obligations, and is equally as applicable in this instance as it was ten years ago. Just as it did in the original EC – Bananas III proceeding, the European Communities again attempts to elude Article XIII coverage by arguing that the separation of its market into two separate regimes – one covered by a tariff, the other by a tariff quota – absolves it of its non-discrimination obligations. As then, the European Communities' arguments should be rejected.

4.97 In essence, the European Communities seeks to "eviscerate" its non-discrimination obligations by interpreting Article XIII such that it would permit the European Communities unfettered discretion to carve-out a portion of its market for preferential access without any multilateral controls over how that carve-out was determined and without any consideration of how the carve-out affects access into the same market for other "like" products. The European Communities' interpretation turns Article XIII on its head by distorting a restriction on discriminatory measures into a carte blanche for discriminatory measures, as long as a Member's entire market is not subject to a quantitative restriction.

4.98 The European Communities' own prior statements also call into question its arguments. The European Communities' 2001 request for a waiver from Article XIII:1 and XIII:2 stated that its ACP-exclusive tariff quota "requires a waiver from the obligations established under Article XIII GATT". In October 2005, the European Communities sought to extend that very same Article XIII waiver for its new proposed regime that consisted of the same ACP tariff quota reserve (increased to 775,000 mt), in combination with a €187/mt MFN tariff. That proposed regime, which the European Communities said needed an Article XIII waiver, was structured exactly like the European Communities' current banana measures, with ACP bananas subject to a tariff quota and MFN bananas subject to a tariff and no quota.

(iii) The European Communities maintains its ACP tariff rate quota in breach of GATT Article XIII

4.99 It is clear that the European Communities' ACP-exclusive tariff quota is subject to the requirements of GATT Article XIII. It is also undisputed that the European Communities' waiver from its obligations under Article XIII expired on 31 December 2005. Thus, as demonstrated in the United States' first written submission, because the European Communities uses a tariff rate quota on ACP imports and an entirely different means to restrict MFN imports, the European Communities is preventing "like" imports from being "treated equally, irrespective of origin" in breach of GATT Article XIII:1.

4.100 Moreover, because the European Communities fails to distribute any share whatsoever of its ACP tariff quota to MFN suppliers, let alone a share they would have expected to obtain in the absence of restrictions, it maintains its tariff quota in breach of GATT Article XIII:2. In particular, Article XIII:2(d) required the European Communities, once it opted to impose a tariff quota on banana imports entering its market, to ensure, on failure to reach agreement on quota shares among suppliers, that it "allot[ed] to Members having a substantial interest in supplying the product shares based upon the proportions, supplied by such Members during a previous representative period". Only having done so could the European Communities avoid discriminating against the imports of non-ACP banana suppliers. It failed to do so. Instead, the European Communities chose to allot no share whatsoever to non-ACP suppliers with a substantial interest and no share to non-ACP suppliers with no substantial interest. Thus, the European Communities breaches its obligations under GATT Article XIII:2 because it failed to "similarly prohibit or restrict" those non-ACP bananas.

(e) Conclusion

4.101 For the foregoing reasons, the United States respectfully requests that the Panel find that:

- (1) The European Communities' import regime for bananas implemented through Regulation 1964 is inconsistent with Article I of the GATT 1994 because it applies a zero tariff rate to imports of bananas originating in ACP countries in a quantity up to 775,000 mt, but does not accord the same duty-free treatment to imports of bananas originating in all other WTO Members; and
- (2) The European Communities' import regime for bananas implemented through Regulation 1964 is inconsistent with Article XIII of GATT 1994 – including Article XIII:1 and XIII:2 – because it reserves the 775,000 metric ton zero-duty tariff rate quota for imports of bananas originating in ACP countries and provides no access to this preferential tariff rate quota to imports of bananas originating in non-ACP substantial or non-substantial supplying countries.

3. Oral statement of the United States

4.102 In its written submissions, the United States has established that the regime for the importation of bananas implemented by the European Communities on 1 January 2006, is in breach of GATT Articles I and XIII. The European Communities has raised a number of mostly procedural arguments in its own written submissions. The United States does not believe it is necessary to address all those arguments in this oral statement. In this statement, the United States will begin with a threshold point, namely that the bananas import regime implemented by the European Communities on 1 January 2006 is a "measure taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings" of the Dispute Settlement Body (DSB) and is therefore properly before this Panel under Article 21.5 of the Understanding on Rules and Procedures Governing the Settlement of Disputes (DSU). Next, the United States will summarize its arguments demonstrating that this regime is inconsistent with GATT 1994 Articles I and XIII. Finally, the United States will address two of the procedural arguments that have been raised by the European Communities in its written submissions.

(a) The European Communities' bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply

4.103 On 1 January 2006, the European Communities implemented a revised regime for the importation of bananas through Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964 of 2005. Article 1 of Regulation 1964 contains two elements. Paragraph 1 establishes that from 1 January 2006, the most-favoured-nation, or MFN, tariff rate for bananas will be set at €176/mt. Paragraph 2 creates an exception to this MFN rate by establishing a duty-free tariff rate quota of up to 775,000 mt per year available exclusively to bananas originating in the African, Caribbean and Pacific countries or ACP countries. MFN-origin bananas have no right to enter under the zero-duty ACP tariff rate quota.

4.104 In its written submissions, the European Communities argues that the current import regime for bananas is not a "measure taken to comply" and therefore the United States' complaint falls outside the scope of DSU Article 21.5. It is clear that an implementing Member's designation of a measure as one taken to comply, or not, is not determinative. The procedural history of this dispute clearly demonstrates that the regime for bananas implemented on 1 January 2006 is the latest in a long line of failed measures taken by the European Communities as a result of the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in EC – Bananas III. The European Communities' arguments are without merit and should be rejected by the Panel.

4.105 On 25 September 1997, the DSB adopted the panel and Appellate Body reports in EC – Bananas III and recommended that the European Communities bring its measures into compliance.

The European Communities stated that it could not do so immediately, and an arbitrator acting under Article 21.3 of the DSU determined that the European Communities would have fifteen months and one week to bring itself into compliance – that is until 1 January 1999. By that date, the European Communities implemented two regulations, consisting of a discriminatory tariff rate quota and a license-based system. These two regulations were then found in breach of the GATT 1994 and the GATS by a compliance panel established at the request of Ecuador and by an arbitrator reviewing a US request for authorization to suspend concessions. The DSB adopted the report of the Article 21.5 panel on 6 May 1999, again recommending that the European Communities bring itself into compliance. The DSB authorized the United States to suspend concessions on 19 April 1999.

4.106 In November of 1999, in its status report regarding implementation of the DSB's recommendations concerning its banana import regime, the EC representative announced a new compliance proposal. This proposal would include a "two-stage process" involving a transitional period with a preferential tariff rate quota system for ACP countries, followed by a flat tariff. At the meeting, many concerns were raised about the lack of details of the proposal and the perpetuation of discrimination between Latin American and ACP suppliers.

4.107 After two years of continued non-compliance, in April 2001 the European Communities reached the Understanding on Bananas with the United States, and a very similar one with Ecuador. Although the United States disagree with the legal consequences that the European Communities ascribes to the Understanding – and will deal with those later in this statement – it does not argue that the Panel should completely disregard the Understanding. Indeed, the Understanding is an important fact in the procedural history of this dispute, as it set out the roadmap through which the United States and Ecuador expected that the bananas dispute would be finally resolved. It is interesting that while the European Communities argues that the Understanding precludes the United States from bringing this claim at all using arguments not based on the text of the Understanding or any well-founded legal basis, it would ignore the plain meaning of the text.

4.108 The Understanding laid out a series of steps, over multiple years, through which the European Communities would bring itself into compliance. Paragraph A of the Understanding serves as the introduction for the steps that follow which "identified the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime [could] be resolved".

4.109 Paragraph B states that the European Communities "will introduce a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006". Note that although chronologically this would have been the last step to be taken, it is the first step outlined in the Understanding. The European Communities' argument that this paragraph is just a "simple reference" to secondary legislation "which reflected the political decision of the European Communities to change its banana import regime" before the signing of the Understanding is an attempted post hoc rationale inconsistent with the plain text of the Understanding. It ignores the fact that this was a central element in the "means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved", and cannot change the fact that there would be a continuum of actions to be taken, culminating with this step. This would have been the final action to be taken in bringing the EC regime into compliance.

4.110 Paragraph C begins with "in the interim". That is, before taking the final step set out in paragraph B, there were a series of other steps that needed to be taken. Paragraph C, in conjunction with Annex I, goes on to detail the interim licensing regime the European Communities would use between 1 July 2001, and 31 December 2005. These steps were "interim" because they still discriminated between WTO Members, as evidenced inter alia by the fact that the European Communities recognized that it would need waivers of Articles I and XIII of the GATT 1994.

4.111 Paragraph D then deals with steps the United States would take, in response to the successful completion of interim steps by the European Communities, with respect to the US suspension of concessions against EC exports.

4.112 Paragraph E provides that the United States would lift its reserve concerning the waiver of the European Communities' WTO obligations under GATT 1994 Article I for ACP-origin bananas. In addition, the United States would work towards promoting the acceptance by the WTO membership of the request for the Article XIII waiver that would be needed for the management of quota C until 31 December 2005.

4.113 It should be clear that, per the terms of the Understanding, the measures taken to comply with the DSB recommendations included a series of interim steps and a final step on 1 January 2006 – that is, the introduction of a tariff only regime. The interim regime between 1 July 2001 and 31 December 2005, was a measure taken to comply, and the regime that the European Communities introduced on 1 January 2006, which it claims to be a tariff-only regime, is also a "measure taken to comply".

4.114 The European Communities argues that the fact that the United States agreed to terminate its application of the authorized suspension of concessions and related obligations upon the completion of Phase II "confirms" that the implementation of that import regime was the agreed "measure taken to comply". As already explained, the Understanding sets out a series of steps. Two significant steps were to be achieved by 1 July 2001 and 1 January 2002. As incentive to ensure that the European Communities took those steps, the United States agreed to first provisionally suspend its imposition of increased duties and then terminate the imposition of increased duties that the DSB had authorized the United States to apply. This only proves that both the United States and the European Communities complied with what is set out in paragraphs C and D of the Understanding. Up to that point, there had yet to be full compliance by the European Communities. Per the terms of the Understanding, there was an additional step to be taken.

4.115 The European Communities also argues that a regime that was to enter into force six years after the relevant DSB rulings could not be a "measure taken to comply". This argument must be soundly rejected. It would have been much welcomed if the European Communities had brought itself into compliance immediately upon adoption of the DSB's recommendations and rulings in 1997 or at the end of the reasonable period of time – that is, 1 January 1999. Instead, the European Communities chose to perpetuate a discriminatory system of tariff rate quotas. The United States, Ecuador, and the other original complaining parties recognized the importance that trade in bananas has for many of the ACP countries and were willing to recognize that an abrupt fix to the bananas problem could have a negative impact. That is why the United States, other original complaining parties, and other MFN banana suppliers were willing to allow for a lengthy transitional period of adjustment to a new, tariff-only regime by 1 January 2006. This forbearance, by the United States and the Latin American banana suppliers, has unfortunately been repaid by the European Communities with continued discrimination and non-compliance.

4.116 Finally, the United States notes that in the related proceeding brought by Ecuador, the European Communities argues that the 1 January 2006 regime implements one of the suggestions made by the panel in the Ecuador 21.5 report. In that proceeding, the European Communities argues that therefore the measure cannot be challenged. The United States believes those arguments are completely unfounded. For purposes of this proceeding, however, the Panel should take the European Communities' argument that its current bananas regime implements a suggestion by the compliance panel in EC – Bananas III as a concession by the European Communities that the measure taken by the European Communities on 1 January 2006 is directly linked to the DSB's recommendations and rulings. For all the foregoing reasons, the Panel should conclude that the European Communities' current bananas import regime is a "measure taken to comply".

(b) The European Communities' regime is in breach of GATT 1994 Articles XIII and I

4.117 The European Communities' main argumentation has been procedural. This is not surprising as most of the European Communities' substantive arguments are the same, unsuccessful arguments it has made in the prior proceedings in this dispute. The United States will now briefly demonstrate that the tariff rate quota regime implemented by the European Communities on 1 January 2006 is in breach of GATT Articles XIII and I.

(i) The European Communities' regime is in breach of GATT 1994 Article XIII

4.118 We begin with Article XIII of the GATT 1994. Article XIII:5 provides that Article XIII applies to "tariff quotas". The European Communities claims that Article XIII does not apply in this instance because MFN suppliers are "simply subject to a tariff" and, therefore, there is no quantitative restriction imposed on them. The European Communities made the same argument in the first Article 21.5 proceeding brought by Ecuador and in the Article 22.6 proceeding with the United States with respect to the then 857,700 mt tariff rate quota for ACP origin bananas. The panel and arbitrator each rejected the European Communities' argument, explaining that "a tariff quota is a quantitative limit on the availability of a specific tariff rate" and therefore, Article XIII applied to the 857,700 mt limit. The 775,000 mt limit on the duty-free rate reserved for ACP countries is likewise a tariff rate quota subject to Article XIII. The United States notes that there is no support in the text of Article XIII or in any WTO dispute settlement report that the Member making the claim has to be the one subject to the tariff rate quota, as the European Communities suggests.

4.119 As explained by the EC – Bananas III panel, Article XIII:1 establishes that no import restrictions can be applied to one Member's products unless the importation of like products from other Members is similarly restricted. The panel also explained that "a Member may not restrict imports from some Members using one means and restrict them from another using another means". The Appellate Body confirmed that the "essence" of Article XIII "is that like products should be treated equally, irrespective of origin".

4.120 Using the reasoning of the panel and the Appellate Body in EC – Bananas III, the panels in the prior compliance proceedings determined that the traditional ACP suppliers – which were non-substantial suppliers – were subject to different restrictions than other non-substantial suppliers. Therefore, the two groups were not "similarly restricted" as required by Article XIII:1.

4.121 Although the European Communities' 1 January 2006 regime is simpler than the regime subject to the prior compliance proceedings, the same result obtains. Only ACP suppliers benefit from access to the 775,000 mt in-quota quantity, while other non-substantial suppliers (and substantial suppliers) are excluded from the in-quota quantity and subject instead to the over-quota MFN tariff. Once again, the European Communities is choosing to divide its importation regime in breach of Article XIII:1 in a way that prevents like imports from being treated equally.

4.122 Article XIII:2 further requires that if quantitative restrictions are used, the Member imposing the restriction must "aim at a distribution of trade... approaching as closely as possible the shares which the various Members might be expected to obtain in the absence of such restrictions". The EC – Bananas III panel explained that tariff rate quota allocations must "minimize the impact of a... tariff rate quota regime on trade flows by attempting to approximate... the trade shares that would have occurred in the absence of the regime".

4.123 Article XIII:2(d) provides rules on the allocation of quota shares among Members supplying the product. First, the Member allocating a quota or tariff rate quota must try to reach agreement with the Members having a substantial interest. If that fails, the allocating Member must allocate shares to supplying Members having a substantial interest based on criteria specified in Article XIII:2(d), second sentence. Furthermore, the EC – Bananas III panel determined that if a Member allocates tariff rate quota shares to Members not having a substantial interest in supplying the product, then shares must be allocated to all suppliers not having a substantial interest. Otherwise, "imports from Members would not be similarly restricted as required by Article XIII:1".

4.124 In the instant case, the European Communities has failed to distribute any share whatsoever to non-ACP countries, whether substantial or non-substantial suppliers. This despite the fact that the excluded MFN suppliers are principal or substantial suppliers of bananas to the European Communities. Therefore, the ACP tariff rate quota is not allocated in a way that approximates the trade shares that would have occurred in the absence of the tariff rate quota and is therefore inconsistent with Article XIII:2.

4.125 It is undisputed that the Article XIII waiver which the European Communities sought and obtained for the administration of its previous tariff rate quota regime expired on December 31, 2005. The date of expiration of that waiver was to coincide with the expected move to a tariff only regime on 1 January 2006 – a regime which if properly implemented, would not have required a waiver from Article XIII.

4.126 The European Communities argues that this is a case about tariff discrimination under GATT Article I:1 and suggests that it is not possible to bring an Article XIII claim simply because a "tariff preference is subject to a 'cap'". It is precisely because of that "cap" that this case is not just about different rates of duty, and Article I, but also about discriminatory tariff rate quotas, and Article XIII. As already noted, a "cap", or quantitative limit on the availability of a specific tariff rate, is a tariff rate quota. The United States notes that in EC – Bananas III, the Appellate Body found that the European Communities was in breach of its obligations under both GATT Articles I and XIII, and that the Lomé waiver only covered the breach of Article I. There is no support for the proposition that a measure cannot be subject to multiple disciplines within the GATT 1994 and within the WTO Agreement itself.

(ii) The European Communities' regime is in breach of Article I, and the Article I waiver has ceased to apply

4.127 It has been established, and the European Communities does not dispute, that the zero duty tariff accorded exclusively to ACP banana suppliers is in breach of Article I:1. The European Communities' defence is entirely based on its assertion that the Article I waiver agreed by WTO Members at the Doha Ministerial has not expired with respect to bananas. The United States has demonstrated in its written submissions that the text of the Annex on bananas to the Article I waiver can only support an interpretation that the waiver expired when the new EC bananas regime went into effect, after arbitrators found twice that the European Communities had presented a tariff proposal that did not meet the conditions of the Annex.

4.128 Article 3*bis* of the waiver makes clear that the provisions of the Annex apply with respect to bananas. The chapeau to the Annex then makes clear that with respect to bananas, the waiver will apply until 31 December 2007, subject to the conditions and procedures that are set out in the Annex.

4.129 Tired one requires the initiation of Article XXVIII negotiations with respect to the rebinding of the EC tariff on bananas with enough time to finalize the process before the entry into force of the tariff only regime. Tired two requires that interested parties be informed of the European Communities' intentions regarding the rebinding and sets out other conditions for the negotiations.

4.130 Tireds three through five set out the arbitration mechanism which is the focus of US discussions. Tired three provided that interested parties could invoke the arbitration mechanism within 60 days of the announcement regarding the proposed rebinding. Tired four sets forth the terms of the first arbitration proceeding, with a mandate to determine "whether the envisaged rebinding of the EC tariff on bananas would result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers, taking into account ... all EC WTO market-access commitments relating to bananas". The Arbitrator in the first arbitration concluded that the European Communities' "envisaged rebinding" of €230/mt would not fulfill the European Communities' MFN market access commitment.

4.131 Following a negative determination in the first arbitration, the European Communities had to "rectify the matter". According to tiret five, the European Communities could do so in two ways. The European Communities could reach a "mutually satisfactory solution" with the parties that requested the arbitration. Failing that, the third sentence of tiret five provided for a second arbitration, where the same arbitrator would be asked to determine whether the European Communities had "rectified" the matter.

4.132 The fifth sentence of tiret five specified the automatic consequence of a second, negative arbitration determination against the European Communities. It states that: "[i]f the EC has failed to rectify the matter, this waiver shall cease to apply to bananas upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime". The phrase "[i]f the EC has failed to rectify the matter", can only refer back to the determination required to be made by the arbitrator pursuant to the third sentence. The fourth sentence then simply required that this second award be notified to the General Council. The fifth sentence provides the consequence arising from such a notified arbitration award where the arbitrator found that the EC failed to rectify the matter – the waiver ceases to apply "upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime". There is no need for that fifth sentence to have to refer back to the Arbitrator, as the European Communities argues. The European Communities' interpretation would read the role of the arbitrators out of the Annex.

4.133 In addition, the European Communities argues that "the new EC tariff regime" could only refer to the regime that was found to be inconsistent with the conditions of the Annex by the arbitrator and that as long as it introduced a different regime and that regime "did indeed" maintain the total market access of the MFN suppliers, the waiver would apply until the end of 2007. The text of the Annex does not support that interpretation. Furthermore, the context of the waiver and the Annex with respect to bananas does not support such an interpretation either. The arbitration procedures contained in the Annex were intended to provide multilateral control over the rebinding of the EC tariff. The Annex subjected such rebinding to the condition of "at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers". The MFN suppliers were willing to accept an arbitral decision on this, and even willing to allow the European Communities two opportunities to present a proposal that met the condition. It would be absurd that after setting out such procedures, the MFN suppliers would then be required to accept the unilateral determination of the European Communities that whatever regime it put into place would meet the conditions of the Annex and entitle the European Communities to keep the protection of the waiver for the new regime

4.134 For these reasons, the Article I waiver expired with respect to bananas as of 1 January 2006.

(c) The Panel should reject the European Communities' preliminary objections regarding the Understanding and nullification or impairment

4.135 The United States has set out in detail in its rebuttal submission the reasons the Panel should reject the European Communities' preliminary objections. It would now like to address further two issues raised by the EC.

- (i) The EC-US Understanding was not a "mutually agreed solution" and even if it were it would not preclude this proceeding

4.136 We begin with the Understanding. The United States acknowledges that the Understanding is an important document in the long history of this dispute. It sets out what the United States and the European Communities, back in 2001, considered to be means to resolve the bananas dispute. As part of the procedural history of this dispute, it provides evidence that there was a continuum of actions that the European Communities would take to bring itself into compliance, culminating in the adoption, it was hoped, of a tariff only regime on 1 January 2006. Nonetheless, as a matter of fact and law, the Understanding does not have the legal effect that the European Communities argues.

4.137 First, the European Communities argues that the United States is barred from pursuing this proceeding because by accepting the Understanding, the United States has accepted that the Article I waiver would continue to exist until the end of 2007. Of course, the European Communities does not and cannot point to where in the Understanding the United States supposedly agreed to this, as the Understanding does not contain any statement to that effect. As it committed to do in the Understanding, the United States lifted its reserve to the Article I waiver, and that waiver was eventually granted. The waiver is due to terminate for products other than bananas on 31 December 2007. Nonetheless, the waiver also contains the Annex that sets out the arbitration mechanism, providing for the possibility of the waiver being terminated for bananas prior to December 31, 2007. The conditions for the termination of the waiver with respect to bananas were met with the introduction of the new EC regime for bananas on 1 January 2006.

4.138 Second, the European Communities argues that the Understanding is a "mutually agreed solution" and that as a result the United States is barred from bringing this proceeding. As explained in written submissions, the United States did not and does not consider that the Understanding was a "mutually agreed solution" for purposes of Article 3.6. The United States made this clear immediately after the European Communities unilaterally notified the Understanding to the DSB as a "mutually agreed solution" in June of 2001. It would have been impossible in 2001 to say that the dispute was "solved". As the United States made clear to the European Communities and all Members in 2001, the Understanding identified "the means by which the long-standing dispute... can be resolved, but, as is obvious from its own text, it does not in itself constitute a mutually agreed solution pursuant to Article 3.6 of the DSU".

4.139 Even if the Understanding were a "mutually agreed solution", nothing in the DSU permits the legal consequence that the European Communities proposes. The DSU provides three limited consequences for "mutually agreed solutions". Article 3.6 requires that mutually agreed solutions be notified to the DSB and the relevant Councils and Committees. Article 12.7 provides that the existence of a mutually satisfactory solution reached prior to the conclusion of a panel proceeding affects the form and content of the panel's report. And Article 22.8 provides that the suspension of concessions or other obligations shall only be applied until, inter alia, a mutually satisfactory solution is reached. The fact that the legal consequences of a "mutually agreed solution" are spelled out in these three provisions is significant because it stands in stark contrast to the lack of any provision that assigns the legal consequences that the European Communities would now attribute to such solutions.

4.140 In particular, there is no basis in Article 22.8 of the DSU, elsewhere in the DSU, or elsewhere in the covered agreements for the EC argument that parties to a "mutually agreed solution" are precluded from having recourse to Article 21.5 proceedings. As noted in the United States' second written submission, the European Communities took this very same position in the India – Autos proceeding. There, the European Communities argued that "[e]ven if the [1997 Agreement] had settled the matter in dispute ..., that would still not preclude the European Communities from bringing this dispute".

4.141 Third, the United States disagrees with the European Communities' assertion that, pursuant to the customary rules of interpretation reflected in Article 31(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (Vienna Convention), the Understanding must be taken into consideration to determine the parties' rights and obligations under the GATT 1994 and the DSU.

4.142 Nothing in the customary rules of interpretation of public international law, as reflected in Article 31(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention, supports the European Communities' assertion that the Understanding acts as a procedural defence for the European Communities. Article 31(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention deals with interpretation of the covered agreements. The European Communities is not arguing that the Understanding indicates a particular interpretation of any term in any covered agreement; the European Communities appears to be arguing that the Understanding has altered the covered agreements. Article 31(3)(c) does not deal with this issue. The United States refers the Panel to a discussion of this issue in its second written submission.

4.143 There is one significant aspect to the European Communities' claims regarding the Understanding to note. Since the European Communities in this proceeding claims to view the Understanding as a mutually agreed solution to the dispute, the European Communities itself then is acknowledging that the steps in the Understanding are relevant to responding to the DSB's recommendations and rulings in the dispute. Accordingly, the EC claims with respect to the nature of the Understanding contradict its claim that its new regime is not a "measure taken to comply" with those recommendations and rulings.

(ii) The Panel must reject the European Communities' arguments regarding nullification or impairment

4.144 Finally, the Panel must reject the EC arguments that in order to resolve this dispute the Panel must determine whether the United States has standing and what is the level of nullification or impairment suffered by the United States. Both these issues were settled by the Appellate Body in EC – Bananas III.

4.145 The Appellate Body upheld the panel's finding that the United States had a right to bring the claims under the GATT 1994 against the European Communities' bananas regime. The Appellate Body explained that Members have broad discretion in bringing claims. In addition to noting the potential export interest of the United States and the potential impact on the US market for bananas of the European Communities' regime, it quoted from the panel that "with the increased interdependence of the global economy ... Members have a greater stake in enforcing WTO rules than in the past since any deviation from the negotiated balance of rights and obligations is more likely to affect them".

4.146 In EC – Bananas III, the Appellate Body also determined that a showing of trade effects is unnecessary for purposes of demonstrating that there has been a breach of a GATT provision. The Appellate Body based its reasoning on the US – Superfund GATT panel report. This reasoning should likewise apply here.

4.147 By focusing on nullification or impairment, the European Communities' argument seems to presume that the ultimate outcome of dispute settlement is the suspension of concessions by the complaining Member in order to achieve compliance by the responding Member. There are, of course, two other preferred outcomes set out in Article 3.7 of the DSU: a mutually agreed solution consistent with the covered agreements and withdrawal of WTO-inconsistent measures. In addition, there is resort to compensation. Indeed, Article 3.7 of the DSU characterizes suspension of concessions as a "last resort".

4.148 In that regard, the United States found troubling the European Communities' assertion in its rebuttal submission that a finding by this Panel of WTO-inconsistency would prolong the dispute and would likely lead to the suspension of concessions by the United States. The United States disagrees. Rather, once this Panel finds the European Communities' current regime to be WTO-inconsistent, and the WTO adopts the report, the United States expects the European Communities to fully respect its WTO obligations and to reach a mutually agreed solution consistent with the covered agreements or withdraw its current bananas regime.

4. Closing statement of the United States

4.149 The United States wishes to note that it regrets very much some of the comments made by certain ACP speakers, and endorsed by other ACP speakers, that attack the integrity and motivations of the United States in bringing this proceeding.

4.150 The United States disagrees profoundly with those comments and statements. The United States was a party to the original Bananas III proceeding. It therefore has full rights to ensure that the European Communities complies with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB.

4.151 The Chairman recalled at the beginning of this panel meeting that the GATT recently celebrated its 60th anniversary. A bedrock principle of the GATT, and now the WTO agreements, is non-discrimination.

4.152 This is a dispute about this very principle of non-discrimination. The regime implemented by the European Communities on 1 January 2006, continues the long-standing discrimination against non-ACP banana suppliers that was found WTO-inconsistent over a decade ago, and more going back to the earlier GATT cases.

4.153 One of the speakers this morning stated trade should not be used to the detriment of the poorest countries. The United States agrees with that, and believes that the regime implemented by the European Communities on 1 January 2006, does precisely that by picking winners and losers among similarly situated Members of the WTO.

4.154 None other than EC Trade Commissioner Mandelson recently wrote that the European Communities' "current arrangements discriminate in favour of some developing countries – the ... ACP[] – and against others, often equally needy." He added: "That is not right morally nor compatible with international trade rules."²²³ The United States agrees.

B. EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES

1. First written submission of the European Communities

(a) Preliminary objections

(i) The United States did not request consultations

4.155 A complaining party is not entitled to request the establishment of a panel unless it has first submitted a request for consultations. If no request for consultations has been made, the defending party may raise a preliminary objection before the panel (given that, pursuant to the DSU, a panel request is not subjected to scrutiny by the DSB) and the panel is obliged to sustain the objection and dismiss the case outright. This Panel should find that the well established importance of the request for consultations for the proper operation of the WTO dispute settlement system, recognized not only in the text of the DSU but also in the text of the GATT, means that a complaining party must submit a request for consultations before the submission of a request for the establishment of a panel pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU.

4.156 The United States never submitted a request for consultations before submitting its request for the establishment of this Panel. The European Communities hereby raises a preliminary objection and requests the Panel to dismiss the United States' complaint outright on the grounds that the United States did not submit a request for consultations before requesting the establishment of the Panel.

(ii) The United States is barred from challenging the Cotonou Preference

4.157 The Understanding between the United States and the European Communities and the Letters exchanged between them confirm that the parties had reached a mutually agreed solution to their dispute. The Understanding (i) describes in great detail the characteristics of the two banana import regimes that the European Communities should implement by 1 July 2001 and by 1 January 2002 respectively and (ii) expressly provides that the United States' retaliation measures will be initially suspended and then terminated upon the implementation by the European Communities of the second import regime on 1 January 2002. The Letters provide even further detail on the allocation of the licences to certain operators and the mutual rights and obligations of the United States and the European Communities if various events occur. Importantly, the Letters confirm that this is indeed a mutually agreed solution. In light of the content of the Understanding and the Letters and the rights and obligations mutually accepted by both parties, the European Communities respectfully submits that the Understanding is indeed a "mutually agreed solution" to the banana dispute between the United States and the European Communities. In any event, even if it is assumed arguendo that the Understanding is not a "mutually agreed solution", it is a bilateral agreement between the United States and the European Communities and forms part of the "applicable rules of law" governing the relations between them. Its terms must be taken into consideration in order to determine the parties' mutual rights and obligations under the GATT and the DSU.

4.158 Through the Understanding, the United States accepted the principle that the European Communities would offer a trade preference to bananas coming from the ACP countries until the end of 2007. Given that the United States has accepted in the Understanding the principle that the Cotonou Preference would continue to exist until the end of 2007, the United States is now barred from challenging the existence of the Cotonou Preference in the period between the end of 2005 and the end of 2007, irrespective of the reasons that the United States may claim in its complaint.

(iii) The complaint of the United States falls outside the scope of Article 21.5 of the DSU

4.159 Article 21.5 proceedings can be used only to challenge the legality of the "measures taken to comply" with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB and not "any" measure taken by the defending party, even if that measure relates to products that have been the subject of dispute resolution procedures in the past. A complaining party that wishes to challenge such measures must follow the procedures outlined in Article 6 of the DSU.

4.160 The dispute between the United States and the European Communities, which had culminated with the Appellate Body's report in 1997 and the United States' retaliation measures, ended when the parties reached their "mutually agreed solution" in 2001 and signed the Understanding and exchanged the Letters attached as an Exhibit to this submission. In compliance with the mutually agreed solution, the European Communities introduced on 1 January 2002 the final "measure taken to comply" with the 1997 Appellate Body report. This was the tariff-quota based import regime with the characteristics agreed in Annex II of the Understanding. This was the "measure taken to comply" that was agreed with the United States. The United States' retaliation rights terminated upon the European Communities' implementation of this tariff-quota based regime and the United States never requested from the DSB the right to reinstate those rights with relation to that import regime.

4.161 Therefore, the current European Communities' banana import regime is not a "measure taken to comply" with the 1997 rulings and recommendations. If the United States does indeed consider that the current banana import regime violates the GATT, it should commence new proceedings on the basis of Article 6 of the DSU. The Panel should find that the United States has erroneously brought this complaint under the procedures of Article 21.5 of the DSU and reject the complaint in its entirety.

(b) GATT Article I: The Doha Waiver covers the Cotonou Preference until the end of 2007

4.162 The correct interpretation of the Doha Waiver is that it would expire only upon the entry into force of a European Communities' banana import regime that would not satisfy the standard of "maintaining total market access for MFN countries". Therefore, the continued application of the Doha Waiver until the end of 2007 depends on whether the European Communities' import regime actually maintains total market access for MFN suppliers and not on the number of arbitrations lost for the European Communities before the new import regime was ever introduced.

4.163 The text of the Doha Waiver provides that the waiver would cease to cover the Cotonou Preference if the European Communities "failed to rectify the matter". This means that the Doha Waiver would continue to apply to the end of 2007, if the European Communities' new import regime indeed maintained total market access for MFN suppliers. Moreover, the Doha Waiver provides that "this waiver shall cease to apply to bananas upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime". The phrase "the new EC tariff regime" refers to the tariff regime that was presented to the Arbitrator and on which the Arbitrator made a pronouncement in its Award. In other words, the Doha Waiver would cease to apply only if the European Communities implemented the import regime analysed by the Arbitrator and found not to satisfy the standard of the Doha Waiver. If the European Communities introduced a different import regime than the one analysed by the Arbitrator and that import regime did indeed maintain the total market access of the MFN suppliers, then the Doha Waiver would continue to apply until the end of 2007. The European Communities has fully satisfied the condition for the continued application of the Doha Waiver.

4.164 The current import regime maintains total market access for MFN suppliers. First, it has been established that the volume of total imports of bananas from MFN countries has increased significantly since the introduction of the European Communities' new import regime. Its growth exceeds the growth of the aggregate banana market in the European Communities, as well as the growth of the imports of ACP bananas.

4.165 Second, "maintaining total market access for MFN suppliers" does not mean guaranteeing a particular level of trade to any individual MFN country. Consequently, the fact that the volume of exports of some countries may have decreased in recent years does not mean that the total market access for the group to which these countries belong has not been maintained. The reduction in the exports of certain countries is the result of a number of factors (e.g., weather conditions, natural disasters, local administrative measures affecting the decisions of banana trading companies, etc.) that have nothing to do with the import regime of the European Communities.

4.166 Third, the average FOB prices paid to banana producers in 2006 and 2007 are much higher than those paid in 2005 and 2004.

(c) There is no violation of GATT Article XIII

4.167 The Cotonou Preference does not violate GATT Article XIII. First, banana imports from Latin American and other MFN suppliers are not subject to any quantitative restriction. Therefore, the conditions for the application of GATT Article XIII are not satisfied, i.e., there is no quantitative restriction imposed on one WTO Member that it is not imposed on all other countries.

4.168 Second, GATT Article XIII cannot be used as a substitute for GATT Article I:1 wherever a tariff quota exists. GATT Article XIII does not oblige the European Communities to extend to Latin American countries the tariff preference it grants to the ACP countries simply because this tariff preference is subject to a "cap". Article XIII does not cover cases of tariff discrimination: this is the role of GATT Article I:1.

4.169 Third, the facts in the current proceedings are not the same as those that faced the Panel and Appellate Body in 1997. It is noteworthy that the United States does not make any attempt to explain what are the restrictions on imports from MFN exporters that are not similar to those it says are affecting imports from ACP countries.

4.170 Fourth, the United States' invocation of Article XIII:2 suffers from similar defects. It fails to provide any explanation of how the extension of Article XIII to tariff quotas is to apply in the case of paragraph 2. Moreover, the European Communities' regime for bananas that is the subject of the present proceedings is significantly different from that examined in the original dispute. In the present case the MFN Members are not subject to any quantitative restriction. As there are no "restrictions" applicable to their exports, there are no restrictions on their exports that can be compared with those, if they can be called such, that are applied to ACP exports.

(d) Absence of nullification or impairment of a benefit accruing to the United States

4.171 The existence between the end of 2005 and the end of 2007 of the Cotonou Preference has not caused the United States a nullification or impairment of any benefit accruing to it. There can be only one notion of "nullification or impairment" for purposes of the DSU and, therefore, this term has the same meaning both in the context of Article 3.8 of the DSU and of Article 22 of the DSU. The European Communities draws support for this conclusion from the decision of the Arbitrators (pursuant to Article 22.6 of the DSU) in US – 1916 Act (EC), paragraph 5.50.

4.172 Moreover, the Arbitrators' decision in the EC – Bananas III arbitration in 1999 confirms that the Panel must use different standards to determine (a) whether the alleged violation of a WTO rule sufficiently "touches" upon the interests of the complaining party so as to justify the complaining party's "standing" to commence dispute settlement proceedings, and (b) whether the complaining party suffers a "nullification or impairment". Moreover, it confirms that the standard that needs to be satisfied for a finding of "nullification or impairment" should be based on facts and is more difficult to satisfy than the standard that needs to be satisfied for a finding of "standing" to bring a complaint. The Panel needs to examine what is the nullification or impairment suffered by the United States in order to comply with its obligations under Articles 3.2, 3.3 and 11 of the DSU. The Panel can offer legal certainty to the parties and help them avoid future disputes, for example, under Article 22 of the DSU only if it resolves in the present proceedings the question of whether there is nullification or impairment of a benefit accruing to the United States for which the European Communities can face suspension of concessions.

4.173 The Cotonou Preference does not deprive the United States from any opportunity to export bananas towards the market of the European Communities. The United States cannot claim a nullification or impairment neither on the basis of any potential effect on the trade in bananas between the United States and third countries, nor on the basis of any potential effect on "US content incorporated in Latin American bananas". In the EC – Bananas III case, the United States' nullification or impairment was based on violations of the GATS. This is confirmed both in the report of the Appellate Body in 1997 and in the decision of the Arbitrators in 1999.

4.174 None of the bases on which the nullification or impairment of the United States' benefits was found in 1997 and 1999 exists today. In the current proceedings, the United States has not brought any claim under the GATS and bases its complaint exclusively the GATT. The current import regime does not give rise to any "inextricably interwoven" relation between the GATT and the GATS (which the Appellate Body had found to be the case in 1997). The Panel should confirm the conclusions it had reached as Arbitrators in 1999 and find that, even if the Cotonou Preference were to violate the GATT, such violation does not cause any nullification or impairment of a benefit accruing to the United States for which the European Communities can face suspension of concessions.

2. Second written submission of the European Communities

(a) Preliminary objections

(i) The United States did not request consultations

4.175 In light of the agreement to dispense with consultations in this case, which was reached between the European Communities and the United States prior to the United States' request for the establishment of the Panel, the European Communities withdraws the objection raised in its first written submission.

(ii) The Understanding bars the United States from challenging the Cotonou Preference

4.176 The United States argues that it never accepted a reduction of its rights to challenge the Cotonou Preference pursuant to the DSU and that the Understanding does not include an express statement of the United States according to which it renounces the right to challenge the Cotonou Preference at a later time. The European Communities considers that such an express statement by the United States in the Understanding is not necessary in light of the other provisions of the Understanding and the context within which it was signed. The United States does not dispute the fact that the Understanding provides that the United States would help the European Communities to obtain the "waiver requested". The United States also does not dispute the fact that the duration of the "waiver requested" by the European Communities was until the end of 2007. The logical consequence of the United States' accepting to support the grant of a waiver with duration until the end of 2007 is that the United States also accepted that the Cotonou Preference (which the request for the waiver referred to) would continue to exist until the end of 2007. The Understanding does not include any language that might indicate that the United States' acceptance of the Cotonou Preference until the end of 2007 was subject to any conditions relating to the characteristics of the Cotonou Preference. The only characteristic of the Cotonou Preference that was accepted by the parties was that banana imports from ACP countries would be assured "more favourable treatment than that granted to third countries benefiting from the most favoured nation clause for the same products". Moreover, the deal between the parties would have been completely one-sided and unbalanced if the United States were allowed first to reap all the benefits of the Understanding and then were allowed to avoid complying with its obligations towards the European Communities.

4.177 The United States argues that its agreement to the grant of the "waiver requested" by the European Communities "did not itself change the legal situation with respect to the EC's tariff preferences". The European Communities has not argued that the Understanding has changed the "legal situation" of the Cotonou Preference, but that, irrespective of the "legal situation" of the Cotonou Preference, the United States has accepted its existence until the end of 2007 and is therefore is now barred from challenging it. The United States also argues that the European Communities' interpretation could lead to a situation where WTO Members would be very hesitant to accept the grant of waivers in the future. However, the United States has done more than simply voting in favour of the Cotonou Preference waiver: it has entered into an international agreement accepting its existence until the end of 2007 and has received specific consideration for doing so. This differentiates the United States from virtually all other WTO Members present in Doha. It is actually the United States' arguments that, if accepted, would create important "systemic" problems for the WTO legal order. Granting to WTO Members the right to renege on the agreements with which they reach mutually agreed solutions to their disputes would seriously compromise the effectiveness of these mutually agreed solutions and would foster the "contentious" character of the dispute resolution system.

4.178 The United States argues that the Understanding is not a legally binding agreement that can be taken into consideration by the Panel in determining the parties' rights and obligations under the GATT and the DSU. The position taken by the United States in this part of its second written submission is in full contradiction with the position it takes in the next section of its submission. The United States also argues that the Understanding was not a mutually agreed solution because it was merely a "document that identified the 'means' to resolve the dispute and set out a path forward, but that no solution acceptable to both parties had yet been put in place on the date of the EC-US Understanding and that the Understanding was not itself the end of the dispute". The European Communities cannot see why such a document should not qualify as a mutually agreed solution for purposes of the DSU. A "mutually agreed solution" can be nothing else than a document that sets the terms of the solution mutually agreed between the parties. A "mutually agreed solution" will describe the actions that the parties have undertaken to perform (or refrain from) in the future. The United States also attempts to argue that the side letters exchanged between the parties shortly after the signing of the Understanding do not mean what they expressly say, i.e., that the Understanding was a "mutually agreed solution". The European Communities considers that the points raised by the United States in this paragraph actually support the interpretation of the European Communities: both conditions mentioned by the United States for the parties' adherence to the Understanding have been satisfied. Therefore, the United States does not have any excuse not to adhere to the Understanding and comply with its terms. Moreover, the express reference to the Understanding as a mutually agreed solution in the side letters confirms the legal effect that the parties intended to give to the Understanding from the very beginning.

4.179 The United States accepts that the Understanding is an international agreement between the United States and the European Communities, but argues that its terms cannot be taken into consideration in determining the rights and obligations of the parties under the WTO rules. The United States asserts that the Understanding has no relevance for these proceedings because it is not a "covered agreement" listed in Appendix 1 to the DSU. The European Communities notes that there are many bilateral agreements between WTO Members which are not listed in Appendix 1, but are given legal effect and are taken into account by the WTO dispute settlement system. A good example is the bilateral agreement of the parties in this case with which they have agreed to dispense with the DSU's requirement to hold consultations. This agreement is not listed in Appendix 1 to the DSU, but the United States considers it binding upon the parties. It would be odd to find that the bilateral agreement to dispense with consultations is covered by the DSU and is binding for the parties, but that the Understanding is not, although the parties' undertakings in the Understanding are so important for the determination of their rights and obligations under the GATT and the DSU.

4.180 The United States attempts to draw some support from the report of the panel in EC – Approval and Marketing of Biotech Products, which, according to the United States, "rejected the notion that the rules of international law could be those applicable only to the disputing parties". The European Communities considers that the United States' reading of the panel report is not accurate. The European Communities notes that paragraph 7.71 and paragraph 7.72 of the panel's report in EC – Approval and Marketing of Biotech Products states that, in determining the rights and obligations of the parties to a dispute under the GATT and the DSU, it is possible for a panel to take into consideration the terms of any international agreement to which all parties to the dispute participate. Therefore, the assertion that the United States attempts to base on the report of the panel in EC – Approval and Marketing of Biotech Products is not correct. The United States also tries to draw some support for its position from the report of the panel in India – Autos and the views expressed by the European Communities in that case. The European Communities invites the United States to read the report of the panel in paragraph 7.113 and paragraph 7.115 which confirm that the panel considered it possible that a mutually agreed solution could bar a party from commencing dispute settlement proceedings.

4.181 The European Communities also considers that the principle of good faith, which runs through the entire DSU and defines the outer limits of the application of all rights recognized by the DSU to WTO Members, bars the United States from challenging the Cotonou Preference. The United States has already drawn the benefits from the Understanding and was from the very beginning aware of the legal status of the Understanding and of the obligations it undertook with it. Moreover, the European Communities has fully complied with its obligations under the Understanding in good faith and relying on the expectation that the United States would also comply with its own obligations. The application of the principle of good faith on these facts requires the United States to perform its part of the deal and refrain from challenging the existence of the Cotonou Preference until the end of 2007.

(iii) The United States' complaint falls outside the scope of Article 21.5 of the DSU

4.182 The Understanding does not contain any express provision imposing the obligation to implement a tariff only regime on the European Communities. Paragraph B makes a simple reference to a provision of the European Communities' secondary legislation, which reflected the political decision of the European Communities to change its banana import regime. This political decision had already been taken before the signing of the Understanding. The United States wrongly asserts that the parties agreed in the Understanding that the tariff only regime would be a part of the "measure taken to comply".

4.183 It was agreed in the Understanding that the United States' right to retaliate would terminate upon the European Communities' implementation of the tariff-quota-based regime described in paragraph C-2 of the Understanding. A complaining party's right to retaliate terminates upon the implementation by the defending party of the appropriate "measure taken to comply". Therefore, the fact that the United States accepted to have their retaliation rights terminated upon such implementation confirms that the implementation of that import regime was the agreed "measure taken to comply".

4.184 Article 21.5 establishes a link between the "measures taken to comply" and the recommendations and rulings of the DSB and the determination of the scope of the "measures taken to comply" should involve an examination of the recommendations and rulings contained in the original report adopted by the DSB. The findings and recommendations of the Appellate Body report in the EC – Bananas III case do not oblige the European Communities to move into a tariff only regime in order to bring itself into compliance with the covered agreements. If one looks at the general trend of modernisation and liberalisation of the European Communities' common agricultural policy, one may conclude that the tariff-only banana import regime would have been introduced even in the absence of any dispute resolution proceedings in the banana sector.

4.185 The United States argues that the Preamble of Regulation 1964/2005 refers to the arbitrations held in 2005 and it must be considered as a measure taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings adopted by the DSB in 1997. The European Communities notes that the arbitrations were part of the waiver granted by the WTO to the Cotonou Agreement, which was signed three years after the adoption of the DSB's recommendations and rulings. It is difficult to see how a Regulation adopted to conform to the terms of a waiver relating to an international agreement reached in 2000 can be said to be a "measure taken to comply" with a DSB ruling adopted in 1997. In addition, the subject matter of the 2005 arbitrations has no relation to the 1997 DSB recommendations and rulings. The two procedures can be said to have conflicting subject matters. Moreover, the arbitration arrangement supports the proposition that the tariff-quota-based import regime that was in place between 1 January 2002 and 31 December 2005 was the "measure taken to comply" with the DSB recommendations and rulings of 1997. The aim of the arbitrations was to "maintain the total market access of the MFN suppliers" at its 2002 to 2005 level. This strongly suggests that the level of MFN market access between 2002 and 2005 was satisfactory for the MFN suppliers and that whatever market access problems the MFN suppliers had in 1997 were corrected by 2002-2005. This supports the conclusion that the import regime implemented by the European Communities between 2002 and 2005 was the "measure taken to comply" with the DSB recommendations and rulings of 1997.

4.186 The United States relies on various statements mostly found in press releases issued by the European Communities in the past. The European Communities would like to note that none of these statements refer to the tariff-only system introduced in 2006 as a "measure taken to comply". Moreover, the European Communities considers that such press statements cannot contain authoritative interpretations of complex legal issues. Their content cannot be used to replace proper legal analysis under the DSU. The same is true for the invitation to public consultation annexed in the second written submission of the United States. One of the documents relied upon by the United States actually supports the European Communities' position and confirms that the "measure taken to comply" that was agreed with the United States was the tariff-quota-based system implemented by the European Communities until the end of 2005 and that the European Communities' political decision to change its banana import regime preceded the Understanding and was not part of the agreement with the United States.

(b) The Cotonou Preference does not violate the GATT

(i) The Doha Waiver covers the Cotonou Preference until the end of 2007

4.187 The text of the Doha Waiver provides that the "standard" is to "maintain total market access for MFN suppliers". This means that whether the new import regime actually has maintained total market access has an important legal significance. This is confirmed by the Doha Waiver providing that the waiver shall cease to apply "if the EC has failed to rectify the matter" and not "if the Arbitrator considers that the EC has failed to rectify the matter". It is uncontested that the current import regime more than maintains the total market access of the MFN suppliers and, therefore, this condition for the termination of the Doha Waiver has not been satisfied. The waiver would terminate upon the entry into force of a "new EC tariff regime" that would fail to maintain the total market access of the MFN suppliers. If the regime that the Arbitrators had analysed and found not to satisfy that standard was introduced there would be a strong presumption that this regime is the "new EC tariff regime" that fails to maintain the total market access of the MFN suppliers. If the new import regime was different it would not be possible to characterise it as the "new EC tariff regime" that fails to maintain the total market access. Given that the current import regime is different from the regime analysed by the Arbitrators and satisfies the standard of the Doha Waiver this condition for the termination of the Doha Waiver has not been satisfied. If the continued existence of the waiver was solely linked to the perceptions of the Arbitrators prior to the introduction of the regime, then the Doha Waiver would continue to apply even if the new import regime was not the regime presented to the Arbitrators, or was a regime eventually proven not to maintain the market access of the MFN suppliers. It is not very likely that the drafters of the Doha Waiver would have set up a mechanism that produces such absurd results.

4.188 The Recital relied upon by the United States states that the new import regime would maintain total market access and not that the Arbitrators would consider that the new import regime would satisfy that standard. Therefore, the Recital confirms that the "test" that had to be satisfied was whether the new import regime actually satisfies the standard and not whether the Arbitrators considered that this would be the case in the future. The reference to "multilateral control on the implementation of this commitment" does not support the United States' position. The "commitment" that had to be "implemented" was that the new import regime should maintain the total market access of the MFN suppliers. The European Communities accepted that if it failed to satisfy the standard the Doha Waiver would terminate. This is not a consequence that Article XXVIII normally imposes and this is the "multilateral control over the implementation of the commitment" referred to in the Recital.

4.189 The negotiating history of the Doha Waiver supports the European Communities' position. An earlier draft provided that the waiver would be terminated automatically within two months from the notification of the arbitration award to the General Council. This provision was not included in the final version of the Doha Waiver. This shows that the parties agreed that the termination of the waiver would not be linked to the outcome of the arbitration awards, but on whether the European Communities would actually "rectify the matter".

(ii) There is no violation of GATT Article XIII

4.190 There is extensive GATT and WTO practice showing that Members do not regard exclusion from a tariff quota as a matter governed by Article XIII. Under the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP), first adopted as a policy by UNCTAD II in 1968, the waivers were from Article I:1 only, and they explicitly authorized the use of tariff quotas. There was no reference to Article XIII. It was the evident understanding of the parties that the favourable treatment for developing countries in the form of tariff quotas required a waiver of Article I:1 but not of Article XIII. A general waiver from the provisions of Article I for GSP schemes was adopted in 1971. The decision did not mention tariff quotas specifically, but they were common in the most significant of the national schemes submitted to the GATT Secretariat. The GSP schemes of WTO Members are now authorized by the Enabling Clause. The operative words of this document say "Notwithstanding the provisions of Article I of the General Agreement, contracting parties may accord differential and more favourable treatment to developing countries". There is no provision in the text that specifically authorizes the use of tariff quotas but several GATT members had used them and that fact was generally known. The 1979 decision was adopted against this background, and tariff quotas continued to be used in the schemes applied after this date. As reported to the WTO, the present United States GSP scheme contains provision for the use of tariff quotas. As decisions of the CONTRACTING PARTIES, those instruments, such as the Enabling Clause, that remained operational in 1994 formed part of GATT 1994 (under Annex 1A of the WTO Agreement). In accordance with GATT and WTO practice they were adopted by consensus. This shows that there is "subsequent practice" which is "concordant", "common" and consistent, which has involved taking a particular stance on the interpretation of the GATT and which confirms that Members assume that the grant of a tariff quota for the benefit of certain countries to the exclusion of other Members would be an infringement of Article I, but not of other GATT obligations, such as Article XIII.

4.191 The objective of Article XIII:2 is to achieve particular quantitative distributions of trade. When these rules are applied to tariff quotas a corresponding distribution can be achieved by allocating specific quantities of the tariff quota. The notion that such a distribution could be achieved by setting different tariff levels for the various exporting countries is economic nonsense. Consequently it is not plausible that the drafters of Article XIII would have envisaged using paragraph 2 to achieve such a goal. Moreover, the US' interpretation would lead to non-Members of the WTO being accorded rights under the GATT. Such an outcome is contrary to the object and purpose of GATT. In EC – Bananas III, the panel's proposition does not imply that paragraph 5 of Article XIII has the effect of extending the obligations of that Article into situations of tariff discrimination and thereby of overthrowing the basic distinction between tariffs and quantitative measures. Nor was the panel in EC – Bananas III concerned with such a situation since the tariff quotas that it was examining extended to all of the Members that were affected by the dispute. The statements of the Appellate Body in EC – Bananas III referred to both Articles I and XIII.

(c) Absence of "nullification or impairment"

4.192 The United States asserts that the European Communities "confuses the function of dispute settlement proceedings under DSU Article 6 and 21.5 with arbitration proceedings under DSU Article 22", but does not deny that the notion of "nullification or impairment" is the same under both Article 3.8 and Article 22 of the DSU, or that the "nullification or impairment" of Article 3.8 is different from the "interest" that must be present in order to justify "standing". Therefore, these two principles are uncontested in this case.

4.193 The United States does not deny the facts establishing that the Cotonou Preference does not cause it any "nullification or impairment", but simply requests the Panel to repeat its findings of 1997. However, the facts of the current proceedings are completely different. At that time, the basic if not the only source of nullification or impairment for the United States was the license allocation system of the European Communities, which was found to be in violation of the GATS. In contrast, no nullification or impairment was found to stem from the measures violating the GATT. Therefore, the relevant findings of this Panel in the 1990s are completely irrelevant for the current proceedings where there is no violation of the GATS. Moreover, the United States invites the Panel to avoid examining the facts establishing that the United States does not suffer any "nullification or impairment" in these proceedings. Accepting this suggestion of the United States would raise important systemic issues. First, this would result in an unnecessary prolongation of the dispute and would continue to shed legal uncertainty in the parties' trade relationships. The requirements of Articles 3.3 and 11 of the DSU give the Panel sufficient guidance as to the course of action that it should follow in this case. Second, accepting the United States' suggestion would create confusion as to the facts that a defending party should bring to the attention of a panel in order to rebut the presumption of Article 3.8 of the DSU.

3. Oral statement of the European Communities

(a) Preliminary issues

4.194 This case raises a number of interesting points on the interpretation of the DSU. The first point, which was discussed in paragraphs 8 to 39 of the European Communities' second written submission, is the legal effect of agreements to which all parties to a dispute participate and with which all parties to the dispute undertake certain rights and obligations within the context of the DSU and the GATT. The European Communities considers that the Panel should take into consideration the terms of these agreements in determining the rights and obligations of the parties towards each other. It is not contested today that the Panel should enforce the agreement between the parties to dispense with formal consultations prior to requesting the establishment of the Panel. Equally, the Panel must also enforce the agreement between the parties that allows the European Communities to follow a certain course of action in exchange for the United States' receiving specific consideration.

4.195 This agreement is the Understanding, with which the United States accepted that the European Communities would continue to offer the Cotonou Preference to the ACP countries until the end of 2007. The United States cannot now renege on its obligations and challenge the existence of the Cotonou Preference until the end of 2007, because the United States has already received specific consideration for entering into the Understanding and was aware of the legal nature of the Understanding from the very beginning. This is a result which is dictated (i) by the DSU itself, in Articles 3.6 and 3.10, (ii) by the general principles of customary international law, as codified in Article 31(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention and (iii) by the principle of good faith, which exists both under international law and under WTO law.

4.196 The United States and certain third parties have expressed their disagreement with these principles. The European Communities considers that accepting their position would create very significant obstacles for trade negotiations, because it would create uncertainty as to the legal effects of the agreements reached between WTO Members. For example, what would be the legal value of agreements reached following negotiations such as the ongoing banana negotiations between the European Communities and its principal banana suppliers? If signing such an agreement does not offer the legal certainty that the dispute is closed once and for all why would the European Communities, or any other WTO Member, agree to offer trade concessions in exchange for its counterparts' signature?

4.197 What the complainants are asking the Panel to do is to remove from the WTO system the legal certainty covering agreements signed between WTO Members. But the whole WTO system is based on agreements between its members. The European Communities respectfully submits that accepting the complainants' arguments will bring prejudice to the very essence of the system that the Panel and the European Communities are here to defend.

4.198 The second point raised by these proceedings, which was discussed in paragraphs 40 to 52 of the second written submission of the European Communities, relates to the notion of "measures taken to comply" with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB. Following a negative panel or Appellate Body report, a defending party may take a number of initiatives that may affect the product market that was the subject of the dispute. The mere fact that these policy initiatives relate to a product market that has been the subject of a dispute in the past does not suffice to characterize all of these policy initiatives as "measures taken to comply" with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB.

4.199 In this case, the European Communities has shown that there is nothing in the recommendations and rulings of the DSB adopted in 1997 following the United States' complaint, which obliged the European Communities to introduce a tariff-only banana import regime such as the current one. Moreover, the United States accepts that the Understanding sets out the "means" by which the banana dispute was resolved. The European Communities has shown that the decision for the introduction of the tariff-only import regime was a policy decision taken years before the negotiation of the Understanding between the European Communities and the United States. Therefore, it cannot be argued that the United States and the European Communities ever agreed that the introduction of a tariff-only import regime would be a "measure taken to comply". Most importantly, it is undisputed that the United States accepted to terminate its retaliation rights upon the European Communities' implementation of a different banana import regime than the current one. Finally, the importance assigned by the Doha Waiver to the maintenance under the current import regime of the market access enjoyed by the MFN suppliers under the 2002-2005 regime further supports the conclusion that the 2002-2005 import regime was indeed the "measure taken to comply". All these facts taken together establish that, as far as the United States is concerned, the current banana import regime of the European Communities is not a "measure taken to comply" with the 1997 recommendations and rulings of the DSB in the case brought by the United States.

4.200 There is also a third point raised in this case. The United States and certain third parties supporting them have included in their submissions excerpts from various statements made by various bodies of the European Communities in different contexts and circumstances in the past. This practice of the complainants probably shows that they have reached their limits in coming up with credible legal arguments against the European Communities and have resorted to the tactic of "look what you have said in the past" which is used in high school debating. It is also rather odd for the complainants to refuse to recognize the binding nature of international agreements signed by both parties to this dispute, but at the same time plead for the binding nature of statements included in press releases or in pleadings submitted to unrelated cases or even to cases heard outside the DSU.

4.201 However, this otherwise amusing practice of the complainants, if accepted, may give rise to significant problems for the future credibility and operation of the DSU. The credibility of the DSU can only be preserved if panels and the Appellate Body base their findings on a solid analysis of the law and the facts and not on an analysis of unrelated statements made by the parties in a completely different context. For this reason, the European Communities respectfully requests the Panel to disregard the relevant assertions of the United States and the Third Parties supporting them.

(b) The United States' claims under Article I

4.202 The European Communities considers that it has been established in this case that the banana import regime introduced on 1 January 2006 more than maintains the total market access that the MFN banana suppliers enjoyed until that day. The United States did not deny this reality in its written submissions.

4.203 The European Communities considers that the provisions of the Doha Waiver should be interpreted in accordance with the principle of good faith. An interpretation of the Doha Waiver that would sever completely the link between the continuation of the waiver until the end of 2007 and the fact that the MFN suppliers have maintained their total market access would, in the view of the United States, not be in accordance with the principles of good faith.

4.204 Some third parties have asked the Panel to ignore the reality of the market as evidenced by the performance of the market during the last two years and, instead, base its findings on assumptions and estimates of how things might develop in the future. The European Communities considers that the Panel does not need to resort to assumptions and predictions about the future. The Panel has before it sufficient market evidence to reach a conclusion as to whether the market access enjoyed by the MFN suppliers under the old regime, that is between 1 January 2002 and 31 December 2005 has been maintained during the period which is relevant for the Doha Waiver, that is between 1 January 2006 and the end of 2007.

4.205 Some other third parties have suggested that they would have not approved the Doha Waiver, unless it is to be given their interpretation. This is an assertion that works both ways and could also be used by the European Communities. As evidenced by the negotiating history of the Doha Waiver, the European Communities would have not and did not make the existence of the Cotonou Preference, which is so crucial for so many ACP countries, dependent on the conclusions reached by the arbitrator about future events and based on assumptions. The European Communities might have accepted such a link if the arbitration was to examine the verifiable market situation ex post. But not where the arbitration was based on predictions about the uncertain future.

4.206 Certain third parties have also argued that the European Communities is using a "volumes-based-analysis", as opposed to focusing on whether the MFN suppliers have maintained their "competitive opportunities". This argument is not correct. The European Communities has stated throughout these proceedings that it does not consider that "maintaining market access" should be interpreted as a guarantee of any particular volume of trade to any group of countries or to any specific country. This is why the fact that an individual country may export fewer bananas into the European Communities after 2006 does not necessarily mean that this country's market access opportunities have not been maintained. However, it would not be logical to assume that a country may be deprived of its competitive opportunities and market access, but still be able to increase the quantity of its exports towards the European Communities. A decrease in exports does not necessarily mean that market access has been denied. But an increase in exports can only take place if market access has been maintained. This is why the European Communities considers that the export performance of the MFN countries is evidence that the Panel should take into consideration in order to establish that their market access has been maintained.

(c) The United States' claims under Article XIII

4.207 Turning to the discussion of Article XIII of the GATT, the point that the European Communities has made is that the anti-discrimination rules of Article XIII are aimed at quantitative discrimination, while tariff discrimination is the exclusive preserve of Article I. Offering a tariff preference to some countries subject to a quantitative "cap" may be an issue that needs to be analysed under Article I, but not under Article XIII.

4.208 In support of its claim, the European Communities has invoked the consistent GATT and WTO practice of granting waivers from Article I to cover this type of tariff quotas. This practice is concordant, common and consistent and, therefore it falls within the notion of "state practice" referred to in Article 31(3)(b) of the Vienna Convention. It can also be said that, as formal decisions of the GATT and now the WTO, these waiver decisions approximate to the "subsequent agreements" referred to in Article 31(3)(a) of the Vienna Convention. Moreover, some of the waiver decisions made under GATT 1947 have a special status in WTO law since they form part of "GATT 1994". This is defined in the Uruguay Round Agreements as consisting of the General Agreement plus various other instruments, including "decisions on waivers granted under Article XXV of GATT 1947 and still in force on the date of entry into force of the WTO Agreement". The relevant waivers were defined by the General Council in 1995.²²⁴ The waivers referred to by the European Communities include several that are on this list.

4.209 Certain third parties have argued that they are not aware of this consistent GATT and WTO practice. In response, the European Communities would like to provide the Panel with several examples.

4.210 First, there is the 1948 waiver from Article I:1 that was granted to the United States in respect of the Trust Territories of the Pacific.²²⁵ There was no separate waiver from Article XIII. However, the working party report on which the waiver was based explained that it would be applied to the sugar quotas which were operated by the US.²²⁶ The waiver became part of GATT 1994. In 1996 the United States obtained an extension of the waiver for what were now the "former Trust Territories".²²⁷ The United States has reported on the operation of this waiver, stating that, while enjoying duty-free status, "Watches and watch movements, and certain fishery products are subject to quantity limitations".²²⁸ Do the United States and the Third Party supporting them consider that these preferences violate the GATT?

4.211 Second, there is the 1952 waiver from Article I:1 that was granted to Italy in respect of preferences for Libyan products. There was no separate waiver from Article XIII. However, the waiver authorized Italy "to grant the special, treatment as set out in the Annex" and the Annex contained a table listing products, annual tariff quotas, and legal rates of duty.²²⁹

4.212 Third, there is the 1960 waiver from Article I:1 granted to France "to the extent necessary to permit the Government of France to apply the above-mentioned tariff quotas to goods originating in any part of the territory of the Kingdom of Morocco".²³⁰ The waiver became part of GATT 1994. In

²²⁴ WT/L/3, 1995.

²²⁵ Decision of 8 September 1948, BISD II/9.

²²⁶ Report of Working Party, GATT/CP.2/36, 1948.

²²⁷ Decision of 14 October 1996, WT/L/183.

²²⁸ Report of the Government of the United States under the Decision of 14 October 1996, WT/L/667.

²²⁹ Decision of 9 October 1952, BISD I/14; Draft L/43, SR.7/5.

²³⁰ Decision of 19 November 1960, BISD 9S/39.

2000 the WTO General Council extended its application, repeating the reference to tariff quotas.²³¹ Nobody ever thought that there was a need for an Article XIII waiver.

4.213 Fourth, there is the 1966 waiver granted to Australia, which explicitly authorized the use of tariff quotas.²³² This waiver has become part of GATT 1994. Again nobody thought that there was a need for an Article XIII waiver.

4.214 Fifth, there is the 1973 waiver granted to New Zealand, which explicitly authorised the use of "tariff-free quotas" to handicraft products from South Pacific Islands.²³³

4.215 Sixth, there is the 1985 waiver from Article I:1 granted to the United States regarding duty-free treatment for imports from Caribbean countries as part of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (CBERA).²³⁴ In the case of sugar, the waiver overlapped with a system of quotas. The effect was that certain countries accorded sugar quotas were benefiting from zero tariff rates while other countries with such quotas continued to be subject to the normal tariff rate. The waiver became part of GATT 1994. Again nobody thought that there was a need for an Article XIII waiver.

4.216 Seventh, there is the 1994 waiver regarding European Communities' transitional measures to take account of the external economic impact of German unification.²³⁵ It waived Article I:1 only, but nevertheless referred to duty-free treatment "within the limits of the maximum quantities and values foreseen in the relevant agreements of the former German Democratic Republic". In other words, it explicitly envisaged the use of tariff quotas.

4.217 Eighth, there is the 2000 waiver from Article I:1 granted to the European Communities to allow duty-free or preferential treatment to products from western Balkan countries.²³⁶ The scheme included tariff quotas on several products. A further waiver for preferences for these countries was given in 2006.²³⁷

4.218 The European Communities considers that this consistent practice establishes the common understanding on the part of GATT contracting parties and WTO Members that exclusion from a tariff quota does not constitute an infringement of Article XIII. The European Communities also considers that its current banana import regime is very similar to the import regimes covered by these waivers. As already explained in the written submissions of the European Communities, its current banana import regime is very different to the one that was in place between 2002 and 2005 and for which a specific waiver from the application of Article XIII was granted.

(d) The United States does not suffer any "nullification or impairment"

4.219 The present case raises one more interesting point. It is probably the only case ever heard in this room where the contested measure does not affect at all the complaining party. Indeed, the existence or non-existence of the Cotonou Preference will not bring any change to the "benefits accruing" to the United States under the GATT. The European Communities has provided sufficient evidence establishing this fact. Interestingly, the United States has not provided in its written submissions any legal or factual arguments contesting this market reality. Instead, the United States and certain third parties invite the Panel simply not to proceed with a detailed analysis of whether the United States suffers any "nullification or impairment".

²³² European Communities' second written submission, para. 76.

²³³ Decision of 13 November 1973, BISD 20S/29.

²³⁴ Decision of 15 February 1985, BISD 33S/97.

²³⁵ Decision of 9 December 1994, L/7605.

²³⁶ Decision of 8 December 2000, WT/L/380.

²³⁷ Decision of 28 July 2006, WT/L/654.

4.220 What the United States and these third parties ask the Panel to do is basically to delete Article 3.8 from the DSU. Accepting their position would mean that a panel should never bother with an analysis of whether the complaining party indeed suffers any "nullification or impairment". This analysis would be left for later, most usually within the context of an Article 22.6 arbitration.

4.221 The European Communities considers that this is the wrong solution. Articles 3.8, 3.3 and 11 of the DSU require the Panel to perform a detailed analysis of whether the complaining party indeed suffers any "nullification or impairment". And this analysis cannot use different criteria than those that would be used in the context of an Article 22.6 arbitration, because the notion of "nullification and impairment" is the same under both Articles 3.8 and 22 of the DSU.

4.222 Moreover, the two proceedings are not independent from each other. As shown in the example cited in the first written submission of the European Communities, Article 22.6 arbitrators generally consider that they are bound to find some level of "nullification or impairment" where the panel has already found that the breach causes "nullification or impairment" in the original proceedings. However, in the present case it has been established that the Cotonou Preference does not cause any nullification or impairment to the United States. If the Panel accepts the arguments of the United States and certain third parties and finds that there is "by default" a nullification or impairment, it will put the future arbitrators in a very awkward position.

4.223 For these reasons, the European Communities respectfully requests the Panel to repeat the findings it had reached in 1999 as Arbitrator in the Article 22.6 arbitration on the United States' retaliation measures against the European Communities in this case and conclude that the Cotonou Preference does not cause the nullification or impairment of any benefit accruing to the United States under the GATT.

4.224 In concluding its statement, the European Communities would like to invite the Panel to contribute to a definitive solution to this dispute by confirming that the Cotonou Preference can be maintained until its normal contractual expiration at the end of 2007.

4. Closing statement of the European Communities

4.225 In this closing statement the European Communities will make some brief comments on certain of the points raised by the United States and the third parties supporting them during the substantive meeting. To facilitate the presentation of the issues the European Communities will follow the structure already used in its written submissions.

4.226 The first point relates to the impact of the Understanding on the rights and obligations of the United States and the European Communities in this case. The United States stated yesterday that the European Communities has not adequately explained how the United States accepted in the Understanding that the Cotonou Preference's duration would be until the end of 2007. The European Communities would like to refer to paragraphs 10 to 13 of the second written submission of the European Communities. The United States accepted through the Understanding to help the European Communities obtain the "waiver requested" at that time for the Cotonou Agreement. It is undisputed that the duration of the trade preferences in the Cotonou Agreement and the Cotonou Preference for bananas was until the end of 2007. It is also undisputed that the "waiver requested" by the European Communities at that time also had a duration until the end of 2007. Therefore, it is difficult to see how the United States could argue that, when it signed the Understanding, it did not acknowledge and accept that the Cotonou Preference's duration was until the end of 2007. Moreover, the Understanding does not provide that this waiver would have any particular conditions, nor were any such conditions discussed between the United States and the European Communities prior to the conclusion of the Understanding.

4.227 As the ACP countries pointed out this morning, the United States obtained the benefits it pursued with the Understanding: mainly an increase of the MFN tariff quota and of the number of licences allocated to certain US-based banana trading companies. The European Communities complied with its obligations under the Understanding and expected the United States to do the same. The case before the Panel shows that the United States does not consider itself bound by the agreement it signed. As it is said in French, the United States "veut le beurre et l'argent du beurre". This is contrary to the long standing rule of "pacta sunt servanda".

4.228 The second point is also related to the Understanding. The United States stated yesterday that even if the Understanding is indeed considered to be a "mutually agreed solution" for purposes of Article 3.6 and even if the United States had accepted that the Cotonou Preference would have a duration until the end of 2007, then still the United States would have the right to request the termination of the Cotonou Preference before the end of 2007, because there is no provision in the DSU that would grant to "mutually agreed solutions" that legal power. The European Communities does not agree with this interpretation of the United States. If accepted, it would remove all legal certainty from "mutually agreed solutions" and would in essence delete their existence from the DSU.

4.229 Our third point relates to the notion of a "measure taken to comply". The United States and the Third Parties supporting them asserted in the substantive meeting that the current banana import regime of the European Communities is a measure taken to comply with the 1997 recommendations and rulings of the DSB in the case brought by the United States. The European Communities disagrees. The United States repeated yesterday with a lot of conviction that the "means" through which that dispute would be resolved were agreed with the European Communities in the Understanding. The introduction of the tariff-only import regime was decided by the European Communities at least 2 years before the signing of the Understanding. This fact, together with the other points raised by the European Communities in its written submissions and its oral statement yesterday, confirms that, as far as the United States and the proceedings that it has initiated against the banana import regime of the European Communities are concerned, the current banana import regime is not a measure taken to comply. It must also be noted that the current banana import regime is radically different in design and effect from the 2002-2005 system, which the United States yesterday admitted was a "measure taken to comply". This further confirms that the current import regime does not constitute a measure taken to comply with the 1997 recommendations and rulings of the DSB in the case brought by the United States.

4.230 Our fourth point relates to the United States' interpretation of the Doha Waiver. The European Communities considers that the text of the Doha Waiver supports its own interpretation of the conditions that could bring the early termination of the waiver. The European Communities also considers that a proper interpretation of the terms of the Doha Waiver cannot be based solely on the "dictionary meaning" of words. Under the current import regime the MFN suppliers have managed to increase the quantities of their exports towards the European Communities more than the ACP countries and indeed above the growth of the total banana market in the European Communities. Moreover, new countries have managed to enter the European banana market. This is evidence establishing that the European Communities has complied with its obligations under the Doha Waiver.

4.231 Our fifth point relates to the interpretation of Article XIII of the GATT. The European Communities believes that the debate of these two days has helped to clarify the proper interpretation of Article XIII and its application on tariff quotas. It also believes that finding that an import regime, with the characteristics of the new European Communities' banana import regime, breaches Article XIII would be against the concordant, common and consistent practice under the GATT and the WTO and would create significant problems for many WTO Members and not simply for the European Communities.

4.232 Finally, there is the point on "nullification or impairment". The United States and the third parties supporting them have asked the Panel to simply assume automatically that there is always "nullification or impairment" once a GATT violation is established, without offering the defending party the opportunity to rebut this presumption. However, eliminating the possibility of defending parties to rebut the presumption of "nullification or impairment" after a violation of the GATT is established, requires the amendment or deletion of Article 3.8 of the DSU. This is not an issue that may be decided in the context of a dispute settlement proceeding. For as long as the WTO Members have not decided to amend the DSU and remove Article 3.8, the defending party's right to rebut this presumption must be enforced in dispute settlement proceedings like those being held today. And the European Communities has shown that the Cotonou Preference, a trade preference supporting the development efforts of vulnerable developing countries, does not cause and cannot cause the United States any "nullification or impairment" of any benefit accruing to it under the GATT. Therefore, the European Communities has rebutted the presumption of "nullification or impairment" in accordance with Article 3.8 of the DSU.

V. ARGUMENTS OF THE THIRD PARTIES

A. BELIZE, CAMEROON, CÔTE D'IVOIRE, DOMINICA, DOMINICAN REPUBLIC, JAMAICA, SAINT LUCIA, SAINT VINCENT AND THE GRENADINES, AND SURINAME

1. Written submission of the ACP third parties

5.1 In their written submission, Belize, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Suriname, referred to as "the ACP third parties", respectfully request the Panel to reject as inadmissible and unfounded the United States' claims against the new EC banana import regime which entered into force on 1 January 2006.

5.2 By way of introduction, the ACP third parties question the United States' interests in bringing a compliance panel targeting the new EC banana import regime as the United States is not a banana exporter and its trade is in no way affected by this new regime. Through this claim, the United States is attacking the preference on bananas granted by the European Communities to the ACP countries. In so doing, the United States disregards the development goal pursued by that preference and has chosen to become the advocate of a few large US-controlled multinational companies having substantial interests in bananas in the MFN countries. To achieve this goal, the United States is trying to build an artificial case on the basis of formalistic arguments which purposely ignore the fact that the new regime against which its complaint is directed has actually more than maintained total market access for MFN banana suppliers. The United States also purposely disregards the delicate balance which this new regime seeks to achieve between the interests of the MFN and the ACP suppliers.

(a) The United States cannot challenge the new EC banana import regime pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU

5.3 First, the ACP third parties submit that the United States' claim should be dismissed because the United States failed to request consultations prior to requesting the establishment of the Panel while it is a prerequisite to all dispute settlement proceedings pursuant to the DSU. The Panel should not give effect to an agreement reached between the parties to dispense with consultations. Indeed, consultations play an important due process role not only with respect to the parties but also to the third parties, who are explicitly granted the right to request to join consultations pursuant to Article 4.11 of the DSU if they have a substantial trade interest in consultations being held. The ACP third parties have a specific interest in the present case given that they are the beneficiaries of the preference which is challenged by the United States and will therefore be directly affected by the findings of the Panel. The lack of consultations is therefore particularly detrimental to the ACP.

5.4 Second, the United States cannot have recourse to Article 21.5 proceedings to challenge the new EC banana import regime as a compliance issue of the Bananas III case due to the fact that the mutually agreed solution between the United States and the European Communities in the form of an "Understanding on Bananas" has resolved that dispute and therefore constitutes a bar to Article 21.5 proceedings. In addition, the Understanding is a binding international agreement. Its parties in good faith cannot put its terms into question thereafter. Consequently, the existence of the Understanding constitutes a bar to Article 21.5 proceedings. If the United States considers that the new EC banana import regime is inconsistent with the WTO obligations, it should start new dispute settlement proceedings.

5.5 Third, the new EC banana import regime is not a "measure taken to comply" with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in the original Bananas III dispute within the meaning of Article 21.5. Indeed, the measure being challenged in this case is not clearly connected to the Panel and Appellate Body reports in the original case, both in time and with respect to the subject-matter. There are two main reasons why it is not clearly connected with respect to the subject-matter. First, the new EC banana import regime which is challenged is a completely new regime for the importation of bananas: being a tariff-only regime it has nothing to do with the quota regime examined in the original Bananas III dispute. Second, the new regime is not a measure taken to comply with the DSB recommendations and rulings but to implement the commitments undertaken by the European Communities under the Doha Waiver and the Understandings on Bananas with the United States and Ecuador. These legal instruments came into existence after the original Bananas III dispute and they have modified the balance of rights and obligations for the WTO Members. The legality of the new EC banana import regime can therefore only be examined in new dispute settlement proceedings taking into account these new legal instruments.

(b) There is no violation of GATT Article I because the Doha Waiver still applies

5.6 The United States' argument that the Doha Waiver is no longer valid is based on the view that the existence of two arbitration awards concluding that the EC rebinding proposals were not such as to maintain total market access to MFN suppliers has automatically led to the waiver ceasing to apply upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime. The proposed interpretation is purely procedural and formalistic, and it fails to take account of the object and purpose of the Doha Waiver and the factual situation in the present case.

5.7 The purpose of the Doha Waiver is to allow the implementation of the Cotonou Agreement and, in particular, the preferential tariff treatment granted by the European Communities to products originating in the ACP countries until 31 December 2007. The Annex to the Doha Waiver expressly indicates that with respect to bananas, the waiver will apply until 31 December 2007. Only if the European Communities fails to implement a new banana import regime which at least maintains total market access for MFN suppliers, will the waiver cease to apply prior to 31 December 2007.

5.8 This is not the case. The new EC banana import regime which entered into force on 1 January 2006 maintains and even improves the market access for MFN suppliers. Indeed, all available market data indisputably demonstrate that the competitive position of MFN bananas on the EC market has improved both in terms of volume and price since the introduction of the new EC banana import regime. The import volume of MFN bananas significantly increased in 2006 and this has been reinforced in 2007. The abolition of the quota licensing system has resulted in cost savings which more than compensate for the perceived increase in import duty arising from the introduction of the new flat tariff of €176 per ton. In addition, the new regime has opened the EC market for new entrants, and higher prices have been paid to producers in the MFN countries even though wholesale prices in the European Communities remained stable or even decreased.

5.9 As a result, the new EC regime has indisputably not just maintained but indeed improved total market access for MFN suppliers. It is thus not possible to cogently argue that the waiver has ceased to apply on purely procedural grounds as submitted by the US.

5.10 In addition, it must be taken into consideration that the ACP third parties were not allowed to fully participate in the arbitration proceedings. This significantly reduced their opportunities to defend their positions. The fact that in the first arbitration the Arbitrator ignored crucial ACP arguments had an unfortunate effect on the way the issues were addressed in the second arbitration and hence may have had a decisive impact on its final outcome. The finding in the second arbitration that the European Communities had not rectified the matter should not override the undeniable fact that the new implemented banana import regime effectively improves total MFN market access.

(c) There is no violation of GATT Article XIII

5.11 The United States argues that the new EC banana import regime violates GATT Article XIII because the ACP countries are granted a preferential tariff quota which the MFN countries cannot benefit from. This argument must be discarded.

5.12 There cannot be any violation of GATT Article XIII:1 and Article XIII:2 since the new EC banana import regime does not contain any prohibition or quantitative restriction within the meaning of GATT Article XIII:1. A fortiori, no such measure is imposed on MFN suppliers.

5.13 What the United States is challenging is not the limitation placed on the quantity of duty-free bananas imported from the ACP countries but the preferential duty which is granted to these countries. The absence of restrictions on MFN suppliers distinguishes the present case from the Bananas III case. As this issue is a tariff issue only, it is not the object of GATT Article XIII but of GATT Article I.

5.14 The United States makes much of the alleged acknowledgment by the European Communities of the need for an article XIII waiver. This argument is misguided as the European Communities has demonstrated, for instance through the implementation of the "Everything But Arms", that it does not consider such a waiver necessary where the restriction is on the tariff preference. The United States actually also applies limits to some of its GSP concessions.

5.15 In addition, the fact that the European Communities applied for an Article XIII waiver should not be taken as showing that they believe that one was actually needed. It is evident from a reading of the two awards of the arbitrator that the European Communities' application for an Article XIII waiver was made purely for procedural reasons. Had the application not been made, the Arbitrator would have been unable to take account of the tariff rate quota in his second award without stepping outside the narrow remit he had been given and adjudicating on the question of whether preferential tariff rate quotas require Article XIII waivers.

5.16 In addition, the cap on the quantity of bananas which can be imported duty-free from the ACP countries to the European Communities has been introduced in order to address the MFN concerns with respect to an unlimited preferential access granted to the ACP countries.

5.17 In conclusion, on the basis of the above arguments, the ACP third parties respectfully request the Panel to reject Ecuador's challenge to the European Communities' new banana import regime.

B. BELIZE

1. Oral statement of Belize

5.18 I want to add Belize's voice in full support of the statement made by the Ministers of Cameroon and Suriname who spoke on behalf of the ACP third parties. I want to also support the statements made by the Ministers for St. Lucia and for St Vincent. Belize also associates itself with the presentations made by the European Communities in its oral and written submissions in this case.

5.19 Allow me to add the following. The United States, as indeed MFN countries, fully supported the waiver granted for the European Communities to provide preferential tariff treatment to ACP countries as required by the Cotonou Agreement. Especially relevant to this case is Protocol 5 on Bananas, also known as the Second Banana Protocol, in which the European Communities undertakes to "take measures aimed at ensuring the continued viability of their banana export industries and the continuing outlet for their bananas on the Community market". How else could this commitment be fulfilled other than the granting of a trade preference? And as current market trends eloquently demonstrate, the preference would need to be at least its current level.

5.20 The statistics already show that MFN countries are now enjoying better market access than they did in the past.

5.21 Belize also wants to express its grave disappointment. One cannot help but be dismayed to witness the United States – whose people through history have been known to fight injustice – initiating this case against the smallest and most vulnerable economies of the world.

5.22 It is regrettable, because the United States is not seeking to export bananas to the European Communities. In the previous US challenge they were protecting the interests of their service suppliers who they felt were suffering discrimination in the allocation of licenses. Belize regretted that attack but at least could understand it. But now the issue of licences for the import of MFN bananas within a tariff quota has disappeared. No violation of GATS has even been alleged in this case and still the United States is attacking the European Communities' efforts through its banana regime to meet its commitments to vulnerable ACP suppliers.

5.23 The Chairman yesterday asked whether Panama, Nicaragua and the United States believe that the European Communities as a net importer of bananas have standing to bring a similar case. The Chairman questioned whether a threshold was necessary for a member of the WTO to participate in dispute settlement proceedings. There is such a provision as regards third party participation – which is having a substantial trade interest. Surely it would be anomalous to apply a lesser test to a country wishing to be a complainant.

5.24 Belize has never been a complainant in any WTO dispute settlement proceeding principally because it does not have the resources to pursue its trade interests through such direct and costly means. It has, however, participated as a third party in cases which significantly impact the livelihood of thousands of its people. How could it explain to its citizens that the way the dispute settlement system works is that rich and powerful countries can initiate dispute settlement proceedings in cases where their interests are not directly affected, whilst it may only participate as third parties only where it has a major trading interest.

5.25 This delegation must stress that a US victory in this Panel will not hurt the European Communities. No, the direct impact will be the damage to economies of ACP third parties, where employment and livelihoods would suffer yet another blow, as they always have, after every amendment to the European market regime for bananas to attempt to appease the United States and other complainants.

5.26 How else should Belize interpret the complainant's motive, other than a conscious attempt to champion the cause of multinational companies over the interest of poor people in the ACP countries? This is all the more dismaying when in other contexts the United States has made clear that it recognizes the need for targeted preferences to address the needs of vulnerable countries.

5.27 The United States obtained what it wanted from their Understanding with the European Communities. Part of the ACP quota was transferred to the MFN quota which, together with other detailed changes in the regime, increased the number of licenses allocated to US related service suppliers. This was at the cost of the ACP. Now, having extracted their pound of flesh, they want another pound. Belize trusts that the panelists will prove to be Daniels come to judgment.

C. CAMEROON

1. Oral statement of Cameroon

(a) This dispute is of primary importance for the ACP countries

5.28 Cameroon wishes to underline the primary importance of this dispute for the ACP countries. The latter are the beneficiaries of the European Communities' preference granted within the framework of the Cotonou Agreement. This preference applies to a number of products originating in the ACP countries, including bananas. It is this preference for bananas which the United States is challenging today. Consequently, it is clear that the decision to be taken by this Panel will have a direct impact on the ACP countries. If the Panel were to agree with the United States, the consequences for the ACP countries would be disastrous.

5.29 As the Panel is aware, the banana sector is essential for the ACP countries and its continuity depends on maintaining preferential access to the Community's market.

5.30 Indeed, the banana sector is essential for ACP countries' social and economic development and it helps to protect the environment. Bananas account for a large share of the ACP countries' agricultural exports. Hundreds of thousands of jobs have been created thanks to this sector. The introduction of regular shipping lines for the transport of bananas each week has made a significant contribution towards opening up the economies of these countries. The existence of these regular shipping lines has allowed the ACP countries to export other goods to Europe and, in return, to import goods essential for development and the daily lives of their populations. The banana sector therefore plays a key role in the fight against poverty and destitution.

5.31 Preferential access to the European Communities' market is essential to ensure the vitality of the banana sector in the ACP countries. It is in fact well known that the ACP banana producers are less competitive than the MFN producers. In comparison with the latter, the ACP producers have higher production costs. For geographical and historical reasons, they do not have the same economies of scale as the MFN producers. Furthermore, the ACP producers can only compete with them in markets to which they have preferential access. Proof of this is that even the Caribbean ACP countries, which are situated on the doorstep of the United States, are unable to compete with MFN producers on the North American market. The absence of preferential access and higher cost structures prevent ACP producers from entering the United States market. As the European Communities constitute the only major banana market to offer preferential access, the ACP countries are entirely dependent on it.

5.32 It is easy to see what is at stake for the ACP countries in this dispute. If preferential access to the Communities' market for ACP bananas should be further eroded, or even disappear, this would have disastrous consequences for countries where bananas are the principal economic resource.

- (b) United States trade is not affected by the Community's new regime for the importation of bananas

5.33 Cameroon wishes to draw the Panel's attention to the absence of any harm to United States trade caused by the contested Community regime for the importation of bananas.

5.34 It is surprising that the United States has embarked upon this action in the present case against the new Community's regime for the importation of bananas when its trade is in no way affected by this new import regime. Indeed, the United States has not been deprived of any opportunities to export bananas because of this regime as it does not produce more than a tiny fraction of its consumption of bananas and only has token exports of bananas to the European Communities.

- (c) The United States is attacking a preference granted to developing countries even though it is not suffering any negative consequences from it and it had accepted the principle of the preference

5.35 Thirdly, it is a matter of concern and even of dismay for ACP countries to note that one of the richest countries on the planet, namely the United States, does not hesitate to attack an import regime because it grants preferential access to developing countries even though the United States is not suffering any negative consequences because of this import regime, as previously emphasized.

5.36 It should be recalled that on a number of occasions the United States has accepted the principle that it was justified to give a preference for ACP bananas. First of all, it accepted this principle in the Memorandum of Understanding on Bananas concluded with the European Communities in April 2001. At Doha, the United States also supported the European Communities' request for a waiver from Article 1 of the GATT to cover the ACP preference.

5.37 More generally, the legitimacy of the preference as a development tool has been recognized at the World Trade Organization. It is hardly necessary to recall, in this regard, the preamble to the Agreement Establishing the World Trade Organization, which provides that the parties to this Agreement have recognized "that there is a need for positive efforts designed to ensure that developing countries, and especially the least developed among them, secure a share in the growth in international trade commensurate with the needs of their economic development". In fact, many WTO Members, including the United States itself, use preferential tariffs to encourage development objectives. Thus, the MFN countries benefit from improved preferential access in sectors where they are not the dominant producers under the European Communities' Generalized System of Preferences (GSP). The Cotonou Agreement, and in particular, the regime for the importation of bananas, were and should be considered in this spirit, that is to say with the aim of providing trade opportunities for the weaker actors in the market such as the ACP banana producers. The Doha decision granting a waiver for the implementation of the Cotonou Agreement recognized this, underlining the following in its preambular paragraphs: "the [Cotonou] Agreement is aimed at improving the standard of living and economic development of the ACP States, including the least developed among them".

- (d) The United States cannot question a preference which it accepted in the Memorandum of Understanding

5.38 Fourthly, Cameroon would like to underline the fact that the United States cannot question a preference when it has accepted it in the Memorandum of Understanding signed with the European Communities.

5.39 The United States attacks this new EC regime for the importation of bananas, established and implemented in accordance with the agreement concluded between the United States and the European Communities in April 2001. In this agreement, in order to resolve the initial Bananas III case, each of the parties accepted a certain number of concessions. Thus, the United States accepted that it would support the request to maintain the Doha Waiver until 31 December 2007 and would terminate its suspension of concessions and, in return, the European Communities undertook to introduce a tariff-only regime as of 1 January 2006 at the latest and to increase the tariff quota for the MFN bananas in transitional stages. Thus, the B tariff quota open to MFN producers was increased by 100,000 tonnes, from 353,000 tonnes to 453,000 tonnes. This increase was carried out at the expense of the ACP countries, whose tariff rate quota was reduced by an equivalent amount, from 850,000 tonnes to 750,000 tonnes. Moreover, the ACP quota, which was originally restricted to traditional ACP suppliers, now had to be shared with non-traditional suppliers, bearing in mind that imports from non-traditional ACP suppliers had previously been included under the MFN quota. This had the effect of increasing the quota available to MFN countries by a further 100,000 tonnes, also at the expense of the ACP countries.

5.40 The European Communities and the ACP countries, as beneficiaries of the preferential access, have therefore had to pay a high price in order to maintain the Doha Waiver until the end of this year. Because of this, a certain number of banana producers and exporters in the ACP countries have disappeared following these changes, which have seen the preferential access eroded.

5.41 The United States operators have benefited from the concessions granted and implemented by the European Communities in conformity with the Memorandum of Understanding on bananas concluded with the United States and have taken advantage of it. The United States cannot today question the tariff preference envisaged in this agreement when it has benefited from the agreement. The United States current action, which challenges the preference, is thus abusive and illegitimate. Furthermore, it is illegal, in the sense that the United States expressly accepted the preference in this agreement binding the parties.

(e) The United States cannot challenge the Community import regime for bananas pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU

5.42 Cameroon would like to stress a fifth reason, which will be developed in more detail by the Distinguished Minister of Agriculture of Suriname, Mr Raghoebarsing, in his oral statement. It concerns the inadmissibility of the action initiated by the United States.

5.43 First of all, the failure to request consultations and the absence of consultations constitute a cause of inadmissibility as these are a prerequisite prior to any request for establishment of a panel.

5.44 Then, raising this matter under Article 21.5, the United States deliberately ignores the scope of the Memorandum of Understanding concluded with the European Communities, a Memorandum that brought the initial dispute to an end and, accordingly, prevents any recourse to a Panel set up Article 21.5.

5.45 Finally, the measure contested, that is to say the new Community regime for the importation of bananas, is not a measure taken in order to comply with the recommendations and decisions of the DSB pursuant to Article 21.5. Accordingly, the United States cannot use these grounds to claim recourse to a Panel constituted pursuant to Article 21.5.

(f) The United States completely ignores the way the market has developed

5.46 Lastly, Cameroon would like to underline the fact that the United States fails to take into account the way the market has developed. It has ignored the fact that the new Community banana import regime it is challenging has not only maintained but even significantly improved market access for MFN bananas.

5.47 In its written submissions, the United States ignores, or feigns to ignore the delicate balance that the new Community regime for the importation of bananas has attempted to establish between the legitimate interests of both the ACP and MFN countries, that is to say a tariff-only system that maintains total market access for MFN bananas while at the same time offering viable preferential access to ACP producers. Indeed, the United States remains silent regarding the fact that the European Communities' new import regime for bananas has not only maintained but also significantly improved market access for MFN bananas, going beyond the European Communities' commitments in the Doha Waiver.

5.48 Indeed, the statistics available show that since the introduction of the new Community regime for the importation of bananas the competitive position of MFN bananas on the Community market has improved both in terms of export volume and the prices paid to MFN producers.

5.49 Firstly, the application of the new tariff regime has led to a substantial and continuing upward trend in imports from the MFN countries. Imports from MFN countries rose by 325,270 tonnes in 2006 compared with 2005. And they rose by a further 201,435 tonnes during the first eight months of 2007 compared to the same period in 2006, and by 366,389 tonnes compared to the same period in 2005. This increase in 2007 thus shows not only that the increase in the volume of bananas imported from MFN countries continued but that it even accelerated.

5.50 This rapid increase in 2006, which accelerated in 2007, shows that the European Communities has amply met the objective of maintaining market access for MFN suppliers and even improved it. In other words, these market data show that the flat tariff of €176 per tonne in the current banana import regime is too low and that the MFN market access could have been maintained by imposing a higher tariff rate than that currently imposed by the EC.

5.51 It is interesting to note from a detailed analysis of the statistics that most of the MFN suppliers have decreased their exports to the United States while increasing them to the European Communities.

5.52 Secondly, the wholesale prices of MFN bananas remained the same or even decreased following the introduction of the new regime, thus showing that the introduction of €176 per tonne duty, without any volume restriction, has not had the effect of deteriorating the conditions for access to the Community market for MFN suppliers. Moreover, the price fluctuations over the year are fairly similar to those for previous years, showing that the new tariff has not upset price trends in the market.

5.53 It is interesting to note that the main beneficiaries of the new Community regime are the small producers in the MFN exporting countries, who have repeatedly expressed their satisfaction at the new opportunities afforded by the new regime. For the first time, they no longer depend on a few intermediaries which control import licences. The opening of the market to new importers and the increased competition among buyers for the bananas available have also made it possible for local producers to charge higher prices.

5.54 Finally, the liberalization brought about by the abolition of the import licensing system has created new opportunities for MFN exporters. For instance, Guatemala, Peru and Brazil, which in recent years had only been supplying small quantities increased their exports to the European Communities sharply following the entry into force of the new regime.

5.55 The above market data can only lead to one conclusion: the new EC import regime has significantly improved MFN access to the EC market thanks to the elimination of the tariff quota and, hence, the quota rent. How could one otherwise explain that the introduction of an allegedly higher import duty has resulted in increased import volumes while wholesale prices have remained stable and the prices paid to local banana producers have increased? Obviously, the apparent tariff increase resulting from the replacement of the €75 per tonne duty applicable to a limited quota by an €176 per tonne duty on unlimited volumes has been more than absorbed by the cost savings resulting from the abolition of the licensing system.

5.56 The substantive conditions for maintaining in force the Doha Waiver covering the ACP preference concerning bananas until 31 December 2007 have consequently been met.

(g) Conclusion

5.57 To conclude the United States is seeking, through its action, to bring into question the European Communities' preference granted to the ACP countries in accordance with the Memorandum of Understanding which they concluded with the United States and the Doha Waiver.

5.58 As Cameroon has shown, this action is first of all abusive inasmuch as the United States did not hesitate to present the problem brought before the Panel as a question of conformity with the initial Bananas III dispute, which it is not.

5.59 This action by the United States, one of the richest countries in the world, is also disputable inasmuch as it does not hesitate to bring into question the preference granted by the European Communities to the ACP countries a preference which has development aims, even though the United States itself does not suffer any harm as a result of that preference. It is clear that there is a certain illegitimacy in the United States' action and the ACP countries would like to underline this.

5.60 This action is also abusive to the extent that the United States does not acknowledge that the European Communities have rectified their proposal following the arbitration in November 2005, by lowering the tariff rate.

5.61 Finally, the United States is attacking the new Community regime for the importation of bananas on the basis of purely formalistic arguments and completely ignores the way the market has developed, which shows the beneficial effect that the new regime has had and continues to have for MFN countries.

5.62 In 2006 alone, imports of MFN bananas increased by over 10 per cent. Many new and smaller producers are no longer hampered by a licensing system that was the monopoly of a few large companies and were therefore able to enter the Community market, thereby diversifying its sources of supply. Moreover, they have seen their income increase as the prices paid to the MFN producers are higher. European consumers have also benefited from the new regime. Prices have remained stable, or even decreased, making bananas the cheapest fruit available to European consumers. All this shows that the European Communities fully met their obligations when they introduced the new import regime for bananas in 2006 inasmuch as the new regime has more than maintained market access for MFN banana suppliers. The United States case should therefore be dismissed.

D. CÔTE D'IVOIRE

1. Oral statement of Côte d'Ivoire

5.63 Côte d'Ivoire enjoys friendly relations with the United States, as with the rest of the community of nations, as well as many forms of cooperation that are mutually beneficial but even more so for Côte d'Ivoire. Côte d'Ivoire intends to intensify and consolidate its cooperation with the United States in order to benefit still further from its economic and commercial strength and its status as an exemplary democracy.

5.64 However, in the EC – Bananas III dispute, on behalf of Côte d'Ivoire and a number of other countries concerned by this case, I would like to question the legitimacy of the involvement and interest of the United States in this dispute.

5.65 Does the United States have a substantial economic interest? The answer is clearly no. In 2005, the United States reported production²³⁸ of barely 9,500 tonnes of bananas in the State of Hawaii and over the past three years had exported between 3 and 20 tonnes to the European Union.

5.66 The banana trees to be seen here and there on American territory are simply ornamental plants and are in no way intended to produce bananas.

5.67 Obviously, the United States' motive is to protect the interests of its companies engaged in the industry or, at least, to protect the interests of a multinational known to the actors in the international banana trade.

5.68 This motive is not recent as, in a letter dated May 2001 addressed to Mr Pascal Lamy, then European Commissioner for Trade, Mr Robert Zoellick was concerned, above all, to check whether the new regime for distributing import licences would satisfy the operators concerned.²³⁹

5.69 Echoing this concern, thus expressed by the American Trade Representative, a statement from the company Chiquita welcomed the new regime for distributing import licences.²⁴⁰ This provides the basis for an answer to the two questions which asked yesterday by the Chairman, namely "why there was a delay between signing the Agreement of April 2001 and its notification?" and "regarding the nature of the USA's interest in this matter?"

5.70 Had the European Communities disregarded a legal text that was so important that the United States, even though it has not suffered damage, finds it necessary to champion its defence? In other words, in attacking the basis of the validity of the waiver from which the ACP countries benefit, the United States is presenting itself as the standard bearer of the law.

5.71 How to explain therefore that the United States, which is anxious to help African countries on the road to growth and development, introduced the mechanisms under the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA) from 2000 without requesting a waiver from the WTO at the time of their adoption, which might have been the subject of a dispute?

5.72 Indeed, in February 2005, the United States did formally request a waiver from the WTO, a request which was not granted. However, this preferential treatment decided on by the United States without the agreement of the WTO continues to be applied.

5.73 Therefore, why is the United States applying this system of double standards?

5.74 In fact, the United States is prioritizing the interests of Latin American countries whereas it has been shown, in statistics from the USDA, that some of these countries were having difficulty in entering the American market, even with zero tariffs.

²³⁸ USDA Agricultural Statistics 2005, attached, <http://www.usda.gov/nass/pubs/agstats.htm>

²³⁹ Annex 3 in the first submission of the European Communities.

²⁴⁰ See attached (http://phx.corporate-ir.net/phoenix.zhtml?c=119836&p=irol-newsArticle_print&ID=165631&highlight=).

5.75 One therefore questions the under-performance of these Latin American countries on the United States market²⁴¹, even their failure, while at the same time they are developing their market share in the EU, paying the customs duty which is being criticized.

5.76 Indeed, the multinationals control the major share of the American market so it does not offer any opportunities for independent Latin American producers. On the other hand, the European market is still profitable for these MFN producers. There are two different concepts of trade here which clash. On the one hand, a laissez-faire attitude which benefits a few, i.e. the American market, and on the other, a market structured to benefit as many as possible, without distorting competition, i.e., the European market.

5.77 Observing the market ultimately remains the only viable way of validating the customs duty applied by the European Communities. The 2005 arbitrations showed the difficulty of agreeing international statistics or economic models. It is surely not by chance that the term "guidelines" was used in the Attachment to Annex 5 to the GATT Agreement on Agriculture in the context of the delicate process of "tariff agreements". Today, monitoring the European market shows that a duty of €176 does not allow the past equilibrium to be maintained. Since 1 January 2006 and up to the end of August this year, i.e. in 20 months, half a dozen MFN countries will have put an additional 520,000 tonnes on the European market, while the ACP countries are labouring to maintain past levels of exports to the European Union.

5.78 To be even more precise, it can be noted on the basis of the most recent Eurostat statistics²⁴², that in 2007, there was an increase of almost 25 per cent in imports from MFN countries. Over the first eight months of 2006, these countries exported 165,000 tonnes more than over the same period in 2005. In 2007, over the same period, the figure was 201,000 tonnes more than in 2006, i.e., an increase of 366,000 tonnes in two years. So who is fooled when it is stated that the new European import regime for bananas does not allow MFN producers continued access to the European Union's market? Côte d'Ivoire notes that the ACP countries have only seen an increase of 92 tonnes, that is right 92, in their exports compared with last year, and this was before the impact of the climate disasters which affected certain ACP countries was felt.

5.79 Côte d'Ivoire hereby solemnly reaffirms that the level of duty that the ACP countries, Members of the World Trade Organization, were denied the right to challenge during the 2005 arbitration, this duty of €176, is too low to maintain market access for ACP bananas.

5.80 The ACP country banana producers are going to be slowly squeezed out of the European market if this situation endures or will be brutally cut out if the situation is made worse as a result of the current negotiations, which aim to reduce still further the customs tariff. The attacks from this organized competition mean that the precarious balance in this economic sector is condemned. This situation will not even benefit consumers, as bananas are still the cheapest fruit available to consumers. Is this not in fact an anomaly? As for the Latin American producers, if the Community customs tariff is lowered still further they will be the first to lose out, selling to the highest bidder in a market which is oversupplied and controlled by a few big groups.

5.81 Finally, can it be concluded from the foregoing that, as far as trade in bananas is concerned, the United States is hostile towards the ACP countries? Surely not! Does it want to prevent them from trading with the European Union and thus upset their trade-based development? I refuse to reach such an extremely grave conclusion although one is tempted to do so even if it is clearly outside the competence of this Panel.

²⁴¹ See Annex on USDA Statistics, end of August 2007.

E. DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

1. Oral statement of the Dominican Republic

5.82 The Dominican Republic feels more than ever the need to stress how essential this case is for it, and in particular for the survival of the thousands of banana producers and growers that are fighting hard for the survival of the sector. It is increasingly aware of how difficult it is for poor and vulnerable island countries like the Dominican Republic to maintain and develop infant agricultural sectors, such as the banana sector, when year after year it is faced with natural disasters, for example the hurricanes and tropical storms that regularly ravage its islands.

5.83 At this very moment the Dominican Republic is having to face the devastation left by the passage of Tropical Storm Noel, which among other things has caused floods, death, infrastructural damage, and destruction of a large portion of the country's agricultural production, seriously damaging banana production. Once again, the Dominican Republic has witnessed the vulnerability and fragility of the Dominican economy and of the banana sector, which depends entirely on the preferential access granted by the European Union to the ACP countries, and which provides sustenance to thousands of Dominican families that are currently suffering from the damage caused by Noel.

5.84 It is unfortunate that the passage of Tropical Storm Noel through the Dominican Republic coincides with this Panel. Unfortunate because as the Dominican Republic confronts this tragic event, it is obliged to participate in a process in which it feels that it stands to lose most in case of an unfavourable ruling. This Panel was requested by a developed country, whose right to do so the Dominican Republic does not question; but its purpose is to eliminate tariff preferences that have been granted to a group of poor countries, the ACP countries, whose banana production has developed thanks to those very preferences granted by the EU under the Cotonou Agreement, without which the sector could neither compete nor indeed survive.

5.85 This situation is a source of considerable surprise and concern, particularly since these preferences area not directly causing the United States any adverse trade effects. On the other hand, any panel recommendation in favour of the United States would cause irreparable damage to the Dominican Republic and the other ACP countries.

5.86 Nor does the Dominican Republic understand what the United States is trying to gain by its recourse to Article 21.5 of the WTO DSU for alleged lack of compliance by the European Communities with the Banana III Panel Recommendations. This dispute was settled in April 2001 through the Understanding on Bananas between the United States and the European Communities, a mutually agreed solution involving commitments that have been met in full by the European Communities.

5.87 At the same time, the figures show that the European Communities has not only maintained access to its market for MFN exporters, but that that access has in fact substantially improved since the implementation of the new banana importation regime. For example, during 2006 and 2007 thus far, there has been a sustainable growth in the volume of MFN exports, showing that the new regime is consistent with the EU's WTO commitments.

5.88 Finally, like other ACP delegations, the Dominican Republic considers that these complaints should be rejected, and hopes that the Panel will take account of its arguments to ensure that the system of preferential access is not undermined, as this would be to the detriment of the ACP countries which are highly dependent on those preferences.

F. JAMAICA

1. Oral statement of Jamaica

5.89 In many ways this case conveys a strong feeling of deja vu for Jamaica, as bananas have had the dubious honour of featuring in far too many DSB proceedings. ACP banana exporters in particular, have borne the brunt of the negative rulings that have been made against the EC banana import regime.

5.90 On this occasion, however, there is a poignant difference in the nature of one of the principal elements surrounding this case. Indeed, Jamaica is unable to reconcile itself to the fact that the United States, the pre-eminent leader in the industrialized world, is seeking to challenge the new EC banana import regime that is meant to contribute to the sustainable economic growth and development of Jamaica and its sister developing States in the ACP. This is indeed a historic occasion, the first where a developed country has filed a complaint based purely on the preferential terms of access provided by the European Communities to vulnerable, developing ACP countries, which account for less than 20 per cent of the EU market.

5.91 Jamaica recognizes the right of any Member to have recourse to dispute settlement proceedings in pursuit of its genuine national interests. The rules of the DSU must be observed by all Members and the way in which they are interpreted must be such that due process is available to all – even ACP countries with their very limited resources.

5.92 Jamaica strongly objects to the clear manipulation of DSU procedures in this case. It will not restate what has already been said by other ACP third parties in their statements - on the need for consultations before having recourse to Article 21.5 proceedings and the improper nature of the recourse to such proceedings in the present circumstances – but would underscore the importance of the matters before the Panel, in light of the systemic issues raised and the implications thereof, which go beyond the present proceedings. Jamaica is also duly reminded of the interests of certain major multinational corporations which dominate the market.

5.93 One of the significant issues before this panel – with implications far beyond the immediate proceedings - which Jamaica feels compelled to address, is the argument relating to GATT Article XIII that has been advanced by the United States. It raises an important systemic issue, namely, whether the limitation or cap placed on a preferential tariff granted to some WTO Members, requires an Article XIII waiver, as well as a further Article I waiver.

5.94 Under the new EC Banana regime which provides for unlimited MFN supplies at a flat tariff, the limits placed on ACP duty-free access were clearly designed not to benefit but rather to constrain the ACP, and have been demonstrated to provide considerable benefit to the MFN countries. They have been introduced by the European Communities specifically to address MFN suppliers' concerns with regard to the prospect of an unlimited duty-free tariff access for ACP countries. How can the limits placed on ACP preferential access covered by Article I of the GATT be considered as a restriction on the MFN banana exports to the EC? The cap of 775, 000 tons is simply a limit placed on the tariff preference granted to ACP countries in the context of an MFN regime providing for unlimited access at the basic flat tariff.

5.95 What is being argued is that a Member that has an Article I waiver and is hence entitled to grant an unlimited tariff preference, is in breach of Article XIII if it limits that preference. It is clear from Bananas III that if that member limits both MFN and preferential suppliers by TRQs, this can give rise to a violation of Article XIII if the sharing of the market between MFN and preferential suppliers does not conform to the normal pattern of trade. That was the situation during the first and second phases of the implementation of the EC/US Understanding, which was why the European Communities needed an Article XIII waiver. But since 1 January 2006, MFN access has been unlimited. Only ACP preferential access has been limited and the TRQ that imposes that limitation is not shared between individual ACP suppliers. So there is no question of the TRQ being applied in a way that distorts the normal pattern of trade as between the individual preferential suppliers. There is also no distortion in the pattern of trade between ACP and MFN supplies beyond that which arises from the granting of the tariff preference.

5.96 It has also been clearly demonstrated throughout these proceedings that the new EC Banana Regime has not only maintained, but has actually improved total market access for MFN exporters. The trade statistics for 2006 and the first eight (8) months of 2007 are undeniable; MFN banana exporters have never before experienced such an enabling environment for the sale and distribution of their produce in the European market. Indeed, they have repeatedly acknowledged this at various levels and in different fora. In the face of this, what considerations could give rise to the United States invoking dispute settlement proceedings against a regime which is obviously beneficial to all interested Parties and is in full conformity with WTO rules?

5.97 For many countries, particularly the small producers in the Caribbean, bananas have been extremely important to agricultural and overall economic development. In Jamaica's case, bananas fall within its top five (5) export items and in 2006 accounted for US$13.4 million in export revenue. Jamaica is therefore deeply distressed and disappointed that the United States, contrary to its support for special and differential treatment for developing countries in the WTO, should now bring an action that would seek to nullify the benefit of such treatment, in the context of the EC banana import regime.

5.98 The case before us has many parallels to the biblical story of David and Goliath. Like David, the vulnerable ACP banana exporting economies are called upon to defend a fundamental element of their existence against the vastly superior resources of the United States, in the challenging environment of the WTO dispute settlement process. Jamaica is satisfied that in these proceedings, ACP third parties and EC partners have delivered compelling arguments regarding the inadmissible basis for the United States' challenge to the new EC banana import regime. Jamaica therefore urges the Panel, to adopt a position that will demonstrate that developing countries can continue to have confidence in a process that upholds equity and transparency.

G. SAINT LUCIA

1. Oral statement of Saint Lucia

5.99 The initiation of WTO dispute settlement proceedings challenging the preferential access given to vulnerable ACP countries, must cause some concern as to whether the US Government simply engages in the pursuance of what it perceives to be its interests, at any cost, with no thought given to the consequences of its action, especially on those with whom it claims, "there is a commonness of interest and purpose".

5.100 Sadly, even while sympathetic words were being uttered by these officials at the highest level, action that would result in the erosion of production stability and the capacity to export Saint Lucian bananas, were being pursued. Bananas are the lifeblood of Saint Lucia's small economy, providing its most important export, a key source of employment and facilitates the regular arrival of ships that bring essential supplies as well as transporting Saint Lucia's bananas to Europe.

5.101 When the European Communities first established a common regime for bananas in 1993, it had as one of its key objectives, the integration of traditional ACP banana suppliers to specific EC countries into the single European market. The regime that was established in 1993 was based on a TRQ for MFN suppliers and specific TRQs for each of the traditional ACP suppliers. Saint Lucia's

TRQ was set at 127,000 tonnes, the level of its traditional trade. TRQs create quota rent and, at the time of the conclusion of the Uruguay Round, the MFN banana suppliers obtained, through the bananas framework agreement, specific shares of the MFN quota, so that they could share in that quota rent. But the banana regime and the framework agreement were not acceptable to Ecuador and Panama, two banana supplying countries who joined the WTO after the framework agreement was concluded. Banana importing companies who were established in the European Communities but had headquarters in the United States, were upset by the transfer to the supplying countries, of some of the quota rent from which they had been benefiting as holders of licences based on their historic performance. The United States therefore joined forces with the discontented MFN suppliers and brought the case now known as Bananas III.

5.102 As a result of losing Bananas III, the European Communities made a number of changes to its bananas regime, the most important of which, from the perspective of St Lucia, was that it abandoned the individual TRQs for individual ACP supplying countries and opened instead a TRQ for all the traditional ACP suppliers together. The European Communities was also forced by Bananas III to give up the allocation of parts of the MFN TRQ to members of the bananas framework agreement. However, the changes were not sufficient to satisfy the United States and Ecuador, and Ecuador won a compliance panel that ruled that the European Communities' new regime was still not in conformity with its WTO obligations.

5.103 The United States had already decided that the European Communities was not in conformity and introduced sanctions against the European Communities. All remember the crisis that this caused in the WTO. The European Communities challenged the level of the sanctions and the arbitrators decided that the European Communities was still not in conformity and also the level of the sanctions the United States could apply. Under pressure from these sanctions, the European Communities was forced to exact a price from the ACP in concluding agreements with the United States and with Ecuador.

5.104 The main purpose and effect of the agreement with the United States, which served as a model for the subsequent agreement with Ecuador, was to increase the number of licences allocated to importers linked to two US multinational companies. This was achieved by reducing the quantity of licences reserved for newcomers and transferring 100,000 tonnes of quota from the ACP to the MFN TRQ. Licences are the key to quota rent, so the effect of the agreement was to transfer additional sums of money to the companies concerned until 1 January 2006, when, under the agreements, the European Communities was to replace the TRQ system with a flat tariff.

5.105 The level of the flat tariff has never been seen as a matter in which the United States have any legitimate interest. The MFN countries succeeded in negotiating a safeguard on the level of the flat tariff in return for their acceptance of the waivers needed to implement the banana regime in the way that was envisaged in the Agreements with the United States and Ecuador. This included a provision allowing any interested party – meaning by this a country that exported bananas to the European Communities – to demand arbitration on whether the envisaged level of the tariff would at least maintain total MFN access. The United States had no right to take part in that arbitration and did not do so. The question the arbitrator was to determine was whether the envisaged tariff would at least maintain MFN access. It should be noted, that a tariff that met that test, would not necessarily be damaging to the ACP, as it could be one that also maintained ACP access and this is certainly the goal Saint Lucia expected the European Communities to aim at when it set the level of the flat tariff.

5.106 In the end, the European Communities failed to persuade the arbitrator that either of the tariffs it proposed, in two successive arbitrations, would maintain total MFN access. The European Communities therefore introduced a tariff of €176/tonne, somewhat lower than the €187/tonne that it had proposed in the second arbitration. With that tariff, MFN imports rose by about 10 per cent in 2006, and they have continued to rise in 2007.

5.107 I cannot believe that if the arbitrator had been able to foresee this, he would have ruled against the second, or even perhaps the first of the European Communities' proposals. Had he accepted either of these proposals, the present case would never have arisen. But some would say that this is just the consequence of the rules based system. The job of an advocate is to defend his client's case, and the mark of an excellent advocate is that he can make the weaker case seem to be the stronger. The judge or arbitrator can only judge on the basis of the arguments he or she hears. It's a fair game. But the people who stood to lose the most in this game were not allowed to play in it. The farmers of Saint Lucia cannot come to Geneva to defend their livelihoods. They have to rely on their representatives, and, in the case of the arbitration, even their representatives were not allowed to take part, other than through their contribution to a short joint statement made on behalf of the ACP as a whole. The case was lost essentially on two points. First, the arbitrator paid no attention to what the ACP said in the first arbitration about the erroneous way the European Communities had measured the external price. And then, when in its second proposal the European Communities corrected the mistake it had made over the external price, it was too late. Second, the arbitrator did not recognize the importance of the quota rent, nor see that the quota rent within the ACP quota could be different from that within the MFN quota. So he attached undue importance to the difference between the €75/tonne in quota tariff and the ACP preferential rate of zero, and neglected the protection afforded by the out-of-quota tariff of €80/tonne, which was the source of the quota rent.

5.108 The result of these various changes that the European Communities has been forced to make in its banana regime has been disastrous for Saint Lucia. Compared with its traditional quantity, as set out in the initial regime of 127,000 tonnes, the amount Saint Lucia exported to the European Communities last year was only 37,000 tonnes. It will be far lower this year, as a result of an exceptionally violent hurricane. Hurricanes are, however something Saint Lucia expects to suffer from time to time. Saint Lucia recognizes that it has had to accept the changes the European Communities has been forced to make as a result of the various cases referred to above. What Saint Lucia never expected was the current case brought by the United States. When the elephants fight, the grass gets trampled. Saint Lucia has been suffering and continues to suffer from the results of this elephant fight between the European Communities and the United States. In this case the preference provided to vulnerable ACP countries are not merely collateral damage but unbelievably the principal complaint of the United States against the EC.

5.109 For the very first time, the United States, a developed country, is doing something that, to the best of Saint Lucia's knowledge no other developed country has ever done and is challenging a preference given by another developed country. They are doing this not in order to defend US exports, but in the interests of multinational companies who, as the United States accept, are not in any way discriminated against by the current EC regime. If they were subject to discrimination, no doubt, the United States would have brought a case under the GATS.

5.110 Of course, the companies concerned, in their capacity as importers, have to pay the tariff. But economic theory predicts that the cost of the tariff will ultimately be passed on to the EC consumers and to a lesser extent on MFN suppliers. What these companies have lost is the quota rent. But this is not the result of the particular level of tariff that is being applied. It is the inevitable result of the switch from a TRQ system to a flat tariff. This is something that was specifically provided for in the agreement the United States signed with the European Communities.

5.111 Saint Lucia recognizes that these same companies have investments in MFN countries and thus may share in the objective of the MFN countries. This ambition appears to be, to move from an 80 per cent share of the EC import market to 100 per cent. Even if this may be the ambition of the multinational companies, it is not one that the United States can take up, because, under the rules of the WTO, tariff concessions are granted by importing members to exporting members. It is not granted to Members in whose territory multinationals, who have export or production businesses in other member countries are registered.

5.112 Therefore, Saint Lucia is deeply shocked that the United States is claiming that the European Communities is in breach of Article I of the GATT and hence challenging the preference granted by the European Communities. Saint Lucia strongly supports the arguments that have been advanced both by the European Communities and by Cameroon which demonstrate that the European Communities has amply satisfied the substantive condition of the waiver, that its tariff regime should at least maintain total MFN access and hence that the waiver granted at Doha still exists.

5.113 Even more shocking and surprising is the United States' claim that the European Communities is in breach of Article XIII. In making this claim, the United States has apparently been prepared not only to espouse the interests of the multinational banana companies, but also to employ their legal arguments, even where these conflict with those that the US Government holds in other contexts. What the United States is claiming in this case, is that even if the European Communities does have an Article I waiver, it is still in conflict with its WTO obligations, because it limits the preference it grants to the preferential suppliers.

5.114 In other words, any WTO Member that has an Article I waiver that permits it to grant an unlimited preference, is in breach of its WTO obligations, if it does less than it is entitled and subjects that preference to a limit. If the United States believes this, then on what basis does it set limits to some of its GSP concessions, whose WTO legitimacy rests only on the Enabling Clause? If any WTO Member really believes this, why did WTO Members unanimously adopt paragraph 42 of the Fourth WTO Ministerial Conference, which included the sentence "We commit ourselves to the objective of duty free and quota free market access for products originating in the least developed countries".

5.115 The objective of duty free access had already been adopted at the First WTO Ministerial Conference. The Fourth Conference plainly intended to offer more. But the only waiver that underpins special preferential access for the least developed countries is the Enabling Clause and this only covers Article I.

5.116 So if the arguments the United States has advanced before this panel are correct, the addition of "and quota free" was a cruel joke that purported to offer the least developed countries more than what they were offered at the first Ministerial Conference, but in fact meant the same thing. Saint Lucia believes that the cruel joke began at Seattle, the WTO Ministerial that the United States themselves chaired. Because it was there that the words that were later adopted at Doha were first envisaged – at the suggestion of no lesser authority than the then Director-General of the WTO.

5.117 Of course, Saint Lucia is not suggesting that the United States participated in a cruel joke. They genuinely did not think that tariff quotas require Article XIII waivers in this context. And they still do not think this. Contrary to what the United States' spokesperson told this meeting yesterday – speaking off the cuff – the United States in their very latest request for an extension of their Pacific waiver made in May this year, requested only a waiver from Article I, although several of the preferences concerned are given within tariff quotas.²⁴³

5.118 It is just about understandable how a lawyer, who specialises in bananas and who hence may read the banana cases outside the broader context, could misread the Bananas III report and the report of the Article 21.5 Panel later introduced by Ecuador, and believe that they were intended to mean that preferences cannot be granted on a limited volume without an Article XIII waiver. Highly experienced Saint Lucian lawyers on reading these reports, have remarked that they were not intended to say more than, that all Members whose access to a particular market is governed by TRQs must be treated equally. Nor should a layman see them as suggesting that any difference in tariff treatment constitutes a restriction. But to be charitable, it may be granted that a high-priced banana lawyer could be tempted to be misled.

5.119 The United States itself by the actions it takes in other contexts, shows that it is confident that differences in tariff treatment require only an Article I waiver, whether the preference concerned is granted on a limited or an unlimited basis. It is therefore hard to understand why it believes that the rules should be different when it comes to bananas.

5.120 As the European Communities and the Cameroon have demonstrated, the United States have brought this case on the basis of the wrong article of the DSU. Furthermore the United States has, in collusion with the European Communities, breached the proper procedure for bringing it, by failing to ask for consultations, and hence infringed the rights of third parties. These points alone would justify the Panel in dismissing it. But the substantive arguments they have used are also fallacious, and, in the case of Article XIII, contrary to the policies the United States itself follows in other contexts.

5.121 Saint Lucia trusts that the Panel will have no difficulty in dismissing the case in its entirety. While the multilateral banana trading companies and major producers may continue to lobby for complete dismantling of the EU banana import regime, the resulting dislocation and destabilisation of the communities and economies of small and vulnerable island States like Saint Lucia and the other Windward Islands, who are close neighbours of the United States, cannot be in the best interest of the United States.

H. SAINT VINCENT AND THE GRENADINES

1. Oral statement of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines

5.122 The situation of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines and the other Windward islands closely parallels that of Saint Lucia. Like Saint Lucia and the Commonwealth of Dominica, Saint Vincent is a traditional supplier of bananas to the EC market and its dependence on bananas goes well beyond the income derived from exports of bananas, vital though this is. The trade in bananas and the shipping link that arises from it is the mainspring of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines development.

5.123 The successive changes in the EC banana regime, and particularly the application of the EC/US Understanding on bananas has cost us dearly. Following Bananas III Saint Vincent and the Grenadines lost the security of the system of country specific tariff quotas, which of course exposed it to greater competition from other ACP banana producers. That competition became much more intense when the ACP quota was cut, in effect by 200,000 tonnes, as a result of the application of the initial stages of the EC/US understanding. Finally the change in the provisions for access for the MFN suppliers from a TRQ with a prohibitive out-of-quota tariff of €80/tonne to a flat tariff of €176/tonne made for a much more uncertain market situation. Saint Vincent and the Grenadines is bewildered that the MFN claim that its preference increased as a result. Saint Vincent, would have been happy to have seen the MFN tariff quota with an in quota rate of €75/tonne continue, provided that MFN access at that rate had been limited to the TRQ with out-of-quota imports continuing to attract the full bound rate (€80/tonne). This would have provided Saint Vincent and the Grenadines with the security that would ensure that its modest imports would be able to find a place on the EC market.

5.124 Saint Vincent and the Grenadines was surprised and dismayed to find that the MFN were not content when the flat tariff that they had been clamouring for over the years was finally applied at the rate of €176/tonne and even more so when Ecuador decided to take panel proceedings, even though it was already apparent that the new regime had permitted the MFN, taken as a whole, to export increasing quantities of bananas to the EC market. But the present case taken by the United States is even more bewildering. Saint Vincent and the Grenadines cannot understand why the United States would want to take a case at all. In the past, their concern was that they felt that the share of the TRQ licences allocated to their banana companies was too small. These companies obtained additional quantities of licences during the first two phases of the EC/US Understanding and no doubt derived significant additional revenue as a result, because the licences were the key to the quota rent. But, with the application of the flat tariff, MFN imports are not limited, the licence issue is now behind us. Instead the United States is now challenging the very existence of the preference that the European Communities grants us which permits us to trade internationally.

5.125 Saint Vincent and the Grenadines cannot understand why the United States would want to do this or how do they justify setting aside their Understanding with the European Communities after their companies have gained significantly from the faithful application by the European Communities of phases 1 and 2 of that Understanding, the very phases to which, as can be seen from the letter from Mr Zoellick, the United States attached prime importance? And why do they argue that, when it comes to bananas, a WTO Member may not apply a limit to a preference without a waiver from Article XIII of the GATT when they limit some of the preferences they themselves grant on some other products under the Generalized System of Preferences, even though the enabling clause that legitimises the GSP only provides a derogation from Article I? How unreasonable and selective and self-serving in its reasoning can a Member be?

5.126 The European Communities and the United States decided between themselves that there was no need for consultations before this case could be launched. If this is allowed to stand, it will mean that rights as third countries to know the reason for the action will have been violated. The United States feels able to bring the case under Article 21.5, although the main material point they raise is about the interpretation of special conditions of the Article I waiver granted at Doha, conditions that did not exist when the United States took the previous case. They argue that MFN access has not been maintained when it has been increased. And they ask the Panel to make a ruling on Article XIII with regard to the preferential TRQ that the European Communities accords to the ACP that would conflict with the way they apply other preferential TRQs themselves. They should not prevail.

I. SURINAME

1. Oral statement of Suriname

5.127 The United States is seeking to present this case as a compliance case which would address the "continued inconsistency of the EC import regime for bananas with its WTO obligations". This is, Suriname believes, incorrect and has important legal consequences. First of all, the Bananas III dispute has been settled through the Understanding on Bananas concluded between the European Communities and the United States. Secondly, the new EC banana import regime which the United States is challenging is not a "measure taken to comply" with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB, within the meaning of Article 21.5 of the DSU. As a result, and for both reasons, the United States is precluded from bringing this case under Article 21.5 of the DSU.

(a) Preliminary issue: the United States failed to request consultations

5.128 As a preliminary issue, Suriname would like to express its strong concerns that no consultations were requested and held in this case while consultations are a prerequisite to a request for establishment of a Panel not only in the framework of de novo panel proceedings but also in the framework of compliance proceedings.

5.129 Suriname understands from the written submissions of both parties that the absence of consultations would be based on a bilateral agreement reached between the parties to dispense with consultations. As explained in detail in the ACP third party written submission, Suriname believes that the obligation to request and hold consultations cannot be waived bilaterally by the parties to a

WTO dispute through a bilateral agreement. This would be contrary to the terms of the DSU which does not provide for such a possibility. This would also be inconsistent with the object and purpose of Article 4 of the DSU. Indeed, the consultation phase has been introduced as a necessary preliminary step before requesting the establishment of a panel because these consultations can be a way to try to find a mutually acceptable solution which is the preferred alternative in order to settle disputes, as expressed by Article 3.7 of DSU, and for due process reasons, i.e. since during such consultations parties and third parties are given notice of the complainant's concerns before any possible Panel phase. The consultation phase appears thus essential not only for the parties but also for the third parties.

5.130 This is particularly important in this case where the ACP are in fact more than third parties since they are the beneficiaries of the preference which is challenged by the United States and will therefore be directly affected by the findings of the Panel in the present case.

5.131 In addition, by depriving the ACP third parties from having the possibility to join consultations since no such consultations were held, the United States manifestly breaches the requirement of Article 4.10 of the DSU according to which "[d]uring consultations Members should give special attention to the particular problems and interests of developing country Members." It is unacceptable that in the first dispute settlement case ever brought by a developed country against a preference given to developing countries by another developed country, the United States deprives those developing countries which will be severely harmed in case the United States' challenge succeeds, from their right to participate in prior consultations.

5.132 We therefore respectfully request the Panel to declare the present proceeding brought by the United States inadmissible on the sole ground that it failed to request consultations in accordance with the requirements laid down in the DSU.

(b) The Bananas III dispute has been settled through the Understanding on Bananas

5.133 The United States cannot have recourse to a compliance Panel to challenge the new EC banana import regime since the Bananas III dispute has been settled through the Understanding on Bananas reached by the European Communities and the United States.

5.134 On 11 April 2001, the United States and the European Communities concluded an Understanding on Bananas to solve their dispute over the European Communities' banana import regime. The Understanding on Bananas constitutes a mutually agreed solution, as demonstrated by its content as well as by the confirmations contained in the Letters exchanged between the parties on 29 May 2001 and 30 May 2001. Indeed, it is clear from its content that the Understanding on Bananas was reached to resolve the dispute as it lists the various actions or steps which must be undertaken by both parties and which constitute the elements of the solution. The fact that it constitutes a mutually agreed solution has been confirmed by the US Trade Representative Zoellick in his Letter of 29 May 2001 where he stated that the Understanding constituted the "mutually agreed solution to our dispute in the WTO as notified to the WTO Dispute Settlement Body."

5.135 The first important legal effect of this Understanding being concluded is that it is not admissible to challenge the consistency of subsequent measures pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU. Article 21.5 of the DSU provides for a mechanism for dispute resolution "where there is disagreement as to the existence or consistency with a covered agreement of measures taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings." In this case where there is a mutually agreed solution, there cannot be any disagreement in the sense of Article 21.5 of the DSU.

5.136 The fact that a mutually agreed solution puts an end to the dispute for which it has been agreed flows not only from the content of the mutually agreed solution but also from the DSU and in particular Article 3.7 of the DSU.

5.137 Other elements further support the fact that the agreed solution existing between the European Communities and the United States prevents the United States from referring the issue of the WTO consistency of the new EC banana import regime under Article 21.5 proceedings: first, the fact that the DSB took the Bananas III case off its agenda as an issue which has been resolved in accordance with Article 21.6 of the DSU, after the Understanding was agreed; and second, the fact that the United States terminated its suspension of concessions in accordance with Article 22.8 of the DSU, confirming that it considered that the dispute had been resolved through the mutually agreed solution.

5.138 The United States cannot simply ignore the above. The original Bananas III case has been resolved by means of the Understanding. The fact that the Understanding has resolved the case is clear from the text of the Understanding itself, the confirmation letters exchanged between the parties thereafter and from the fact that the DSB took this issue off its agenda and that the United States terminated its suspension of concessions. Once a dispute has been resolved, such as in the present case, by an Understanding constituting a mutually agreed solution, any further regulatory development cannot be considered as measures taken to comply with DSB recommendations. New disputes concerning the same sector or products should therefore be addressed in the framework of new dispute settlement proceedings instead of compliance proceedings.

5.139 It does not appear relevant to us to determine whether the Understanding is or not a "covered agreement" pursuant to Article 1 of the DSU since the issue in the present case is not to determine whether the measures being challenged are consistent with the Understanding on Bananas, but about the legal effects which such an Understanding has in procedural terms in subsequent proceedings.

5.140 The arguments drawn by the United States from the India – Autos dispute are misconceived. Indeed, the Panel in that proceeding was only requested to rule on the question whether a party to a mutually agreed solution could initiate new dispute settlement proceedings covering the same matter as was covered by a mutually agreed solution. The argument raised by the ACP third parties is different, namely that once a mutually agreed solution has been agreed, parties to this agreed solution are prevented from having recourse to Article 21.5 proceedings. In other words, the ACP third parties do not argue that the existence of a mutually agreed solution would prevent the United States from starting new dispute settlement proceedings. However, it constitutes a bar to the initiation of compliance proceedings.

5.141 In the light of the foregoing, this Panel must examine the legal effects of the Understanding on Bananas and in particular its procedural consequences. It is submitted that the fact that the original dispute has been settled through the Understanding on Bananas constituting a mutually agreed solution prevents the United States from challenging the new EC banana import regime in the framework of compliance proceedings.

5.142 The second legal effect of the Understanding on Bananas is that being an international agreement, it is legally binding upon the parties. The binding nature of this Understanding is confirmed by the fact that each party implemented its content.

5.143 Being an agreement upon the parties, both parties have to comply with its terms in good faith and cannot put its terms into question thereafter. This obligation to implement international agreements in good faith constitutes a bar on the US' ability to challenge now under Article 21.5 of the DSU the legality of the Cotonou preference.

5.144 If the United States were now allowed to call into question the Understanding, this would manifestly contradict the Understanding which is a binding international agreement. In addition, it would also be totally unfair since it has already reaped the benefits from that agreement.

(c) The new EC banana import regime is not a measure taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings in the original Banana III dispute

5.145 There is a further reason why the United States should not be allowed to bring this case before a compliance panel. Namely, the measures now being challenged are not "measures taken to comply" with the recommendations and rulings of the original Panel within the meaning of Article 21.5 of the DSU. As noted by the Appellate Body in EC – Bed Linen, "if a claim challenges a measure which is not a 'measure taken to comply', that claim cannot properly be raised in Article 21.5 proceedings" (para. 78).

5.146 From the existing case-law, it appears that, in order to be considered as being "measures taken to comply", the challenged measures must be clearly connected to the panel and Appellate Body report of the original case, both in time and in respect of the subject-matter. This criterion is clearly not satisfied in the present case.

5.147 Regarding the time-frame, it seems difficult to consider that more than eight years between the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in the original case and the adoption of the measures being challenged show a clear connection.

5.148 As regards the subject-matter, there also appears to be no clear connection for at least two reasons. First, the regime which is challenged is a tariff-only regime which has nothing to do with the quota regime which was examined by the panel and the Appellate Body in the original Bananas III dispute. Second, the legal background against which the new EC banana import regime needs to be examined has changed radically. Indeed, with the adoption of the Understanding on Bananas and the Doha Waiver, new rights and obligations have arisen for WTO members. The Understanding on Bananas has been agreed by the European Communities and the United States to solve their original Banana dispute. It contains a certain number of rights and obligations that both parties must implement in good faith. The Doha Waiver is a decision which has been taken by all WTO Members to grant a waiver of the GATT Article I requirement of non-discrimination in order to enable the European Communities to implement the Cotonou preference.

5.149 Since these two new legal instruments contain new rights and obligations, they must necessarily be taken into account to decide on the WTO compatibility of the new EC banana import regime. Actually, the new EC banana import regime has been adopted to implement the commitments undertaken in these instruments. The measures being challenged by the United States cannot therefore be regarded as measures taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings in the original dispute. The legality of the new EC banana import regime can therefore only be examined in new dispute settlement proceedings taking into account these new legal instruments.

5.150 This was actually suggested by the Arbitrator in the first Arbitration, noting that disputes may arise specifically from the Doha Waiver and its implementation. To the extent that the dispute challenges measures which have been adopted pursuant to the Doha Waiver and other legal instruments which came into existence only after an earlier dispute, such measures cannot be regarded as being measures taken to comply with recommendations and rulings of the DSB adopted in the pre-existing earlier dispute.

J. BRAZIL

1. Oral statement of Brazil

5.151 In its statement, Brazil focused on the two preliminary objections made by the European Communities, namely the binding nature of the Understanding signed by both Parties in 2001 and whether the European Communities' current import regime is a "measure taken to comply" within the meaning of Article 21.5 of the DSU.

(a) The Understanding

5.152 The European Communities claims that by having signed the Understanding in 2001 the United States would have agreed on a number of issues that today would prevent it from resorting to an Article 21.5 proceeding. First, the European Communities affirms that by having signed the Understanding, the United States would have accepted until the end of 2007 the banana import regime irrespective of the legal situation of some of its elements.²⁴⁴ Second, the European Communities claims that the United States in that same Understanding would have presumably renounced its right under Article 21.5 of the DSU to challenge the mutually satisfactory solution.

5.153 In Brazil's opinion, both conclusions are erroneous. On the first point, it notes that in affirming that the United States would have concurred with a regime regardless of its legal situation, the European Communities is imprudently suggesting that Members can agree on a solution irrespective of its consistency with the covered agreements.

5.154 Article 3.2 of the DSU reflects the Members' recognition that the dispute settlement mechanism serves to preserve the rights and obligations of Members under the covered agreements. Thus, a mutually agreed solution should not add or diminish Members' rights and obligations.

5.155 Moreover, while recognizing that a solution mutually acceptable to the parties to a dispute is clearly preferable to dispute resolution procedures, Article 3.7 also provides that such a solution has to be consistent with the covered agreements. The fact that the DSU favours negotiated solutions over the litigation avenue does not allow concluding that any negotiated solution is preferred by the DSU. The negotiated solution must be compatible with the covered agreements.

5.156 In no provision does the DSU grant Members certainty as to the "lawfulness" of a measure taken to comply just because such measure derives from a mutually satisfactory solution. To the contrary, Article 21.5 sets forth the Members' right to resort to a panel where there is disagreement as to the consistency with covered agreements of the measures taken to comply.

5.157 Whether or not this solution is the one referred to by Article 3.6, any solution intended to implement DSB recommendations and rulings, by virtue of Article 21.5, is subject to analysis by a panel.²⁴⁵

5.158 In fact, the Appellate Body has stated that:

"Article 21 sets out a number of mechanisms to ensure collective oversight of [a] Member's implementation. ... [W]ithin Article 21 as a whole, the declarations of the implementing Member form an integral part of the surveillance of implementation,

²⁴⁴ See European Communities' second written submission, para. 14.

but they do not stand alone. Rather, they are complemented by, and subject to, multilateral review within the WTO".²⁴⁶

5.159 In Brazil's view, the Panel should not endorse the European Communities' argument. If accepted, it would significantly undermine the effectiveness of Article 21.5, because parties to an agreed solution would be authorized to rewrite their multilateral commitments. Any measure based on an agreed solution would automatically escape the test of consistency with the covered agreements. Thereby it would give Members a blanket waiver to override their obligations, with serious implications on the predictability and security of the multilateral trading system.

5.160 On the second issue, the European Communities states that the provisions of the Understanding and the context within which it was signed would permit to infer that the United States renounced its rights to challenge some elements of the Understanding.²⁴⁷ To Brazil's knowledge, there is nothing in that bilateral Understanding that allows for such a conclusion. Nor is there a provision in the DSU that precludes a Member from challenging under Article 21.5 any kind of measure taken by the defending party to comply with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB.

5.161 In light of the Understanding and considering that Article 21.5 contains no clause on the preclusion of the rights established therein, the United States should not be presumed to have tacitly renounced its rights to seek multilateral review of the measures taken by the European Communities.

(b) Whether the European Communities' 2006 import regime is a "measure taken to comply"

5.162 Considering the European Communities' second preliminary claim, related to the nature of the European Communities' banana import regime, the United States asserts that what the European Communities tries to characterize as an "autonomous political decision"²⁴⁸ - i.e. the tariff only regime – is in fact the "measure taken to comply" for the purposes of the current proceedings.

5.163 According to the United States, the European Communities would have committed in the Understanding of 2001 to take "a series of steps that would culminate with the introduction of a tariff only regime by January 1, 2006"²⁴⁹, the tariff-quota regime implemented in 2002 being one of those steps. From the United States' perspective, such a tariff-quota system would constitute an interim and transitional phase towards the tariff-only regime. The single-tariff-based system would be the ultimate point of such a series and effectively took place five years after the Understanding was signed.

5.164 On the other hand, the European Communities claims that the United States' complaint does not fall within the scope of Article 21.5. In the European Communities' view, Council Regulation 1964/2005, which establishes the present banana import regime, would not be a measure taken to comply for the purposes of Article 21.5. The "final measure taken to comply"²⁵⁰ agreed with the United States back in 2001, the European Communities purports, would be the tariff-quota-based system implemented by the Communities from 2002 to the end of 2005.²⁵¹ Consequently, the European Communities would have implemented in 2002 the recommendations and rulings adopted by the DSB in 1997, and, therefore, the United States would be prevented from challenging the ongoing regime, unless it resorted to a de novo panel.²⁵²

²⁴⁶ See Appellate Body Report in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), at para. 70.

²⁴⁷ See European Communities' second written submission, para. 11.

²⁴⁸ See ibid., para. 51.

²⁴⁹ See United States' second written submission, para. 46 (emphasis added).

²⁵⁰ See European Communities' first written submission, para. 49.

²⁵¹ See European Communities' second written submission, para. 50.

²⁵² See European Communities' first written submission, para. 51.

5.165 In Brazil's opinion, it is for the panel to assess whether or not the EC Council Regulation 1964/2005 is a measure taken to comply. The Appellate Body has cautioned that "characterizing an act by a Member as a measure taken to comply when that Member maintains otherwise is not something that should be done lightly by a panel"²⁵³. Nonetheless, it has unequivocally stated that "it is, ultimately, for an Article 21.5 panel – and not for the complainant or the respondent – to determine which of the measures listed in the request for its establishment are 'measures taken to comply'".²⁵⁴

(c) Final remarks

5.166 Brazil also made some comments on the topic of transparency and open hearings. Ever since its beginning, this dispute has given rise to a number of important systemic issues, among them cross-retaliation; the sequencing between Articles 21.5 and 22.6 of the DSU; and the original Panel's decision to make use of its discretion set out in Article 19.1 to suggest ways of implementation.

5.167 Another issue of great systemic importance was presented to Members. As a result of a bilateral agreement between the Parties, some third parties faced a situation in which two Members were about to decide what the rights of other Members should be, on a subject that should be dealt with by the Membership as a whole within the DSU review process. Brazil recalled that it had made its position clear in an earlier communication to the Panel²⁵⁵, and, for this reason, it would not go into the details of this topic.

5.168 As far as Brazil is concerned, however, transparency is not only a matter that concerned the confidentiality of proceedings. While many Members who advocate open hearings do not publicize their documents, Brazil usually discloses all its dispute related papers to the general public, including written and oral submissions. To a considerable degree, the disclosure of submissions promotes much greater transparency than making hearings open to the public but keeping documentation confidential. Transparency in WTO dispute settlement proceedings is an element of the delicate balance between rights and obligations within the DSU, one on which Members should negotiate collectively and in the adequate forum.

(d) Conclusion

5.169 For the reasons explained above, the Panel should reject the European Communities' preliminary objections and find that the United States is entitled to resort to Article 21.5 procedures.

K. COLOMBIA

1. Written submission of Colombia

(a) The preferential tariff treatment accorded to ACP bananas is not justified under the Article I Doha Waiver

(i) The Article I Doha Waiver has ceased to apply to bananas as of 1 January 2006, and the EC was no longer entitled to "rectify the matter"

5.170 The Waiver Annex contemplates that the determination at the Second Arbitration that the European Communities "has failed to rectify the matter" would have definite legal consequences. These consequences are that following a negative determination, the Article I Doha Waiver ceases to apply to bananas upon the entry into force of the new EC tariff regime, and the European Communities has no additional legal opportunity to "rectify the matter".

²⁵³ See Appellate Body Report, US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), at para. 74.

²⁵⁵ See Brazil's letter on the subject sent on 19 October 2007.

5.171 In the light of the fifth tiret of the Waiver Annex, and based on the determination "that the European Communities ha[d] failed to rectify the matter", Colombia submits that the Article I Doha Waiver ceased to apply to bananas as of 1 January 2006. Colombia agrees with Ecuador that the Arbitrator's determination in this regard is a matter of the record that no party has disputed.

5.172 Thus, following the adverse finding in the Second Award, the European Communities was not entitled to any additional opportunity to "rectify the matter", and the Article I Doha Waiver ceased to apply to bananas as of 1 January 2006.

(ii) Assuming, arguendo, that the EC had the opportunity to "rectify the matter", the tariff level of €176/tonne does not comply with the Tariff Level Standard.

The European Communities has not discharged its burden of showing compliance with the elements required under the Waiver Annex

5.173 To prove compliance with all the terms and conditions of the Waiver Annex, the European Communities should have addressed the three elements referred to by the Arbitrator, against which that compliance must be assessed: (i) whether there is a rebinding of the EC tariff on bananas; (ii) whether any such rebound tariff would result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN suppliers; and (iii) whether the rebound tariff takes into account all EC WTO market-access commitments relating to bananas. However, the European Communities has failed to address the first and the third elements and has not been able to demonstrate compliance with the second element.

5.174 With respect to the first element, while the European Communities submits that the introduction of "a different import regime than the one analyzed by the Arbitrator "... maintain[s] the total market access of the MFN suppliers", the European Communities has failed to indicate what is the "envisaged rebinding of the EC tariff on bananas" within the meaning of the Waiver Annex. An applied tariff of €176/tonne does not constitute a "rebinding". With respect to the third element, the European Communities has failed to explain how it has taken into account all its WTO market-access commitments relating to bananas in designing its current import regime. The European Communities has referred in its submissions only to the second element, on which it confines itself to a conclusion of law – that the second element contemplates a quantity- or volume- based standard – and has not even presented arguments to substantiate that conclusion of law.

The European Communities' quantity- or volumes-based analysis is contrary to the Tariff Level Standard

5.175 According to the European Communities, "the volume of total imports of bananas from MFN countries has increased significantly since the introduction of the new import regime ... This shows that MFN suppliers have maintained the market access opportunities they had before the introduction of the new system." In effect, the European Communities asserts that the determination of compliance with the Tariff Level Standard requires a volumes-based (or quantity-based) assessment. In other words, the European Communities argues that the Tariff Level Standard contemplates a tariff level that would result in at least maintaining the export volumes of MFN banana suppliers.

5.176 Agreeing with the European Communities, the Arbitrator rejected the contention that "market access" should be assessed in terms of trade volumes. In its Rebuttal Submission at the first arbitration the European Communities asserted that "market access in the WTO is a legal concept which enshrines the level of protection or liberalization. The extent to which trade flows, or one Member has a particular market share, has never been part of the WTO understanding of market access". Then the European Communities added: "In the WTO the phrase "market access" is not to be understood as a measurement of the volume of imports or of market share (between either MFN suppliers or between MFN and other suppliers)". Thus, the notion of volumes as the benchmark for purposes of compliance with the Tariff Level Standard was thoroughly discussed and squarely rejected in the First Arbitration.

5.177 Accordingly, there is no legal basis for a volumes-based assessment for purposes of determining compliance with the Tariff Level Standard. It is irrelevant that MFN export volumes have increased

The applied tariff of €176/tonne does not result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers

5.178 In its First Arbitration, the Arbitrator noted that a determination of the conditions of competition between MFN bananas and both EC bananas and ACP bananas was necessary to determine compliance with the Tariff Level Standard.

5.179 Colombia submits that, even if bound, a tariff of €176/tonne does not maintain the conditions of competition between either (i) MFN bananas and EC bananas or (ii) MFN bananas and ACP bananas. Using the methodology, reference period and figures endorsed by the Arbitrator a tariff of €176/tonne does not maintain conditions of competition between either (i) MFN bananas and EC bananas or (ii) MFN bananas and ACP bananas.

5.180 With respect to conditions of competition between MFN bananas and EC bananas, the Arbitrator found that the price-gap methodology "would accurately reflect the level of protection accorded to domestic or EC growers from foreign competitors."

5.181 Regarding the appropriate reference period, the Arbitrator found that "the use of the most recent representative period minimizes the need for ad hoc adjustments to be made to the data and corresponds as closely as possible to the trade regime as applied." The Arbitrator determined that the appropriate reference period was the period 2002-2004.

5.182 With respect to the figures for the internal price for bananas, at the Second Arbitration, the European Communities presented and relied on figures based on data derived from Sopisco News. The Arbitrator found that it "does not consider that the European Communities' use of Sopisco News data to estimate the internal price of bananas on the EC market was inappropriate."

5.183 With respect to the figures for the external price for MFN bananas, at the First Arbitration, the European Communities relied on Eurostat c.i.f. price data. The appropriateness of the European Communities' use of Eurostat data to establish the external price was not disputed by any of the interested parties.

5.184 Thus, using the methodology that was used by the European Communities, endorsed by the Arbitrator, and based on statistics from sources relied upon by the European Communities (Sopisco News) or generated by the European Communities' agencies (Eurostat), and which were also endorsed by the Arbitrator, it is evident that a tariff of €176/tonne does not maintain conditions of competition between MFN bananas and EC bananas.

5.185 Based on the figures provided by the European Communities, the Sopisco-based weighted average internal price for bananas in the EC-25 during the reference period 2002-2004 was €702/tonne. Based on Eurostat statistics, the weighted average external price for MFN bananas in the EC-25 during the reference period 2002-2004 was €605/tonne. The price gap for MFN bananas during the reference period was, therefore, €97/tonne. In short, the tariff level that would result in at least maintaining the conditions of competition between MFN bananas and EC bananas cannot be more than €7/tonne.

5.186 In the course of the First Arbitration, the Arbitrator emphasised that a tariff meeting the Tariff Level Standard also needed to take into account conditions of competition between MFN and ACP bananas. Based on Eurostat statistics, the weighted average external price for ACP bananas in the EC-25 during the reference period 2002-2004 was €16/tonne. Deducting this external price from the Sopisco-based weighted average internal price in the EC-25 during the same period, as provided by the European Communities of €702/tonne, the price gap for ACP bananas during the reference period was €6/tonne.

5.187 Accordingly, the tariff level that would result in at least maintaining the conditions of competition between MFN bananas and ACP bananas is the difference between the price gap for MFN bananas (€7/tonne) and the price gap for ACP bananas (€6/tonne), or €1/tonne.

5.188 Hence, a tariff of 176€/tonne in no way maintains the conditions of competition between MFN bananas and ACP bananas and, just as it does with respect to the conditions of competition between MFN bananas and EC bananas, fails the Tariff Level Standard.

(b) The Preferential Tariff Rate Quota accorded to ACP bananas is inconsistent with Article XIII of the GATT 1994

5.189 Colombia recalls that the Appellate Body in EC – Poultry stated that: "In applying import restrictions to any product, Members shall aim at a distribution of trade in such product approaching as closely as possible the shares with the various Members might be expected to obtain in the absence of such restrictions".

5.190 The TRQ granted by the European Communities to ACP bananas clearly does not conform to this standard. While MFN bananas must always bear a tariff, ACP bananas do not, because of the preferential intra-quota zero tariff. It can hardly be argued that such a distribution of trade complies with the standard set out in Article XIII:2 of aiming "at a distribution of trade in such product approaching as closely as possible the shares which the various [Members] might be expected to obtain in the absence of such restrictions".

5.191 Likewise, Colombia believes that the TRQ granted by the European Communities to the ACP countries excludes all MFN bananas from the zero-duty quota, and in doing so, violates Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994. This discriminatory treatment denies other WTO Members the right to participate in the European Communities' TRQ, and thereby to improve their access to the EC banana market.

(c) Conclusion

5.192 In light of the foregoing, Colombia respectfully requests the Panel to find that the measures at issue is inconsistent with Article I of the GATT 1994, or alternatively, does not comply with the terms and conditions of the Article I Doha Waiver, and is inconsistent with Article XIII of the GATT 1994.

2. Oral statement of Colombia

5.193 The dispute on bananas is the longest dispute in the history of the GATT and the WTO. Regrettably, this Panel proceeding is the eleventh since 1992 examining the EC banana import regime. Fifteen years on, in 2007, that regime is still not in conformity with WTO law.

5.194 Bananas are a product of paramount importance for the Colombian economy. They are the main source of employment in rural areas crucial for national security, and are also one of Colombia's main export products

5.195 In its third-party written submission, Colombia establishes why the EC banana import regime is inconsistent with Articles I and XIII of the GATT. Rather than repeat those submissions, this statement will focus on certain critical issues.

5.196 It is evident that the preferential tariff treatment granted to ACP bananas is inconsistent with the MFN obligation in Article I:1 of the GATT. The Article I Doha Waiver temporarily justifying this treatment was granted subject to an EC obligation to rebind the EC MFN tariff on bananas at a level that results in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers, taking into account all EC WTO market-access commitments relating to bananas. The process of rebinding the EC tariff contemplated a two-stage arbitration procedure and a waiver-termination provision.

5.197 The European Communities argues that the Doha Waiver "would cease to apply only if the European Communities implemented the import regime analysed by the Arbitrator and found not to satisfy the standard of the Doha Waiver. If the European Communities introduced a different regime than the one analysed by the Arbitrator and that import regime did indeed maintain the total market access of the MFN suppliers, then the Doha Waiver would continue to apply until the end of 2007".²⁵⁶ Colombia cannot agree with this interpretation.

5.198 The structure of fifth tiret of the Annex clearly indicates that the European Communities had only one opportunity to rectify. If the first arbitration award resulted in a determination that the rebinding would not result in at least maintaining total market access, an opportunity was given for the parties to reach a mutually satisfactory solution. Thereafter, a last opportunity to rectify the matter was contemplated. This created a powerful incentive for the parties to seek a negotiated solution. An additional opportunity to rectify the matter would nullify this incentive to negotiate.

5.199 Furthermore, had the European Communities an additional opportunity to rectify the matter, and unilateral authority to judge whether or not that import regime maintained the total market access of MFN suppliers, as they are claiming now, the purpose and rationale of the banana-specific multilateral dispute settlement mechanism in the waiver would be defeated. As the United States submitted in yesterday's oral statement, such an interpretation would "read the role of the Arbitrators out of the Annex".²⁵⁷ MFN suppliers would have never granted the Article I Doha Waiver for bananas were this the case.

5.200 In any event, assuming arguendo that the European Communities had an additional opportunity to "rectify the matter", the applied tariff of €176/ton does not meet the terms and conditions of the Article I Doha Waiver.

5.201 First, an applied tariff of €176/ton does not constitute a "rebinding". Second, the European Communities has failed to take into account all its WTO market-access commitments relating to bananas. Third, and of greatest concern to Colombia, the applied tariff of €176/ton does not meet the tariff level standard of "at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers".

5.202 Colombia has provided detailed argument paragraphs 20 to 26 of its third-party written submission for why compliance with the tariff level standard ought to be assessed in the same manner as the Arbitrator and therefore in terms of conditions of competition between MFN bananas and both EC and ACP bananas.

²⁵⁶ European Communities' first written submission, para. 55.

²⁵⁷ United States' opening statement at the Panel's substantive meeting with the parties and third parties, para. 32.

5.203 In this statement, Colombia simply highlights that a volumes-based assessment is contrary to the position put forward by the European Communities in the banana tariff arbitrations where it argued that the "legal notion of market access can only guarantee the legal conditions of imports, not the actual imports" and the "EC therefore urges the Arbitrators to reject the argument that market access should be measured in trade volumes or market shares". The European Communities confirmed this view yesterday, stating that the tariff level standard should "not ... be interpreted as a guarantee of any particular volume of trade" and should be based on "competitive opportunities" not a "volumes-based-analysis".²⁵⁸

5.204 The European Communities' repeated rejection of a volumes-based-analysis accords with the rulings of the Arbitrator. The Arbitrator squarely rejected the contention that "market access" should be assessed in terms of trade volumes. It noted that "total market access for MFN banana suppliers" is "not a guarantee of any particular level or volume of trade or price. Rather, it relates to the opportunity for MFN suppliers to enter and compete on the EC banana market". Instead, the Arbitrator endorsed a tariff level standard based on conditions of competition.

5.205 A test based on conditions of competition rather than actual trade flows is consistent with a long line of GATT and WTO jurisprudence and reflects the practical reality that it is impossible to isolate the impact of a measure from the myriad of other factors in the real world that constantly affect fluctuations in international trade.

5.206 In light of the above, it was with alarm that Colombia noted that the European Communities is now contradicting itself and attempting to reintroduce a linkage between trade volumes and competitive opportunities. In the hearing yesterday, the European Communities expressed that "it would not be logical to assume that a country may be deprived of its competitive opportunities and market access, but still be able to increase the quantity of its exports towards the European Communities". To reinforce this statement they also expressed that "an increase in exports can only take place if market access has been maintained".²⁵⁹ In Colombia's view the economic reasoning of the European Communities is over-simplified and wrong. International trade flows are explained by a number of factors related to supply and demand. It is possible to explain, for instance, why an increase in a tariff rate could be associated with a statistic that shows an export increase. Does this mean that the increased tariff rate maintained competitive opportunities? Obviously not. The self-serving nature of the European Communities' changed position is highlighted by its view that the relevance of trade volumes can only work against MFN banana suppliers as "[a] decrease in exports does not necessarily mean that market access has been denied".²⁶⁰

5.207 Colombia also submits that, even if bound, a tariff of €176/ton does not maintain the conditions of competition between either (i) MFN bananas and EC bananas or (ii) MFN bananas and ACP bananas.

5.208 The Arbitrator endorsed the price gap methodology which, using correct prices would produce an estimate of the tariff equivalent that would confer the same level of protection to domestic producers as the border measures being replaced by the tariff equivalent. The Arbitrator also endorsed the following elements of the price gap methodology:

²⁵⁸ European Communities' opening statement at the Panel's substantive meeting with the parties and third parties, para. 13.

²⁶⁰ Ibid.

- The period 2002-2004 as the appropriate reference period;
- The Sopisco-based weighted average internal price of €702/ton in the EC-25;
- The Eurostat weighted average external price of €605/ton for MFN bananas in the EC-25; and
- The Eurostat weighted average external price of €616/ton for ACP bananas in the EC-25.

5.209 Therefore, the price gap for MFN bananas during the reference period was €97/ton. In short, the tariff level that would result in at least maintaining the conditions of competition between MFN bananas and EC bananas cannot be more than €97/ton. A tariff-level of €97/ton does not even take into account the conditions of competition between MFN bananas and ACP bananas which are elaborated upon in Colombia's written submission.

5.210 Hence, a tariff of €176/ton – even if bound – in no way maintains the conditions of competition between MFN bananas and EC bananas or between MFN bananas and ACP bananas and, therefore, fails to comply with the tariff level standard.

5.211 For all the above reasons, Colombia submits that the Article I Doha Waiver cannot justify the preferences granted by the European Communities.

5.212 Colombia has provided argumentation in its written submission for why the preferential tariff-rate quota accorded to ACP bananas is inconsistent with Article XIII:1 and XIII:2 of the GATT. Rather than elaborate upon those arguments, Colombia wishes to use the time available to address the European Communities' argument that selected prior waiver decisions constitute "subsequent practice" and "subsequent agreements" within the meaning of Article 31 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties that, in essence, allow for an interpretation that an Article I waiver covers an Article XIII violation.

5.213 "Subsequent practice" within the meaning of Article 31(3)(b) needs to be "concordant" and "common". Colombia notes the comments of the United States yesterday that it has, on at least three occasions, requested waivers of both Article I and Article XIII of the GATT. These examples illustrate that the practice is not concordant and common but inconsistent. Furthermore, the extent to which the practice of a few Members can be relevant to the interpretation of a multilateral treaty such as the GATT is highly controversial.

5.214 A "subsequent agreement" within the meaning of Article 31(3)(a) must be distinguished from "subsequent practice" in Article 31(3)(b). The European Communities fails to make that distinction by elevating inconsistent practice regarding waivers to a status approximating an "agreement" regarding the interpretation of Articles I and XIII of the GATT. "Subsequent agreements" within the meaning of Article 31(3)(a) are extremely rare in practice. In the context of the WTO, the type of agreement contemplated is specifically regulated by Article IX:2 of the WTO Agreement on authoritative interpretations. The European Communities' liberal interpretation would render the disciplines of Article IX:2 of the WTO Agreement largely meaningless.

5.215 In light of the foregoing, Colombia respectfully requests the Panel to find that the measures at issue are inconsistent with Articles I and XIII of the GATT.

L. ECUADOR

1. Oral statement of Ecuador

5.216 As the Panel is well aware, Ecuador is the complaining Party in its own challenge to the European Communities' measures. In the other proceeding, Ecuador has challenged the conformity of the European Communities' measures with Article I and Article XIII, as well as with obligations not at issue in the US complaint.

5.217 Having had the opportunity to explain its position in the other proceeding and also to respond to most of the defences that the European Communities has presented in this proceeding, Ecuador will not repeat all of those points again here.

5.218 Ecuador has also taken due note of the submissions of third countries, including those of the ACP. Ecuador is itself a developing country and in fact has a lower per capita GDP than many of the ACP beneficiary countries. Ecuador does not object to assistance that the European Communities, a Community of many of the world's wealthiest countries, wishes to accord to the ACP countries. However, Ecuador strongly objects to the European Communities granting this assistance in violation of the European Communities' WTO obligations and at the expense of Ecuador and other developing countries. The European Communities tries to impugn the good faith of those who challenge its measures, but the reality is that if the European Communities had honoured first its GATT and then its WTO obligations in good faith, there would be no challenge here. After losing every single challenge to its regime since 1993, it is time for the European Communities to stop blaming those who challenge the European Communities' banana measures and to start complying with its WTO obligations. EC assistance to the ACPs cannot be built on discrimination against other developing country suppliers.

5.219 On the legal issues, Ecuador agrees with the United States, but would like to add a few observations.

5.220 First, Ecuador observes that the European Communities argues in this challenge that its measures were not taken to comply with the DSB recommendations and rulings in Bananas III. Ecuador obviously agrees with the United States that that defence has no merit, as it is apparent that the EC measures represent the failed final step of the European Communities to comply with its WTO obligations in accordance with the Understandings on Bananas. No one will ever again enter into an agreement calling for phased compliance with WTO obligations if this panel finds that implementing the first phase automatically terminates the right to invoke Article 21.5 if there is a failure to carry out subsequent phases.

5.221 Ecuador must also point out the hypocrisy of the European Communities claiming in this proceeding that its measures were not taken to comply with Bananas III after the European Communities, in trying to defend against Ecuador's challenge, argued quite the opposite that its measures were justified because they were suggested by the Bananas III Panel. Both defences are wrong.

5.222 Second, the European Communities argues that the United States' claims should be dismissed on grounds that under the EC-US Understanding, the United States is barred from challenging the EC preferences until 2008. The European Communities argues that it has such immunity from challenge by the United States, regardless of the legality of those EC preferences and regardless of the European Communities failure to comply with the waiver or any other condition of the Understanding. The European Communities made a similar argument against Ecuador's claims. This EC defence is without factual or legal foundation. First, in its Understanding with the European Communities, the United States, like Ecuador, made no commitment to give the European Communities "carte blanche" on preferences. The EC-US Understanding provides for the same multi-stage, multi year phased commitments as the Ecuador Understanding. While the European Communities was carrying out those commitments, there was no challenge. However, the European Communities ceased to comply with the Understanding. Whether a WTO panel ever could or should enforce a bilateral commitment not to challenge the conformity of a measure with WTO obligations, the Understanding is not such a commitment and is no basis for granting the European Communities the immunity from challenge that the European Communities asserts in this dispute. The European Communities' efforts to escape substantive scrutiny of the consistency of its regime with WTO rules must therefore be rejected.

5.223 Turning to the merits, Ecuador supports the United States' claims under both Article I and Article XIII. The EC tariff preferences for ACP bananas lost the protection of the Doha Waiver of Article I on January 2006, when the European Communities unilaterally imposed the so-called "tariff-only" regime of its choosing, after twice failing to propose a system satisfactory to the Arbitrator under the waiver. As in the Ecuador-EC proceeding, this Panel should reject the European Communities' effort to rewrite the waiver to cover the European Communities' illegal behaviour.

5.224 Finally, the European Communities also violates its obligations under Article XIII of the GATT by imposing a tariff quota under which only ACP bananas are allowed entry under the duty-free quota, while all other bananas are relegated to the high duty treatment. The EC defence is sophistry, effectively asking the panel to hold that although article XIII says expressly that it applies to any tariff quota, that really means any tariff quota except one that excludes countries outright from participating in the low duty tariff quota. It is absurd to think that Article XIII bans an inadequate share of a low duty quota, but permits denial of any share at all. The European Communities professes to find a consistent practice in its favour based entirely on the absence of challenges to some tariff quota measures under Article XIII. However, it is not a legal defence to the EC measures in this dispute whether or not there are or have been other tariff quotas that might be similarly inconsistent with Article XIII. Certainly there can be no claim of consistent practice given the clear rulings of the Appellate Body and the Panel in Bananas III that the tariff quota for ACP bananas is subject to Article XIII. Finally, by seeking and obtaining a waiver of Article XIII for its tariff quota for ACP bananas, the European Communities itself and the WTO Members as a whole further recognized that the EC tariff quota restricted to ACP countries is contrary to Article XIII. It is only because that waiver of Article XIII expired and no renewal was granted that the European Communities now argues to rewrite the provisions of Article XIII and to ignore the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in Bananas III. The Panel should reject these EC arguments.

M. JAPAN

1. Written submission of Japan

(a) The Understanding does not preclude the United States from challenging the European Communities' tariff only regime even if the Understanding is a "mutually agreed solution"

5.225 The European Communities argues that the United States' challenge to the European Communities' banana import regime at issue (the "European Communities' 2006 regime") should be dismissed entirely because bringing such a challenge is precluded by the Understanding, a "mutually agreed solution" between the parties. Indeed, the panel in India – Autos indicates that "[mutually] agreed solutions are intended to reflect a settlement of the dispute in question, which both parties expect will bring a final conclusion to the relevant proceedings"²⁶¹, and Japan agrees with this observation. However, in the present case, even assuming that the Understanding is a "mutually agreed solution", it does not affect the United States' right to challenge the European Communities' 2006 regime.

5.226 As Article 3.5 of the DSU provides, "[a]ll solutions to matters formally raised under the consultation and dispute settlement provisions of the covered agreements ... shall be consistent with those agreements." Therefore, if the Understanding is a "mutually agreed solution", the arrangements agreed between the parties in the Understanding, including the European Communities' 2006 regime, also need to be consistent with relevant WTO rules. The European Communities' 2006 regime explicitly grants a preference to bananas imported from the ACP countries over those imported from non-ACP countries, and thus, the implementation of the measure would plainly violate Article I:1 of the GATT without a valid waiver from the European Communities' obligation under the provision. In fact, the Understanding expressly refers to the GATT Article I waiver in Paragraph E. Therefore, in order for the European Communities to claim that it is implementing the tariff preference as the measure to which the United States accepted in the Understanding, it is indispensable for the European Communities to maintain a valid waiver from its obligation under the GATT. The United States now challenges the European Communities' 2006 regime, asserting that the European Communities' necessary waiver is no longer valid. Thus, even if the Understanding is a "mutually agreed solution", the United States is not barred from referring the matter to a panel proceeding.

- (b) The complaint of the United States is considered to fall under the scope of Article 21.5 of the DSU

5.227 The European Communities argues that the United States' complaint falls outside the scope of Article 21.5 of the DSU. The European Communities' 2006 regime is, however, considered to be within the scope of this 21.5 proceeding in light of the Appellate Body's findings in previous cases. For example, the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada) addresses that, a 21.5 panel's mandate should include "some measures with a particularly close relationship to the declared 'measure taken to comply', and to the recommendations and rulings of the DSB" and indicates that, in order to find such a "close relationship", a 21.5 panel may need to examine not only "the timing, nature, and effects of the various measures," but also "the factual and legal background against which a declared 'measure taken to comply' is adopted."²⁶²

5.228 The European Communities' 2006 regime was implemented subsequent to the adoption of the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in EC – Bananas III and, it is explicitly identified in the Understanding, Paragraph B, as a measure "by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved."²⁶³ It also grants a preferential treatment to the imports of bananas from the ACP countries. In light of these, the argument that the European Communities' 2006 regime does not have a relationship with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in EC – Bananas III dispute seems hardly convincing.

- (c) Issues relating to nullification or impairment of a benefit accruing to the United States

- (i) The United States has "standing" to challenge the European Communities' 2006 regime

5.229 The Appellate Body in EC – Bananas III describes that, taking into account of Article XXIII of the GATT and Article 3.7 of the DSU, a party has "broad discretion in deciding whether to bring a case against another Member under the DSU", and "is expected to be largely self-regulating in deciding whether any such action would be 'fruitful'.²⁶⁴ Thus, the right of a party to pursue the claims under the DSU will be justified when the complaining party considers that there is a "nullification or impairment of a benefit" accruing to it, and that, in good faith, its initiation of the proceeding will be "fruitful". In this dispute, the United States claims that the European Communities' 2006 regime is inconsistent with GATT Articles, which constitutes prima facie nullification or impairment of a benefit under Article 3.8 of the DSU. Moreover, the Appellate Body in the original proceeding found that the United States was allowed to raise its claim against the European Communities. Since there is no change in the facts pointed out by the Appellate Body as reasons for the United States to have had standing in the original proceeding, it is reasonable to assume that the United States is justified to challenge the European Communities' banana import regime.

(ii) Whether there is any nullification or impairment of a benefit accruing to the United States

The United States is not required to affirmatively demonstrate that there is a "nullification or impairment of a benefit" in advancing its claim on GATT Articles

5.230 Article 3.8 of the DSU provides that a benefit accruing to a Member is presumed to be "nullified or impaired" when a violation of the measure of another Member is demonstrated. Therefore, as the United States asserts, the complainant is not required to affirmatively provide evidence regarding the nullification or impairment of a benefit accruing to it, in advancing its claim under particular WTO provisions, in addition to evidence of the disputed measure's violation of those provisions.

Whether there is no "nullification or impairment of a benefit" for the purpose of Article 3.8 when the "level of nullification or impairment of a benefit" for the purpose of Article 22 is "zero"

5.231 As a rebuttal to the presumption of "nullification or impairment of a benefit" under Article 3.8 of the DSU, the European Communities asserts that there is no nullification or impairment of a benefit accruing to the United States because the "level of nullification or impairment" suffered by the United States to justify the suspension of concessions under Article 22.6 of the DSU is "zero". Japan considers that the fact that the level of nullification or impairment of a benefit is found to be zero in an arbitration proceeding does not necessarily mean that there is no "nullification or impairment of a benefit" at all for the purpose of Article 3.8.

5.232 The WTO jurisprudence indicates that the concept of "nullification or impairment of a benefit" is not limited to trade losses of the complaining party but also include broader interests accruing under the WTO rules.²⁶⁵

5.233 However, the "level of nullification or impairment of a benefit" in the context of the authorization of suspension of concessions or other obligations is rather determined based on trade effects. Indeed, the Arbitrators in EC – Bananas III (US) (Article 22.6 – EC) have indicated that "[t]he review of the level of the nullification or impairment by Arbitrators from the objective benchmark foreseen by Article 22 of the DSU, is a separate process that is independent from the finding of infringements of WTO rules by a panel or the Appellate Body."²⁶⁶ Further, the Arbitrators rejected to include the lost exports of the United States in goods or services between the United States and third countries in calculating nullification or impairment, in order to avoid "double-counting" of nullification or impairment in terms of trade effects.²⁶⁷ Moreover, the Arbitrators in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment) (EC) (Article 22.6 – US) recalls that past arbitrators under Article 22.6, including the Arbitrators in Bananas – III (US) (Article 22.6 – EC), "have deemed [a] benefit [nullified or impaired] to correspond to the trade directly affected by the maintenance of the illegal measure."²⁶⁸

5.234 Thus, in the Article 22.6 arbitration proceedings, whether the proposed level of suspension is equivalent to the "level of nullification or impairment of a benefit" is usually monetarily quantified in terms of trade effects based on the objective elements presented by the parties.

Whether this Panel should find in the course of its proceeding that the "level of nullification or impairment of a benefit" for the purpose of Article 22 is zero or not

5.235 Despite the European Communities' requests, Japan is of the view that this Panel should refrain from finding that the European Communities' measure does not cause any nullification or impairment of a benefit accruing to the United States for which the [EC] can face suspension of concessions in this proceeding.

5.236 According to the DSU, the "level of nullification or impairment of a benefit" is generally examined under a 22.6 arbitration procedure. Also, the Arbitrators in previous cases have characterized the Article 22.6 arbitration proceeding as a "separate process that is independent from the finding of infringements of WTO rules by a panel or the Appellate Body."²⁶⁹ In addition, with respect to the procedural aspect in the present proceeding, particularly at this point where the Second Written Submissions have been submitted by both parties, the parties are not considered to have been provided ample opportunities to present arguments as to whether "nullification or impairment of a benefit", based on which the European Communities can face the suspension of concessions, is "zero".

2. Oral statement of Japan

5.237 This compliance dispute has raised a number of perhaps procedural, but important and systemic issues that matter to Japan. Since Japan has already put forward its arguments in detail in its third party submission, it will limit its statement to the brief observation on three points.

(a) Does the EC-US Understanding bar the United States from challenging the Cotonou Preference?

5.238 First, the European Communities argues that the United States is precluded from challenging the current European Communities' banana regime because it accepted in the Understanding that the Cotonou Preference would continue until the end of 2007 as a part of a mutual agreed solution²⁷⁰.

5.239 Japan agrees with the observation of the panel in India – Autos that "[i]t is certainly reasonable to assume ... that [mutually] agreed solutions are intended to reflect a settlement of the dispute in questions, which both parties expect will bring a final conclusion to the relevant proceedings"²⁷¹. Japan notes, in this respect, that Article 3.7 of the DSU declares that "[t]he aim of the dispute settlement mechanism is to secure a positive solution to a dispute." The ordinary meaning of the word "positive" includes, among others, "with no possibility of doubt; definite", "certain" and "not speculative or theoretical". Article 3.7 further states that a mutually agreed solution that is consistent with the covered agreements is clearly a "preferred" mean to achieve this goal. Given the DSU's emphasis on the security and predictability in the multilateral trading system and the prompt settlement of disputes as reflected in Articles 3.2 and 3.3, Japan considers that any mutually agreed solution that would lead to a positive or final resolution of disputes should have an effect of ending these particular disputes. In this respect, Japan would agree with the observation by the Appellate Body that "[a]t some point, disputes must be viewed as definitively settled by the WTO dispute settlement system."²⁷²

5.240 However, as observed by the panel in India – Autos, the contents of mutually agreed solutions may differ significantly from case to case, "which may also make it difficult to draw general conclusions as to the relevance of such solution to subsequent proceedings other than on a case by case basis."²⁷³ The European Communities recognizes in its Second Written Submission that a mutually agreed solution tends to be "a document that sets the term of the solution mutually agreed between the parties" and often "will describe the actions that the parties have undertaken to perform ... in the future."²⁷⁴ Obviously, the final settlement of a dispute would require proper implementation of the agreed future actions, but there is a possibility of disagreement between the parties as to the WTO consistency of actions allegedly taken under the mutually agreed solution. Therefore, in Japan's view, at least where "there is disagreement as to the existence or consistency with a covered agreement of measure taken to comply" such dispute can be resolved through recourse to the DSU.

5.241 Japan finds support in Article 3.6 of the DSU which provides for a possible multilateral review of the notified mutually agreed solution for its proposition that such solution may not always resolve the disputes definitely. Japan also considers that Article 3.5 of the DSU which prescribes that "all solutions ... shall be consistent with [the] covered agreement" indicates that any solution to the matter, including a mutually agreed solution, cannot modify the rights and obligations under the covered agreement.

(b) Is the current EC banana regime the "measure taken to comply"?

5.242 Second, the European Communities argues that the measure taken to comply in this case was "the tariff-quota based import regime with the characteristics agreed in Annex II of the Understanding"²⁷⁵ and the current regime cannot be the "measure taken to comply" because nothing in the Understanding or the DSB recommendations adopted in 1997 obliged the European Communities to introduce a tariff only regime.²⁷⁶ The European Communities appears to have the view that the "measure taken to comply" is limited to the one that it is obliged to take under the Understanding or specifically mandated by the DSB.

5.243 However, it is well established by the Appellate Body that the compliance panel's mandate is not confined to the review of self-declared "measure taken to comply" but may also include the measures "with a particular close relationship to the declared 'measure taken to comply', and to the recommendations and rulings of the DSB".²⁷⁷ To determine "whether there are [such] sufficiently close link", the panel is required to examine "the timing, nature, and effects of the various measures".

5.244 Japan understands that there is no disagreement between the parties as to whether "the tariff-quota based import regime with the characteristic agreed in Annex II of the Understanding" is the measure taken to comply in this dispute. The question before the panel is, therefore, whether the current EC regime has "a particular close relationship" to this declared "measure taken to comply" which it has replaced and the DSB recommendations and rulings adopted in 1997 so as to be susceptible to the review by this compliance panel.

5.245 In this respect, Japan notes that the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada) examined a number of elements to determine whether there were such "close link" between the declared measure taken to comply and the other measure at issue in that case. Such elements include: common features or components shared by the various measures at issue and how such common components relate to the DSB recommendations; subject matter of measures at issue, such as their product coverage, administrative agencies involved, affected interested parties, legal relations among the measures; timing of the measures and whether the DSB recommendations were considered in adopting the measures; and whether the measure at issue has direct effect on the declared measure taken to comply.²⁷⁸ Japan considers that these aspects are also relevant in the present case.

5.246 As referenced to by the European Communities in its second written submission²⁷⁹, the Appellate Body also explained that the determination of the scope of the "measure taken to comply" requires the examination of "the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in the original proceedings", "what they (i.e. the recommendations and rulings) required of" the defending party, and the specific steps taken by [that party].²⁸⁰ Japan considers that it may be useful to examine what are actually required in the original DSB recommendations and how and whether such requirements relate to, or were addressed by, the current banana regime in order to establish the existence or non-existence of "express link" between them.

5.247 In this regard, Japan recalls that while the European Communities noted in its second written submission that the current regime entered into force 6 years after the relevant DSB rulings²⁸¹, in its oral statement the European Communities also stated that "the decision for introduction of the tariff-only import regime was a policy decision taken years before the negotiation of the Understanding"²⁸². Japan wonders whether there is any correspondence in timing between this policy decision and the adoption of the various DSB recommendations and rulings in this dispute.²⁸³

(c) Does any nullification or impairment of benefits exist for the United States in this dispute?

5.248 Third, the European Communities argues that there is no nullification or impairment of benefits accruing to the United States.²⁸⁴ The European Communities appears to base this argument at least partly on the findings of the arbitrator under Article 22.6 of the DSU in this dispute.²⁸⁵

5.249 Japan considers that the existence of nullification or impairment can be reviewed by the panel subject to the proper allocation of the burden of proof. However, Japan agrees with the United States' view that "the European Communities confuses the function of dispute settlement proceedings under DSU Articles 6 and 21.5 with arbitration proceedings under DSU Article 22."²⁸⁶ As approvingly quoted by the Appellate Body in EC - Bananas III, the GATT panel in US - Superfund concluded that "[a] change in the competitive relationship ... must consequently be regarded ipso facto as a nullification or impairment of benefits" and that a demonstration of "no or insignificant effects" of violating measure does not prove sufficiently the existence of nullification or impairment.²⁸⁷

²⁸⁷ GATT Panel Report, US - Superfund, para 5.1.9, quoted in Appellate Body Report in EC - Bananas III, paras. 252-253.

5.250 In contrast, the role of arbitrator under Article 22.6 is not to determine the existence of nullification or impairment, but is to estimate, or quantify, the level of suspension considered to be equivalent to the level of nullification or impairment, as repeatedly stated by the previous arbitrators.²⁸⁸ In order to determine the level of nullification or impairment, the Arbitrator in US – 1916 Act (EC) (Article 22.6 – US) explained that "we need to rely, as much as possible, on credible, factual, and verifiable information" and "cannot base any such estimate on speculation".²⁸⁹ It further cautioned against the calculation approach "that are 'too remote', 'too speculative', or 'not meaningfully quantified'".²⁹⁰ Based on this "prudent approach"²⁹¹, the arbitrator declined to include a "chilling effect" of the measure at issue because it cannot "be meaningfully quantified for the purposes of determining the level of nullification or impairment".²⁹² Furthermore, the arbitrator agreed that the settlement awards entered between private parties under the 1916 Act can be included in the level of nullification or impairment, but only to the extent that disclosure of such settlement awards can be obtained; however such disclosure would be often difficult to obtain due to confidentiality requirements.²⁹³ Thus because the level of nullification or impairment established by the arbitrator is only limited to the quantum that can be calculated using "credible, factual, or verifiable information" available, the Article 22.6 arbitrator's finding that the nullification or impairment at certain point in time is "zero" may mean that there is no "credible, factual, or verifiable information" available to quantify the level of nullification or impairment, regardless of its existence.

5.251 Finally, the Appellate Body in the original proceeding in this dispute found that two points are "relevant to the question whether the European Communities has rebutted the presumption of nullification or impairment". There two points are: (i) "the United States is a producer of banana and that a potential export interest by the United States cannot be excluded; and (ii) the internal market of the United States for bananas could be affected by the EC bananas regime and by its effects on world supplies and world prices of bananas".²⁹⁴ In this regard, Japan recalls that the Appellate Body concluded in several disputes that "an adopted Appellate Body report must be treated as a final resolution to a dispute between the parties to that dispute".²⁹⁵ Japan considers that if these factual points are still relevant today, they are equally applicable to the present dispute.

N. MEXICO

1. Oral statement of Mexico

(a) Importance of the preliminary claims

5.252 Mexico was among the complaining parties in the original Bananas III case, and although it has not so far requested authorization to suspend benefits or initiated proceedings before a "compliance panel" pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU, Mexico does not rule out the possibility of exercising its rights under the DSU. Mexico has nonetheless been active, along with other Members, in seeking a negotiated settlement with the European Communities (EC) in this long standing dispute, and will continue working to that end.

5.253 Since Mexico does not rule out any possible means of resolving this dispute, the comments, recommendations and conclusions of this Panel on the preliminary claims brought by the European Communities, which will undoubtedly be of equal if not of greater importance to Mexico than any findings of the Panel regarding the substantive claims in this dispute, will be especially relevant, as they will give Mexico a much clearer idea of the options and strategies that it needs to adopt in order to compel the European Communities to fulfil its obligations.

5.254 For instance, any findings by this Panel pertaining to issues on which the parties in dispute have taken contradictory positions, such as those below, will be critical to the exercise of Mexico's rights:

- The absence, or existence and identification, of "measures taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings", adopted by the European Communities in order to comply with the Bananas III Panel report, in accordance with the DSU;
- the moment as of which the European Communities' measures may "validly" be contested in the light of the Ministerial Decision of 14 November 2001, and so forth.

(b) Issues of systemic interest

5.255 Although Mexico has a systemic interest in a number of issues discussed in this dispute, it considers it appropriate to give a brief opinion on one of the above points, which relates to the need to demonstrate whether or not there is impairment and nullification for the purposes of bringing an Article 21.5 claim, as interpreted from the European Communities' arguments.

5.256 Mexico considers that the precedents established by the Bananas III Panel should be sufficient to set aside the European Communities' arguments (see para. 252 of the Bananas III Panel report, for example). It must nonetheless express concern with the European Communities' arguments, as they impose "legal standing" requirements where there are none.

5.257 There is no provision in the DSU requiring that there be nullification and impairment as a pre requisite for initiating proceedings. Article 3.8 to which the European Communities so frequently refers speaks of matters that have nothing to do with a Member being able to initiate proceedings under the DSU, and even less with a panel being precluded from ruling on the measures at issue on the presumption that there is no nullification and impairment. The provisions of Article 3.8 cannot be interpreted as a "legal standing" requirement, and Mexico fails to see how the burden of proof requirements or the presumption of nullification or impairment referred to in that Article can mean what the European Communities now contends.

5.258 Mexico has a problem with its reading of the European Communities argument, for it tends to simplify recourse to the dispute settlement mechanism to securing the right to suspend concessions or other obligations, which would appear to imply that if such is not the purpose of the party initiating a dispute under the DSU, the party's claim should be rejected. The European Communities seems to forget that the principal aim of the dispute settlement mechanism is to "secure a positive solution to a dispute" and that in the absence of a mutually agreed solution, "the first objective of the dispute settlement mechanism is usually to secure the withdrawal of the measures concerned if these are found to be inconsistent with the provisions of any of the covered agreements" (Article 3.7 of the DSU).

5.259 Notwithstanding the above, even if the Panel were to confirm that there was no nullification and impairment and it was therefore impossible to quantify the financial impact of a suspension of benefits, this does not mean that the European Communities is released from the obligation to bring its measures into conformity with a panel's recommendations or that a panel is precluded from suggesting a way in which "the Member concerned could implement the recommendations" (Article 19.1 of the DSU). It should be recalled that "neither compensation nor the suspension of concessions or other obligations is preferred to full implementation of a recommendation to bring a measure into conformity with the covered agreements" (Article 22.1 of the DSU).

5.260 In connection with this dispute, the European Communities contends that since the United States suffers no "nullification and impairment", "it is probably the only case ever heard in this room where the contested measure does not affect at all the complaining party" (EC – Oral Statement, para. 26). However, it seems to us that this is not the first time that something of this sort has happened and will probably not be the last; therefore the possibility should not be ruled out. In this connection, Mexico would point out that in this dispute the European Communities brought an Article 21.5 claim in the past (undoubtedly without any consultations being held either) without, as far as Mexico can judge, itself suffering any "nullification and impairment" quantifiable to any degree higher than zero, and that this did not prevent a panel from being convened (WT/DS27/RW/EEC). To uphold the European Communities' argument would close the door to any respondent Member initiated Article 21.5 proceedings.

5.261 One last point worthy of mention is the provision in Article 22.5 of the DSU that the "[t]he DSB shall not authorize suspension of concessions or other obligations if a covered agreement prohibits such suspension". The negotiators appear to have left the door open for disputes to be initiated under the DSU irrespective of a possible prohibition of suspension of concessions or other obligations.

5.262 Contrary to the foregoing, if the European Communities' line of reasoning is followed and applied to the above paragraph, the proper reading would be that Members would be precluded from bringing before panels claims relating to Agreements prohibiting the suspension of concessions or other obligations, given that since concessions or obligations cannot be suspended, the notions of nullification and impairment would be meaningless if they could not lead to suspension of concessions or other obligations. In other words, there would be no point in quantifying the level of nullification and impairment as there would be no suspension of concessions or other obligations. Mexico believes that if the negotiators of the DSU had been thinking along those lines they would have made it clear in Article 22.5 and would not have left the door open to disputes in which concessions and other obligations could not be suspended, irrespective of nullification or impairment.

(c) Comments on the substantive claims

5.263 As regards the analysis of the measures at issue that is incumbent upon this Panel, Mexico considers that most of the analysis was already conducted by the Bananas III Panel, the work done by the Arbitrators in Bananas III (US) (Article 22.6 – EC), and the two arbitral awards deriving from the Annex to the Ministerial Declaration of 14 November 2001. Accordingly, it should not be difficult for this Panel to reach the relevant conclusions.

5.264 As regards the substantive claims (i.e. violations of Articles I and XIII:1 and XIII:2 of the GATT 1994), Mexico concurs with those third parties which, together with the United States, have taken positions consistent with the above precedents and which contend that the European Communities' regime for the importation of bananas violates Article I of the GATT 1994 in establishing duty-free treatment for ACP imports in quantities up to 775,000 tonnes, which the European Communities does not grant the other WTO Members, and is in breach of GATT Article XIII in reserving the 775,000 tonnes free of duty for bananas originating in ACP countries while excluding the other WTO Members from this preferential tariff quota.

5.265 As a third party to these proceedings and a party to the original Bananas III proceedings, Mexico considers that this dispute has not been settled, and that it will in any event be very interesting to know whether the European Communities has actually taken any action to comply with its obligations, or whether the European Communities has failed to take the opportunity of bringing its measures into conformity by adopting compliance measures, in which case there would be no need to establish an Article 21.5 panel and authorization to suspend benefits could be requested without delay.

(d) Conclusion

5.266 Mexico respectfully request that this Panel set aside the European Communities' preliminary objections and, specifically, those arguments which impose legal standing requirements for initiating dispute settlement proceedings, and that the Panel find that the measures at issue are inconsistent with Article I of the GATT 1994 and in particular, given the expiry of the extension granted to the European Communities by the Ministerial Conference in paragraph 1 of the Decision of 14 November 2001, that the measures complained of are inconsistent with the text of Article XIII of the GATT 1994.

1. Combined written submission of Nicaragua and Panama

(a) Introduction

5.267 Panama and Nicaragua have been denied the security of lasting, compliant access to the EC banana market for a great many years. By reverting once again to non-compliance, the European Communities has continued to deny that access, and has made the intolerable burden of this dispute that much larger for the developing-country banana suppliers of Latin America and the WTO system itself. In the proceeding now before the Panel, the violations of GATT Articles I and XIII at issue are unmistakably similar to those already reviewed in the past. While the European Communities has tried to cloud those straight-forward violations with a host of "preliminary objections" and other extraneous claims, its non-compliant measures are too obvious to obscure. Like the United States, Panama and Nicaragua consider that the measures introduced by the European Communities on 1 January 2006 are fully reviewable under Article 21.5, and constitute prima facie violations of GATT Article I:1, and Articles XIII:1 and 2.

(b) The European Communities' preliminary objections have no basis in law or fact

5.268 With its first objection – that the United States is barred from contesting any ACP treatment from "the period between the end of 2005 and the end of 2007" – the European Communities has stitched together five individually indefensible allegations: (i) that the United States "unconditionally" accepted whatever "more favourable treatment" the European Communities wanted to accord ACP suppliers from 2006 through 2007; (ii) that the "unconditional acceptance" established by the Understanding formed part of a "mutually agreed solution" in the sense of DSU Article 3.6; (iii) that a mutually agreed solution under DSU Article 3.6 precludes the United States from seeking recourse to Article 21.5; (iv) that, even if the Understanding was not a "mutually agreed solution," it was an international agreement that must be taken into account in determining the United States' rights under the DSU; and (v) that the "principle of good faith" in any case precludes the US complaint.

5.269 The European Communities' first allegation relies on a flawed factual premise to try to read into the Understanding a renunciation of future DSU rights not otherwise specified in its text. At the time the Understanding was reached in April 2001, no interested MFN Member, the United States included, was willing to accept waiver authority for whatever "more favourable" ACP banana treatment the European Communities wished to accord. The only real "characteristic" understood by all interested Members in April 2001 was that absent acceptable, narrowly-drawn banana conditions, which would still have to be negotiated, the European Communities' waiver would not be approved.

5.270 Contrary to the European Communities' second allegation, the Understanding was not a "mutually agreed solution," but rather only a "means" to such a solution. The text of the Understanding, US statements at the DSB, EC statements in dispute settlement, and the letter exchange between Ambassador Zoellick and then-Commissioner Lamy confirm this interpretation. Clearly, a well-documented unilateral view of one signatory (the United States), at odds with the unilateral view of another signatory (the EC) precludes a mutuality of agreement over whether the Understanding was a solution. If there is no mutuality of agreement, there is no mutually agreed solution. Even if an Article 3.6 agreement had been reached, it would still not constitute a "solution" to the dispute in the sense of DSU Articles 3.5 and 3.7 unless the agreement was "consistent with the covered agreements." The European Communities' banana measures are not WTO-consistent and therefore are not a "mutually agreed solution" to the Bananas dispute.

5.271 The European Communities' third allegation fails because the Understanding is neither a renunciation of rights nor a mutually agreed solution. Even if the Understanding were a mutually agreed solution, the DSU has no rule disallowing parties to a "mutually agreed solution" from seeking recourse to Article 21.5. As for the European Communities' fourth allegation – the alleged jurisdictional "bar" – not a single rule in the DSU nor provision in the Understanding substantiates such a bar. There can hardly be a "legal effect" as between the Understanding and the DSU if there is not even a specific DSU rule, much less a specific bilateral provision that invokes that rule, to which that legal effect can be ascribed. The European Communities' fifth and last assertion – that "the principle of good faith, which runs through the entire DSU," requires the United States "to refrain" from disavowing "the existence of the Cotonou Preferences until the end of 2007" – is one that works against the European Communities' "preliminary objection," not the US complaint.

5.272 In its second "preliminary objection," the European Communities erroneously claims that the "tariff only" provision of the Understanding was not a "measure taken to comply" in the sense of Article 21.5. The European Communities concedes in its submissions in the Ecuador proceeding that Regulation 1964 was intended to implement the "second" compliance suggestion of the Bananas III Article 21.5 panel and, thus, falls within the jurisdiction of Article 21.5. Moreover, paragraph B of the Understanding unambiguously frames "Tariff Only" as a mandate. The tariff only provisions of the "secondary legislation" cited in paragraph B (Regulation 404, as amended by Regulation 216) simply confirm that tariff only was intended for the purpose of bringing the European Communities into compliance with Bananas III. Never once between 1999 through the end of 2005 did the European Communities suggest that tariff only was not a requirement of the Understanding.

5.273 Prior cases have established that measures having a "particularly close" or "inextricably linked" relationship to the DSB ruling at issue are deemed to be "measures taken to comply." The factual and legal circumstances leading up to Regulation 1964 establish an explicit, unbroken European Communities effort since 1999 to comply with Bananas III by way of a "flat-tariff" regime to be installed no later than January 2006.

(c) The European Communities' ACP tariff preference is inconsistent with GATT Article I:1 and is not covered by its Article I waiver

5.274 The European Communities does not contest the underlying violation of GATT Article I:1, but argues instead that the GATT Article I waiver excuses its current tariff discrimination. The European Communities mistakenly alleges continued coverage under the waiver, on the grounds that its regime: is "different ... than the one analysed by the Arbitrator;" is still entitled to be assessed under the original Annex requirement that an "envisaged rebinding ... would result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers, taking into account ... all EC WTO market access commitments;" and fulfils the European Communities' own volume-based assessment of that Annex standard.

5.275 Prior WTO findings have made clear that when a Member invokes an exception to a WTO obligation, it is asserting an affirmative defence and bears the burden of proving that exception. As the Member invoking the affirmative waiver defence, the EC, not the United States, bears the burden of demonstrating that its WTO-inconsistent tariff arrangement meets every condition of that waiver defence. The European Communities has not met its burden.

5.276 The European Communities acknowledged that if the Arbitrator issued a second negative determination, the waiver would automatically lapse upon implementation of its new regime. It now walks away from that view, arguing that the Annex allows it to install any regime of its choosing, so long as the regime differs from the ones invalidated in Arbitration. The submissions of the United States, Panama and Nicaragua have shown in careful detail that this new EC reading would require the Panel to ignore the ordinary meaning and narrow conditionality of tiret five, the waiver's mandate that any rebinding be subject to the arbitration "controls" under the Annex, and the waiver's negotiating history. Moreover, the European Communities has sought to introduce undue confusion by asserting that its regime fulfils the waiver standard. As confirmed by an analysis by the Centre for International Economics, the European Communities' assertion is incorrect.

- (d) The European Communities' ACP tariff quota is inconsistent with GATT Article XIII:1 and XIII:2

5.277 The European Communities seeks to defend its ACP-exclusive tariff-rate quota by proposing a "Vienna Convention" analysis of Article XIII under which its exclusive ACP tariff quota would be allowed to escape the strict obligations of Article XIII and be addressed only by GATT Article I. This defence has already been rejected in prior Bananas III proceedings, has no textual support, and has untenable implications for Article XIII if it were ever adopted.

5.278 The text of Article XIII:1 requires that when a Member chooses to restrict, or limit, imports of a product from one Member, it shall, in a similar or like manner, restrict or limit imports from all other Members who import the same product. The equally clear text of paragraph 5 of Article XIII extends the requirements of Article XIII:1 (and XIII:2) to tariff quotas. As the European Communities is quantitatively "restricting" imports of ACP bananas under a tariff quota within the meaning of Article XIII:1 and XIII:5, and is failing to "similarly restrict" MFN-origin bananas, a violation of Article XIII:1 has been established.

5.279 Further, pursuant to the chapeau of Article XIII:2, any application of a tariff quota must approximate "shares" that "might be expected ... in the absence of restrictions." Here, the European Communities has allotted a tariff quota to ACP non-substantial suppliers, but has failed to distribute any share to MFN suppliers. Insofar as Panama, Nicaragua, and all other MFN suppliers are excluded from the European Communities' tariff quota, the European Communities' exclusive tariff quota cannot be said to reflect shares that would otherwise be present in an unrestricted market, in breach of Article XIII:2.

5.280 The parties' subsequent practice implies agreement on the fact that any tariff quota is subject to the non-discrimination obligations of Article XIII. The European Communities' argument that "extensive GATT and WTO practice" supports the opposite view is premised on its mischaracterization of the Enabling Clause and a thirty-year-old waiver obtained by certain South Pacific islands.

- (e) The United States is not required to demonstrate nullification or impairment

5.281 The European Communities closes with the contention that even if its tariff and tariff-quota measures are out of compliance with Bananas III, the Panel should find that those measures have not caused nullification or impairment of US benefits. The Appellate Body in Bananas III already rejected an earlier identical suggestion made by the EC. The United States is a producer of bananas, with annual volumes of nearly 32,000 metric tons, more than in some of the ACP countries. The European Communities effectively acknowledged a US export interest by proposing a withdrawal of concessions on US bananas in the Foreign Sales Corporation dispute. Moreover, because imports displaced by the European Communities' discrimination could be diverted into the US market, the United States has a legitimate trading interest in ensuring that the European Communities' discrimination does not disrupt its internal market, global supplies, or market pricing.

5.282 Through this argument, the European Communities appears to be improperly trying to convert this compliance proceeding into a DSU Article 22 arbitration, in which the level of nullification or impairment would be examined. Article 3.7 specifies, in hierarchical order, three potential means by which a dispute can be resolved: a mutually agreed solution consistent with the covered agreements; a withdrawal of the WTO-inconsistent measures; or, as a "last resort", a suspension of concessions. When, and if, a dispute reaches the "last resort" phase where the precise level of nullification and impairment must be determined, that level is to be determined by a specialized proceeding developed for that very purpose, i.e., arbitration under DSU Article 22.

(f) Conclusion

5.283 Panama and Nicaragua respectfully urge the Panel to find, on the promptest and clearest possible basis, that the European Communities' tariff preference for ACP suppliers is inconsistent with GATT Article I:1, and that its 775,000 mt ACP reserve is separately inconsistent with GATT Article XIII:1 and 2.

2. Combined oral statement by Nicaragua and Panama

(a) Nicaragua's role in this dispute

5.284 The European Communities argues that through participation in world trade, the developing countries can achieve "their emancipation from the dependence on development financing and international donations". The development aims of the WTO system are not being served, however, by an EC policy that inflicts huge costs on one set of developing countries (Latin American suppliers) for the benefit of subsidized EC producers and a select group of other developing countries (ACP suppliers).

5.285 For the past 15 years, Nicaragua has helped lead the fight for fair banana access into the European Communities for the most basic economic reason: to promote growth and relieve poverty among its people. Bananas are one of its major agricultural crops, employing thousands of Nicaraguans within the country and another 30,000 on banana farms throughout the region. Its GNI is less than $1,000 per capita. Nearly all of the European Communities' preferred ACP suppliers have GNIs well above this.

5.286 Even after repeated losses in Bananas I, Bananas II, multiple Bananas III proceedings, and two Arbitrations, the European Communities still elected in 2006 to erect an illegal 135 per cent increase in its bound €75 tariff, combined with an exclusive duty-free ACP tariff quota – an insurmountable burden for Nicaragua's industry. Nicaragua has not accepted defeat because it believes in the principle that Members must foster development in all countries, not just some. As EC Commissioner Mandelson himself observed, the European Communities' preferences "discriminate against some developing countries ... often equally needy ... [which] is not right morally nor compatible with international trade rules."

(b) Panama's role in this dispute

5.287 Panama has participated in the dispute since its WTO accession in 1997. Like Nicaragua, Panama depends on banana exports for economic and social stability, and is one of two "principal supplying" banana interests to the EC.

5.288 Although the European Communities has argued that the purpose of its current arrangement is to "balance" the developing-country interests involved, the European Communities' large banana subsidies have governed the design of the European Communities' common banana regime since its origin in 1993. To stabilize internal prices, ensure EC grower profits, and promote subsidy predictability, the European Communities has imposed strict restrictions on Latin American access, regardless of MFN trading rights. Panama and the other developing countries of Latin America are now contributing nearly $1 billion into EC customs under a €176 tariff, primarily to help sustain this subsidized EC production.

5.289 Like the alleged purpose of its regime, the purpose of the Doha waiver is nothing as the European Communities describes it. Given the European Communities' non-compliance in the banana dispute, Panama and other Latin American countries opposed the European Communities' waiver request for nearly two years until the European Communities inscribed a clear commitment into the Annex that vested control over its 2006 regime in a WTO Arbitrator. For the European Communities to argue that Panama lifted its waiver reserve in exchange for EC unilateralism would write Panama's entire two-year reserve and negotiating efforts out of existence.

(c) The WTO inconsistencies

5.290 At the heart of this case rest two basic violations: the application of a €176 duty on MFN bananas and a zero duty on ACP bananas, in violation of GATT Article I; and the application of a 775,000 metric ton tariff quota exclusively to ACP suppliers in violation of GATT Article XIII.

(i) The European Communities' failed objections

5.291 The European Communities' "mutually agreed solution" objection begins by presuming a US commitment under the Understanding to forego all rights as to any "Cotonou Preference". Had the United States committed to accept any tariff preference as of 2006, it would have agreed in the Understanding to much more than simply a "lift[ed] ... reserve," which did nothing but signal its willingness to negotiate, alongside MFN suppliers, the necessary Article I banana conditions.

5.292 The European Communities claims next that the Understanding is a "mutually agreed solution" under DSU Article 3.6. A "mutually agreed solution", by its very words, requires two things: a solution and a mutual agreement that there is a solution. Here there was neither. The Understanding, on its face, was not an immediate solution; it was only a "means" to what the parties hoped would be an ultimate solution. By failing to implement the last required step, a compliant tariff-only regime, the European Communities chose to prevent the Understanding from maturing into a positive solution. Equally absent here was any mutuality of agreement that a DSU Article 3.6 solution had been reached. When the European Communities unilaterally notified the Understanding as a mutually agreed solution, the United States expressly rejected that EC attempt.

5.293 The European Communities' next objection – that Regulation 1964 is not a "measure taken to comply" with Bananas III, removing it from Article 21.5 coverage – strains logic to its breaking point. It makes no sense for the European Communities to have conceded in Ecuador's proceeding that Regulation 1964 is a "measure taken to comply," while arguing here that the very same regulation is not a "measure taken to comply." If the European Communities was correct that its compliance obligations ended only eight months into the Understanding, not only its 2006 tariff requirement, but also its 2002-2005 tariff, volume, and licensing requirements would become a nullity. There is nothing in the text of the Understanding, nor in the DSU itself, that would eradicate the European Communities' tariff-only obligation simply because the United States, to help induce compliance, agreed to terminate the imposition of retaliation in early 2002, while retaining the underlying authority for those measures.

5.294 As an alternative to claiming Article 21.5 inadmissibility, the European Communities argues that the case should fail because the United States will allegedly be found to have "zero" nullification or impairment under Article 22. The European Communities tried this "no nullification or impairment" argument, and a related "no standing" argument, once before in Bananas III, and was already told it was wrong on both counts. Indeed, the European Communities itself, a net importer of bananas, requested an Article 21.5 panel on bananas in 1999.

(ii) The European Communities' breach of GATT Article I

5.295 The European Communities makes no attempt to deny that its discriminatory tariff is intrinsically inconsistent with Article I. What it tries to argue, instead, is that even with the waiver's strict arbitration controls, and the two negative Arbitration rulings, the European Communities was allowed to install virtually any regime it wanted to as of 2006. If this is what the Annex meant, no Latin American supplier would have bothered establishing a prospective, expedited review procedure with an automatically lapsed waiver if the Arbitrator determined that the European Communities "has failed to rectify the matter."

5.296 In any case, the applicable waiver standard was "whether the envisaged rebinding would result in ... at least maintaining total market access for MFN suppliers, taking into account ... all EC WTO market access commitments relating to bananas." As confirmed by the Arbitrator, the opening words, "envisaged" and "would," required a prospective analysis. A prospective analysis is not possible today, nearly two years after the regime took effect. Furthermore, even if that standard were still operative, it would require several elements: (i) a "rebinding;" (ii) a fulfilment of the European Communities' Article XXVIII commitments attaching to that rebinding; (iii) a fulfilment of the European Communities' Article XXIV commitments that still attach to several of its prior enlargements; and (iv) a demonstration that total MFN conditions of competition fulfil the Arbitrator's price-gap results, adjusted to take into account the 135% increase in ACP and EBA preferences as of 2006. None of these elements is satisfied by the European Communities' current measures. The European Communities has lost its waiver for bananas, making its tariff discrimination illegal under Article I.

(iii) The European Communities' breach of GATT Article XIII

5.297 Contrary to the European Communities' assertions, there is nothing permissive in the non-discrimination provisions of GATT Article XIII. The words employed in paragraphs 1, 2, and 5 – "no," "shall," "all," "similarly," and "any" – are absolute in character, requiring the similar-treatment rule of paragraph 1 and the equitable-share rules of paragraph 2 to apply to all tariff quotas, not just some. A tariff quota reserved exclusively for non-substantial ACP suppliers, under which no bananas from Panama and Nicaragua are allowed entry, does not fulfil these terms.

5.298 The European Communities argues that because the challenging Member's trade is not covered by the ACP tariff quota, this measure should be considered a separate regime, and that because the tariff quota "caps" ACP tariff-quota "benefits," it is a measure regulated solely by Article I. These are the European Communities' old Bananas III Article XIII defences, which have already been rejected as textually unsupported and dangerous to the principles of Article XIII. It is no defence to cite various waivers going back to 1948 for the alleged principle that exclusive tariff quotas are only regulated by Article I. Bananas III was the first case in which a broad challenge to tariff quotas was made. Relevant "subsequent practice" can therefore only be gauged from that point forward. The United States has cited three post-Bananas III examples of waivers for tariff-quotas that referenced both Articles I and XIII. This authentic "subsequent practice" is further supported by the European Communities' own practices following Bananas III, including its prior acknowledgements that an exclusive ACP tariff quota under "tariff only" would need to be covered by a waiver not just of Article I, but of Article XIII as well. With the termination of its prior Article XIII waiver as of December 31, 2005, the European Communities' reserved tariff quota for ACP suppliers has become a patent violation of Article XIII.

5.299 To help put an end to the European Communities' decade-long non-compliance, and finally enable the "effective resolution" of this dispute consistent with the objectives of the DSU, Panama and Nicaragua urge that the United States' case be upheld on both claims.

VI. INTERIM REVIEW

6.1 On 6 February 2008, the Panel issued its interim report to the parties. On 14 February 2008, the Panel received written requests for review of precise aspects of the interim report from the United States and the European Communities. The Panel subsequently received additional communications on 15 and 21 February 2008 from the United States and on 20 and 21 February 2008 from the European Communities. The Panel held a meeting with both parties on 25 February 2008 to receive their arguments and comments regarding the requests of review of the interim report. On 26 February 2008, the parties submitted written versions of the statements they had made at the 25 February 2008 meeting with the Panel. The Panel issued its final report to the parties on 29 February 2008.

6.2 The Panel has modified aspects of its report in light of the comments from the parties where it considered that appropriate, as explained below. The Panel has also made some minor editorial adjustments to the text and footnotes, as explained below. References to paragraph numbers and footnotes in this Section refer to those in the interim report, except as otherwise noted.

A. PRODUCT DESCRIPTION

6.3 The United States requested the Panel to delete paragraphs 2.24 and 2.25 of the interim report, which contained a description of the product at issue in the current proceedings (bananas).²⁹⁶ The United States argued that it has been unable to identify the source of information contained in these paragraphs based on the parties' submissions in this dispute. The United States further noted that the footnotes to these paragraphs do not identify any of the submissions as the source.

6.4 In the light of the United States' request, the Panel has introduced some changes to paragraphs 2.24 and 2.25 of the interim report. The Panel has, however, decided to maintain sections of those paragraphs with the appropriate indication of their source. The Panel has also maintained the section in those paragraphs that refers to the importance that bananas production and trade has for many WTO Members, especially developing and least-developed country Members, which was emphasized by the parties and by a number of third parties.

B. EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES' COUNCIL REGULATION (EC) NO. 1528/2007 OF 20 DECEMBER 2007

6.5 The European Communities requested the Panel to introduce in paragraph 2.36 of the interim report, a reference to the European Communities' Council Regulation (EC) No. 1528/2007 adopted on ²⁹⁶ United States' letter to the Panel dated 14 February 2008 (request for review of precise aspects of the Interim Report), para. 1.

20 December 2007. In the European Communities' view, without such reference, the Panel's factual description of "the current regime for imports of bananas to the European Communities" for the purposes of the current proceedings is incomplete.²⁹⁷ The European Communities requested the Panel to further note that, with the adoption of this new Regulation, "the tariff quota for the 775,000 tons of bananas [opened for imports of bananas originating in ACP countries] does not exist any more".²⁹⁸ According to the European Communities:

"As a result [of the changes made through Regulation 1528/2007,] Regulation 1964/2005, which is the Regulation setting forth the European Communities' banana import regime, now provides simply that all imports of bananas into the European Communities are subject to a single tariff of €176 per tonne."²⁹⁹

6.6 The European Communities added that:

"[T]he subject matter of these proceedings was precisely the tariff quota [for 775,000 mt of bananas originating in ACP countries]... [T]he terms of reference of the Panel included solely an examination of whether this tariff rate quota was compatible with Articles I and XIII of the GATT. This tariff rate quota does not exist anymore.

The United States' Request for the Establishment of the Panel also listed the 'measures through which the European Communities maintains its current import regime': Regulation 404/93 and Regulation 1964/2005. The relevant provision of Regulation 1964/2005 was deleted and ... Regulation 404/93 was repealed on December 31, 2007. Therefore, the measures that were the subject matter of these proceedings do not exist anymore."³⁰⁰

6.7 In the European Communities' view, there are a number of legal grounds supporting the conclusion that the Panel is under an:

"[O]bligation to take into consideration the undisputable fact that the measure that was the subject of these proceedings does not exist any more and to reflect fully this fact in its Final Report ...

[T]his obligation stems from the Panel's duty to make an objective assessment of the facts, as provided for in Article 11 of the DSU and to secure a positive solution to the dispute, as provided for in Articles 3.4 and 3.7 of the DSU".³⁰¹

6.8 The European Communities also requested the Panel to modify the language of paragraph 2.41 of the interim report accordingly.

6.9 In response, the United States argued that the European Communities was seeking "to introduce new facts to the record that would alter the description of the measure that was the subject of this proceeding".³⁰² In the United States' view:

²⁹⁷ European Communities' letter to the Panel dated 14 February 2008 (request for review of precise aspects of the Interim Report), para. 1.

²⁹⁸ Ibid.

³⁰¹ Ibid., paras. 7-8.

"Contrary to what the European Communities argues in its comments, the description in paragraph 2.36 of the EC's bananas regime 'for purposes of this dispute' is not incomplete. The measure that was challenged by the United States and is the subject of this proceeding is the EC's bananas import regime implemented through EC Council Regulation No. 1964/2005 as it existed at the time that this Panel was established – that is, with a zero-duty tariff rate quota available only to ACP origin bananas. This is the measure that is within the Panel's terms of reference, and indeed the measure upon which the Panel has based its findings... Council Regulation 1528/2007 did not exist at the time the Panel was established or even at the time that the Panel held its substantive meeting with the Parties on November 6 and 7, 2007. It is therefore incorrect to suggest that such an amendment is relevant for purposes of this dispute."³⁰³

6.10 The United States added that "the EC's attempt to introduce this material at this stage of the proceeding is contrary to both the DSU and the Working Procedures for the Panel ..." ³⁰⁴

6.11 In accordance with the terms of reference approved by the DSB on 12 July 2007, this Panel is limited to examining the matter referred to the DSB by the United States in document WT/DS27/83, and to make such findings as will assist the DSB in making the recommendations or in giving the rulings provided for in the agreements cited by the United States in the same document.³⁰⁵ The measure challenged by the United States through this recourse to Article 21.5 of the DSU is the European Communities' "current import regime for bananas" implemented through Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 and Council Regulation (EEC) 404/93 of 13 February 1993, as amended by Regulation (EC) 216/2001 of 29 January 2001.³⁰⁶ In its request for the establishment of the Panel, the United States also identified, as part of the "measures through which the EC maintains its current import regime for bananas" "any amendments, implementing measures, and other related measures".³⁰⁷ As noted by the Appellate Body in its report on Chile – Price Band System:

"If the terms of reference in a dispute are broad enough to include amendments to a measure – as they are in this case – and if it is necessary to consider an amendment in order to secure a positive solution to the dispute – as it is here – then it is appropriate to consider the measure as amended in coming to a decision in a dispute."³⁰⁸

6.12 In the same report, the Appellate Body also noted that:

"[G]enerally speaking, the demands of due process are such that a complaining party should not have to adjust its pleadings throughout dispute settlement proceedings in order to deal with a disputed measure as a 'moving target'."³⁰⁹

6.13 According to the European Communities, Regulation No. 1528/2007 was adopted by the European Communities' Council on 20 December 2007 and entered into force on 31 December 2007, when it was published in the Official Journal of the European Union.³¹⁰

6.14 On 16 January 2008, the European Communities stated in writing that it had no comments on the descriptive (factual and argument) sections of the Panel's draft report that had been circulated to the parties on 11 January 2008. These descriptive sections included paragraphs 2.43 and 2.48, equivalent to paragraphs 2.36 and 2.41 of the interim report. Subsequently, in its interim review request of 14 February 2008, the European Communities informed the Panel of the introduction of amendments to its banana import regime, made through Regulation No. 1528/2007. The European Communities submitted a copy of Regulation No. 1528/2007 to the Panel for the first time during the interim review meeting of the Panel with the parties on 25 February 2008.

6.15 According to the Working Procedures adopted by the Panel in the current proceedings:

"Parties shall submit all factual evidence to the Panel as early as possible and no later than during the substantive meeting, except with respect to evidence necessary for the answering of questions. Exceptions will be granted by the Panel upon a showing of good cause. In such cases, the other Party shall be accorded a period of time for commenting, as appropriate."³¹¹

6.16 The Appellate Body has explicitly held that the interim review stage is not the appropriate time to introduce new evidence:

"The interim review stage is not an appropriate time to introduce new evidence. We recall that Article 15 of the DSU governs the interim review. Article 15 permits parties, during that stage of the proceedings, to submit comments on the draft report issued by the panel, and to make requests 'for the panel to review precise aspects of the interim report'. At that time, the panel process is all but completed; it is only—in the words of Article 15—'precise aspects' of the report that must be verified during the interim review. And this, in our view, cannot properly include an assessment of new and unanswered evidence ..."³¹²

6.17 As noted above, in the current case, the European Communities did not introduce evidence of the new Regulation with its written request for reviewing precise aspects of the interim report made on 14 February 2008, but only at the interim review meeting of the Panel held on 25 February 2008.

6.18 For the reasons stated above, the Panel considers that the evidence submitted by the European Communities regarding the adoption of EC Regulation No. 1528/2007 is inadmissible at this late stage in the process. Accordingly, the Panel has not modified the language contained in paragraphs 2.36 and 2.41 of the interim report.

C. AWARD OF THE ARBITRATORS IN THE PROCEEDINGS REQUESTED BY THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES UNDER ARTICLE 22.6 OF THE DSU

6.19 The United States requested the Panel to modify paragraph 2.71 of the interim report, in order to include a reference to the findings contained in paragraphs 5.96-5.98 of the Decision by the Arbitrators in the Article 22.6 proceeding in the EC – Bananas III dispute, regarding the WTO consistency of the earlier EC bananas import regime.³¹³

³¹⁰ During the interim review meeting, and in response to a question from the Panel, the European Communities stated that the official proposal for Regulation No. 1528/2007 was presented by the European Commission on 13 November 2007.

³¹¹ Working Procedures adopted by the Panel, dated 22 August 2007, see Annex A-2.

³¹² Appellate Body Report on EC – Sardines, para. 301 (footnotes omitted).

³¹³ United States' letter to the Panel dated 14 February 2008 (request by the United States for review of precise aspects of the Interim Report), para. 2.

6.20 In response to the United States' request, the European Communities argued that it does "not see the relevance for the current proceedings of the findings of the 1999 Article 22.6 Arbitrators on the WTO consistency of the measures that the European Communities had in place at that time".³¹⁴

6.21 In the European Communities' view:

"First, the subject matter of that Arbitration was to determine the level of nullification or impairment suffered by the United States at that time. Any statements included in the Arbitration Award on the compatibility of those measures with the WTO rules can only be considered as simple dicta that have no legal effects. Second, the measures in place at that time were completely different from the measure that constituted the subject matter of the current proceedings. And, third, incorporating into this Report the Arbitrator's findings on the old measures' WTO compatibility, but refusing to incorporate the Arbitrators' findings on nullification and impairment in the paragraphs of the Report that follow paragraph 8.5 would seriously compromise the consistency of the Panel's reasoning in this Report."³¹⁵

6.22 The Panel has modified paragraph 2.71 of the interim report in order to include a reference to the findings contained in the Decision by the Arbitrators in the Article 22.6 proceeding in the EC – Bananas III dispute, regarding the WTO consistency of the earlier EC bananas import regime.

D. DESCRIPTION OF THE MEASURES CHALLENGED BY THE UNITED STATES

6.23 Both parties requested the Panel to modify paragraph 7.3 of the interim report in order to better reflect the description of the challenged measures as contained in the United States' request for the establishment of the Panel.³¹⁶ The Panel has modified paragraph 7.3 of the interim report accordingly.

E. TERMS AND MAIN ELEMENTS OF THE BANANAS UNDERSTANDING

6.24 The United States requested the Panel to modify paragraph 7.100 of the interim report in order to clarify the meaning of the last sentence in that paragraph.³¹⁷ The Panel has modified paragraph 7.100 of the interim report accordingly.

F. ADOPTION OF THE BANANAS UNDERSTANDING SUBSEQUENT TO RECOMMENDATIONS AND SUGGESTIONS BY THE DSB

1. Related first compliance proceeding brought by Ecuador

6.25 The United States requested the Panel to modify paragraph 7.122 of the interim report, to either delete the reference to the report of the panel in the first compliance panel brought by Ecuador or, alternatively, clarify that the suggestions in that report were "made in the related first compliance proceeding brought by Ecuador".³¹⁸ The United States also requested the Panel to modify footnote 419 to paragraph 7.122 of the interim report, in order to delete the reference to the minutes of the meeting at which the DSB adopted the report of the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador. The ³¹⁸ Ibid., para. 6.

United States also requested the Panel to add a reference in the footnote to the minutes of the meeting at which the DSB authorized the United States to suspend the application of concessions to the European Communities.³¹⁹

6.26 In response, the European Communities argued that it:

"[D]oes not consider that a reference to the DSB meeting authorizing the United States' retaliation measures should be added to [footnote 419 to paragraph 7.122 of the interim report]."³²⁰

6.27 The Panel has modified paragraph 7.122 and footnote 419 of the interim report. The language in paragraph 7.122 now clarifies that the suggestions were "made in the related first compliance proceeding brought by Ecuador". A reference was added in the footnote to the minutes of the meeting at which the DSB authorized the United States to suspend the application to the European Communities and its member States of tariff concessions and related obligations under GATT 1994, consistent with the decision of the Arbitrators contained in document WT/DS27/ARB.

2. Further adjustment of language

6.28 For the same reasons explained in the previous section, the United States requested the Panel to modify paragraphs 7.127 and 7.128 of the interim report, to replace the expression "and suggestions" with the expression "and the related suggestions".³²¹ The Panel has modified paragraphs 7.127 and 7.128 of the interim report accordingly.

G. BANANAS UNDERSTANDING: ARGUMENTS BY THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES CONCERNING GOOD FAITH

6.29 The United States requested the Panel to modify paragraph 7.162 of the interim report, in order to avoid any confusion regarding the Panel's reasoning.³²² The Panel has modified paragraph 7.162 of the interim report accordingly.

H. PRELIMINARY OBJECTION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES CONCERNING WHETHER THE COMPLAINT BY THE UNITED STATES FALLS WITHIN THE SCOPE OF ARTICLE 21.5 OF THE DSU

1. Arguments made by Japan

6.30 The United States requested the Panel to modify paragraphs 7.285 and 7.313 of the interim report. The United States declared that it agreed with Japan's conclusion that the European Communities' arguments to support its contention that the measures at issue in this proceeding were not "measures taken to comply" were "hardly convincing". However, the United States added that this did not imply an endorsement of the particular argumentation used by Japan.³²³ The Panel has modified paragraphs 7.285, 7.286, 7.313 and 7.314 of the interim report accordingly. The Panel has also added a footnote to paragraph 7.286, referring to the present discussion in the interim review section.

³²¹ United States' letter to the Panel dated 14 February 2008 (request for review of precise aspects of the Interim Report), para. 7.

³²² Ibid., para. 8.

³²³ Ibid., para. 9.

2. Whether the current bananas import regime is closely related to the original recommendations and rulings adopted by the DSB in 1997

6.31 The United States requested the Panel to delete the second sentence in paragraph 7.334 of the interim report, concerning the repeal of EC Regulation 404/1993, as amended. The United States argued that this information was not put into evidence by either party, it concerns an alleged modification of the measures at issue occurred after the date of establishment of this Panel and so would not be within the terms of reference of the Panel and, even if correct, it is not clear what has replaced EC Regulation 404/1993, and why this statement is necessary for the Panel's analysis.³²⁴

6.32 In response, the European Communities rejected the deletion of the reference to the repeal of Regulation 404/93. In the European Communities' view:

"Given the extensive reliance of the Panel on the allegedly close connection between Regulation 404/93 and the challenged measure, we cannot see how this reference could be deleted without seriously compromising the reasoning of the Panel in the relevant parts of its Report."³²⁵

6.33 Under Article 13 of the DSU the Panel has a broad right to seek information and may take into account evidence even if not provided by any of the parties. In the present case, however, the Panel considers that noting the exact date of the repeal of Regulation 404/1993, and identifying the instrument repealing such Regulation, is not strictly necessary for its analysis. The Panel has modified the second sentence of paragraph 7.334 of the interim report accordingly.

3. Whether the current bananas import regime constitutes a measure taken by the European Communities in the direction of, or for the purpose of achieving, compliance

(a) Termination of US suspension of concessions

6.34 The United States requested the Panel to modify paragraphs 7.400, 7.402, 7.404 and 7.430 of the interim report, to replace the expressions "terminates retaliation", "termination of US retaliation" and "terminated its retaliation", with the expressions "terminates the imposition of increased duties", "termination of US imposition of increased duties" and "terminated its imposition of increased duties".³²⁶ The Panel has modified paragraphs 7.400, 7.402, 7.404 and 7.430 of the interim report. The expression used in the minutes of the DSB meeting held on 1 February 2002 is that the United States had "terminated the suspension of concessions". Accordingly, the expressions "terminates retaliation", "termination of US retaliation" and "terminated its retaliation" have been replaced with the expressions "terminates the suspension of concessions", "termination of US suspension of concessions" and "terminated its suspension of concessions".

(b) Clarification of language

6.35 The United States requested the Panel to delete paragraph 7.477 of the interim report, which addresses the relevance of any time-limit on the possibility of bringing compliance complaints. In the United States' view, the discussion in paragraph 7.477 "does not appear to be necessary to the Panel's reasoning in this section and may potentially be confusing".³²⁷ The Panel has modified the language in paragraph 7.477 of the interim report in order to clarify its meaning.

(c) Licensing system

6.36 The United States requested the Panel to delete the last sentence of paragraph 7.501 of the interim report. In the United States' view, this sentence "does not appear to be factually correct as far as stating that the current [EC bananas import regime] does not involve a licensing system".³²⁸

6.37 In response to the United States' request, the European Communities argues that:

"[T]he United States suggested deletion would... be misleading. The correct statement, and what we believe the Panel meant, is: 'Conversely, the current EC bananas import regime does not involve a licensing system for MFN countries'.³²⁹

6.38 In light of the parties' comments, the Panel has modified the language in paragraphs 7.501 and 7.502 of the interim report in order to clarify their meaning. The Panel has, however, used the expression "for MFN bananas", rather than "for MFN countries".

I. THE RELEVANT LANGUAGE OF ARTICLE XIII:1 OF THE GATT 1994 FOR THIS DISPUTE

6.39 The United States requested the Panel to modify the language in paragraph 7.671 of the interim report, in order to clarify that, in its submissions, the United States "did not argue that the MFN bananas were treated 'worse' than ACP bananas ... [but rather] argued that MFN bananas and ACP bananas were not treated 'equally' or 'similarly restricted'".³³⁰ The Panel has modified paragraph 7.671 of the interim report accordingly.

J. THE UNITED STATES' CLAIM UNDER ARTICLE XIII:2 OF THE GATT 1994: PANEL'S ANALYSIS

6.40 The United States requested the Panel to correct the references made in footnote 1168 to paragraph 7.704 of the interim report.³³¹ The Panel has corrected footnote 1168 to paragraph 7.704 of the interim report accordingly.

K. GENERAL CONCLUSIONS

1. Panel's Conclusions

6.41 The European Communities requested the Panel to amend the language in paragraphs 8.3(a) and 8.3(c) of the interim report. In the European Communities' view, the statements made in those paragraphs are not correct. First, because "the preferential tariff quota [granted by the European Communities to bananas originating in ACP countries] does not exist any more". Second, because the language in paragraph 8.3(c):

"[C]reates the impression that the Panel has found that there are more aspects of the 'European Communities' current import regime' that are inconsistent with GATT

Article XIII, other than the preferential tariff quota. This is not correct. The terms of reference of the Panel allowed it to examine only the compatibility with GATT Article XIII of the preferential tariff quota granted to the ACP countries."³³²

6.42 The Panel has decided to maintain the language in paragraphs 8.3(a) and 8.3(c) of the interim report. As noted above³³³, the Panel considers that the evidence submitted at this late stage by the European Communities regarding the adoption of amendments to the EC bananas import regime is inadmissible. Furthermore, the Panel does not consider that the language contained in paragraph 8.3(c) of the interim report creates any impression that the Panel is making findings regarding aspects of the EC bananas import regime other than the preferential tariff quota reserved for ACP bananas.

2. Implementation of recommendations and rulings of the DSB

6.43 The European Communities requested the Panel to amend the language in paragraph 8.4 of the interim report. In the European Communities' view, the language in this paragraph:

"[C]reates the impression that there are more elements of the European Communities' 'current regime for the importation of bananas' [other than the preferential tariff quota reserved for ACP bananas] that have fallen within the terms of reference of the Panel, other than the preferential tariff quota. In particular, it creates the impression that an examination of the 'MFN tariff currently set at €176/mt' was within the terms of reference of the Panel. This is not correct ..."³³⁴

6.44 The Panel has modified paragraph 8.4 of the interim report accordingly.

L. NULLIFICATION OR IMPAIRMENT OF BENEFITS

6.45 The United States requested the Panel to delete the last part of paragraph 8.11 of the interim report. In the United States' view:

"[T]he explanation contained in the text that we request be deleted is not relevant in the context of this proceeding. Furthermore, the first part of paragraph 8.11 is sufficient to make the general point that a determination of the existence of nullification or impairment arising from a breach of an obligation is different from that of a determination of the level for purposes of Article 22".³³⁵

6.46 The Panel has modified paragraph 8.11 of the interim report accordingly.

M. RECOMMENDATION

6.47 Albeit for different reasons, both parties requested the Panel to delete paragraph 8.13 of the interim report.

³³² European Communities' letter to the Panel dated 14 February 2008 (request for review of precise aspects of the Interim Report), para. 3.

³³³ See para. 6.18 above.

³³⁴ European Communities' letter to the Panel dated 14 February 2008 (request for review of precise aspects of the Interim Report), para. 4.

³³⁵ United States' letter to the Panel dated 14 February 2008 (request for review of precise aspects of the Interim Report), para. 16.

6.48 In the United States' view:

"As this is a compliance proceeding, there is no need for the Panel to recommend that the DSB request the European Communities to bring its measures into conformity. It suffices for the Panel to conclude that the European Communities has failed to implement the recommendations and rulings of the DSB, as it does in paragraph 8.4."³³⁶

6.49 The European Communities argued instead that:

"Panels generally have the obligation to take account of changes made to the measure that is the subject of the dispute, where these changes have taken place during the course of the proceedings ... [T]he measure that the Panel is in the process of analysing in accordance with its terms of reference has already been repealed during the course of these proceedings ... It is settled law that a Panel report may not contain any recommendation to the DSB with regard to measures that are no longer in existence (see, for example, the report of the Appellate Body in United States – Import Measures on Certain Products from the European Communities). Therefore, the Panel may not include any recommendation in its report, because the measure that is the subject of the current proceedings is no longer in existence."³³⁷

6.50 As noted above³³⁸, the Panel considers that the evidence submitted at this late stage by the European Communities regarding the adoption of amendments to the EC bananas import regime is inadmissible. Nevertheless, since the original DSB recommendations and rulings in this dispute remain operative through the results of the current compliance proceedings, the Panel has modified the language in paragraph 8.13 of the interim report to reflect that it makes no new recommendation to the DSB.

N. ADDITIONAL REVISIONS AND CORRECTIONS

6.51 The Panel has also made some minor and editorial changes in paragraphs 2.5, 2.36, 2.58, 2.61, 2.72, 7.4, 7.9, 7.93, 7.100, 7.381, 7.478, 7.523, and 7.660 and in several footnotes of the report.

VII. FINDINGS

A. ATTEMPTS AT HARMONIZING THE TIMETABLES

7.1 The present proceedings, as well as those of the compliance panel requested by Ecuador in a similar matter, have created an unprecedented situation. The matter before this compliance Panel, requested by the United States on 29 June 2007, is closely related to the matter that was raised by Ecuador in its own request for the establishment of a panel made on 23 February 2007. However, despite its intention, the Panel was unable to harmonize the timetable of the current proceedings with the timetable of the compliance panel requested by Ecuador.

7.2 Both disputes concern measures adopted by the European Communities with the alleged purpose of complying with the rulings and recommendations of the DSB in the dispute European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas (EC – Bananas III). In both disputes, the parties disagree whether these measures are in conformity with the European Communities' obligations under the WTO covered agreements.

³³⁶ United States' letter to the Panel dated 14 February 2008 (request for review of precise aspects of the Interim Report), para. 17.

³³⁸ See para. 6.18 above.

7.3 In their respective complaints, Ecuador and the United States each challenge the European Communities' current bananas import regime implemented through the European Communities' Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005, which establishes a zero-duty tariff rate quota available only to bananas originating in ACP countries in an amount up to 775,000 mt. Bananas of other origins have no access to this 775,000 ton tariff rate quota and instead are subject to a duty of €176/mt.³³⁹

7.4 The claims in both cases are very similar. Both Ecuador and the United States claim that the challenged measures are inconsistent with Article I:1 and Article XIII, paragraphs 1 and 2, of the GATT 1994. In its own request, Ecuador advanced the additional claim that these measures are inconsistent with Article II of the GATT 1994.

7.5 The Panel is aware that, according to Article 9.3 of the DSU:

"If more than one panel is established to examine the complaints related to the same matter, to the greatest extent possible the same persons shall serve as panelists on each of the separate panels and the timetable for the panel process in such disputes shall be harmonized."

7.6 During the course of the proceedings, the Panel received a number of requests from the European Communities to extend the deadlines and to harmonize the timetable for this case with that of the panel requested by Ecuador. These requests were made through a written communication on 20 August 2007 with occasion of the organizational meeting of the Panel with the parties, as well as orally, during the substantive meeting of the Panel with the parties and third parties, on 6 and 7 November 2007.

7.7 In all instances, the Panel considered, both the European Communities' request and the views expressed by the United States, the complaining party. In practice, however, since the proceedings of the compliance panel requested by Ecuador began almost two months earlier than those of the compliance Panel requested by the United States, any harmonization would not necessarily have involved modifying the timetable of the proceedings of the latter compliance Panel. Rather, harmonization would have most likely involved a delay in the proceedings requested by Ecuador in order to harmonize the timetable of that case to that of the proceedings requested by the United States.

7.8 Harmonization of the timetable in both cases was made particularly difficult because of the two-month period that elapsed between the dates on which the two panels began their respective work. The Panel requested by Ecuador was composed by the WTO Director-General on 18 June. In turn, the panel requested by the United States, which was established on 12 July 2007, was composed on 13 August by the WTO Director-General. This two-month difference between the disputes was particularly significant, since compliance proceedings, by their very nature, are intended to be brief.

7.9 In any event, the panel in the proceedings requested by Ecuador decided not to modify the timetable originally adopted in those proceedings. Among other considerations, that panel took into account the fact that, when asked, Ecuador as the complaining party in those proceedings, strongly objected to any changes in the timetable that would result in extending the proceedings further beyond the 90-day period envisaged in Article 21.5 of the DSU. Ecuador's status as a developing country

³³⁹ EC – Bananas III (Article 21.5 – US), Request for the Establishment of a Panel (WT/DS27/83) 2 July 2007, p. 2.

Member, and its interest in a prompt decision of the matter, were additional factors taken into account by that panel when preparing and revising the timetable for its proceedings.³⁴⁰

7.10 In the light of these considerations, and notwithstanding the Panel's initial intention to harmonize the timetable of both the proceedings requested by Ecuador and those requested by the United States, the Panel was unable to find a better alternative for the timetable that was adopted in these proceedings. This despite the fact that the Panel was aware that the approved timetable implied a considerable burden of work, peaking at particular moments for the parties, as well as for the Panel and the Secretariat.

7.11 However, in the Panel's view, the timetable in the current proceedings, adopted after having consulted the parties, respects the requirement of due process and accords equal treatment to all parties. In the circumstances of this case, the timetable adopted by the Panel prevented the arguments of the parties being influenced by advance knowledge by one party of the findings of the panel in the proceedings requested by Ecuador.

7.12 The Panel has also attempted to ensure to the greatest extent possible consistency between the findings issued in this report and those issued by the panel in the report requested by Ecuador. This is notwithstanding the fact that these two proceedings were formally different, and that neither the claims advanced by the complainants, nor the arguments advanced by the respective parties, were exactly the same in each of the cases.³⁴¹

B. ORDER OF THE PANEL'S ANALYSIS

7.13 As noted in the descriptive section of this report, the United States makes two main substantive claims, namely that the European Communities' bananas import regime is inconsistent with Article I of the GATT 1994 and that it is also inconsistent with Article XIII of the GATT 1994, including Article XIII:1 and XIII:2.

7.14 The European Communities in turn raises three preliminary issues. First, the European Communities argues that the Panel must assess whether the United States has "standing" to commence these proceedings. Second, the European Communities argues that the United States should not be allowed to challenge the European Communities' measures because of the Understanding on Bananas, signed by the United States and the European Communities in April 2001 (Bananas Understanding).³⁴² Third, the European Communities argues that the United States' complaints fall outside of the scope of Article 21.5 of the DSU, because the European Communities' current bananas import regime is not "a measure taken to comply" with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB. As noted below³⁴³, a fourth preliminary objection concerning the lack of formal consultations was initially raised by the European Communities, and later withdrawn.

7.15 Finally, the European Communities argues that, if the Panel were to conclude that the United States has standing and that the European Communities' bananas import regime does not comply with the GATT, the Panel should nevertheless find that the existence of the European Communities' bananas import regime has not caused the "nullification or impairment" of any benefit accruing to the United States.

³⁴⁰ See Panel Report on EC – Bananas III (Article 21.5 – Ecuador II), paras. 7.9-7.10.

³⁴¹ See United States' response to Panel question No. 97, paras. 101-102, and European Communities' response to Panel question No. 97, paras. 175-177. See also European Communities' response to Panel question No. 78, paras. 130-131.

³⁴³ See paras. 7.533 to 7.542 below.

7.16 The Panel will begin by looking into the preliminary issues raised by the European Communities. Indeed, if the Panel was to find that any of these issues prevent the United States from bringing this complaint, there would be no need for the Panel to examine the substantive claims raised in these proceedings. If, on the contrary, after having disposed of the preliminary issues raised by the European Communities the Panel then finds that the European Communities' bananas import regime is inconsistent with Article I of the GATT 1994 or with Article XIII, or both, the Panel will finally deal with the issue of whether such regime has nullified or impaired any benefit accruing to the United States.

C. PRELIMINARY OBJECTION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES CONCERNING THE ALLEGED LACK OF STANDING AND ARGUMENT REGARDING THE ALLEGED LACK OF NULLIFICATION OR IMPAIRMENT OF BENEFITS TO THE UNITED STATES

1. The European Communities' arguments

7.17 The European Communities argues that:

"[E]ven assuming arguendo that the Cotonou Preference has not been in compliance with the GATT since the end of 2005 ... its existence between the end of 2005 and the end of 2007 has not caused the United States a nullification or impairment of any benefit accruing to it."³⁴⁴

7.18 In the European Communities' view, the Panel must first assess, "in order to determine whether the United States has 'standing' to commence these proceedings"³⁴⁵:

"[W]hether the alleged violation of a WTO rule sufficiently 'touches' upon the interests of the complaining party so as to justify the complaining party's [such] 'standing' to commence dispute settlement proceedings."³⁴⁶

7.19 The European Communities adds that the Panel's determination of whether the United States has standing in this dispute "is an issue of jurisdiction and the Panel has the obligation to examine it on its own initiative".³⁴⁷

7.20 The European Communities further states that, should the Panel conclude "that the United States has standing and that the Cotonou Preference does not comply with the GATT", the Panel should then:

"[E]xamine what is the nullification or impairment suffered by the United States in order to discharge its obligation to 'make such findings as will assist the DSB in making the recommendations or in giving the rulings provided for in the covered agreements'³⁴⁸. The Panel also needs to determine whether there is 'nullification or impairment' in order to offer the parties the legal 'security and predictability' required by Article 3.2 of the DSU and help them reach a 'prompt settlement' of their dispute, as required by Article 3.3 of the DSU."³⁴⁹

7.21 The European Communities considers that the term "nullification or impairment" "has the same meaning both in the context of Article 3.8 of the DSU and of Article 22 of the DSU", since ³⁴⁴ European Communities' first written submission, para. 70.

³⁴⁵ Ibid., para 74.

³⁴⁸ (footnote original) See Article 11 of the DSU.

³⁴⁹ European Communities' first written submission, para. 74.

"there can be only one notion of 'nullification or impairment' for purposes of the DSU".³⁵⁰ In this respect, the European Communities argues that "Article 3.8 of the DSU allows the defending party to rebut the presumption that the challenged measure causes a nullification or impairment of a benefit accruing to the complaining party, even where it is established that the measure itself is not in compliance with the WTO rules".³⁵¹ In the European Communities' view:

"The United States and the Third Parties supporting them have asked the Panel to simply assume automatically that there is always 'nullification or impairment' once a GATT violation is established, without offering the defending party the opportunity to rebut this presumption. However, eliminating the possibility of defending parties to rebut the presumption of 'nullification or impairment' after a violation of the GATT is established, requires the amendment or deletion of Article 3.8 of the DSU."³⁵²

7.22 The European Communities adds that since "the Cotonou Preference has no 'impact on the value of relevant EC imports from the United States'"³⁵³, it therefore "does not cause the United States any nullification or impairment of a benefit for which the European Communities can face suspension of concessions"³⁵⁴, under Article 22 of the DSU. Accordingly, the European Communities requests the Panel to find that:

"[T]he existence of the Cotonou Preference between the end of 2005 and the end of 2007 does not cause any 'nullification or impairment' of any benefit accruing to the United States."³⁵⁵

2. The United States' response

7.23 In response, the United States considers that "the Panel should dismiss the [European Communities'] arguments".³⁵⁶ In the United States' view, the arguments relating to both the United States' alleged lack of standing and the alleged lack of nullification or impairment:

"[I]gnore the clear guidance of the Appellate Body in the underlying EC – Bananas III proceedings, in which it addressed these very same issues and rejected very similar reasoning by the [European Communities]."³⁵⁷

7.24 The United States adds that, in the original EC – Bananas III proceedings, "the Appellate Body upheld the panel's finding that the United States 'had standing' to bring claims under the GATT 1994³⁵⁸ against the EC's banana measures."³⁵⁹

7.25 Regarding the alleged lack of nullification or impairment, the United States considers that:

"[T]o prevail on its claims of an EC breach of GATT Articles I and XIII, the United States is not required to demonstrate that the EC's banana measures nullify or impair benefits accruing to it. In arguing to the contrary, the EC confuses the function of dispute settlement proceedings under DSU Articles 6 and 21.5 with arbitration proceedings under DSU Article 22."³⁶⁰

7.26 In the United States' view:

"By focusing on nullification or impairment, the EC's argument seems to presume that the ultimate outcome of dispute settlement is the suspension of concessions by the complaining Member in order to achieve compliance by the responding Member. There are, of course, two other preferred outcomes set out in Article 3.7 of the DSU: a mutually agreed solution consistent with the covered agreements and withdrawal of WTO-inconsistent measures. In addition, there is resort to compensation. Indeed, Article 3.7 of the DSU characterizes suspension of concessions as a 'last resort'.³⁶¹

7.27 The United States further adds that:

"[T]he EC made a similar argument to the original panel and Appellate Body, but its argument was rejected. The reasoning of the Appellate Body remains applicable here. In determining that the United States did in fact suffer nullification or impairment of benefits at the hands of the EC's banana measures, the Appellate Body made clear that a showing of trade effects is unnecessary for purposes of demonstrating that there has been a breach of a provision of the GATT."³⁶²

7.28 The United States concludes that:

"[T]he clear EC breaches of GATT Articles I and XIII obviate the need for the United States to affirmatively demonstrate the trade effects caused by the EC's banana measures. As noted by the Appellate Body, 'the United States is a producer of bananas and ... a potential export interest by the United States cannot be excluded.'³⁶³ In addition, 'the internal market of the United States for bananas could be affected by the EC banana regime and by its effects on world supplies and world prices of bananas.'³⁶⁴ Thus, the Panel should dismiss the EC's arguments."³⁶⁵

3. Panel's analysis

(a) Verification of the United States' standing to commence these proceedings

7.29 As noted above, the European Communities requests the Panel to determine as an initial matter whether the United States "has 'standing' to commence these proceedings".³⁶⁵

7.30 Article 3.7 of the DSU reads in part:

"Before bringing a case, a Member shall exercise its judgement as to whether action under these procedures would be fruitful. The aim of the dispute settlement mechanism is to secure a positive solution to a dispute. A solution mutually acceptable to the parties to a dispute and consistent with the covered agreements is clearly to be preferred..."

7.31 The Appellate Body has indicated that the first sentence of this paragraph:

"[R]eflects a basic principle that Members should have recourse to WTO dispute settlement in good faith, and not frivolously set in motion the procedures contemplated in the DSU ..."³⁶⁷

7.32 In the same report, the Appellate Body went on to point out the self-regulating nature of the mechanism contained in that sentence:

"Given the 'largely self-regulating' nature of the requirement in the first sentence of Article 3.7, panels and the Appellate Body must presume, whenever a Member submits a request for establishment of a panel, that such Member does so in good faith, having duly exercised its judgement as to whether recourse to that panel would be 'fruitful'. Article 3.7 neither requires nor authorizes a panel to look behind that Member's decision and to question its exercise of judgement ..."³⁶⁸

7.33 The Panel starts by noting that the current proceedings involve what is termed a "compliance" case, under Article 21.5 of the DSU, regarding whether certain measures allegedly taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in an original dispute conducted under the WTO's dispute settlement procedures are consistent with the WTO covered agreements. By their nature, compliance cases are linked with the original proceedings in the dispute. As noted by the Appellate Body:

"Article 21.5 proceedings do not occur in isolation from the original proceedings, but ... both proceedings form part of a continuum of events."³⁶⁹

7.34 The Panel does not need to make a general determination regarding whether panels may be required to assess when a Member has "standing" to initiate dispute settlement proceedings under the DSU. Rather, we note that the United States was a complaining party in the original proceedings of the present case. In that case, the European Communities' bananas regime was found to be inconsistent with the WTO covered agreements and to have resulted in the nullification or impairment of trade benefits that should have accrued to the United States under such agreements. Accordingly, ³⁶⁵ United States' second written submission, para. 64. See also joint third party written submission by Nicaragua and Panama, para. 132.

³⁶⁶ European Communities' first written submission, para. 73.

³⁶⁸ Ibid., para. 74.

³⁶⁹ Appellate Body Report on Chile – Price Band System (Article 21.5 – Argentina), para. 136.

in the circumstances of the present case, the United States, as an original complainant, holds a particular interest in ensuring that the measure in question is brought into conformity with the WTO agreements. The European Communities has failed to rebut the existence of that particular interest. Accordingly, the Panel does not need to conduct, under the current compliance proceedings, a separate analysis of whether, in the words of the European Communities, "the alleged violation of a WTO rule sufficiently 'touches' upon the interests of the [United States] so as to justify [that] party's 'standing' to commence dispute settlement proceedings".³⁷⁰

7.35 For the reasons indicated above, and especially in view of the particular interest of the United States in the current compliance proceedings, the Panel finds that the United States had, under the DSU, the right to request the initiation of such proceedings.

(b) Verification of the nullification or impairment of trade benefits accruing to the United States

7.36 As noted above, the European Communities has asked the Panel that, should it conclude that the United States has standing and that the preference granted by the European Communities to an annual duty-free tariff quota of imported bananas originating in ACP countries (the Cotonou Preference) is inconsistent with the GATT, the Panel should then "examine what is the nullification or impairment suffered by the United States."³⁷¹

7.37 The European Communities' request regarding the alleged lack of nullification or impairment of trade benefits accruing to the United States is contingent upon the Panel having found that the preference granted by the European Communities to an annual duty-free tariff quota of imported bananas originating in ACP countries is inconsistent with the GATT. Accordingly, the Panel shall turn to this issue after having considered the substantive claims made, under Articles I and XIII of the GATT 1994, by the United States against the preferences granted by the European Communities.

4. Conclusion

7.38 For the reasons indicated in this section, the Panel preliminarily finds that the United States had, under the DSU, the right to request the initiation of the current compliance proceedings.

D. PRELIMINARY OBJECTION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES CONCERNING WHETHER THE UNITED STATES IS BARRED FROM CHALLENGING THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES' BANANAS IMPORT REGIME AS A RESULT OF THE BANANAS UNDERSTANDING SIGNED IN APRIL 2001

1. Arguments of the parties

(a) The European Communities' arguments

7.39 The European Communities argues that the complaint brought by the United States:

"[S]hould be dismissed in its entirety because ... the United States has already accepted the continuation of the Doha waiver until the end of 2007 in the [Bananas] Understanding [it signed with the European Communities in April 2001]."³⁷²

See EC – Bananas III, Notification of Mutually Agreed Solution (WT/DS27/58), 2 July 2001, and EC – Bananas III, Communication from the United States (WT/DS27/59), 2 July 2001. See also, European Communities' first written submission, para. 39.

7.40 The European Communities adds that:

"On May 29, 2001 and May 30, 2001, the United States and the European Communities exchanged Letters confirming their 'common understanding' of their 'April 11 agreement'."³⁷³

7.41 The European Communities argues that:

"In light of the content of the [Bananas] Understanding and the Letters and the rights and obligations mutually accepted by both parties ... the Understanding is indeed a 'mutually agreed solution' to the banana dispute between the United States and the European Communities".³⁷⁴

7.42 Regarding the content of the Bananas Understanding, the European Communities asserts that:

"[T]he Understanding (i) describes in great detail the characteristics of the two banana import regimes that the European Communities should implement by July 1, 2001 and by January 1, 2002 respectively and (ii) expressly provides that the United States' retaliation measures will be initially suspended and then terminated upon the implementation by the European Communities of the second import regime on January 1, 2002. Moreover, the Letters provide even further detail on the allocation of the licences to certain operators and the mutual rights and obligations of the United States and the European Communities if various events occur ...

[T]he Understanding [also] provides that the United States should support the grant of the 'waiver of Article I of the GATT that the EC has requested for preferential access to the EC of goods originating in ACP states signatory to the Cotonou Agreement'.³⁷⁵

7.43 According to the European Communities, the Bananas Understanding is "a mutually agreed solution, as this term is defined in the DSU and, therefore, it is binding upon the United States".³⁷⁶ In the European Communities' view, pursuant to the Bananas Understanding:

"The United States has done more than simply voting in favour of the Cotonou Preference waiver. The United States has entered into an international agreement with the European Communities accepting the existence of the Cotonou Preference until the end of 2007 and, most importantly, it has received specific consideration for doing so."³⁷⁷

³⁷³ European Communities' first written submission, para. 39. See also, European Communities' second written submission, para. 8.

³⁷⁵ European Communities' first written submission, paras. 42-44.

³⁷⁶ European Communities' second written submission, para. 9.

³⁷⁷ Ibid., para. 16.

7.44 In particular, the European Communities argues that it:

"[H]as fully complied with its obligations under the [Bananas] Understanding in good faith and relying on the expectation that the United States would also comply with its own obligations."³⁷⁸

7.45 According to the European Communities, the obligations of both parties, as provided in the Bananas Understanding, were the following:

"[A]s of July 1, 2001, the European Communities would implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing and with certain characteristics defined in Annex 1 of the Understanding. Upon the European Communities' implementation of this regime, the United States would provisionally suspend its retaliation measures.

As soon as possible thereafter, the European Communities would implement another import regime on the basis of historical licensing with certain other characteristics defined in Annex 2 of the Understanding. Upon the European Communities' implementation of that regime, the United States' right to suspend its concessions would be terminated. The deadline for the implementation of that regime was January 1, 2002. If the European Communities failed to implement the new regime by that date, the United States would have the right to re-impose their retaliation measures."³⁷⁹

7.46 The European Communities adds that it "implemented the new import regime within the agreed deadline and the United States' right to suspend concessions was terminated" and that "[t]his was the end of the banana dispute between the United States and the European Communities".³⁸⁰

7.47 As regards the United States' compliance with the Bananas Understanding, the European Communities states that the United States agreed "to have [its] retaliation rights terminated"³⁸¹ and voted in favour of approving the Doha waiver, exempting the Cotonou Agreement's trade preferences from the application of Article I of the GATT until the end of 2007.³⁸²

7.48 The European Communities argues that:

"[T]he points raised by the United States ... do not suffice to rebut the European Communities' argument that the Understanding is indeed a 'mutually agreed solution' for purposes of the DSU, as evidenced by its content, the rights and obligations that the parties undertook with it, the termination of the United States' retaliation measures agreed therein and the side letters exchanged between the parties soon after the signing of the Understanding."³⁸³

7.49 Concerning the 26 June 2001 communication on the Bananas Understanding to the DSB in which the United States stated that the "[Bananas] Understanding identifies the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved, but ... does not in itself constitute a mutually agreed solution pursuant to Article 3.6 of the DSU³⁸⁴, the European Communities claims that:

"The Panel should not take into consideration the unilateral statement issued by the United States after the signing of the Understanding and the Letters."³⁸⁵

7.50 According to the European Communities:

"[T]he analysis of the legal status and effect of the [Bananas] Understanding should be based on its content and on the confirmations contained in the Letters exchanged between the parties, where their true common intentions and mutual understandings and undertakings are expressed."³⁸⁶

7.51 The European Communities points out that:

"[T]he [Bananas] Understanding (i) describes in great detail the characteristics of the two banana import regimes that the European Communities should implement by July 1, 2001 and by January 1, 2002 respectively and (ii) expressly provides that the United States' retaliation measures will be initially suspended and then terminated upon the implementation by the European Communities of the second import regime on January 1, 2002. Moreover, the Letters provide even further detail on the allocation of the licences to certain operators and the mutual rights and obligations of the United States and the European Communities if various events occur."³⁸⁷

7.52 Furthermore, the European Communities argues that it:

"[C]annot see why a document that 'sets out a path' with the 'means to resolve a dispute' should not qualify as a mutually agreed solution for purposes of the DSU. Indeed, by definition, a 'mutually agreed solution' can be nothing else than a document that sets the terms of the solution mutually agreed between the parties. More often than not, a 'mutually agreed solution' will describe the actions that the parties have undertaken to perform (or refrain from) in the future".³⁸⁸

7.53 The European Communities also supports the argument made by a number of ACP third parties (namely Belize, Cameroon, Côte d'Ivoire, Dominica, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Madagascar, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, and Suriname) that:

"The fact that the agreed solution between the EC and the US necessarily prevents the US from referring the issue of the WTO consistency of the new EC banana import regime under Article 21.5 proceedings is supported by the fact that [with the agreement of all WTO Members, in February 2002,] pursuant to the Understandings reached with Ecuador and the US, the banana dispute was taken off the agenda of the Dispute Settlement Body in accordance with Article 21.6 of the DSU³⁸⁹".³⁹⁰

³⁹⁰ See ACP Countries' third party written submission, para. 60.

7.54 In this regard, the European Communities argues that, under the DSU:

"[R]ecourse to a compliance panel [is only allowed] when there is disagreement in the sense of Article 21.5 of the DSU. On the contrary, a compliance panel is excluded when a dispute has been settled. In fact, such a dispute is considered resolved once and for all. This is evidenced by the wording of Article 21.6 of the DSU, which specifies that the issue of implementation of the recommendations or rulings of the DSB stays on its agenda 'until the issue is resolved'. This obviously means that a dispute taken off the [DSB's] agenda is considered resolved.

This is precisely what happened in the present case. In fact, the Bananas III dispute between the European Communities and the United States has been settled through a mutually agreed solution (namely, the [Bananas] Understanding). This is evidenced by the fact that – after the conclusion of the Understanding – the United States agreed, first, to suspend its retaliatory measures and, ultimately, to terminate those measures. Further, the issue of the implementation of the EC-Bananas III DSB recommendations and rulings was withdrawn from the DSB's agenda with the consent of all WTO members (including the United States), in accordance with Article 21.6 of the DSU."³⁹¹

7.55 The European Communities also contends that:

"[E]ven if it is assumed arguendo that the [Bananas] Understanding is not a 'mutually agreed solution' for purposes of Article 3.6 of the DSU, it cannot be denied that it is a bilateral agreement between the United States and the European Communities with which both parties undertook certain obligations and acquired certain rights. As such, the Understanding forms part of the 'applicable rules of law' between the parties to the dispute, as this term is defined in customary international law and codified in Article 31, paragraph 3(c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of the Treaties. Therefore, its terms must be taken into consideration in order to determine the parties' mutual rights and obligations under the GATT and the DSU."³⁹²

7.56 In particular, the European Communities maintains that:

"[G]iven that the United States has accepted in the [Bananas] Understanding the principle that the Cotonou Preference would continue to exist until the end of 2007, the United States is now barred from challenging the existence of the Cotonou Preference in the period between the end of 2005 and the end of 2007, irrespective of the reasons that the United States may claim in its complaint."³⁹³

7.57 In response to the United States' argument that "Article 31(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention deals with interpretation of the covered agreements"³⁹⁴ and that, "[s]ince the EC-US Understanding is a bilateral agreement between only the parties to this dispute, not all Members of the WTO, it cannot be considered part of any 'applicable rules of law' that could inform the panel's interpretation of the covered agreements"³⁹⁵, the European Communities responds that:

³⁹¹ European Communities' response to Panel question No. 20, paras. 48-49. See also, European Communities' response to Panel question No. 21, para. 51.

³⁹² European Communities' first written submission, para. 43. See also, European Communities' response to Panel question No. 80, paras. 139-142.

³⁹³ European Communities' first written submission, para. 45.

³⁹⁴ United States' second written submission, para. 38 (emphasis original).

³⁹⁵ Ibid., para. 39.

"There is a very large number of bilateral agreements between WTO Members which are not listed in Appendix 1, but are given legal effect and are taken into account by the WTO dispute settlement system."³⁹⁶

7.58 The European Communities further asserts that:

"[T]he report of the panel in EC – Approval and Marketing of Biotech Products [makes] clear that, in determining the rights and obligations of the parties to a dispute under the GATT and the DSU, it is possible for a panel to take into consideration the terms of any international agreement to which all parties to the dispute participate. In the view of the European Communities, in interpreting the WTO obligations and rights of two WTO Members in relation to each other, it is necessary to take into consideration any relevant international agreement to which those two Members are a party. This is precisely the case with the [Bananas] Understanding, which has been signed by both parties to the present dispute. Therefore, the European Communities respectfully requests the Panel to reject the assertion that the United States attempts to base on EC – Approval and Marketing of Biotech Products".³⁹⁷

7.59 In response to the United States' argument that "during the India – Autos proceeding (which, like the negotiation of the EC-US Understanding, took place in the spring of 2001), the EC ... held the view that a mutually agreed solution could not prevent recourse to the DSU"³⁹⁸, the European Communities responds that:

"In analysing the legal effects of mutually agreed solutions, the [India – Autos] panel stated in paragraph 7.113 of its report:

... such agreements are expressly referred to and supported by the DSU. It is certainly reasonable to assume, particularly on the basis of Article 3 of the DSU ... that these agreed solutions are intended to reflect a settlement of the dispute in question, which both parties expect will bring a final conclusion to the relevant proceedings.³⁹⁹

The panel also found in paragraph 7.115 of its report that 'it may also be the case that it cannot be lightly assumed that those drafters intended mutually agreed solutions, expressly promoted by the DSU, to have no meaningful legal effect in subsequent proceedings'. These statements confirm that the panel in India – Autos considered it possible that a mutually agreed solution could bar a party from commencing dispute settlement proceedings. Therefore, the United States cannot rely on that panel's report to support an assertion that a mutually agreed solution like the [Bananas] Understanding cannot constitute a bar on the United States' right to challenge the Cotonou Preference."⁴⁰⁰

7.60 The European Communities finally adds that:

"[E]ven if it were to be assumed that the provisions of the Understanding itself cannot be taken into consideration in determining the rights and obligations of the parties to this dispute, the application of the principle of good faith on the facts of this case would bar the United States from challenging the Cotonou Preference."⁴⁰¹

7.61 In the European Communities' opinion:

"[T]he principle of good faith, which runs through the entire DSU⁴⁰² and defines the outer limits of the application of all rights recognized by the DSU to WTO Members, bars the United States from challenging the Cotonou Preference. As already mentioned, the United States has already drawn the benefits from the Understanding and was from the very beginning aware of the legal status of the Understanding and of the obligations it undertook with it. Moreover, the European Communities has fully complied with its obligations under the Understanding in good faith and relying on the expectation that the United States would also comply with its own obligations. The application of the principle of good faith on these facts requires the United States to perform now its part of the deal and refrain from challenging the existence of the Cotonou Preference until the end of 2007."⁴⁰³

7.62 Thus, the European Communities concludes that:

"Granting to WTO Members the right to renege on the agreements with which they reach mutually agreed solutions to their disputes would seriously compromise the effectiveness of these mutually agreed solutions and would foster the 'contentious' character of the dispute resolution system. This would be inconsistent with the purpose of the DSU as reflected in Article 3.10 and with the principles enshrined in Article 3.7 (where it is stated that mutually agreed solutions are to be preferred)."⁴⁰⁴

7.63 For the reasons explained above, the European Communities requests the Panel to dismiss "the complaint of the United States ... in its entirety".⁴⁰⁵

(b) The United States' response

7.64 The United States confirms that in April 2001 it reached with the European Communities "an Understanding on Bananas".⁴⁰⁶ The United States also:

"[A]cknowledges that the [Bananas] Understanding is an important document in the long history of this dispute. It sets out what the United States and the EC, back in 2001, considered to be means to resolve the bananas dispute."⁴⁰⁷

⁴⁰¹ Ibid., para. 9.

WTO members ... must engage in dispute settlement procedures in good faith, by virtue of Article 3.10 of the DSU. This latter obligation covers, in our view, the entire spectrum of dispute settlement, from the point of initiation of a case through implementation".

⁴⁰⁵ Ibid., para. 104.

⁴⁰⁶ United States' first written submission, para. 7.

⁴⁰⁷ Written version of United States' opening statement during substantive meeting with the parties and third parties, para. 36.

7.65 The United States, however, argues that:

"[T]he [European Communities'] assertion that because the United States has 'accepted in the EC-US Understanding the principle that the Cotonou Preference would continue to exist until the end of 2007, the United States is now barred from challenging the existence of the Cotonou Preference in the period between the end of 2005 and the end of 2007' ... is incorrect".⁴⁰⁸

7.66 The United States asserts that:

"[N]othing in the EC-US [Bananas] Understanding says that the United States was agreeing to a reduction in its rights to challenge the WTO-consistency of any EC measure. [The Bananas Understanding] contains no clause or provision in which the United States 'accepted' that it would be 'barred' from recourse to the Dispute Settlement Understanding."⁴⁰⁹

7.67 The United States adds that:

"[A]s contemplated by the EC-US [Bananas] Understanding, the United States did support the adoption of a waiver of the EC's Article I obligations, and a waiver was ultimately approved at Doha. Article 3*bis* of the waiver states that '[w]ith respect to bananas, the additional provisions in the Annex shall apply.'⁴¹⁰ These additional provisions ... set out conditions which the new EC regime on bananas would have to meet. The provisions also set out a special arbitration mechanism whereby if an arbitrator found twice that the EC regime did not meet the conditions set out in the Annex, the Article I waiver would cease to apply with respect to bananas before the end of 2007 ... [T]he United States believes that the EC's Article I waiver ceased to apply upon entry into force of the new EC regime for bananas on January 1, 2006."⁴¹¹

7.68 The United States disagrees "with the EC's contention that the EC-US [Bananas] Understanding represented a 'mutually agreed solution' as that term is used in the DSU."⁴¹² In the United States' view:

"[I]t is clear from its text that the EC-US [Bananas] Understanding was a document that identified the 'means' to resolve the dispute, and set out a path forward, but that no solution acceptable to both parties had yet been put in place on the date of the EC-US [Bananas] Understanding and that the Understanding was not itself the end of the dispute."⁴¹³

7.69 The United States further states that it:

"[D]id not and does not consider that the Understanding was a 'mutually agreed solution' for purposes of Article 3.6. The United States made this clear immediately after the EC unilaterally notified the Understanding to the DSB as a 'mutually agreed solution' in June of 2001 ... As the United States made clear to the EC and all

Members in 2001, the Understanding identified 'the means by which the long-standing dispute ... can be resolved, but, as is obvious from its own text, it does not in itself constitute a mutually agreed solution pursuant to Article 3.6 of the DSU'.^{414,415}

7.70 The United States adds that:

"Even if the Understanding were a 'mutually agreed solution', nothing in the DSU permits the legal consequence that the EC proposes. The DSU provides three limited consequences for 'mutually agreed solutions'. Article 3.6 requires that mutually agreed solutions be notified to the DSB and the relevant Councils and Committees. Article 12.7 provides that the existence of a mutually satisfactory solution reached prior to the conclusion of a panel proceeding affects the form and content of the panel's report. And Article 22.8 provides that the suspension of concessions or other obligations shall only be applied until, inter alia, a mutually satisfactory solution is reached. The fact that the legal consequences of a 'mutually agreed solution' are spelled out in these three provisions is significant because it stands in stark contrast to the lack of any provision that assigns the legal consequences that the EC would now attribute to such solutions.

In particular, there is no basis in Article 22.8 of the DSU, elsewhere in the DSU, or elsewhere in the covered agreements for the EC argument that parties to a 'mutually agreed solution' are precluded from having recourse to Article 21.5 proceedings."⁴¹⁶

7.71 The United States also disagrees:

"[W]ith the EC's assertion that, pursuant to Article 31(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties ('Vienna Convention'), the EC-US [Bananas] Understanding must be taken into consideration to determine the parties' rights and obligations under the GATT 1994 and the DSU."⁴¹⁷

7.72 In the United States' opinion:

"Since the EC-US [Bananas] Understanding is a bilateral agreement between only the parties to this dispute, not all Members of the WTO, it cannot be considered part of any 'applicable rules of law' that could inform the panel's interpretation of the covered agreements ...

[T]he DSU cannot be used to settle a dispute as to the meaning or effect of the EC-US [Bananas] Understanding, and the DSU cannot enforce the Understanding by blocking a party to the Understanding from recourse to the DSU."⁴¹⁸

⁴¹⁴ (footnote original) WT/DS27/59, G/C/W/270, 2 July 2001, second paragraph.

7.73 The United States further adds that:

"[I]t is telling that [in a previous case] the EC, as a complaining party, has taken the opposite view of the one it advances in this dispute ... [I]n India – Autos, 'the European Communities argued that, not being a "covered agreement" under the DSU, the [mutually agreed solution] cannot be invoked by India "in order to justify the violation of its obligations under the GATT and the TRIMs Agreement."⁴¹⁹ For the same reason, the EC-[Bananas] US Understanding – whether or not it is a 'mutually agreed solution' – cannot 'be invoked by [the EC] 'in order to justify the violation of its obligations under the GATT'. "⁴²⁰

7.74 The United States disagrees with the argument advanced by some third parties that "the fact that the agreed solution between the EC and the US necessarily prevents the US from referring the issue of the WTO consistency of the new EC banana import regime under Article 21.5 proceedings is supported by the fact that pursuant to the Understandings reached with Ecuador and the US, the banana dispute was taken off the agenda of the Dispute Settlement Body in accordance with Article 21.6 of the DSU"^{421, 422}. In the United States' view:

"It is incorrect to say that the issue was 'withdrawn' from the [DSB's] agenda. Instead, as is apparent from the DSB minutes for the February 1, 2002⁴²³ meeting all that happened was that the EC declared its view that 'this matter should now be withdrawn from the agenda' (presumably meaning that despite Article 21.6, the EC need no longer put a status report on the agenda of future DSB meetings). A review of the minutes confirms that Ecuador agreed there was no need for the EC to put the issue on the agenda of future DSB meetings in light of the fact that the EC had taken the step set out in paragraph D of the Understanding and the next step that would need to be taken by the EC was implementation of a tariff only regime by January 1, 2006. The DSB simply 'took note' of the statements and did not take a decision on this issue. The fact that other Members did not request that this matter be on the agenda of subsequent meetings presumably reflects that little would have been gained by keeping this matter on the DSB agenda until the EC took the next step on January 1, 2006.

It is also clear from the statements made at the meeting that the dispute was not considered 'resolved'. "⁴²⁴

7.75 The United States concludes that "[t]he EC's ... preliminary objection - that the EC-US [Bananas] Understanding bars this proceeding – is ... groundless".⁴²⁵

2. Panel's analysis

7.76 In order to decide this preliminary issue, the Panel will analyse first the nature and scope of this preliminary objection of the European Communities, in particular in regard to Article 21.5 of the DSU. The Panel will then assess the European Communities' preliminary objection.

7.77 The Panel recalls that in US – Wool Shirts and Blouses the Appellate Body noted that:

"[I]t is a generally-accepted canon of evidence in civil law, common law and, in fact, most jurisdictions, that the burden of proof rests upon the party, whether complaining or defending, who asserts the affirmative of a particular claim or defence. If that party adduces evidence sufficient to raise a presumption that what is claimed is true, the burden then shifts to the other party, who will fail unless it adduces sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption."⁴²⁶ (footnote omitted)

7.78 The Appellate Body concluded in the same dispute that, on the one hand, "a party claiming a violation of a provision of the WTO Agreement by another Member must assert and prove its claim"⁴²⁷ and, on the other hand, "[i]t is only reasonable that the burden of establishing ... a defence should rest on the party asserting it."^{428,429} This general approach to the burden of proof has been confirmed in a number of reports since then, including more recently in regard to compliance proceedings pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU.⁴³⁰

7.79 Accordingly, the Panel needs to assess first whether the European Communities has made a prima facie case supporting its preliminary objection. If such a prima facie case was found to exist, the Panel would turn to assessing whether the United States has succeeded in rebutting this preliminary objection by the European Communities.

(a) The nature and scope of this preliminary issue under Article 21.5 of the DSU

7.80 In addition to other objections that are addressed in specific sections of this report⁴³¹, the European Communities questions the United States' right to contest the ACP preference because of the Bananas Understanding signed with the European Communities in April 2001, both in general in the context of WTO dispute settlement⁴³² and particularly in a compliance dispute.⁴³³ The Panel recalls that under its terms of reference its task is to examine the matter raised by the United States in its request for the establishment of a panel made under Article 21.5 of the DSU and to make such findings as will assist the DSB in making the recommendations or in giving the rulings provided for in the WTO agreements.⁴³⁴ Accordingly, the Panel will limit its consideration of the preliminary issue raised by the European Communities to whether the United States is prevented, as a result of the Bananas Understanding, from bringing a compliance dispute pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU.

⁴²⁸ (footnote original) Furthermore, there are a few cases that are similar in that the defending party invoked, as a defence, certain provisions and the panel explicitly required the defending party to demonstrate the applicability of the provision it was asserting. See, for example, United States – Customs User Fee, adopted 2 February 1988, BISD 35S/245, para. 98, concerning Article II:2 of the GATT 1947; Canada – Import, Distribution and Sale of Certain Alcoholic Drinks by Provincial Marketing Agencies, adopted 22 March 1988, BISD 35S/37, para. 4.34, concerning Article XXIV:12 of the GATT 1947; and United States – Measures Affecting Alcoholic and Malt Beverages, adopted 19 June 1992, BISD 39S/206, para. 5.44, concerning the Protocol of Provisional Application.

7.81 In order to address the issue of whether the Bananas Understanding can prevent the United States from bringing a compliance dispute, the Panel will start by considering the scope of compliance disputes. In relevant part, Article 21.5 of the DSU provides that:

"Where there is disagreement as to the existence or consistency with a covered agreement of measures taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings such dispute shall be decided through recourse to these dispute settlement procedures, including wherever possible resort to the original panel."

7.82 The United States has brought this dispute under Article 21.5 of the DSU, by making the following request:

"As there is 'disagreement as to the existence or consistency with a covered agreement of measures taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings' of the DSB between the United States and the EC, the United States respectfully seeks recourse to Article 21.5 of the DSU in this matter. The United States requests that the DSB refer the matter to the original panel, if possible, pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU."⁴³⁵

7.83 As a different preliminary objection, the European Communities has argued that the United States' complaints should be rejected, as they fall outside of the scope of Article 21.5 of the DSU. In the European Communities' view, its current bananas import regime is not "a measure taken to comply" with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB.⁴³⁶ The Panel will deal with this different preliminary issue separately. Instead, in this section the Panel will focus on the more narrow issue of whether the Bananas Understanding signed between the European Communities and the United States in April 2001 bars the United States from bringing this compliance challenge.

(b) Is the United States barred by the Bananas Understanding from bringing this compliance challenge?

(i) Panel's approach

7.84 The Panel notes that the European Communities makes the following suggestion to the Panel:

"[T]he Panel should take into consideration the terms of these agreements [agreements to which all parties to a dispute participate and with which all parties to the dispute undertake certain rights and obligations within the context of the DSU and the GATT; i.e.,] in determining the rights and obligations of the parties towards each other. It is not contested today that the Panel should enforce the agreement between the parties to dispense with formal consultations prior to requesting the establishment of the Panel. Equally, the Panel must also enforce the agreement between the parties that allows the European Communities to follow a certain course of action in exchange for the United States' receiving specific consideration.

This agreement is the [Bananas] Understanding, with which the United States accepted that the European Communities would continue to offer the Cotonou Preference to the ACP countries until the end of 2007. The United States cannot now renege on its obligations and challenge the existence of the Cotonou Preference until the end of 2007, because the United States has already received specific consideration for entering into the Understanding and was aware of the legal nature of the Understanding from the very beginning."⁴³⁷

⁴³⁵ See EC – Bananas III (Article 21.5 – US), Request for the Establishment of a Panel (WT/DS27/83) 2 July 2007, p. 3.

7.85 As indicated above, the European Communities appears to be making a sequential argument under its first preliminary objection.⁴³⁸ First, the European Communities argues that the Bananas Understanding constitutes a mutually agreed solution providing for the ACP preference, and therefore the United States is prevented from contesting the conformity of the European Communities' current banana import regime in a compliance dispute. Second, the European Communities makes a similar, residual argument "even if it is assumed arguendo that the [Bananas] Understanding is not a 'mutually agreed solution' for purposes of Article 3.6 of the DSU."⁴³⁹ If that were the case, the European Communities argues that the Bananas Understanding is "a bilateral agreement between the United States and the European Communities with which both parties undertook certain obligations and acquired certain rights [and, as such,] its terms must be taken into consideration in order to determine the parties' mutual rights and obligations under the GATT and the DSU."⁴⁴⁰ Third, the European Communities adds that, "even if it were to be assumed that the provisions of the Understanding itself cannot be taken into consideration in determining the rights and obligations of the parties to this dispute, the application of the principle of good faith on the facts of this case would bar the United States from challenging the Cotonou Preference."⁴⁴¹

7.86 In any event, the European Communities argues that:

"[G]iven that the United States has accepted in the [Bananas] Understanding the principle that the Cotonou Preference would continue to exist until the end of 2007, the United States is now barred from challenging the existence of the Cotonou Preference in the period between the end of 2005 and the end of 2007, irrespective of the reasons that the United States may claim in its complaint."⁴⁴²

7.87 Accordingly, there are two common elements in the European Communities' arguments under this preliminary issue:

- (a) The alleged legally binding nature of the Bananas Understanding on the United States, whether or not such Understanding qualifies as a mutually agreed solution; and,
- (b) That, as the European Communities puts it, "the United States has accepted in the [Bananas] Understanding the principle that the Cotonou Preference would continue to exist until the end of 2007."⁴⁴³

7.88 These two questions are potentially relevant for addressing this preliminary objection by the European Communities. The Panel will first assess whether the Bananas Understanding bars the United States from bringing this compliance challenge, by first looking at the language of the Understanding. Only if the Panel was to find that the Bananas Understanding bars the United States from bringing this dispute, would the Panel then turn to assessing, as suggested by the European Communities, whether the Understanding indeed qualifies as a mutually agreed solution, whether it qualifies as an agreement binding on the United States for the purposes of WTO dispute settlement, or whether the application of the principle of good faith on the facts of this case would otherwise bar the United States from challenging the Cotonou Preference.

⁴³⁷ Final written version of the European Communities' opening statement at the substantive meeting of the Panel with parties and third parties, paras. 1-2.

7.89 The Panel will follow the approach of the panel in India – Autos: it will conduct a case-specific analysis of the preliminary issue raised by the European Communities. Indeed, in the India – Autos dispute, in which the question of whether a mutually agreed solution can prevent a party from bringing a dispute was raised, the panel noted that:

"Without clear guidance in the DSU, this question raises an important systemic issue. ... There may be significant differences between the provisions of mutually agreed solutions from case to case, which may ... make it difficult to draw general conclusions as to the relevance of [mutually agreed] solutions to subsequent proceedings other than on a case by case basis."⁴⁴⁴

7.90 Further, the panel in India – Autos found that it "need[ed] to consider ... the terms of the MAS"⁴⁴⁵ because "[u]ltimately, it is the terms of the MAS that are the only possible source of any restriction on our jurisdiction."⁴⁴⁶ The Panel agrees with the European Communities' argument in these proceedings that "the analysis of the legal status and effect of the Understanding should be based on its content and on the confirmations contained in the Letters exchanged between the parties, where their true common intentions and mutual understandings and undertakings are expressed."⁴⁴⁷

7.91 The Panel intends to address this preliminary issue raised by the European Communities. At the same time, however, the Panel does not consider it necessary for the resolution of this dispute to address the more general issue of whether or not mutually agreed solutions or legally binding agreements between parties to a dispute may prevent parties to such instruments from bringing compliance disputes. The Panel agrees with the panel in India – Autos that this general issue "is not expressly addressed in the DSU".⁴⁴⁸ The Panel also recalls that, under Article 3.2 of the DSU, the WTO dispute settlement system "serves to preserve the rights and obligations of Members under the covered agreements, and to clarify the existing provisions of those agreements in accordance with customary rules of interpretation of public international law." Further, under the same provision, "[r]ecommendations and rulings of the DSB cannot add to or diminish the rights and obligations provided in the covered agreements."

7.92 With regard to the method of assessment, the panel in India – Autos recognized that "[a]s [an] MAS is not a covered agreement, it is not expressly subject to the DSU requirement to utilise customary rules of interpretation of international law."⁴⁴⁹ Nevertheless, that panel also stated that:

"[S]ince [the MAS in question] is an agreement among States, the Panel finds it appropriate to address the terms of this agreement in accordance with the customary rules of interpretation of international law. It will therefore consider the ordinary meaning of the terms of the MAS in light of their context and taking into account their object and purpose."⁴⁵⁰

7.93 In the light of that statement by the panel in India – Autos and given the argument of the European Communities that the Bananas Understanding would qualify as a mutually agreed solution, this Panel will analyse the terms of the Bananas Understanding in accordance with the customary rules of interpretation of international law, as expressed in Articles 31 and 32 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties to establish whether the Bananas Understanding prevents the United States from bringing this compliance dispute. This is without prejudice to the actual legal status of the Bananas Understanding, which the Panel will not address at this stage.

(ii) The terms and main elements of the Bananas Understanding

7.94 Turning to the analysis of the terms of the Bananas Understanding, the Panel notes that the Understanding provides that "[t]he European Commission and the United States have identified the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved."⁴⁵¹

7.95 The Bananas Understanding sets out various future steps to be taken by its parties, who are also the parties to the dispute before this Panel. The Understanding first addresses the three distinct steps to be taken by the European Communities following the adoption of the Understanding. First, the Understanding identifies the last, third step:

"In accordance with Article 16(1) of Regulation No. (EC) 404/93 (as amended by Regulation No. (EC) 216/2001), the European Communities (EC) will introduce a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006."⁴⁵² (emphasis added).

7.96 Subsequently, the Bananas Understanding identifies the two initial steps to be implemented by the European Communities in the following terms:

"In the interim, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as follows:

1. Effective 1 July 2001, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as set out in Annex 1.
2. Effective as soon as possible thereafter, subject to Council and European Parliament approval and to adoption of the Article XIII waiver referred to in paragraph E, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as set out in Annex 2. The Commission will seek to obtain the implementation of such an import regime as soon as possible."⁴⁵³

7.97 As for the United States, the Bananas Understanding prescribes two main steps. First:

"The United States will lift its reserve concerning the waiver of Article I of the GATT 1994 that the EC has requested for preferential access to the EC of goods originating in ACP states signatory to the Cotonou Agreement; and will actively work towards promoting the acceptance of an EC request for a waiver of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 needed for the management of quota C under the import regime described in paragraph C(2) until 31 December 2005."⁴⁵⁴

⁴⁵¹ See Bananas Understanding, para. A, in EC – Bananas III, Notification of Mutually Agreed Solution (WT/DS27/58), 2 July 2001, and EC – Bananas III, Communication from the United States (WT/DS27/59), 2 July 2001.

⁴⁵² Ibid., para. B.

⁴⁵³ Ibid., para. C.

⁴⁵⁴ Ibid., para. E.

7.98 Second:

"With respect to the United States' imposition of increased duties applied to certain EC products as of 19 April 1999 covering trade in an amount of US$191.4 million per year (the "increased duties"):

1. Upon implementation of the import regime described in paragraph C(1), the United States will provisionally suspend its imposition of the increased duties.
2. Upon implementation of the import regime described in paragraph C(2), the United States will terminate its imposition of the increased duties."⁴⁵⁵

7.99 The Bananas Understanding adds that "[t]he United States may reimpose the increased duties if the import regime described in paragraph C(2) does not enter into force by 1 January 2002."⁴⁵⁶

7.100 Without addressing the legal status of the Bananas Understanding, the Panel agrees with the European Communities that, as Article 3.7 of the DSU provides, mutually agreed solutions constitute the "clearly preferred" solution to WTO disputes. Also, the Panel recognizes the systemic importance of mutually agreed solutions for WTO dispute settlement, and the importance of parties complying with the terms of such a mutually agreed solution.

7.101 Nevertheless, the Panel reaches a different conclusion on Article 3.7 of the DSU than the European Communities on whether the Bananas Understanding can bar the United States from bringing this compliance challenge. Indeed, Article 3.7 of the DSU also provides that "[t]he aim of the [WTO] dispute settlement mechanism is to secure a positive solution to a dispute" (emphasis added).

7.102 Further, under Article 3.2 of the DSU, "the dispute settlement system of the WTO is a central element in providing security and predictability to the multilateral trading system", and one of the objectives of the WTO dispute settlement system is "to preserve the rights and obligations of Members under the covered agreements".

7.103 Also, under Article 3.3 of the DSU:

"The prompt settlement of situations in which a Member considers that any benefits accruing to it directly or indirectly under the covered agreements are being impaired by measures taken by another Member is essential to the effective functioning of the WTO and the maintenance of a proper balance between the rights and obligations of Members" (emphasis added).

7.104 Finally, pursuant to Article 3.4 of the DSU, "[r]ecommendations or rulings made by the DSB shall be aimed at achieving a satisfactory settlement of the matter in accordance with the rights and obligations under [the DSU]" (emphasis added).

7.105 Accordingly, the Panel considers that any alleged solution to WTO disputes, including a mutually agreed solution, must "secure a positive solution" to the dispute in the sense of Article 3.7 of the DSU. This requirement also applies to a solution that is alleged to be a "clearly preferred" or a legally binding one, as the European Communities argues in regard to the Bananas Understanding. The Panel has already noted the emphasis in the DSU on the prompt settlement of disputes and on the "central" role of WTO dispute settlement in providing security and predictability to the multilateral trading system. Given such emphasis, any solution to a WTO dispute can lead to a positive resolution of a dispute only if the solution provides an overall satisfactory and effective settlement to the dispute in question in the sense of Article 3.4 of the DSU.

⁴⁵⁵ See Bananas Understanding, paras. D.1 and D.2, in EC – Bananas III, Notification of Mutually Agreed Solution (WT/DS27/58), 2 July 2001, and EC – Bananas III, Communication from the United States (WT/DS27/59), 2 July 2001.

7.106 The Panel notes that the parties do not contest the fact that both parties complied with intermediate steps identified in the Bananas Understanding. Indeed, the United States recognizes that the European Communities complied with its obligations for the first two interim phases set out in the Understanding (i.e., implementing an interim import regime for bananas on the basis of historical licensing as set out in the annexes of the Understanding). In turn, the European Communities recognizes that the United States has complied with its main obligations under the Understanding (i.e., provisionally suspending, and later terminating, its imposition of increased duties to certain EC products, as well as lifting its reserve concerning the adoption of the waivers requested by the European Communities).

7.107 Nevertheless, the Panel considers that ultimately the Bananas Understanding did not constitute a positive solution and an effective settlement to the dispute in question.⁴⁵⁷ The Panel reaches this view for the following three reasons taken together:

- (a) The Bananas Understanding provides only for a means, i.e. a series of future steps, for resolving and settling the dispute;
- (b) The adoption of the Bananas Understanding was subsequent to recommendations, rulings and suggestions by the DSB; and,
- (c) Parties have made conflicting communications to the WTO concerning the Bananas Understanding.

7.108 Before turning to these three issues, the Panel recalls that one of the main arguments of the European Communities under this preliminary issue is that the Bananas Understanding is a mutually agreed solution or a legally binding agreement for the purposes of WTO dispute settlement. The Panel does not address that argument at this point; however, the Panel does note that, assuming that the Bananas Understanding qualifies as a mutually agreed solution or a legally binding agreement for the purposes of WTO dispute settlement, there is a clear requirement for it to be consistent with the covered agreements.

7.109 Article 3.7 of the DSU not only expresses a "clear preference" for mutually agreed solutions, it also provides that "[a] solution mutually acceptable to the parties to a dispute and consistent with the covered agreements is clearly to be preferred." (emphasis added) Article 3.5 of the DSU confirms this requirement of conformity in regard to all solutions, not only mutually agreed solutions, by stipulating that:

"All solutions to matters formally raised under the consultation and dispute settlement provisions of the covered agreements, including arbitration awards, shall be consistent with those agreements and shall not nullify or impair benefits accruing to any Member under those agreements, nor impede the attainment of any objective of those agreements."

⁴⁵⁷ Cfr. United States' response to Panel question No. 47, para. 84.

7.110 This obligation of conformity is closely related to the requirement that an alleged mutually agreed solution or legally binding agreement can prevent the United States from bringing this compliance challenge only if such alleged mutually agreed solution or legally binding agreement provides a positive solution and effective settlement of the dispute. An alleged mutually agreed solution or legally binding agreement could hardly provide a positive solution or effective settlement for the purposes of WTO dispute settlement without being in conformity with the covered agreements.

(iii) The Bananas Understanding provides only for a means for resolving and settling the dispute

7.111 As the analysis of the terms and main elements of the Bananas Understanding shows, the essence of the Understanding is a series of staged future steps that both sides agreed to take over a period of several years following the adoption of the Understanding.

7.112 The Panel notes that, by its own terms, the Bananas Understanding "identified the means by which the long-standing dispute over the [European Communities'] banana import regime can be resolved"⁴⁵⁸ (emphasis added). In the light of that language and the various subsequent steps set out in the Bananas Understanding, it is difficult to see how the Bananas Understanding, even if it were an alleged mutually agreed solution or a binding agreement, could be an effective solution to a dispute in the absence of parties' full compliance with all the steps set out therein.

7.113 Also, as indicated earlier, the Panel considers that one of the main functions of the Bananas Understanding, if it were a mutually agreed solution or a binding agreement, as the European Communities argues, would be to provide an effective settlement to the dispute in question. The Panel agrees with the panel in India – Autos, which was considering a mutually agreed solution providing for future steps by its parties, that:

"It is certainly reasonable to assume, particularly on the basis of Article 3 of the DSU, ... that [mutually] agreed solutions are intended to reflect a settlement of the dispute in question, which both parties expect will bring a final conclusion to the relevant proceedings."⁴⁵⁹

7.114 The Panel has not been called upon to assess, for the purposes of resolving the current dispute, whether the steps set out in an alleged mutually agreed solution or other legally binding agreement between the parties to a dispute may be enforced under the DSU.

7.115 In any event, one of the reasons for the "clear preference" for mutually agreed solutions under Article 3.7 of the DSU, would seem to be that, by virtue of the mutual agreement of the parties that they involve, such solutions are supposed to provide the most effective solution and settlement to the dispute in question.

7.116 In this respect, an alleged mutually agreed solution or binding agreement that essentially serves to provide for future steps by its parties, like the Bananas Understanding, can only "secure a positive solution" in the sense of Article 3.7 of the DSU after implementation, because it is inseparably linked to those future steps and to full compliance by the parties with each of those steps. In other words, for the purposes of providing a positive solution and effective settlement to the dispute in question, the full effect of the Bananas Understanding would be realized only after parties' compliance with all the steps set out in the Understanding.

⁴⁵⁸ Bananas Understanding, para. A, in EC – Bananas III, Notification of Mutually Agreed Solution (WT/DS27/58), 2 July 2001, and EC – Bananas III, Communication from the United States (WT/DS27/59), 2 July 2001.

⁴⁵⁹ Panel Report on India – Autos, para. 7.113.

7.117 The Panel recalls the importance of the requirement of consistency with the covered agreements of all solutions to WTO disputes. Without assessing the legal status of the Bananas Understanding, the Panel considers that that requirement also applies to an alleged mutually agreed solution or legally binding solution that, like the Bananas Understanding, provides for a series of staged future steps by its parties.

7.118 Pursuant to Articles 3.7 and 3.5 of the DSU, any mutually agreed solution shall be consistent with the covered agreements. By virtue of Article 3.5 of the DSU, the same requirement of consistency with the covered agreements applies to an alleged legally binding agreement that is intended to provide an effective solution to a particular dispute.

7.119 This link between on the one hand, alleged mutually agreed solutions or legally binding agreements and, on the other hand, the steps set out in such solutions or agreements, in the context of compliance with the covered agreements, is perhaps more obvious for alleged mutually agreed solutions or legally binding agreements recording the implementation of past steps agreed upon by the parties. However, despite the different time perspective, the same link is equally valid in the context of alleged mutually agreed solutions or legally binding agreements setting out future steps.

7.120 In the light of that requirement of conformity with the covered agreements, the Panel remains convinced that a complainant must have the right of having recourse to WTO dispute settlement, under the DSU, in order to review the conformity with the covered agreements of a measure purportedly taken to implement a step set out in an alleged mutually agreed solution or other legally binding agreement.

(iv) The adoption of the Bananas Understanding subsequent to recommendations and suggestions by the DSB

7.121 The fact that the parties adopted the Bananas Understanding subsequent to a series of reports in this dispute by panels and the Appellate Body establishing inconsistency with the covered agreements constitutes relevant context for assessing the European Communities' preliminary objection.⁴⁶⁰

7.122 The Dispute Settlement Body adopted the relevant reports with recommendations that the European Communities bring its measures into compliance, and suggestions how the European Communities might do that made in the related first compliance proceeding brought by Ecuador.⁴⁶¹ Through these recommendations and suggestions, the DSB repeatedly tried to promote a resolution of this dispute.

7.123 The European Communities argues that "[a]s consideration for entering into the [Bananas] Understanding, the United States obtained a new EC banana import regime that would be in place from July 1, 2001 and until January 1, 2006".⁴⁶² The European Communities adds that:

"[T]he [Bananas] Understanding does not contain any express provision imposing on the European Communities the obligation to implement a tariff only regime. Paragraph B [of the Understanding] makes a simple reference to a provision of the European Communities' secondary legislation, which reflected the political decision of the European Communities to change its banana import regime. This political decision had already been taken before the signing of the Understanding between the United States and the European Communities and their reaching an agreement on the appropriate 'measures taken to comply'. This is confirmed by the fact that paragraph B refers to an already existing piece of European Communities' legislation."⁴⁶³

7.124 To this argument, the United States has responded that:

"Paragraph B [of the Bananas Understanding] states that the EC 'will introduce a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006.' [A]lthough chronologically this would have been the last step to be taken, it is the first step outlined in the Understanding. The EC's argument that this paragraph is just a 'simple reference' to secondary legislation 'which reflected the political decision of the European Communities to change its banana import regime'⁴⁶⁴ before the signing of the Understanding is an attempted post hoc rationale inconsistent with the plain text of the Understanding. It ignores the fact that this was a central element in the 'means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved,' and cannot change the fact that there would be a continuum of actions to be taken, culminating with this step. This would have been the final action to be taken in bringing the EC regime into compliance."⁴⁶⁵

7.125 The European Communities further adds that:

"[T]he [Bananas] Understanding does not include any language that might indicate that the United States' acceptance of the Cotonou Preference until the end of 2007 was subject to any conditions relating to the characteristics of the Cotonou Preference. At the time the Understanding was signed the only characteristic of the Cotonou Preference that was known to the parties and, therefore, was accepted by both of them was that banana imports from ACP countries would be assured 'more favourable treatment than that granted to third countries benefiting from the most favoured nation clause for the same products', as provided in Article 1 of Annex V to the Cotonou Agreement. Therefore, as far as the United States is concerned, its acceptance of the Cotonou Preference is not qualified in any way."⁴⁶⁶

7.126 The European Communities notified the Bananas Understanding with the following communication:

"The European Communities (EC) wish to notify the Dispute Settlement Body (DSB) that they have reached, with the United States of America and Ecuador, a mutually satisfactory solution within the meaning of Article 3.6 of the DSU regarding the implementation by the EC of the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the DSB in the dispute "Regime for the importation, sale and distribution of bananas" (WT/DS27)"⁴⁶⁷ (emphasis added).

7.127 Notwithstanding the European Communities' arguments, the Panel notes a close link between each of the following: (i) the DSB recommendations and related suggestions made previously in this dispute; (ii) the third, final step foreseen by the Bananas Understanding (i.e., the introduction by the European Communities of "a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006"); and, (iii) the measures contested by the United States before this Panel.

7.128 As mentioned earlier, the Panel has not been called upon to assess whether, beyond the possibility of having alleged implementation steps reviewed under the DSU, the steps to be taken by parties under an alleged mutually agreed solution or legally binding agreement may be enforced under the DSU. In any event, the close link between the Bananas Understanding and the recommendations and related suggestions of the DSB underscores the relevance of the Bananas Understanding for the resolution and settlement of this dispute. At the same time, the link between the DSB recommendations and suggestions made previously in this dispute, the third, final step, foreseen by the Bananas Understanding, and the measures contested by the United States before this Panel confirms that the Bananas Understanding in itself cannot prevent the United States from bringing this compliance dispute.

7.129 Given those links, parties' compliance with all future steps set out in the Bananas Understanding is an even more important precondition of a positive solution and an effective settlement of the dispute. However, while the United States recognizes the European Communities' compliance with the first two steps under the Bananas Understanding, the United States contests whether the European Communities has complied with the third step: "to introduce a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006"^{468,469}.

"[T]he [Bananas] Understanding sets out a series of steps. Two significant steps were to be achieved by July 1, 2001, and January 1, 2002. As incentive to ensure that the EC took those steps, the United States agreed to first provisionally suspend its imposition of increased duties and then terminate the imposition of increased duties that the DSB had authorized the United States to apply. This only proves that both the United States and the EC complied with what is set out in paragraphs C and D of the Understanding. Up to that point, there had yet to be full compliance by the EC. Per the terms of the Understanding, there was an additional step to be taken."⁴⁷⁰

7.130 Further, in its compliance challenge, the United States challenges whether the current European Communities' bananas import regime is in conformity with the covered agreements.

(v) Parties' conflicting communications to the WTO concerning the Bananas Understanding

7.131 Article 3.6 of the DSU provides that:

"Mutually agreed solutions to matters formally raised under the consultation and dispute settlement provisions of the covered agreements shall be notified to the DSB and the relevant Councils and Committees, where any Member may raise any point relating thereto."

7.132 In addition to conformity with the covered agreements, notification is the other main requirement with regard to mutually agreed solutions under the DSU. The Panel notes that Article 3.6 of the DSU uses the passive voice, and it does not specify whether the parties shall notify a mutually agreed solution separately or jointly, or whether notification by one of the parties to a mutually agreed solution is sufficient, and if so, whether the complainant or the respondent shall make the notification.

7.133 Accordingly, the Panel does not address whether the Bananas Understanding was notified properly under Article 3.6 of the DSU or whether, as a result, this notification would affect whether it could qualify as a mutually agreed solution. At the same time, the Panel considers that the explicit notification requirement under Article 3.6 of the DSU is evidence of the importance that the DSU attaches to the notification of mutually agreed solutions to the WTO. Thus, for the purposes of WTO dispute settlement, the reaching of an alleged mutually agreed solution between parties to a dispute needs to be complemented with notifying such agreement to all WTO Members. The indispensability of this latter, multilateral element of mutually agreed solutions is underscored by the requirement, under Article 3.6 of the DSU, of notifying mutually agreed solutions not only to one WTO body or to the WTO in general but to the "DSB and the relevant Councils and Committees", and also by the explicit provision in Article 3.6 that in those bodies "any Member may raise any point relating thereto."

7.134 Article 3.5 of the DSU, the provision immediately preceding Article 3.6, sets out two basic requirements for "[a]ll solutions to matters formally raised under the consultation and dispute settlement provisions of the covered agreements": (i) they "shall be consistent with [the covered] agreements"; and, (ii) they "shall not nullify or impair benefits accruing to any Member under [the covered] agreements, nor impede the attainment of any objective of those agreements."

7.135 The fulfilment of these two basic requirements of Article 3.5 of the DSU is an indispensable multilateral element of "[a]ll solutions to matters formally raised under the consultation and dispute settlement provisions of the covered agreements", including any alleged mutually agreed solution or legally binding agreement that is intended to provide a positive solution and effective settlement to a dispute. Notification to the WTO membership is an additional multilateral element specific to mutually agreed solutions because, unlike other solutions to disputes, mutually agreed solutions are usually not developed multilaterally.

7.136 It is a matter of fact that in this dispute the European Communities sent to the DSB a communication, dated 22 June 2001 entitled "Notification of a Mutually Agreed Solution".⁴⁷¹ That communication stated that "[t]he European Communities (EC) wish to notify the Dispute Settlement Body (DSB) that they have reached, with the United States of America and Ecuador, a mutually satisfactory solution within the meaning of Article 3.6 of the DSU"⁴⁷², and it reproduced the text of the Bananas Understanding. This communication by the respondent was closely followed by a separate communication from the complainant, dated 26 June 2001, stating that the United States:

"[Had] received and reviewed the EC's separate notification of 22 June 2001, to the Dispute Settlement Body (DSB) of our Understanding on bananas. As we have explained to the EC during bilateral discussions last week and indicated at meetings of the DSB, the Understanding identifies the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved, but, as is obvious from its own text, it does not in itself constitute a mutually agreed solution pursuant to Article 3.6 of the DSU. In addition, in view of the steps yet to be taken by all parties, it would also be premature to take this item off the DSB agenda"⁴⁷³ (emphasis added).

7.137 This latter communication by the United States also reproduced the text of the Bananas Understanding, with the same language as the Bananas Understanding annexed to the ⁴⁷¹ See EC – Bananas III, Notification of Mutually Agreed Solution (WT/DS27/58), 2 July 2001, p. 1.

European Communities' communication. Also, the United States acknowledges that it signed the Bananas Understanding.⁴⁷⁴ Without assessing whether the Bananas Understanding is a mutually agreed solution or legally binding agreement, the Panel notes that these circumstances show that the Bananas Understanding created an important bilateral link between the United States and the European Communities. At the same time, these circumstances also show that almost immediately after the European Communities' attempt to accord a potential multilateral element to the Bananas Understanding, the United States called into question the multilateral status of that Understanding and its role in definitively resolving the dispute.

7.138 As noted above, the Panel does not need to assess whether the Bananas Understanding was notified properly under Article 3.6 of the DSU or whether, as a result, the Understanding could qualify as a mutually agreed solution. However, the Panel notes that, under Article 3.6 of the DSU, so far nearly all mutually agreed solutions have been notified by the respondent and the complainant (whether jointly or separately), with two exceptions where the mutually agreed solution was notified by the complainant only.⁴⁷⁵ The Panel interprets this practice as illustrating the importance of the complainant's involvement in, or at least its consent to, not only the bilateral but also the multilateral element, i.e. the notification to the DSB and relevant Councils and Committees, of any alleged mutually agreed solution.

7.139 As mentioned earlier, under Article 3.5 of the DSU, "[a]ll solutions to matters formally raised under the consultation and dispute settlement provisions of the covered agreements ... shall not nullify or impair benefits accruing to any Member under [the covered] agreements". If a solution to a dispute potentially affects the benefits accruing to WTO Members, it is first and foremost the benefits accruing to the complainant in the dispute that might be affected. This is particularly true for an alleged mutually agreed solution or legally binding agreement that the respondent argues would bar the complainant from bringing a challenge against a measure allegedly implementing a step set out in such alleged mutually agreed solution or legally binding agreement.

7.140 The Panel notes that, immediately following the respondent's communication of the Bananas Understanding to the WTO, the complainant in the dispute contested the multilateral status of the Understanding and its role in definitively resolving the dispute. Accordingly, in the light of this fact and of the requirement set out in Article 3.5 of the DSU for all solutions, it is difficult for the Panel to see how the Bananas Understanding could provide a positive solution and an effective settlement to the dispute.

7.141 It seems appropriate to assume that an alleged mutually agreed solution or legally binding agreement that could bar the complainant from bringing a subsequent compliance dispute, would need to provide a solution to the dispute for both parties, including in particular for the complainant, and especially after the DSB established the inconsistency with the covered agreement of measures adopted by the respondent.

(vi) Remaining key arguments raised under this preliminary issue

7.142 The Panel will now turn to the remaining key arguments raised under this preliminary issue, namely: first, whether, through the Bananas Understanding, the United States accepted the existence of the ACP preference beyond 2005; and, second, the European Communities' arguments on good faith.

⁴⁷⁴ See, for example, United States' first written submission, para. 7.

⁴⁷⁵ See Mexico – Certain Pricing Measures for Customs Valuation and Other Purposes, Communication from Guatemala (WT/DS298/2), 1 September 2005; and Colombia – Customs Measures on Importation of Certain Goods from Panama, Notification of a Mutually Agreed Solution (WT/DS348/10), 7 December 2006.

Did the United States accept, through the Bananas Understanding, the existence of the ACP preference beyond 2005?

7.143 As noted earlier, one of the key arguments of the European Communities under this preliminary issue is that, through the Bananas Understanding:

"The United States has entered into an international agreement with the European Communities accepting the existence of the Cotonou Preference until the end of 2007."⁴⁷⁶

7.144 For the purposes of this compliance dispute, the relevant period is the one starting on 1 January 2006, when the European Communities introduced its current banana import regime, contested by the United States. Accordingly, the question is whether the European Communities makes a prima facie case that, through the Bananas Understanding, the United States has accepted the extension of the ACP preference beyond 2005.

7.145 The Bananas Understanding does not specify its period of applicability. While the Understanding prescribes a step to be taken by the European Communities, the introduction of a tariff only regime for imports of bananas, "no later than 1 January 2006"⁴⁷⁷, it does not explicitly prescribe any steps to be taken by the United States with effect beyond 2005.

7.146 In arguing that, through the Bananas Understanding, the United States has accepted the ACP preference, the European Communities must be making reference to the following step prescribed in the Understanding for the United States:

"The United States will lift its reserve concerning the waiver of Article I of the GATT 1994 that the EC has requested for preferential access to the EC of goods originating in ACP States signatory to the Cotonou Agreement; and will actively work towards promoting the acceptance of an EC request for a waiver of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 needed for the management of quota C under the import regime described in paragraph C(2) until 31 December 2005."⁴⁷⁸

7.147 While this language in the Bananas Understanding might reflect an indirect acceptance of the ACP preference until the end of 2005, it does not appear to mention any acceptance of the ACP preference by the United States beyond 2005. Indeed, the second element in the Understanding with the United States referred to in the preceding paragraph, relating to the waiver under Article XIII of the GATT 1994 is explicitly limited to the end of 2005. In other words, it cannot extend to the period after 2005. Further, the first element of the step to be taken by the United States, relating to the waiver under Article I of the GATT 1994, requires the United States to lift its reserve in the context of a waiver requested by the European Communities.

7.148 The acceptance of that waiver request, like any waiver request, does not depend only on one Member, the United States, but on all WTO Members. The Bananas Understanding also comprises the execution of phases and requires the implementation of several key features, which demand the collective action of WTO Members.

⁴⁷⁶ European Communities' first written submission, para. 16.

⁴⁷⁸ Ibid., para. E.

7.149 Since the United States could have accepted the ACP preference only indirectly through committing to lifting its reserve concerning a waiver request, the period for which the United States might have indirectly accepted the ACP preference depends ultimately on the waiver being adopted partly as a result of the United States' step under the Bananas Understanding.

7.150 The waivers ultimately adopted, namely the Doha waivers from Article I:1 and Articles XIII:1 and XIII:2 of the GATT 1994⁴⁷⁹, do not provide that it would unconditionally apply beyond 2005 in regard to bananas. Even the European Communities accepts that the Doha Waiver from Article I:1 of the GATT 1994 sets out conditions for its applicability to bananas in the period between 1 January 2006 and the overall expiration of the waiver on 31 December 2007. In turn, the Doha Waiver from Articles XIII:1 and XIII:2 of the GATT 1994 expired by its own terms on 31 December 2005.

7.151 In the light of the above, the Panel finds that the European Communities has not made a prima facie case for one of its central arguments under this preliminary issue, namely that the United States would have accepted, through the Bananas Understanding, the extension of the ACP preference beyond 2005. As a consequence, the Panel fails to see how, as argued by the European Communities, the United States would be prevented from bringing this compliance dispute against the ACP preference for the period starting on 1 January 2006.

7.152 This is underscored by the fact that one of the main points of contention between the parties to this compliance dispute concerns the conditions of the validity of the Doha Waiver from Article I:1 of the GATT 1994 to bananas in 2006-2007, and in particular the question whether the European Communities effectively complied with the final step envisaged in the Bananas Understanding and what implications that might have for the validity of the waiver for bananas in 2006-2007.

Arguments by the European Communities concerning good faith

7.153 As mentioned earlier, the European Communities argues that "the principle of good faith ... bars the United States from challenging the Cotonou Preference".⁴⁸⁰ In the European Communities' view:

"The deal between the parties would have been completely one-sided and unbalanced if the United States were allowed first to reap all the benefits of the Understanding (i.e., an EC import regime favourable to the US-based banana trading companies between July 1, 2001 and December 31, 2005) and, after it had reaped all benefits, the United States were allowed to avoid complying with its obligations towards the European Communities (i.e., to allow the existence of the Cotonou Preference until the end of 2007)."⁴⁸¹

7.154 Further, the European Communities argues that:

"Granting to WTO Members the right to renege on the agreements with which they reach mutually agreed solutions to their disputes would seriously compromise the effectiveness of these mutually agreed solutions and would foster the 'contentious'

⁴⁷⁹ See Ministerial Conference, European Communities, The ACP – EC Partnership Agreement, Decision of 14 November 2001 (WT/MIN(01)/15), 14 November 2001, and Ministerial Conference, European Communities, Transitional Regime for the EC Autonomous Tariff Rate Quotas on Imports of Bananas, Decision of 14 November 2001 (WT/MIN(01)/16), 14 November 2001.

⁴⁸¹ Ibid., para. 13.

character of the dispute resolution system. This would be inconsistent with the purpose of the DSU as reflected in Article 3.10 and with the principles enshrined in Article 3.7 (where it is stated that mutually agreed solutions are to be preferred)."⁴⁸²

7.155 The Panel starts by noting that the United States recognizes that the European Communities has complied with its obligations for the first two interim phases set out in the Understanding (i.e., implementing an interim import regime for bananas on the basis of historical licensing as set out in the annexes of the Understanding), and the European Communities recognizes that the United States has complied with its main obligations under the Understanding (i.e., provisionally suspending its imposition of increased duties to certain EC products and lifting its reserve concerning the adoption of the waivers requested by the European Communities).

7.156 At the same time, both parties suggest that compliance with Bananas Understanding remained partial. The United States contests whether the European Communities has complied with the third phase set out in the Understanding (i.e., introducing a tariff only regime for imports of bananas). In turn, the European Communities requests the Panel to enforce the Bananas Understanding, because in its view the United States must now comply with "its obligations towards the European Communities (i.e., to allow the existence of the Cotonou Preference until the end of 2007)".⁴⁸³

7.157 In view of the above, the European Communities' argument about an alleged parties' one-sided compliance with the Bananas Understanding has limited relevance for assessing whether the Bananas Understanding prevents the United States from bringing this compliance dispute.

7.158 Finally, as to the arguments of the European Communities on good faith, the Panel notes that the United States is not challenging or questioning the Bananas Understanding itself, but rather is challenging the conformity of the European Communities' bananas import regime with the European Communities' obligations under the WTO agreements.

7.159 As mentioned above, the Panel attaches great importance to the conformity of an alleged mutually agreed solution or legally binding agreement, including the future steps set out therein, with the covered agreements, as well as to the possibility of the complainant to have recourse to WTO dispute settlement to review the issue of conformity. Nowhere in the Bananas Understanding has the United States accepted that it would forego its right to challenge the conformity with the covered agreements of any measure that the European Communities might take to implement a step set out in the Bananas Understanding.

7.160 The Panel notes that in US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment) the Appellate Body stated that "there is a basis for a dispute settlement panel to determine, in an appropriate case, whether a Member has not acted in good faith"⁴⁸⁴. However, the Appellate Body added that:

"Nothing ... in the covered agreements supports the conclusion that simply because a WTO Member is found to have violated a substantive treaty provision, it has therefore not acted in good faith. In our view, it would be necessary to prove more than mere violation to support such a conclusion."⁴⁸⁵

7.161 Interpreting those considerations by the Appellate Body, the panel in Argentina – Poultry Anti-Dumping Duties stated that:

⁴⁸² European Communities' second written submission, para. 18.

⁴⁸³ Ibid., para. 13.

⁴⁸⁴ Appellate Body Report on US – Offset Act (Byrd Amendment), para. 297.

⁴⁸⁵ Ibid., para. 298.

"[T]wo conditions must be satisfied before a Member may be found to have failed to act in good faith. First, the Member must have violated a substantive provision of the WTO agreements. Second, there must be something 'more than mere violation'."⁴⁸⁶

7.162 Article 3.10 of the DSU provides in relevant part that "if a dispute arises, all Members will engage in these procedures in good faith in an effort to resolve the dispute." The European Communities has not succeeded in making a prima facie case for the alleged violation of that provision, let alone also for something "more than mere violation".

7.163 In the light of the above, the Panel rejects the European Communities' arguments concerning good faith.

(vii) Conclusion

7.164 In the light of the foregoing analysis of the terms and context of the Bananas Understanding, the Panel concludes that, even if the Bananas Understanding qualified as a mutually agreed solution or a legally binding bilateral agreement at the time of its signature, it does not prevent the United States from bringing this compliance dispute. The Panel therefore does not assess whether the Bananas Understanding qualifies as a mutually agreed solution or a legally binding bilateral agreement, as argued by the European Communities. Nor does the Panel assess the arguments by the European Communities that the Bananas Understanding would constitute applicable rules of law for WTO dispute settlement.

7.165 In conclusion, the Panel considers that the European Communities has not succeeded in making a prima facie case in favour of its preliminary objection that the United States is barred from challenging the ACP preference because of the Bananas Understanding signed between the United States and the European Communities in April 2001. Accordingly, the Panel rejects this European Communities' preliminary objection.

E. PRELIMINARY OBJECTION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES CONCERNING WHETHER THE COMPLAINT BY THE UNITED STATES FALLS WITHIN THE SCOPE OF ARTICLE 21.5 OF THE DSU

1. Summary of Parties' arguments

(a) The European Communities' arguments

7.166 The European Communities "requests the Panel ... to reject the [United States'] complaint in its entirety"⁴⁸⁷ because "the United States has erroneously brought this complaint under the procedures of Article 21.5 of the DSU."⁴⁸⁸ According to the European Communities, "[i]t is true that the United States' challenge relates to a product (i.e., bananas) that was the subject of dispute resolution between the United States and the European Communities in the past, culminating with the report of the Appellate Body in 1997."⁴⁸⁹

7.167 However, the European Communities contends in its first written submission of September 2007, "the import regime that [it] has in place today, and which the United States challenges with the current proceedings, is not a 'measure taken to comply' with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in 1997."⁴⁹⁰ The European Communities argues that, since its "current ...

banana import regime is not a 'measure taken to comply' with the 1997 rulings and recommendations"⁴⁹¹, "[i]f the United States does indeed consider that the current banana import regime violates the GATT, it should commence new proceedings on the basis of Article 6 of the DSU."⁴⁹² According to the European Communities:

"To hold otherwise would amount to allowing the use of Article 21.5 of the DSU in order to challenge any measure relating to a product that has been the subject matter of dispute resolution in the past. Such an abuse of Article 21.5 (and its expedited procedures) would run against the nature and the object of Article 21.5 and the findings of the Appellate Body in the Canada – Aircraft case."⁴⁹³

7.168 According to the European Communities:

"It is settled law that the Article 21.5 proceedings can be used only to challenge the legality of the 'measures taken to comply' with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB. They cannot be used to challenge the legality of 'any' measure taken by the defending party, even if that measure relates to products that have been the subject of dispute resolution procedures in the past."^{494,495}

7.169 The European Communities concedes that "[f]ollowing a negative panel or Appellate Body report, a defending party may take a number of initiatives that may affect the product market that was the subject of the dispute."⁴⁹⁶ However, "[t]he mere fact that these policy initiatives relate to a product market that has been the subject of a dispute in the past does not suffice to characterize all of these policy initiatives as 'measures taken to comply' with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB."⁴⁹⁷

7.170 Referring the report of the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 - Canada), the European Communities notes that:

"[T]he Appellate Body had found in its report ... that it is not 'up to the complaining Member alone to determine what constitutes the measure taken to comply. It is rather for the Panel itself to determine the ambit of its jurisdiction'. The Appellate Body also found ... that 'to be sure, characterizing an act by a Member as a measure taken to comply when the Member maintains otherwise is not something that should be done lightly by a panel'."⁴⁹⁸

7.171 According to the European Communities:

"[A] determination of whether a particular measure constitutes a 'measure taken to comply' should be based on (i) the agreement reached between the parties (in our case the [Bananas] Understanding) and the rights and obligations undertaken in it (e.g., the measures that bring the termination of the retaliation rights); (ii) the timing of the various measures (e.g., was the decision to introduce the measure taken before the negotiation of the [Bananas] Understanding or after); and (iii) on whether there is a link between the DSB recommendations and rulings on the one hand and the measures taken on the other."⁴⁹⁹

7.172 On the one hand, the European Communities identifies specific measures it has taken since 1997 as measures taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in the EC - Bananas III dispute in 1997. On the other hand, the European Communities advances various arguments contending that its current banana import regime, introduced on 1 January 2006, is not a measure taken to comply.

(i) Alleged measures taken to comply identified by the European Communities

7.173 As to the measures allegedly taken to comply, the European Communities argues that it "had already taken measures to comply with the 1997 Appellate Body report in 1998, when it introduced a different banana import regime than the one found by the Appellate Body not to be in compliance with the WTO rules."⁵⁰⁰ The European Communities adds that "as far as the banana dispute with the United States is concerned, the 'measures taken to comply' with the findings and recommendations of the Appellate Body in 1997 and the rulings and recommendations of the DSB in 1997 were taken by the European Communities in 2002."⁵⁰¹ In particular:

"In compliance with the [Bananas Understanding], the European Communities introduced on January 1, 2002 the final 'measure taken to comply' with the 1997 Appellate Body report. This was the tariff-quota based import regime with the characteristics agreed in Annex II of the [Bananas] Understanding. This was the 'measure taken to comply' that was agreed with the United States."⁵⁰²

7.174 In response to the arguments of the United States about the relevance of paragraph B of the *Bananas Understanding*⁵⁰³, the European Communities argues that:

"[T]he Understanding between the European Communities and the United States is particularly relevant in determining whether the current banana import regime is a 'measure taken to comply'. In particular, the rights and obligations undertaken by both parties in the Understanding, the detailed description of the import regime to be implemented between 2002 and 2005 and the fact that the retaliation rights of the United States would be terminated upon the European Communities' implementation of the 2002-2005 import regime, taken together, establish that the 2002-2005 import regime was the 'measure taken to comply' that was agreed between the parties."⁵⁰⁴

7.175 Further, comparing its various bananas import regimes addressed in the Bananas Understanding, the European Communities points out that, in regard to the tariff-only regime to be introduced on 1 January 2006, the Understanding:

"[M]akes simply a reference to that legislation and does not impose any relevant obligation on either party (e.g., the Understanding does not provide for any particular consequences for either party, if the tariff only import regime is not introduced by January 1, 2006). This is in stark contrast with the 2002-2005 import regime, which (i) is described in great detail in the Understanding's two Annexes, (ii) its implementation brings the termination of the United States' retaliatory measures, and (iii) a potential non-implementation gave to the United States the right not to adhere to the Understanding."⁵⁰⁵

(ii) The current EC bananas import regime is not a measure taken to comply

7.176 The European Communities argues that its current bananas import regime, introduced on 1 January 2006, is not a measure taken to comply because the EC – Bananas III dispute ended before 2006 and its current bananas import regime does not have the necessary linkage to the 1997 recommendations and rulings adopted by the DSB in the EC – Bananas III dispute.

The EC – Bananas III dispute ended before 2006

7.177 According to the European Communities, its dispute with the United States, "which had culminated with the Appellate Body's report in 1997 and the United States' retaliation measures, ended when the parties reached their 'mutually agreed solution' in 2001 and signed the [Bananas] Understanding and exchanged the Letters attached as an Exhibit to [the European Communities' first written] submission."⁵⁰⁶ Also, "the tariff-quota based import regime with the characteristics agreed in Annex II of the [Bananas] Understanding [and introduced by the EC on 1 January 2002] ... was the 'measure taken to comply' that was agreed with the United States and this was the end of the banana dispute between the parties."⁵⁰⁷

7.178 The European Communities notes that the preamble of:

"Council Regulation 2587/2001, adopted by the European Communities on December 19, 2001, which introduced the 2002-2005 banana import regime[,] ... states that the Regulation introduces the measures resulting from:

'... numerous close contacts with supplier countries and other interested parties to settle the disputes ... and to take into account of the conclusions of the panel set up under the dispute settlement system of the World Trade Organisation (WTO).'

The European Communities notified this Regulation to the WTO on January 21, 2002 under the heading 'Status Report on the Implementation of the Recommendations and Rulings in the Dispute regarding EC-Regime for the importation, sale and distribution of bananas'. The notification states that 'by this Regulation the EC has implemented Phase 2 of the Understandings with the United States and Ecuador'.⁵⁰⁸

7.179 The European Communities adds that "the 'measures taken to comply' with the findings and recommendations of the Appellate Body in 1997 and the rulings and recommendations of the DSB in 1997 ... taken by the European Communities in 2002 ... were never challenged by the United States."⁵⁰⁹ In particular, the European Communities argues that:

⁵⁰⁷ Ibid., para. 49.

⁵⁰⁸ European Communities' response to Panel question No. 13.

⁵⁰⁹ European Communities' first written submission, para. 50.

"The United States and the European Communities agreed in the Understanding in 2001 that the 'measure taken to comply' with the 1997 DSB recommendations and rulings would be the 2002-2005 banana import regime. If the United States had considered that the European Communities had failed to implement that 'measure taken to comply', the United States should have brought an Article 21.5 proceeding against that import regime at that time. However, the United States never challenged the 2002-2005 banana import regime. This means that the dispute that had led to the 1997 DSB recommendations and rulings was terminated upon the European Communities' implementation of the measure agreed with the United States."⁵¹⁰

7.180 Further, according to the European Communities, "the United States' retaliation rights terminated upon the European Communities' implementation of this tariff-quota based regime and the United States never requested from the DSB the right to reinstate those rights with relation to that import regime."⁵¹¹ In particular, the European Communities points out that:

"The Understanding on Bananas provided that, as of July 1, 2001, the European Communities would implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing and with certain characteristics defined in Annex 1 of the Understanding.⁵¹² Upon the European Communities' implementation of this regime, the United States would provisionally suspend its retaliation measures."⁵¹³

7.181 Furthermore:

"[According to the Bananas Understanding, a]s soon as possible thereafter, the European Communities would implement another import regime on the basis of historical licensing with certain other characteristics defined in Annex 2 of the Understanding.⁵¹⁴ Upon the European Communities' implementation of that regime, the United States' right to suspend its concessions would be terminated.⁵¹⁵ The deadline for the implementation of that regime was January 1, 2002. If the European Communities failed to implement the new regime by that date, the United States would have the right to re-impose their retaliation measures."⁵¹⁶

The European Communities implemented the new import regime within the agreed deadline and the United States' right to suspend concessions was terminated. This was the end of the banana dispute between the United States and the European Communities.⁵¹⁷ The United States' agreement to have their retaliation rights terminated confirms this point: the right to suspend concessions must be revoked once the defending WTO Member has fully complied with the DSB's recommendations and rulings.^{518,519}

7.182 According to the European Communities, under the Bananas Understanding:

"The only case in which the United States would re-impose retaliatory measures was if the Phase II regime [set out in paragraph C-2 of the Bananas Understanding] '(did) not enter into force by 1 January 2002'. [T]he fact that the United States accepted to have their retaliation rights terminated upon the implementation of the tariff-quota-based import regime described in paragraph C-2 of the [Bananas] Understanding confirms that the implementation of that import regime was the agreed 'measure taken to comply'.⁵²⁰

7.183 Further, "[t]he fact that the Understanding provided for the termination and not for the continuation of the suspension of the retaliation rights of the United States after January 1, 2002 confirms that there was no dispute between the United States and the European Communities after that date."⁵²¹

7.184 The European Communities adds that:

"Article 22.8 of the DSU provides that retaliation measures must be terminated 'when a mutually agreed solution is reached'. In the present case, the United States agreed to terminate its retaliation measures upon implementation of phase 2 of the [Bananas] Understanding, i.e., the introduction of the 2002-2005 import regime. This is further evidence that the tariff only regime to be introduced in 2006 was not 'a measure taken to comply'.⁵²²

7.185 The European Communities also argues that "the issue of the implementation of the EC-Bananas III DSB recommendations and rulings was withdrawn from the DSB's agenda with the consent of all WTO members (including the United States), in accordance with Article 21.6 of the DSU."⁵²³ Accordingly, the European Communities contends:

"[A] compliance panel is excluded when a dispute has been settled. In fact, such a dispute is considered resolved once and for all. This is evidenced by the wording of Article 21.6 of the DSU, which specifies that the issue of implementation of the recommendations or rulings of the DSB stays on its agenda 'until the issue is resolved'. This obviously means that a dispute taken off the agenda is considered resolved."⁵²⁴

No linkage to the DSB recommendations and rulings of 1997

7.186 The European Communities points out that "it is generally accepted that Article 21.5 establishes a link between the 'measures taken to comply' and the recommendations and rulings of the DSB and that the determination of the scope of the 'measures taken to comply' should involve an examination of the recommendations and rulings contained in the original report adopted by the DSB.^{525,526} However, the European Communities contends, "there is no link between the recommendations and rulings of the DSB [adopted in 1997] and the political decision of the European Communities to introduce a tariff-only import regime by January 1, 2006."⁵²⁷

7.187 Invoking the report of the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 - Canada), the European Communities argues that "in determining whether a challenged measure is indeed a 'measure taken to comply', a panel must 'scrutinize the relationships' between the challenged measure and the DSB recommendations and rulings."⁵²⁸ Further, the European Communities notes that "[t]he Appellate Body found ... that the determination 'may, depending on the particular facts, call for an examination of the timing, nature and effects of the various measures', as well as 'the factual and legal background against which a declared "measure taken to comply" is adopted'."⁵²⁹

7.188 According to the European Communities:

"In the 1990s, the European Communities had in place a completely different banana import regime. That regime was based on the allocation of tariff quotas to various groups of banana exporting countries, coupled with a licensing system for the banana traders."⁵³⁰

7.189 Further, "the current banana import regime is radically different in design and effect from the 2002-2005 system, which ... was a 'measure taken to comply'."⁵³¹

7.190 The European Communities also argues that:

"A careful analysis of the findings and recommendations of the Appellate Body report in the EC–Bananas III case does not reveal any element that could support a conclusion that the European Communities was obliged to move into a tariff only regime in order to bring itself into compliance with the covered agreements. Quite to the contrary, the findings and recommendations of the Appellate Body allowed the European Communities to bring itself into compliance through the adoption of a revised, tariff-quota-based import regime with a different allocation of quotas and import licenses. There is no single finding or recommendation of the Appellate Body that could be complied with only through the introduction of a tariff only import regime."⁵³²

7.191 Likewise, in response to the argument of the United States that the Bananas Understanding "contemplated a series of steps that would culminate with the introduction of a 'tariff only' regime by January 1, 2006"⁵³³, the European Communities argues that "the [Bananas] Understanding does not contain any express provision imposing on the European Communities the obligation to implement a tariff only regime."⁵³⁴ The European Communities adds that:

"Paragraph B [of the Bananas Understanding], to which the United States refers, makes a simple reference to a provision of the European Communities' secondary legislation, which reflected the political decision of the European Communities to change its banana import regime. This political decision had already been taken before the signing of the Understanding between the United States and the European Communities and their reaching an agreement on the appropriate 'measures taken to comply'. This is confirmed by the fact that paragraph B refers to an already existing piece of European Communities' legislation. Therefore, the United States wrongly asserts in ... its [second] written submission that the parties agreed in the [Bananas] Understanding that the tariff only regime would be a part of the 'measure taken to comply'. In light of the difficulties faced with the administration of the TRQ regime, the European Communities had indeed taken the decision to move to a more simplified tariff-only system over time."⁵³⁵

7.192 According to the European Communities:

"The first piece of legislation providing for the introduction of a tariff-only banana import regime was Council Regulation 216/2001. However, the services of the European Communities had started discussing the introduction of a tariff only banana import regime even earlier. It is reminded that the Council Regulation establishing the common market in bananas required the European Commission to submit by 2001 proposals about the organisation of the common market after the end of 2002."⁵³⁶

7.193 Further:

"[T]he fact that the European Communities introduced a tariff-only regime on January 1, 2006, in accordance with the provisions of Regulation 216/2001, does not have any legal significance for the European Communities' relations with the United States. The European Communities simply implemented its own legislation in accordance with its provisions."⁵³⁷

7.194 According to the European Communities "if one looks at the general trend of modernisation and liberalisation of the European Communities' common agricultural policy, one may conclude that the tariff-only banana import regime would have been introduced even in the absence of any dispute resolution proceedings in the banana sector, as it has been done in other product sectors."⁵³⁸

7.195 In response to a question by the Panel, the European Communities states that it agrees⁵³⁹ with the argument raised by the ACP third parties that:

"Article 21.5 proceedings must necessarily be initiated within a reasonable period of time from the date the recommendations and rulings to bring the matter into conformity with WTO obligations were adopted. In the present case, the recommendations and rulings of the Panel and the Appellate Body in the original dispute were adopted by the DSB in September 1997. Ten years can hardly be regarded as a reasonable period of time."⁵⁴⁰

7.196 Also, in response to the argument of the United States summarized by the European Communities as "an assertion that the Preamble of Regulation 1964/2005 refers to the arbitrations held in 2005 within the context of the Doha waiver and, hence, Regulation 1964/2005 must be considered as a measure taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings adopted by the DSB in 1997"⁵⁴¹, the European Communities contends that "this point [does not] suffice ... to establish a link between the tariff only regime and the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in 1997."⁵⁴² First:

"[T]he arbitrations were part of the waiver granted by the WTO to the Cotonou Agreement. The Cotonou Agreement was only signed in 2000, i.e., three years after the adoption of the DSB's recommendations and rulings. It is difficult to see how a Regulation adopted to conform to the terms of a waiver relating to an international agreement reached in 2000 can be said to be a 'measure taken to comply' with a DSB ruling adopted in 1997."⁵⁴³

7.197 Second, the European Communities maintains that "the subject matter of the 2005 arbitrations has no relation to the 1997 DSB recommendations and rulings."⁵⁴⁴ According to the European Communities:

"[T]he Appellate Body had found in 1997 that certain aspects of the then applicable import regime of the European Communities violated certain WTO rules and, therefore, nullified or impaired certain benefits accruing to the complaining WTO Members. In contrast, the 2005 arbitrations sought to determine whether the new import regime of the European Communities would at least maintain the total market access that the MFN banana exporting countries enjoyed under the old regime. In a sense, the two subject matters can be said to be conflicting: the 1997 dispute aimed at preserving the WTO rights of the complainants, while the 2005 arbitrations aimed at simply preserving the conditions of access to the EC market which the complainants and all other MFN suppliers were enjoying under the former TRQ regime. Therefore, a Regulation adopted to conform to the aims of the 2005 arbitration cannot be a 'measure to comply' with the findings of the 1997 dispute."⁵⁴⁵

7.198 Third, the European Communities argues that "the arbitration arrangement supports the proposition that the tariff-quota-based import regime that was in place between January 1, 2002 and ⁵⁴⁰ ACP Countries' third party written submission, para. 65. See also European Communities' second written submission, para. 43.

⁵⁴¹ European Communities' second written submission, para. 46. The United States originally formulates that argument in the following way: "The fifth clause in the preamble to EC Regulation 1964 itself states that the measures are being taken in an effort to rectify the matter which the two Article I waiver Annex arbitrations found inconsistent with that Annex. The Article I waiver and Annex are inextricably linked to the Understandings, which are in turn inextricably linked to the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in Bananas III." ⁵⁴⁴ Ibid., para. 48.

December 31, 2005 was the 'measure taken to comply' with the DSB recommendations and rulings of 1997."⁵⁴⁶ According to the European Communities,

"The aim of the arbitrations was to 'maintain the total market access of the MFN suppliers' at its 2002 to 2005 level. This strongly suggests that the level of MFN market access between 2002 and 2005 was satisfactory for the MFN suppliers. This also strongly suggests that whatever market access problems the MFN suppliers had at the time the DSB adopted its recommendations and rulings in 1997, had already been corrected by 2002–2005. Indeed, if the MFN suppliers were not satisfied with their market access of 2002–2005 (as they were not satisfied with their market access in 1997), why would they insist that the level of their 2002–2005 market access be preserved? The fact that the import regime implemented by the European Communities between 2002 and 2005 satisfied the MFN suppliers' market access interests supports the conclusion that the import regime implemented by the European Communities between 2002 and 2005 was the 'measure taken to comply' with the DSB recommendations and rulings of 1997."⁵⁴⁷

7.199 In response to the United States invoking various EC statements and press releases⁵⁴⁸, the European Communities points out that "none of these statements refer to the tariff-only system introduced in 2006 as a 'measure taken to comply' with the DSB's recommendations and rulings in Bananas III."⁵⁴⁹ Rather, "[t]hose statements use terms such as 'to resolve this long-standing dispute', 'settling the longstanding WTO dispute', 'to put an end to the longstanding bananas dispute', and the like."⁵⁵⁰ However, the European Communities sees a "difference in meaning [between] 'settling a dispute' and 'compliance' with DSB's recommendations and rulings"⁵⁵¹ because "[a] WTO Member might well be ready to go 'beyond' what is necessary for compliance, in order to avoid future disputes on a particular subject matter."⁵⁵² Referring to the Bananas Understanding, the European Communities argues that:

"[I]t is undisputed that a mutually agreed solution may contain elements beyond those necessary for compliance with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB. It is also possible that a complaining party may demand less than full compliance or be satisfied with some other measure than compliance. The European Communities considers that once a complaining party has settled a dispute, through any measures it has agreed to, such party may not bring Article 21.5 proceedings."⁵⁵³

7.200 Further:

"In any case, the European Communities does not consider that the Panel can take into consideration excerpts of public relations statements, prepared by the press service of the European Communities in different contexts and addressed to the general public. The European Communities considers that such press statements, by their very nature, cannot contain authoritative interpretations of complex legal issues. They are usually prepared by non-lawyers and aim to present to the general public a short and simplified version of a situation that is difficult to grasp and analyse, sometimes even by legal specialists of the field. Therefore, their content cannot be used to replace proper legal analysis under the DSU."⁵⁵⁴

7.201 According to the European Communities, "[t]he credibility of the DSU can only be preserved if panels and the Appellate Body base their findings on a solid analysis of the law and the facts and not on an analysis of unrelated statements made by the parties in a completely different context."⁵⁵⁵

7.202 Accordingly, the European Communities "requests the Panel to disregard all press releases and the invitations to public consultation submitted by the United States."⁵⁵⁶

7.203 In response to a question by the Panel, the European Communities states that it agrees with the following argument by the ACP third parties and "pleads them in the alternative"⁵⁵⁷ to the European Communities' other arguments:

"To the extent that the dispute relates to a measure which has been adopted pursuant to the Doha waiver and other legal instruments which came into existence only after an earlier dispute, such measure cannot be regarded as being a measure taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB adopted in the pre-existing earlier dispute."⁵⁵⁸

7.204 The European Communities notes that "the United States invites the Panel to determine whether the current banana import regime of the European Communities remains covered by the Doha waiver."⁵⁵⁹ However, according to the European Communities,

"Such determination depends exclusively on the interpretation of the conditions set by the Doha waiver and, therefore, it is unrelated to 'compliance with DSB rulings'. The conditions imposed by the waiver in relation to the new tariff-only regime are the result of negotiations that were not related to the DSB rulings and the European Communities' compliance with them. Therefore, a dispute over the continued existence of the Doha waiver should have been brought under a new dispute settlement case and not as a case under Article 21.5 of the DSU."⁵⁶⁰

7.205 In response to the argument by the United States that "the Panel should take the EC's argument [in the parallel compliance proceeding brought by Ecuador in 2007] that its current bananas regime implements a suggestion by the compliance panel in Bananas III as a concession by the EC that the measure taken by the EC on January 1, 2006 is directly linked to the DSB's recommendations and rulings"⁵⁶¹, the EC responds that:

"[I]n reaching any finding under the current proceedings, the Panel should not and cannot take into consideration any proceedings between the European Communities and parties other than the United States, such as the Article 21.5 proceedings requested by Ecuador in 1999. To do otherwise, would lead to inequitable results."⁵⁶²

7.206 In particular, the European Communities argues that:

"[T]he United States cannot rely on the findings or suggestions of the first Ecuador Article 21.5 Panel. The United States cannot be harmed by those findings and suggestions. It is only fair that the United States should not derive any benefit from them either."⁵⁶³

7.207 Moreover, "the European Communities considers that the Panel cannot take into consideration in the current proceedings the claims and defences advanced in the proceedings brought by Ecuador."⁵⁶⁴

(b) The United States' response

7.208 The United States "requests that the Panel find that ... the EC has failed to comply with the recommendations and ruling of the DSB"⁵⁶⁵, namely "the recommendations and rulings adopted by the Dispute Settlement Body on September 25, 1997"^{566,567}, "includ[ing] the findings of inconsistencies of the EC's bananas regime as well as the recommendation that the European Communities 'bring the measures found in this Report and in the Panel Reports, as modified by this Report, to be inconsistent with the GATT 1994 and the GATS into conformity with the obligations of the European Communities under those agreements."^{568,569}

7.209 The United States contends that the "tariff and tariff rate quota measures [introduced by the European Communities in 2006] fail to bring the EC into compliance with the Bananas III recommendations and rulings and its WTO obligations."⁵⁷⁰ The United States argues that:

"After almost ten years from the adoption by the DSB of its recommendations and rulings in *European Communities - Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas ('Bananas III')*⁵⁷¹, and many opportunities for reform afforded to the EC by the United States and other affected Members, the EC has yet to implement the DSB's recommendations and rulings with a WTO compliant import regime for bananas."⁵⁷²

7.210 The United States notes that "[o]n January 1, 2006, the EC implemented a new regime for importation of bananas through Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 ('Regulation 1964')"^{573,574}. However, according to the United States, "[t]his latest regime continues to discriminate in favor of imports of bananas originating in African, Caribbean and Pacific ('ACP') countries and against imports of bananas from other countries."⁵⁷⁵

7.211 Accordingly, the United States requests that the Panel reject the EC's preliminary objection that "Regulation 1964 is not a 'measure taken to comply' with recommendations and rulings of the DSB and therefore not within the scope of Understanding on Rules and Procedures Governing the Settlement of Disputes ('DSU') Article 21.5."^{576,577} The United States adds that it:

"[W]as a party to the original Bananas III proceeding. It therefore has full rights to ensure that the EC complies with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB."⁵⁷⁸

(i) The current EC bananas regime is a measure taken to comply

7.212 The United States asserts that:

"[T]he bananas import regime implemented by the European Communities on January 1, 2006 is a 'measure taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings' of the Dispute Settlement Body ('DSB') and is therefore properly before this Panel under Article 21.5 of the Understanding on Rules and Procedures Governing the Settlement of Disputes ('DSU')."⁵⁷⁹

7.213 The United States describes that import regime in the following manner:

"On January 1, 2006, the European Communities implemented a revised regime for the importation of bananas through Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964 of 2005. Article 1 of Regulation 1964 contains two elements. Paragraph 1 establishes that from January 1, 2006, the most-favored-nation, or MFN, tariff rate for bananas will be set at 176 euros per ton. Paragraph 2 creates an exception to this MFN rate by establishing a duty-free tariff rate quota of up to 775,000 tons per year available exclusively to bananas originating in the African, Caribbean and Pacific countries or ACP countries. MFN-origin bananas have no right to enter under the zero-duty ACP tariff rate quota."⁵⁸⁰

7.214 The United States agrees with European Communities that:

"The text of Article 21.5 is clear that it applies where 'there is disagreement as to the existence or consistency with a covered agreement of measures taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings' of the DSB. It is thus correct that Article 21.5 proceedings are limited to challenges regarding the existence or consistency of 'measures taken to comply,' not 'any' measure."⁵⁸¹

7.215 However, "the United States recalls that, as the Appellate Body has noted, '[p]anels and the Appellate Body alike have found that what is a "measure taken to comply" in a given case is not determined exclusively by the implementing Member.^{582,583} Also, "an implementing Member's designation of a measure as one taken to comply, or not, is not determinative."^{584,585}

7.216 The United States does not contest the EC argument that introducing a tariff-only bananas import regime was not the only way for the European Communities to comply with the DSB recommendations and rulings of 1997 in the EC – Bananas III dispute. However, the United States contends that:

"The EC argument turns the idea of 'measure taken to comply' on its head. The EC argues that any time there is more than one way to come into compliance, none of the options will ever be a 'measure taken to comply' because the responding Member could have made another choice instead. That is fundamentally wrong. A complaining Member must be able to have a panel look at the choice the responding Member actually made."⁵⁸⁶

7.217 The United States notes that "[t]he recommendation of the Appellate Body was for the EC to 'bring the measures found in this Report and in the Panel Reports, as modified by this Report, to be inconsistent with the GATT 1994 and the GATS into conformity with the obligations of the European Communities under those agreements.'"⁵⁸⁷ Thus, the United States contends, "[c]ertainly a WTO-consistent tariff only regime would be consistent with this recommendation."⁵⁸⁸

7.218 The United States also argues that "[t]he original determination and original panel proceedings, as well as the redetermination and the panel proceedings under Article 21.5, form part of a continuum of events."⁵⁸⁹ According to the United States:

"Whether taken together or separately, the EC's own declarations, the factual and legal continuum of EC actions since Bananas III (including the various legal instruments adopted by the EC), and the banana measures currently in force establish, with unmistakable clarity, that the EC's 2006 banana regime, set out in Regulation 1964, constitutes a 'measure taken to comply' with Bananas III recommendations and rulings and is therefore within the scope of this Panel's purview pursuant to DSU Article 21.5."⁵⁹⁰

7.219 According to the United States, there has been a continuum of events leading to the current EC bananas import regime, such that it would therefore qualify as a measure taken to comply: "the circumstances leading up to Regulation 1964 establish a series of steps on the part of the

EC since 1999 leading towards compliance with the Bananas III recommendations and rulings by means of a tariff-only regime to be installed no later than January 2006.^{591,592}

7.220 In particular, the United States notes that:

"On September 25, 1997, the DSB adopted the panel and Appellate Body reports in Bananas III and recommended that the EC bring its measures into compliance. The EC stated that it could not do so immediately, and an arbitrator acting under Article 21.3 of the DSU determined that the EC would have fifteen months and one week to bring itself into compliance – that is until January 1, 1999. By that date, the EC implemented two regulations, consisting of a discriminatory tariff rate quota and a license-based system. These two regulations were then found in breach of the GATT 1994 and the GATS by a compliance panel established at the request of Ecuador and by an arbitrator reviewing a US request for authorization to suspend concessions. The DSB adopted the report of the Article 21.5 panel on May 6, 1999, again recommending that the EC bring itself into compliance. The DSB authorized the United States to suspend concessions on April 19, 1999."⁵⁹³

7.221 Subsequently:

"In November of 1999, in its status report regarding implementation of the DSB's recommendations concerning its banana import regime, the EC representative announced a new compliance proposal. This proposal would include a 'two-stage process' involving a transitional period with a preferential tariff rate quota system for ACP countries, followed by a flat tariff.⁵⁹⁴ At the meeting, many concerns were raised about the lack of details of the proposal and the perpetuation of discrimination between Latin American and ACP suppliers."⁵⁹⁵

7.222 The United States lays great emphasis on that status report by the European Communities:

"As part of its status report on November 19, 1999, required under Article 21.6 of the DSU, the EC announced to the entire WTO Membership a second attempt to reform its banana regime. As reflected in the DSB minutes, this 'proposal to modify [the EC's] banana import regime' was to comprise a 'two-stage process, namely, after a transitional period during which a tariff quota system would be applied with preferential access for ACP countries, a flat tariff would be introduced.'⁵⁹⁶ This description shows that the measures comprising this 'two-stage process' – a transitional period with quotas, with a flat-tariff at the end – were intended to be measures taken to comply."⁵⁹⁷

⁵⁹⁷ United States' response to Panel question No. 4.

7.223 The United States adds that:

"[T]he EC's statement to the DSB on that date concludes with the following assessment by the EC of its two-stage proposal: 'The EC believed that its proposal provided the best outcome to this dispute.'"⁵⁹⁸

7.224 The United States notes that "[a]fter two years of continued non-compliance, in April 2001 the EC reached the Understanding on Bananas with the United States, and a very similar one with Ecuador."⁵⁹⁹ The United States points out that:

"Consistent with the proposal that the EC had laid out in November 1999, the [Bananas] Understanding set out a 'two-stage process', with a transitional period with tariff rate quotas granting preferential treatment for the ACP countries and the introduction of a 'Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006.'"⁶⁰⁰

7.225 While the United States does not consider the Bananas Understanding a mutually agreed solution⁶⁰¹, it "readily acknowledges the Understanding's direct relevance for purposes of establishing that the EC's current bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply with the DSB's rulings and recommendations."⁶⁰²

7.226 The United States argues that "[t]he Understanding is an important fact in the procedural history of this dispute, as it set out the roadmap through which the United States and Ecuador expected that the bananas dispute would be finally resolved."⁶⁰³

7.227 The United States adds that "[i]t is interesting that while the EC argues that the Understanding precludes the United States from bringing this claim at all using arguments not based on the text of the Understanding or any well-founded legal basis, it would ignore the plain meaning of the text."⁶⁰⁴

7.228 Turning to the text of the Bananas Understanding, the United States argues that:

"The Understanding laid out a series of steps, over multiple years, through which the EC would bring itself into compliance. Paragraph A of the [Bananas] Understanding serves as the introduction for the steps that follow which 'identified the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime [could] be resolved.'"⁶⁰⁵⁶⁰⁶

7.229 In turn:

"Paragraph B [of the Bananas Understanding] states that the EC 'will introduce a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006.' [A]lthough chronologically this would have been the last step to be taken, it is the first step outlined in the Understanding. ... [T]his was a central element in the 'means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved,' [namely] ... that there would be a continuum of actions to be taken, culminating with this step. This would have been the final action to be taken in bringing the EC regime into compliance."⁶⁰⁷

7.230 Furthermore:

"Paragraph C [of the Bananas Understanding] begins with 'in the interim'. That is, before taking the final step set out in paragraph B, there were a series of other steps that needed to be taken. Paragraph C, in conjunction with Annex I, goes on to detail the interim licensing regime the EC would use between July 1, 2001, and December 31, 2005. These steps were 'interim' because they still discriminated between WTO Members, as evidenced inter alia by the fact that the EC recognized that it would need waivers of Article I and XIII of the GATT 1994."⁶⁰⁸

7.231 The United States notes that:

"Paragraph D [of the Bananas Understanding] then deals with steps the United States would take, in response to the successful completion of interim steps by the EC, with respect to the US suspension of concessions against EC exports."⁶⁰⁹

7.232 In turn:

"Paragraph E [of the Bananas Understanding] provides that the United States would lift its reserve concerning the waiver of the EC's WTO obligations under GATT 1994 Article I for ACP-origin bananas. In addition, the United States would work towards promoting the acceptance by the WTO membership of the request for the Article XIII waiver that would be needed for the management of quota C until December 31, 2005."⁶¹⁰

7.233 The United States emphasizes that:

"[P]er the terms of the Understanding, the measures taken to comply with the DSB recommendations included a series of interim steps and a final step on January 1, 2006 – that is, the introduction of a tariff only regime. The interim regime between July 1, 2001, and December 31, 2005, was a measure taken to comply, and the regime that the EC introduced on January 1, 2006, which it claims to be a tariff-only regime, is also a 'measure taken to comply.'"⁶¹¹

⁶¹¹ Ibid., para. 13.

7.234 Further, as regards the timing of the introduction of the current EC bananas import regime, the United States agrees⁶¹² with the argument of Nicaragua and Panama that:

"The [Bananas] Understanding called for a Tariff-Only regime by 1 January 2006 in order to come into compliance with Bananas III. Regulation 1964 took effect precisely on 1 January 2006 in order to put into force a 'tariff only' regime.⁶¹³ The timing of the current compliance measures, thus, fulfilled the Understanding's compliance timeline."⁶¹⁴

7.235 According to the United States, there is a close link between the Bananas Understanding and the various EC internal legal instruments:

"[T]he implementation of a tariff only regime by January 1, 2006 was part of the steps agreed in the [Bananas] Understanding with the EC that would constitute the 'means by which the long-standing dispute ... can be resolved.' This is expressly set out in paragraph B of the [Bananas] Understanding. Paragraph B references Regulation 404, as amended by Regulation 216. The first Whereas clause of Regulation 1964, in turn also references Regulation 404, as amended, with respect to the move to a tariff only regime by January 1, 2006. Regulation 1964 is inextricably linked to the Understanding and the steps that the EC had agreed to take for purposes of compliance with the Bananas III recommendations and rulings. The fact that the EC put this measure into place on the date contemplated by the Understanding reinforces the point that the EC, itself, understood that its new regime was a step it was taking to implement the rulings and recommendations of the DSB."⁶¹⁵

7.236 The United States adds that "the progression of legal instruments adopted by the EC since Bananas III, further confirms the link between Regulation 1964 and the Bananas III rulings."⁶¹⁶

7.237 According to the United States, those instruments start with Regulation 404, which was amended in 2001 by Regulation 216 to require a tariff only regime, and concluded with Regulation 1964, which purportedly implemented the EC's 'tariff only' regime."⁶¹⁷ In particular, the United States agrees⁶¹⁸ with the argument by Nicaragua and Panama that:

- "– Regulation 404, the underlying EC regulation examined in Bananas III, was found in several of its trade provisions to be WTO-inconsistent.
- Regulation 216 amended Regulation 404 to require a Tariff-Only regime by no later than 1 January 2006 'to settle' Bananas III and 'compl[y] with the rules on international trade.'
- Regulation 1964 implemented the current measures for the express purpose of fulfilling the tariff-only requirement of Regulation 404,⁶¹⁹ as amended by Regulation 216."⁶²⁰

⁶¹⁹ (footnote original) Regulation 1964/2005.

7.238 According to the United States, these "three regulations ... provide evidence of the connection between the measure that was found to be in non-compliance in Bananas III, Regulation 404, and the measure subject to this proceeding, Regulation 1964."⁶²¹ The United States argues that:

"Regulation 216, amending Regulation 404, set out an interim tariff rate quota regime, which would culminate with a tariff only regime by January 1, 2006. Regulation 1964 establishes the purported tariff only regime by January 1, 2006. This regime can be no other than the regime described by the EC since its proposal was made at the November 19, [1999] DSB meeting and expressly included in paragraph B of the [Bananas] Understanding entered into with the United States (and Ecuador). Indeed, paragraph B [of the Bananas Understanding] references Regulation 404, as amended by Regulation 216."⁶²²

7.239 As regards EC Regulation 1964, the United States points out that "the intended effect of the EC's current measures is closely linked to Regulation 216, which in 2001 sought to 'settle' the long-standing Bananas dispute by calling for a 'tariff only' regime by January 1, 2006."⁶²³ Further:

"The fifth clause in the preamble to EC Regulation 1964 itself states that the measures are being taken in an effort to rectify the matter which the two Article I waiver Annex arbitrations found inconsistent with that Annex. The Article I waiver and Annex are inextricably linked to the Understandings, which are in turn inextricably linked to the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in Bananas III."⁶²⁴

7.240 The United States argues that:

"The status of the EC's measures is further confirmed by numerous EC statements made between 1999 (when the EC first developed its 'two-stage' Bananas III compliance solution) through 2006 (when, according to the EC, it implemented its final stage). While these statements are too numerous to list here,⁶²⁵ the EC statements made after 2002, when the EC argues, for purposes of this proceeding, that it implemented its 'measure taken to comply,' confirm that the EC itself did not believe it had taken a 'measure taken to comply' at that time."⁶²⁶

- (a) "The EC proposes to the DSB a 'two-stage' process for complying with Bananas III, under which a revised 'transitional' tariff quota system would first be implemented, to be followed by a 'flat-tariff' regime no later than 1 January 2006."^{627,628} ("19 November 1999 EC Statement to the DSB"⁶²⁹);

- (c) "The EC and [US/Ecuador] have identified the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved ... - (d) "The Understandings are 'a mutually satisfactory solution within the meaning of Article 3.6 of the DSU regarding the implementation by the EC of the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the DSB in the dispute "Regime for the importation, sale and distribution of bananas" [Bananas III].^{636,637} ("22 June 2001 EC DSU Article 3.6 Notification"⁶³⁸).

7.242 Further, Exhibit US-8 contains the following excerpt from the European Communities' GATT Article XIII Waiver⁶³⁹ of November 2001:

"The understandings reached by the EC, Ecuador and the United States ... identify the means by which the longstanding dispute over the EC's banana regime can be resolved, in particular their provision for a temporary global quota allocation for ACP banana supplying countries ... to enable them to prepare for a tariff-only regime ...^{640,641}

7.243 The United States argues that "[t]he various EC statements and communications provide factual evidence that the regime implemented on January 1, 2006 is a 'measure taken to comply'".⁶⁴²

by the panel in the Ecuador 21.5 report. In that proceeding, the EC argues that therefore the measure cannot be challenged."⁶⁴³

7.245 The United States "believes those arguments [by the European Communities] are completely unfounded."⁶⁴⁴ However:

"For purposes of this proceeding ... the Panel should take the EC's argument that its current bananas regime implements a suggestion by the compliance panel in Bananas III as a concession by the EC that the measure taken by the EC on January 1, 2006 is directly linked to the DSB's recommendations and rulings. ... [T]he Panel should conclude that the EC's current bananas import regime is a 'measure taken to comply'."⁶⁴⁵

7.246 Further, while the United States "is not claiming that th[e] last step [foreseen for the EC by the Bananas Understanding] is a measure taken to comply because of its relationship to the first Ecuador [compliance] proceeding [of 1999],"⁶⁴⁶ the United States notes that "the first suggestion by the first Article 21.5 panel [requested by Ecuador in 1999] was indeed that the EC 'could choose to implement a tariff-only system for bananas, without a tariff quota.'^{647,648} According to the United States, "[t]he fact that the panel in the first Ecuador 21.5 proceeding conceived of a tariff only regime as a potential means for compliance demonstrates the error in the EC argument that its move to what it describes as a tariff only regime in this proceeding is not a 'measure taken to comply.'"⁶⁴⁹

7.247 The United States argues that:

"To the extent that the EC may be arguing that the first Ecuador 21.5 panel's legal reasoning cannot be considered by this Panel, the EC is wrong. Prior panel and Appellate Body reports can be taken into account by subsequent panels."⁶⁵⁰

Also, "with respect to the EC's claim in paragraph 9 that the United States cannot 'benefit' from a proceeding to which we were not a party, the United States notes that findings in a different proceeding may be considered by the Panel to the extent they are persuasive."⁶⁵¹

(ii) The response of the United States to the EC arguments that the link with the original recommendations and rulings was broken

7.248 The United States also advances various arguments to refute the EC assertion that the link with the original recommendations and rulings of the DSB in 1997 in the EC – Bananas III dispute has been broken.

7.249 As regards the nature of the measures in question, the United States "agrees that the EC bananas regime in the 1990s contained additional tariff rate quotas allocated to different countries and a licensing system for traders."⁶⁵² Nevertheless, the United States "disagrees with the EC's statement that its banana regime in 1990s was 'completely different'."⁶⁵³ According to the United States "there is a great deal of similarity in that the current regime suffers from the same WTO non-compliant aspects as the regimes found to be in breach in the earlier Bananas III proceedings."⁶⁵⁴ Further, the United States claims that "the essential nature of the EC's banana measures is closely linked to the original EC banana quota and tariff regime found to be WTO-inconsistent in Bananas III."⁶⁵⁵

7.250 As regards the EC arguments concerning the lapse of time between the DSB recommendations and rulings and the adoption of the current EC bananas import regime, the United States argues that "[t]his argument must be soundly rejected."⁶⁵⁶ According to the United States:

"Article 21.5 of the DSU does not contain any such 'reasonable period of time' limitation. Thus, there is no textual basis for the EC's proposed approach. ... [T]he EC is attempting to impute into the text terms and conditions that are not there and were not agreed by Members."⁶⁵⁷

7.251 Further, the United States argues that:

"[T]he timing in this case derives from the timeline laid down in the Understanding itself, which required as a final step the implementation of a tariff only regime by January 1, 2006. The United States, Ecuador, and the other original complaining parties recognized the importance that trade in bananas has for many of the ACP countries and recognized that an abrupt fix to the bananas problem could have a negative impact. That is why the United States, Ecuador and others were willing to allow for a lengthy transitional period of adjustment leading to a new, tariff only regime by January 1, 2006, as set out in the Understanding."⁶⁵⁸

7.252 However, according to the United States, "[t]his forbearance, by the United States and the Latin American banana suppliers, has unfortunately been repaid by the EC with continued discrimination and noncompliance."⁶⁵⁹ The United States adds that:

"It would have been much welcomed if the EC had brought itself into compliance immediately upon adoption of the DSB's recommendations and rulings in 1997 or at the end of the reasonable period of time - that is, January 1, 1999. Instead, the EC chose to perpetuate a discriminatory system of tariff rate quotas."⁶⁶⁰

7.253 While noting that "[t]he final step provided for in the EC-US Understanding, the introduction of a tariff only regime by January 1, 2006, was not scheduled to happen until four years [after 2002]", the United States contends that "[t]o argue that the EC did not need to take that final step with respect to the EC-US Understanding would read paragraph B out of the Understanding."⁶⁶¹

7.254 The United States also:

"[N]ote[s] that in other cases, a long period of time between the original rulings and the 'measure taken to comply' has not prevented Article 21.5 review. For example, in the *FSC*⁶⁶² case, the EC requested and obtained the establishment of a second Article 21.5 panel almost 5 years after the original ruling by the DSB. In that case, the DSB adopted the recommendations and rulings in March 2000 and the second Article 21.5 panel was established February 2005. In addition, in *EC – Hormones*⁶⁶³ the EC claimed compliance over five years from the date of adoption of the recommendations and rulings by the DSB. The EC claimed that if the United States disagreed, it should seek recourse to an Article 21.5 panel.⁶⁶⁴ Accordingly, the EC itself has admitted what is already plain on the text of Article 21.5 - that the length of time is not a bar to having recourse to Article 21.5."⁶⁶⁵

7.255 Likewise, referring to the European Communities' Response to Questions from the Panel by the European Communities (29 April 2005) in US - Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), the United States points out that:

"[T]he EC position with respect to Article 21.5 [in that dispute was] that: 'The nature of the special procedures suggests that the purpose of the phrase "existence or consistency with a covered agreement of a measure taken to comply ..." in Article 21.5 is to cover any further dispute that relates to the original dispute'⁶⁶⁶ and that the time lapse before the new measure is taken is not a bar to Article 21.5 proceedings against that measure.^{667,668}

7.256 As regards the European Communities' argument that the introduction of a tariff-only bananas import regime was an autonomous and internal policy decision of the European Communities, the United States refers to the text of the Bananas Understanding, and argues that "the fact that a tariff only regime could have been introduced by the EC independently of the bananas dispute does not change the fact that the Understanding on Bananas specifically provides for this step."⁶⁶⁹ According to the United States, "[w]hat is relevant is that the EC agreed to include it in the Understanding, as paragraph B."⁶⁷⁰ Conversely, the United States argues, "[a] 'political decision' could have been undone at any point."⁶⁷¹

7.257 The United States adds that:

"When the political decision to move to a tariff only system was taken is not relevant. It makes sense that the EC would only have agreed to sign a bilateral agreement committing itself to doing so only after the 'political decision' had been made. Indeed, the fact that the EC may have decided to move to a tariff only regime by January 1, 2006 before the Understanding and then included it in the Understanding seems to buttress our position."⁶⁷²

7.258 Further, the United States maintains that: "The EC's argument that ... paragraph [B of the Bananas Understanding] is just a 'simple reference' to secondary legislation 'which reflected the political decision of the European Communities to change its banana import regime'⁶⁷³ before the signing of the Understanding is an attempted post hoc rationale inconsistent with the plain text of the Understanding."⁶⁷⁴

7.259 As regards the argument by the ACP third parties that the link with the original DSB recommendations and rulings was broken by the Bananas Understanding and by the Doha Waiver⁶⁷⁵, the United States argues that "the ACP can point to nothing in the text of the DSU that speaks to 'breaking the connection'⁶⁷⁶, thus "[t]he ACP proposed approach is without any legal basis."⁶⁷⁷

7.260 According to the United States, in regard to the Bananas Understanding:

"[A]s a matter of fact, the opposite is true. The [Bananas] Understanding affirms the connection between the DSB recommendations and rulings and the EC new banana regime. The [Bananas] Understanding is a bilateral understanding between the United States and the EC. In that Understanding, the EC agreed to undertake certain steps to bring itself into compliance. Those steps included, per the terms of paragraph B of the Understanding, the adoption of a tariff only regime by January 1, 2006. The waiver was itself contemplated within the terms of the Understanding. In any case, ... the January 1, 2006 regime was a measure to be taken to comply, expressly set out in the Understanding."⁶⁷⁸

7.261 Further, the United States disagrees with the argument of the ACP third parties that:

"Paragraph 6 of the Doha waiver and th[e] Arbitrator's statement support the view that disputes may arise specifically from the Doha waiver and its implementation and justifies recourse to the dispute settlement system. To the extent that the dispute relates to a measure which has been adopted pursuant to the Doha waiver and other legal instruments which came into existence only after an earlier dispute, such measure cannot be regarded as being a measure taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB adopted in the preexisting earlier dispute."⁶⁷⁹

7.262 In response, the United States again refers to the Bananas Understanding:

"The waiver was contemplated as part of the Understanding. See paragraph E of the Understanding on Bananas. Therefore, it is hard to see how the existence of the waiver means the EC regime is not a 'measure taken to comply.'"⁶⁸⁰

7.263 Further, according to the United States:

"The fact that the waiver expressly provided for recourse to dispute settlement simply means that the waiver was drafted as contemplated by the Uruguay Round Understanding on Waivers⁶⁸¹ and in a way in which most, if not all, waivers are drafted. This cannot have the implications that the ACP Third Parties argue. Finally, recourse to Article 21.5 is a recourse to dispute settlement⁶⁸² so there is in any case no inconsistency between the Arbitrator's statement and the US pursuit of this Article 21.5 proceeding."⁶⁸³

7.264 As a further argument relating to the Doha Waiver, the United States points out that:

"[T]he Doha waiver, as well as the Article XIII waiver, were time bound. Any 'compliance' that the EC achieved through them would expire with the waivers. Consequently, in requesting the waiver, the EC must have known that additional steps would be required after the expiration of the waiver in order to be in compliance with the DSB's recommendations and rulings. Thus, the EC must always have known that some 'measure taken to comply' would be necessary after the waiver expired. Indeed, ... the Article XIII waiver was set on December 31, 2005 precisely because per the terms of the [Bananas] Understanding (paragraph B), the EC was to move to a tariff only regime by January 1, 2006. An Article XIII waiver would not have been needed if and when the EC introduced a tariff only regime."⁶⁸⁴

7.265 The United States "disagrees with the EC's assertion that the only dispute settlement avenue open to the United States is 'new proceedings under GATT Article XXIII.'⁶⁸⁵⁶⁸⁶ In particular, the United States disagrees "with the EC's argument that 'a dispute over the continued existence of the

Doha waiver should have been brought under a new dispute settlement case and not as a case under Article 21.5 of the DSU.^{687,688} The United States argues that:

"In the current proceeding, [it] is challenging 'the consistency with a covered agreement of measures taken to comply' (DSU Article 21.5): that is, the United States is challenging the consistency with Article I and XIII of the GATT 1994 (a covered agreement) of the EC's current bananas regime (a measure taken to comply). The analysis of the consistency of that measure with Article I requires an analysis of the Doha waiver because the EC – which does not deny that the differential tariff treatment provided by the current regime for ACP and MFN bananas is in breach of Article I:1 – argues that the Doha waiver covers the breach. Therefore, the issue of the waiver's continued existence is properly before this Article 21.5 Panel."⁶⁸⁹

(iii) The response of the United States to the EC arguments that the dispute was settled before 2006

7.266 The United States advances a number of arguments to refute the EC assertion that the European Communities "took its 'final "measure taken to comply"' with the EC-US Understanding in January 2002, 'when the EC introduced a new tariff-based quota regime with the characteristics agreed in Annex II of the Understanding' and the US 'right to suspend concessions terminated'.^{690,691}

7.267 The United States argues that "[t]he EC's characterization of part-way measures taken not even halfway through the period of implementation envisioned in the EC-US Understanding finds no basis in the text of the Understanding and ignores multiple EC statements regarding its measures."⁶⁹²

7.268 In response to the EC arguments concerning the termination of the United States' right to retaliate in 2002, the United States contends that:

"[T]he Understanding sets out a series of steps. Two significant steps were to be achieved by July 1, 2001, and January 1, 2002. As incentive to ensure that the EC took those steps, the United States agreed to first provisionally suspend its imposition of increased duties and then terminate the imposition of increased duties that the DSB had authorized the United States to apply. This only proves that both the United States and the EC complied with what is set out in paragraphs C and D of the Understanding. Up to that point, there had yet to be full compliance by the EC. Per the terms of the Understanding, there was an additional step to be taken."⁶⁹³

7.269 Also, according to the United States:

"The terms of paragraph D [of the Bananas Understanding] did not 'terminate' the 'right of the United States to suspend concessions.' To the contrary, the United States agreed to terminate its 'imposition of increased duties' – i.e., its application at the time of its rights under the DSB authorization of April 19, 1999 to suspend concessions or other obligations – as consideration for the EC taking the step set out in paragraph C(2). This is yet another instance of the EC turning logic on its head, by arguing that the parties' forbearance in allowing the EC time to reform its bananas import regime must necessarily imply that the parties agreed the dispute had been resolved."⁶⁹⁴

7.270 The United States adds that:

"The DSB granted the United States authorization to suspend concessions or other obligations on April 19, 1999, and that authorization remains in place. Thus, contrary to the EC's suggestion, there was no need for the United States to request (to borrow the EC's rather curious phrase) the 'right to reinstate those rights.' ... The commitment of the United States to take certain steps did not, however, mean that the multilateral authorization and other WTO rights of the United States were revoked. Had the parties to the Understanding intended for the DSB to revoke the authorization, they could easily have included a clause providing for a joint request to the DSB to that effect (much as they included clauses with respect to the EC's waiver requests); the [Bananas] Understanding, however, includes no such clause."⁶⁹⁵

7.271 According to the United States, "there was no need for the parties to include a provision revoking the US WTO-authorized right to suspend concessions, because the [Bananas] Understanding contemplated that the EC would introduce a WTO-consistent tariff-only regime immediately following the conclusion of the interim TRQ."⁶⁹⁶

7.272 The United States also responds to the argument of the ACP third parties that:

"Article 22.8 of the DSU provides that 'the suspension of concessions or other obligations shall be temporary and shall only be applied until such time as the measure found to be inconsistent with a covered agreement has been removed, or the Member that must implement recommendations or rulings provides a solution to the nullification or impairment of benefits, or a mutually satisfactory solution is reached.' The fact that the US terminated its retaliation measures thus confirmed that the US considered the dispute as having been resolved through the mutually agreed solution in the form of the Understanding on Bananas reached with the EC."⁶⁹⁷

7.273 The United States points out that it "did not consider the dispute 'resolved' [in 2002] as there was still one more step the EC needed to take according to the [Bananas] Understanding."⁶⁹⁸ Also, the United States "did not, and does not, consider the [Bananas] Understanding to be a mutually agreed solution."⁶⁹⁹ Thus:

"Article 22.8 of the DSU is not relevant in this situation, since there is no mutually agreed solution. The fact that the United States agreed to terminate its imposition of increased duties as an incentive for the EC to act, does not turn the Understanding into a mutually agreed solution."⁷⁰⁰

7.274 The United States adds that:

"[T]he ACP argument presumes that a complaining Member is compelled to apply suspension of concessions or other obligations unless one of the Article 22.8 conditions is met. That is not true – Members can choose not to apply their WTO authorization (or not to apply it in full) for all sorts of reasons that have nothing to do with whether the 22.8 conditions are met."⁷⁰¹

7.275 Referring to the European Communities' Response to Questions from the Panel by the European Communities (29 April 2005) in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), the United States points out that:

"[T]he EC position [in that dispute was] that: 'The obligation to comply with that recommendation is not extinguished through the adoption of a measure taken to comply that is accepted by the complainant but continues to exist without limits in time. The fact that the DSB has considered the issue as resolved for the purpose of surveillance under Articles 21.6 and 22.8 of the DSU does not extinguish the continuing obligation to withdraw the measure,'⁷⁰² and so Article 21.5 remains available."⁷⁰³

7.276 As regards the arguments of the European Communities concerning the withdrawal of the EC – Bananas III dispute from the agenda of the Dispute Settlement Body in 2002, the United States argues that:

"It is incorrect to say that the issue was 'withdrawn' from the agenda. Instead, as is apparent from the DSB minutes for the February 1, 2002⁷⁰⁴ meeting all that happened was that the EC declared its view that 'this matter should now be withdrawn from the agenda' (presumably meaning that despite Article 21.6, the EC need no longer put a status report on the agenda of future DSB meetings)."⁷⁰⁵

7.277 According to the United States:

"A review of the minutes confirms that Ecuador agreed there was no need for the EC to put the issue on the agenda of future DSB meetings in light of the fact that the EC had taken the step set out in paragraph D of the Understanding and the next step that would need to be taken by the EC was implementation of a tariff only regime by January 1, 2006."⁷⁰⁶

7.278 Further, the United States notes that:

"The DSB simply 'took note' of the statements and did not take a decision on this issue. The fact that other Members did not request that this matter be on the agenda of subsequent meetings presumably reflects that little would have been gained by keeping this matter on the DSB agenda until the EC took the next step on January 1, 2006."⁷⁰⁷

⁷⁰⁵ United States' response to Panel question No. 21.

7.279 The United States argues that:

"It is also clear from the statements made at the meeting that the dispute was not considered 'resolved'. For example, the minutes reflect the following statements:

'Ecuador wished to reserve its rights under Article 21 of the DSU. Therefore if there was any disagreement concerning the measures applied by the EC, the matter could be referred to the original Panel pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU.'⁷⁰⁸

'Honduras wished to reserve its rights, including the right to request that this matter be placed on the DSB agenda in the future.'⁷⁰⁹

'The United States would continue to work closely with the EC and other Members to address any issues that might arise as the EC moved to a tariff-based system for bananas and implemented the terms of the bilateral Understanding on Bananas.'^{710,711}

7.280 The United States adds that:

"There have been other instances in which a status report has not been included on the DSB agenda, but that hardly indicates the issue has been resolved. See for example EC – Hormones, where although the item did not appear on the agenda, the EC itself recognized that it still needed to come into compliance."⁷¹²

7.281 Referring again to the European Communities' Response to Questions from the Panel by the European Communities (29 April 2005) in US - Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), the United States points out that:

"[T]he EC position [in that dispute was] that: 'The obligation to comply with that recommendation is not extinguished through the adoption of a measure taken to comply that is accepted by the complainant but continues to exist without limits in time. The fact that the DSB has considered the issue as resolved for the purpose of surveillance under Articles 21.6 and 22.8 of the DSU does not extinguish the continuing obligation to withdraw the measure,'⁷¹³ and so Article 21.5 remains available."⁷¹⁴

7.282 As to the EC argument that the United States never challenged the measures taken by the European Communities in 2002, the United States responds that:

"The United States saw no reason to institute Article 21.5 proceedings for the 2002-2005 interim regime. This does not mean that the United States was then precluded from recourse to Article 21.5 proceedings once the EC took the next, flawed step."⁷¹⁵

⁷¹⁵ United States' comment on the European Communities' response to Panel question No. 10.

7.283 According to the United States:

"Even if [it] had had a reason to challenge the interim steps taken by the EC but had decided to wait until now, the United States would not have been precluded from taking such action. It is established that the failure, as of a given point in time, to challenge a measure as inconsistent with the WTO Agreement does not mean that there is tacit acceptance of the measure. See Panel report on EEC - Quantitative Restrictions Against Imports of Certain Products from Hong Kong, adopted July 12, 1983, BISD 30S/129, 138, paragraph 28."⁷¹⁶

7.284 The United States adds that:

"[I]t was not until the introduction of the new EC regime for bananas on January 1, 2006 that the EC took the final, and unfortunately flawed, step required by the Understanding. Ever since, the issue of non-compliance has been the subject of discussions at the DSB, culminating with the Ecuador and US requests under Article 21.5"⁷¹⁷ (footnote omitted).

(iv) A compliance proceeding can extend to measures closely related to measures taken to comply

7.285 In its third party submission, Japan argues that:

"[T]he Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (21.5) addresses that, taking account of the context of Article 21.5 and the purpose of the DSU, 'a panel's mandate under Article 21.5 of the DSU is not necessarily limited to an examination of an implementing Member's measure declared to be "taken to comply",' and should also include 'some measures with a particularly close relationship to the declared "measure taken to comply", and to the recommendations and rulings of the DSB'.⁷¹⁸ The Appellate Body has further indicated in that case that, in order to find such a 'close relationship', an Article 21.5 panel may need to examine not only 'the timing, nature, and effects of the various measures,' but also 'the factual and legal background against which a declared "measure taken to comply" is adopted.'⁷¹⁹ The EC's 2006 regime was implemented subsequent to the adoption of the recommendations and rulings of the DSB and, it is explicitly identified in the Understanding, Paragraph B, as a measure 'by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved.'⁷²⁰ Moreover, Japan understands that the EC's 2006 regime is the measure which grants a preferential treatment to the imports of bananas from the ACP countries. In light of such timing, nature and effect of the EC's regime, Japan sees the argument that the EC's 2006 regime does not have a relationship with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in EC – Bananas III dispute to be hardly convincing.^{721, 722}

⁷²¹ (footnote original) Japan notes that, in light of the WTO jurisprudence, the fact that the EC is not obliged to implement its 2006 regime does not support the argument that the regime is excluded from a "measure taken to comply" for the purpose of Article 21.5 of the DSU.

⁷²² Japan's third party written submission, paras. 16-17.

7.286 The United States declares that it "completely agrees with Japan that the EC's arguments that the January 1, 2006 regime is not a measure taken to comply is 'hardly convincing.'"⁷²³ The United States argues that:

"[T]he DSB has already made clear in past Article 21.5 proceedings that 'a panel's mandate under Article 21.5 of the DSU is not necessarily limited to an examination of an implementing Member's measure declared to be 'taken to comply''. See for example, Australia Leather and Australia Salmon."^{724,725}

2. The Panel's analysis

(a) The Panel's approach

7.287 The Panel needs to assess whether the United States has properly brought this dispute under Article 21.5 of the DSU. The Panel will conduct the analysis set out below, taking into account the following considerations.

(i) Burden of proof

7.288 We have already noted the rules regarding the burden of proof that are applicable to the preliminary issues raised by the European Communities.⁷²⁶ As in the case of the previous preliminary objection raised by the European Communities, the Panel will assess first whether the European Communities has made a prima facie case supporting its contention. If such a prima facie case was found to exist, the Panel would turn to assessing whether the United States has succeeded in rebutting this preliminary objection by the European Communities. Alternatively, if the Panel found that the European Communities has not succeeded in making a prima facie case that the complaint of the United States falls outside of the scope of Article 21.5 of the DSU, the Panel would reject this preliminary objection by the European Communities without further analysis.

(ii) The specific issue before this Panel

7.289 Article 21.5 of the DSU provides that:

"Where there is disagreement as to the existence or consistency with a covered agreement of measures taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings such dispute shall be decided through recourse to these dispute settlement procedures, including wherever possible resort to the original panel. The panel shall circulate its report within 90 days after the date of referral of the matter to it. When the panel considers that it cannot provide its report within this time frame, it shall inform the DSB in writing of the reasons for the delay together with an estimate of the period within which it will submit its report."

7.290 The Panel notes that the preliminary objection of the European Communities focuses on one specific element of the language of Article 21.5 of the DSU: that Article 21.5 of the DSU is not applicable because the current EC bananas import regime, introduced on 1 January 2006, is not a

"measure taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings" adopted by the Dispute Settlement Body in the EC – Bananas III dispute in 1997.⁷²⁷

7.291 Accordingly, the Panel will address the European Communities' preliminary objection by focusing on the specific issue whether the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply for the purposes of Article 21.5 of the DSU.

(b) Whether the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply

(i) The limited scope of compliance proceedings pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU

7.292 At the outset of its analysis, the Panel notes that it agrees with the European Communities that "Article 21.5 proceedings ... cannot be used to challenge the legality of 'any' measure taken by the defending party, even if that measure relates to products that have been the subject of dispute resolution procedures in the past."^{728,729} The Panel also agrees with the argument of the European Communities that, in general:

"Following a negative panel or Appellate Body report, a defending party may take a number of initiatives that may affect the product market that was the subject of the dispute. The mere fact that these policy initiatives relate to a product market that has been the subject of a dispute in the past does not suffice to characterize all of these policy initiatives as 'measures taken to comply' with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB."⁷³⁰

7.293 Both parties make reference to the *Canada – Aircraft (Article 21.5 – Brazil)*⁷³¹ dispute, where the Appellate Body stated that:

"Proceedings under Article 21.5 do not concern just any measure of a Member of the WTO; rather, Article 21.5 proceedings are limited to those 'measures taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings' of the DSB. In our view, the phrase 'measures taken to comply' refers to measures which have been, or which should be, adopted by a Member to bring about compliance with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB. In principle, a measure which has been 'taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings' of the DSB will not be the same measure as the measure which was the subject of the original dispute, so that, in principle, there would be two separate and distinct measures⁷³²: the original measure which gave rise to the recommendations and rulings of the DSB, and the 'measures taken to comply' which are – or should be – adopted to implement those recommendations and rulings."⁷³³

7.294 Likewise, in EC – Bed Linen (Article 21.5 – India) the Appellate Body held that "[i]f a claim challenges a measure which is not a 'measure taken to comply', that claim cannot properly be raised in Article 21.5 proceedings."⁷³⁴

7.295 Similarly, the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada) held that "there are some limits on the claims that can be raised in Article 21.5 proceedings"⁷³⁵,⁷³⁶ and observed the following "balance that Article 21.5 strikes between competing considerations"⁷³⁷:

"On the one hand, [Article 21.5 of the DSU] seeks to promote the prompt resolution of disputes, to avoid a complaining Member having to initiate dispute settlement proceedings afresh when an original measure found to be inconsistent has not been brought into conformity with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB, and to make efficient use of the original panel and its relevant experience. On the other hand, the applicable time-limits are shorter than those in original proceedings, and there are limitations on the types of claims that may be raised in Article 21.5 proceedings. This confirms that the scope of Article 21.5 proceedings logically must be narrower than the scope of original dispute settlement proceedings. This balance should be borne in mind in interpreting Article 21.5 and, in particular, in determining the measures that may be evaluated in proceedings pursuant to that provision"⁷³⁸ (emphasis added).

(ii) The Panel's role in assessing whether the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply

7.296 The European Communities argues that "the Appellate Body had found in its report ... [in Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada)] that 'to be sure, characterizing an act by a Member as a measure taken to comply when the Member maintains otherwise is not something that should be done lightly by a panel'."⁷³⁹ The Panel notes that the Appellate Body continued by stating that "[y]et, a panel, in examining the factual and legal circumstances within which the implementing Member takes action, may properly reach just such a finding in some cases."⁷⁴⁰

⁷³⁴ Appellate Body Report on EC – Bed Linen (Article 21.5 – India), para. 78.

⁷³⁵ (footnote original) The Appellate Body has confirmed the existence of such limits in several cases. For example, in US – Shrimp (Article 21.5 – Malaysia), the Appellate Body found that the panel had committed no error in refusing to "re-examine, for WTO-consistency, even those aspects of a new measure that were part of a previous measure that was the subject of a dispute, and were found by the Appellate Body to be WTO-consistent ... and that remain unchanged as part of the new measure." (Appellate Body Report, US - Shrimp (Article 21.5 – Malaysia), para. 89 (original emphasis)) The Appellate Body has also found that a complaining party may not ask an Article 21.5 panel to re-examine certain matters ("the particular claim and the specific component of a measure that is the subject of that claim") when the original panel made findings in respect of these matters and those findings were not appealed. (Appellate Body Report, EC – Bed Linen (Article 21.5 – India), para. 92-93) See also Appellate Body Report, Mexico – Corn Syrup (Article 21.5 – US), paras. 121-122) However, when the measure taken to comply is a new measure, different from the measure at issue in the original proceedings, "a panel is not confined to examining the 'measures taken to comply' from the perspective of the claims, arguments and factual circumstances that related to the original measure". (Appellate Body Report, Canada – Aircraft (Article 21.5 – Brazil), para. 41) See also the discussion in Appellate Body Report, EC – Bed Linen (Article 21.5 – India), paras. 88-89.

⁷⁴⁰ Appellate Body Report, US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), para. 74.

7.297 The Panel recalls that the panel on EC – Bed Linen (Article 21.5 – India), in a finding upheld by the Appellate Body⁷⁴¹, concluded that:

"[I]t is clear that it is the Panel, and not the [respondent], which decides whether the measures cited by [the complainant] in the request for establishment are to be considered 'measures taken to comply' and therefore fall within the purview of this dispute. That said, however, it is also not [the complainant]'s right to determine which measures taken by the EC are measures taken to comply. Rather, this is an issue which must be considered and decided by an Article 21.5 panel."⁷⁴²

7.298 Likewise, in Australia – Salmon (Article 21.5 – Canada) the panel held that:

"[A]n Article 21.5 panel cannot leave it to the full discretion of the implementing Member to decide whether a measure is one 'taken to comply'. If one were to allow that, an implementing Member could simply avoid any scrutiny of certain measures by a compliance panel, even where such measures would be so clearly connected to the panel and Appellate Body reports concerned, both in time and in respect of the subject-matter, that any impartial observer would consider them to be measures 'taken to comply'."⁷⁴³

7.299 Accordingly, the Panel considers that it is properly and ultimately its role, and not the role of either the complainant or the respondent, to decide whether the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply.

(iii) The current EC bananas import regime

7.300 The Panel will first assess what constitutes the current EC bananas import regime. The parties agree that the European Communities' current bananas import regime is the regime introduced through EC Regulation 1964/2005 on 1 January 2006.⁷⁴⁴ In addition, in its request for the establishment of this compliance Panel the United States also refers to other EC Regulations, and maintains that:

"[T]he measures through which the EC maintains its current import regime for bananas ... include:

- Regulation (EEC) 404/93 of 13 February 1993, as amended by Regulation (EC) 216/2001 of 29 January 2001;
- Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 of 29 November 2005; and
- *for each of the regulations listed above, any amendments, implementing measures, and other related measures.*⁷⁴⁵ (emphasis added).

⁷⁴¹ "We agree with the Panel that it is, ultimately, for an Article 21.5 panel—and not for the complainant or the respondent—to determine which of the measures listed in the request for its establishment are 'measures taken to comply'." ⁷⁴⁵ EC – Bananas III (Article 21.5 – US), Request for the Establishment of a Panel (WT/DS27/83) 2 July 2007, p. 2.

7.301 The European Communities does not contest this reference by the United States to EC Regulations 404/1993 and 216/2001 and "any amendments, implementing measures and other related measures" to those regulations, in the context of the current EC bananas import regime.

7.302 The parties describe the current EC bananas import regime in a similar manner. In its request for the establishment of this compliance Panel the United States contends that:

"[O]n 29 November 2005, the EC adopted Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005, which establishes a preferential (zero-duty) TRQ available only to bananas originating in African, Caribbean and Pacific ("ACP") countries.⁷⁴⁶ Bananas of other origins have no access to this 775,000 ton TRQ. Under Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 such other bananas are subject instead to a duty of 176 euros/ton.⁷⁴⁷ The regulation took effect as of 1 January 2006."⁷⁴⁸

7.303 In turn, in its first written submission of September 2007 the European Communities describes its "import regime for bananas"⁷⁴⁹:

"The European Communities subjects all banana imports to a single tariff of €176 per ton. There are no other tariffs and there are no quantitative restrictions imposed on the importation of bananas. This import regime has been in force since January 1, 2006.

The only exception to this rule is that the European Communities offers a trade preference to those banana producing countries that have signed the 'Cotonou Agreement'. Pursuant to the Cotonou Agreement, the European Communities has the obligation to accept the importation of products originating from Cotonou beneficiary developing countries free of custom duties and charges having equivalent effect or, at least, at preferential terms, until December 31, 2007.⁷⁵⁰ In the sector of bananas, the European Communities has limited the quantity of bananas originating from Cotonou countries that can be imported free of duty to 775,000 tons per year (the 'Cotonou Preference').⁷⁵¹ All bananas imported from Cotonou countries beyond this 'cap' are subject to the tariff of €176 per ton.^{752,753}

⁷⁵² (footnote original) For the sake of completeness, it is noted that the European Communities' Generalised System of Preferences also provides that banana imports from Least Developed Countries are subject to a zero duty. This does not have any impact on the current proceedings: all Least Developed Countries that are exporting bananas to the European Communities are also Cotonou beneficiary countries (Yemen and Bangladesh are least developed countries but have no banana exports towards the European Communities).

(iv) Criteria for assessing whether the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply

7.304 As to whether the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply, which is the main issue to be assessed by the Panel in the context of the third preliminary objection of the European Communities, the Panel notes that in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada) the Appellate Body examined the meaning of the phrase "measure taken to comply"⁷⁵⁴, and held that "[o]n its face ... the phrase 'measures taken to comply' seems to refer to measures taken in the direction of, or for the purpose of achieving, compliance."⁷⁵⁵

7.305 Further, the Appellate Body held that:

"The word 'consistency' [in Article 21.5 of the DSU] implies that panels acting pursuant to Article 21.5 must objectively assess whether new measures are, in fact, consistent with relevant obligations under the covered agreements. As the Appellate Body has already stated, such an evaluation involves consideration of 'that new measure in its totality' and the 'fulfilment of this task requires that a panel consider both the measure itself and the measure's application.'^{756,757}

7.306 Accordingly, the Appellate Body concluded that:

"The fact that Article 21.5 mandates a panel to assess 'existence' and 'consistency' tends to weigh against an interpretation of Article 21.5 that would confine the scope of a panel's jurisdiction to measures that move in the direction of, or have the objective of achieving, compliance. These words also suggest that an examination of the effects of a measure may also be relevant to the determination of whether it constitutes, or forms part of, a 'measure[] taken to comply'."^{758,759} (emphasis added; original emphasis in bold)

7.307 The Panel also notes that Article 21.5 of the DSU refers to "measures taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings". (emphasis added) As regards that language, the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada) held that:

"A ... feature of the first sentence of Article 21.5 is the express link between the 'measures taken to comply' and the recommendations and rulings of the DSB. Accordingly, determining the scope of 'measures taken to comply' in any given case must also involve examination of the recommendations and rulings contained in the original report(s) adopted by the DSB."⁷⁶⁰ (emphasis added)

7.308 While noting that "the phrase 'measures taken to comply' does place some limits on the scope of proceedings under [Article 21.5 of the DSU]"⁷⁶¹, the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada) also held that "in order to fulfil its mandate under Article 21.5, a panel must be able to take full account of the factual and legal background against which relevant measures are taken, so as to determine the existence, or consistency with the covered agreements, of measures taken to comply"⁷⁶² (emphasis added). As mentioned above, in the same dispute the Appellate Body similarly held that:

"To be sure, characterizing an act by a Member as a measure taken to comply when that Member maintains otherwise is not something that should be done lightly by a panel. Yet, a panel, in examining the factual and legal circumstances within which the implementing Member takes action, may properly reach just such a finding in some cases"⁷⁶³ (emphasis added).

7.309 Looking at previous disputes where compliance panels reached such a finding, the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada) noted that one of the panels in those previous compliance proceedings had "looked at the timing ... as well as the nature of the [measure in question]".⁷⁶⁴ Likewise, the Appellate Body noted that another previous compliance panel had "found that [a measure] fell within the scope of its terms of reference because, inter alia, the [measure] at issue was 'inextricably linked' to the measure that [the respondent in that dispute] itself stated it had taken to comply, 'in view both of its timing and its nature'".⁷⁶⁵⁷⁶⁶

7.310 In conclusion, in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada) the Appellate Body summarized its approach in the following way:

"Taking account of all of the above, our interpretation of Article 21.5 of the DSU confirms that a panel's mandate under Article 21.5 of the DSU is not necessarily limited to an examination of an implementing Member's measure declared to be 'taken to comply'. Such a declaration will always be relevant, but there are additional criteria, identified above, that should be applied by a panel to determine whether or not it may also examine other measures. Some measures with a particularly close relationship to the declared 'measure taken to comply', and to the recommendations and rulings of the DSB, may also be susceptible to review by a panel acting under Article 21.5. Determining whether this is the case requires a panel to scrutinize these relationships, which may, depending on the particular facts, call for an examination of the timing, nature, and effects of the various measures. This also requires an Article 21.5 panel to examine the factual and legal background against which a declared 'measure taken to comply' is adopted. Only then is a panel in a position to take a view as to whether there are sufficiently close links for it to characterize such an other measure as one 'taken to comply' and, consequently, to assess its consistency with the covered agreements in an Article 21.5 proceeding."⁷⁶⁷

7.311 The Panel recalls that, in addition to arguing that its current bananas import regime is not a measure taken to comply, the European Communities explicitly identifies the step it has taken in accordance with paragraph C(2) of the Bananas Understanding as the final measure taken to comply in the EC – Bananas III dispute:

"The dispute between the United States and the European Communities, which had culminated with the Appellate Body's report in 1997 and the United States' retaliation measures, ended when the parties reached their 'mutually agreed solution' in 2001 and signed the [Bananas] Understanding and exchanged the Letters attached as an Exhibit to th[e European Communities' first written] submission ...

In compliance with the mutually agreed solution, the European Communities introduced on January 1, 2002 the final 'measure taken to comply' with the 1997 Appellate Body report. This was the tariff-quota based import regime with the characteristics agreed in Annex II of the Understanding. This was the 'measure taken to comply' that was agreed with the United States and this was the end of the banana dispute between the parties ...

... [A]s far as the banana dispute with the United States is concerned, the 'measures taken to comply' with the findings and recommendations of the Appellate Body in 1997 and the rulings and recommendations of the DSB in 1997 were taken by the European Communities in 2002 ..."⁷⁶⁸

7.312 The European Communities adds that this alleged final measure to comply was contained in "Council Regulation 2587/2001, adopted by the European Communities on December 19, 2001, which introduced the 2002-2005 banana import regime."⁷⁶⁹ The United States disagrees with the EC argument that the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regime was the final measure taken to comply; however, the United States does not contest the reference by the European Communities to EC Regulation 2587/2001 in the context of the 2002-2005 bananas import regime of the European Communities.

7.313 The Panel also notes that, in addition to arguing that the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply, the United States contends that "'a panel's mandate under Article 21.5 of the DSU is not necessarily limited to an examination of an implementing Member's measure declared to be 'taken to comply'" ..."^{770,771} Also, in its third party written submission, Japan argues that:

"[T]he Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (21.5) addresses that, taking account of the context of Article 21.5 and the purpose of the DSU, 'a panel's mandate under Article 21.5 of the DSU is not necessarily limited to an examination of an implementing Member's measure declared to be "taken to comply",' and should also include 'some measures with a particularly close relationship to the declared "measure taken to comply", and to the recommendations and rulings of the DSB'.^{772,773}

7.314 In the light of those arguments and of the aforementioned conclusions by the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), the Panel will assess whether, based on the criteria identified by Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply in itself. Further, taking into account the criteria identified by Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), the Panel will assess whether the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply because of "a particularly close relationship to the declared 'measure taken to comply' [i.e. the 2002-2005

bananas import regime of the European Communities], and to the [original] recommendations and rulings of the DSB."⁷⁷⁴

- (v) Whether the current EC bananas import regime is closely related to the original recommendations and rulings adopted by the DSB in 1997, including to the measure being reviewed and found inconsistent in the original panel and appellate proceedings

7.315 As mentioned above, Article 21.5 of the DSU refers to "measures taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings". In US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5) the Appellate Body held in regard to this phrase that:

"A ... feature of the first sentence of Article 21.5 is the express link between the 'measures taken to comply' and the recommendations and rulings of the DSB. Accordingly, determining the scope of 'measures taken to comply' in any given case must also involve examination of the recommendations and rulings contained in the original report(s) adopted by the DSB."⁷⁷⁵

7.316 In the EC – Bananas III dispute, the Dispute Settlement body "adopted the Appellate Body Report in WT/DS27/AB/R and the Panel Reports in WT/DS27/R/ECU, WT/DS27/R/GTM-WT/DS27/R/HND, WT/DS27/R/MEX, WT/DS27/R/USA, as modified by the Appellate Body Report"⁷⁷⁶ at its meeting of 25 September 1997.

7.317 In paragraph 9.1 of its report (WT/DS27/R/USA) adopted as a result of the original complaint of the United States, the original panel the EC – Bananas III dispute concluded "that for the reasons outlined in this Report aspects of the European Communities' import regime for bananas are inconsistent with its obligations under Articles I:1, III:4, X:3 and XIII:1 of GATT, Article 1.3 of the Licensing Agreement and Articles II and XVII of the GATS." Further, the original panel "recommend[ed] that the Dispute Settlement Body request the European Communities to bring its import regime for bananas into conformity with its obligations under GATT, the Licensing Agreement and the GATS."⁷⁷⁷

7.318 Largely confirming the findings of the original panel under appellate review, the Appellate Body "recommend[ed] that the Dispute Settlement Body request the European Communities to bring the measures found in this Report and in the Panel Reports, as modified by this Report, to be inconsistent with the GATT 1994 and the GATS into conformity with the obligations of the European Communities under those agreements."⁷⁷⁸ The detailed findings of the original panel, as modified by the report of the Appellate Body, are summarised above.⁷⁷⁹

7.319 The Panel notes the close link that the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada) established between the analysis of the original recommendations and rulings and the measures at which those recommendations and rulings are directed:

⁷⁷⁴ Appellate Body Report, US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), para. 74.

⁷⁷⁹ See section II.E.2 above.

"Because such recommendations and rulings are directed at the measures found to be inconsistent in the original proceedings⁷⁸⁰, such an examination necessarily involves consideration of those original measures."⁷⁸¹

7.320 In the same dispute, the Appellate Body also held that:

"Article 21.5 of the DSU identifies the task of a panel operating pursuant to that provision as resolving disagreements 'as to the existence or consistency with a covered agreement of a measure taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings' of the DSB. *This task cannot be done in abstraction from the measure that was subject of the original proceedings*⁷⁸²⁷⁸³ (emphasis added).

7.321 In line with the relevant request for the establishment of a panel in the original proceedings in *EC – Bananas III*⁷⁸⁴, the above-mentioned findings in the original panel and Appellate Body proceedings concerned "the EC regime for the importation, sale and distribution of bananas established by Council Regulation (EEC) 404/93⁷⁸⁵, and the subsequent EC legislation, regulations and administrative measures, including those reflecting the provisions of the Framework Agreement on Bananas, which implemented, supplemented and amended that regime."⁷⁸⁶

7.322 The original proceedings were dealing in particular with "the EC's common market organization for bananas introduced on 1 July 1993"⁷⁸⁷ through EC Regulation 404/1993.⁷⁸⁸ The original panel summarized the main preferential tariff and quantitative elements of that regime:

"Title IV [of EC Regulation 404/1993], which regulates trade with third countries, establishes three categories of imports: (i) traditional imports from twelve

⁷⁸⁰ (footnote original) Article 19.1 of the DSU mandates the recommendations that panels and the Appellate Body are to make in the event of a finding that a measure is inconsistent with a covered agreement: they "shall recommend that the Member concerned bring the measure into conformity with that agreement." (footnotes omitted) Thus, the text of Article 19.1 confirms the link between the measure taken to comply and the inconsistent measure that was the subject of the original proceedings.

⁷⁸² (footnote original) Appellate Body Report, US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), para. 68; Appellate Body Report, US – FSC (Article 21.5 – EC II), para. 61. The Appellate Body has already recognized certain circumstances in which the scope of proceedings under Article 21.5 may be limited by the scope of the original proceedings. For example, a party cannot make the same claim of inconsistency against the same measure (or component of a measure) in an Article 21.5 proceeding if the original panel and Appellate Body found the measure to be consistent with the obligation at issue (Appellate Body Report, US – Shrimp (Article 21.5 – Malaysia), paras. 89-99), or if the original panel found that the complaining party had not made out its claim with respect to the measure (or component of a measure). (Appellate Body Report, EC – Bed Linen (Article 21.5 – India), paras. 92-93 and 99) Similarly, a party may not, in proceedings under Article 21.5 of the DSU, seek to have the Appellate Body "revisit the original panel report" when that report was not appealed. (Appellate Body Report, Mexico – Corn Syrup (Article 21.5 – US), para. 78).

ACP countries⁷⁸⁹; (ii) non-traditional imports from ACP countries which are defined as both any quantities in excess of traditional quantities supplied by traditional ACP countries and any quantities supplied by ACP countries which are not traditional suppliers of the EC; and (iii) imports from third (non-ACP) countries.

"Imports of bananas from the twelve traditional ACP countries enter duty-free up to the maximum quantity fixed for each ACP country ... These allocations collectively amount to 857,700 tonnes. These quantities are not bound in the EC Schedule. There is no provision in the EC regulations for an increase in the level of traditional ACP allocations.

Imports of non-traditional ACP bananas and bananas from third countries are subject to a tariff quota (also referred to by the EC as the 'basic tariff quota') of, originally, 2 million tonnes (net weight). This tariff quota was increased to 2.1 million tonnes in 1994 and to 2.2 million tonnes as of 1 January 1995. These tariff quota quantities were bound in the EC Uruguay Round Schedule.⁷⁹⁰ The tariff quota can be adjusted on the basis of a 'supply balance' to be derived from production and consumption forecasts prepared in advance of each year.⁷⁹¹ In 1995 and 1996, a volume of 353,000 tonnes was added to the tariff quota as a result of 'consumption and supply needs' resulting from the accession of three new EC member States, Austria, Finland and Sweden. This additional volume is not bound in the EC Schedule. In practice, however, the EC's tariff quota for non-traditional ACP and third-country banana imports was increased to 2.553 million tonnes.⁷⁹²

Of the tariff quota referred to above, 90,000 tonnes are reserved for duty-free entries of non-traditional ACP bananas. This volume is bound in the EC Schedule as a result of the BFA. By regulation, the EC allocated this import volume largely among specific supplying countries ..."⁷⁹³

7.323 Thus, a key element of the measure being reviewed and found inconsistent in the original proceedings was the preferential treatment by the European Communities of banana imports from ACP countries, as compared with the treatment accorded by the European Communities to other WTO Members. That preferential treatment involved a zero-duty tariff rate quota of 857,700 tons reserved for traditional ACP bananas imports and a zero-duty tariff rate quota of 90,000 tons reserved for non-traditional ACP bananas imports.

7.324 In essence, the current EC bananas import regime also maintains a preference for ACP bananas imports. In its request for the establishment of this compliance Panel the United States argues that:

⁷⁸⁹ (footnote original) Belize, Cape Verde, Côte d'Ivoire, Cameroon, Dominica, Grenada, Jamaica, Madagascar, Suriname, Somalia, St. Lucia, and St. Vincent and the Grenadines (Article 15.1 of Council Regulation (EEC) 404/93 (as amended) and the Annex thereto).

⁷⁹¹ (footnote original) Article 16 of Council Regulation (EEC) 404/93 (as amended).

⁷⁹² (footnote original) In addition, the EC issued hurricane licences, see para. 3.15 below.

⁷⁹³ Panel Report on EC - Bananas III (US), paras. 3.7-3.10.

"Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005, which establishes a preferential (zero-duty) TRQ available only to bananas originating in African, Caribbean and Pacific ('ACP') countries.⁷⁹⁴ Bananas of other origins have no access to this 775,000 ton TRQ. Under Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 such other bananas are subject instead to a duty of 176 euros/ton.^{795,796}

7.325 Likewise, the European Communities concedes that its current bananas import regime maintains a preference for ACP countries:

"[T]he European Communities offers a trade preference to those banana producing countries that have signed the 'Cotonou Agreement' [i.e., to ACP countries]. ... In the sector of bananas, the European Communities has limited the quantity of bananas originating from Cotonou countries that can be imported free of duty to 775,000 tons per year (the 'Cotonou Preference').⁷⁹⁷ All bananas imported from Cotonou countries beyond this 'cap' are subject to the tariff of € 176 per ton^{798,799} (emphasis added).

7.326 Thus, both the original and the current EC bananas import regimes maintain, in the form of one or more tariff rate quotas at a zero in-quota duty, a preferential treatment for ACP countries in comparison with the treatment accorded to other WTO Members. These are important similarities in the nature and effects of the import regime reviewed in the original panel and appellate proceedings, and the current EC bananas import regime, which is being contested by the United States before this compliance Panel.

7.327 The Panel notes that EC Regulation 404/1993 on The Common Organization of the Market in Bananas was the main measure reviewed in the original panel and Appellate Body proceedings. As mentioned above, the original proceedings concerned "the EC regime for the importation, sale and distribution of bananas established by Council Regulation (EEC) 404/93⁸⁰⁰, and the subsequent EC legislation, regulations and administrative measures, including those reflecting the provisions of the Framework Agreement on Bananas, which implemented, supplemented and amended that regime."⁸⁰¹

⁷⁹⁸ (footnote original) For the sake of completeness, it is noted that the European Communities' Generalised System of Preferences also provides that banana imports from Least Developed Countries are subject to a zero duty. This does not have any impact on the current proceedings: all Least Developed Countries that are exporting bananas to the European Communities are also Cotonou beneficiary countries (Yemen and Bangladesh are least developed countries but have no banana exports towards the European Communities).

7.328 In its request for the establishment of this compliance panel the United States describes "the measures through which the EC maintains its current import regime for bananas"⁸⁰², by making explicit reference, in addition to EC Regulation 1964/2005, to "Regulation (EEC) 404/93 of 13 February 1993, as amended by Regulation (EC) 216/2001 of 29 January 2001"⁸⁰³ and to "any amendments, implementing measures, and other related measures"⁸⁰⁴ to those EC Regulations. In the context of the current EC bananas import regime, the European Communities does not contest the reference by the United States to EC Regulation 404/93, as amended by EC Regulation 216/2001, and to "any amendments, implementing measures, and other related measures"⁸⁰⁵ to those EC Regulations.

7.329 The Panel notes also that EC Regulation 1964/2005 has been adopted pursuant to EC Regulation 404/1993, as amended by EC Regulation 216/2001. This is argued by the European Communities itself⁸⁰⁶, and it is confirmed by the Bananas Understanding, which in paragraph B makes explicit reference to both previous regulations:

*"In accordance with Article 16(1) of Regulation No. (EC) 404/93 (as amended by Regulation No. (EC) 216/2001), the European Communities (EC) will introduce a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006."*⁸⁰⁷ (emphasis added)

7.330 Indeed, EC Regulation 216/2001 amended Article 16 of EC Regulation 404/1993 thus:

"1. This Article and Articles 17 to 20 shall apply to imports of fresh products falling within CN code ex 0803 00 19 up to the entry into force of the rate of the common customs tariff for those products, no later than 1 January 2006, established under the procedure provided for in Article XXVIII of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

2. Until the entry into force of the rate referred to in paragraph 1, imports of the fresh products referred to in the said paragraph shall be under the tariff quotas opened by Article 18"⁸⁰⁸ (emphasis added).

7.331 In turn, EC Regulation 1964/2005 makes explicit reference to EC Regulation 404/1993 in the first recital of its preamble:

"Council Regulation (EEC) No 404/93 of 13 February 1993 on the common organisation of the market in bananas provides for the entry into force of a tariff only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006." (footnote omitted)

7.332 Further, Article 1.1 of EC Regulation 1964/2005 fulfils the function determined by Article 16.1 of EC Regulation 404/1993, as amended by EC Regulation 216/2001:

"As from 1 January 2006 the tariff rate for bananas (CN code 0803 00 19) shall be EUR 176/tonne."

7.333 Article 3.1 of EC Regulation 1964/2005 makes further reference to EC Regulation 404/1993 by providing that:

"The Commission shall be assisted by the Management Committee for Bananas established by Article 26 of Regulation (EEC) No 404/93 ..."

7.334 The Panel notes that EC Regulation 404/93 on the Common Organization of the Market in Bananas continued to apply even following the introduction, on 1 January 2006, of the current EC bananas import regime through EC Regulation 1964/2005, and beyond the establishment of this compliance Panel by the Dispute Settlement Body on 12 July 2007. As indicated above, EC Regulation 1964/2005 makes several explicit references to EC Regulation 404/1993, without repealing the latter. Further, in its request for the establishment of the Panel dated 2 July 2007, the United States explicitly identified EC Regulation 404/1993 as one of "the measures through which the EC maintains its current import regime for bananas"⁸⁰⁹ Neither party has argued that EC Regulation 404/1993 was not in force at the time of the establishment of this Panel.

7.335 The Panel also notes that the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador, in response to the EC argument that a compliance Panel should not look at the EC Regulations representing the European Communities' attempt to comply with the original recommendations and rulings of the DSB as of the expiry of the reasonable period of time on 1 January 1999, through amendments to EC Regulation 404/1993, found that:

"[I]t is clear that the two measures specified by Ecuador (Regulations 1637/98 and 2362/98) were 'taken [by the European Communities] to comply' with the DSB's recommendations, as they modify aspects of the EC's banana import regime found by the original panel and Appellate Body reports to be inconsistent with the EC's WTO obligations. There is no suggestion in the text of Article 21.5 that only certain issues of consistency of measures may be considered. Nor is there a suggestion that the term 'measures' has a special meaning in Article 21.5 that would imply that only certain aspects of a measure can be considered"⁸¹⁰ (emphasis added).

7.336 Article 1.1 of EC Regulation 1637/1998 also amended inter alia Article 16 of EC Regulation 404/1993, and EC Regulation 2632/1998 "la[id] down detailed rules for applying the arrangements for the importation of bananas under the tariff quotas provided for in Article 18(1) and (2) of Regulation (EEC) No 404/93 and for the importation of quantities of traditional ACP bananas as referred to in Article 16 of that Regulation, and also the arrangements outside those quotas"⁸¹¹ (emphasis added).

7.337 Similarly, Article 1.1 of Regulation 1964/2005 fulfils the function set out in Article 16.1 of EC Regulation 404/1993, as amended by EC Regulation 216/2001; that amendment by EC Regulation 216/2001 concerned an aspect of the EC's bananas import regime found by the original panel and Appellate Body reports to be inconsistent with the European Communities' WTO obligations.

7.338 In the light of the foregoing legal and factual background of the current EC bananas import regime, the Panel concludes that the current EC bananas import regime, in particular EC Regulation

1964/2005 is closely related to the measure reviewed and found inconsistent in the original panel and Appellate Body proceedings, and thus is closely related to the original recommendations and rulings adopted by the DSB in 1997.

(vi) Whether the current EC bananas import regime constitutes a measure taken by the European Communities in the direction of, or for the purpose of achieving, compliance

7.339 The Panel notes that the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber VI (Article 21.5 – Canada) held that:

"Article 21.5 proceedings do not occur in isolation but are part of a 'continuum of events'.⁸¹² This is a consequence of the mandate of an Article 21.5 panel, namely, to examine whether recommendations and rulings from the original dispute have been implemented consistently with the covered agreements."⁸¹³

7.340 The Panel will therefore assess the relevant factual and legal developments following the adoption of recommendations and rulings by the DSB on 25 September 1997. The Panel recalls that in the arbitration award of 7 January 1998 in EC – Bananas III pursuant to Article 21.3 of the DSU, the arbitrator referred to "Article 21.1 of the DSU[, which] stipulates that 'prompt compliance with recommendations or rulings of the DSB is essential in order to ensure effective resolution of disputes to the benefit of all Members'."⁸¹⁴ The same arbitrator concluded that:

"[P]ursuant to Article 21.3(c) [of the DSU], the 'reasonable period of time' for the European Communities to implement the recommendations and rulings of the DSB adopted on 25 September 1997 in European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas, shall be the period from 25 September 1997 to 1 January 1999."⁸¹⁵

The European Communities' first attempt to comply with the original DSB recommendations and rulings, and its review under dispute settlement proceedings

7.341 At the end of the above reasonable period of time, 1 January 1999⁸¹⁶, the European Communities introduced the above-mentioned "Regulation (EC) No. 1637/98 ... amending Regulation (EEC) No. 404/93 ... on the common organization of the market in bananas, and (ii) Regulation (EC) No. 2362/98 ... laying down detailed rules for the implementation of Regulation 404."⁸¹⁷

7.342 Both EC Regulations were found to be measures taken to comply with the original recommendations and rulings of the DSB.⁸¹⁸ They were also found to be inconsistent with these recommendations and rulings in two, practically simultaneous proceedings: (i) an arbitration pursuant to Article 22.6 of the DSU between the European Communities and the United States⁸¹⁹; and (ii) a compliance proceeding requested by Ecuador against the European Communities.⁸²⁰ A third compliance proceeding requested by the European Communities to establish that those

EC Regulations "must be presumed to conform to WTO rules"⁸²¹ referred to the negative findings of the compliance panel requested by Ecuador.⁸²²

7.343 In the arbitration between the European Communities and the United States pursuant to Article 22.6 of the DSU, the arbitrators held that "any assessment of the level of nullification or impairment presupposes an evaluation of consistency or inconsistency with WTO rules of the implementation measures taken by the European Communities, i.e. the revised banana regime, in relation to the panel and Appellate Body findings concerning the previous regime."⁸²³ Accordingly, the arbitrators concluded that "there is a continuation of nullification or impairment of US benefits under the revised EC regime"⁸²⁴ inter alia because "the reservation of the quantity of 857,700 tonnes for traditional ACP imports under the revised regime is inconsistent with paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article XIII of GATT."⁸²⁵ In conclusion, in their decision of 9 April 1999 the arbitrators "determine[d] the level of nullification or impairment suffered by the United States in the matter European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas ..."⁸²⁶

7.344 On 19 April 1999, the DSB granted authorization for the United States to suspend concessions "consistent with the decision of the Arbitrators contained in document WT/DS27/ARB."⁸²⁷

7.345 Similarly to the above arbitration pursuant Article 22.6 of the DSU, the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador found in its report circulated on 6 May 1999 inter alia that "the reservation of the quantity of 857,700 tonnes for traditional ACP imports under the revised regime is inconsistent with paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article XIII of GATT [and] ... the country-specific allocations to Ecuador as well as to the other substantial suppliers are not consistent with the requirements of Article XIII:2."⁸²⁸ Further, in respect of Article I of the GATT 1994 the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador found in relevant parts that:

"[T]he level of 857,700 tonnes for duty-free traditional ACP imports can be considered to be required by the Lomé Convention because it appears to be based on pre-1991 best-ever exports and not on allowances for investments. However, we also find that it is not reasonable for the European Communities to conclude that Protocol 5 of the Lomé Convention requires a collective allocation for traditional ACP suppliers. Therefore, duty-free treatment of imports in excess of an individual ACP State's pre-1991 best-ever export volumes is not required by Protocol 5 of the Lomé Convention. Accordingly, absent any other applicable requirement of the Lomé Convention, those excess volumes are not covered by the Lomé waiver and the preferential tariff thereon is therefore inconsistent with Article I:1.

Also in respect of Article I of GATT, we find that in respect of preferences for non-traditional ACP imports, it is not unreasonable for the European Communities to conclude that (i) non-traditional ACP imports at zero tariff within the 'other' category of the tariff quota and (ii) the tariff preference of 200 Euro per tonne for out-of-quota imports, are required by Article 168 of the Lomé Convention. Therefore, we find that the violations of Article I:1, as alleged by Ecuador in respect of preferences for non-traditional ACP imports, are covered by the Lomé waiver."⁸²⁹

7.346 The first compliance panel requested by Ecuador:

"[C]onclude[d] that ... aspects of the EC's [revised] import regime for bananas are inconsistent with the EC's obligations under Articles I:1 and XIII:1 and 2 of GATT 1994 and Articles II and XVII of GATS. [T]herefore ... there is nullification or impairment of the benefits accruing to Ecuador under the GATT 1994 and the GATS within the meaning of Article 3.8 of the DSU.

The Panel recommend[ed] that the Dispute Settlement Body request the European Communities to bring its import regime for bananas into conformity with its obligations under the GATT 1994 and the GATS."⁸³⁰

7.347 EC Regulations 1637/1998 and 2362/1998 were also the subject of dispute settlement proceedings brought at the end of 1998 by the European Communities, which invoked Article 21.5 of the DSU. In its request for the establishment of that compliance panel, the European Communities noted that:

"In the DSB meeting of 22 September 1998, the original complainants expressed their concern 'about the EC's failure to comply with the DSB's recommendations'. They stated that 'consultations had confirmed that the Community and the complaining parties could not agree on the WTO-consistency of the measures taken by the EC to comply with the DSB's recommendations by 1 January 1999'. They emphasised that '[t]here was no doubt with regard to the existence of such a disagreement between the Community and the complaining parties'. They also stated that 'they had made it clear that there was no basis for any further consultations and had no plans to hold further consultations'."⁸³¹

7.348 The European Communities also argued that:

"Article 23 of the DSU confirms that there is a general principle in the WTO agreements that measures taken by WTO Members are in conformity with their rules unless they have been challenged under the appropriate dispute settlement procedures and proven not to conform. Since none of the original complainants has continued to pursue the procedures under Article 21.5, they must presently be deemed to be satisfied with the way in which the European Communities has brought its measures into conformity with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in this case."⁸³²

7.349 Accordingly, "the European Communities request[ed] the establishment of a panel under Article 21.5 of the DSU with the mandate to find that the above-mentioned implementing measures of the European Communities must be presumed to conform to WTO rules unless their conformity has been duly challenged under the appropriate DSU procedures."⁸³³

7.350 In its report, circulated on 12 April 1999, the compliance panel requested by the European Communities decided "not [to] make findings as requested by the European Communities."⁸³⁴ Nevertheless, the same compliance panel stated:

"We agree with the European Communities that there is normally no presumption of inconsistency attached to a Member's measures in the WTO dispute settlement system. At the same time, we also are of the view that the failure, as of a given point in time, of one Member to challenge another Member's measures cannot be interpreted to create a presumption that the first Member accepts the measures of the other Member as consistent with the WTO Agreement. In this regard, we note the statement by a GATT panel that 'it would be erroneous to interpret the fact that a measure has not been subject to Article XXIII over a number of years, as tantamount to its tacit acceptance by contracting parties'.^{835,836}

7.351 Also, the compliance panel requested by the European Communities made reference to the findings of inconsistency by the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador:

"[W]e note that immediately prior (on the same date) to the establishment of this Panel, a panel was established by the DSB at the request of Ecuador to consider Ecuador's claim in an Article 21.5 proceeding that the EC's implementing measures are not consistent with its WTO obligations. The same three individuals are the panelists in these two Article 21.5 proceedings. Since we have found in the proceeding initiated by Ecuador that the EC's implementing measures are not consistent with its WTO obligations, it is clear that they cannot be presumed to be consistent in this proceeding.⁸³⁷

7.352 The above three procedures established that the first attempt of the European Communities to bring itself into compliance with the original recommendations and rulings adopted by the DSB in the EC – Bananas III dispute in 1997, was inconsistent with the European Communities' WTO obligations. The Panel reads that as a clear indication that the original attempt of the European Communities to bring itself into compliance by 1 January 1999 was unsuccessful.

Subsequent developments

7.353 The United States points out that following the European Communities' first, unsuccessful attempt to bring itself into compliance with the original DSB recommendations and rulings:

"In November 1999, the EC announced a second attempt to reform its banana regime, which was allegedly to comprise a 'two-stage process, namely, after a transitional period during which a tariff quota system would be applied with preferential access for ACP countries, a flat tariff would be introduced."^{838,839}

⁸³⁹ United States' first written submission, para. 5.

7.354 At the meeting of the DSB held on 19 November 1999:

"[T]he European Communities said that after extensive consultations with all the interested parties, the EC had put forward a proposal to modify its banana import regime. The EC considered that, under the present circumstances, the most appropriate option would be to put in place a two-stage process, namely, after a transitional period during which a tariff quota system would be applied with preferential access for ACP countries, a flat tariff would be introduced. The level of the flat tariff would be negotiated pursuant to Article XXVIII of GATT 1994 and in accordance with the negotiating directives contained in the proposal. During the transitional period, the quota management system would be a key issue. Detailed rules for administration of the tariff quota which would be adopted at a later stage were of considerable importance for the acceptability of the new regime. For this reason, the EC would seek agreement from interested countries on the management system. The EC was ready to start this process immediately. He noted that finding the means to respect its international obligations as well as other objectives constituted a considerable challenge for the EC. The EC believed that its proposal provided the best outcome to this dispute."⁸⁴⁰

7.355 At the same DSB meeting:

"[T]he European Communities clarified that during the transitional period, three quotas would be available to all suppliers. The first would be the bound quota of 2.2 million tonnes at 75 Ecus/tonne, and the second would be an autonomous quota of 353,000 tonnes at the same tariff level. A third tariff quota of 850,000 would also be available. A preference of 275 Ecus/tonne would be granted to ACP countries. That third quota would be characterized by a bidding procedure through which an abatement with respect to the out-of-quota bound tariff rate would be determined. This auctioning-striking price system would resolve both the level of the tariff and the distribution of licences requested as well as the available quantities. A key practical aspect of the transitional quota system was the management of the first two quotas. The preferred option of interested parties for distribution of licences was a historical system, but could only be implemented if there was agreement on a mechanism compatible with both WTO and EC law. Unless such an agreement materialised, the alternative would be an appropriate form of a 'first-come first-served system' for the two quotas at 75 Ecus/tonne provided that the administrative problems could be overcome in such a way that the scheme was non-discriminatory."⁸⁴¹

7.356 A few months later, in its status report to the DSB of 11 February 2000, also referred to by the United States⁸⁴², the European Communities stated that:

"As it has been explained before to the DSB, the EC has now developed a proposal for the reform of the banana regime. The proposal envisages a two-stage process, comprising a tariff rate quota (TRQ) system for several years; this system should be replaced by a tariff only system no later than 1 January 2006. ...

⁸⁴¹ Dispute Settlement Body, Minutes of Meeting held in the Centre William Rappard on 19 November 1999 (WT/DSB/M/71), 11 January 2000, para. 5.

⁸⁴² See Exhibit US-8, p. 1.

As the proposal of November 1999 makes clear, if no feasible administrative system which will resolve the dispute can be found regarding the distribution system for licences in a TRQ system it will not be possible to maintain the proposal for a transitional TRQ regime; in that case negotiations under GATT Article XXVIII to replace the current system with a tariff only regime are envisaged."⁸⁴³

7.357 Approximately one year later, in spring 2001 the European Communities reached two separate but almost identical understandings on bananas with the United States and with Ecuador.⁸⁴⁴ Although in the context of the second preliminary issue the parties contest the status and relevance of their Bananas Understanding⁸⁴⁵, as regards the third preliminary issue, they both attach great relevance to that Understanding for the purposes of assessing whether the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply.

7.358 According to the European Communities, "a determination of whether a particular measure constitutes a 'measure taken to comply' should be based [inter alia] on ... the agreement reached between the parties (in our case the [Bananas] Understanding) and the rights and obligations undertaken in it ..."⁸⁴⁶ Likewise, the United States "readily acknowledges the Understanding's direct relevance for purposes of establishing that the EC's current bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply with the DSB's rulings and recommendations."⁸⁴⁷

7.359 As noted in its analysis of the European Communities' second preliminary objection, the Panel does not intend to assess the status of the Bananas Understanding.⁸⁴⁸ Nevertheless, in the light of parties' agreement on the relevance of the Bananas Understanding for the third preliminary issue, the Panel will look at the language of that Understanding.

7.360 The Bananas Understanding provides in Paragraph A that "[t]he European Commission and [the United States/Ecuador] have identified the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved."⁸⁴⁹ Further, in its communication to the DSB concerning the Understanding, the European Communities referred to the Understanding as "a mutually satisfactory solution ... regarding the implementation by the EC of the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the DSB in the dispute 'Regime for the importation, sale and distribution of bananas' (WT/DS27)."⁸⁵⁰

7.361 The Bananas Understanding sets out a series of bananas import regimes to be implemented by the European Communities, which are in line with what was announced by the European Communities at the DSB meeting of 19 November 1999 and in its above-mentioned status report of 11 February 2000.

7.362 Paragraph B of the Understanding provides that "[i]n accordance with Article 16(1) of Regulation No. (EC) 404/93 (as amended by Regulation No. (EC) 216/2001), the European Communities (EC) will introduce a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006."⁸⁵¹

7.363 In turn, paragraph C of the Bananas Understanding provides that:

"C. In the interim, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as follows:

1. Effective 1 July 2001, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as set out in Annex 1.
2. Effective as soon as possible thereafter, subject to Council and European Parliament approval and to adoption of the Article XIII waiver referred to in paragraph E, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as set out in Annex 2. The Commission will seek to obtain the implementation of such an import regime as soon as possible."⁸⁵²

7.364 In exchange for the commitments by the European Communities set out in paragraphs B and C of the Bananas Understanding, paragraph D of the Understanding provides with respect to the United States that:

"D. With respect to the United States' imposition of increased duties applied to certain EC products as of 19 April 1999 covering trade in an amount of US$191.4 million per year (the 'increased duties'):

1. Upon implementation of the import regime described in paragraph C(1), the United States will provisionally suspend its imposition of the increased duties.
2. Upon implementation of the import regime described in paragraph C(2), the United States will terminate its imposition of the increased duties.
3. The United States may reimpose the increased duties if the import regime described in paragraph C(2) does not enter into force by 1 January 2002."

7.365 Further, paragraph E of the Bananas Understanding stipulates that:

"The United States will lift its reserve concerning the waiver of Article I of the GATT 1994 that the EC has requested for preferential access to the EC of goods originating in ACP states signatory to the Cotonou Agreement; and will actively work towards promoting the acceptance of an EC request for a waiver of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 needed for the management of quota C under the import regime described in paragraph C(2) until 31 December 2005."

7.366 The above-mentioned waivers were ultimately adopted by the Doha Ministerial Conference on 14 November 2001. They waived obligations of the European Communities under provisions of the GATT 1994 with which the original EC bananas import regime had been found to be inconsistent in the original proceedings and with which the revised EC bananas import regime of 1999 was found to be inconsistent by the arbitrators pursuant to Article 22.6 of the DSU and by the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador.

7.367 In the Doha Waiver from Article XIII:1 and 2 of the GATT 1994, the Ministerial Conference "decide[d that]... [w]ith respect to the EC's imports of bananas, as of 1 January 2002, and until 31 December 2005, paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 are waived with respect to the EC's separate tariff quota of 750,000 tonnes for bananas of ACP origin."⁸⁵³ The Article XIII Doha Waiver made specific reference to the Bananas Understandings, by "[t]aking note of the understandings reached by the EC, Ecuador and the United States that identify the means by which the longstanding dispute over the EC's banana regime can be resolved, in particular their provision for a temporary global quota allocation for ACP banana supplying countries under specified conditions."⁸⁵⁴ As is clear from its text, the same recital of the Article XIII Doha Waiver noted that the interim step foreseen by paragraph C of that Understanding was "temporary", which is also confirmed by the fact that the Article XIII Doha Waiver applied only until the tariff-only regime foreseen by paragraph B of the Bananas Understanding was supposed to enter into force. Further, the Article XIII Doha Waiver referred to "the exceptional circumstances surrounding the resolution of the bananas dispute and the interests of many WTO Members in the EC banana regime"⁸⁵⁵, and "[r]ecogniz[ed] the need to afford sufficient protection to the ACP banana supplying countries, including the most vulnerable, during a limited transition period, to enable them to prepare for a tariff-only regime."⁸⁵⁶

7.368 The Doha Waiver from Article I:1 of the GATT 1994 "[c]onsider[ed] that, in the field of trade, the provisions of the ACP-EC Partnership Agreement requires preferential tariff treatment by the EC of exports of products originating in the ACP States."⁸⁵⁷ In the Article I Doha Waiver, the WTO Ministerial Conference "decide[d that]... [s]ubject to the terms and conditions set out hereunder, Article I, paragraph 1 of the General Agreement shall be waived, until 31 December 2007, to the extent necessary to permit the European Communities to provide preferential tariff treatment for products originating in ACP States as required by Article 36.3, Annex V and its Protocols of the ACP-EC Partnership Agreement,⁸⁵⁸ without being required to extend the same preferential treatment to like products of any other member."⁸⁵⁹ Further, the Article I Doha Waiver provides that "[w]ith respect to bananas, the additional provisions in the Annex shall apply."⁸⁶⁰ According to that Annex to the Article I Doha Waiver, "[t]he waiver would apply for ACP products under the Cotonou Agreement until 31 December 2007. In the case of bananas, the waiver will also apply until 31 December 2007, subject to the following, which is without prejudice to rights and obligations under Article XXVIII."⁸⁶¹

7.369 As regards modifications to the EC bananas import regime in the period following the adoption of the Bananas Understanding, the Panel notes that the European Communities argues that it has not adopted its current bananas import regime specifically pursuant to paragraph B of the Bananas Understanding.⁸⁶² This argument seems to contradict the European Communities' argument on good faith under the second preliminary issue that it "has fully complied with its obligations under the [Bananas] Understanding in good faith and relying on the expectation that the United States would also comply with its own obligations."⁸⁶³ (emphasis added) That latter argument would suggest that the European Communities argues that the bananas import regimes it introduced on 1 July 2001, 1 January 2002 and 1 January 2006 correspond to paragraphs C(1), C(2) and B of the Bananas Understanding, respectively.

7.370 In the light of the similarities between paragraph C(1) and Annex 1 of the Bananas Understanding, on the one hand, and EC Regulation 216/2001, on the other hand, the European Communities EC Regulation 216/2001 Amending Regulation (EEC) No 404/93 on the Common Organisation of the Market in Bananas clearly corresponds to Phase I of the interim regime set out by paragraph C of the Bananas Understanding.

7.371 Indeed, according to paragraph C(1) of the Bananas Understanding, the first phase of that interim regime was supposed to become "[e]ffective on 1 July 2001". Similarly, the relevant modifications in the management of tariff quotas set out in EC Regulation 404/1993, took effect on 1 July 2001. Under the second paragraph of Article 2 of EC Regulation 216/2001:

"[The Regulation] shall apply from 1 April 2001. However, the Commission may, according to the procedure laid down in Article 27, delay the date until 1 July 2001 at the latest, if this proves necessary for the implementation of the modifications in the management of the tariff quotas."

7.372 In turn, Article 1 of EC Commission Regulation 395/2001, notes that it "seeks ... to comply with international commitments entered into by the Community within the World Trade Organisation (WTO)"⁸⁶⁴, and provides that "Article 1 of Regulation (EC) No 216/2001[, which introduces the relevant modifications to EC Regulation 404/1993 shall apply from 1 July 2001."

7.373 Under Annex 1 of the Bananas Understanding, which describes Phase I of the EC interim bananas import regime:

1. A bound tariff-rate quota (TRQ) designated as quota 'A' will be set at 2,200,000 tonnes. An autonomous TRQ designated as quota 'B' will be set at 353,000 tonnes. These TRQs will be managed as one, with the total quota being 2,553,000 tonnes. There is no expectation of allocation of shares of either of these TRQs among country suppliers, and the Commission will not seek to convene a meeting to that effect of the principal supplying countries except upon the joint request of all such countries. The tariff applied to bananas imported in the 'A' and 'B' quotas shall not exceed 75 euro/tonne.
2. A TRQ designated as quota 'C' will be set at 850,000 tonnes.

⁸⁶² European Communities' second written submission, para. 43. The European Communities also argues that "[t]he introduction of the tariff-only import regime was decided by the European Communities at least 2 years before the signing of the [Bananas] Understanding." Final written version of the European Communities' closing oral statement at the substantive meeting of the Panel with the parties and third parties, para. 6.

⁸⁶³ European Communities' second written submission, para. 39.

⁸⁶⁴ EC Regulation 395/2001, recital 7.

3. Import licenses for 83% of the 'A' and 'B' TRQs will be distributed to 'traditional' operators based on each qualified 'traditional' operator's 1994-96 average annual final reference volume ('reference volume') for the 'A/B' quotas. Qualified 'traditional' operators will be identified on the basis of the distribution of licenses that occurred under Regulation 404, Article 19.1(a) and Regulation 1442, Article 3.1(a) for 'Category A subfunction (a)'. Importers will not need to produce new evidence.
4. Licenses for TRQ 'C' are intended to be distributed broadly in accordance with the principles to be utilized in managing of licenses for TRQ's 'A' and 'B' and on the basis of imports of ACP-origin bananas. The European Commission and the United States will consult again within 4 weeks with a view to finalizing the licensing principles for TRQ 'C'.
5. Within each TRQ, licenses may be used to import bananas from any source. Licenses to import bananas into TRQ 'C' cannot be used to import bananas into TRQs 'A' or 'B', and vice versa.
6. A 'non-traditional' operator category will be created with respect to 17% of the quantity of the 'A and B' TRQs. Non-traditional operators cannot become traditional operators in subsequent periods. Management of non-traditional imports will be done by simultaneous examination."

7.374 In turn, the preamble of EC Regulation 216/2001 makes reference to original recommendations and rulings in the EC – Bananas III dispute:

"There have been numerous close contacts with supplier countries and other interested parties to settle the disputes arising from the import regime established by Regulation (EEC) No 404/93 and to take account of the conclusions of the special group set up under the dispute settlement system of the World Trade Organisation (WTO)"⁸⁶⁵ (footnote omitted, emphasis added).

7.375 Further, the preamble of EC Regulation 216/2001 describes the regime that this EC Regulation intends to introduce, in a very similar way as Annex 1 to the Bananas Understanding:

"Analysis of all the options presented by the Commission suggests that establishment in the medium term of an import system founded on the application of a customs duty at an appropriate rate and application of a preferential tariff to imports from ACP countries provides the best guarantees, firstly of achieving the objectives of the common organisation of the market as regards Community production and consumer demand, secondly of complying with the rules on international trade, and thirdly of preventing further disputes.

However, such a system must be introduced upon completion of negotiations with the Community's partners in accordance with WTO procedures, in particular Article XXVIII of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). The result of these negotiations must be submitted for approval to the Council which must also, in accordance with the provisions of the Treaty, establish the applicable level of the Common Customs Tariffs.

Until the entry into force of that regime, the Community should be supplied under several tariff quotas open to imports from all origins and managed in line with the recommendations made by the dispute settlement body. The first tariff quota of 2200000 tonnes at a rate of EUR 75 should be bound in the WTO. A second, additional tariff quota of 353000 tonnes should be opened to cater for the increase in consumption resulting from enlargement of the Community in 1995, with the same rate applying. To ensure satisfactory supply to the Community, a third, autonomous tariff quota of 850000 tonnes should be opened, also for all origins. Under this latter tariff quota, provision should be made for the possibility, in accordance with an appropriate procedure, of a reduction in the applicable customs duty in order to allow the effective importation of bananas originating in third countries which do not benefit from the tariff preferences granted in respect of bananas originating in ACP countries.

In view of the contractual obligations towards the ACP countries and the need to guarantee them proper conditions of competition, application to imports of bananas originating in those countries of a tariff preference of EUR 300 per tonne would allow the trade flows in question to be maintained. This will entail in particular the application to such imports of zero duty under the three tariff quotas.

Provision should be made for the additional tariff quota of 353000 tonnes to be modified to take account of any increased Community demand found when a supply balance is drawn up. Provision should also be made for suitable specific action to be taken in response to exceptional circumstances liable to affect supply of the Community market."⁸⁶⁶ (emphasis added)

7.376 Article 1 of EC Regulation 216/2001 amended EC Regulation 404/1993 accordingly.

7.377 As regards Phase II of the European Communities' interim import regime foreseen under paragraph C(2) of the Bananas Understanding, as mentioned above, the European Communities argues that that phase was contained in "Council Regulation 2587/2001, adopted by the European Communities on December 19, 2001, which introduced the 2002-2005 banana import regime."⁸⁶⁷ The United States does not contest the reference by the European Communities to EC Regulation 2587/2001 in the context of the 2002-2005 bananas import regime of the European Communities.

7.378 The European Communities notified that EC Regulation to the DSB with the following introduction: "By ... Regulation [2587/2001], the EC has implemented Phase 2 of the [Bananas] Understandings with the United States and Ecuador (circulated as document WT/DS27/58 of 2 July 2001)."⁸⁶⁸

7.379 As the European Communities itself argues⁸⁶⁹, similarly to EC Regulation 216/2001, the preamble to EC Regulation 2587/2001 provides that "[t]here have been numerous close contacts with supplier countries and other interested parties to settle the disputes arising from the import regime established by Regulation (EEC) No 404/93 and to take account of the conclusions of the panel set up under the dispute settlement system of the World Trade Organisation (WTO)."⁸⁷⁰

7.380 Further, Article 1.4 of EC Regulation 2587/2001 amends Article 18 of EC Regulation 404/1993 in line with Annex 2 to the Bananas Understanding, which describes Phase II of the interim bananas import regime of the European Communities.

7.381 Finally, on 1 January 2006, EC Regulation 1964/2005 entered into force. As mentioned above, the European Communities identifies that Regulation as the measure introducing its current bananas import regime.⁸⁷¹ Also, the European Communities does not contest that EC Regulation 1964/2005 corresponds to paragraph B of the Bananas Understanding, which provides that "In accordance with Article 16(1) of Regulation No. (EC) 404/93 (as amended by Regulation No. (EC) 216/2001), the European Communities (EC) will introduce a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006."

7.382 The preamble of EC Regulation 1964/2005 explicitly refers to "Council Regulation (EEC) No 404/93 of 13 February 1993 on the common organisation of the market in bananas provides for the entry into force of a tariff only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006."⁸⁷² Further, the preamble of EC Regulation 1964/2005 makes ample reference to the arbitrations pursuant to the Annex to the Article I Doha Waiver⁸⁷³, which addressed the two unsuccessful attempts of the European Communities to rebind its bananas tariff in 2005.

Specific arguments by the European Communities to refute the proposition that its current bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply

7.383 To assess whether the above events effectively constitute a "continuum of events"^{874,875} between the original DSB recommendations and rulings and the current EC bananas import regime, the Panel will look at the main arguments raised by the European Communities to refute the proposition that its current bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply. Most of these arguments relate, at least in part, to the European Communities' argument that its final measure taken to comply was its 2002-2005 bananas import regime, which corresponds to Phase II of the interim regime set out in the Bananas Understanding.

Termination of the suspension of concessions by the United States

7.384 The European Communities argues that its 2002-2005 bananas import regime was the final measure taken to comply since "the United States' retaliation rights terminated upon the European Communities' implementation of this tariff-quota based regime and the United States never requested from the DSB the right to reinstate those rights with relation to that import regime."⁸⁷⁶

7.385 Referencing Paragraph D of the Bananas Understanding⁸⁷⁷, the European Communities argues that "the United States' retaliation rights terminated upon the European Communities' implementation of th[e 2002-2005] tariff-quota based regime."⁸⁷⁸ According to the European Communities, "the fact that the United States accepted to have their retaliation rights terminated upon the implementation of the tariff-quota-based import regime described in paragraph C-2 of the [Bananas] Understanding confirms that the implementation of that import regime was the agreed 'measure taken to comply'".⁸⁷⁹ Further, the European Communities contends, "[t]he fact that the [Bananas] Understanding provided for the termination and not for the continuation of the suspension of the retaliation rights of the United States after January 1, 2002 confirms that there was no dispute between the United States and the European Communities after that date."⁸⁸⁰

7.386 The European Communities additionally considers the dispute to have concluded since "the United States never requested from the DSB the right to reinstate those rights with relation to that import regime."⁸⁸¹ Also, according to the European Communities, under the Bananas Understanding, "[t]he only case in which the United States would re-impose retaliatory measures was if the Phase II regime [set out in paragraph C-2 of the Bananas Understanding] '(did) not enter into force by 1 January 2002'."⁸⁸²

7.387 According to the European Communities, "the right to suspend concessions must be revoked once the defending WTO Member has fully complied with the DSB's recommendations and rulings."⁸⁸³⁸⁸⁴ The European Communities explains that:

"Article 22.8 of the DSU provides that retaliation measures must be terminated 'when a mutually agreed solution is reached'. In the present case, the United States agreed to terminate its retaliation measures upon implementation of phase 2 of the [Bananas] Understanding, i.e., the introduction of the 2002-2005 import regime. This is further evidence that the tariff only regime to be introduced in 2006 was not 'a measure taken to comply'."⁸⁸⁵

7.388 As noted above, in the arbitration concerning the level of suspension originally proposed by the United States⁸⁸⁶ (EC – Bananas III (US) (Article 22.6 – EC)), pursuant to Article 22.6 of the DSU the arbitrator concluded that:

"In light of the foregoing considerations, the Arbitrators determine that the level of nullification or impairment suffered by the United States in the matter European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas is US$191.4 million per year. Accordingly, the Arbitrators decide that the suspension by the United States of the application to the European Communities and its member States of tariff concessions and related obligations under GATT 1994 covering trade in a maximum amount of US$191.4 million per year would be consistent with Article 22.4 of the DSU."⁸⁸⁷

⁸⁸⁷ Decision by the Arbitrators on EC – Bananas III (US) (Article 22.6 – EC), para. 8.1.

7.389 The United States modified its request for suspension of concessions accordingly⁸⁸⁸, and on 19 April 1999, the DSB granted authorization for the United States to suspend concessions:

"[P]ursuant to the US request under Article 22.7 of the DSU, [the DSB] agree[s] to grant authorization to suspend the application to the European Communities and its member States of tariff concessions and related obligations under GATT 1994, consistent with the decision of the Arbitrators contained in document WT/DS27/ARB."⁸⁸⁹

7.390 The United States subsequently suspended concessions beginning in 1999.

7.391 At the DSB meeting of 1 February 2002, the United States made the following statement:

"[T]he United States ... was pleased to note that the EC had increased the quota for Latin American banana exporting countries by 100,000 tonnes effective from 1 January 2002. The United States had, therefore, terminated the suspension of concessions in effect since 1999. The United States would continue to work closely with the EC and other Members to address any issues that might arise as the EC moved to a tariff-based system for bananas and implemented the terms of the bilateral Understanding on Bananas."⁸⁹⁰

7.392 The Panel notes that the United States does not contest that this was in response to the introduction of Phase II of the European Communities' interim bananas import regime set out in the Bananas Understanding. However, the United States argues that:

"[T]he Understanding sets out a series of steps. Two significant steps were to be achieved by July 1, 2001, and January 1, 2002. As incentive to ensure that the EC took those steps, the United States agreed to first provisionally suspend its imposition of increased duties and then terminate the imposition of increased duties that the DSB had authorized the United States to apply. This only proves that both the United States and the EC complied with what is set out in paragraphs C and D of the Understanding. Up to that point, there had yet to be full compliance by the EC. Per the terms of the Understanding, there was an additional step to be taken."⁸⁹¹

7.393 The Panel notes that Article 21.5 of the DSU does not make any reference to retaliation, nor to the suspension or termination of concessions. Nor does Article 22.8 of the DSU address what measures can be considered as "measures taken to comply". This latter is a term used in Article 21.5 of the DSU.

7.394 The Panel recalls that the above arbitration procedure pursuant to Article 22.6 of the DSU merely established the maximum annual amount of permissible suspension of concessions; neither the arbitrator, nor the DSB indicated the period during which the United States would be entitled to apply retaliatory measures.

⁸⁸⁸ See EC – Bananas III, Recourse by the United States to Article 22.7 of the DSU (WT/DS27/49), 9 April 1999.

⁸⁹¹ Final written version of the United States' opening oral statement at the substantive meeting of the Panel with the parties and third parties, para. 14. See also United States' response to Panel question No. 22.

7.395 Article 22.1 of the DSU provides that "[c]ompensation and the suspension of concessions or other obligations are temporary measures available in the event that the recommendations and rulings are not implemented within a reasonable period of time." Likewise, Article 22.8 of the DSU provides that: "[t]he suspension of concessions or other obligations shall be temporary." This was also confirmed by the arbitrator in EC – Bananas III (US) (Article 22.6 – EC), who held that "authorization to suspend concessions or other obligations is a temporary measure pending full implementation by the Member concerned."⁸⁹²

7.396 The Panel agrees with the United States that "Members can choose not to apply their WTO authorization (or not to apply it in full)."⁸⁹³ This is illustrated by the history of the EC – Bananas III dispute, where Ecuador chose not to retaliate despite the authorization to do so.⁸⁹⁴

7.397 The Panel considers that the suspension of concessions is a right, not an obligation. Article 3.7 of the DSU provides that "[t]he last resort which this Understanding provides to the Member invoking the dispute settlement procedures is the possibility of suspending the application of concessions or other obligations under the covered agreements on a discriminatory basis vis-à-vis the other Member, subject to authorization by the DSB of such measures" (emphasis added). The European Communities also recognizes that retaliation involves a "right to suspend concessions".⁸⁹⁵

7.398 Article 22.8 of the DSU provides that: "[t]he suspension of concessions or other obligations ... shall only be applied until such time as the measure found to be inconsistent with a covered agreement has been removed, or the Member that must implement recommendations or rulings provides a solution to the nullification or impairment of benefits, or a mutually satisfactory solution is reached."

7.399 The Panel reads this part of Article 22.8 of the DSU as establishing a time-limit until which a Member authorized to retaliate may exercise its right to retaliate. In other words, once authorized to retaliate, a Member may choose whether or not to retaliate, but a Member choosing to retaliate shall not apply such retaliation beyond the time-limit set out by Article 22.8 of the DSU. The Panel agrees with the argument of the United States that "Members can choose not to apply their WTO authorization (or not to apply it in full) for all sorts of reasons that have nothing to do with whether the 22.8 conditions are met."⁸⁹⁶ Indeed, the award of the arbitrator pursuant to Article 22.6 of the DSU explicitly refers to "Members that for whatever reasons do not wish to suspend concessions."⁸⁹⁷

7.400 Since Members have the right but not the obligation to retaliate, the Panel does not believe that the mere fact that a Member suspends and then terminates the suspension of concessions necessarily means that "the measure found to be inconsistent with a covered agreement has been removed, or the Member that must implement recommendations or rulings provides a solution to the nullification or impairment of benefits, or a mutually satisfactory solution is reached."

7.401 Indeed, the arbitrator in EC – Bananas III (US) (Article 22.6 – EC) noted that the "temporary nature [of retaliation] indicates that it is the purpose of countermeasures to induce compliance."⁸⁹⁸

⁸⁹⁷ Decision by the Arbitrators on EC – Bananas III (US) (Article 22.6 – EC), para. 4.11.

⁸⁹⁸ Ibid., para. 6.3.

Likewise, the arbitrator in EC – Bananas III (Ecuador) (Article 22.6 – EC) stated that "the object and purpose of Article 22 ... is to induce compliance."⁸⁹⁹ Further, Article 22.1 of the DSU provides that "neither compensation nor the suspension of concessions or other obligations is preferred to full implementation of a recommendation to bring a measure into conformity with the covered agreements."

7.402 The Panel agrees with the European Communities that paragraph D of the Bananas Understanding linked the termination of the United States' suspension of concessions to the timely introduction of Phase II of the interim regime set out in paragraph C(2) of the Understanding. However, the Bananas Understanding referred to by the European Communities, also includes paragraph B, which provides for a final step to follow immediately Phase II of the interim regime. In its statement at the DSB meeting of 1 February 2002 on "terminat[ing] the suspension of concessions in effect since 1999"⁹⁰⁰ the United States made explicit reference to the Bananas Understanding and the step set out in paragraph B thereof:

"The United States would continue to work closely with the EC and other Members to address any issues that might arise as the EC moved to a tariff-based system for bananas and implemented the terms of the bilateral Understanding on Bananas."⁹⁰¹

7.403 The Panel lastly recalls that in EC – Bananas III (US) (Article 22.6 – EC) the arbitrator noted that "the European Communities argues that if we consider the WTO consistency of its banana regime in an arbitration proceeding under Article 22, we will deprive Article 21.5 of its raison d'être."⁹⁰² The arbitrator "disagree[d]"⁹⁰³, stating that "[f]or those Members that for whatever reasons do not wish to suspend concessions, Article 21.5 will remain the prime vehicle for challenging implementation measures."⁹⁰⁴

7.404 In the light of the above, the Panel considers that the right to invoke Article 21.5 of the DSU shall apply to the United States irrespective of whether it terminated its suspension of concessions in 2002. Indeed, Article 21.5 of the DSU does not make any reference to retaliation, nor to the suspension or termination of concessions. Nor does Article 22.8 of the DSU talk about what measures can be considered as measures taken to comply, which is addressed in Article 21.5 of the DSU. Thus, the termination of the United States' suspension of concessions cannot in itself be read as a waiver of the US right to bring a compliance dispute or as an acceptance by the United States that the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regime would be the final EC measure taken to comply.

Withdrawal from the DSB agenda

7.405 The European Communities also argues that "the issue of the implementation of the EC-Bananas III DSB recommendations and rulings was withdrawn from the DSB's agenda with the consent of all WTO members (including the United States), in accordance with Article 21.6 of the DSU."⁹⁰⁵ Accordingly, the European Communities contends:

"[A] compliance panel is excluded when a dispute has been settled. In fact, such a dispute is considered resolved once and for all. This is evidenced by the wording of Article 21.6 of the DSU, which specifies that the issue of implementation of the recommendations or rulings of the DSB stays on its agenda 'until the issue is resolved'. This obviously means that a dispute taken off the agenda is considered resolved."⁹⁰⁶

7.406 At the DSB meeting held on 1 February 2002⁹⁰⁷, under the agenda item "Surveillance of implementation of recommendations adopted by the DSB", the Chairman of the DSB recalled that "Article 21.6 of the DSU required that 'unless the DSB decides otherwise, the issue of implementation of the recommendations or rulings shall be placed on the agenda of the DSB meeting after six months following the date of establishment of the reasonable period of time pursuant to paragraph 3 and shall remain on the DSB's agenda until the issue is resolved'."⁹⁰⁸

7.407 In the specific context of the EC – Bananas III dispute, the DSB Chairman "drew attention to document WT/DS27/51/Add.25 which contained the status report by the EC on progress in the implementation of the DSB's recommendations concerning its banana import regime."⁹⁰⁹

7.408 Subsequently, the European Communities stated that:

"[T]he EC had implemented on schedule the second phase of the Understandings on Bananas concluded with the United States and Ecuador in April 2001, and had complied with its international obligations. [The EC] said that the regime set out in [EC] Regulation [2587/2001] would be applicable until the time the EC's banana import regime would become a tariff-only regime. This would take place by 1 January 2006 at the latest, following the negotiations under Article XXVIII, which in principle would begin in 2004. Under these circumstances, the EC considered that this matter should now be withdrawn from the DSB agenda."⁹¹⁰

7.409 In response, at the same meeting of the DSB, various Members, including Ecuador, Honduras and the United States made statements. Subsequently, "[t]he DSB took note of [those] statements."⁹¹¹

7.410 The issue of the "Implementation by the European Communities of the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in relation to 'European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas'⁹¹² and related subsequent WTO proceedings" appeared on the DSB agenda four years later, at the first meeting of the DSB following the introduction of the current EC bananas import regime.⁹¹³ It was discussed as an autonomous agenda item, separate from "Surveillance of implementation of recommendations adopted by the DSB", and "the EC noted its disagreement with the categorization of this matter as an 'implementation issue' relevant to Article 21 of the DSU."⁹¹⁴ The issue was further discussed at numerous subsequent DSB meetings during 2006⁹¹⁵ and in early

2007⁹¹⁶ until the DSB finally addressed the request for the establishment of compliance panels by Ecuador⁹¹⁷ and by the United States.⁹¹⁸

7.411 The European Communities invokes the following part of the third sentence of Article 21.6 of the DSU: "the issue of implementation of the recommendations or rulings shall ... remain on the DSB's agenda until the issue is resolved", and argues that therefore "a dispute taken off the agenda is considered resolved."⁹¹⁹ The Panel considers that this can be ascertained only after analysing the text of Article 21.6 in line with the customary rules of interpretation.

7.412 Article 21.6 of the DSU provides that:

"The DSB shall keep under surveillance the implementation of adopted recommendations or rulings. The issue of implementation of the recommendations or rulings may be raised at the DSB by any Member at any time following their adoption. Unless the DSB decides otherwise, the issue of implementation of the recommendations or rulings shall be placed on the agenda of the DSB meeting after six months following the date of establishment of the reasonable period of time pursuant to paragraph 3 and shall remain on the DSB's agenda until the issue is resolved. At least 10 days prior to each such DSB meeting, the Member concerned shall provide the DSB with a status report in writing of its progress in the implementation of the recommendations or rulings."

7.413 The excerpt invoked by the European Communities, namely that "the issue of implementation of the recommendations or rulings shall ... remain on the DSB's agenda until the issue is resolved" appears to be categorical. It uses the word "shall", which implies an obligation, and the word "remain", which implies continued action by the DSB.

7.414 However, this sentence begins with the qualifier "[u]nless the DSB decides otherwise". This qualification also applies to part of the same sentence invoked by the European Communities. Accordingly, per the terms of the sentence invoked by the European Communities, a plausible interpretation of the third sentence of Article 21.6 of the DSU in the Panel's view is that the DSB may decide that the "issue of implementation of the recommendations or rulings shall [not] remain on the DSB's agenda until the issue is resolved".

⁹¹⁹ European Communities' response to Panel question No. 20.

7.415 The third sentence of Article 21.6 of the DSU provides that "[t]he DSB shall keep under surveillance the implementation of adopted recommendations or rulings." Reading the first and third sentences of Article 21.6 of the DSU together suggests that the DSB may fulfil its mandate of keeping "under surveillance the implementation of adopted recommendations or rulings" otherwise than by maintaining that issue on the agenda. The DSB could indeed do so for reasons of efficiency, for instance in cases where no new elements warranting a debate occur between its meetings.

7.416 The first sentence of Article 21.6 of the DSU provides that it is "[t]he DSB [that] shall keep under surveillance the implementation of adopted recommendations or rulings" and the third sentence of the same paragraph refers to the "DSB's agenda". (emphasis added) However, issues do not appear automatically on the DSB agenda. It is the right of WTO Members to raise the issue of the implementation of adopted recommendations or rulings. The second sentence of Article 21.6 of the DSU provides that "any Member" "may" "raise[]" "[t]he issue of implementation of the recommendations or rulings ... at the DSB", and establishes that this right might be exercised "at any time following the ... adoption [of recommendations and rulings]".

7.417 As regards the specific case before this Panel, the Panel considers that the statements by Members at the DSB meeting of 1 February 2002 indicate that Members did not consider the "issue of the implementation of the recommendations or rulings" resolved at the time of that DSB meeting. On the contrary, most Members who spoke referred to the final step foreseen in the Bananas Understanding and the need to comply with that step, which was subsequent to the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regime.

7.418 For instance, the United States noted that "[it] would continue to work closely with the EC and other Members to address any issues that might arise as the EC moved to a tariff-based system for bananas and implemented the terms of the bilateral Understanding on Bananas."⁹²⁰

7.419 Likewise, although "Ecuador ... considered that this item should no longer appear on the agenda of future DSB meetings"⁹²¹, it also stated that:

"[The Bananas] Understanding constituted a sound basis for the EC to implement a transitional banana import regime so that by 1 January 2006, at the latest, a WTO-compatible tariff-only regime would be put into place. The transitional regime contained various phases, stages and elements to be implemented. One element was to obtain waivers from Articles I and XIII of the GATT 1994. However, the decision to grant these waivers included new stages which would have to be carried out in order to ensure a proper transition to a tariff-only banana import regime, as from 1 January 2006."⁹²²

7.420 Ecuador added that:

"Accordingly, insofar as the EC continued to implement the DSB's recommendations by meeting its commitments, Ecuador wished to reserve its rights under Article 21 of the DSU. Therefore if there was any disagreement concerning the measures applied by the EC, the matter could be referred to the original Panel pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU"⁹²³ (emphasis added).

⁹²⁰ Dispute Settlement Body, Minutes of Meeting held in the Centre William Rappard on 1 February 2002 (WT/DSB/M/119), 6 March 2002, para. 7.

⁹²¹ Ibid., para. 5.

⁹²³ Ibid., para. 5.

7.421 Honduras also referred to the Bananas Understandings and:

"[E]xpressed [the] expectation that in order to implement the Understandings on Bananas in accordance with the agreement reached at Doha, the EC would not impose a prohibitive tariff that would make it impossible for Honduran bananas to enter the EC market. Honduras hoped that this agreement would be honoured in good faith. It should be kept in mind that Honduras had taken into account the interests of all parties as well as the integrity of the world trading system."⁹²⁴

7.422 The European Communities also referred to the Bananas Understanding when requesting that the issue be withdrawn from the DSB agenda:

"[T]he regime set out in [EC] Regulation [2587/2001] would be applicable until the time the EC's banana import regime would become a tariff-only regime. This would take place by 1 January 2006 at the latest, following the negotiations under Article XXVIII, which in principle would begin in 2004."⁹²⁵ (emphasis added)

7.423 The Panel considers that the above statements by Members at the DSB meeting of 1 February 2002 do not reflect an agreement by Members that the issue of the implementation of the DSB recommendations and rulings in the EC - Bananas III dispute could not be brought back to the DSB agenda at a later point.

7.424 In fact, Honduras explicitly "reserve[d] its rights, including the right to request that this matter be placed on the DSB agenda in the future."⁹²⁶ Following the introduction of the current EC bananas import regime, Honduras and other Members raised the issue of the "Implementation by the European Communities of the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in relation to 'European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas'⁹²⁷ and related subsequent WTO proceedings" at DSB meeting held in 2006 and in early 2007, in line with the right set out in the second sentence of Article 21.6.

7.425 As mentioned above, at its meeting of 1 February 2002 the DSB "took note of the statements"⁹²⁸ made in the context of the "Surveillance of implementation of recommendations adopted by the DSB" in the EC – Bananas III dispute. In this regard the United States argues that:

"The DSB simply 'took note' of the statements and did not take a decision on this issue. The fact that other Members did not request that this matter be on the agenda of subsequent meetings presumably reflects that little would have been gained by keeping this matter on the DSB agenda until the EC took the next step on January 1, 2006."⁹²⁹

7.426 The Panel notes that under the agenda item "Surveillance of implementation of recommendations adopted by the DSB", the DSB would usually both "take note of the statements made" and explicitly "agree to revert to the matter at its following regular meeting" in situations where no Member contests that compliance has not yet been achieved by the complainant or the dispute is not yet settled.

⁹²⁸ Dispute Settlement Body, Minutes of Meeting held in the Centre William Rappard on 1 February 2002 (WT/DSB/M/119), 6 March 2002, para. 9.

⁹²⁹ United States' response to Panel question No. 21.

7.427 Under the agenda item "Surveillance of implementation of recommendations adopted by the DSB", the DSB would merely "take note of the statements made" without explicitly agreeing to revert to the matter in various types of situations. In some cases, it seems that the DSB would merely take note of the statements made because no Member contests that compliance has been achieved.⁹³⁰ However, there are also numerous instances where, under the agenda item "Surveillance of implementation of recommendations adopted by the DSB", the DSB would merely take note of statements contesting whether compliance has been achieved, without explicitly agreeing to revert to the matter.⁹³¹

7.428 Therefore, the Panel cannot consider the mere fact that the DSB only took note of the statements made at its meeting of 1 February 2002 as an indication that the original DSB recommendations in the EC – Bananas III dispute were fully complied with, nor as an indication that those recommendations were not fully complied with.

7.429 The Panel notes in this context that, on at least one occasion, the DSB discussed the "Surveillance of implementation of recommendations adopted by the DSB" and merely took note of statements contesting whether compliance had been achieved, and subsequently agreed to establishing a compliance panel pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU. In EC – Bananas III, at the DSB meeting of 25 November 1998 the DSB Members expressed diverging opinions as to the first EC attempt to comply referred to in a status report of the European Communities⁹³² achieves compliance.⁹³³ The DSB merely took note of the statements made, without explicitly agreeing to revert to the matter at its next regular meeting.⁹³⁴ This did not prevent the DSB from establishing, at a later meeting, the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador in EC – Bananas III.⁹³⁵

7.430 In the light of the above, the Panel does not consider that the mere fact that the issue of the implementation of the recommendations or rulings in the EC – Bananas III dispute was withdrawn from the DSB agenda necessarily means that that issue was definitively resolved. Accordingly, the Panel finds that it cannot draw the conclusion suggested by the European Communities from the text of Article 21.6 of the DSU and the termination of the United States' suspension of concessions in 2002.

7.431 If the Panel were to reach the opposite conclusion in this dispute, WTO Members might have no other choice but to ensure that the issue of the implementation of recommendations or rulings was constantly maintained on the agenda of each DSB session merely for the sake of making sure that that issue was not considered resolved by a panel. This would be the case even when no useful or meaningful discussion of the implementation of recommendations or rulings can be expected at a specific point in time prior to the issue of the implementation of recommendations or rulings being resolved. Such a practice would result in unnecessarily lengthy agendas for DSB meetings being adopted and would not contribute towards the smooth functioning of that body.

The relevance of the Doha Waivers

7.432 As noted above, in November 2001 the Doha Ministerial Conference adopted two waivers from Articles I:1, and from XIII:1 and 2 of the GATT 1994, respectively, for a limited period of time. Nevertheless, the Parties contest the relevance of the Doha Waivers for establishing whether or not the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply.

7.433 The European Communities does not disagree that the preamble of EC Regulation 1964/2005 makes reference to the two arbitrations and to the European Communities' unsuccessful attempts to rebind its bananas tariff pursuant to the Article I Doha Waiver. However, the European Communities contests the US argument summarised by the European Communities as "an assertion that the Preamble of Regulation 1964/2005 refers to the arbitrations held in 2005 within the context of the Doha waiver and, hence, Regulation 1964/2005 must be considered as a measure taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings adopted by the DSB in 1997."⁹³⁶ According to the European Communities, "this point [does not] suffice ... to establish a link between the tariff only regime and the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in 1997"⁹³⁷ because "the subject matter of the 2005 arbitrations has no relation to the 1997 DSB recommendations and rulings."⁹³⁸

7.434 The European Communities argues also that the Article I Doha Waiver proves that the current EC bananas import regime is not a measure taken to comply:

"[T]he arbitrations were part of the waiver granted by the WTO to the Cotonou Agreement. The Cotonou Agreement was only signed in 2000, i.e., three years after the adoption of the DSB's recommendations and rulings. It is difficult to see how a Regulation adopted to conform to the terms of a waiver relating to an international agreement reached in 2000 can be said to be a 'measure taken to comply' with a DSB ruling adopted in 1997."⁹³⁹

7.435 The parties do not contest that the two Doha Waivers are linked to paragraph E of the Bananas Understanding, which provides that:

"The United States will lift its reserve concerning the waiver of Article I of the GATT 1994 that the EC has requested for preferential access to the EC of goods originating in ACP states signatory to the Cotonou Agreement; and will actively work towards promoting the acceptance of an EC request for a waiver of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 needed for the management of quota C under the import regime described in paragraph C(2) until 31 December 2005."

7.436 Both Doha Waivers were adopted for a limited period of time. The Article XIII Doha Waiver applied until the end of 2005, i.e. until the end of the application of the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regime, which was the day preceding the entry into force of the tariff-only regime set out in paragraph B of the Bananas Understanding. In turn, the Article I Doha Waiver applied to bananas in general until 31 December 2007, but the Annex to the Article I Doha Waiver provided for the possibility of the waiver expiring at the end of 2005:

⁹³⁶ European Communities' second written submission, para. 46. The United States originally formulated that argument in the following way: "The fifth clause in the preamble to EC Regulation 1964 itself states that the measures are being taken in an effort to rectify the matter which the two Article I waiver Annex arbitrations found inconsistent with that Annex. The Article I waiver and Annex are inextricably linked to the Understandings, which are in turn inextricably linked to the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in Bananas III." United States' second written submission, para. 48.

⁹³⁷ European Communities' second written submission, para. 47.

⁹³⁹ Ibid., para. 47.

"If the EC has failed to rectify the matter, this waiver shall cease to apply to bananas upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime ... on 1 January 2006."⁹⁴⁰

7.437 The European Communities argues, in the context of its rebuttal of the United States' claim under Article I of the GATT 1994, that the Article I Doha Waiver applied to bananas until the end of 2007.⁹⁴¹ The Panel will not address that issue at this point.

7.438 It suffices to note here that the argument of the European Communities implies that the Article I Doha Waiver would have applied both during the validity of the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regime and the current EC bananas import regime, thus establishing a link between the two regimes. This raises the question why the European Communities sees its 2002-2005 as its final measure taken to comply.

7.439 If, on the contrary, the Article I Doha Waiver was to have expired in regard to bananas at the end of 2005, it would have applied, similar to the Article XIII Doha Waiver, exactly during Phase II of the interim EC bananas import regime set out in paragraph C(2) of the Bananas Understanding. Such possible coincidence between the period of validity of both Doha Waivers and Phase II of the interim EC bananas import regime, as well as the wording of paragraph E of the Bananas Understanding would establish a close link between the Doha Waivers and Phase II of the interim EC bananas import regime.

7.440 Given such a close link between the Doha Waivers and Phase II of the interim EC bananas import regime, the Panel agrees with the United States that the step set out in paragraph C(2) of the Bananas Understanding "w[as] 'interim' because [it] still discriminated between WTO Members, as evidenced inter alia by the fact that the EC recognized that it would need waivers of Article I and XIII of the GATT 1994."⁹⁴²

7.441 In any event, since the Doha Waivers applied incontestably during the entire Phase II of the interim EC bananas import regime and they were limited in time, they are relevant for confirming that Phase II of the interim EC bananas import regime could not be the final measure taken to comply by the European Communities. All parties concerned were of the opinion that only when a tariff-only regime was introduced would the case be closed.

7.442 The Panel notes that the European Communities also argues that "the United States invites the Panel to determine whether the current banana import regime of the European Communities remains covered by the Doha waiver."⁹⁴³ However, according to the European Communities:

"Such determination depends exclusively on the interpretation of the conditions set by the Doha waiver and, therefore, it is unrelated to 'compliance with DSB rulings'. The conditions imposed by the waiver in relation to the new tariff-only regime are the result of negotiations that were not related to the DSB rulings and the European Communities' compliance with them. Therefore, a dispute over the continued existence of the Doha waiver should have been brought under a new dispute settlement case and not as a case under Article 21.5 of the DSU."⁹⁴⁴

7.443 The United States responds that:

"In the current proceeding, [it] is challenging 'the consistency with a covered agreement of measures taken to comply' (DSU Article 21.5): that is, the United States is challenging the consistency with Article I and XIII of the GATT 1994 (a covered agreement) of the EC's current bananas regime (a measure taken to comply)."⁹⁴⁵

7.444 The request of the United States for the establishment of this compliance Panel⁹⁴⁶, and this Panel's subsequent mandate upon establishment by the DSB, confirms that point by the United States.

7.445 Further, the United States argues that:

"The analysis of the consistency of that measure with Article I requires an analysis of the Doha waiver because the EC argues that the Doha waiver covers the breach. Therefore, the issue of the waiver's continued existence is properly before this Article 21.5 Panel."⁹⁴⁷

7.446 Indeed, it is the European Communities that invokes the Doha Waiver as a defence against the US claim under Article I of the GATT 1994. Accordingly, the Panel rejects the EC argument that, because of the Article I Doha Waiver and related arbitration proceedings, the Panel should not address the US compliance complaint.

The relevance of the Bananas Understanding

7.447 As noted above⁹⁴⁸, both parties agree that the Bananas Understanding is relevant for assessing whether the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply.

7.448 In the context of its arguments that its 2002-2005 bananas import regime was the final measure taken to comply, the European Communities argues that:

"[T]he fact that the European Communities introduced a tariff-only regime on January 1, 2006, in accordance with the provisions of Regulation 216/2001, does not have any legal significance for the European Communities' relations with the United States. The European Communities simply implemented its own legislation in accordance with its provisions."⁹⁴⁹

7.449 Further, the European Communities contends, "there is no link between the recommendations and rulings of the DSB [adopted in 1997] and the political decision of the European Communities to introduce a tariff-only import regime by January 1, 2006."⁹⁵⁰ According to the European Communities, its "political decision [on introducing a tariff-only regime] had already been taken before the signing of the Understanding between the United States and the European Communities and their reaching an agreement on the appropriate 'measures taken to comply'.⁹⁵¹

7.450 The Panel disagrees with the European Communities that there is no link between the political decision of the European Communities to introduce a tariff-only import regime by 1 January 2006 and the original DSB recommendations and rulings. EC Regulation 216/2001, which the European Communities identifies as the legislation embodying its political decision amends Article 16(1) of EC Regulation 404/1993 to the following:

"This Article and Articles 17 to 20 shall apply to imports of fresh products falling within CN code ex 0803 00 19 up to the entry into force of the rate of the common customs tariff for those products, no later than 1 January 2006, established under the procedure provided for in Article XXVIII of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade" (emphasis added).

7.451 Article 1.1 of EC Regulation 1964/2005 was adopted explicitly in accordance with Article 16(1) of EC Regulation 404/1993, as amended by EC Regulation 216/2001.

7.452 Further, EC Regulation 216/2001 explicitly mentions that:

"There have been numerous close contacts with supplier countries and other interested parties to settle the disputes arising from the import regime established by Regulation (EEC) No 404/93 and to take account of the conclusions of the special group set up under the dispute settlement system of the World Trade Organisation (WTO)" (footnote omitted).

7.453 Thus, the EC regulation identified by the European Communities as embodying its political decision to introduce a tariff-only regime explicitly links the current EC bananas import regime to the original recommendations and rulings of the DSB.

7.454 The Panel also disagrees with the European Communities on the relevance of the political decision adopted prior to, and referenced in, the Bananas Understanding. The European Communities concedes that its political decision was incorporated into a binding legislation. As a matter of fact, that binding legislation modified the prior binding legislation, which in turn served as a legal basis for the necessary additional legislation to introduce the current EC bananas import regime.

7.455 The Panel considers it unrealistic that any Member would "identif[y] the means by which [a] long-standing dispute over [its] import regime [concerning a key sector of agricultural trade] can be resolved", without first conducting a reflection process and taking a political decision on the relevant means to resolve that dispute. The same applies to the recording of that decision into an instrument concluded with another Member and subsequently communicated to the DSB as a "mutually agreed solution".

7.456 Also, if such a political decision has already been incorporated into a Member's domestic legislation, it would seem all the more reasonable that the instrument recording that decision and concluded with another Member would refer to such legislation, as does paragraph B of the Bananas Understanding.

7.457 In short, the alleged political nature of the European Communities' prior decision to introduce a tariff-only bananas import regime does not diminish the relevance of the Bananas Understanding for establishing whether the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply. In fact, the ⁹⁵¹ Ibid., para. 43.

European Communities argues that its current EC bananas import regime corresponds to the step set out in paragraph B of the Bananas Understanding. In the context of its second preliminary objection, the European Communities contends that it "has fully complied with its obligations under the [Bananas] Understanding in good faith and relying on the expectation that the United States would also comply with its own obligations."⁹⁵² As analysed above, this can only be interpreted to mean that the European Communities is arguing that its import regimes introduced on 1 July 2001, 1 January 2002 and 1 January 2006 correspond to Phases I and II of its interim bananas import regime and to the final step set out in the Bananas Understanding.

7.458 Further, even if it were true, as the European Communities argues, that it "simply implemented its own legislation in accordance with its provisions"⁹⁵³, the Panel cannot fail to note the following. The legislation invoked by the European Communities, namely EC Regulation 216/2001 explicitly refers to the original measure under review in the original panel and Appellate Body proceedings, i.e. EC Regulation 404/1993⁹⁵⁴, and to the need "to take account of the conclusions of the special group set up under the dispute settlement system of the World Trade Organisation".⁹⁵⁵

7.459 In the light of the above, without assessing the legal status of the Bananas Understanding, the Panel confirms that that Understanding is relevant for assessing whether the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply.

7.460 As regards the text of the Bananas Understanding analysed above, the Panel notes that both paragraphs B and C of the Bananas Understanding describe steps to be taken by the European Communities, and use the word "will". Accordingly, the Panel considers that the Bananas Understanding attaches at least equal importance to the two regimes set out in those two paragraphs.

7.461 Further, on the basis of the relative position of paragraphs B and C, and the phrase "in the interim" in the latter, the Panel considers that the Bananas Understanding accords key importance to the tariff-only regime as a "means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved. In fact, paragraph B of the Bananas Understanding, which provides for the introduction of "a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006"⁹⁵⁶, immediately follows paragraph A, which stipulates that "[t]he European Commission and [the United States/Ecuador] have identified the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved."⁹⁵⁷ In turn, paragraph C, which provides for "an import regime on the basis of historical licensing"⁹⁵⁸ only appears after paragraph B, and is introduced with the phrase "in the interim".

The original DSB recommendations and rulings do not prescribe the introduction of a tariff-only regime

7.462 The European Communities also argues that "[t]here is no single finding or recommendation of the Appellate Body that could be complied with only through the introduction of a tariff only import regime"⁹⁵⁹:

"A careful analysis of the findings and recommendations of the Appellate Body report in the EC-Bananas III case does not reveal any element that could support a conclusion that the European Communities was obliged to move into a tariff only regime in order to bring itself into compliance with the covered agreements. Quite to the contrary, the findings and recommendations of the Appellate Body allowed the European Communities to bring itself into compliance through the adoption of a revised, tariff-quota-based import regime with a different allocation of quotas and import licenses."⁹⁶⁰

7.463 In fact, to make such a positive suggestion, the original panel or the Appellate Body should have issued suggestions pursuant to Article 19.1 of the DSU, which clearly distinguishes recommendations from suggestions:

"Where a panel or the Appellate Body concludes that a measure is inconsistent with a covered agreement, it shall recommend that the Member concerned bring the measure into conformity with that agreement. In addition to its recommendations, the panel or Appellate Body may suggest ways in which the Member concerned could implement the recommendations" (footnotes omitted; emphasis added).

7.464 The Panel recalls that no suggestions were issued in the original panel and appellate proceedings. Further, the Panel recalls that the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador did issue suggestions pursuant to Article 19.1. The first and second suggestions of that panel concerned a "tariff-only system for bananas":

"First, the European Communities could choose to implement a tariff-only system for bananas, without a tariff quota. This could include a tariff preference (at zero or another preferential rate) for ACP bananas. If so, a waiver for the tariff preference may be necessary unless the need for a waiver is obviated, for example, by the creation of a free-trade area consistent with Article XXIV of GATT. This option would avoid the need to seek agreement on tariff quota shares.

Second, the European Communities could choose to implement a tariff-only system for bananas, with a tariff quota for ACP bananas covered by a suitable waiver."⁹⁶¹

7.465 The Panel notes that parties disagree whether, in the light of the fact that those suggestions were made in a proceeding not involving the United States, they are relevant before this compliance Panel. The Panel does not need to address that question.

7.466 The Panel needs to address the specific argument by the European Communities that its current bananas import regime is not a measure taken to comply since "[t]here is no single finding or recommendation of the Appellate Body that could be complied with only through the introduction of a tariff only import regime."⁹⁶² In that context, the Panel notes that the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador introduced its suggestions with the following introduction:

"While Members remain free to choose how they implement DSB recommendations and rulings, it seems appropriate, after one implementation attempt has proven to be at least partly unsuccessful, that an Article 21.5 panel make suggestions with a view toward promptly bringing the dispute to an end.

⁹⁶² European Communities' second written submission, para. 45.

In light of our findings and conclusions with respect to Articles I and XIII of GATT, the requirements of the Lomé Convention and the coverage of the Lomé waiver, above, in our view, the European Communities has at least the following options for bringing its banana import regime into conformity with WTO rules"⁹⁶³ (emphasis added).

7.467 The Panel considers that irrespective of the status of the above-mentioned suggestions for this compliance dispute, it can properly take into consideration the above introduction to those suggestions, including their highlighted portion, as it forms part of the jurisprudence of a previous panel.

7.468 Indeed, in Japan – Alcoholic Beverages II, the Appellate Body held that:

"Adopted panel reports are an important part of the GATT acquis. They are often considered by subsequent panels. They create legitimate expectations among WTO Members, and, therefore, should be taken into account where they are relevant to any dispute. However, they are not binding, except with respect to resolving the particular dispute between the parties to that dispute. In short, their character and their legal status have not been changed by the coming into force of the WTO Agreement."⁹⁶⁴

7.469 The Panel notes that the italicized parts in the introduction to the above-mentioned suggestions by the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador confirm Members' freedom to choose how they implement DSB recommendations and rulings, or suggestions issued pursuant to Article 19.1 of the DSU. The European Communities seems to refer to this freedom in its argument that "[f]ollowing a negative panel or Appellate Body report, a defending party may take a number of initiatives that may affect the product market that was the subject of the dispute."⁹⁶⁵

7.470 Accordingly, the fact that the original DSB recommendations and rulings did not explicitly require the European Communities to bring itself into compliance specifically through the introduction of a tariff-only import regime is irrelevant for establishing whether the current EC bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply.

The timing of the US compliance challenge

7.471 As regards the timing of the US compliance challenge, the European Communities makes two main arguments.

7.472 First, the European Communities agrees⁹⁶⁶ with the argument made in the ACP third parties' joint written submission that:

"Article 21.5 proceedings must necessarily be initiated within a reasonable period of time from the date the recommendations and rulings to bring the matter into conformity with WTO obligations were adopted. In the present case, the recommendations and rulings of the Panel and the Appellate Body in the original dispute were adopted by the DSB in September 1997. Ten years can hardly be regarded as a reasonable period of time."⁹⁶⁷

7.473 Second, in the context of its arguments that Phase II of its interim bananas import regime was the final measure taken to comply, the European Communities contends that:

"If the United States had considered that the European Communities had failed to implement that 'measure taken to comply', the United States should have brought an Article 21.5 proceeding against that import regime at that time. However, the United States never challenged the 2002-2005 banana import regime. This means that the dispute that had led to the 1997 DSB recommendations and rulings was terminated upon the European Communities' implementation of the measure agreed with the United States."⁹⁶⁸

7.474 The Panel will first consider the timing of the US request for compliance proceedings in relation to the adoption of the DSB recommendations and rulings and the introduction of the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regime.

7.475 The Panel agrees with the argument of the United States that "Article 21.5 of the DSU does not contain any 'reasonable period of time' limitation."⁹⁶⁹ Indeed, Article 21.5 of the DSU is silent on the timing of the start of a compliance dispute.

7.476 The Panel recalls that in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada) the Appellate Body held that:

"Article 21.5 is one paragraph within an Article entitled 'Surveillance of Implementation of Recommendations and Rulings'. As a whole, Article 21 deals with events subsequent to the DSB's adoption of recommendations and rulings in a particular dispute. The various paragraphs of Article 21 make clear that following such recommendations and rulings, further relevant developments and disagreements are to be dealt with through the reporting and surveillance modalities set out therein, and in such a way as to achieve 'prompt resolution'. ... Article 21 sets out a number of mechanisms to ensure collective oversight of that Member's implementation. With respect to ... measures taken to comply, they are found in Article 21.5."⁹⁷⁰

7.477 The Panel does not consider that a Member is entitled to compliance proceedings pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU merely because the same product, as in the original dispute, is being affected. At the same time, the Panel does not consider it appropriate to try to establish a specific threshold for the admissibility of requests for compliance panel proceedings based on the time elapsed between the adoption of the original DSB recommendations and rulings and the submission of a compliance request. In the absence of specific criteria in the DSU for such determination, each case must be assessed on its own merits.

7.478 Given the considerable time that has passed since the DSB adopted its original recommendations and rulings in 1997, the resolution of the dispute through the more expeditious compliance proceedings, rather than through standard dispute settlement procedures seems all the more warranted by Article 21.1 of the DSU, which provides that "prompt compliance with recommendations or rulings of the DSB is essential in order to ensure effective resolution of disputes to the benefit of all Members."

7.479 Article 3.3 of the DSU similarly provides that: "[t]he prompt settlement of situations in which a Member considers that any benefits accruing to it directly or indirectly under the covered agreements are being impaired by measures taken by another Member is essential to the effective functioning of the WTO and the maintenance of a proper balance between the rights and obligations of Members."

7.480 The Appellate Body and panels have also highlighted the importance of prompt compliance. As the panel report on Australia – Salmon (Article 21.5 – Canada), referenced by the Appellate Body in *US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada)*⁹⁷¹, states:

"[A] complainant, after having prevailed in an original dispute, should not have to go through the entire DSU process once again if an implementing Member in seeking to comply with DSB recommendations under a covered agreement is breaching, inadvertently or not, its obligations under other provisions of covered agreements. In such instances an expedited procedure should be available. This procedure is provided for in Article 21.5. It is in line with the fundamental requirement of 'prompt compliance' with DSB recommendations and rulings expressed in both Article 3.3 and Article 21.1 of the DSU."⁹⁷²

7.481 Further, in the context of the above-referenced "balance that Article 21.5 strikes between competing considerations"⁹⁷³, the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada) held that:

"[Article 21.5 of the DSU] seeks to promote the prompt resolution of disputes, to avoid a complaining Member having to initiate dispute settlement proceedings afresh when an original measure found to be inconsistent has not been brought into conformity with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB, and to make efficient use of the original panel and its relevant experience. On the other hand, the applicable time-limits are shorter than those in original proceedings ... This balance should be borne in mind in interpreting Article 21.5 and, in particular, in determining the measures that may be evaluated in proceedings pursuant to that provision."⁹⁷⁴

7.482 The Panel next addresses the timing of the US compliance request relative to the introduction of the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regime. The Panel's above summary of the developments following the first attempt of the European Communities to comply with the DSB recommendations and rulings identifies various indications in unilateral EC statements, the bilateral Bananas Understanding, and in the multilateral Article XIII Doha Waiver, that Phase II of the interim EC bananas import regime would be followed without interruption by a tariff-only regime, at the latest by 1 January 2006. Therefore, the Panel considers it reasonable that the United States might not have seen a "reason to institute Article 21.5 proceedings for the 2002-2005 interim regime"⁹⁷⁵ prior to the implementation of the alleged tariff-only regime, thus before 2006.

⁹⁷⁵ United States' comment on the European Communities' response to Panel question No. 10.

7.483 The United States made its request for the establishment of a compliance Panel on 2 July 2007, during the period of validity of the current EC bananas import regime. Following the introduction of the current EC bananas regime on 1 January 2006, throughout 2006 and into early 2007 the "Implementation by the European Communities of the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in relation to 'European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas'⁹⁷⁶ and related subsequent WTO proceedings" was included in the agenda of the DSB. On 23 February 2007, Ecuador requested the establishment of a compliance panel in the same dispute.

7.484 The Panel agrees with the United States that merely because the United States did not invoke Article 21.5 of the DSU against the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regime "does not mean that the United States was then precluded from recourse to Article 21.5 proceedings once the EC took the next ... step"⁹⁷⁷. Moreover, the Panel is of the view that "[e]ven if the United States had had a reason to challenge the interim steps taken by the EC but had decided to wait until now, the United States would not have been precluded from taking such action."⁹⁷⁸

7.485 The compliance panel requested by the European Communities in EC – Bananas III stated that:

"[T]he failure, as of a given point in time, of one Member to challenge another Member's measures cannot be interpreted to create a presumption that the first Member accepts the measures of the other Member as consistent with the WTO Agreement. In this regard, we note the statement by a GATT panel that 'it would be erroneous to interpret the fact that a measure has not been subject to Article XXIII over a number of years, as tantamount to its tacit acceptance by contracting parties'.^{979,980}

7.486 The Panel recalls that the European Communities raises the above arguments concerning the timing of the current EC bananas import regime in order to refute the proposition that that regime is a measure taken to comply. In particular, the European Communities argues that its final measure taken to comply was its 2002-2005 bananas import regime.

7.487 As mentioned above, and referred to by the United States⁹⁸¹, in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada) the Appellate Body held that:

"[A] panel's mandate under Article 21.5 of the DSU is not necessarily limited to an examination of an implementing Member's measure declared to be 'taken to comply'. Such a declaration will always be relevant, but there are additional criteria ... that should be applied by a panel to determine whether or not it may also examine other measures. Some measures with a particularly close relationship to the declared 'measure taken to comply', and to the recommendations and rulings of the DSB, may also be susceptible to review by a panel acting under Article 21.5. Determining whether this is the case requires a panel to scrutinize these relationships, which may, depending on the particular facts, call for an examination of the timing ... of the various measures."⁹⁸²

⁹⁸¹ See United States' response to Panel question No. 12.

⁹⁸² Appellate Body Report on US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), para. 75.

7.488 The Panel will therefore analyse the timing of the current EC bananas import regime in relation to what the EC argues was its final measure to comply, i.e. the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regime, as well as to the original DSB recommendations and rulings.

7.489 The Panel is aware that the introduction of the current EC bananas import regime took place more than nine years after the adoption of the original recommendations and rulings, and four years following the introduction of the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regime.

7.490 Nevertheless, in the context of establishing whether a measure is a measure taken to comply for the purposes of Article 21.5 of the DSU, the Panel does not consider that the issue of timing should be confined to the length of time that elapses between the adoption of the original recommendations and rulings, and the introduction of the measure alleged by the respondent to be a measure taken to comply.

7.491 As regards in particular the timing of the current and the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regimes, the Panel recognizes that the two import regimes did not overlap in time. However, there is no disagreement between the parties that the current EC bananas import regime entered into force on 1 January 2006, and replaced "the import regime implemented by the European Communities between 2002 and 2005"⁹⁸³, which applied until 31 December 2005. Also, as noted above, both regimes were closely related to EC Regulation 404/1993, which was reviewed in the original panel and appellate proceedings, and which only expired at the end of 2007.

7.492 Further, as mentioned above, there were various indications in unilateral EC statements, the bilateral Bananas Understanding, and in the multilateral Article XIII Doha Waiver, that the European Communities intended to introduce a tariff-only regime immediately following Phase II of the interim EC bananas import regime, the latest by 1 January 2006.

7.493 Accordingly, the Panel considers that the timing of current and the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regimes cannot prevent the current EC bananas import regime from being considered as a measure taken to comply. Rather, there is an obvious and sufficiently close temporal link between the European Communities' 2002-2005 bananas import regime and its current bananas import regime, introduced on 1 January 2006.

7.494 Turning to the timing of the current EC bananas import regime and the adoption of the original DSB recommendations and rulings, the Panel recalls the close link of the current EC bananas import regime to the original recommendations and rulings and to the measure reviewed in the original panel and Appellate Body proceedings. EC Regulation 1964/2005 was adopted, at least in part, pursuant to EC Regulation 404/1993, which was abolished only at the end of 2007. The Panel also refers to Articles 21.1 and 3.3 of the DSU, and to the Panel's above conclusions on the basis of "prompt compliance" and "prompt settlement" set out in those provisions of the DSU.

7.495 Accordingly, the Panel finds that the timing of the current EC bananas import regime relative to the original recommendations and rulings does not prevent this compliance Panel from considering the current EC bananas import regime as a measure taken to comply.

Whether a particularly close link exists between the current and the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regimes

7.496 As noted above, the European Communities argues that its current bananas import regime is not a measure taken to comply since its final measure taken to comply was its 2002-2005 bananas import regime.

⁹⁸³ European Communities' second written submission, para. 49.

7.497 As referred to by the United States, in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada) held that:

"[A] panel's mandate under Article 21.5 of the DSU is not necessarily limited to an examination of an implementing Member's measure declared to be 'taken to comply'. Such a declaration will always be relevant, but there are additional criteria, identified above, that should be applied by a panel to determine whether or not it may also examine other measures. Some measures with a particularly close relationship to the declared 'measure taken to comply', and to the recommendations and rulings of the DSB, may also be susceptible to review by a panel acting under Article 21.5."⁹⁸⁴ (emphasis added)

7.498 As to the criteria to "[d]etermin[e] whether this is the case"⁹⁸⁵ the Appellate Body found that it:

"[R]equires a panel to scrutinize these relationships, which may, depending on the particular facts, call for an examination of the timing, nature, and effects of the various measures. This also requires an Article 21.5 panel to examine the factual and legal background against which a declared 'measure taken to comply' is adopted. Only then is a panel in a position to take a view as to whether there are sufficiently close links for it to characterize such an other measure as one 'taken to comply' and, consequently, to assess its consistency with the covered agreements in an Article 21.5 proceeding."⁹⁸⁶

7.499 The Panel notes that it has already found that there is a sufficiently close relationship between the current EC bananas import regime and the original DSB recommendations and rulings in the EC – Bananas III dispute, in particular with the measures reviewed by the original panel and appellate proceedings in that dispute.⁹⁸⁷ Further, in the context of its analysis of the European Communities' arguments that its 2002-2005 bananas import regime was the final measure taken to comply, the Panel has already found that there is a sufficiently close temporal relationship between the current and the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regimes.⁹⁸⁸

7.500 The Panel will now analyse the remaining criteria laid down by the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), in particular whether there is a sufficiently close relationship between the current and the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regimes as regards the nature and effect of the two regimes and their factual and legal background.

The nature and effects of the current and the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regimes

7.501 As regards the nature and effects of the current and the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regimes, the Panel notes that the European Communities' 2002-2005 regime is "an import regime on the basis of historical licensing"⁹⁸⁹ and involves a number of tariff rate quotas. Conversely, the current EC bananas import regime does not involve a licensing system for MFN bananas.

7.502 Despite those differences, both the current and the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regimes involve a preferential tariff rate quota for ACP countries. EC Regulation 2587/2001, which, the European Communities contends, "introduced the 2002-2005 banana import regime"⁹⁹⁰, amended Article 18 of EC Regulation 404/1993 inter alia to provide for a zero-duty preferential tariff rate quota (Quota C) of 750,000 tonnes for ACP bananas.⁹⁹¹

7.503 Likewise, the Bananas Understanding provides that, under the European Communities' 2002-2005 bananas import regime, "[t]he TRQ 'C' will be 750,000 tonnes and will be reserved for bananas of ACP origin."⁹⁹²

7.504 In turn, Article 1 of EC Regulation 1964/2005, which both parties identify as the EC measure introducing the current EC bananas import regime⁹⁹³, provides:

"1. As from 1 January 2006 the tariff rate for bananas (CN code 0803 00 19) shall be EUR 176/tonne.

2. Each year from 1 January, starting from 1 January 2006, an autonomous tariff quota of 775 000 tonnes net weight subject to a zero-duty rate shall be opened for imports of bananas (CN code 0803 00 19) originating in ACP countries."

7.505 In other words, the European Communities' current bananas import regime maintained the preferential tariff rate quota of the previous regime for ACP countries. Indeed, the European Communities describes its current bananas import regime:

"The European Communities subjects all banana imports to a single tariff of €176 per ton. ...

The only exception to this rule is that the European Communities offers a trade preference to those banana producing countries that have signed the 'Cotonou Agreement'. ... [T]he quantity of bananas originating from Cotonou countries that can be imported free of duty [is] 775,000 tons per year (the 'Cotonou Preference').⁹⁹⁴ All bananas imported from Cotonou countries beyond this 'cap' are subject to the tariff of €176 per ton.^{995,996}

7.506 Importantly, the preferential in-quota duty was zero under both EC import regimes, and the beneficiaries of the TRQ, namely ACP countries, were the same under both regimes. The quantity of the preferential tariff quota was only slightly different; the current EC bananas import regime even increased it by 25,000 tonnes per annum.

7.507 The Panel also notes that it is exactly the preference given to ACP countries in comparison to the rest of the WTO Members that the United States is contesting in this compliance dispute. In its request for the establishment of this compliance Panel, the United States argues that the current ⁹⁹⁴ (footnote original) Council Regulation (EC) 1964/2005, Article 1, paragraph 2.

⁹⁹⁵ (footnote original) For the sake of completeness, it is noted that the European Communities' Generalised System of Preferences also provides that banana imports from Least Developed Countries are subject to a zero duty. This does not have any impact on the current proceedings: all Least Developed Countries that are exporting bananas to the European Communities are also Cotonou beneficiary countries (Yemen and Bangladesh are least developed countries but have no banana exports towards the European Communities).

⁹⁹⁶ European Communities' first written submission, paras. 3-4.

EC bananas import regime is inconsistent with Articles I and XIII of the GATT 1994⁹⁹⁷ because it maintains:

"[A] preferential (zero-duty) TRQ available only to bananas originating in African, Caribbean and Pacific ('ACP') countries.⁹⁹⁸ Bananas of other origins have no access to this 775,000 ton TRQ. Under Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 such other bananas are subject instead to a duty of 176 euros/ton.⁹⁹⁹ The regulation took effect as of 1 January 2006."¹⁰⁰⁰

7.508 In the light of the above and despite the differences between the two regimes, the Panel finds that the maintenance of a zero-duty preferential tariff rate quota for ACP countries is a key similarity in the nature and effects of the current and the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regimes. This similarity is essential in the dispute before this compliance Panel, including for assessing whether there is a sufficiently close link between the two import regimes.

Legal and factual background of the two regimes

7.509 As regards the general legal and factual background of the current and the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regimes, the Panel refers to its above analysis of the first attempt of the European Communities to comply with the original DSB recommendations and rulings, and to its summary of subsequent events.

7.510 As also noted above, the European Communities declares that its 2002-2005 bananas import regime was introduced through EC Regulation 2587/2001 on 1 January 2002.¹⁰⁰¹ Further, the European Communities states that its current bananas import regime was introduced through EC Regulation 1964/2005 on 1 January 2006.

7.511 Both regimes are closely connected to the original DSB recommendations and rulings in the EC – Bananas III dispute. As regards EC Regulation 2587/2001, the European Communities argues that the preamble of that Regulation:

"[S]tates that the Regulation introduces the measures resulting from:

'... numerous close contacts with supplier countries and other interested parties to settle the disputes ... and to take into account of the conclusions of the panel set up under the dispute settlement system of the World Trade Organisation (WTO).'¹⁰⁰²

7.512 Further, like the measures constituting the first attempt of the European Communities to bring itself into compliance with the original DSB recommendations and rulings, EC Regulation 2587/2001

"modif[ies] aspects of the EC's banana import regime found by the original panel and Appellate Body reports to be inconsistent with the EC's WTO obligations [i.e., Regulation 404/1993]."¹⁰⁰³

7.513 As for EC Regulation 1964/2005, the Panel has already found that that regulation is closely related to the original DSB recommendations and rulings, in particular to EC Regulation 404/1993, which was the measure reviewed in the original panel and appellate proceedings.

7.514 Likewise, the Panel finds that both EC Regulations 2587/2001 and 1964/2005 are closely related to EC Regulation 216/2001.

7.515 Article 1.1 of EC Regulation 216/2001 amended Article 16.1 of EC Regulation 404/1993 to the following:

"This Article and Articles 17 to 20 shall apply to imports of fresh products falling within CN code ex 0803 00 19 up to the entry into force of the rate of the common customs tariff for those products, no later than 1 January 2006, established under the procedure provided for in Article XXVIII of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade."

7.516 Similarly to EC Regulation 216/2001, EC Regulation 2587/2001 amended EC Regulation 404/1993. In particular, Article 1.3 of EC Regulation 2587/2001 amended Article 16.1 of EC Regulation 404/1993, "last amended by Regulation (EC) No 216/2001"¹⁰⁰⁴ to the following:

"This Article and Articles 17 to 20 shall apply to imports of fresh products falling within CN code 0803 00 19 until the entry into force, no later than 1 January 2006, of the rate of the common customs tariff for those products established under the procedure provided for in Article XXVIII of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)."

7.517 This amendment did not affect but rather confirmed the essence of Article 16.1 of EC Regulation 404/1993, as previously amended by EC Regulation 216/2001, namely that the European Communities would introduce a common customs tariff for bananas by 1 January 2006, following negotiations with relevant WTO Members pursuant to Article XXVIII of the GATT 1994.

7.518 As mentioned above, the preamble of EC Regulation 1964/2005 refers to the need to adopt such a common customs tariff pursuant to the amended EC Regulation 404/1993:

"Council Regulation (EEC) No 404/93 of 13 February 1993 on the common organisation of the market in bananas provides for the entry into force of a tariff only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006"¹⁰⁰⁵ (footnote omitted).

7.519 EC Regulation 1964/2005 then refers to the "negotiations under Article XXVIII of the GATT 1994 with a view to modifying certain concessions for bananas"¹⁰⁰⁶ and to the unsuccessful attempts of the European Communities to rebind its bananas tariff.¹⁰⁰⁷

7.520 Finally, Article 1.1 of EC Regulation 1964/2005 fulfils the function set out in Article 16.1 of EC Regulation 404/1993, as amended by EC Regulations 216/2001 and 2587/2001, and provides that "[a]s from 1 January 2006 the tariff rate for bananas (CN code 0803 00 19) shall be EUR 176/tonne."

¹⁰⁰⁷ Ibid., recitals (3)-(5).

7.521 The Panel concludes that the above legal and factual background of the current and the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regimes, in particular the above close link between EC Regulations 404/1993, 216/2001, 2587/2001 and 1964/2005, indicate that the two regimes have a particularly close relationship.

7.522 That close relationship is confirmed by the role of the Bananas Understanding in the developments following the first attempt of the European Communities to bring itself into compliance with the original recommendations and rulings of 1997. Indeed, the Bananas Understanding confirms the European Communities' unilateral offers in 1999 and 2000 to bring itself into compliance with the original DSB recommendations and rulings through a two-stage approach, the second stage of which would involve a tariff-only EC bananas import regime to be introduced by 1 January 2006.

7.523 Subparagraphs C(1) and C(2) as well as Annexes 1 and 2 of the Bananas Understanding set out the "interim" steps to be taken by the European Communities prior to 1 January 2006. In turn, paragraph B of the Bananas Understanding, which both parties consider relevant in the context of the European Communities' third preliminary objection, explicitly refers to "Article 16(1) of Regulation No. (EC) 404/93 (as amended by Regulation No. (EC) 216/2001)". The Panel cannot fail to note in this context that Article 16.1 of EC Regulation 404/1993, and the various amendments and steps pursuant to that Article, are key in establishing the close link between EC Regulations 404/1993, 216/1993, 2587/1993 and 1964/2005.

7.524 Further, the Bananas Understanding, which both parties consider relevant for assessing the European Communities' third preliminary objection, provides in paragraph A that "[t]he European Commission and the United States have identified the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved."¹⁰⁰⁸ The European Communities' communication to the DSB concerning the Bananas Understanding states that "[t]he European Communities (EC) wish to notify the Dispute Settlement Body (DSB) that they have reached, with the United States of America and Ecuador, a mutually satisfactory solution within the meaning of Article 3.6 of the DSU regarding the implementation by the EC of the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the DSB in the dispute 'Regime for the importation, sale and distribution of bananas' (WT/DS27)"¹⁰⁰⁹ (emphasis added). The Panel considers that these phrases give rise to a strong link between the Bananas Understanding and the original panel and appellate proceedings in EC – Bananas III.

(c) Conclusion

7.525 On the basis of the above reasons taken together, the Panel concludes that there is clearly a "continuum of events"^{1010,1011} between the original DSB recommendations and rulings in the EC – Bananas III dispute and the current EC bananas import regime.

7.526 As mentioned earlier, the first attempt of the European Communities to bring itself into compliance as of the end of the "reasonable period of time" "to comply with the relevant DSB recommendations and rulings", i.e. by 1 January 1999, was found to be inconsistent with the WTO rules in at least two dispute settlement procedures. This confirms that the European Communities' first attempt to bring itself into compliance was unsuccessful.

¹⁰¹¹ Appellate Body Report on US – Softwood Lumber VI (Article 21.5 – Canada), para. 103.

7.527 The Panel finds that the above-summarized developments following the first attempt of the European Communities to comply with the original DSB recommendations and rulings constitute a second attempt by the European Communities to comply with those recommendations and rulings.

7.528 As expressed in unilateral EC statements to the DSB and in legislation adopted by the European Communities, and also confirmed in the bilateral Bananas Understandings and in the multilateral Doha Waivers, a central element of that two-stage EC attempt to comply is the introduction of a tariff-only bananas import regime by 1 January 2006.

7.529 The Panel notes that the European Communities' argument that the need to introduce the final tariff-only regime is not part of the European Communities second attempt to comply would, as the United States argues, "read paragraph B out of the [Bananas] Understanding."¹⁰¹² Further, as analysed above¹⁰¹³, the same argument by the European Communities cannot be sustained even on the basis of the EC domestic legislation invoked by the European Communities as the alleged real basis for adopting EC Regulation 1964/2005. The Panel finds that the current EC bananas import regime, introduced on 1 January 2006, constitutes an integral part of that second EC attempt to comply, although obviously this does not imply that the current EC bananas import regime would be necessarily consistent with the covered agreements, which is a matter that does not belong within the assessment of this preliminary issue.

7.530 Indeed, in the light of its analysis of the relevant criteria established by the Appellate Body in US – Softwood Lumber IV (Article 21.5 – Canada), there is a particularly close link between the current bananas import regime and the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regime, which the EC argues constitutes its final measure taken to comply. The three bananas import regimes introduced by the European Communities on 1 July 2001, 1 January 2002 and 1 January 2006, were all part of the European Communities' second attempt at bringing itself into compliance.

7.531 In the light of the above, the Panel concludes that in itself the current bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply with the original recommendations and rulings of the DSB in the EC – Bananas III dispute. Further, the current bananas import regime is a measure taken to comply with the original recommendations and rulings of the DSB in the EC – Bananas III dispute also on the basis of its particularly close relationship to the alleged final measure taken to comply by the European Communities, i.e. the 2002-2005 EC bananas import regime.

7.532 Accordingly, the Panel rejects the third preliminary objection of the European Communities and finds that the United States has properly brought this dispute under Article 21.5 of the DSU.

F. PRELIMINARY OBJECTION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES CONCERNING THE LACK OF FORMAL CONSULTATIONS

7.533 In addition to the above, in its first written submission, the European Communities had raised the additional preliminary objection claim that "[t]he United States ... did not request consultations."¹⁰¹⁴

7.534 According to the European Communities:

"The United States requested the establishment of this Panel by invoking Article 21.5 of the DSU on July 2, 2007, without having requested consultations with the European Communities. The European Communities protested the lack of a prior request for consultations in the DSB meeting of July 12, 2007, where the United States' request was discussed and the decision for the establishment of the Panel was taken."¹⁰¹⁵

7.535 The European Communities argued that the United States' complaint is vitiated by the lack of prior consultations between the Parties¹⁰¹⁶ because:

"It is settled law that a complaining party is not entitled to request the establishment of a panel unless it has first submitted a request for consultations.¹⁰¹⁷ If no request for consultations has been made, the defending party may raise a preliminary objection before the panel (given that, pursuant to the DSU, a panel request is not subjected to scrutiny by the DSB) and the panel is obliged to sustain the objection and dismiss the case outright."^{1018,1019}

7.536 In response, the United States did not contest the absence, in these compliance proceedings, of "formal consultations[pursuant to Article 4 of the DSU,] in addition to the discussions already being held"¹⁰²⁰ between the parties. However, the United States argued that:

"[It] was surprised that the EC raised this procedural objection given that the United States and the EC had expressly agreed that the extensive discussions between the United States and the EC concerning the EC's new regime prior to the request for a panel would fulfill any consultation requirement. The EC appears to have recognized this when, as discussed below, it formally withdrew at the July 12, 2007, DSB meeting any procedural objection to panel establishment stemming from the lack of a formal request for consultations.¹⁰²¹ This procedural arrangement is reflected in an exchange of letters between the United States Trade Representative ('USTR') and the EC Commissioner for Trade. In that exchange, the USTR proposed that 'our discussions to that point would fulfill any consultation requirement and the EU would not object to a US request for the establishment of a Panel at the first DSB meeting at which a US request is considered.'¹⁰²² In his reply, the Commissioner agreed that the 'EU would be ready not to object to a US request for the establishment of a panel in July.'¹⁰²³ Further communications between the United States and the EC confirmed that the EC was making an unconditional commitment not to raise the lack of formal consultations as a procedural hurdle."¹⁰²⁴

7.537 As regards the substance of the European Communities' preliminary objection, the United States argued that:

"Formal consultations are not a prerequisite to the establishment of a panel under Article 21.5. Contrary to the EC's assertion, it is not 'settled law that a complaining party is not entitled to request the establishment of a panel unless it has first submitted a request for consultations."¹⁰²⁵ The Appellate Body's analysis of this issue in Mexico – HFCS (21.5) amply supports the US view on this point."¹⁰²⁶

7.538 In particular, according to the United States:

"In Mexico – HFCS (21.5), the Appellate Body observed that while, as a general matter, 'consultations are a pre-requisite to panel proceedings,' the requirement that parties engage in consultations 'is subject to certain limitations.'¹⁰²⁷ After reviewing the requirements of DSU Articles 4.3, 4.7 and 6.2, the Appellate Body concluded that 'the lack of prior consultations is not a defect that, by its very nature, deprives a panel of its authority to deal with and dispose of a matter.'¹⁰²⁸ While the Appellate Body did not decide whether this general rule was applicable to Article 21.5, it stated that 'even if the general obligations in the DSU regarding prior consultations were applicable' to Article 21.5 proceedings, 'non-compliance would not have the effect of depriving the panel of its authority to deal with and dispose of the matter.'^{1029,1030}

7.539 The United States added that "the only prerequisite explicitly set forth in Article 21.5 for proceedings under that provisions is that there be a 'disagreement' as to whether a Member has implemented the recommendations and rulings of the DSB."¹⁰³¹ The United States pointed out that "[s]uch a disagreement clearly exists in this case"¹⁰³², and it advances various textual, contextual, factual and policy arguments¹⁰³³ to support the point that its compliance complaint is not vitiated by the lack of formal consultations.

7.540 The Panel notes that the European Communities, in its second written submission, reiterated that "[i]n the present case, the United States did not submit a request for consultations prior to requesting the establishment of this Panel[, and that t]his would have sufficed for the Panel to dismiss the United States' complaint outright."¹⁰³⁴

7.541 The European Communities, however, also stated that:

"[A]s the United States points out in its second written submission, it appears that an agreement had been reached between the United States Trade Representative and the Commissioner for Trade of the European Communities expressly providing that the United States and the European Communities agree to dispense with consultations in the present case. This agreement was reached prior to the United States' request for the establishment of this Panel.

7.542 Given the explicit withdrawal by the European Communities of its preliminary objection concerning the lack of formal consultations in this dispute, the Panel refrains from assessing this preliminary objection, and turns to the substantive claims of the United States in this dispute.

G. THE UNITED STATES' CLAIM UNDER ARTICLE I OF THE GATT 1994

1. The United States' claim

7.543 The United States argues that the European Communities' import regime for bananas and, more specifically, the tariff quota, which allows a specified yearly volume of 775,000 mt of bananas of ACP origin to enter the European Communities' market duty-free, is inconsistent with Article I of the GATT 1994. The United States argues that through this regime the European Communities "applies a zero tariff rate to imports of bananas originating in ACP countries in a quantity up to 775,000 tons but does not accord the same duty-free treatment to imports of bananas originating in all other WTO Members".¹⁰³⁶ The United States adds that the preference granted to bananas of ACP origin is not covered by the waiver from Article I:1 of the GATT 1994, the ACP-EC Partnership Agreement waiver (Doha Waiver), which was granted to the European Communities by the WTO Ministerial Conference in Doha on 14 November 2001.¹⁰³⁷

7.544 In the United States' view:

"[T]he EC is providing an 'advantage, favour, privilege or immunity' to ACP Members by according ACP bananas duty-free access within the 775,000 ton tariff rate quota, while subjecting all MFN bananas to a 176 euros per ton duty. The duty-free treatment, amounting to a tariff savings of $4.33 per box, is only available to bananas of ACP origin."¹⁰³⁸

7.545 The United States adds that:

"[T]he measure by which the EC is granting the 'advantage, favour, privilege or immunity' to ACP Members is in relation to a 'customs dut[y]' within the meaning of Article I:1... [and] the EC is failing to accord the ACP tariff advantage 'immediately and unconditionally' to the 'like product' of other WTO Members. Although MFN bananas and ACP origin bananas are 'like product' imports, MFN bananas are being denied the same duty-free tariff rate quota treatment as bananas of ACP origin"¹⁰³⁹

7.546 The United States further states that the European Communities' preference for bananas of ACP origin is no longer covered by the Doha Waiver. In the United States' view:

"Under the express terms of the Annex [to the Doha Waiver, the Bananas Annex], the EC had two opportunities to propose a regime that met the conditions set out in the waiver. In 2005, pursuant to the Annex arbitration mechanism, two WTO arbitrators determined that the two proposals made by the EC did not 'result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN suppliers'. Therefore, as required by the fifth sentence in tiret 5 of the Annex to the Article I Waiver, the waiver 'cease[d] to apply upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime'. The 'new EC tariff regime' is the measure that is the subject of these proceedings, Regulation 1964, which entered into force on January 1, 2006."¹⁰⁴⁰

7.547 The United States concludes that:

"[T]he EC's Article I waiver expired on January 1, 2006, upon the implementation of the new EC banana measures. In the absence of this waiver, the EC's banana measures are maintained in violation of GATT Article I."¹⁰⁴¹

2. The European Communities' response

7.548 The European Communities has not invoked any arguments to contest the United States' claim that the preference granted to bananas of ACP origin would be inconsistent with Article I of the GATT 1994.¹⁰⁴²

7.549 The European Communities considers, however, that this preference is covered by a waiver from Article I:1 of the GATT 1994, the Doha Waiver, approved by the WTO Ministerial Conference in November 2001.¹⁰⁴³ The European Communities states that the duration of this waiver was made to correspond to the duration of the trade preferences granted by the European Communities pursuant to the Cotonou Agreement, i.e., until the end of 2007.¹⁰⁴⁴ According to the European Communities,

"[T]he continued application of the Doha waiver until the end of 2007 depends on whether the European Communities' import regime actually maintains total market access for MFN suppliers and not on the number of arbitrations lost for the European Communities before the new import regime was ever introduced."¹⁰⁴⁵

7.550 The European Communities also argues that, in accordance with the language contained in the Doha Waiver, this waiver would only cease to apply to bananas "upon entry into force of the new

EC tariff regime", which the European Communities considers to mean "the tariff regime that was presented to the Arbitrator and on which the Arbitrator made a pronouncement in its Award."¹⁰⁴⁶

7.551 In the European Communities' view:

"The European Communities has fully satisfied the condition for the continued application of the Doha waiver The European Communities introduced on January 1, 2006 a different import regime than the one analysed by the Arbitrator and the evidence derived from the operation of this import regime clearly establishes that it more than maintains total market access for MFN suppliers."¹⁰⁴⁷

7.552 In conclusion, the European Communities argues that, since the preference granted to imported bananas originating in ACP countries continues to be covered by the Doha Waiver, the Panel should reject the United States' claim under Article I:1 of the GATT 1994.¹⁰⁴⁸

3. Article I:1 of the GATT 1994

7.553 Under Article I:1 of the GATT 1994:

"With respect to customs duties and charges of any kind imposed on or in connection with importation or exportation or imposed on the international transfer of payments for imports or exports, and with respect to the method of levying such duties and charges, and with respect to all rules and formalities in connection with importation and exportation, and with respect to all matters referred to in paragraphs 2 and 4 of Article III ... any advantage, favour, privilege or immunity granted by any contracting party [Member] to any product originating in or destined for any other country shall be accorded immediately and unconditionally to the like product originating in or destined for the territories of all other contracting parties [Members]."¹⁰⁴⁹

7.554 In Canada – Autos, the Appellate Body explained the object and purpose of Article I:1 of the GATT 1994 as follows:

"Th[e] object and purpose [of Article I:1] is to prohibit discrimination among like products originating in or destined for different countries. The prohibition of discrimination in Article I:1 also serves as an incentive for concessions, negotiated reciprocally, to be extended to all other Members on an MFN basis."¹⁰⁵⁰

7.555 In Indonesia – Autos, referring to the Appellate Body's ruling in EC – Bananas III, the panel explained how to carry out the examination of a measure under Article I:1 of the GATT 1994:

"The Appellate Body, in Bananas III, confirmed that to establish a violation of Article I, there must be an advantage, of the type covered by Article I and which is not accorded unconditionally to all 'like products' of all WTO Members."¹⁰⁵¹

4. Panel's analysis

7.556 The Panel starts by recalling that the European Communities has chosen not to contest the United States' claim that the preference granted to bananas of ACP origin is inconsistent with Article I of the GATT 1994.

7.557 Following the above-mentioned approach set out by the Appellate Body in EC – Bananas III, as described by the panel in Indonesia – Autos, the Panel will nevertheless consider the arguments and evidence presented by the United States, in order to determine whether they are sufficient to establish a prima facie case of inconsistency with Article I of the GATT 1994. If this were determined to be the case, the Panel would then turn to assessing whether the European Communities has made a prima facie case that such inconsistency is covered by the Doha Waiver granted by the WTO Ministerial Conference on 14 November 2001.

(a) Is the ACP preference inconsistent with Article I:1 of the GATT 1994?

7.558 As noted above, in order to analyse a claim under Article I:1 of the GATT 1994, the Panel needs to determine first whether the measure challenged constitutes an advantage (or favour, privilege or immunity), of the type covered by Article I. If that were the case, the Panel would then turn to the issues of the likeness of products and the immediate and unconditional extension of such advantage.

(i) Whether the preference granted by the European Communities constitutes an advantage of the type covered by Article I of the GATT 1994

7.559 The following facts are not in dispute:

- (a) Under the terms of Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 of 24 November 2005, and in accordance with the European Communities' commitments under the ACP-EC Partnership Agreement, also known as the Cotonou Agreement, the European Communities allows a volume of 775,000 mt of bananas to enter the EC market free of tariff duties;
- (b) This duty-free treatment is only available to imports of bananas originating in ACP countries, and not to like bananas originating in other Members; and,
- (c) Imported bananas originating in other Members, as well as imports of bananas originating in ACP countries beyond the annual volumes prescribed in the tariff quota, are subject to a specific tariff of €176/mt.¹⁰⁵²

In other words, access eligibility to this preference depends on the origin of the bananas, as only ACP bananas qualify.

7.560 The Panel notes that the term "advantage", under Article I:1 of the GATT 1994, has traditionally been given a broad scope by GATT and WTO panels, as well as by the Appellate Body.¹⁰⁵³ In this regard, the Panel concludes that the duty-free treatment available to imports of bananas originating in ACP countries, solely because of their origin, constitutes an advantage, when compared to the ordinary treatment accorded to bananas of all other origins, which are subject to a specific tariff of €176/mt. This advantage applies regardless of the trade effects produced by the actual level of the MFN tariff, since access to the preference granted by the European Communities affects the competitive opportunities for bananas from MFN suppliers vis-à-vis those accorded to bananas originating in ACP countries.

¹⁰⁵² See tariff regime for imports of bananas to the EC, in Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 of 24 November 2005, Exhibit US-1. See also, United States' first written submission, paras. 2 and 23, and European Communities' first written submission, paras. 3 and 4.

¹⁰⁵³ "[A] broad definition has been given to the term 'advantage' in Article I:1 of the GATT 1994 by the panel in United States – Non-Rubber Footwear." Appellate Body Report on EC – Bananas III, para. 206, quoting GATT Panel Report on US – Non-Rubber Footwear, para. 6.9.

(ii) Whether the relevant products in this dispute are like products

7.561 As to whether the relevant products in this dispute are "like products", the Panel notes that the original panel in this dispute already "consider[ed] whether bananas from the EC, ACP countries, BFA countries and other third countries are 'like' products for purposes of the claims made in respect of Articles I, III, X and XIII of GATT"¹⁰⁵⁴, and found that:

"The factors commonly used in GATT practice to determine likeness, such as, for example, customs classification, end-use, and the properties, nature and quality of the product, all support a finding that bananas from these various sources should be treated as like products.¹⁰⁵⁵ Moreover, all parties and third parties to the dispute have proceeded in their legal reasoning on the assumption that all bananas are 'like' products in spite of any differences in quality, size or taste that may exist.

We find that bananas are 'like' products, for purposes of Article I, III, X, and XIII of GATT, irrespective of whether they originate in the EC, in ACP countries, in BFA countries or in other third countries."¹⁰⁵⁶

7.562 Similarly, in the original proceedings the Appellate Body stated that:

"As no participant disputes that all bananas are like products, the non-discrimination provisions apply to all imports of bananas, irrespective of whether and how a Member categorizes or subdivides these imports for administrative or other reasons."¹⁰⁵⁷

The Appellate Body concluded that "[i]n the present case, the non-discrimination obligations of the GATT 1994, specifically Articles I:1 and XIII¹⁰⁵⁸, apply fully to all imported bananas irrespective of their origin ..."¹⁰⁵⁹

7.563 The European Communities has not contested the United States' assertion that "MFN bananas and ACP origin bananas are 'like product' imports".¹⁰⁶⁰

7.564 Accordingly, and in the light of the relevant findings in earlier proceedings in this dispute, the Panel confirms that the relevant products in this dispute, fresh bananas (corresponding to tariff item 080300 12 or 080300 19) originating in ACP countries, are like products to fresh bananas originating in other WTO Members, including MFN suppliers.

(iii) Whether the preference granted by the European Communities is immediately and unconditionally extended

7.565 Finally, it is not contested between the parties that the preference granted by the European Communities to bananas of ACP origin is not extended to like bananas originating in the territories of any other WTO Members, including MFN suppliers.

7.566 As this advantage, in this case, is not extended to the like products of any other WTO Members, it is necessarily not extended "immediately", nor "unconditionally". This is notwithstanding the fact that the Panel notes that, in addition to the preferences granted to bananas of ACP origin under the Cotonou Agreement, the European Communities also grants autonomous duty-free access to its market to bananas originating in Least Developed Countries (LDCs) under the Everything But Arms (EBA) arrangement.¹⁰⁶¹

(iv) Preliminary conclusion regarding the United States' claim under Article I:1 of GATT 1994

7.567 For the reasons indicated above, the Panel finds that the United States has successfully made a prima facie case that the preference granted by the European Communities to an annual duty-free tariff quota of 775,000 mt of imported bananas originating in ACP countries constitutes an advantage for this category of bananas, which is not accorded unconditionally to like bananas originating in non-ACP WTO Members. The Panel therefore finds that this preference is inconsistent with Article I:1 of GATT 1994.

(b) Is the preference covered by a waiver?

7.568 Having found that the preference granted by the European Communities to imported bananas originating in ACP countries is inconsistent with Article I:1 of the GATT 1994, the Panel will now turn to the issue of whether this preference is covered by the Doha Waiver.

(i) Terms and conditions of the Doha Waiver and the Bananas Annex

7.569 In examining the terms of conditions contained in the Doha Waiver, the Panel recalls the words of the Appellate Body in its EC – Bananas III report:

"Although the WTO Agreement does not provide any specific rules on the interpretation of waivers, Article IX of the WTO Agreement and the Understanding in Respect of Waivers of Obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994, which provide requirements for granting and renewing waivers, stress the exceptional nature of waivers and subject waivers to strict disciplines. Thus, waivers should be interpreted with great care."¹⁰⁶²

7.570 While the Doha Waiver was valid until 31 December 2007¹⁰⁶³, with regard to bananas this was subject to the terms and conditions set out in the text of the Decision by which the WTO

Ministerial Conference adopted this waiver. Those terms and conditions include the additional provisions contained in the Annex to the Doha Waiver Decision (the Bananas Annex).¹⁰⁶⁴

7.571 Under the terms and conditions set out in the Bananas Annex, the European Communities was to announce a proposed rebinding of its tariff on bananas.¹⁰⁶⁵ Within a 60-day period following the announcement by the European Communities of its intentions concerning the rebinding of the tariff on bananas, any WTO Member exporting bananas on an MFN basis could request that an arbitrator determine "whether the envisaged rebinding of the EC tariff on bananas would result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers".¹⁰⁶⁶ Should the arbitrator find that this was not the case, according to the first sentence in the fifth tirt of the Bananas Annex, the European Communities was to "rectify the matter". In this case, the second sentence in the fifth tirt of the Bananas Annex provides that the European Communities was to enter into consultations with those interested parties that had requested the arbitration. According to the third sentence in the fifth tirt of the Bananas Annex, if, notwithstanding these consultations, no mutually satisfactory solution was agreed, the same arbitrator could be called upon again, this time to determine "whether the EC had rectified the matter". If the arbitrator found that the European Communities had failed to rectify the matter, the fifth sentence in the fifth tirt of the Bananas Annex provides that the waiver would "cease to apply to bananas upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime". Pursuant to the sixth sentence in the fifth tirt of the Bananas Annex, the entirety of this process had to be conducted in such a manner that the "negotiations and the arbitration procedures [should] be concluded before the entry into force of the new EC tariff only regime on 1 January 2006".¹⁰⁶⁷

7.572 Whether the Doha Waiver covers the European Communities' current banana import regime may accordingly depend on whether or not, under the Bananas Annex, the Doha Waiver expired with the introduction of the "new EC tariff regime" on 1 January 2006. Indeed, whether or not the Doha Waiver expired on this date is the main issue of contention between the parties to this dispute.

(ii) Uncontested facts

7.573 The following facts are uncontested:

- (a) On 31 January 2005, the European Communities notified the WTO Members that it intended to replace its tariff concessions on tariff item 0803 00 19 (bananas) included in the European Communities' Schedule CXL, with a bound duty of €230/mt. In its notification, the European Communities indicated that its communication constituted the announcement under the terms of the Bananas Annex to the Doha Waiver.¹⁰⁶⁸
- (b) In March and April 2005, a number of WTO Members requested arbitration, pursuant to the Bananas Annex.¹⁰⁶⁹

(iii) Main issue contested between the parties

7.574 As mentioned above, the main issue contested between the parties is whether, under the terms of the Bananas Annex, the Doha Waiver expired with regard to bananas on 1 January 2006. Each party suggests an alternative approach:

- (a) The United States argues that, with regard to bananas, the Doha Waiver expired automatically upon the entry into force of the new European Communities' tariff regime, inasmuch as two successive arbitrations determined that the European Communities' proposed rebinding of its tariff on bananas would not result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN suppliers; and
- (b) The European Communities argues instead that, with regard to bananas, the Doha Waiver would expire after all the procedural steps envisaged in the Bananas Annex had been completed, but only if the European Communities put into force an identical regime to that analysed by the arbitrator or a new regime that would also fail to result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN suppliers.

7.575 Specifically, the United States argues that:

"Under the express terms of the [Bananas] Annex, the EC had two opportunities to propose a regime that met the conditions set out in the waiver. In 2005, pursuant to the [Bananas] Annex arbitration mechanism, two WTO arbitrators determined that the two proposals made by the EC did not 'result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN suppliers'. Therefore, as required by the fifth sentence in tiret 5 of the Annex to the Article I Waiver, the waiver 'cease[d] to apply upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime'. The 'new EC tariff regime' is the measure that is the subject of these proceedings, Regulation 1964, which entered into force on January 1, 2006".¹⁰⁷⁵

7.576 The European Communities responds that:

"[T]he correct interpretation of the Doha waiver is that it would expire, with regard to bananas, only upon the entry into force of a European Communities' banana import regime that would not satisfy the standard of 'maintaining total market access for MFN countries'. Therefore, the continued application of the Doha waiver until the end of 2007 depends on whether the European Communities' import regime actually maintains total market access for MFN suppliers and not on the number of arbitrations lost for the European Communities before the new import regime was ever introduced. ...

Moreover, the Doha waiver provides that 'this waiver shall cease to apply to bananas upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime'. The European Communities considers that the phrase 'the new EC tariff regime' can only refer to the tariff regime that was presented to the Arbitrator and on which the Arbitrator made a pronouncement in its Award. In other words, the Doha waiver would cease to apply only if the European Communities implemented the import regime analysed by the Arbitrator and found not to satisfy the standard of the Doha waiver. If the European Communities introduced a different import regime than the one analysed by the Arbitrator and that import regime did indeed maintain the total market access of the ¹⁰⁷⁵ United States' first written submission, para. 35.

MFN suppliers, then the Doha waiver would continue to apply until the end of 2007."¹⁰⁷⁶

7.577 In other words, the United States asks the Panel to recognize the expiration of the Doha Waiver for bananas by noting the European Communities' fulfilment of the conditions identified in the Bananas Annex, namely, two negative arbitral awards and the introduction of a new EC tariff regime for bananas.¹⁰⁷⁷ Conversely, the European Communities argues that the Doha Waiver would have expired for bananas before the end of 2007 only if, in addition to those conditions, the European Communities' had put in place a regime for the importation of bananas that did not satisfy the standard of "maintaining total market access for MFN countries."¹⁰⁷⁸ The European Communities argues further that the expiration of the Doha Waiver would only occur if the bananas import regime implemented by the European Communities was also the same regime found by the arbitrator not to satisfy the standard of the Doha waiver, under the procedures in the Bananas Annex, rather than a different one.¹⁰⁷⁹

(iv) Conditions envisaged in the Bananas Annex

7.578 As noted above, the completion of the intermediate procedural steps envisaged in the terms and conditions set out in the Bananas Annex, i.e., the two negative arbitral awards, is an uncontested matter of fact. Indeed, two successive arbitrations, as envisaged respectively in the fourth and fifth tirets of the Bananas Annex, reached the conclusion that the European Communities' proposed rebinding of its tariff on bananas would not result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN suppliers.¹⁰⁸⁰ Furthermore, on 1 January 2006, the European Communities put into force a new regime for the importation of bananas, which was different from the one previously applied.¹⁰⁸¹

7.579 As also noted above, however, the European Communities argues that its current regime for the importation of bananas is not to be considered as "the new EC tariff regime" in the terms contained in the Bananas Annex. Additionally, the European Communities argues that its current regime for the importation of bananas results in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers, taking into account the European Communities' relevant commitments.

7.580 The European Communities' arguments in this regard raise two main questions:

- (a) Whether the European Communities' current regime for the importation of bananas is to be considered as "the new EC tariff regime" in the sense of the terms contained in the Bananas Annex; and
- (b) Whether, the Bananas Annex links the expiration of the Doha Waiver with regard to bananas to the mere entry into force of such new regime or whether, under the Bananas Annex, only a new tariff regime that does not at least maintain total market access would result in such expiration of the waiver.

¹⁰⁸⁰ See above, paras. 2.19 and 2.21.

¹⁰⁸¹ See above, para. 2.36.

7.581 The Panel will accordingly consider the European Communities' arguments in this regard.

(v) Is the European Communities' current bananas regime "the new EC tariff regime"?

7.582 The first issue raised by the European Communities is whether the European Communities' current regime for the importation of bananas is to be considered as "the new EC tariff regime" under the terms contained in the fifth sentence of the fifth tirt of the Bananas Annex.

7.583 Under the fifth tirt of the Bananas Annex:

"The second arbitration award will be notified to the General Council. If the EC has failed to rectify the matter, this waiver shall cease to apply to bananas upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime" (emphasis added).

7.584 As noted above, the European Communities argues that:

"[T]he phrase 'the new EC tariff regime' can only refer to the tariff regime that was presented to the Arbitrator and on which the Arbitrator made a pronouncement in its Award. In other words, the Doha waiver would cease to apply only if the European Communities implemented the import regime analysed by the Arbitrator and found not to satisfy the standard of the Doha waiver. If the European Communities introduced a different import regime than the one analysed by the Arbitrator and that import regime did indeed maintain the total market access of the MFN suppliers, then the Doha waiver would continue to apply until the end of 2007."¹⁰⁸²

7.585 The European Communities then concludes that it "has fully satisfied the condition for the continued application of the Doha waiver". First, because it "introduced on January 1, 2006 a different import regime than the one analysed by the Arbitrator". And secondly, because this new regime "maintained total market access for MFN suppliers".¹⁰⁸³

7.586 The Panel agrees with the European Communities that its current bananas import regime is different from the ones analysed by the arbitrators under the Bananas Annex. However, the Panel fails to see how the terms of the Bananas Annex support the conclusion drawn from that fact by the European Communities, namely that the European Communities has fully satisfied the condition for the continued application of the Doha Waiver. More specifically, the Panel disagrees with the European Communities that the phrase "the new EC tariff regime" can only refer to the tariff regime that was presented to the arbitrator and on which the arbitrator made a pronouncement in its award. Indeed, the terms of the Doha Waiver do not support the interpretation of the expression "the new EC tariff regime" proposed by the European Communities.

7.587 The ordinary meaning of the word "new" suggests something that is "[n]ot existing before; now made or existing for the first time ... Different from a thing previously existing, known, etc."¹⁰⁸⁴ Taking into account this ordinary meaning of the word "new", the expression the "new EC tariff regime" for bananas, in the context in which it is used in the fifth tirt of the Bananas Annex, should be read as any regime adopted by the European Communities that is different from the one previously in existence. This regime would be "new", regardless of whether it was the regime originally proposed by the European Communities and analysed by the arbitrator or a different one.

¹⁰⁸⁴ The New Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, fifth edition (Clarendon Press, 2002), Vol. II, p. 1914.

7.588 As noted by the United States, in the Bananas Annex, the measures examined by the Arbitrator are not referred to by the terms "the new tariff regime". Rather, the matter examined by the Arbitrator is described under the terms of the Bananas Annex, as "the envisaged rebinding of the EC tariff on bananas", "the rebinding", or to a determination of "whether the EC has rectified the matter".¹⁰⁸⁵

7.589 In any event, the European Communities' current tariff regime is clearly different from the one previously in existence. Furthermore, the sixth sentence of the fifth tirit of the Bananas Annex provides that "[t]he Article XXVIII negotiations and the arbitration procedures shall be concluded before the entry into force of the new EC tariff only regime on 1 January 2006" (emphasis added). The European Communities' current banana import regime entered into force exactly on that date.

7.590 Consequently, the Panel is not persuaded that the expression "the new EC tariff regime" used in the fifth sentence of the fifth tirit of the Bananas Annex does not apply to the bananas import regime instituted by the European Communities from 1 January 2006, through Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005.

(vi) Is the maintenance of total market access for MFN banana suppliers a relevant consideration for extending the duration of the Doha Waiver with regard to bananas?

7.591 The Panel now turns to the second question raised by the European Communities, namely, whether the European Communities' current regime for the importation of bananas results in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers, taking into account the relevant EC commitments. In order to address this argument, however, the Panel needs first to verify whether, under the terms set out in the Bananas Annex, the Panel has the authority and is required to determine if the European Communities' current regime for the importation of bananas results in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers.

7.592 If the Panel were to verify that, under the terms set out in the Bananas Annex, it has the authority to make such a finding and that it is required to do so and if the Panel further found that, indeed, the European Communities' current regime for the importation of bananas results in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers, the question would then be whether such a determination implies that the Doha Waiver, as it applies to bananas, has remained in force.

7.593 The Panel notes in this regard the European Communities' argument that:

"[T]he text of the Doha waiver shows that the 'test' for the termination of the waiver was whether the European Communities would introduce an import regime that maintains the total market access of MFN suppliers and not whether the Arbitration Awards would be negative for the European Communities."¹⁰⁸⁶

7.594 However, this argument is not persuasive. The text of the fifth tirit of the Bananas Annex is clear enough:

"If the arbitrator determines that the rebinding would not result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN suppliers, the EC shall rectify the matter. Within 10 days of the notification of the arbitration award to the General Council, the EC will enter into consultations with those interested parties that requested the arbitration. In the absence of a mutually satisfactory solution, the same arbitrator will be asked to determine ... whether the EC has rectified the matter. The second arbitration award will be notified to the General Council. If the EC has failed to rectify the matter, this waiver shall cease to apply to bananas upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime" (emphasis added).

¹⁰⁸⁵ See United States' response to panel question No. 29, para. 55.

7.595 In our view, the expression "If the EC has failed to rectify the matter, this waiver shall cease to apply" used in the last full sentence of the fifth tirt cannot be read in isolation from the expression "In the absence of a mutually satisfactory solution, the same arbitrator will be asked to determine ... whether the EC has rectified the matter." The Panel agrees in this regard with the United States' statement that:

"The phrase '[i]f the EC has failed to rectify the matter' [at the beginning of the fifth sentence in tirt 5 of the Bananas Annex], can only refer back to the determination required to be made by the [second] arbitrator pursuant to the third sentence [of the same tirt]." ¹⁰⁸⁷

7.596 Under the terms contained in the Bananas Annex, the authority to determine whether the European Communities' proposed regime for the importation of bananas would result "in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers" fell on the arbitrator and not on any other WTO body.

7.597 The Bananas Annex contemplated two successive rounds of examination. Through the first round, the arbitrator would examine the European Communities' original proposed rebinding of the EC tariff on bananas to determine whether this proposed rebinding would maintain total market access for MFN banana suppliers. Through the second round of examination, if such were the case, the arbitrator would examine the revised proposal, to determine whether it had rectified the matter (i.e., if it would result in maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers, to the extent that the previous proposal had failed such test).

7.598 The terms contained in the Bananas Annex do not envisage any further examination after the second arbitral award. In particular, no third round of examination is provided for in the Bananas Annex. The terms of reference of this compliance Panel are to examine the consistency of the European Communities' bananas import regime with the WTO agreements and not to review the findings made by the arbitrator.

7.599 The European Communities argues that the duration of the Doha Waiver was not linked to the number of arbitrations lost by the European Communities before the new import regime was introduced, but rather it depended on whether the new import regime actually maintains total market access for MFN suppliers. ¹⁰⁸⁸ In the European Communities' view:

"[T]he continued application of the Doha waiver until the end of 2007 depends on whether the European Communities' import regime actually maintains total market access for MFN suppliers and not on the number of arbitrations lost for the European Communities before the new import regime was ever introduced." ¹⁰⁸⁹

7.600 The Panel concurs with the statement by a number of the third parties that any determination regarding the continued existence of the Doha waiver should not be based on purely "formalistic arguments".¹⁰⁹⁰ However, under the terms of the Bananas Annex, it was the arbitrator, and not a dispute settlement compliance panel, that had the authority to conduct a substantive analysis in order to determine whether the European Communities' proposed regime for the importation of bananas would result in maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers. Moreover, under the terms of the Bananas Annex, it was the European Communities that had the burden to either propose a rebinding of its tariff on bananas that would result in maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers or, if it had failed to do so through its original proposal, to rectify the matter to the satisfaction of the same arbitrator through a second examination.

¹⁰⁸⁸ European Communities' first written submission, para. 54.

7.601 The European Communities raises a hypothetical question concerning subsequent action taken by the European Communities in the event that the arbitrator had issued a favourable ruling with respect to the European Communities' proposed regime for the importation of bananas. The European Communities asks the Panel to consider what would have happened then if (i) the European Communities had then implemented a different system from that examined by the arbitrator or, (ii) the operation of the system actually implemented by the European Communities did not in fact maintain market access for bananas.¹⁰⁹¹ This argument does not change the terms actually contained in the Bananas Annex. Even if the arbitrator had made such a finding and the European Communities later implemented a different system from that examined by the arbitrator, there is nothing in the Bananas Annex that would have prevented any WTO Member from having recourse to dispute settlement proceedings. Through such proceedings, a panel could have been asked to determine whether in those circumstances the system ultimately imposed by the European Communities was inconsistent with the WTO agreements and whether the Doha Waiver was still in effect.

7.602 It is true that, since the arbitrator had to base its findings on a proposed regime, the actual operation of such regime in the future could result in effects on the bananas market different from those estimated by the arbitrator. This may happen in any prospective determination, such as the one that, under the terms of the Bananas Annex, the arbitrator was to conduct regarding the European Communities' proposed regime. The arbitrator based its determination on the terms of the European Communities' proposal, including through the use of theoretical analyses and arithmetic calculations, and availing itself of the best available information at the time. Even if this was to be regarded as a shortcoming of the rules contained in the Bananas Annex, it would not change the terms of that text, nor would it mean the insertion of new additional steps that were not provided for or even intended by the WTO membership.

7.603 The Panel also notes that, under the terms contained in the Bananas Annex, the authority to determine whether the European Communities' proposed regime for the importation of bananas would result "in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers" for the purpose of the waiver fell on the arbitrator. Such authority was to be exercised, if needed, through two successive rounds of arbitration envisaged in the Bananas Annex. Accordingly, the issue could not be decided by a WTO dispute settlement compliance panel, or by any other WTO body.

7.604 The Panel notes the European Communities' arguments that its current bananas import regime would maintain total market access for MFN suppliers.¹⁰⁹² However, in view of the preceding analysis, after the completion of the two rounds of arbitration and the entry into force of a new bananas import regime, the maintenance of total market access for MFN banana suppliers is not a relevant consideration for maintaining the application of the Doha Waiver with regard to bananas beyond 1 January 2006. The opportunity for the European Communities to demonstrate that its proposed tariff only regime would maintain total market access for MFN banana suppliers, for the purpose of maintaining the Doha waiver, was to be exercised through the arbitration proceedings envisaged in the Bananas Annex.

7.605 In consequence, the Panel finds that it is not within its terms of reference to determine whether the European Communities' current regime for the importation of bananas results in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers, for the purposes provided in the Bananas Annex.

(vii) Conclusion regarding the Doha Waiver

7.606 For the reasons indicated above, with the completion of the different intermediate procedural steps envisaged in the terms and conditions set out in the Bananas Annex, and upon the entry into force of the bananas import regime instituted by the European Communities through Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005, the Doha Waiver cannot extend to the EC banana regime introduced from 1 January 2006. The European Communities has failed to make a prima facie case that, since the entry into force of the new EC tariff regime, on 1 January 2006, a waiver from Article I:1 of GATT 1994 has been in force to cover the preference granted by the European Communities to imported bananas originating in ACP countries.

5. Conclusion

7.607 For the reasons indicated in this section, the Panel finds that the preference granted by the European Communities to an annual duty-free tariff quota of 775,000 mt of imported bananas originating in ACP countries constitutes an advantage for this category of bananas, which is not accorded to like bananas originating in non-ACP WTO Members. The Panel therefore finds that this preference is inconsistent with Article I:1 of GATT 1994. The Panel further finds that the European Communities has failed to demonstrate the existence of a waiver from Article I:1 of GATT 1994 to cover such preference.

H. THE UNITED STATES' CLAIM UNDER ARTICLE XIII OF THE GATT 1994

1. Summary of parties' arguments

(a) The United States' claim

7.608 The United States has requested the Panel to find that the European Communities' current bananas import regime is inconsistent with paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article XIII of the GATT 1994.¹⁰⁹³

7.609 The United States argues that:

"There can be no doubt that Article XIII [of the GATT 1994] applies with respect to the current [bananas] tariff rate quota regime, just as it did with respect to the EC's prior banana import regimes."¹⁰⁹⁴

¹⁰⁹³ United States' first written submission, paras. 3, 27, 48 and 49. See also United States' second written submission, para. 96.

¹⁰⁹⁴ United States' first written submission, para. 38.

7.610 In the United States' view:

"The EC's 775,000 ton limit on duty-free access for ACP bananas is also a tariff quota within the meaning of Article XIII. As such, the EC's tariff quota is subject to the non-discrimination requirements of Article XIII."¹⁰⁹⁵

7.611 In that respect, the United States recalls the words of the compliance panel in EC – Bananas III (Article 21.5 – Ecuador):

"Article XIII:5 provides that the provisions of Article XIII apply to 'tariff quotas'. The European Communities essentially argues that the amount of 857,700 tonnes for traditional imports from ACP States constitutes an upper limit on a tariff preference and is not a tariff quota subject to Article XIII. However, by definition, a tariff quota is a quantitative limit on the availability of a specific tariff rate. Thus, Article XIII applies to the 857,700 tonne limit."^{1096,1097}

7.612 The United States adds that, although the European Communities was granted a waiver of its obligations under Article XIII by the WTO Ministerial Conference in November 2001¹⁰⁹⁸, this waiver expired in accordance with its terms on December 31, 2005.¹⁰⁹⁹ Accordingly, "[t]he EC has no Article XIII waiver currently in force".¹¹⁰⁰

7.613 According to the United States:

"In disregard of GATT Article XIII:1 and the EC – Bananas III findings, the EC has chosen to maintain a tariff rate quota under which MFN-origin bananas are neither 'treated equally' nor restricted 'similarly' to 'like' ACP-origin bananas. ACP bananas receive preferential, protected access under the EC's banana regime, entering the EC market duty-free up to a quantity of 775,000 tons. No MFN supplier receives any such tariff rate quota treatment. By using a tariff rate quota on ACP imports, and an entirely different means to restrict MFN imports, the EC is preventing 'like' imports from being 'treated equally, irrespective of origin' in violation of GATT Article XIII:1."¹¹⁰¹

7.614 The United States adds that:

"The EC's exclusive 775,000 ton ACP tariff rate quota fails to distribute any share whatsoever to MFN suppliers, let alone a share they would have expected to obtain in the absence of restrictions. This is so even though many of the excluded MFN suppliers are principal or substantial suppliers of bananas to the EC, and leading exporters of bananas to the world market. Therefore, the ACP tariff rate quota established through Regulation 1964, like prior ACP tariff rate quotas, is inconsistent with Article XIII:2.¹¹⁰²

(b) The European Communities' response

7.615 The European Communities has responded that the preference granted to ACP bananas does not violate Article XIII of the GATT 1994.¹¹⁰³

7.616 In the European Communities' view:

"[B]anana imports from Latin American and other MFN suppliers are not subject to any quantitative restriction: they are simply subject to a tariff. Therefore, the conditions for the application of GATT Article XIII are not satisfied, i.e., there is no quantitative restriction imposed on one WTO Member that it is not imposed on all other countries."¹¹⁰⁴

7.617 The European Communities also states that:

"GATT Article XIII cannot be used as a substitute for GATT Article I:1 wherever a tariff quota exists. GATT Article XIII does not oblige the European Communities to extend to Latin American countries the tariff preference it grants to the ACP countries simply because this tariff preference is subject to a 'cap'. Article XIII does not cover cases of tariff discrimination: this is the role of GATT Article I:1."¹¹⁰⁵

7.618 In other words:

"[T]he anti-discrimination rules of Article XIII are aimed at quantitative discrimination, while tariff discrimination is the exclusive preserve of Article I. Offering a tariff preference to some countries subject to a quantitative "cap" may be an issue that needs to be analysed under Article I, but not under Article XIII."¹¹⁰⁶

7.619 The European Communities adds that:

"There is extensive GATT and WTO practice to support the view that Members do not regard exclusion from a tariff quota as a matter governed by Article XIII. This practice is to be found in the waivers that have been granted for various preferential schemes. With few exceptions (such as the 2001 waiver respecting bananas) these waivers are limited to Article I, and yet the preferences granted under these waivers regularly include tariff quotas for the beneficiary countries only."¹¹⁰⁷

7.620 According to the European Communities, "the facts in the current proceedings are not the same as those that faced the [EC – Bananas III] Panel and Appellate Body in 1997".¹¹⁰⁸ The European Communities adds that its current bananas import regime is also "very different" to "the 2002-2005 banana import regime".¹¹⁰⁹

"The main difference was that the 2002-2005 import regime was an 'all-tariff-quota' regime, where virtually all imports were made pursuant to tariff quotas with different terms, awarded to different groups of countries and administered in different ways. That import regime, which has been qualified as the equivalent of a 'quota system', was not necessarily fully compatible with the provisions of Article XIII of the GATT. For this reason, the United States and the European Communities agreed that a WTO waiver from the application of Article XIII was necessary."¹¹¹⁰

7.621 In view of the characteristics of its current bananas import regime, the European Communities argues that an "Article XIII waiver is not relevant for the current proceedings. The current [bananas] import regime of the European Communities is not an 'all-tariff-quota' system and cannot be qualified as the equivalent of a 'quota system'. There is a single tariff imposed on all banana imports, with the exception of the preference granted to the Cotonou beneficiary countries which is limited by a 'cap'."¹¹¹¹

7.622 The European Communities requests the Panel to reject the United States' arguments concerning Article XIII in their entirety.¹¹¹²

2. Order of analysis

7.623 In order to consider the United States' claim under Articles XIII:1 and 2 of the GATT 1994, the Panel will begin by addressing the European Communities' systemic arguments concerning the interrelation of Articles I and XIII of the GATT 1994 and the latter's applicability to the European Communities' bananas import regime, as well as the United States' response to those arguments. If the European Communities' arguments in that context were rejected, the Panel would then address the United States' substantive claim under both paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article XIII. In the alternative, there would be no need to assess the United States' substantive claim under Article XIII:1 and 2 of the GATT 1994.

3. The applicability of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 to the European Communities' bananas import regime

(a) The European Communities' arguments

7.624 As noted above, the European Communities argues that Article XIII of the GATT 1994 is not applicable to the tariff preference granted by the European Communities to bananas from ACP countries. In the European Communities' view, "Article XIII does not cover cases of tariff discrimination: this is the role of GATT Article I:1."¹¹¹³ The European Communities considers that Article XIII of the GATT 1994 does not cover the case when some WTO Members have been included in a tariff quota and others have not, but "applies only to the kinds of treatment accorded to the various Members who are included in the tariff quota".¹¹¹⁴ The European Communities states that:

"The justification for this interpretation lies to some extent in the ordinary meaning of the terms of Article XIII, but more particularly in their context (as well as the 'subsequent practice' of Members) and in the object and purposes of the GATT."¹¹¹⁵

7.625 The European Communities argues that, by looking at their "ordinary meaning":

"[T]he terms of Article XIII [of the GATT 1994], taken in isolation, are open to either of the interpretations proposed in this dispute, but ... they fit more easily into the one put forward by the European Communities".¹¹¹⁶

7.626 With respect to such "ordinary meaning", the European Communities argues first that "there is something to be gained by looking closely" at the terms used in Article XIII:5 of the GATT 1994, by which the provisions of Article XIII "shall apply" to tariff quotas. The European Communities considers in this respect that:

"The phrase 'shall apply to any tariff quota instituted or maintained by an contracting party', although by no means definitively excluding the interpretation proposed by the United States, seems nevertheless to sit more easily with that which the European Communities has maintained. Thus, if the drafters had wished to give Article XIII the broader meaning favoured by the United States they would have most likely used a phrase such as Article XIII shall apply to the operation of tariff quotas etc. Instead they chose to speak of the tariff quota itself, as though it was this arrangement alone that was concerning them."¹¹¹⁷

7.627 Turning to the ordinary meaning of the terms used in Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994, the European Communities argues that:

"The language of this paragraph, while again not being in itself decisive, gives a further weight to the European Communities' interpretation, because it commences with the phrase 'In applying import restrictions to any product'. Applying this to tariff quotas the phrase could be taken to read 'In applying tariff quotas to any product'. Once again this directs attention at the tariff quotas themselves rather than at their relationship with another import regime (which is the issue in the current dispute)."¹¹¹⁸

7.628 The European Communities then argues that the principal context of the terms in Article XIII is provided by the GATT 1994, which in its view:

"[H]as obvious implications for the interpretation of Article XIII because of the way in which [the GATT] maintains a fundamental distinction between tariff and non-tariff measures. Thus, tariffs are regulated by Article I and Article II, whereas non-tariff measures are governed by Article XI and Article XIII. Discrimination in tariffs is dealt with by Article I and in non-tariff measures by Article XIII. Article XI forbids non-tariff measures whereas tariffs although not forbidden, are placed within the limits set in Members' schedules by Article II. The European Communities has not found any instance where the same rule has been treated as both a tariff and a non-tariff measure. Even where both elements are present they have been separated for the purpose of applying GATT articles. Thus, in the first Article 21.5 case brought by Ecuador in respect of the European Communities' 1998 banana regime the panel distinguished between the quantitative elements, to which it applied Article XIII, and the tariff discrimination elements, to which it applied Article I¹¹¹⁹.¹¹²⁰

7.629 As an additional note related to the context in which the terms are used in Article XIII of the GATT 1994, the European Communities argues that:

"All of the rules spelt out in the subparagraphs of paragraph [XIII:2] concern the distribution of tariff quotas. There is no reference whatsoever to the relationship between tariff quotas and different import regimes applied to other products. Thus, this context suggests that the rules in Article XIII concern only the internal quantitative distribution of tariff quotas."¹¹²¹

7.630 The European Communities notes finally that:

"There is extensive GATT and WTO practice to support the view that Members do not regard exclusion from a tariff quota as a matter governed by Article XIII. This practice is to be found in the waivers that have been granted for various preferential schemes. With few exceptions (such as the 2001 waiver respecting bananas) these waivers are limited to Article I, and yet the preferences granted under these waivers regularly include tariff quotas for the beneficiary countries only."¹¹²²

7.631 In the European Communities' view:

"[T]here could hardly be clearer examples of such 'subsequent practice' [by the WTO Members in interpreting Article XIII]. The practice existed at two levels, firstly in the form of the waiver decisions taken by the CONTRACTING PARTIES, and secondly in the form of the measures taken by GATT and WTO Members under the authorization provided by those decisions. The first level of practice was necessarily 'concordant' since it took the form of mutual action by all GATT members. For the same reason it was also necessarily 'common'. Finally, the line of decisions was consistent, and there has been no contrary GATT or WTO practice. Furthermore, the practice has involved taking a particular stance on the interpretation of the GATT. All the decisions indicate that Members assumed that the grant of a tariff quota for the benefit of certain countries to the exclusion of other Members would be an infringement of Article I, but not of other GATT obligations, such as Article XIII."¹¹²³

¹¹²² European Communities' second written submission, para. 75.

¹¹²³ Ibid., para. 84. See also written version of European Communities' opening statement during substantive meeting with the parties and third parties, paras. 15-25.

7.632 Turning to the issue of the "object and purpose of the agreement", the European Communities adds that "there are a number of considerations that confirm the interpretation put forward by the European Communities regarding the application of Article XIII to tariff quotas".¹¹²⁴ In its view:

"[T]he objective of Article XIII and in particular of paragraph 2 is to achieve particular quantitative distributions of trade. In the case of quotas it is evident that the appropriate distribution was to be achieved by direct quantitative measures, in the last resort by allocating specific quantities to individual exporting countries. When, as required by paragraph 5 [of Article XIII], these rules are applied to tariff quotas a corresponding distribution can be achieved by allocating specific quantities of the tariff quota. The notion that such a distribution could be achieved by setting different tariff levels for the various exporting countries is economic nonsense. Consequently it is not plausible that the drafters of Article XIII would have envisaged using paragraph 2 to achieve such a goal."¹¹²⁵

7.633 The European Communities argues that "[c]onsideration of the objects and purposes of GATT also leads to a rejection of the interpretation proposed by the United States for paragraph 1 of Article XIII".¹¹²⁶ In the European Communities' view, the interpretation proposed by the United States "would lead to non-Members of the WTO being accorded rights under the GATT".¹¹²⁷

"Such a situation would arise because the United States' interpretation would require paragraph 1 to be read as though it said that no tariff quota could be applied to ACP Members unless a similar tariff quota were accorded to all other exporting (or importing) countries. Unlike a 'prohibition or restriction', a tariff quota can be beneficial rather than prejudicial to the country to which it is accorded., and since the condition in paragraph 1 applies to imports from (or exports to) all third countries, and not merely those that are WTO Members, under the United States' interpretation the benefit of a tariff quota could not be given to a Member unless it was also accorded to all non-Members. Thus, adopting this interpretation one could have a situation where a Member which wished to let all other Members share in a tariff quota could not do so unless it also allowed non-Members a similar share. In the European Communities' view such an outcome is contrary to the object and purpose of GATT."¹¹²⁸

(b) The United States' arguments

7.634 The United States begins by noting the European Communities' argument that:

"[T]he measures contained in EC Regulation 1964 are not subject to the requirements of GATT Article XIII because the ACP tariff quota is not a 'quantitative restriction,' but rather a 'cap' on a tariff preference.¹¹²⁹ Indeed, the EC goes so far as to declare that it 'subjects all banana imports to a single tariff of 176 euro per ton. There are no other tariffs and there are no quantitative restrictions imposed on the importation of bananas.'^{1130,1131}

¹¹³¹ United States' second written submission, para. 82.

7.635 In response, the United States contends that:

"The EC's description of its measure defies reality. EC Regulation 1964, the measure subject to this proceeding, itself refers to a 'tariff rate quota for bananas originating in ACP countries.' In the sixth whereas clause EC Regulation 1964 states that 'a tariff rate quota for bananas originating in ACP countries should also be opened.'¹¹³² In addition, Article 1.2 states that 'an autonomous tariff quota of 775,000 tonnes per net weight subject to a zero-duty rate shall be opened for imports of bananas ... originating in ACP countries.'^{1133,1134}

7.636 The United States argues further that:

"The [European Communities] made the same argument in the first Article 21.5 proceeding brought by Ecuador and in the Article 22.6 proceeding with the United States with respect to the then 857,700 ton tariff rate quota for ACP origin bananas. The panel and arbitrator each rejected the EC's argument, explaining that 'a tariff quota is a quantitative limit on the availability of a specific tariff rate' and therefore, Article XIII applied to the 857,700 ton limit.¹¹³⁵ The 775,000 ton limit on the duty-free rate reserved for ACP countries is likewise a tariff rate quota subject to Article XIII."¹¹³⁶

7.637 The United States adds that:

"As explained by the EC – Bananas III panel, Article XIII:1 establishes that no import restrictions can be applied to one Member's products unless the importation of like products from other Members is similarly restricted.¹¹³⁷ The panel also explained that 'a Member may not restrict imports from some Members using one means and restrict them from another using another means.'¹¹³⁸ The Appellate Body confirmed that the 'essence' of Article XIII 'is that like products should be treated equally, irrespective of origin.'^{1139,1140}

7.638 The United States notes further that:

"Article XIII prohibits the EC from establishing a duty-free tariff rate quota for some Members, but not others, and from denying equal treatment to banana imports of all origins. This interpretation of Article XIII prevents Members from circumventing their basic GATT non-discrimination obligations, and is equally as applicable in this instance as it was ten years ago."¹¹⁴¹

7.639 For these reasons, the United States concludes that:

"[I]t is clear that the EC's ACP-exclusive tariff quota is subject to the requirements of GATT Article XIII. It is also undisputed that the EC's waiver from its obligations under Article XIII expired on December 31, 2005. Thus, as demonstrated in the US First Written Submission, because the EC uses a tariff rate quota on ACP imports and an entirely different means to restrict MFN imports, the EC is preventing 'like' imports from being 'treated equally, irrespective of origin' in breach of GATT Article XIII:1.

Moreover, because the EC fails to distribute any share whatsoever of its ACP tariff quota to MFN suppliers, let alone a share they would have expected to obtain in the absence of restrictions, it maintains its tariff quota in breach of GATT Article XIII:2 ... [T]he EC chose to allot no share whatsoever to non-ACP suppliers with a substantial interest and no share to non-ACP suppliers with no substantial interest. Thus, the EC breaches its obligations under GATT Article XIII:2 because it failed to 'similarly prohibit or restrict' those non-ACP bananas."¹¹⁴²

(c) Panel's analysis

(i) Relevance of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 to tariff quotas in agriculture

7.640 At the outset, the Panel notes that Article XIII was originally drafted in the GATT 1947 to address the administration of quantitative restrictions, in particular country quotas and any other quotas. As a result of the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations, quantitative restrictions in agriculture were to be abolished and tariffed. As the panel on Turkey – Textiles stated in the context of Articles XI and XIII of the GATT 1994:

"The prohibition on the use of quantitative restrictions forms one of the cornerstones of the GATT system. A basic principle of the GATT system is that tariffs are the preferred and acceptable form of protection. Tariffs, to be reduced through reciprocal concessions, ought to be applied in a non-discriminatory manner independent of the origin of the goods (the 'most-favoured-nation' (MFN) clause). ... The prohibition against quantitative restrictions is a reflection that tariffs are GATT's border protection 'of choice'. Quantitative restrictions impose absolute limits on imports, while tariffs do not. In contrast to MFN tariffs which permit the most efficient competitor to supply imports, quantitative restrictions usually have a trade distorting effect, their allocation can be problematic and their administration may not be transparent ...

*Participants in the Uruguay Round recognized the overall detrimental effects of non-tariff border restrictions (whether applied to imports or exports) and the need to favour more transparent price-based, i.e. tariff-based, measures; to this end they devised mechanisms to phase-out quantitative restrictions in ... agriculture This recognition is reflected in ... the Agreement on Agriculture where quantitative restrictions were eliminated*¹¹⁴³ ... "¹¹⁴⁴ (emphasis added).

¹¹⁴³ (footnote original) Under the Agreement on Agriculture, notwithstanding the fact that contracting parties, for over 48 years, had been relying a great deal on import restrictions and other non-tariff measures, the use of quantitative restrictions and other non-tariff measures was prohibited and Members had to proceed to a "tariffication" exercise to transform quantitative restrictions into tariff based measures.

7.641 Notwithstanding tariffication, the text of Article XIII of the GATT 1947, including its title, "Non-discriminatory Administration of Quantitative Restrictions", has not been modified in the Uruguay Round. The Panel reads that title as being relevant to maintaining a close link with Article XI of the GATT 1994, entitled "General Elimination of Quantitative Restrictions". The above-mentioned panel on Turkey – Textiles stated that:

"The wording of Articles XI and XIII is clear. Article XI provides that as a general rule (we note the wording of the title of Article XI: "General Elimination of Quantitative Restrictions"), WTO Members shall not use quantitative restrictions against imports or exports.

Article XIII provides that if and when quantitative restrictions are allowed by the GATT/WTO, they must, in addition, be imposed on a non-discriminatory basis."¹¹⁴⁵

7.642 Following tariffication, Article XIII of the GATT 1994 remains relevant for the agricultural sector. As the Appellate Body stated earlier in this dispute, "[i]f the negotiators had intended to permit Members to act inconsistently with Article XIII of the GATT 1994 [by virtue of the provisions of the Agreement on Agriculture], they would have said so explicitly."¹¹⁴⁶ In particular, Article XIII of the GATT 1994 is relevant to one of the few remaining permissible practices with a quantitative dimension in agriculture: tariff quotas. In this context, this Panel notes that the original panel requested by Ecuador in this dispute found, similarly to the panel on Turkey – Textiles, that:

"The wording of Article XIII is clear. If quantitative restrictions are used (as an exception to the general ban on their use in Article XI), they are to be used in the least trade-distorting manner possible."¹¹⁴⁷

7.643 The original panel requested by Ecuador in this dispute added that:

"In this case, we are concerned with tariff quotas, which are permitted under GATT rules, and not quantitative restrictions per se. However, Article XIII:5 makes it clear, and the parties agree, that Article XIII applies to the administration of tariff quotas. ... In interpreting the terms of Article XIII, it is important to keep their context in mind. Article XIII is basically a provision relating to the administration of restrictions authorized as exceptions to one of the most basic GATT provisions – the general ban on quotas and other non-tariff restrictions contained in Article XI."¹¹⁴⁸

(ii) Analysis of Article XIII:5 of the GATT 1994

7.644 The analysis of the European Communities' arguments concerning the interrelation of Articles I and XIII of the GATT 1994, and the applicability of the latter to the EC banana import regime necessarily involves Article XIII:5 of the GATT 1994, which provides that "[t]he provisions of this Article shall apply to any tariff quota instituted or maintained by any contracting party [WTO Member], and, in so far as applicable, the principles of this Article shall also extend to export restrictions." As mentioned earlier, the European Communities does not contest that, in principle, by virtue of Article XIII:5, Article XIII is applicable to tariff quotas.¹¹⁴⁹

7.645 First, the Panel looks at the language of Article XIII:5 of the GATT 1994. The words "any" (both before the terms "tariff quota" and "contracting party") and "shall" in Article XIII:5 underscore the absolute and categorical nature of the application of "the provisions of ... Article [XIII]" to tariff quotas. The Panel notes also that Article XIII:5 uses the term "any tariff quota instituted or maintained by any [Member]" in the singular. The Panel reads this to mean that Article XIII of the GATT 1994 is also applicable to one single tariff quota, and that this is so irrespective of whether that single tariff quota is part of an import regime with more tariff quotas or is part of an import regime that comprises only one tariff quota.

7.646 In an import regime containing a tariff quota with a preferential in-quota duty (whether or not a zero duty) for some Members, and a higher out-of-quota MFN duty, the in- and out-of-quota duties are two facets of the same preferential tariff quota. As the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador in this dispute stated, "a tariff quota is a quantitative limit on the availability of a specific tariff rate".¹¹⁵⁰ Citing that statement, the panel on US – Line Pipe established that "[it] see[s] no reason to disagree with the United States that a tariff quota involves the '[a]pplication of a higher tariff rate to imported goods after a specified quantity of the item has entered the country at a lower prevailing rate'."¹¹⁵¹ (footnote omitted)

7.647 Neither of the parties contest that the European Communities has, under its current banana import regime introduced on 1 January 2006, a preferential zero-duty tariff quota of 775,000 mt per annum reserved for ACP countries, combined with an MFN applied duty of 176 €/mt. The tariff quota represents a quantitative limit on the preference to ACP countries because any ACP banana imports to the European Communities exceeding that quantitative limit are subject to the out-of-quota MFN duty.

7.648 Thus, the European Communities' current banana import regime is a tariff-quota-based import regime, and the in- and out-of-quota duties are inherent parts of that regime. Accordingly, and in the light of Article XIII:5 of the GATT 1994, in principle, Article XIII of the GATT 1994 applies to all aspects of a preferential tariff quota, including the out-of-quota duty.

(iii) Interrelation of Articles I and XIII of the GATT 1994

7.649 The European Communities argues that the applicability of Article I of the GATT 1994 to tariff discrimination prevents the applicability of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 to the European Communities' current bananas import regime.¹¹⁵²

7.650 Article I of the GATT 1994 is entitled "General Most-Favoured-Nation Treatment". Paragraph 1 of Article I stipulates that:

"With respect to customs duties and charges of any kind imposed on or in connection with importation or exportation or imposed on the international transfer of payments for imports or exports, and with respect to the method of levying such duties and charges, and with respect to all rules and formalities in connection with importation and exportation, and with respect to all matters referred to in paragraphs 2 and 4 of Article III, any advantage, favour, privilege or immunity granted by any contracting party [WTO Member] to any product originating in or destined for any other country shall be accorded immediately and unconditionally to the like product originating in or destined for the territories of all other contracting parties [WTO Members]."

7.651 The Panel notes that Members' measures must comply with all relevant provisions of the covered agreements. In regard to the applicability of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 in the specific context of agriculture, as mentioned above, the Appellate Body found earlier in this dispute that "[i]f the negotiators had intended to permit Members to act inconsistently with Article XIII of the GATT 1994 [by virtue of the provisions of the Agreement on Agriculture], they would have said so explicitly."¹¹⁵³

7.652 As the European Communities argues, Article I of the GATT 1994 covers tariff discrimination.¹¹⁵⁴ As a result, Article I does not address the quantitative element of the European Communities' current bananas import regime, which is covered by Article XIII of the GATT 1994. As elaborated further below¹¹⁵⁵, the European Communities' current bananas import regime contains an important quantitative element, and even if that element is applicable directly to the ACP countries, it results in a restriction for MFN bananas within the meaning of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994.

7.653 As regards a partial overlap between two provisions in the covered agreements, Article XIII:2(d) of the GATT 1994 and Article 5.2 of the Safeguards Agreement, the panel on US - Line Pipe stated that:

"As noted by the panel in Turkey – Textiles, 'the principle of effective interpretation or 'l'effet utile' or in Latin ut res magis valeat quam pereat reflects the general rule of interpretation which requires that a treaty be interpreted to give meaning and effect to all the terms of the treaty. For instance one provision should not be given an interpretation that will result in nullifying the effect of another provision of the same treaty.'¹¹⁵⁶ An interpretation of Article XIII that applies that provision in the context of safeguard measures does not, in our view, nullify any of the provisions of the Safeguards Agreement. All of the provisions of the Safeguards Agreement remain fully applicable. Although there may be some duplication between Article XIII:2(d) and Article 5.2 of the Safeguards Agreement, duplication is not the same as nullification."¹¹⁵⁷

7.654 Applying the same approach to the interrelation of Articles I and XIII of the GATT 1994, this Panel notes that, even if there was some overlap between those two Articles, giving effect to Article XIII would not nullify the effect of Article I.

7.655 The Panel also notes that in EC – Bananas III the European Communities argued, in regard to the Lomé Waiver, that:

¹¹⁵³ Appellate Body Report on EC – Bananas III, para. 157. See also Panel Report on US – Line Pipe, para. 7.40.

¹¹⁵⁴ See European Communities' first written submission, para. 65.

¹¹⁵⁵ See para. 7.660 below.

¹¹⁵⁶ (footnote original) Turkey – Textiles at footnote 327.

¹¹⁵⁷ Panel Report on US – Line Pipe, para. 7.45.

"[W]here aspects of a measure have been found to be covered by the waiver for purposes of Article I, they should not be found to violate another GATT provision imposing MFN-like obligations similar to those that have been waived ..."¹¹⁵⁸

7.656 The original panel requested by Ecuador in EC – Bananas III found – a finding later reversed by the Appellate Body¹¹⁵⁹ – that the Lomé Waiver from Article I:1 of the GATT 1994 would extend to Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994.¹¹⁶⁰ In this context, that panel had also looked into the "close relationship between Articles I and XIII:1".¹¹⁶¹

7.657 The Appellate Body rejected the original panel's conclusion that the Lomé Waiver from Article I:1 would automatically extend to Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994.¹¹⁶² The Appellate Body noted that "[t]he Panel based its conclusion on the need to give 'real effect'¹¹⁶³ to the Lomé Waiver and on the 'close relationship'¹¹⁶⁴ between Articles I:1 and XIII:1".¹¹⁶⁵ At the same time, however, the Appellate Body stated that, "although Articles I and XIII of the GATT 1994 are both non-discrimination provisions, their relationship is not such that a waiver from the obligations under Article I implies a waiver from the obligations under Article XIII"¹¹⁶⁶ (emphasis added).

7.658 The Appellate Body did not elaborate further on the relationship between Articles I and XIII of the GATT 1994. Nevertheless, the rejection by the Appellate Body of the panel's finding on the scope of the Lomé Waiver indicates that Articles I and XIII of the GATT 1994 do not have the same scope, and that an inconsistency with Article XIII is possible irrespective of whether or not there is an inconsistency with Article I.

7.659 Finally, the Panel notes that on two earlier occasions in the EC – Bananas III dispute the European Communities made an objection to the applicability of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 to the then 857,700 mt duty-free tariff quota for ACP bananas¹¹⁶⁷ similar to the objection the European Communities has made in these proceedings regarding the 775,000 mt duty-free tariff quota for ACP bananas. Both the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador and the arbitrator in the proceedings requested by the European Communities pursuant to Article 22.6 of the DSU rejected that objection:

"Article XIII:5 provides that the provisions of Article XIII apply to 'tariff quotas'. The European Communities essentially argues that the amount of 857,700 tonnes for traditional imports from ACP States constitutes an upper limit on a tariff preference

¹¹⁵⁸ Panel Report on EC – Bananas III (Ecuador), para. 7.104.

¹¹⁵⁹ See Appellate Body Report on EC – Bananas III, para. 188.

¹¹⁶⁰ See Panel Report on EC – Bananas III (Ecuador), para. 7.110.

¹¹⁶¹ The original panel on EC – Bananas III stated that "both [Articles I and XIII:1] prohibit discriminatory treatment. Article I requires MFN treatment in respect of 'rules and formalities in connection with importation', a phrase that has been interpreted broadly in past GATT practice, such that it can appropriately be held to cover rules related to tariff quota allocations. Such rules are clearly rules applied in connection with importation. Indeed, they are critical to the determination of the amount of duty to be imposed. To describe the relationship somewhat differently, Article I establishes a general principle requiring non-discriminatory treatment in respect of, inter alia, rules and formalities in connection with importation. Article XIII:1 is an application of that principle in a specific situation, i.e., the administration of quantitative restrictions and tariff quotas. In that sense, the scope of Article XIII:1 is identical with that of Article I." (footnote omitted) Panel Report on EC – Bananas III (Ecuador), para. 7.107.

¹¹⁶² See Appellate Body Report on EC – Bananas III, para. 188.

and is not a tariff quota subject to Article XIII. However, by definition, a tariff quota is a quantitative limit on the availability of a specific tariff rate. Thus, Article XIII applies to the 857,700 tonne limit."¹¹⁶⁸

7.660 In the context of the European Communities' objection to the applicability of Article XIII in regard to the European Communities' preferential duty-free tariff quota for ACP countries, the main difference between the European Communities' former and current preferential tariff quota for ACP countries is the level of the quantitative limit. The current preferential tariff quota for ACP countries has been set at 775,000 mt instead of 857,000 mt. From the viewpoint of the applicability of Article XIII, that quantitative difference is irrelevant as it does not eliminate the quantitative element of the European Communities' measure. As stated by the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador and the arbitrator in the proceedings requested by the European Communities pursuant to Article 22.6 of the DSU, it is the very quantitative limit that establishes the applicability of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 to the European Communities' preferential tariff quota for ACP countries. Such applicability does not depend on the specific level of the quantitative limit, nor on whether MFN countries are also subject to a tariff quota or only an MFN tariff.¹¹⁶⁹

7.661 The Panel therefore rejects the argument made by the European Communities that:

"GATT Article XIII does not oblige the European Communities to extend to Latin American countries the tariff preference it grants to the ACP countries simply because this tariff preference is subject to a 'cap'. Article XIII does not cover cases of tariff discrimination: this is the role of GATT Article I:1."¹¹⁷⁰

7.662 In the light of the foregoing, the Panel is justified in addressing the consistency of the European Communities' current bananas import regime with Article XIII of the GATT 1994. Accordingly, the Panel will now turn to the substantive claims of the United States under Articles XIII:1 and 2 of the GATT 1994.

4. The United States' claim under Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994

(a) The United States' arguments

7.663 The United States argues that:

"By using a tariff rate quota on ACP imports, and an entirely different means to restrict MFN imports, the EC is preventing 'like' imports from being 'treated equally, irrespective of origin' in violation of GATT Article XIII:1."¹¹⁷¹

(b) The European Communities' response

7.664 In the view of the European Communities, there is no inconsistency with Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994 in its challenged measures. According to the European Communities:

"[T]he Cotonou Preference does not violate GATT Article XIII, as established by a number of facts and considerations.

¹¹⁶⁸ Panel Report on EC – Bananas III (Article 21.5 – Ecuador), para. 6.20; and Decision by the Arbitrators on EC – Bananas III (US) (Article 22.6 – EC), para. 5.9.

¹¹⁶⁹ See Panel Report on EC – Bananas III (Article 21.5 – Ecuador), para. 6.20; and Decision by the Arbitrators on EC – Bananas III (US) (Article 22.6 – EC), para. 5.9.

¹¹⁷⁰ European Communities' first written submission, para. 65.

¹¹⁷¹ United States' first written submission, para. 42. See also United States' second written submission, para. 94.

First, banana imports from Latin American and other MFN suppliers are not subject to any quantitative restriction: they are simply subject to a tariff. Therefore, the conditions for the application of GATT Article XIII are not satisfied, i.e., there is no quantitative restriction imposed on one WTO Member that it is not imposed on all other countries.

Second, GATT Article XIII cannot be used as a substitute for GATT Article I:1 wherever a tariff quota exists. GATT Article XIII does not oblige the European Communities to extend to Latin American countries the tariff preference it grants to the ACP countries simply because this tariff preference is subject to a "cap". Article XIII does not cover cases of tariff discrimination: this is the role of GATT Article I:1 ...

Third, the facts in the current proceedings are not the same as those that faced the Panel and Appellate Body in 1997. It is noteworthy that the United States does not make any attempt to explain what are the restrictions on imports from MFN exporters that are not similar to those it says are affecting imports from ACP countries."¹¹⁷²

"[T]he interpretation proposed by the United States for paragraph 1 of Article XIII... would lead to non-Members of the WTO being accorded rights under the GATT. Such a situation would arise because the United States' interpretation would require paragraph 1 to be read as though it said that no tariff quota could be applied to ACP Members unless a similar tariff quota were accorded to all other exporting (or importing) countries. Unlike a 'prohibition or restriction', a tariff quota can be beneficial rather than prejudicial to the country to which it is accorded, and since the condition in paragraph 1 applies to imports from (or exports to) all third countries, and not merely those that are WTO Members, under the United States' interpretation the benefit of a tariff quota could not be given to a Member unless it was also accorded to all non-Members. Thus, adopting this interpretation one could have a situation where a Member which wished to let all other Members share in a tariff quota could not do so unless it also allowed non-Members a similar share. In the European Communities' view such an outcome is contrary to the object and purpose of GATT. As illustrated by national practice in matters such as anti-dumping and countervailing duty law, Members do not in general regard WTO obligations as extending to the treatment of imports from non-Members.

On the other hand, the European Communities' interpretation of Article XIII gives rise to no such unacceptable consequences. By limiting the application of Article XIII to the quantitative aspects of tariff quotas paragraph 1 can be taken to say that no quantitative limitation may be placed on a Member's share of a tariff quota unless all other countries' shares are similarly limited. This interpretation accords rights to Members rather than non-Members and so does not conflict with the objects of the GATT."¹¹⁷³

7.666 With respect to the reference made by the United States to the panel report in EC – Bananas III, the European Communities argues that:

¹¹⁷² European Communities' first written submission, paras. 63, 64, 65 and 67. See also European Communities' second written submission, paras. 66-95.

¹¹⁷³ European Communities' second written submission, paras. 88-89.

"The United States quotes the EC – Bananas III panel to the effect that because of Article XIII:1 'a Member may not limit the quantity of imports from some Members but not from others'¹¹⁷⁴. The statement is uncontroversial. If discriminatory quantitative restrictions were not prohibited in this way then the basic GATT objective of eliminating discrimination could be undermined whenever there was an exception to the general ban on quantitative restrictions that is imposed by Article XI.

However, that panel's proposition does not imply that paragraph 5 of Article XIII has the effect of extending the obligations of that Article into situations of tariff discrimination and thereby of overthrowing the basic distinction between tariffs and quantitative measures that, as explained above, is fundamental to the GATT. Nor was the panel in EC – Bananas III concerned with such a situation since the tariff quotas that it was examining extended to all of the Members that were affected by the dispute, albeit that those quotas were created by distinct legal instruments."¹¹⁷⁵

7.667 The European Communities also comments the reference made by the United States to the Appellate Body report in EC – Bananas III:

"The United States also quotes the Appellate Body in EC – Bananas III where it addresses the GATT non-discrimination provisions – Articles I and XIII. At the outset it is worth stressing, as the United States quite properly acknowledges, that in these passages the Appellate Body was concerned with both of these provisions. In the first quotation the Appellate Body makes the non-controversial observation that the essence of these GATT obligations is that products should be treated equally, irrespective of their origin¹¹⁷⁶. In the second quotation, taken from the same paragraph, the Appellate Body says that the object and purpose of the non-discrimination provisions would be defeated if 'by choosing a different legal basis for imposing import restrictions, or by applying different tariff rates' a Member could avoid the application of these provisions.

Once again, no one could dissent from such propositions. The provisions of Articles I and XIII provide a comprehensive system of barriers to discrimination, in which there are no gaps or crevices through which national measures can penetrate, no matter how cunningly they are drafted."¹¹⁷⁷

7.668 In conclusion, according to the European Communities:

"[T]he scope of Article XIII, in particular of paragraphs 1 and 2, does not extend to the relationship between the treatment of those Members that are covered by a tariff quota and that of those which are not. The justification for this interpretation lies to some extent in the ordinary meaning of the terms of Article XIII, but more particularly in their context (as well as the 'subsequent practice' of Members) and in the object and purposes of the GATT."¹¹⁷⁸

(c) Panel's analysis

(i) The relevant language of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994 for this dispute

7.669 According to Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994:

"No prohibition or restriction shall be applied by any contracting party on the importation of any product of the territory of any other contracting party or on the exportation of any product destined for the territory of any other contracting party, unless the importation of the like product of all third countries or the exportation of the like product to all third countries is similarly prohibited or restricted."

7.670 Replacing the terms "any contracting party", "any other contracting party" and "all third countries" with the relevant WTO Members involved in this dispute, the Panel understands that the United States' claim under Article XIII:1 invokes that provision in the following way:

"No prohibition or restriction shall be applied by [the European Communities] on the importation of any product of the territory of [MFN banana suppliers] ... unless the importation of the like product of [the beneficiaries of the ACP tariff quota] ... is similarly prohibited or restricted."

7.671 In the context of the United States' claim that the European Communities does not treat MFN bananas "equally" nor restricts them "similarly" to bananas from ACP countries, the only possible reading of Article XIII:1 is the one provided by the Panel in the preceding paragraph. The Panel does not agree with the European Communities that this interpretation "would lead to non-Members of the WTO being accorded rights under the GATT."¹¹⁷⁹ In fact, the main purpose of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994 is that products from WTO Members should not have restrictions imposed upon them, unless similar restrictions are placed on the like products of other countries.

7.672 In this dispute, the United States argues that bananas from MFN suppliers, including from the United States, should be protected under Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994. Accordingly, if the term "any other contracting party" in Article XIII:1 is replaced with "MFN banana suppliers", and the term "any contracting party" is replaced with "the European Communities" (which the European Communities does not seem to contest), the term "all third countries" may indeed refer to the ACP countries. In that context, the term "all third countries" does not necessarily exclude WTO Members other than the European Communities and MFN banana suppliers. Also, even if "all third countries" should be interpreted as referring also to non-Members of the WTO, an issue this Panel does not address, the Panel's above interpretation of the terms of Article XIII:1 does not imply that Article XIII:1 would suddenly be turned into a provision protecting non-Members.

(ii) The applicability of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994

7.673 In the light of that interpretation of the relevant terms of Article XIII:1, the Panel needs to address three issues:

- (a) Whether bananas are like products;
- (b) Whether any prohibition or restriction is applied by the European Communities on the importation of bananas from the territories of MFN banana suppliers, including the United States; and

Whether all bananas are like products

7.674 The Panel has already concluded that the relevant products in this dispute, fresh bananas (corresponding to tariff item 0803 00 12 or 0803 00 19) originating in ACP countries, are like products to those fresh bananas originating in other WTO Members, in terms of Article I of the GATT 1994.¹¹⁸⁰ Based on the same considerations, and for the purpose of the United States' claim under Article XIII of the GATT 1994, the Panel may also consider them to be like products in terms of Article XIII. This is irrespective of their origin, i.e., independently of whether they are produced in ACP or MFN countries, or whether they are subject to the MFN out-of-quota tariff, the preferential in-quota tariff under the ACP tariff quota or to any further preferential import regime of the European Communities.

Whether any prohibition or restriction is applied by the European Communities on the importation of bananas of the territory of MFN banana suppliers, including the United States

7.675 Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994, entitled "Non-discriminatory Administration of Quantitative Restrictions", can apply in this dispute only if there is a "prohibition or restriction" within the meaning of Article XIII:1 on the importation of bananas from MFN banana suppliers, including the United States, to the European Communities. This is the second issue the Panel will address under Article XIII:1, noting that, for the purposes of the analysis, finding either a restriction or a prohibition would be sufficient for the Panel to move to the third element of its analysis under Article XIII:1.

7.676 As regards the existence of any "restriction", the Panel notes that, while panels and the Appellate Body have not looked into the meaning of the term "restriction" specifically under Article XIII of the GATT 1994, traditionally, they have interpreted that term broadly in the context of other provisions, such as Article XI of the GATT 1994.¹¹⁸¹

7.677 Also, in the context of Article XI and other non-discrimination provisions of the GATT 1994, it has been found that GATT disciplines on the use of restrictions are not meant to protect "trade flows", but rather the "competitive opportunities of imported products". As the panel on Argentina – Hides and Leather stated in the context of Article XI of the GATT 1994:

"[A]s to whether [the challenged measure] makes effective a restriction, it should be recalled that Article XI:1, like Articles I, II and III of the GATT 1994, protects competitive opportunities of imported products, not trade flows."^{1182, 1183}

7.678 In the light of the above-mentioned close link between Articles XI and XIII of the GATT 1994, the Panel considers that this broad interpretation of the word "restriction" under Article XI is relevant also for Article XIII.

¹¹⁸³ Panel Report on Argentina – Hides and Leather, para. 11.20.

7.679 Given that broad interpretation of the term "restriction", the Panel sees the European Communities' preferential ACP tariff quota as a restriction for bananas from MFN banana suppliers, including the United States, within the meaning of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994. As the European Communities acknowledges, its banana import regime confers a benefit, although a quantitatively limited one, to bananas from ACP countries; bananas from the United States and other MFN banana suppliers cannot have access to that quantitatively limited benefit.¹¹⁸⁴ Any benefit accorded to fresh bananas of only some Members presumably affects the competitive opportunities of like bananas imported from other Members, including from the United States, to the European Communities market. By its very nature, such a benefit reserved for some Members generally represents a disadvantage for other Members.

7.680 The European Communities argues that Article XIII only deals with quantitative restrictions and quantitative discrimination, and not tariff restrictions or discrimination. In this context, the Panel notes that the word "quantitative" means "[p]ossessing quantity, magnitude, or spatial extent"; "[t]hat is, or may be, considered with respect to the quantity or quantities involved; estimated or estimable by quantity."¹¹⁸⁵

7.681 On its face, the quantity of bananas that MFN suppliers can export to the European Communities is not restricted by the European Communities' current bananas import regime: MFN suppliers can export as many bananas to the European Communities as they wish. However, such suppliers can export bananas to the European Communities only at the MFN €176/mt out-of-quota tariff. Therefore, the quantities of bananas that MFN suppliers can export to the European Communities are certainly affected by the fact that, up to the quantitative limit set by the tariff quota, the ACP countries are entitled to export bananas to the European Communities at a zero in-quota duty. As stated by the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador in this dispute, "[a]s to the EC's suggestion that Ecuador has no interest in the collective allocation to traditional ACP suppliers, we note that the price and even the volume of Ecuador's exports could be affected by the price and volume of traditional ACP exports"¹¹⁸⁶ (emphasis added).

7.682 Further, as mentioned earlier, under the tariff quota, the benefit accorded to ACP countries is determined in a quantitative manner. Up to the quantitative limit specified by the tariff quota, ACP countries can export bananas to the European Communities under the preferential in-quota duty. Beyond the quantitative limit, ACP banana exports to the European Communities are also subject to the out-of-quota duty.

7.683 As mentioned above, both the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador and the arbitrator in the proceedings requested by the European Communities pursuant to Article 22.6 of the DSU established that it is the very quantitative limit that establishes the applicability of Article XIII to the European Communities' preferential tariff quota for ACP countries. Such applicability does not depend on the specific level of the quantitative limit, nor on whether MFN countries are also subject to a tariff quota or only to an MFN tariff.¹¹⁸⁷

7.684 Having established and identified a restriction within the meaning of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994 on banana imports from MFN suppliers to the European Communities, the Panel turns to the third and last aspect of its analysis under Article XIII:1: whether banana imports from ACP countries to the European Communities are similarly restricted.

(iii) Whether the importation of bananas from ACP countries is similarly restricted

7.685 As mentioned earlier, similar to the MFN countries, the ACP countries may export bananas to the European Communities at the MFN out-of-quota tariff. However, as the European Communities itself acknowledges¹¹⁸⁸, ACP countries can also export bananas under the lower in-quota duty, which is not available to MFN countries. The in-quota duty is zero, while the out-of-quota duty is 176 €/mt. Since bananas from MFN countries do not have access to that preferential tariff quota reserved for bananas from ACP countries, on its face, the importation into the European Communities of bananas from ACP countries is not "similarly restricted" compared to that of bananas from MFN countries.

7.686 The Panel notes in this context that, according to Exhibit EC-7 (Table 15), total European Communities' banana imports from the ACP countries amounted to 891,218 mt in 2006, and to a proportional 439,328 mt during the first half of 2007. In other words, since the introduction of the European Communities' preferential ACP tariff quota, most European Communities banana imports from the ACP countries have taken place under the beneficial zero in-quota duty of 775,000 mt per annum. Consequently, as indicated in Exhibit EC-5 (Table 10), the European Communities has collected €20,454,544 of tariff revenues on the 891,218 mt of total ACP banana imports in 2006, while it collected €579,687,363 of tariff revenues on the 3,293,679 mt total MFN imports in the same year. Thus, in the first year of the application of its current banana import regime, the European Communities has collected approximately 28 times more tariff revenues on its MFN banana imports for almost four times the amount of imports than for its total banana imports from ACP countries. In other words, in 2006, on average, the European Communities has subjected each quantitative unit of MFN banana import to approximately seven times more duty than each equal quantitative unit of ACP banana import. These figures illustrate the way in which the European Communities' current banana import regime restricts MFN banana imports, including any imports from the United States, within the meaning of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994; at the same time, it is quite clear that ACP bananas are not similarly restricted.

7.687 This Panel also notes that the original panel requested by Ecuador in this dispute stated that:

"Article XIII:1 establishes the basic principle that no import restriction shall be applied to one Member's products unless the importation of like products from other Members is similarly restricted. Thus, a Member may not limit the quantity of imports from some Members but not from others. But as indicated by the terms of Article XIII (and even its title, 'Non-discriminatory Administration of Quantitative Restrictions'), the non-discrimination obligation extends further. The imported products at issue must be 'similarly' restricted. A Member may not restrict imports from some Members using one means and restrict them from another Member using another means."¹¹⁸⁹

7.688 In its ruling in EC – Bananas III, the Appellate Body upheld the relevant findings of that original panel in the context of Article XIII:1, by stating that:

"When th[e] principle of non-discrimination is applied to the allocation of tariff quota shares to Members not having a substantial interest, it is clear that a Member cannot, whether by agreement or by assignment, allocate tariff quota shares to some Members not having a substantial interest while not allocating shares to other Members who likewise do not have a substantial interest. To do so is clearly inconsistent with the requirement in Article XIII:1 that a Member cannot restrict the importation of any product from another Member unless the importation of the like product from all third countries is 'similarly' restricted.

¹¹⁸⁸ See, for example, European Communities' first written submission, para. 4.

¹¹⁸⁹ Panel Report on EC – Bananas III (Ecuador), para. 7.69.

Therefore, ... we conclude that the Panel found correctly that the allocation of tariff quota shares, whether by agreement or by assignment, to some, but not to other, Members not having a substantial interest in supplying bananas to the European Communities is inconsistent with the requirements of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994.

The [tariff quota] reallocation rules [of the BFA] allow the exclusion of banana-supplying countries, other than BFA countries, from sharing in the unused portions of a tariff quota share. Thus, imports from BFA countries and imports from other Members are not 'similarly' restricted. We conclude, therefore, that the Panel found correctly that the tariff quota reallocation rules of the BFA are inconsistent with the requirements of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994."¹¹⁹⁰

7.689 Based on the reasoning of the original panel and the Appellate Body in this dispute, both the first compliance panel requested by Ecuador and the arbitrator in the proceedings requested by the European Communities pursuant to Article 22.6 of the DSU established inconsistency with Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994, by stating that:

"[S]ome non-substantial suppliers, namely the ACP suppliers, could benefit from access to the 'other' category of the MFN tariff quota once the 857,700 tonne tariff quota was exhausted. On the other hand, non-substantial suppliers from third countries have no access to the 857,700 tonne tariff quota once the 'other' category of the MFN tariff quota is exhausted. Individual Members in these two groups – traditional ACP suppliers and the other non-substantial suppliers – are accordingly not similarly restricted. This disparate treatment is inconsistent with the provisions of Article XIII:1, which require that '[n]o ... restriction shall be applied by any Member on the importation of any product of the territory of any other Member ... unless the importation of the like product of all third countries ... is similarly prohibited or restricted'."¹¹⁹¹

7.690 In the proceedings before this Panel, the European Communities argues that its current banana import regime is different from the previous ones addressed by the Appellate Body and the previous panels in this dispute.¹¹⁹² In the European Communities' view, "the tariff quotas that [the EC – Bananas III panel] was examining extended to all of the Members that were affected by the dispute"¹¹⁹³, while under the current bananas import regime "MFN Members are not subject to any quantitative restriction".¹¹⁹⁴

7.691 The European Communities argues that the report of the Appellate Body in EC – Bananas III confirms this interpretation of Article XIII:

"In that case the Appellate Body did not say that wherever like products were treated unequally as regards origin there would be a breach of Article XIII. The Appellate Body simply confirmed that a breach of GATT Article XIII may be found where different tariff quotas are imposed to different groups of countries and are administered in a discriminatory manner."¹¹⁹⁵

7.692 In the original dispute the Appellate Body noted that, in regard to the earlier European Communities' measures before the original panel and the Appellate Body:

"It ha[d] been argued by the European Communities that there are two separate EC import regimes for bananas, the preferential regime for traditional ACP bananas and the erga omnes regime for all other imports of bananas. Submissions made by the European Communities raise the question whether this is of any relevance for the application of the non-discrimination provisions of the GATT 1994 and the other Annex 1A agreements. The European Communities argues, in particular, that the non-discrimination obligations of Articles I:1, X:3(a) and XIII of the GATT 1994 and Article 1.3 of the Licensing Agreement, apply only within each of these separate regimes. The Panel found that the European Communities has only one import regime for purposes of applying the non-discrimination provisions of the GATT 1994 and Article 1.3 of the Licensing Agreement."¹¹⁹⁶

7.693 In response to that argument by the European Communities, the Appellate Body established that:

"The issue here is not whether the European Communities is correct in stating that two separate import regimes exist for bananas, but whether the existence of two, or more, separate EC import regimes is of any relevance for the application of the non-discrimination provisions of the GATT 1994 and the other Annex 1A agreements. The essence of the non-discrimination obligations is that like products should be treated equally, irrespective of their origin. As no participant disputes that all bananas are like products, the non-discrimination provisions apply to all imports of bananas, irrespective of whether and how a Member categorizes or subdivides these imports for administrative or other reasons. If, by choosing a different legal basis for imposing import restrictions, or by applying different tariff rates, a Member could avoid the application of the non-discrimination provisions to the imports of like products from different Members, the object and purpose of the non-discrimination provisions would be defeated. It would be very easy for a Member to circumvent the non-discrimination provisions of the GATT 1994 and the other Annex 1A agreements, if these provisions apply only within regulatory regimes established by that Member."¹¹⁹⁷

7.694 Accordingly, the Appellate Body "uph[e]ld the findings of the [original] Panel"¹¹⁹⁸ that the non-discrimination provisions of the GATT 1994, specifically, Articles I:1 and XIII, apply to the relevant EC regulations, irrespective if there is one or more 'separate regimes' for the importation of bananas."¹¹⁹⁹

7.695 As the original panel requested by Ecuador also noted, "to accept that a Member could establish quota regimes by different legal instruments and argue that they are not as a consequence subject to Article XIII would be, as argued by the Complainants, to eviscerate the non-discrimination provisions of Article XIII."¹²⁰⁰

7.696 Under the European Communities' current bananas import regime, there might be no tariff quota applicable to the MFN countries, and the ACP tariff quota might be the only preferential tariff quota. However, that would not reduce the relevance of the statement by the Appellate Body that "[t]he issue here is not whether the European Communities is correct in stating that two separate import regimes exist for bananas, but whether the existence of two, or more, separate EC import regimes is of any relevance for the application of the non-discrimination provisions of the GATT 1994 and the other Annex 1A agreements". As long as the European Communities has a preferential tariff quota reserved for some Members and a higher MFN out-of-quota duty for all other Members, that statement remains relevant. Further, the absence of more than one tariff quota reserved for some WTO Members under the European Communities' current bananas import regime makes the following statement by the Appellate Body even more relevant in these proceedings:

"If, by choosing a different legal basis for imposing import restrictions, or by applying different tariff rates, a Member could avoid the application of the non-discrimination provisions to the imports of like products from different Members, the object and purpose of the non-discrimination provisions would be defeated. It would be very easy for a Member to circumvent the non-discrimination provisions of the GATT 1994 and the other Annex 1A agreements, if these provisions apply only within regulatory regimes established by that Member."¹²⁰¹

7.697 In the light of the foregoing, despite the European Communities' arguments on the specificity of its current bananas import regime and the preferential ACP tariff quota under such regime, the Panel reiterates that ACP banana imports to the European Communities are not similarly restricted as are like banana imports from MFN suppliers such as the United States.

7.698 Having found that the current EC bananas import regime shows all three elements set out in Article XIII:1, the Panel concludes that the European Communities' current bananas import regime, in particular its preferential tariff quota reserved for ACP countries, is inconsistent with Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994.

5. The United States' claim under Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994

(a) The United States' arguments

7.699 The United States maintains that the European Communities' current bananas import regime is also inconsistent with Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994. In the view of the United States:

"The EC's exclusive 775,000 ton ACP tariff rate quota fails to distribute any share whatsoever to MFN suppliers, let alone a share they would have expected to obtain in the absence of restrictions. This is so even though many of the excluded MFN suppliers are principal or substantial suppliers of bananas to the EC, and leading exporters of bananas to the world market. Therefore, the ACP tariff rate quota established through Regulation 1964, like prior ACP tariff rate quotas, is inconsistent with Article XIII:2."¹²⁰²

¹²⁰⁰ Panel Report on EC – Bananas III (Ecuador), para. 7.79.

¹²⁰¹ Appellate Body Report on EC – Bananas III, para. 190.

¹²⁰² United States' first written submission, para. 46.

7.700 The United States adds that:

"Article XIII:2(d) required the EC, once it opted to impose a tariff quota on banana imports entering its market, to ensure, on failure to reach agreement on quota shares among suppliers, that it 'allot[ed] to Members having a substantial interest in supplying the product shares based upon the proportions, supplied by such Members during a previous representative period.' Only having done so could the EC avoid discriminating against the imports of non-ACP banana suppliers. [The European Communities] failed to do so. Instead, the EC chose to allot no share whatsoever to non-ACP suppliers with a substantial interest and no share to non-ACP suppliers with no substantial interest.¹²⁰³ Thus, the EC breaches its obligations under GATT Article XIII:2 because it failed to 'similarly prohibit or restrict' those non-ACP bananas".¹²⁰⁴

(b) The European Communities' arguments

7.701 As noted above, the European Communities responds that "the Cotonou Preference does not violate GATT Article XIII."¹²⁰⁵ In the European Communities' view, "the scope of Article XIII, in particular of paragraphs 1 and 2, does not extend to the relationship between the treatment of those Members that are covered by a tariff quota and that of those which are not."¹²⁰⁶

7.702 The European Communities argues that the United States' invocation of Article XIII:2:

"[F]ails to provide any explanation of how the extension of Article XIII to tariff quotas is to apply in the case of paragraph 2. Moreover, the European Communities' regime for bananas that is the subject of the present proceedings is significantly different from that examined in the original dispute and which was the subject of the remarks made by the panel that are quoted by the United States. In the previous regime, exporting countries were granted various levels of access to the reduced tariff level. In the present case the MFN Members are not subject to any quantitative restriction. As there are no 'restrictions' applicable to their exports, there are no restrictions on their exports that can be compared with those, if they can be called such, that are applied to ACP exports".¹²⁰⁷

7.703 The European Communities adds that:

"[T]he objective of Article XIII and in particular of paragraph 2 is to achieve particular quantitative distributions of trade. In the case of quotas it is evident that the appropriate distribution was to be achieved by direct quantitative measures, in the last resort by allocating specific quantities to individual exporting countries. When, as required by paragraph 5, these rules are applied to tariff quotas a corresponding distribution can be achieved by allocating specific quantities of the tariff quota. The notion that such a distribution could be achieved by setting different tariff levels for the various exporting countries is economic nonsense. Consequently it is not plausible that the drafters of Article XIII would have envisaged using paragraph 2 to achieve such a goal."¹²⁰⁸

(c) Panel's analysis

7.704 The United States has invoked both the chapeau and subparagraph (d) of Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994.¹²⁰⁹

(i) Chapeau of Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994

7.705 Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994 stipulates in its chapeau that:

"In applying import restrictions to any product, contracting parties [WTO Members] shall aim at a distribution of trade in such product approaching as closely as possible the shares which the various contracting parties [WTO Members] might be expected to obtain in the absence of such restrictions and to this end shall observe the following provisions ..."

7.706 The original panel requested by Ecuador in this dispute confirmed that language by stating that "the object and purpose of Article XIII:2 is to minimize the impact of a quota or tariff quota regime on trade flows by attempting to approximate under such measures the trade shares that would have occurred in the absence of the regime."¹²¹⁰

7.707 The Panel notes that Cameroon, a beneficiary from the European Communities' preferences, argues in its statement at the substantive meeting of the Panel with the parties and third parties that:

"[I]t is well known that the ACP banana producers are less competitive than the MFN producers. In comparison with the latter, the ACP producers produce at higher costs. For geographical and historical reasons, they do not have the same economies of scale as the MFN producers. Further, the ACP producers can only compete with them on markets on which they have preferential access. Proof of this fact is that even the Caribbean ACP Countries, which are situated at the doorstep of the United States, do not manage to compete with MFN producers on the North American market. The absence of preferential access and higher costs structures prevent ACP producers from entering the United States market. Given that the European Community constitutes the only major banana market to offer preferential access, the ACP Countries are entirely dependent on this market."¹²¹¹

7.708 The Panel has already established that the European Communities' current bananas import regime subjects bananas from MFN suppliers, including from the United States, to a restriction within the meaning of Article XIII:1 of the GATT 1994. The Panel also takes note of the statement by Cameroon that ACP producers can only compete with MFN producers in markets where they enjoy preferential access, which has not been contested by either other ACP third parties nor by the European Communities. This statement constitutes a recognition that the preferential ACP tariff quota regime under the European Communities' current bananas import regime is indispensable for the very existence of ACP banana imports to the European Communities. It is not necessary to further assess this alleged lack of competitiveness of ACP countries. The above uncontested statement suffices to find that, given that MFN countries are excluded from the European Communities' preferential ACP tariff quota, by definition, the ACP preference does not "aim at a distribution of trade in [bananas] approaching as closely as possible the shares which the various [Members, including both ACP and MFN countries] might be expected to obtain in the absence of such restrictions." Thus, the Panel also finds that on its face the European Communities' current bananas import regime, including its preferential ACP tariff quota, is inconsistent with the chapeau of Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994.

(ii) Subparagraph (d) of Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994

7.709 The United States has also invoked subparagraph (d) of Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994.¹²¹² That subparagraph provides that:

"(d) In cases in which a quota is allocated among supplying countries the contracting party applying the restrictions may seek agreement with respect to the allocation of shares in the quota with all other contracting parties having a substantial interest in supplying the product concerned. In cases in which this method is not reasonably practicable, the contracting party concerned shall allot to contracting parties having a substantial interest in supplying the product shares based upon the proportions, supplied by such contracting parties during a previous representative period, of the total quantity or value of imports of the product, due account being taken of any special factors which may have affected or may be affecting the trade in the product. No conditions or formalities shall be imposed which would prevent any contracting party from utilizing fully the share of any such total quantity or value which has been allotted to it, subject to importation being made within any prescribed period to which the quota may relate."

7.710 As stated by the original panel requested by Ecuador in this dispute:

"Article XIII's general requirement of non-discrimination is modified in one respect by Article XIII:2(d), which provides for the possibility to allocate tariff quota shares to supplying countries. Any such country specific allocation must, however, 'aim at a distribution of trade ... approaching as closely as possible the shares which Members might be expected to obtain in the absence of such restrictions' (chapeau of Article XIII:2(d)).

Article XIII:2(d) further specifies the treatment that, in case of country-specific allocation of tariff quota shares, must be given to Members with 'a substantial interest in supplying the product concerned'. For those Members, the Member proposing to impose restrictions may seek agreement with them as provided in Article XIII:2(d), first sentence. If that is not reasonably practicable, then it must allot shares in the quota (or tariff quota) to them on the basis of the criteria specified in Article XIII:2(d), second sentence."¹²¹³

7.711 That same original panel addressed the question whether, under Article XIII:2(d), "country-specific shares can also be allocated to Members that do not have a substantial interest in supplying the product and, if so, what the method of allocation would have to be."¹²¹⁴ The panel noted that:

¹²¹² See United States' first written submission, para. 45.

¹²¹³ Panel Report on EC – Bananas III (Ecuador), paras. 7.70-7.71.

"As to the first point, we note that the first sentence of Article XIII:2(d) refers to allocation of a quota 'among supplying countries'. This could be read to imply that an allocation may also be made to Members that do not have a substantial interest in supplying the product. If this interpretation is accepted, any such allocation must, however, meet the requirements of Article XIII:1 and the general rule in the chapeau to Article XIII:2(d). Therefore, if a Member wishes to allocate shares of a tariff quota to some suppliers without a substantial interest, then such shares must be allocated to all such suppliers. Otherwise, imports from Members would not be similarly restricted as required by Article XIII:1.¹²¹⁵ As to the second point, in such a case it would be required to use the same method as was used to allocate the country-specific shares to the Members having a substantial interest in supplying the product, because otherwise the requirements of Article XIII:1 would also not be met."¹²¹⁶

7.712 On appeal, the Appellate Body stated that:

"Article XIII:2(d) provides specific rules for the allocation of tariff quotas among supplying countries, but these rules pertain only to the allocation of tariff quota shares to Members 'having a substantial interest in supplying the product concerned'. Article XIII:2(d) does not provide any specific rules for the allocation of tariff quota shares to Members not having a substantial interest. Nevertheless, allocation to Members not having a substantial interest must be subject to the basic principle of non-discrimination. When this principle of non-discrimination is applied to the allocation of tariff quota shares to Members not having a substantial interest, it is clear that a Member cannot, whether by agreement or by assignment, allocate tariff quota shares to some Members not having a substantial interest while not allocating shares to other Members who likewise do not have a substantial interest. To do so is clearly inconsistent with the requirement in Article XIII:1 that a Member cannot restrict the importation of any product from another Member unless the importation of the like product from all third countries is 'similarly' restricted"¹²¹⁷ (emphasis added).

7.713 The Panel notes that all MFN countries are excluded from the European Communities' preferential ACP tariff quota, and the group of MFN countries includes both substantial and non-substantial suppliers of bananas to the European Communities. The United States has argued that:

"The EC's exclusive 775,000 ton ACP tariff rate quota fails to distribute any share whatsoever to MFN suppliers, let alone a share they would have expected to obtain in the absence of restrictions. This is so even though many of the excluded MFN suppliers are principal or substantial suppliers of bananas to the EC, and leading exporters of bananas to the world market".¹²¹⁸

¹²¹⁸ United States' first written submission, para. 46.

7.714 Also, according to Exhibit EC-7, for each year since 1999, MFN suppliers have had high shares of European Communities banana imports among all banana suppliers, in many cases higher than those of ACP suppliers. Accordingly, several MFN suppliers may be considered to have a substantial interest in supplying bananas to the European Communities under Article XIII:2(d) of the GATT 1994.

7.715 In the light of the way in which Article XIII:2(d) has been interpreted by the original panel and the Appellate Body in this dispute, a preferential tariff quota that is granted exclusively to some Members and not to others, including substantial suppliers, cannot result in a distribution of trade in bananas that would approach as closely as possible the shares which the various Members might be expected to obtain in the absence of such restrictions. Further, the same preferential tariff quota does not comply with the second sentence of Article XIII:2(d) that:

"In cases in which [agreement with respect to the allocation of shares in the quota with all other contracting parties having a substantial interest in supplying the product concerned] is not reasonably practicable, the contracting party concerned shall allot to contracting parties having a substantial interest in supplying the product shares based upon the proportions, supplied by such contracting parties during a previous representative period, of the total quantity or value of imports of the product, due account being taken of any special factors which may have affected or may be affecting the trade in the product."

7.716 Accordingly, the Panel finds that the European Communities' current bananas import regime, including its preferential ACP tariff quota, is inconsistent with subparagraph (d) of Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994, as well as with the chapeau of Article XIII:2.

6. The existence of an applicable waiver

7.717 As the Appellate Body stated in the context of Article XIII earlier in this dispute:

"Non-discrimination obligations apply to all imports of like products, except when these obligations are specifically waived or are otherwise not applicable as a result of the operation of specific provisions of the GATT 1994, such as Article XXIV.¹²¹⁹ In the present case, the non-discrimination obligations of the GATT 1994, specifically Articles I:1 and XIII¹²²⁰, apply fully to all imported bananas irrespective of their origin, except to the extent that these obligations are waived ..."¹²²¹

7.718 As the United States argues in these proceedings, the waiver from Articles XIII:1 and 2 adopted by the Ministerial Conference in Doha¹²²² expired by its own terms on 31 December 2005.¹²²³ The Panel also notes that the European Communities does not argue that that waiver is still in force. Indeed, the Panel finds that there is no waiver in force to cover the European Communities' current bananas import regime and exonerate any inconsistencies of such regime with Articles XIII:1 and 2 of the GATT 1994.

¹²¹⁹ (footnote original) Panel on Newsprint, adopted 20 November 1984, BISD 31S/114.

¹²²⁰ (footnote original) We do not agree with the Panel's findings that Article X:3(a) of the GATT 1994 and Article 1.3 of the Licensing Agreement preclude the imposition of different import licensing systems on like products when imported from different Members. ¹²²³ United States' first written submission, paras. 18, 20 and 47. See also United States' second written submission, para. 94.

7.719 Also, for the reasons set out by the Appellate Body earlier in this dispute¹²²⁴, even if the Doha Article I waiver applied to bananas beyond the end of 2005, which the Panel has already found not to be the case¹²²⁵, the coverage of that waiver from Article I of the GATT 1994 would not automatically extend to Article XIII.

7. Conclusion

7.720 For the reasons explained above, the Panel concludes that the European Communities' current bananas import regime, in particular its preferential tariff quota reserved for ACP countries, is inconsistent with Articles XIII:1 and 2 of the GATT 1994. The Panel also concludes that there is no waiver in force that exonerates the inconsistencies of the European Communities' current bananas import regime with Articles XIII:1 and 2 of the GATT 1994.

I. FINAL REMARKS

7.721 In the factual section of this Report, the Panel noted that a significant number of developing and least developed country Members stated their respective substantial interest in the matter before this Panel and reserved their third-party rights to participate in these proceedings.

7.722 The Panel is aware of the economic and social effects of the European Communities' measures at issue in this case, particularly for ACP and Latin American banana exporting countries. In recognizing this, as in previous panel proceedings, the Panel decided to grant third parties participatory rights which were substantially broader than those normally afforded to them under the DSU.¹²²⁶ This was done in the light of the particular circumstances of the present case, and without the intention of setting any type of precedent.

7.723 In any event, the Panel wishes to recall the words of the original panel in the EC – Bananas III dispute:

"The procedures under the DSU serve to ensure the settlement of disputes among WTO Members in accordance with WTO obligations, not to add to or diminish these obligations. Accordingly, our terms of reference are to assist the DSB in reaching conclusions with regard to the legal consistency with WTO rules of the EC's common market organization for bananas. ...

From a substantive perspective, the fundamental principles of the WTO and WTO rules are designed to foster the development of countries, not impede it. Having heard the arguments of a large number of Members interested in this case and having worked through a complex set of claims under several WTO agreements, we conclude that the system is flexible enough to allow, through WTO-consistent trade and non-trade measures, appropriate policy responses in the wide variety of circumstances across countries, including countries that are currently heavily dependent on the production and commercialization of bananas."¹²²⁷

VIII. CONCLUSIONS

A. GENERAL CONCLUSIONS

8.1 In light of the findings above, and regarding the preliminary objections advanced by the European Communities the Panel finds that:

- (a) The United States had, under the DSU, the right to request the initiation of the current compliance dispute settlement proceedings;
- (b) The European Communities has not succeeded in making a prima facie case that the United States is prevented from challenging the European Communities' current import regime for bananas, including the preference for ACP countries, because of the Bananas Understanding, signed between the United States and the European Communities in April 2001; and,
- (c) The European Communities has failed in making a case that the United States' complaint under Article 21.5 of the DSU should be rejected, because the European Communities' current import regime for bananas, including the preference for ACP countries, is not a "measure taken to comply" with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in the original proceedings.

8.2 The Panel accordingly rejects the preliminary issues raised by the European Communities.

8.3 After having examined the substantive claims raised by the United States, as well as the defences invoked by the European Communities, the Panel concludes that:

- (a) The preference granted by the European Communities to an annual duty-free tariff quota of 775,000 mt of imported bananas originating in ACP countries constitutes an advantage for this category of bananas, which is not accorded to like bananas originating in non-ACP WTO Members, and is therefore inconsistent with Article I:1 of GATT 1994;
- (b) With the expiration of the Doha Waiver from 1 January 2006 as it applied to bananas, the European Communities has failed to demonstrate the existence of a waiver from Article I:1 of GATT 1994 to cover the preference granted by the European Communities to the duty-free tariff quota of imported bananas originating in ACP countries; and,
- (c) The European Communities' current banana import regime, in particular its preferential tariff quota reserved for ACP countries, is also inconsistent with Article XIII:1 and Article XIII:2 of the GATT 1994.

8.4 In consequence, the Panel concludes that, through its current regime for the importation of bananas, established in Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 of 29 November 2005, in particular its duty-free tariff quota for bananas originating in ACP countries, the European Communities has failed to implement the recommendations and rulings of the DSB.

B. NULLIFICATION OR IMPAIRMENT OF BENEFITS

8.5 The Panel has noted the European Communities' argument that the preferential tariff quota reserved for ACP countries has no impact on the value of relevant EC banana imports from the United States.¹²²⁸ The Panel likewise notes that the European Communities argues that such preferential tariff quota therefore "does not cause the United States any nullification or impairment of a benefit for which the European Communities can face suspension of concessions [under Article 22 of the DSU]".¹²²⁹

8.6 The Panel notes, however that, under Article 3.8 of the DSU, in cases where there is infringement of obligations assumed under a covered agreement, the action is considered prima facie to constitute a case of nullification or impairment of benefits under that agreement.

8.7 In this respect, the Panel finds relevant the statement made by the panel in the original proceedings that:

"WTO rules are not concerned with actual trade, but rather with competitive opportunities. Generally, it would be difficult to conclude that a Member had no possibility of competing in respect of a product or service. The United States does produce bananas in Puerto Rico and Hawaii. Moreover, even if the United States did not have even a potential export interest, its internal market for bananas could be affected by the EC regime and that regime's effect on world supplies and prices. Indeed, with the increased interdependence of the global economy, which means that actions taken in one country are likely to have significant effects on trade and foreign direct investment flows in others, Members have a greater stake in enforcing WTO rules than in the past since any deviation from the negotiated balance of rights and obligations is more likely than ever to affect them, directly or indirectly."¹²³⁰

8.8 In the same proceedings, the Appellate Body confirmed the panel's finding and stated that "the United States is a producer of bananas, and a potential export interest by the United States cannot be excluded" and that "[t]he internal market of the United States for bananas could be affected by the EC banana regime, in particular, by the effects of that regime on world supplies and world prices of bananas".¹²³¹

8.9 The Panel has already noted that the current proceedings involve a "compliance" case, under Article 21.5 of the DSU, regarding the matter of whether certain measures allegedly taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings of the DSB in an original dispute conducted under the WTO's dispute settlement procedures are consistent with the WTO covered agreements. By their nature, compliance cases are linked with the original proceedings in the dispute. The Panel finds guidance in this respect in the Appellate Body's statement that "Article 21.5 proceedings do not occur in isolation from the original proceedings, but... both proceedings form part of a continuum of events."¹²³²

8.10 Considering the link between the current compliance proceedings and the original proceedings in the dispute, the Panel does not find that the European Communities has successfully rebutted the legal presumption established by Article 3.8 of the DSU that its inconsistent measures nullify or impair benefits accruing to the United States under the WTO agreements. The arguments advanced by the European Communities on the alleged lack of nullification or impairment have not rendered irrelevant the considerations made by the panel and by the Appellate Body in the course of the original proceedings, regarding the actual and potential trade interests of the United States in the dispute.

8.11 In any event, the presumption, under Article 3.8 of the DSU, that a breach of an obligation under a WTO covered agreement constitutes a case of nullification or impairment of trade benefits, is different from the determination of the precise level of such nullification or impairment, which is an exercise conducted under Article 22 of the DSU, in cases when a complaining party has requested authorization to suspend concessions or other obligations. It is not the task of a compliance panel to determine the level of nullification or impairment of trade benefits accruing to the United States, which would result from the measures maintained by the European Communities that are inconsistent with the GATT 1994.

8.12 Accordingly, the Panel concludes that, to the extent that the current European Communities bananas import regime contains measures inconsistent with various provisions of the GATT 1994, it has nullified or impaired benefits accruing to the United States under that Agreement.

C. RECOMMENDATION

8.13 Since the original DSB recommendations and rulings in this dispute remain operative through the results of the current compliance proceedings, the Panel makes no new recommendation.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES – REGIME FOR THE IMPORTATION,
SALE AND DISTRIBUTION OF BANANAS

Recourse to Article 21.5 of the DSU by the United States

Request for the Establishment of a Panel

The following communication, dated 29 June 2007, from the delegation of the United States to the Chairman of the Dispute Settlement Body, is circulated pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU.

On 25 September 1997, the Dispute Settlement Body ("DSB") adopted its recommendations and rulings in the dispute European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas (WT/DS27) ("Bananas III").¹ The DSB ruled that the import regime of the European Communities ("EC") for bananas was inconsistent with the EC's obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994 ("GATT 1994") and General Agreement on Trade in Services ("GATS"). Accordingly, the DSB recommended that the EC bring its measure into conformity with those agreements.² An arbitrator appointed under Article 21.3(c) of the Understanding on Rules and Procedures Governing the Settlement of Disputes ("DSU") awarded the EC a "reasonable period of time" until 1 January 1999, to do so.³

The EC failed to bring its import regime for bananas into compliance with its WTO obligations by the end of the reasonable period of time, and the United States considers that the regime remains inconsistent today, nearly a decade after the DSB made its original recommendations and rulings. In particular, at the end of the reasonable period of time, the EC implemented a first set of changes to the banana import regime – through Regulation (EC) No. 1637/98⁴ and Regulation (EC) No. 2362/98⁵ – that were found to perpetuate a discriminatory tariff-rate quota ("TRQ") system and license-based system in breach of the GATT 1994 and the GATS.⁶

In November 1999, the EC announced a second attempt to reform its banana regime, which was allegedly to comprise "a two-stage process, namely, after a transitional period during which a tariff quota system would be applied with preferential access for ACP [(African, Caribbean and Pacific)] countries, a flat tariff would be introduced."⁷ The "transitional period" was to end no later than January 1, 2006.

Although the United States reluctantly permitted this lengthy delay in compliance until the end of the "transitional period,"⁸ the EC never performed the second of the steps in the "two-stage process." Instead of adopting a "flat tariff" for bananas, on 29 November 2005, the EC adopted Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005, which establishes a preferential (zero-duty) TRQ available only to bananas originating in African, Caribbean and Pacific ("ACP") countries.⁹ Bananas of other origins have no access to this 775,000 ton TRQ. Under Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 such other bananas are subject instead to a duty of 176 euros/ton.¹⁰ The regulation took effect as of 1 January 2006.

The United States considers that the EC has failed to implement the DSB's recommendations and rulings, including through the changes made to its banana regime on 1 January 2006. Therefore, the regime remains inconsistent with the EC's WTO obligations. The United States considers, inter alia, that the EC's banana import regime:

- (1) is inconsistent with Article I of the GATT 1994 because it applies a zero tariff rate to imports of bananas originating in ACP countries in a quantity up to 775,000 tons but does not accord the same duty-free treatment to imports of bananas originating in all other WTO Members; and
- (2) is inconsistent with Article XIII of the GATT 1994 – including Articles XIII:1 and XIII:2 – because it reserves the 775,000 ton zero-duty TRQ for imports of bananas originating in ACP countries and provides no access to this preferential TRQ to ⁶ These findings were made by both a panel established under Article 21.5 of the DSU at the request of Ecuador as well as by an arbitrator appointed pursuant to Article 22.6 of the DSU to review a US request for authorization to suspend concessions. See European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas, WT/DS27/RW/ECU, paras. 6.160-6.163 (12 April 1999) and European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas, WT/DS27/ARB, paras. 5.96-5.98 (9 April 1999), respectively. The DSB adopted the report of the Article 21.5 panel on 6 May 1999, including, again, a recommendation that the EC bring its banana import regime into conformity with its obligations under the GATT 1994 and the GATS. See Dispute Settlement Body, Minutes of 6 May 1999 Meeting, WT/DSB/M/61 (circulated 30 June 1999) and European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas, WT/DS27/RW/ECU, para. 7.2.

imports of bananas originating in non-ACP substantial or non-substantial supplying countries.

The United States understands the measures through which the EC maintains its current import regime for bananas to include:

- Regulation (EEC) 404/93 of 13 February 1993, as amended by Regulation (EC) 216/2001 of 29 January 2001;
- Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 of 29 November 2005; and
- for each of the regulations listed above, any amendments, implementing measures, and other related measures.

As there is "disagreement as to the existence or consistency with a covered agreement of measures taken to comply with the recommendations and rulings" of the DSB between the United States and the EC, the United States respectfully seeks recourse to Article 21.5 of the DSU in this matter. The United States requests that the DSB refer the matter to the original panel, if possible, pursuant to Article 21.5 of the DSU.

ANNEX A-2

WORKING PROCEDURES FOR THE PANEL
DATED 22 AUGUST 2007

1. In its proceedings the Panel shall follow the relevant provisions of the Dispute Settlement Understanding (DSU). In addition, the following Working Procedures shall apply.
2. The Panel will provide the Parties¹ and Third Parties² with a timetable for its proceedings. The timetable may be modified by the Panel as appropriate, after having consulted the Parties.
3. The Panel shall meet in closed session. The Parties, and interested Third Parties, shall be present at the meetings only when invited by the Panel to appear before it. Provided satisfactory logistical arrangements can be ensured by the Secretariat, the substantive meeting of the Panel with the Parties may be open for observation by the public through closed-circuit broadcast. At any moment including during such meeting, any Party may request the Panel to suspend the broadcasting for as long as necessary in order to protect confidential information. The Panel may also decide on its own to suspend the broadcasting at any time.
4. The deliberations of the Panel and the documents submitted to it shall be kept confidential. Nothing in the DSU, nor in these Working Procedures, precludes a Party or a Third Party from disclosing statements of its own positions to the public. Parties and Third Parties shall treat as confidential information submitted by another Party or Third Party to the Panel that the latter Party or Third Party has designated as confidential. As provided in Article 18.2 of the DSU, where a Party submits a confidential version of its written submissions to the Panel, it shall also, upon request of the other Party, provide a non-confidential summary of the information contained in its submissions that could be disclosed to the public. Non-confidential summaries shall be normally submitted no later than one week after the written submission is presented to the Panel, unless a different deadline is granted by the Panel upon a showing of good cause.
5. Before the substantive meeting of the Panel with the Parties, and in accordance with the timetable approved by the Panel, the Parties shall transmit to the Panel written submissions and subsequently written rebuttals in which they present the facts of the case, their arguments and their counter-arguments, respectively. Third Parties may transmit to the Panel written submissions after the rebuttals of the Parties have been submitted, and in accordance with the timetable approved by the Panel.
6. All Third Parties shall be invited in writing to present their views during the substantive meeting of the Panel with the Parties and the Third Parties. Third Parties may be present during the entirety of that meeting.
7. At its substantive meeting with the Parties, the Panel shall ask the United States to present its case first. Subsequently, and still at the same meeting, the European Communities will be asked to present its arguments. At the same meeting, Third Parties will be asked to present their views thereafter. Parties will then be allowed an opportunity for final statements, with the United States presenting its statement first.

² Throughout the document, the term "Third Parties" refers to Belize, Brazil, Cameroon, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Jamaica, Japan, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama and Suriname.

8. The Panel may decide to hold meetings with the Parties jointly with the Panel in the case of European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas (Recourse to Article 21.5 of the DSU by Ecuador). In that case, the order in which Members will be asked to make their statements will be decided by the Panel.

9. The Panel may at any time put questions to the Parties and to the Third Parties and ask them for explanations either in the course of the substantive meeting or afterwards in writing. Replies to questions shall be submitted in writing by the dates specified by the Panel after consultation with the Parties. In addition, the Parties shall be permitted to ask questions to each other and to Third Parties. Third Parties may ask oral questions to the Parties during the course of the substantive meeting, in accordance with the rules adopted by the Panel, but Parties are under no obligation to respond to those questions.

10. Each Party shall make available to the Panel and to the other Party a written version of its oral statements no later than on the first working day following the date of the end of the meeting at which the oral statement was presented. Any Third Party that wishes to present its views shall similarly make available to the Panel and to the Parties and other Third Parties a written version of its oral statements no later than on the first working day following the date of the end of the meeting at which the oral statement was presented. Parties and Third Parties shall provide the Panel and other participants at the respective session with a provisional written version of their oral statements before these statements are made.

11. In the interests of full transparency, oral presentations shall be made in the presence of the Parties. Moreover, each Party's written submissions, including replies to questions put by the Panel, shall be made available to the other Party. Third Parties shall receive copies of the Parties' first written submissions and rebuttals as well as copies of the questions posed by the Panel to the Parties and to the other Third Parties and copies of Parties' and Third Parties' responses to such questions. Parties shall submit all factual evidence to the Panel as early as possible and no later than during the substantive meeting, except with respect to evidence necessary for the answering of questions. Exceptions will be granted by the Panel upon a showing of good cause. In such cases, the other Party shall be accorded a period of time for commenting, as appropriate.

12. Within seven (7) calendar days following the submission of a written submission or presentation of an oral statement to the Panel, the Parties shall provide the Panel with an executive summary of the submission or statement. Each summary to be provided by each Party shall not exceed ten (10) pages in length. Third Parties shall also submit an executive summary seven (7) calendar days after delivering their written submission or oral statement. Third Parties' executive summaries shall not exceed three (3) pages in length. The Panel may, in light of further developments, allow the Parties and Third Parties to submit longer summaries. These executive summaries will be used by the Panel only for the purpose of drafting a concise factual and arguments section of the Panel Report so as to facilitate timely translation and circulation of the Panel report to the Members. The Panel reserves the right to edit any executive summaries that exceed the page limits indicated above. Executive summaries shall in no way serve as a substitute for the submissions of the parties.

13. To facilitate the maintenance of the record of the dispute, and to maximize the clarity of submissions, in particular the references to exhibits submitted by Parties, Parties shall sequentially number their exhibits throughout the course of the dispute. For example, exhibits submitted by the United States should be numbered US-1, US-2, etc. If the last exhibit in connection with the first submission was numbered US-5, the first exhibit of the next submission thus should be numbered US-6. Exhibits submitted by the European Communities should be numbered EC-1, EC-2, etc.

14. The Parties and Third Parties to this proceeding have the right to determine the composition of their own delegations. Delegations may include as representatives of the government concerned, private counsel and advisers. The Parties and Third Parties shall have responsibility for all members of their delegation and shall ensure that all members of their delegation, as well as any other advisers consulted by a Party or Third Party, act in accordance with the rules of the DSU and the Working Procedures of this Panel, particularly in regard to the confidentiality of the proceedings. Parties shall provide a list of the participants of their delegation to the Secretary of the Panel and to each other no later than 5.00 pm, local Geneva time, the working day before any meeting with the Panel.

15. The Panel reserves the right to earmark its communications to enable the identification of possible breaches of confidentiality, especially the Panel's interim report and its final report before the latter's circulation to all Members.

16. Any request for a preliminary ruling (including rulings on jurisdictional issues) to be made by the Panel shall be submitted no later than in a Party's first written submission. If the United States requests any such ruling, the European Communities shall submit its response to such a request in its first written submission. If the European Communities requests any such ruling, the United States shall submit its response to such a request in its rebuttal submission. Exceptions to this procedure will be granted upon a showing of good cause. The Panel shall inform the Parties promptly of any preliminary rulings it might make in the course of the proceedings. In addition, the Panel may also choose to inform third parties of such preliminary rulings, if it deems it relevant.

17. The following procedures regarding service of documents shall apply:

- (a) Each Party shall serve its submissions directly on the other Party. Each Party shall, in addition, serve its first written submission, rebuttals, and its responses to the questions by the Panel and by the other Party on Third Parties. Each Third Party shall serve its submissions on the Parties and other Third Parties. Each Party and Third Party shall confirm in writing, at the time it provides the submission to the Secretariat, that copies have been served as required.
- (b) In the light of the particular circumstances of this case, the Panel may decide to copy, as appropriate, the complainant in the case of European Communities – Regime for the Importation, Sale and Distribution of Bananas (Recourse to Article 21.5 of the DSU by Ecuador) on communications directed to the Parties.
- (c) The Parties and Third Parties shall provide their written submissions to the Panel, through the Secretariat, by 5.00 p.m., local Geneva time, on the deadlines established by the Panel.
- (d) Parties and Third Parties shall provide the Secretariat with written copies of their oral statements no later than on the first working day following the date of the meeting at which the oral statement was presented.
- (e) The Parties and Third Parties shall provide the Secretariat with ten (10) paper copies of all their submissions as well as an "electronic" copy on a CD-ROM, diskette or as an e-mail attachment, in a format compatible with the Secretariat's software. Paper copies shall be delivered to the Dispute Settlement Registrar,  (Room 2150). Electronic copies should be sent by e-mail to  at DSregistry@wto.org;  at @wto.org;  at @wto.org;  at @wto.org; and  at @wto.org.

- (f) The Panel will provide Parties with an electronic version of the descriptive sections of its draft report, the interim report and the final report, as well as of other documents, as appropriate. When the Panel transmits to the Parties or Third Parties both paper and electronic versions of a document, the paper version shall constitute the official version for the purposes of the record of the dispute.

18. These Working Procedures may be modified by the Panel as appropriate, after having consulted the Parties.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES – REGIME FOR THE IMPORTATION,
SALE AND DISTRIBUTION OF BANANAS

Notification of Mutually Agreed Solution

The following communication, dated 22 June 2001, from the Permanent Delegation of the European Commission to the Chairman of the Dispute Settlement Body, is circulated pursuant to Article 3.6 of the DSU.

The European Communities (EC) wish to notify the Dispute Settlement Body (DSB) that they have reached, with the United States of America and Ecuador, a mutually satisfactory solution within the meaning of Article 3.6 of the DSU regarding the implementation by the EC of the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the DSB in the dispute "Regime for the importation, sale and distribution of bananas" (WT/DS27).

Please find attached the text of the Understandings reached between the EC and the United States and between the EC and Ecuador, respectively on 11 April 2001 and 30 April 2001, which constitute a mutually agreed solution to the bananas dispute.

I would be grateful if you could circulate a copy of this letter with its enclosures to the WTO Members.

Enclosure 1: Understanding on Bananas between the EC and the United States of 11 April 2001

- A. The European Commission and the United States have identified the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved.
- B. In accordance with Article 16(1) of Regulation No. (EC) 404/93 (as amended by Regulation No. (EC) 216/2001), the European Communities (EC) will introduce a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006.
- C. In the interim, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as follows :
1. Effective 1 July 2001, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as set out in Annex 1.
 2. Effective as soon as possible thereafter, subject to Council and European Parliament approval and to adoption of the Article XIII waiver referred to in paragraph E, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as set out in Annex 2. The Commission will seek to obtain the implementation of such an import regime as soon as possible.
- D. With respect to the United States' imposition of increased duties applied to certain EC products as of 19 April 1999 covering trade in an amount of US$191.4 million per year (the "increased duties"):
1. Upon implementation of the import regime described in paragraph C(1), the United States will provisionally suspend its imposition of the increased duties.
 2. Upon implementation of the import regime described in paragraph C(2), the United States will terminate its imposition of the increased duties.
 3. The United States may reimpose the increased duties if the import regime described in paragraph C(2) does not enter into force by 1 January 2002.
- E. The United States will lift its reserve concerning the waiver of Article I of the GATT 1994 that the EC has requested for preferential access to the EC of goods originating in ACP states signatory to the Cotonou Agreement; and will actively work towards promoting the acceptance of an EC request for a waiver of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 needed for the management of quota C under the import regime described in paragraph C(2) until 31 December 2005.
- F. The EC and the United States have informed Ecuador and will cooperate in seeking the agreement of all parties.

Annex I

Phase I

1. A bound tariff-rate quota (TRQ) designated as quota "A" will be set at 2,200,000 tonnes. An autonomous TRQ designated as quota "B" will be set at 353,000 tonnes. These TRQs will be managed as one, with the total quota being 2,553,000 tonnes. There is no expectation of allocation of shares of either of these TRQs among country suppliers, and the Commission will not seek to convene a meeting to that effect of the principal supplying countries except upon the joint request of all such countries. The tariff applied to bananas imported in the "A" and "B" quotas shall not exceed 75 euro/tonne.
2. A TRQ designated as quota "C" will be set at 850,000 tonnes.
3. Import licenses for 83% of the "A" and "B" TRQs will be distributed to "traditional" operators based on each qualified "traditional" operator's 1994-96 average annual final reference volume ("reference volume") for the "A/B" quotas. Qualified "traditional" operators will be identified on the basis of the distribution of licenses that occurred under Regulation 404, Article 19.1(a) and Regulation 1442, Article 3.1(a) for "Category A subfunction (a)". Importers will not need to produce new evidence.
4. Licenses for TRQ "C" are intended to be distributed broadly in accordance with the principles to be utilized in managing of licenses for TRQ's "A" and "B" and on the basis of imports of ACP-origin bananas. The European Commission and the United States will consult again within 4 weeks with a view to finalizing the licensing principles for TRQ "C".
5. Within each TRQ, licenses may be used to import bananas from any source. Licenses to import bananas into TRQ "C" cannot be used to import bananas into TRQs "A" or "B", and vice versa.
6. A "non-traditional" operator category will be created with respect to 17% of the quantity of the "A and B" TRQs. Non-traditional operators cannot become traditional operators in subsequent periods. Management of non-traditional imports will be done by simultaneous examination.
7. The licensing regime will be administered in good faith and on a non-discriminatory basis.
8. The Commission will provide the United States as soon as possible the verified statistics confirming the implementation of this phase, taking into account the protection of business confidential information.

Annex II

Phase II

1. During Phase II, the provisions applying to Phase I will continue, except as provided in this Annex.
2. In Phase II, TRQ "B" will be 453,000 tonnes (an increase of 100,000 tonnes). The total for the "A" and "B" TRQs will be 2,653,000 tonnes.
3. The TRQ "C" will be 750,000 tonnes and will be reserved for bananas of ACP origin.
4. The share of import licenses to "traditional" operators for the "A" and "B" TRQs will be allocated in accordance with the procedure in Annex I. Import licenses will be distributed based on each qualified "traditional" operator's 1994-96 reference volume through 31 December 2003. Thereafter, the share of import licenses to "traditional" operators for the "A" and "B" TRQs will be allocated based only on usage of licenses issued under Phase II of this Understanding, through credible documentation.
5. The Commission will provide the United States as soon as possible the verified statistics confirming the implementation of this phase, taking into account the protection of business confidential information.

Enclosure 2: Understanding on Bananas between the EC and Ecuador of 30 April 2001

- A. The European Commission and Ecuador have identified the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved.
- B. In accordance with Article 16(1) of Regulation No. (EC) 404/93 (as amended by Regulation No. (EC) 216/2001), the European Communities (EC) will introduce a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006. GATT Art XXVIII negotiations shall be initiated in good time to that effect, recognizing Ecuador as the principal supplier in these negotiations.
- C. In the interim, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as follows :
1. Effective 1 July 2001, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as set out in Annex 1.
 2. Effective as soon as possible thereafter, subject to Council and European Parliament approval and to adoption of the Article XIII waiver referred to in paragraph F, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as set out in Annex 2. The Commission will seek to obtain the implementation of such an import regime as soon as possible.
- D. Ecuador takes note that the European Commission will examine the trade in organic bananas and report accordingly by 31 December 2004.
- E. Upon implementation of the import regime described in paragraph C, Ecuador's right to suspend concessions or other obligations of a level not exceeding US$201.6 million per year vis-à-vis the EC will be terminated.
- F. Ecuador will lift its reserve concerning the waiver of Article I of the GATT 1994 that the EC has requested for preferential access to the EC of goods originating in ACP states signatory to the Cotonou Agreement; and will actively work towards promoting the acceptance of an EC request for a waiver of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 needed for the management of quota C under the import regime described in paragraph C(2) until 31 December 2005.
- G. The EC and Ecuador consider that this Understanding constitutes a mutually agreed solution to the banana dispute.

7. Management of non-traditional operators will be done by simultaneous examination, respecting the following conditions:
 - (a) the activity period to consider for registration shall be 2 years;
 - (b) the minimum annual customs value of imports into the EU to qualify shall be 1.2 million €;
 - (c) traditional importers in Quota C may only qualify as non-traditional importers in Quota A/B when they prove that they imported bananas from third countries other than ACP in the relevant period;
 - (d) in application for licenses, the maximum requested quantities for each non-traditional operator shall be not higher than 12.5% of the quantity reserved for non-traditional operators;
 - (e) a security of 150€/t shall be required;

- (f) a non-traditional operator shall be required to be responsible for shipping bananas to the EU;
 - (g) simultaneous examination shall be conducted in a pro-rata basis;
 - (h) dissuasive penalties shall apply in the event that a traditional operator be found to be controlling a non-traditional operator within the same Quota;
 - (i) transmissibility of licenses between non-traditional operators will be permitted.
8. The licensing regime will be administered in good faith and on a non-discriminatory basis.

Annex II

Phase II

1. During Phase II, the provisions applying to Phase I will continue, except as provided in this Annex.
2. In Phase II, TRQ "B" will be 453,000 tonnes (an increase of 100,000 tonnes). The total for the "A" and "B" TRQs will be 2,653,000 tonnes.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES – REGIME FOR THE IMPORTATION,
SALE AND DISTRIBUTION OF BANANAS

Communication from the United States

The following communication, dated 26 June 2001, from the Permanent Mission of the United States to the Chairman of the Dispute Settlement Body, is circulated at the request of that delegation.

For the information of all Members, please find attached the text of the Understanding reached between the European Communities (EC) and the United States on 11 April 2001.

We have received and reviewed the EC's separate notification of 22 June 2001, to the Dispute Settlement Body (DSB) of our Understanding on bananas. As we have explained to the EC during bilateral discussions last week and indicated at meetings of the DSB, the Understanding identifies the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved, but, as is obvious from its own text, it does not in itself constitute a mutually agreed solution pursuant to Article 3.6 of the DSU. In addition, in view of the steps yet to be taken by all parties, it would also be premature to take this item off the DSB agenda.

The United States very much looks forward to the prospect of a resolution to this long-standing dispute, and we will of course continue to be pleased to consult with the Commission and other interested parties as the EC proceeds with implementing its regulations in accordance with the Understanding.

Understanding on Bananas

- A. The European Commission and the United States have identified the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved.
- B. In accordance with Article 16(1) of Regulation No. (EC) 404/93 (as amended by Regulation No. (EC) 216/2001), the European Communities (EC) will introduce a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006.
- C. In the interim, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as follows :
1. Effective 1 July 2001, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as set out in Annex 1.
 2. Effective as soon as possible thereafter, subject to Council and European Parliament approval and to adoption of the Article XIII waiver referred to in paragraph E, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as set out in Annex 2. The Commission will seek to obtain the implementation of such an import regime as soon as possible.
- D. With respect to the United States' imposition of increased duties applied to certain EC products as of 19 April 1999 covering trade in an amount of US$191.4 million per year (the "increased duties"):
1. Upon implementation of the import regime described in paragraph C(1), the United States will provisionally suspend its imposition of the increased duties.
 2. Upon implementation of the import regime described in paragraph C(2), the United States will terminate its imposition of the increased duties.
 3. The United States may reimpose the increased duties if the import regime described in paragraph C(2) does not enter into force by 1 January 2002.
- E. The United States will lift its reserve concerning the waiver of Article I of the GATT 1994 that the EC has requested for preferential access to the EC of goods originating in ACP states signatory to the Cotonou Agreement; and will actively work towards promoting the acceptance of an EC request for a waiver of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 needed for the management of quota C under the import regime described in paragraph C(2) until 31 December 2005.
- F. The EC and the United States have informed Ecuador and will cooperate in seeking the agreement of all parties.

Annex I

Phase I

1. A bound tariff-rate quota (TRQ) designated as quota "A" will be set at 2,200,000 tonnes. An autonomous TRQ designated as quota "B" will be set at 353,000 tonnes. These TRQs will be managed as one, with the total quota being 2,553,000 tonnes. There is no expectation of allocation of shares of either of these TRQs among country suppliers, and the Commission will not seek to convene a meeting to that effect of the principal supplying countries except upon the joint request of all such countries. The tariff applied to bananas imported in the "A" and "B" quotas shall not exceed 75 euro/tonne.
2. A TRQ designated as quota "C" will be set at 850,000 tonnes.
3. Import licenses for 83% of the "A" and "B" TRQs will be distributed to "traditional" operators based on each qualified "traditional" operator's 1994-96 average annual final reference volume ("reference volume") for the "A/B" quotas. Qualified "traditional" operators will be identified on the basis of the distribution of licenses that occurred under Regulation 404, Article 19.1(a) and Regulation 1442, Article 3.1(a) for "Category A subfunction (a)". Importers will not need to produce new evidence.
4. Licenses for TRQ "C" are intended to be distributed broadly in accordance with the principles to be utilized in managing of licenses for TRQ's "A" and "B" and on the basis of imports of ACP-origin bananas. The European Commission and the United States will consult again within 4 weeks with a view to finalizing the licensing principles for TRQ "C".
5. Within each TRQ, licenses may be used to import bananas from any source. Licenses to import bananas into TRQ "C" cannot be used to import bananas into TRQs "A" or "B", and vice versa.
6. A "non-traditional" operator category will be created with respect to 17% of the quantity of the "A and B" TRQs. Non-traditional operators cannot become traditional operators in subsequent periods. Management of non-traditional imports will be done by simultaneous examination.
7. The licensing regime will be administered in good faith and on a non-discriminatory basis.
8. The Commission will provide the United States as soon as possible the verified statistics confirming the implementation of this phase, taking into account the protection of business confidential information.

Annex II

Phase II

1. During Phase II, the provisions applying to Phase I will continue, except as provided in this Annex.
2. In Phase II, TRQ "B" will be 453,000 tonnes (an increase of 100,000 tonnes). The total for the "A" and "B" TRQs will be 2,653,000 tonnes.
3. The TRQ "C" will be 750,000 tonnes and will be reserved for bananas of ACP origin.
4. The share of import licenses to "traditional" operators for the "A" and "B" TRQs will be allocated in accordance with the procedure in Annex I. EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES - REGIME FOR THE IMPORTATION,
SALE AND DISTRIBUTION OF BANANAS

Understanding on Bananas between Ecuador and the EC

The following communication, dated 3 July 2001, from the Permanent Mission of Ecuador to the Chairman of the Dispute Settlement Body, is circulated at the request of that delegation.

For the information of all WTO members, please find attached the text of the Understanding on Bananas reached by Ecuador and the European Communities on 30 April 2001.

After a careful analysis on how best to present this Understanding to the membership of the Organization, having reviewed the separate notification made unilaterally by the EC on 22 June 2001 (WT/DS27/58), and bearing in mind the subsequent discussions maintained with the EC after the Understanding was reached, Ecuador considers it necessary to put forward the following comments for the Members' consideration.

1. The Understanding identifies means by which a long-standing dispute can be resolved. However, the Understanding also comprises of the execution of two phases and requires the implementation of several key features, which demands the collective action of the WTO membership. As Ecuador has expressed during the last two meetings of the DSB, it will remain vigilant that these phases and elements be fully implemented and executed.
2. Once the EC has amended its banana import regime - which was found to be WTO inconsistent by the original panel that reviewed the case as a result of Ecuador's recourse to Article 21.5 of the DSU (WT/DS27/RW/ECU) - Ecuador notes that the Understanding reached with the EC refers to the current banana import regime in force as of 1 July 2001 as one of a transitory nature since, beginning at the latest on 1 January 2006, a new and definitive Tariff Only regime will be in force.
3. Since the new EC banana import regime which is currently in force still requires that several steps be taken in the context of the DSB and other WTO bodies, it would be premature to take this item off the DSB agenda which considers this issue at every regular meeting pursuant to Article 21.6 of the DSU.

In light of the above and although Ecuador sees the Understanding as an agreed solution which can contribute to an overall, definite and universally accepted solution, it must be made clear that the provisions of Article 3.6 of the DSU are not applicable in this case.

We request that you please circulate a copy of this letter with its attachment to all WTO Members and request that the Secretariat provide a copy of these documents to the Council of Trade in Goods.

Understanding on Bananas

A. The European Commission and Ecuador have identified the means by which the long-standing dispute over the EC's banana import regime can be resolved.

B. In accordance with Article 16(1) of Regulation No. (EC) 404/93 (as amended by Regulation No. (EC) 216/2001), the European Communities (EC) will introduce a Tariff Only regime for imports of bananas no later than 1 January 2006. GATT Art XXVIII negotiations shall be initiated in good time to that effect, recognizing Ecuador as the principal supplier in these negotiations.

C. In the interim, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as follows :

1. Effective 1 July 2001, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as set out in Annex 1.
2. Effective as soon as possible thereafter, subject to Council and European Parliament approval and to adoption of the Article XIII waiver referred to in paragraph F, the EC will implement an import regime on the basis of historical licensing as set out in Annex 2. The Commission will seek to obtain the implementation of such an import regime as soon as possible.

D. Ecuador takes note that the European Commission will examine the trade in organic bananas and report accordingly by 31 December 2004.

E. Upon implementation of the import regime described in paragraph C, Ecuador's right to suspend concessions or other obligations of a level not exceeding US$201.6 million per year vis-à-vis the EC will be terminated.

F. Ecuador will lift its reserve concerning the waiver of Article I of the GATT 1994 that the EC has requested for preferential access to the EC of goods originating in ACP States signatory to the Cotonou Agreement; and will actively work towards promoting the acceptance of an EC request for a waiver of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 needed for the management of quota C under the import regime described in paragraph C(2) until 31 December 2005.

G. The EC and Ecuador consider that this Understanding constitutes a mutually agreed solution to the banana dispute.

14 November 2001

MINISTERIAL CONFERENCE
Fourth Session
Doha, 9 - 14 November 2001

EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES – THE ACP-EC PARTNERSHIP AGREEMENT

Decision of 14 November 2001

The Ministerial Conference,

Having regard to paragraphs 1 and 3 of Article IX of the Marrakech Agreement Establishing the World Trade Organisation (the "WTO Agreement"), the Guiding Principles to be followed in considering applications for waivers adopted on 1 November 1956 (BISD 5S/25), the Understanding in Respect to Waivers of Obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994, paragraph 3 of Article IX of the WTO Agreement, and Decision-Making Procedures under Articles IX and XII of the WTO Agreement agreed by the General Council (WT/L/93);

Taking note of the request of the European Communities (EC) and of the Governments of the ACP States which are also WTO members (hereinafter also the "Parties to the Agreement") for a waiver from the obligations of the European Communities under paragraph 1 of Article I of the General Agreement with respect to the granting of preferential tariff treatment for products originating in ACP States as required by Article 36.3, Annex V and its Protocols of the ACP-EC Partnership Agreement (hereinafter also referred to as "the Agreement")¹;

Considering that, in the field of trade, the provisions of the ACP-EC Partnership Agreement requires preferential tariff treatment by the EC of exports of products originating in the ACP States;

Considering that the Agreement is aimed at improving the standard of living and economic development of the ACP States, including the least developed among them;

Considering also that the preferential tariff treatment for products originating in ACP States as required by Article 36.3, Annex V and its Protocols of the Agreement is designed to promote the expansion of trade and economic development of beneficiaries in a manner consistent with the objectives of the WTO and with the trade, financial and development needs of the beneficiaries and not to raise undue barriers or to create undue difficulties for the trade of other members;

Considering that the Agreement establishes a preparatory period extending until 31 December 2007, by the end of which new trading arrangements shall be concluded between the Parties to the Agreement;

Considering that the trade provisions of the Agreement have been applied since 1 March 2000 on the basis of transitional measures adopted by the ACP-EC joint institutions;

Noting the assurances given by the Parties to the Agreement that they will, upon request, promptly enter into consultations with any interested member with respect to any difficulty or matter that may arise as a result of the implementation of the preferential tariff treatment for products originating in ACP States as required by Article 36.3, Annex V and its Protocols of the Agreement;

Noting that the tariff applied to bananas imported in the "A" and "B" quotas shall not exceed 75 €/tonne until the entry into force of the new EC tariff-only regime.

Noting that the implementation of the preferential tariff treatment for bananas may be affected as a result of GATT Article XXVIII negotiations;

Noting the assurances from the Parties to the Agreement that any re-binding of the EC tariff on bananas under the relevant GATT Article XXVIII procedures should result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers and their willingness to accept a multilateral control on the implementation of this commitment.

Considering that, in light of the foregoing, the exceptional circumstances justifying a waiver from paragraph 1 of Article I of the General Agreement exist;

Decides as follows:

1. Subject to the terms and conditions set out hereunder, Article I, paragraph 1 of the General Agreement shall be waived, until 31 December 2007, to the extent necessary to permit the European Communities to provide preferential tariff treatment for products originating in ACP States as required by Article 36.3, Annex V and its Protocols of the ACP-EC Partnership Agreement,² without being required to extend the same preferential treatment to like products of any other member.
2. The Parties to the Agreement shall promptly notify the General Council of any changes in the preferential tariff treatment to products originating in ACP States as required by the relevant provisions of the Agreement covered by this waiver.
3. The Parties to the Agreement will, upon request, promptly enter into consultations with any interested member with respect to any difficulty or matter that may arise as a result of the implementation of the preferential tariff treatment for products originating in ACP States as required by Article 36.3, Annex V and its Protocols of the Agreement; where a member considers that any benefit accruing to it under the General Agreement may be or is being impaired unduly as a result of such implementation, such consultations shall examine the possibility of action for a satisfactory adjustment of the matter.

² Any reference to the Partnership Agreement in this Decision shall also include the period during which the trade provisions of this Agreement are applied on the basis of transitional measures adopted by the ACP-EC joint institutions.

- 3bis With respect to bananas, the additional provisions in the Annex shall apply.
4. Any member which considers that the preferential tariff treatment for products originating in ACP States as required by Article 36.3, Annex V and its Protocols of the Agreement is being applied inconsistently with this waiver or that any benefit accruing to it under the General Agreement may be or is being impaired unduly as a result of the implementation of the preferential tariff treatment for products originating in ACP States as required by Article 36.3, Annex V and its Protocols of the Agreement and that consultations have proved unsatisfactory, may bring the matter before the General Council, which will examine it promptly and will formulate any recommendations that they judge appropriate.
 5. The Parties to the Agreement will submit to the General Council an annual report on the implementation of the preferential tariff treatment for products originating in ACP States as required by Article 36.3, Annex V and its Protocols of the Agreement.
 6. This waiver shall not preclude the right of affected members to have recourse to Articles XXII and XXIII of the General Agreement.

ANNEX

The waiver would apply for ACP products under the Cotonou Agreement until 31 December 2007. In the case of bananas, the waiver will also apply until 31 December 2007, subject to the following, which is without prejudice to rights and obligations under Article XXVIII.

- The parties to the Cotonou Agreement will initiate consultations with Members exporting to the EU on a MFN basis (interested parties) early enough to finalize the process of consultations under the procedures hereby established at least three months before the entry into force of the new EC tariff only regime.
- No later than 10 days after the conclusion of Article XXVIII negotiations, interested parties will be informed of the EC intentions concerning the rebinding of the EC tariff on bananas. In the course of such consultations, the EC will provide information on the methodology used for such rebinding. In this regard, all EC WTO market-access commitments relating to bananas should be taken into account.
- Within 60 days of such an announcement, any such interested party may request arbitration.
- The arbitrator shall be appointed within 10 days, following the request subject to agreement between the two parties, failing which the arbitrator shall be appointed by the Director-General of the WTO, following consultations with the parties, within 30 days of the arbitration request. The mandate of the arbitrator shall be to determine, within 90 days of his appointment, whether the envisaged rebinding of the EC tariff on bananas would result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN banana suppliers, taking into account the above-mentioned EC commitments.
- If the arbitrator determines that the rebinding would not result in at least maintaining total market access for MFN suppliers, the EC shall rectify the matter. Within 10 days of the notification of the arbitration award to the General Council, the EC will enter into consultations with those interested parties that requested the arbitration. In the absence of a mutually satisfactory solution, the same arbitrator will be asked to determine, within 30 days of the new arbitration request, whether the EC has rectified the matter. The second arbitration award will be notified to the General Council. If the EC has failed to rectify the matter, this waiver shall cease to apply to bananas upon entry into force of the new EC tariff regime. The Article XXVIII negotiations and the arbitration procedures shall be concluded before the entry into force of the new EC tariff only regime on 1 January 2006.

MINISTERIAL CONFERENCE
Fourth Session
Doha, 9 – 14 November 2001

EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES – TRANSITIONAL REGIME FOR THE EC
AUTONOMOUS TARIFF RATE QUOTAS ON IMPORTS OF BANANAS

Decision of 14 November 2001

The Ministerial Conference,

Having regard to the Guiding Principles to be followed in considering applications for waivers adopted on 1 November 1956, the Understanding in Respect of Waivers of Obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade 1994, and paragraphs 3 and 4 of Article IX of the Marrakesh Agreement Establishing the World Trade Organization (hereinafter "WTO Agreement");

Taking note of the request of the European Communities for a waiver from its obligations under paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 with respect to bananas;

Taking note of the understandings reached by the EC, Ecuador and the United States that identify the means by which the longstanding dispute over the EC's banana regime can be resolved, in particular their provision for a temporary global quota allocation for ACP banana supplying countries under specified conditions;

Taking into account the exceptional circumstances surrounding the resolution of the bananas dispute and the interests of many WTO Members in the EC banana regime;

Recognizing the need to afford sufficient protection to the ACP banana supplying countries, including the most vulnerable, during a limited transition period, to enable them to prepare for a tariff-only regime;

Noting assurances given by the EC that it will, upon request, promptly enter into consultations with any interested member with respect to any difficulty or matter that may arise as a result of the implementation of the tariff rate quota for bananas originating in ACP States;

Considering that, in light of the foregoing, the exceptional circumstances justifying a waiver from paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 with respect to bananas exist;

Decides as follows:

1. With respect to the EC's imports of bananas, as of 1 January 2002, and until 31 December 2005, paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article XIII of the GATT 1994 are waived with respect to the EC's separate tariff quota of 750,000 tonnes for bananas of ACP origin.
2. The EC will, upon request, promptly enter into consultations with any interested member with respect to any difficulty or matter that may arise as a result of the implementation of the separate tariff rate quota for bananas originating in ACP States covered by this waiver; where a Member considers that any benefit accruing to it under the GATT 1994 may be or is being impaired unduly as a result of such implementation, such consultations shall examine the possibility of action for a satisfactory adjustment of the matter.
3. Any Member which considers that the separate tariff rate quota for bananas originating in ACP States covered by this waiver is being applied inconsistently with this waiver or that any benefit accruing to it under the GATT 1994 may be or is being impaired unduly as a result of the implementation of the separate tariff rate quota for bananas originating in ACP States covered by this waiver and that consultations have proved unsatisfactory, may bring the matter before the General Council, which will examine it promptly and will formulate any recommendations that they judge appropriate.
4. This waiver shall not preclude the right of affected members to have recourse to Articles XXII and XXIII of the GATT 1994.

ARTICLE XXIV:6 NEGOTIATIONS

Enlargement of the European Union

Communication from the European Communities

The following communication, dated 19 January 2004, is being circulated at the request of the Delegation of the European Communities.

Notification
by the European Communities to the World Trade Organization and its Members
concerning decisions to enter into a customs union, resulting from the

Enlargement of the European Union

by the accession of

The Czech Republic, the Republic of Estonia, the Republic of Cyprus, the Republic of Latvia, the Republic of Lithuania, the Republic of Hungary, the Republic of Malta, the Republic of Poland, the Republic of Slovenia and the Slovak Republic;

Pursuant to the Understanding on the Interpretation of Article XXIV GATT 1994, paragraph 4, incorporating the Guidelines adopted on 10 November 1980 (BISD 27S/26-28), paragraph 1 (the "Guidelines").

Following, inter alia, the decision of 14 April 2003 of the Council of the European Union on the admission to the European Union of the Czech Republic, the Republic of Estonia, the Republic of Cyprus, the Republic of Latvia, the Republic of Lithuania, the Republic of Hungary, the Republic of Malta, the Republic of Poland, the Republic of Slovenia and the Slovak Republic and pending the finalisation of ratification procedures, the European Communities have the honour to notify the WTO and its Members that these states have decided to become members of the European Union on

1 May 2004. The Treaty of Accession is published in the Official Journal of the European Union L 236 of 23 September 2003. A version subject to a legal disclaimer is published at:
http://europa.eu.int/comm/enlargement/negotiations/treaty_of_accession_2003/index.htm.

Accordingly, the European Communities hereby notifies, within the framework of procedures laid down in Article XXIV GATT 1994, and in particular paragraph 6 thereof, the withdrawal on 1 May 2004 of the commitments in Schedule XCII Czech Republic, Schedule CXLIV Republic of Estonia, Schedule CVII Republic of Cyprus, Schedule CXLIII Republic of Latvia, Schedule CL Republic of Lithuania, Schedule LXXI Republic of Hungary, Schedule CXVII Republic of Malta, Schedule LXV Republic of Poland, Schedule XCVI Republic of Slovenia, Schedule XCIII Slovak Republic and Schedule CXL¹ of the European Communities of 15.

The European Communities is ready to enter into Article XXIV and XXVIII GATT 1994 procedures including tariff negotiations or consultations to address compensatory adjustments provided for under Article XXIV.6 GATT 1994.

The data² necessary for the purposes of applying Article XXIV.6 GATT 1994, as provided for in the Guidelines, paragraph 2, first and second sentences, is included in the Annex of this notification. In accordance with the Guidelines, paragraph 2, third sentence, and paragraph 3, any proposed modifications or compensatory adjustments will be circulated and communicated separately.

The EC intends to communicate further data in the near future to members having negotiation rights.

Pending the completion of the Article XXIV and XXVIII GATT 1994 procedures and the creation of a new schedule valid for the European Communities of 25, the commitments in the European Communities Schedule CXL will be fully respected. The new members of the European Union intend to align their Schedules with those of the European Communities on 1 May 2004.

Pursuant to the Guidelines, paragraph 1, the European Communities transmits this notification to the Secretariat, and requests the Secretariat to distribute this notification to all other Members in a secret document.

The above-mentioned data are available in electronic form only on the WTO Members' Homepage (<http://members.wto.org>), go to WTO Resources, then Market Access Schedules on Goods (login), and then to Other. ARTICLE XXIV:6 NEGOTIATIONS

Enlargement of the European Union

Communication from the European Communities

The following communication, dated 27 September 2006, has been received from the delegation of the European Communities.

Notification
by the European Communities to the World Trade Organization and its Members
concerning decisions to enter into a customs union, resulting from the

Enlargement of the European Union

by the accession of the Republic of Bulgaria and Romania;

Pursuant to the Understanding on the Interpretation of Article XXIV GATT 1994, paragraph 4, incorporating the Guidelines adopted on 10 November 1980 (BISD 27S/26-28), paragraph 1 (the "Guidelines").

Following, inter alia, the decision of 25 April 2005 of the Council of the European Union on the admission to the European Union of the Republic of Bulgaria and Romania and pending the finalisation of ratification procedures, leading to the entry into force of the Treaty of Accession, the European Communities have the honour to notify the WTO and its Members that these states have decided to become members of the European Union on 1 January 2007. The Treaty of Accession is published in the Official Journal of the European Union L 157 of 21 June 2005.¹

Accordingly, the European Communities hereby notifies, within the framework of procedures laid down in Article XXIV GATT 1994, and in particular paragraph 6 thereof, the modification of the Schedule of the European Communities in order to cover these new members of the European Union.

The new members of the European Union will be subject to the Schedules of the European Communities on 1 January 2007. Consequently, the commitments in Schedule CXXXIX of the Republic of Bulgaria and Schedule LXIX of Romania are withdrawn on 1 January 2007.

The data necessary for the purposes of applying Article XXIV.6 GATT 1994, as provided for in the Guidelines, paragraph 2, first and second sentences, is included in the Annex of this notification.² In accordance with the Guidelines, paragraph 2, third sentence, and paragraph 3, any proposed modifications or compensatory adjustments will be circulated and communicated separately.

The European Communities is ready to enter into Article XXIV and XXVIII GATT 1994 procedures including tariff negotiations or consultations to address compensatory adjustments provided for under Article XXIV.6 GATT 1994.

The European Communities requests the Secretariat to inscribe an item concerning these notifications on the agenda of the next Council meeting, subject to the rules on inclusion of items on the agenda, so that the Council may take any appropriate actions in this respect.

Pursuant to the Guidelines, paragraph 1, the European Communities transmits this notification to the Secretariat, and requests the Secretariat to distribute this notification to all other Members in a secret document.

Annex: Data for applying Article XXIV.6².

ANNEX D

SECTION VIII (CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS) OF THE PANEL REPORT ON EC – BANANAS III (ARTICLE 21.5 – ECUADOR II)

VIII. CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

8.1 In light of the findings above, the Panel rejects the preliminary issue raised by the European Communities that Ecuador is prevented from challenging the European Communities' current import regime for bananas, including the preference for ACP countries, because of the Understanding on Bananas, signed by both Members in April 2001.

8.2 Accordingly, and after having examined the substantive claims raised by Ecuador as well as the defences invoked by the European Communities, the Panel concludes that:

- (a) The preference granted by the European Communities to an annual duty-free tariff quota of 775,000 mt of imported bananas originating in ACP countries constitutes an advantage for this category of bananas, which is not accorded to like bananas originating in non-ACP WTO Members, and is therefore inconsistent with Article I:1 of GATT 1994;
- (b) With the expiration of the Doha Waiver from 1 January 2006 as it applied to bananas, there is no evidence that, during the period that is relevant for this Panel's findings, that is, from the time of the establishment of the Panel until the date of this Report, any waiver from Article I:1 of GATT 1994 has been in force to cover the preference granted by the European Communities to the duty-free tariff quota of imported bananas originating in ACP countries;
- (c) The European Communities' current banana import regime, in particular its preferential tariff quota reserved for ACP countries, is inconsistent with Article XIII:1, with the chapeau of Article XIII:2, and with Article XIII:2(d) of the GATT 1994;
- (d) The tariff applied by the European Communities to MFN imports of bananas, set at €176/mt, without consideration of the tariff quota for 2.2 million mt bound at an in-quota tariff rate of €75/mt, is an ordinary customs duty in excess of that set forth and provided for in Part I of the European Communities' Schedule. This tariff is therefore inconsistent with the first sentence of Article II:1(b) of the GATT 1994; and,
- (e) It is unnecessary, for the resolution of this dispute, to make a separate finding on Ecuador's claim under Article II:1(a) of the GATT 1994.

8.3 In consequence, the Panel concludes that, through its current regime for the importation of bananas, established in Council Regulation (EC) No. 1964/2005 of 29 November 2005, including the duty-free tariff quota for bananas originating in ACP countries and the MFN tariff currently set at €176/mt, the European Communities has failed to implement the recommendations and rulings of the DSB.

8.4 Under Article 3.8 of the DSU, in cases where there is infringement of obligations assumed under a covered agreement, the action is considered prima facie to constitute a case of nullification or impairment of benefits under that agreement. The European Communities has failed to rebut this presumption. Accordingly, we conclude that to the extent that the European Communities has maintained measures inconsistent with different provisions of the GATT 1994, it continues to nullify or impair benefits accruing to Ecuador under that Agreement.

8.5 The Panel recommends that the Dispute Settlement Body request the European Communities to bring the inconsistent measures into conformity with its obligations under the GATT 1994.
